The birth of Pakistan was a unique occurrence in history. It split a country, its people, its landmass, and its bounty; the linkages built over centuries vanished overnight. Roads and railroads were cut, rivers and streams divided, assets and liabilities apportioned, civil and defence services split. A single trading mart, where goods and services flowed freely, suddenly found itself split into two with tariff, non-tariff and immigration barriers. It was a great exercise in splitting an ancient civilization, a composite culture, a shared inheritance, all that constituted a nation and its wealth. History was made to stand on its head.

Pakistan, spread over two wings separated by over one thousand miles, was an artificial state. The majority of its people lived in the eastern wing but the centre of political power was in the western wing, making the majority subservient to the minority. The language of the majority was denied an honourable place; and given an iniquitous share in the power structure and resources. Dissatisfaction in the East against the Western wing was inevitable. It was only when the East consolidated its numbers, and challenged the West's monopoly of power at the centre, that the West was shaken out of its wits. What followed is history, as they say.

The partition was an opportunity for the two newly-born countries to go their own ways and build egalitarian societies, growing together and complementing each other. Unfortunately Pakistan, unable to transcend the two-nation theory, kept alive the animosities of the past and added fresh ones. The bogey of Indian hegemony was constructed and an anti-India bias was created. The democratic aspirations of its people remained constrained. The feeling of insecurity that it created for itself and its people drove Pakistan to seek security from sources, which exploited it for their own strategic needs. This vitiated the politics of the sub-continent and brought the Cold War to its door step. Obsession with Kashmir drove Pakistan to an uncompromising confrontation with India, which proved disastrous for its socio-political growth and economic development. Massive foreign involvement including in Pakistan's militarisation encouraged lopsided growth leading to an overwhelming role and influence of the military establishment in its society.

The present study is the saga of these pernicious developments which, after more than six decades of the post-colonial history, have made South Asia among the most volatile regions in the world.
Avtar Singh Bhasin (b. June 7, 1935) B.A. (Hons) and M.A in History. He had a short stint of service with the National Archives of India and the Ministry of Defence before joining the Ministry of External Affairs in 1963, where he served for three decades retiring in June 1993 as Director (Historical Division). He was posted in the Indian Missions in Kathmandu, Bonn, Vienna and Lagos. He travelled extensively within and outside the country in the discharge of his duties in the Ministry. He was a member of several official, ministerial and Prime Ministerial delegations for discussions with various countries.

He took to academic studies after retirement in 1993. He was Senior Fellow at the Indian Council of Historical Research from 1994 to 1996, and an Honorary Fellow at the Institute of Contemporary Studies of the Nehru Memorial Museum and Library from 1996 to 2000. He attended several seminars on South Asia and contributed research papers at these dialogues. He has also published several articles on South Asian affairs in newspapers and journals.

His main focus has been documenting India’s foreign relations, a task that had not been attempted in the past more than sixty years. His first work was a two-volume study of India-Nepal-China Relations: 1947-92; later expanded and updated to Five Volumes covering the period up to 2005. His second contribution was the documentary study of India-Bangladesh Relations, first published in two volumes covering the period 1971 to 1994, and then updated and expanded to Five Volumes covering the period up to 2002. The success of these two studies encouraged him to undertake a third one, a study on Sri Lanka, also in Five Volumes which was published under the title “India-Sri Lanka Relations and Sri Lanka’s Ethnic Conflict—1947-2000.”

In the golden jubilee year of the Indian independence, 1997, he wrote 75 pieces for the Asian Age which were published consecutively from June 1 to August 14, 1997 every day as a throwback to the tumultuous days of 1947, to refresh the memories of the older generation and inform the younger generation of the sacrifices, trials and tribulations and travails, which the people had to go through, before independence. Subsequently, a larger version of these articles appeared in the book form “Some Called it Partition, Some Freedom”.

Returning to the subject of Sri Lanka, he published a new book in 2005 under the title: “India in Sri Lanka: Between Lion and the Tigers”, which studied the Indian role in resolving the Sri Lankan imbroglio. This book was published both in India and Sri Lanka.

He edits and publishes an annual series under the title “INDIA’S FOREIGN RELATIONS” in cooperation with the Public Diplomacy Division of the Ministry of External Affairs. It showcases the documents bearing on India's foreign relations in each year. Starting with 2002, so far ten volumes, covering the period up to 2011 have been published.

PREFACE

History is the sum total of incidents, that take place in the social, economic or political life of a society, a community, a nation or a country. The documents are a record of those incidents and the manner in which they take place and shape those events. In that context, they play a critical role in the writing of history. They could be public records, records of societies or the private records. They are the primary source of history writing today. In the academic world today, if there are no records, there is no authentic history. In fact, scholars are expected to authenticate each statement with evidence. History by hearsay is a allegory or an anecdote. A record created after the event, with the advantage of hindsight, is a suspect document and not a dependable basis for history. Hence preservation of records for the posterity is the first step towards creating and writing of history.

2. Making them available for research is the next important step. I am glad that the Ministry of External Affairs, for the first time, took a major step, in making available a very large body of its records throwing light on the events since 1947. So far, the scholars working on India’s foreign relations had to depend on the newspaper reports and other material available in the public domain to articulate the Indian position on bilateral and international issues. Quite often, the assessment based on secondary sources, resulted in not-so-flattering conclusions. With the availability of the records now, there would be a fresh impetus to undertake a rigorous research on India’s foreign relations.

3. In my three-decade service with the Ministry of External Affairs in various capacities, I dealt with a variety of issues. When preparing notes or briefs, at short notice, which invariably was the case, I faced the problem of getting hold of the earlier records, which were needed to make an in-depth analysis and a sound judgement of the issues under consideration. Since time was the essence, willy-nilly one had inevitably to make do with the papers/reports readily available. It was not the ideal situation, but one had to be content, to make do, with what was readily available. While still in service, I had decided to make up for this deficiency after retirement by undertaking the publication of documents in original, in readily available volumes. Therefore when I retired in 1993, I decided to redeem my promise made to myself.

4. Looking back, at the two decades of my retirement, I am happy to say, that I am not disappointed with myself. Before undertaking the present study, I published three separate compendiums of documents on India's relations with Nepal, Bangladesh and Sri Lanka in Five Volumes each. The present ten volumes give me the satisfaction of having covered India's relations with four of its major neighbours.

5. Separately, I took the initiative to publish each year a volume on 'India's Foreign Relations' in cooperation with the Public Diplomacy Division of the Ministry of External Affairs. As of today, ten volumes in this series, covering the period 2002 to 2011 have been published. These volumes showcase the documents bearing on India's foreign relations each year. Given the enlarged scope of foreign relations in the globalised world, several Ministries and Departments of the Government of India, besides, the Ministry of External Affairs contribute to the conduct of foreign relations, which are today multi-faceted. While the Ministry of External Affairs determines the broad framework and contours of the foreign policy and diplomacy, and is also the principal player in that field, several other Ministries and Departments complement its efforts in their respective spheres of activity. Foreign relations are no longer an instrument for interaction at diplomatic level alone. One looks up to them for procuring the sinews for development and progress in trade and industry, science and technology, education and agriculture and various other fields, like energy, climate change, investments etc. In short foreign relations are a product and interplay of multiple forces impinging on and promoting the country's national interest.
6. Before undertaking the present study on Pakistan, I had several hesitations and reservations. Enough material was not available in the earlier years. Given the scope and extent of India-Pakistan relations, in comparison to other neighbours, it was a daunting task. But Shri Shivshankar Menon, who as High Commissioner in Pakistan insisted that having successfully done similar projects on Nepal, Bangladesh and Sri Lanka, I had gathered enough experience, which I should put to some more use. Soon thereafter, Shri Menon assumed the charge of Foreign Secretary in the Ministry of External Affairs. It was about this time that the Ministry under him, appreciating the need for transparency in administration in the age of RTI, and aware that in the absence of hard information, Indian story suffered by default, together with the argument of the research scholars and historians, that the classification of records was time related and lost its sensitivity once the operational requirement was over, decided to make available a substantial body of the Ministry’s records for research. As luck would have it, I found that a large number of senior officials who in the last few decades had played crucial role in the conduct of India’s foreign relations, particularly with Pakistan, had deposited their private papers with the Archives of the Nehru Memorial Museum and Library at Teen Murti House in New Delhi. These papers belonged principally to P. N. Haksar, B. K. Nehru, T. N. Kaul, Y.D. Gundevia, Subimal Dutt and others and contained the correspondence, which threw fresh light on the subject of my immediate interest. These papers gave a very rich harvest, which in my opinion, has substantially enhanced the utility of the present effort. Encouraged by these developments, I decided to take the plunge. Five years of sustained work has enabled the study to see the light of the day and I feel satisfied and redeemed.

7. The arrangement of the documents presented a peculiar difficulty. In most of them, particularly in the letters exchanged between the leaders of the two countries and in the transcript of their discussions, there were always more than one subject and it was not possible to segregate them. Broad issues like Kutch, the Indus and the Ganga Waters, evacuee property, issues relating to the Minorities, Financial issues, Border demarcation, Passport and Visa etc., have been grouped separately under relevant heads. But there were many other issues, of which, documents could not form an independent group. These have been placed under the head ‘Political Relations’. Even in the case of groups, which have been independently dealt with, a lot of material relevant to them, will be found in the papers under the head-‘Political Relations’. All the ten volumes, however, form one single unit and should be taken as that only.

8. Kashmir has been and continues to be the core of the entire India - Pakistan discourse and Pakistan did not hesitate to raise it every time and any time there was a handshake. Placing of these documents presented its own difficulty. The documents which are purely Kashmir related have been put under the head ‘Kashmir’. But where Kashmir becomes part of the India - Pakistan narrative, I have taken the liberty of placing them under the head ‘Political Relations’. Needless to say, Kashmir will be found at all the places and everywhere in these volumes. It is likely that the users of these volumes may have to struggle a little bit to lay their hands on the entire range of material while studying any particular subject. They will kindly bear with me with some patience.

9. When I started on this project, I had thought, that it would not exceed more than five thousand pages. But as it progressed, its dimensions stared me in the face, I realised that even with ten thousand pages, I would not be able to claim that a comprehensive job had been done. The Foreign Secretary who reviewed the project midway in December 2008, felt that it was for the first time that such a study was being attempted and one did not know, when and if at all, another such effort would be made. He therefore advised that we should aim at a comprehensive job even if it meant ten thousand pages. Hence the present study of ten volumes. Having said that let me hasten to add that given the dimensions of the subject, I find it difficult to claim that these volumes are indeed a comprehensive work. Perhaps another ten volumes would be needed to make such a claim. But that is for another day.
10. It may not be irrelevant to point out here that for the present project as well as for other projects referred to above, I did not receive any grant or financial assistance from any source. These studies have somehow, been financed out of my own, not too deep pockets. However, the External Publicity Division and later the Public Diplomacy Division of the Ministry of External Affairs extended their help by the purchase of sufficient number of copies on publication. The sale proceeds from one project got ploughed in the other and the cycle kept running. I feel grateful to the Ministry of External Affairs for this arrangement. But the entire risk was mine.

11. In preparation of this study, as hinted above, I have drawn extensively on the archival holdings of the National Archives of India, the Archives and Record Management Division of the Ministry of External Affairs and Nehru Memorial Museum and Library. I will like to extend my grateful thanks to all of them for giving me access to their material. I also drew heavily on the Libraries of the Ministry of External Affairs, Nehru Memorial Museum & Library, India International Centre, The United Services Institution and the Institute of Defence Studies and Analysis. I am grateful to the officers and staff of these institutions. I particularly like to mention the Library of the India International Centre, where I finally sat down day after day, while working on the final stages of this project, and received the unstinted support and help from the Chief Librarian Dr. Maujamdar and his able officers, Shafali, Rajiv and others. Many thanks to all of them.

12. Ever since I embarked on the present journey in 1993, Shri Shivshankar Menon has been a great motivator and source of help in every way, as Joint Secretary (North), as High Commissioner in Sri Lanka, and later as High Commissioner in Islamabad and as Foreign Secretary. His help and guidance saw me through many difficult phases. I owe a debt of gratitude to him.

13. I have given a rather lengthy, introduction to this multi-volume-book. A narrative of this nature needed a second opinion, and reading through. Many friends were kind enough to offer their valuable time to go through it. Though they were reluctant to get their names mentioned, I do wish to thank them by name and therefore I am taking the liberty of mentioning their names; M/S Jagmohan, Satish Chandra, TCA Rangachari, and M.L. Chhibber. They made valuable comments. My sincere thanks to all of them. I also owe thanks to my daughter Puneet and daughter-in-law Kamaljeet for reading though the pages with meticulous care. Finally Miss Priya Rana with her fine pen, tuned the whole introduction and crossed the t's and doted the i's. Many thanks to her for this painstaking job well done.

14. Dr. TCA Raghvan was a great help in the preparation of these volumes with his advice and guidance. I take this opportunity to extend my grateful thanks to him.

15. Shri Ravi Kumar and his assistant Sameer Mishra slogged a lot to put the material on the computer and see it through the various stages of printing. They worked with me throughout the five years that took this project to complete. Both need a special mention and my sincere thanks to both of them.

16. In reproducing the documents, I have made every effort to adhere to the original text both in terms of the punctuation and the spellings of the names of various persons and places as occurring in the original.

17. As indicated above I received help and sought opinion of many persons in the preparation of this study and in giving the introduction and they have been generous with their help and comments. But finally I must remain fully responsible for the views expressed in giving the introduction or in giving the footnotes to the documents, or for any other deficiency that may be found in these volumes.

Avtar Singh Bhasin

New Delhi,
September 1, 2012.
INTRODUCTION

ON AUGUST 14, 1947 certain areas of India, as recommended by Sir Cyril Redcliff, Chairman of the Boundary Commissions in his three separate reports on the Punjab, Bengal and Sylhet district of Assam (in the northwest and east of India), separated to form the sovereign State of Pakistan. His reports were awards, since there was no agreement among the Congress and the Muslim League nominees on the Commissions. When these reports were discussed, between the representatives of the Congress and the League, led by Jawaharlal Nehru and Liaquat Ali Khan respectively on August 16, there were claims and counter claims and none appeared to be satisfied with the Reports. In the absence of any agreement, the meeting authorised Governor General Lord Mountbatten to gazette the reports, as they were, on the next day August 17, 1947. Although the two Dominions had come into existence on the 14th and 15th of August, their boundaries were formally gazetted two days later.

2. There were indeed fundamental differences among the leaders of the League and the Congress, on the basic question, of what should be the future of India on British withdrawal. The Congress stood for united India, while the League demanded a separate homeland for the Muslims. In the absence of any consensus among the stakeholders, the decision to partition India, into two independent and sovereign States, took place by agreement of all the parties. There were differences among the leaders of the Congress Party, on the question of partition, but finally it endorsed the Partition Plan of June 2, 1947. The Congress decision on partition might have been a grudging one, but there was no going back on it. However, in subscribing to the partition decision, the Congress did not endorse the Muslim League's two-nation concept. In their opinion and belief, India constituted one country and the various communities inhabiting it, were one Indian nation. There were innumerable ethnic, religious, linguistic and cultural groups who had over the centuries migrated to India and merged themselves into the larger Indian nation. This concept of India was best captured by the Urdu poet Firaq Gorakhpuri in his memorable couplet:

*Sar zamin-e-Hind per aqwame-e-aalam ke, Firaq
Kafle aate rahe aur Hindustan banta gaya*

[On the soil of Hindustan, O Firaq
Caravan from all over the world kept coming, and so was India made]

3. The most important aspect of partition was, that despite the fact, that Pakistan was touted to be a safe haven for the Muslims of undivided India, millions of Muslims reposed their faith and confidence in the Indian leaders, who assured them that new India would guarantee them safety of their person and property, besides providing a non-discriminatory treatment, chose to stay on in their homes and hearths, where they had lived for generations. It is another story that many of them, who in their first flush of enthusiasm for the Muslim homeland, chose to migrate to Pakistan, soon found the political climate and the reception they got in the new country, too hot for their comfort. It did not take them too long to realise that the new homeland was a mirage. They looked for the next opportunity to return to the homes where their forefathers had lived for centuries. The Government of India's offer to restore the property and the jobs to the returnee migrants was a God sent opportunity, which many clutched at with both hands. Over a lakh of them found their way back to their original homes, and were not disappointed. They were cheered by the fact, the Indian leaders while conceding, albeit reluctantly to the Muslim League’s two-nation concept, continued to swear by the idea of an India of one people, whether they were Hindus, Muslims, Sikhs, Christians, or followers of any other religious persuasion.

4. On the other hand, it is the unfortunate legacy of the partition, that the non-Muslims, except for a miniscule minority, who were unable to leave their homes for whatever reason, showed lack of faith in the new state of Pakistan and fled their homes as penniless refugees to seek safety in India. The manner, in which Pakistan treated and continues to treat its minorities, religious, ethnic or linguistic, after its formation, vindicated their decision. Pakistan did not even spare the Muslim minorities, like the Shias and Ahmadyias, the latter minority has been thrown out of the Muslim fold, being declared non-Muslim.

5. Carrying the promise of non-discriminatory treatment forward, on January 26, 1950, India declared itself a republic and adopted a forward looking secular constitution, allowing for no distinction or discrimination between its people on any basis whatsoever, whether religious, linguistic or based on caste or creed. Pakistan, true to the declared position of its founders, went on to hold on to the idea of Muslims being a separate nation, and adopted a new constitution that confirmed it as a theocratic state -- the Islamic Republic of Pakistan. The constitution, granted the Muslims a superior position, to the exclusion of all other minorities, who were debarred from certain positions in the country and left to feel as second-class citizens. This fundamental difference in approach to the question of nation and nation-state, has influenced the relations between the two countries ever since. The bloodshed, that preceded and followed the emergence of the two states, further complicated the matters and embittered the relations between them, in the post-1947 period.

6. The emergence of Pakistan as a separate entity was a unique occurrence in the history. Empires rose and fell; dynasties appeared and disappeared in the quick sands of history, kings, rajas and maharajas made their appearance only to fade away, but the people continued to live where they always lived, transferring their allegiance to their new rulers without ever thinking of migration. Partition was a unique phenomenon. It not only split a country, its people, its landmass and bounty into two but also the linkages built over the centuries vanished overnight. Millions were killed and millions became refugees, losing all that they and their ancestors had created over the centuries. Roads and railroads were cut, rivers and streams were divided; assets and liabilities were apportioned; civil and defence services and their guns and pens and pencils were split. A single trading mart, where goods and services moved freely, from one part to the other, suddenly split into two trading zones, with tariff, non-tariff and immigration barriers, erected to stop the free flow of men and materials. Printing presses, typewriters, tables and the chairs were not even spared and divided. It was indeed a great exercise in splitting an ancient civilization, a composite culture, a shared inheritance, all that constituted a nation and its wealth. History was made to stand on its head!

7. It was with this background that the two new nations embarked on their separate roads to build their future in their own chosen way. India, declared a successor state, wished the new and younger nation God speed on its journey to nationhood. Alas, the ghost of the past did not spare them. The Indian leaders, unhappy at the tragedy that had beset the people, were anxious to forget the past and get along with the task of nation building. Pakistan, groping in the dark and in search for its own identity, was paranoid about its future. The feeling that the Indian leaders had grudgingly agreed to the creation of Pakistan, left the Pakistani leadership with an uneasy feeling. The ghost of the past haunted them. The self-imposed jittery feelings compelled Pakistan to adopt policies that drove the two countries and their people to an adversarial relationship in the years ahead. Instead of complementing each other’s economies, the policies they pursued dislocated an established economy, while the divided economies struggled to find their feet.

8. The tragedy was that Pakistan spread over two wings, in the east and west, separated by 1000 miles of Indian territory was an artificial state. It was not only geographically divided, but there was nothing in common among the people of its two wings except their religion. Historically, culturally, ethnically, linguistically, socially and sartorially they were separate people. The distance between the two wings only added to their problems. Ironically, while the majority of its people lived in the eastern wing, the centre of political power found itself in the western wing, with its capital in Karachi.
Later when the capital shifted to Rawalpindi/Islamabad, its people found themselves driven farther apart from the centre of political power. Soon the people in the east found themselves condemned to play an acquiescent role. Their language was denied an honourable place. The founder of Pakistan, Mohammad Ali Jinnah was the first to administer this blow. He chided the people of the eastern wing for daring to demand an equal status for their language, Bengali with Urdu, which was not even the presumed language of the western region. East Bengal did win the first battle on the language issue, but this was only after Jinnah's death and after paying a heavy price in blood and flesh.

9. A look at the history of Pakistan movement before August 1947 would show that the people who were at its forefront were mainly from the United Provinces, Bihar, Bombay and parts of Bengal. The movement was at its weakest in areas which finally constituted West Pakistan, as the results of the 1946 elections had shown. While Bengal was divided to constitute East Pakistan, none of the other areas, which had a Hindu majority, went to Pakistan. A large body of Muslims from these Hindu-majority areas migrated to Pakistan, carrying its banner and hoping to corner the fruits of the new state. There ensued an unhealthy struggle for power between the migrants, the Mohajirs as they were called and the Punjabis, who formed the largest linguistic group among the people of West Pakistan. It was a bizarre situation, that the majority of the total population of Pakistan, who lived in the East, was marginalised when it came to sharing of political power. As far as the defence forces were concerned, they were historically, the monopoly of the people from the western region. It was a fractious situation internally, which Pakistan found itself in on its birth.
10. Unmindful of the geographical divide and internal contradictions, Pakistan, upon its birth, tried to create multiple artificial entities, in other parts of India by laying claim to areas, which were not contiguous to its eastern or western wings, but hundreds of miles away from its shores such as Junagadh and Hyderabad, on the platform of Islam, the raison d’être for its own creation. It was also on the basis of Islam, that Pakistan justified its claim to and its invasion of Kashmir. Its failure to grab any of these territories, created disillusionment and frustration in its psyche ab initio and gave it a reason to nurse grievances against India.

II

11. Exactly within a month of its birth, on September 14, 1947 Pakistani Prime Minister Liaquat Ali Khan, addressing the Muslim League Council in Lahore, accused India of fomenting riots in the Indian part of the Punjab, that targeted the Muslims, and lamented, that Pakistan was "surrounded on all sides, by forces which are out to destroy" it because "they fear that with the consolidation of Pakistan, their cherished dream to rule all over the sub-continent of India will not be realised". He said, there was "an unholy plan chalked out by the enemies of Pakistan, to sabotage it on its very birth". Strangely enough, this charge came on the very day, Liaquat Ali had met Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru in Lahore and after reviewing the riotous situation in both the Punjabs, had agreed to take measures to stem the riots and facilitate the movement of the refugees both ways. Be it, as it may, in making this charge, Liaquat could not have been unaware, that there were bloodier riots on a much wider scale, not only in his part of the Punjab but also in Sind, the North West Frontier Province and Baluchistan, which led to the ethnic cleansing of West Pakistan.

12. Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru was anguished at this unfortunate accusation. In replying to the charge on September 17, he gave vent to his hurt feelings. In his statement, while not denying that the Congress leaders were against the partition and "sought to avert it," he also added that once "partition was decided upon, it has been the constant endeavour of the Government of India to discharge faithfully all their obligations flowing from that decision". However, in good faith, he added that "some of us still hope that, when the present unhappy commotion has ended and amity between the two communities has been restored, the two Dominions may, of the free will of their respective peoples, unite." He was only expressing a pious hope.

13. On September 16, Pakistani Foreign Minister Mohammad Zafrullah Khan threatened to lodge a formal complaint with the United Nations, unless the Government of India took steps "to end the slaughter of Muslims" and went further to threaten, that "if satisfaction is not obtained, the Government of Pakistan may have to resort to direct measures". What those "direct measures" would be, he left unsaid. Two days later, on September 19, Liaquat Ali came to New Delhi, to discuss measures for the restoration of peace in the two dominions. Nehru personally handed over to him an aide memoire. It lamented the terrible happenings on both sides, and recounted the measures the Government of India had taken to handle the situation and various conciliatory statements made by the Indian leaders to control the situation. The aide memoire reminded Pakistan of the inflammatory utterances of its leaders, which were encouraging their country's pugnacious elements to resort to violence against Hindus and Sikhs. It said: "On the other hand, M. A Jinnah's recent statement confined itself to condemning in strong language the happenings in East Punjab and Delhi and did not even mention what had happened in West Punjab, the Frontier and elsewhere in Pakistan." It described the utterances of Ghazanfar Ali Khan, a minister of the Pakistan Government, as "bellicose and totally irresponsible" and even reminded the Pakistan government of the "war-like threatening" attitude of Zafarullah Khan at the UN. Similarly Pakistani newspapers like the Dawn and the Zimindar were replete with "the vilest accusations, which have no basis in fact, but also threats of war and of the extermination of the Sikhs". Nehru sent a copy of this aide memoire to the British Prime Minister Clement Attlee. In the meantime, Nehru discovered that Liaquat Ali had sent some messages on his own to the British Prime Minister, which contained, to Nehru's anguish, "one-sided and exaggerated accounts of what has happened (on the Indian side) with which we cannot agree". Liaquat had also suggested that Attlee convene a Conference of the representatives of the Commonwealth Dominions, to consider measures to control the situation on the subcontinent and appoint a commission to investigate the riots. These suggestions were unacceptable to Jawaharlal Nehru. To Nehru's chagrin, Liaquat Ali Khan dismissed the aide memoire, as he said, it was "replete with utterly unfounded allegations and insinuations".

14. On October 7, 1947 in a broadcast from Radio Pakistan, Liaquat again harped on the "enemies of Pakistan" raga, and accused them of "black hatred" of Pakistan and of creating "a host of problems, each of them of gigantic proportions" for Pakistan.
Nehru was disillusioned. It was a no-win situation, and the two prime ministers in their correspondence traded charges and counter-charges against each other. Pakistan’s attitude continued to be hostile and paranoid. On December 30, 1947 Liaquat Ali Khan in a personal letter to Nehru, formally charged India in words that were ominous. After a long litany of complaints, he charged India for not accepting the partition scheme and said:

"her leader paid lip service to it merely in order to get the British troops out of the country; that India is out to destroy the State of Pakistan, which her leaders persistently continue to regard as part of India itself; and that the systemic sabotage against the implementation of Partition, the stoppage of such essential requirements as coal and rail transport, the deliberate withholding of Pakistan’s share of funds and arms and equipment, the wholesale massacre of Muslim population, are all designed towards one aim, the destruction of Pakistan."

The charge sheet went on to accuse India of "the forcible occupation of Junagadh, Manavadar, and other States of Kathiawar, which had acceded to Pakistan, as well as the fraudulent procurement of the accession of Jammu and Kashmir State are acts of hostility against Pakistan, whose destruction is India’s immediate objective".

15. The position taken by Jinnah was diametrically opposed to what Liaquat had taken in his utterances. Jinnah had perhaps been stung by the accusations made by India in its aide memoire of September 19 that he had been guilty of taking a one-sided position on the communal disturbances in accusing India. He confessed or at least pretended to confess his ignorance of what was actually happening in Pakistan to the minorities, even though he admitted that he had heard about them. Towards the end of October, he came to Lahore and made a tour of the city to see the situation first hand. In his Radio broadcast from Lahore, on October 30, 1947, he said: "I was deeply grieved to realise that unfortunately, there was a great deal of truth in what had been told to me." Feeling anguished at the truth he had now discovered, he said: "I am speaking to you under deep distress and with a heavy heart." Here was the truth coming out from the founder of Pakistan about the fate of the minorities in Pakistan. Jinnah's broadcast gave lie to Liaquat's paranoia of Pakistan being surrounded by enemies and its independence being under threat. Jinnah, on the contrary sounded more confident. In the same broadcast he said: "We have, undoubtedly achieved Pakistan and that too without bloody war and practically peacefully by moral and intellectual force and with the power of the pen which is no less mighty than the sword and so our righteous cause has triumphed....Pakistan is now a fait accompli and it can never be undone....The division of India is now finally and irrevocably effected..." Jinnah's claim of achievement of Pakistan "without bloody war and practically peacefully by moral and intellectual force" looks hollow, against the millions killed and millions uprooted, which stands recorded, photographed and filmed for posterity in the contemporary archives.

16. Nehru suspected the British civil servants led by the West Punjab Governor Sir Frances Mudie, with his unsavoury past, who were bent upon muddying the waters and frustrating the attempts at restoring peace and trust between the two Dominions. He appealed to Mountbatten for help. Nehru's exasperation reached its limits, when a few day later, on January 4, 1948, Liaquat Ali Khan addressed a press conference in Karachi and repeated the same charges of destruction of Pakistan and adduced the same reasons verbatim, which he had articulated during the last few months against India.

17. The Pakistani media, led by the national daily the Dawn, too stoked the fires of hatred. On the Indian side, while the national media showed enough restraint, the vernacular press, uprooted from Lahore, now based in Jullundur, (East Punjab), was in competition with the Pakistani press and did not falter in this slanderous match. The question of prevention of hostile propaganda against each other had been a major subject of discussion between the two countries from the very beginning. The Pakistani media adopted slanderous and pugnacious expressions even for the Indian heads of government/state. During the course of more than six decades of their existence, innumerable communications have been exchanged between the two countries at all levels, unfortunately without any success. This is, despite the fact, both the Tashkent and Simla Agreements pledged to end it. For each argument, there was a counter argument; for each charge, a counter charge or justification, even if it had to be invented. Most obscure vernacular newspapers in India were found to invent justification for malicious accusations carried by mainstream media in Pakistan. Apart from official correspondence, there had been meetings of the media organisations of the two countries pledging to put an end to this irritant. They issued joint statements, signed agreements, and expressed pious hopes, which remained wishful only.

III

18. From the beginning, there was a clash between Pakistan's 'exclusive nationhood and India's 'comprehensive' one—between Pakistan's two nation theory and India's well established secular principles. This conflict could only have been resolved by Pakistan's willingness to accept peaceful co-existence, to which Pakistan showed little inclination. As pointed out above, while India accepted Pakistan on the principle of the two-nation theory, it refused to accept this as an underpinning for a forward looking polity of the sovereign state. Pakistan faced a dilemma. If Pakistan too, had accepted secularism as its manifesto for its post-partition state, the rationale for the creation of Pakistan would have been knocked out altogether. Pakistan was formed through the interplay of historical forces set in motion by the Ramsay MacDonald Communal Award of 1929, and the Lahore Resolution of March 1940. The rest is history, as they say.

19. The rationale for Pakistan's demand was founded on the need for a homeland for Muslims, who feared domination of the Hindu majority in a democratic set-up. Democracies run on majorities and minorities tend to harbour the holy fear of majority domination. Since Pakistan was supposedly created as a safe haven for the Muslims of the subcontinent, it was compelled to adopt Islam as the creed to justify its very existence. Pakistan never felt the need to dilute this underlying need for separateness, which justified its creation. Besides, there was no domestic pressure justifying any deviation or dilution of the established order. In the eastern sector of the country, there was a large Hindu minority, which lived under constant fear of discrimination, but could not muster enough courage and strength to ask for the dilution of the State's ideology, the locus of which was in the western part of the country. It was happy to make peace with the state, as long as they could find a modus vivendi to survive as peaceful citizens, even if this meant relegated to second class status. They sought some security in their numbers. In West Pakistan, non-Muslim minorities were so minuscule, that they never dared to even ask for any recognition or concession to make their lives a little easier in that theocratic state. With the ethnic cleansing taking place in West Pakistan at the time of partition, it practically became politically, religiously and socially a homogenous Muslim unit.

20. The ideological differences, imbalance in size and resources, the trust deficit and the events that took place on both sides of the divide, immediately following the partition, created a sense of insecurity amongst the Pakistani leadership. It gave Pakistan the motivation to undermine India and denigrate its values. Pakistan's negativity towards India went beyond the issues of Junagadh, Hyderabad or Kashmir. The mindset and the psyche of its leadership prevented Pakistan from appreciating the ideological moorings that motivated India to adopt ideals of a secular, democratic and liberal society and polity.

21. Pakistan's unsuccessful attempt to grab Kashmir, first by brow beating the Kashmir administration and then withholding the essential supplies like food grains etc., to choke it economically. When these tactics failed, by armed infiltration and finally by the introduction of its regular troops. All this drove Pakistan to adopt policies, which sought to create a distance between the peoples, who for generations had lived in peaceful coexistence cheek-by-jowl. This was diametrically opposed to India's determination to steer clear of the past and pursue a positive policy towards Pakistan. For India, the separation was like a family dividing its assets by agreement of its members and living peacefully thereafter. For Pakistan, separation was like a permanent break up of the family, nursing grievances, sulking and harbouring adversarial feelings.

IV

22. Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru's post-colonial dream was to build a comity of newly independent Asian nations, which should be the locus of a new international order. Even before independence, the Indian leaders of the national movement had spoken of the Asian destiny. The Asian Relations Conference, held in New Delhi in March 1947, was perhaps the first concrete step in that direction. After independence, Nehru was keen to take the concept of Asian unity a step further. The visit of the Burmese Prime Minister in December 1947, gave him the first opportunity, and he seized it, to give practical shape to his thinking. On December 4, 1947, in his speech to the Constituent Assembly, which at that time also doubled up as the Indian legislative assembly, he said: "India is interested in Asian countries even more than the rest of the world." In his talks with the Burmese Prime Minister, he found that Burma was interested "as many of us have been, in closer association, not only between Burma and India, but between various countries of Asia also." He described this synergy in the views of the two countries, as a "new spirit of Asia, which wants Asian countries to draw closer together in their own defence and to promote world peace." The active help extended by India to the Indonesian independence struggle to throw the shackles of Dutch colonialism, was an example of Asian unity in action.

23. On the Pakistan front, however, things did not develop in a manner that would promote the concept of Asian unity, or even amity, between the two neighbours. India's pleas to Pakistan to "prevent Pakistan government personnel, military and civil, participating in or assisting in the invasion of the Jammu and Kashmir State" having failed, India on January 1, 1948 asked the United Nations to stop the invasion of Kashmir "by persons coming from or through Pakistan". Despite this unfortunate development and imbued with a sense of Asian unity, Nehru could not leave out Pakistan from this ambit. Speaking at the Indian Council of World Affairs in New Delhi on March 22, 1949 he articulated Indian policy towards Pakistan in the context of Asia and said:

"In regard to Pakistan, the position has been very peculiar one owing to the way Pakistan was formed and India was divided. And there have been not only all the upsets that you all know, but something much deeper, and that is, a complete emotional upset of all the people in India and Pakistan because of this. It is a very difficult thing to deal with, a psychological thing, which cannot be dealt with superficially. A year and a half or more has passed and there is no doubt at all that our relations have improved and are improving. There is no doubt at all in my mind that it is inevitable for India and Pakistan to have close relations - very close relations - sometime or other in future. I cannot state when this will take place, but situated as we are, with all our past, we cannot really be just indifferent neighbours. We can be either rather hostile to each other or very friendly, whatever period of hostility may intervene in between, because our interests are so closely interlinked."

24. Nehru sounded an optimistic note for the future of India-Pakistan relations, in his policy guidelines to the External Affairs Ministry in his minute of June 15, 1949. He said it was not necessary for India to be aggressive, "but to be absolutely firm and not go out of its way to appease Pakistan. The whole of Pakistan policy, as that of the Muslim League that preceded it, is based on threats and bullying". However he added: "sometime or other, the relations of India and Pakistan will have to be adjusted properly. That time has not yet come. We should not do anything to obstruct such a settlement when the time comes for it." As the history of the last six decades would show, that time has eluded India. If anything, the situation has worsened.

25. The animosity, that had contaminated Pakistani thinking towards India, reflected itself in many ways. In the constitution that India adopted on January 26, 1950, the concept of India was explained as "India, that is Bharat, shall be a Union of States". Except for this reference to Bharat, India is referred to as "India" in the entire constitution. Taking a cue from this definition, the Dawn editorially commented and said that the constitution by a "jugglery" of words was meant to exploit the old name, India, which belongs "as much to the people of Pakistan as to the people of Bharat". It decided to end, what it chose to call the "misnomer" henceforth and said: "From today the words 'India' and 'Indian' will, therefore, be replaced with the words 'Bharat' and 'Bharati' in all our columns....We shall call that country henceforth by its proper, and not improper, name." "India" therefore became an "improper" nomenclature for the Indian republic for the Dawn. This mindset characterised Pakistani thinking and actions.

26. Unlike India, who championed the cause of Asian unity, Pakistan developed Islamic fangs, to blunt the Hindu challenge. Its ideology of pan-Islamism had its roots in the Lahore Resolution of 1940, which was predicated on the ideological basis, that the Muslims were a separate nation who needed a separate homeland. Its leaning towards Islamic countries in West Asia and South-east Asia and other Islamic countries flowed from its theocratic character. It promoted Islamic ideology and as stated above, declared itself the Islamic Republic of Pakistan with Islam as its religion. Pakistan's constitution enjoined it "to endeavour to preserve and strengthen the fraternal relations among the Muslim countries based on Islamic unity." It was no wonder, that it's foreign policy, in keeping with the trends in its constitution, and in general, reflected Islamic ideology. Its relations with other Muslim countries received special emphasis. It adopted Islam as a doctrine, a directive principle of state policy, that the bonds of unity among the Muslim countries should be preserved and strengthened. Even before declaring itself the Islamic Republic of Pakistan, as early as February 1949, Pakistan organised the first World Muslim Conference in Karachi. In November of the same year, an International Economic Conference of Muslim States was organised with the aim of fostering economic relations among the Muslim countries. It was not surprising, that the entire non-Western membership of the MEDO, comprised the Muslim countries.

27. The formation of the Organisation of Islamic Conference (OIC) provided Pakistan with an international platform to carry on its anti-Indian agenda, and win the sympathies of the Muslim world in its dealings with India. Economically these actions helped Pakistan, as it became a major beneficiary of the largesse of the oil-rich countries of West Asia. For Pakistan, the Muslim world constituted a basic power group, competing on an equal footing, with the non-Muslim constellation of nations. It also saw a major role for itself, as a central figure and as a strong link between eastern and western parts of the Muslim world, coordinating their political and economic activities. In a sense, Pakistan regarded Pan-Islamism as an extension of Pakistan's ideology at the international level.

VI

28. Since Pakistan had been constantly articulating, that India was not reconciled to the creation of Pakistan and would undo the partition, and also that Kashmir had become a flash point, in the relations between the two countries, Nehru sought to assure Pakistan that India meant no harm to Pakistan. To foster this confidence, he suggested that the two countries enter into a solemn 'No War Declaration' that both countries would renounce war as an instrument for resolving their bilateral differences or disputes and suggested a simple formulation for acceptance. But Pakistan would have nothing to do with it. It insisted, that unless India agreed in advance to refer to third party arbitration, any point of difference that may arise in the settlement of any of the disputes, between the two countries, it could not accept the Indian proposal. It insisted on applying the arbitration principle to all the disputes, as it saw existing between the two countries at that time, recounting in the list -- Jammu and Kashmir, Junagadh, Canal Waters, Evacuee Property, and assets of Pakistan which Pakistan perceived were withheld by India. India felt that Jammu & Kashmir was before the UN. Junagadh had already joined India and the issue could not be reopened. Other issues like Canal Waters, or Evacuee Property were technical issues by their nature and needed to be first studied by experts before the modality for their resolution was agreed upon.
The Prime Minister insisted that such administrative matters could not come within the purview of the 'No War Declaration'. His idea was that the 'declaration' had become necessary to reduce the tension between the two countries and once that objective was achieved through the medium of 'No War Declaration,' the "ways and means of settling outstanding disputes" could be discussed between the two countries on the merits of each issue. India had particular reservations in referring the Kashmir question to arbitration. It was felt that unlike canal waters, or other issues, the Kashmir issue involved the question of sovereignty and questions of sovereignty over a territory could not, in principle, be put to arbitration. In fact, Nehru was convinced that since the issue had been referred to the UN Security Council, it was now a matter of a couple of months before the issue of Kashmir would be resolved.
A meeting was held between Lord Mountbatten, Nehru and Liaquat on January 11, 1948 to discuss the question of the release of Rs.
55 crores, as Pakistan's share of the sterling balances, which India had so far not released, because it felt that its release would be seen "as financing Pakistan's attack on Kashmir". Nehru told the meeting, and Liaquat had agreed, that since, 'Pakistan's expenditure required about 5 crores a month', the ten crores already released, should 'tie Pakistan over for at least two month, by which time, he sincerely hoped, that the balance of the Rs. 55 crores could be paid, since he felt certain that Kashmir question would have been resolved by then'.

29. The two governments exchanged several notes and memoranda on the 'No War Declaration' proposal. There was a lengthy but futile correspondence between Nehru and Liaquat Ali and after the latter's death, between Nehru and successive Pakistani prime ministers for several years before the idea got abandoned. In the '80s it was revived in its new avatar. Pakistan had proposed a non-aggression pact, and New Delhi countered it with a treaty of peace, friendship and cooperation. But somehow it never materialised, and the idea got abandoned altogether.

30. Interestingly, General Ayub Khan who proposed a common or joint defence policy, between the two countries, after he took over the reins of the government in Pakistan in 1958, had also made a similar proposal in 1952 (he was then C-in-C of the Pakistan Army) to Indian High Commissioner Mohan Sinha Mehta. Nehru had rightly felt that joint defence presupposed a common foreign policy. Since Pakistan's foreign policy, at that stage was vague, some time flirting with the UK or the US and at other times, threatening to go along with the Soviet Union, any joint defence with Pakistan was not possible or even desirable. Besides, as long as the Kashmir dispute was not settled, Nehru felt, there could hardly be effective talks about common defence policy.
31. The minorities question dominated the relations from the very beginning. The issue was more or less settled in the western region, by the wholesale migration of Hindus and Sikhs from West Pakistan. But it presented an acute problem in East Pakistan where no such migration took place in one go on partition. The migration from East Pakistan took place in waves, over a period of time, because of the sense of insecurity created among the minority Hindu community by the discriminatory policies of the East Pakistan Government. The failure of the local administration even at the senior level, to provide protection to the community, when faced with the high handed treatment from the field administration, added to their feelings of despondency, and forced them to seek refuge across the border in India. In his letter of March 6, 1948 Nehru drew Liaquat's attention to the plight of the Hindus in East Pakistan who "are being squeezed out". He said that the fact that "a million of them have gradually migrated to West Bengal during the past few months is evidence of the fear and apprehension that surround them".

32. The first concerted effort to protect the minorities in each Dominion, was made in the Inter Dominion Conference held in Calcutta on April 15 - 18, 1948. While holding each dominion responsible for protection of its minorities, the conference assured them "equal rights, opportunities, privileges and obligations" without any discrimination. Minorities boards, both at the provincial and district levels, were formed to protect their interests. The most important provision was, that "any government servant proved to have been guilty either of dereliction of duty in protecting the lives and properties of the members of the minority community or of directly or indirectly ill-treating members of the minority community or showing prejudice against minority community in the discharge of his duties, shall receive exemplary and deterrent punishment". Had these and other provisions of the Inter Dominion Conference been honestly implemented, there would have been no minority problem hereafter. But that was not to be. Within a few months, the situation deteriorated to such an extent, that the Indian Deputy Prime Minister Sardar Patel, in his speech on November 4, was constrained to say that "lakhs of men are coming from East Bengal to West Bengal" and asked what India should do about this situation? He warned Pakistan to either solve the problem
"amicably", but "if you are determined to turn out the Hindus, you must be prepared to part with sufficient land to enable us to settle them. We cannot take things lying down." Echoing Patel, the Premier of West Bengal Dr. B. C. Roy in his telegram of November 12, 1948 to Prime Minister Nehru, while advocating strong action against Pakistan reminded him of his apprehensions, articulated some time ago, that "Hindus will not stay in East Bengal, as the general mass of Muslims do not want them, and so create situations inducing Hindus to leave". He also advocated that Pakistan surrender territory to accommodate the people thrown out of East Bengal. Nehru, however, in his reply of November 23 advocated "long distance dispassionate view and not be pushed about by Pakistan's misbehaviour". However, he told Dr. Roy that any claim to territory from Pakistan was "completely unreal". Sardar Patel was not deterred. In his speech at the All India Congress Committee session in Jaipur on December 17, 1948, Patel once again warned Pakistan to either "create conditions for the peaceful stay of these persons in their own homes" or provide "additional space for their settlements". But he tempered his statement, this time, somewhat by saying that his suggestion for additional space was offered "as one of the methods (for) solution at this difficult problem by mutual discussion and agreement" and it was "not intended as a challenge or as an imposition by force", since he had "no aggressive intentions against Pakistan".

33. Interestingly, about a year or so later, the President of India Dr. Rajendra Prasad sent a note dated March 18, 1950 to Prime Minister Nehru titled: "A Suggestion for Securing the Life and Honour of Minorities in India and Pakistan" and which more or less advocated the same solutions of territory, but by agreement. In proposing this solution, he rationalised his thesis in the broader context of the rehabilitation problem of refugees which the two countries had to tackle. He said that while at the time of partition, almost an equal number of people had migrated from both the sides, there was "a difference" in the character of the two. He said: "Whereas we had to deal with a population which was well-to-do, had a great deal of land of good quality with irrigation facilities and possessed a large quantity of houses and other property, all of which it had to leave behind; Pakistan had to deal with a comparatively less well-to-do population which had much less property to leave behind." He concluded that Pakistan had "practically no problems of rehabilitation and settlement to tackle" since the Hindus and Sikhs had left behind sufficiently large properties, whereas India had to spend "70 crores or more on relief (alone) and have not been able to rehabilitate vast numbers of our immigrants..." But the real problem in his opinion was the continuous exodus, particularly from East Pakistan. In this case too, he said, that the Hindus who were migrating "are better off than the Muslims who are likely to migrate from our side". He advocated that India and Pakistan should enter into an agreement on the question of migration, and gave various alternatives to handle this problem on a reciprocal basis. To enforce such an agreement, he advocated "sanctions" by agreement against the defaulting country. He said:

"One sanction by agreement may be that in case of any considerable exodus, it should be open to India or Pakistan as the case may be, to occupy part of the territory of the other which may be demarcated beforehand in proportion to the migrating population without exposing itself to the charge of aggression. Such territory will be restored if the migrating population can be induced to return and gets back its previous property and positions intact."

Of course, nothing came out of this note, with the prime minister apparently ignoring it. It did, however, indicate the enormity of the problem that agitated the minds of the Indian leaders at the highest level.

34. That apart, the situation in East Pakistan, instead of improving only worsened. Another Inter Dominion Conference, in December 1948, at New Delhi, did not throw up new ideas, and ended only reiterating the earlier decisions of the April Conference. There was no lack of sincere hope, but the reality on the ground was rather depressing. Nehru on June 5, 1949 was constrained to write to Premier Roy (Chief Minister of West Bengal) that "there is little doubt that the East Bengal Government and officials have no intention of settling down in friendship with West Bengal or with the minorities in their own province". The East Pakistan Government on the other hand, did not subscribe to the views of the Government of India. In a press note of December 25, 1949, it deplored the tendency on the part of the Indian leaders, "to revive the exploded myth of persecution and exodus of the Hindu minority in East Bengal", which was part of the anti-Pakistan propaganda. The charges and counter-charges on this account were so severe and created such an explosive situation that for a time there was even talk of war in certain circles on this issue. Minorities were leaving East Pakistan in hordes. Nehru engaged his Pakistani counterpart in a series of telegrams, in the hope of persuading Pakistan, to take remedial measures that would stem the tide of migration. The unending chain of telegrams exchanged between the two prime ministers underlined the emergent situation that had developed. They were exchanging more than one telegram daily at their personal level. The contents of the exchanges on this question, bore the hallmark of similar correspondence on any other issue --acrimony and hostility. They exchanged allegations and counter-allegation on the treatment of minorities in the two Bengals, and each accused the administration of the other province for being a mute spectator to the misfortunes of the minority community on the other side.

35. On March 10, 1950, after four-day stay in Calcutta, and meeting a cross-section of the population and studying the situation first-hand, Prime Minister Nehru wrote to Liaquat Ali Khan on his assessment of the situation. In a candid note, he told him that "it is not much good from any long-term point of view for us to go on accusing each other, or other people" because the "burden of grappling with this difficult problem, which grows more difficult and complicated, is upon us. The consequences of not solving it are terrible to contemplate for both our countries." He told him frankly that the Hindus in East Bengal strongly felt "that they have no part or lot in Pakistan, no self-respect or security".

36. On March 26, 1950 Liaquat Ali Khan returned the compliments. After his "extensive tour" of East Pakistan, he informed Nehru that the troubles in the east were a direct outcome of the attack on Muslims in West Bengal. He was convinced that otherwise, the minority community was appreciative of the efforts of the authorities in East Pakistan, for providing them with safety and controlling any ugly situation from going out of control. He blamed the Indian media and some leaders, whom he described as "urging India to invade Pakistan and that they were being told by friends and relations across the border, that in the circumstances, for Hindus to stay in Pakistan would be to commit suicide."

37. After an extensive exchange of charges and counter-charge, they called a truce, and the Nehru - Liaquat Pact on minorities was arrived at in April 1950. This cooled tempers somewhat, but only temporarily, since troubles continued to erupt periodically and waves of Hindu migrants poured into India until East Pakistan gave way to the new state of Bangladesh.

VIII

38. This was the unfortunate beginning that the two newly independent nations found themselves in, wittingly or unwittingly. Their foundations were insalubrious and too weak for a vigorous superstructure of relations to be built upon them. Trust was the biggest casualty, and continued to cause innumerable problems in their relations. Pakistan's ambition to strengthen its muscles on the borrowed support of the West, entering into military and defence alliances, acquiring arms disproportionate to its needs, ostensibly against communism, but actually to browbeat India into submission on outstanding differences, particularly Kashmir, consumed Pakistan for most of its existence. Excessive militarisation only strengthened the military establishment at the cost of its democratic institutions. Excessive spending on armed forces took away scarce resources from development and Pakistan remained an agrarian and feudal society with little industrialisation. It prevented the emergence of a middle class, the backbone of a democratic polity. Once the military had tasted blood, it could not resist the temptation to usurp power periodically and keep the war machine well-oiled at the cost of economic development.

39. In pursuing a stand-alone and independent foreign policy, in its formative years, India had to suffer the hostility of the West, principally the United States. The USA had replaced the weakened United Kingdom as the leader of the so-called free world. It counted on the strategically located Pakistan, on the periphery of the two most important Communist countries, China and the Soviet Union, to provide it the much-needed bases in this part of the world for surveillance. The West found Pakistan more than willing to play out the role determined by them in return for their support on Kashmir against India.

40. It may be recalled, that India's complaint of Pakistani aggression against the Indian state of Jammu and Kashmir, was made to the UN Security Council on January 1, 1948 and the debate that took place on it soon after, left New Delhi with a bitter taste. It soon found out, how faulty its decision had been to knock on the doors of the UN Security Council. Much to its chagrin, New Delhi found that the UN itself was a victim of Cold War politics of the permanent members of the UN Security Council.
Nehru, in his letter of February 20, 1948 was candid about it to High Commissioner in London, Krishna Menon, with whom he was in constant touch on many issues. He said: "We have had a rather bitter experience (of UN debate). Almost every ambassador here has been assuring us of his government's understanding and sympathy for our position on Kashmir, and yet his government goes against us in the Security Council."

41. The United States, from the very beginning, in order to lend support to Pakistan, had tried pressure tactics but had been rebuffed; though it upset the Prime Minister somewhat. In a letter to Ambassador Vijaya Lakshmi Pandit in Washington (also his sister) on June 8, 1949, Nehru told her of the obnoxious manner in which the US State Department had behaved with B.
R Sen, India's Permanent Representative to the UN, when he had called on the State Department, to discuss the UN Commission's proposals. Recounting, he said:

"This sort of things (treatment meted out to Sen) which does not make us feel very friendly towards the US, I am afraid, I cannot get over the feeling that the US diplomacy is immature or it is too sure of its physical might to care for the niceties of diplomatic behaviour. They have had a very bad set-back in China and they have not succeeded in many other places. And yet they have not wholly learnt their lesson. We rely upon them inevitably for many things and we want to be friends with them. But there are some things we just cannot swallow.

42. India was indeed concerned by the moves of the West and Pakistan, but remained determined and unmindful. In February 1950, Henderson, the US Ambassador in New Delhi delivered a message from the US Secretary of State Dean Acheson to Nehru, which the latter described as "extraordinary" and "an attempt to bring pressure to bear on the Government of India, by means of threats of dire consequences". But Nehru refused to be browbeaten. He told the Ambassador that the "present Government of India, consisted of men, who have been trained during the struggle against the British, to refuse to submit to coercion in any shape or form". Faced with this stern response, the Ambassador beat a hasty retreat and apologetically explained that "the phrasing of Mr. Acheson's message was unfortunate and was, possibly, due to the influence of persons in the State Department, who deal with more procedural matters than with policy matters".

43. Ambassador Mrs. Pandit in one of her letters to the Secretary General of the Ministry of External Affairs G.S. Bajpai, had reported on her conversation with the State Department when she was warned of "America being tough on Kashmir issue". Nehru in his letter to her on June 25 reacted sharply and said: "Their toughness can only take us away from any possible settlement." He warned that "the UK and the US attitude have encouraged all the bellicose tendencies in Pakistan, and for the first time I feel that there is a real danger of a big-scale conflict between India and Pakistan". Nehru regarded Kashmir as the basic question of India's entire policy. He cautioned:
"If Pakistan's communal approach and policy prevails in Kashmir, it would not only be a tragedy for Kashmir, but it would upset the whole scheme of things in India, and of course, in Pakistan. We would enter a phase of trying to exterminate each other. These are terrible thoughts which come to me and I find the USA and the UK people skating on this very thin ice over Deep Ocean and accusing us of intransigence."

44. Pakistan's bellicosity and pressure from the West compelled Nehru to adopt a stern attitude on Kashmir. He articulated the same to High Commissioner Krishna Menon, in his letter of July 22, 1951. He conveyed his determination to go ahead with the elections in Kashmir for a constituent assembly; not to remove troops from Pakistan's border till "we are satisfied that there is no further danger of attack or invasion; and while India was not going to attack Pakistan, an attack by Pakistan anywhere along the border including Kashmir will inevitably result in all-out war" between India and Pakistan. He told Menon that "these facts must be fully understood". He told him that there was a lack of "adequate realisation" in the UK or the USA and "perhaps they still imagine that by some kind of pressure tactics they can force us to give in". He accused Prime Minister Attlee, of having a "closed mind" on Kashmir, despite "good intentions" about India. Nehru directed Menon that "Kashmir is a question on which we will not give in, whatever the consequences" and "this should be made perfectly clear to everybody". In his public speeches too, he left no one in any doubt about India's determination that if it was attacked by Pakistan anywhere including Kashmir, it would be an all out war.
45. Pakistani leadership had succeeded in getting India partitioned, by playing second fiddle to the British and by being obdurate and mulish with the Congress leaders. It was now obviously convinced that the same tactics would work once again. It was not surprising, that Pakistan found it worth its while to seek American and British help by obliging them on their concerns, and was ready to walk an extra mile into the Western camp. Around the same time, information began filtering through, that the United States had been talking about strengthening Pakistan army and setting up bases in Pakistan "90 minutes flying time from major Soviet industrial centres". India was indeed concerned at this serious development. Prime Minister Nehru in a letter dated November 11, 1953 to U Nu of Burma conveyed his concerns, both on account of the US trying to strengthen Pakistan's defence militarily and bringing the Cold War to the doorsteps of this region as well as the decision of the Pakistan constituent assembly to adopt a theocratic constitution, naming Pakistan as the "Islamic Republic of Pakistan" with its laws conforming to the tenets of Sharia.

46. The Pakistan - US decision on arms aid and the US bases in Pakistan was a turning point in Nehru's thinking. It influenced his entire attitude towards Pakistan dramatically. Kashmir, which remained a major issue between the two countries, did not and could not remain unaffected. A concerned Prime Minister warned Pakistan of the consequences of the dangerous pursuit of its new policy. In a personal letter dated December 9, 1953 to Pakistani Prime Minister Mohammad Ali, Nehru spoke directly and candidly to leave his counterpart in no doubt whatsoever, of the consequences of Pakistan's policy of military alliance with the West. Nehru wrote:

"Whatever the motives may be, the mere fact that large scale rearmament and military expansion takes place in Pakistan, must necessarily have repercussions in India. The whole psychological atmosphere between the two countries will change for the worse and every question that is pending between us will be affected by it….Inevitably, it will affect the major questions that we are considering and more especially, the Kashmir issue…..The whole issue will change its face completely if heavy and rapid militarization of Pakistan itself is to take place."

47. The cautionary letter from Nehru to Mohammad Ali was as a result of the conflicting signals from Karachi and Washington. Mohammad Ali had on December 1, 1953 in a radio broadcast denied any such development. Pakistan Governor General Ghulam Mohammad earlier on November 19 too had denied this and had instead accused India of blaming Pakistan without verifying facts. Nehru had put greater faith in the signals emanating from Washington than Pakistani protestation to the contrary, and he was right.

48. This was precisely the time when Nehru, at the insistence of Mohammad Ali had agreed to hold talks between the specially appointed committees of senior officials of India and Pakistan, to work out the modalities of holding a plebiscite in Kashmir. These talks took place in New Delhi between December 21 and 29, 1953, within a few days of the Prime Minister's warning. At the very start of the discussions on December 21, M. J. Desai, the leader of the Indian Committee and the Commonwealth Secretary in the Ministry of External Affairs, made Pakistan fully aware that the shadow of Pakistan's contemplated military alliance with the United States was likely to vitiate their discussions and decisions. He told the Pakistani Committee:

"the official committees would have to take into consideration that the context of events under which previous discussions were held had undergone certain changes (and) referred in this connection to the correspondence between the two prime ministers on certain basic issues, as for example, the appointment of the Plebiscite Administrator and the negotiations between the Governments of Pakistan and the USA regarding military pact."

49. At the end of the talks on December 29, 1953 when discussing the summary of the discussions with the Pakistani committee, M. J. Desai went into the background of the Indian position and repeated the Indian point of view on the provisional nature of the negotiations, especially in view of Pakistan's proposed negotiations, on a military alliance with the United States. He insisted that their "functions were advisory" and "discussions provisional", and stressed that the discussions and decisions had become doubly "provisional" in view of the changes "in the context of events as a result of the US - Pakistan military aid negotiations".

50. India had found it necessary to warn Pakistan, about the dangers inherent in Pakistan's move on its military pact, so as not to give Pakistan an excuse later, that they had not been warned, or that they were not aware of the Indian sensitivities on this issue. The week-long talks achieved little.
51. It did not take long thereafter for Pakistan's lie to be exposed. On February 24, 1954 President Eisenhower, in a personal letter to Nehru, informed him of the US decision to extend military aid to Pakistan and assured him that this aid was not intended against India and should it be "misused and directed against another in aggression" the United States would take "appropriate action" to "thwart such aggression". He, even went on to offer similar aid to India, if it so wished. Nehru replied to Eisenhower on February 28 in a very brief letter, which was nothing more than an acknowledgement of his communication. He reminded President Eisenhower of India's policy in this regard and left it at that. On March 4, 1954, he reacted to it in a lengthy statement in Parliament. He spoke of the consequences of this military aid to Pakistan on India, and specifically on the issues between India and Pakistan. In his anxiety to bring home to the US President the gravity of his action on the subcontinent, he said it had created "a grave situation for us in India and for Asia" and added to the already existing "tensions". Nehru was blunt in saying that "it (US move on military aid to Pakistan) makes it much more difficult to solve the problems, which have confronted India and Pakistan" and likened it to a form of "intervention" with "much more far reaching results than previous forms of interventions". Prime Minister Nehru was quite concerned at the gloating of the Pakistan Prime Minister that with "the receipt of military aid, a momentous step forward has been taken towards the strengthening of the Muslim World," and that "this military aid will help to solve the Kashmir problem"! It was becoming evident to New Delhi, that unless it took pre-emptive steps towards solving the Kashmir issue, in its own way, Pakistan intended to solve it militarily, which India at that stage in its development, could ill afford, especially when Pakistan was embarking on militarization and entering into defence alliances.

52. As a first step, India declared that the United States was no longer neutral between India and Pakistan on the Kashmir issue, and that therefore the Americans posted as UN Observers in Kashmir were suspect and neither an American nor a representative of any of the big powers would be acceptable to New Delhi as a plebiscite administrator. On August 23, 1954, in a letter to Pakistani Prime Minister Mohammad Ali, Nehru said that while he did not wish to challenge his right to receive American military aid, he would venture "to point out the consequences of that step on certain important questions which concern us. You refer to the threat to your security. It is not clear to me from what source that threat comes, or how your security is endangered. If you think that (the) threat comes from India, I think you are completely mistaken because that is not only opposed to our policy but, in the circumstances of today, outside the range of possibilities. But, whether it is possible or not, if that aid is in relation to India, then naturally it affects us and we are concerned. If this bears direct relation to (the) Kashmir issue, then the whole context of that question changes, and we have to consider it afresh from a new point of view."

53. On July 9, 1955 Home Minister Pandit Govind Ballabh Pant, on a visit to Srinagar, at a press conference, ruled out the possibility of holding a plebiscite in Kashmir, because, as he said, "circumstances had changed and the time factor was the most important" one. It was for the first time, that a senior cabinet minister, who was virtually number two in the political hierarchy in India at that time, had made such a significant statement and that too in Srinagar. He said that "all that was left now was to allow the people living in Pakistan held territory of the State to make their choice and express their own views and opportunity for which, perhaps has never been given to them".

54. Pakistan, taken by surprise, was stunned. Reacting sharply to the Home Minister's statement, it said on July 11, 1955: "if this statement is true, it (was) tantamount to a repudiation of international commitment made by India regarding a plebiscite in Kashmir." On July 14, the Pakistani High Commissioner in New Delhi, delivered to Prime Minister Nehru, a message from his prime minister, drawing attention to Pant's statement and accusing India of reneging on its commitment. Nehru, replying on July 21, told Mohammad Ali, that Pant's statement did not involve any repudiation of any of international commitments given on behalf of India. Explaining the Home Minister's statement, he said, that Pant only said that "those assurances or commitments could not be given effect to because of the attitude of the Pakistani government during these past years". Nehru reminded him of the talks between them held in May in New Delhi when he personally had told the Pakistani Prime Minister and his Home Minister Iskander Mirza of his constitutional compulsion as enjoined in Article 253 of the Constitution of India. He also reminded him, of his warning of the changing scenario, in view of widespread talks in the media of the imminence of Pakistan entering into a military alliance with the United States.
55. India had, in the last couple of years, been warning Pakistan of the atmospheric changes taking place, in view of Pakistan's apathetic attitude. Even at the Secretary-level talks in December 1953, as pointed out above, the Indian side threw several hint at the Pakistan delegation in no uncertain terms. On February 27, 1955, in a letter to Mohammad Ali, Nehru had written that Pakistan's insistence on plebiscite was fraught with dangers, since this would lead to more trouble and would "have its reaction in India as well as in Pakistan". Giving clear indication of what was bothering him, if the plebiscite was held, Nehru said; "Instead, therefore, of the settlement and friendly relations that we so ardently desire, both our countries and our people will be in a much worse position. Apart from conflict, there might be large scale migration and the like, the spreading of poison in both countries." The same line of thought was articulated earlier by Nehru with the Pakistani Prime Minister and his Interior Minister at the May 1955 talks on Kashmir in New Delhi.

56. On March 29 1956, Prime Minister Nehru once again articulated his Kashmir policy in the Lok Sabha. He spoke of the changed circumstances, besides Pakistan's failure to withdraw its armed personnel from Kashmir as mandated in the Security Council Resolutions, constitutional obligations, and Pakistan's membership of the military alliances, as reasons for India's inability to hold a plebiscite in Kashmir. This created a political storm in Pakistan, both in the press and political circles of that country. Interior Minister Iskander Mirza said on April 1, 1956 that "come what may, we are determined to find a solution to the Kashmir problem based on justice", and Mohammad Ali described it as a setback to the prospects of the improved relations, he was hoping for. Despite Pakistan's strong reaction, Prime Minister Nehru felt happy that his statement had put an end to the confusion in relation to Kashmir.

57. On July 5, 1956, Nehru met Pakistani Prime Minister Mohammad Ali in London, on the sidelines of the Commonwealth Prime Ministers' Conference. They, among other subjects, discussed Kashmir. Nehru described Mohammad Ali's "approach as intriguing". Ali had blamed India for Pakistan's military alliances and alignment with the West, to which India had taken exception. Mohammad Ali said, since India had failed to resolve the issues between them, to Pakistan's satisfaction, he had to enter into military alliance. This thesis too was quoted by Foreign Minister Malik Feroz Khan Noon, once again when the Soviet Ambassador in Pakistan met him in November. The Soviet Ambassador in New Delhi, reporting to Nehru on the meeting of his colleague in Karachi with Noon told the Indian Prime Minister that Noon had offered to walk out of the Baghdad Pact, "provided the Soviet Union gave assurances to support Pakistan in the United Nations on the Kashmir issue and further assurances to give military aid to Pakistan if attacked by India".

58. The Soviet Union had initially taken an ambivalent position on Kashmir, hoping that this state might not like to join either India or Pakistan, which would leave some scope for the Soviet Union in this strategic area, closer to its border. But Western support to Kashmir, coupled with Pakistani membership of the Western alliance and bases at its soil, changed the complexion of the problem for Moscow. The Soviet Union now preferred to commit itself in favour of Kashmir's accession to India. Pakistan's stance, as articulated by Noon to the Soviet Ambassador did not carry much conviction in Moscow. Pakistan's membership of the Baghdad Pact, establishment of military bases in Pakistan territory directed at the Soviet Union, and the U2 incident confirmed to Moscow that Pakistan for the time being had been lost to it. Moscow's position on the Pakhtoon issue in favour of Afghanistan could not have endeared the Soviets to Pakistan either.

59. The U2 affair gave a big jolt to the people of Pakistan and their government, who realised that the American alliance, had suddenly and unwittingly, exposed them to retaliatory Soviet rockets, and that in the power struggle between the two titans, Pakistan was nothing more than a mere pawn. There was a sudden and greater appreciation for India's policy of non-alignment, which kept it out of the line of fire of the big powers, and at the same time brought considerable economic and political benefits in its wake.

60. In September 1960, Prime Minister Nehru visited Pakistan to sign the Indus Water Treaty. Gen. Ayub Khan, who in 1958, had in a military coup, assumed the role of the head of the State and the Government, as expected, did not fail to bring up the Kashmir issue in his talks with Nehru. On September 21, Ayub Khan told his interlocutor that there was a need to solve the Indo - Pakistan problems particularly Kashmir, and said in a matter of fact manner, that if it was not resolved between them, "it might become much more difficult or even impossible later on". He conceded that in the past, Pakistan was not justified, particularly in laying claim to Junagadh or Hyderabad, since "it was clear that these places could only go to India. They were surrounded by Indian territories, and they could not separate themselves from it. These questions should have been settled easily without the necessity even of India taking action as in the case of Hyderabad".

61. Nehru felt that "the President was treating the case of Kashmir on a separate basis and was indicating that Pakistan was justified in regard to her claim on Kashmir, though the President did not say so actually". Ayub Khan agreed with Nehru that presently there were relaxed relations between the two countries, but the same could not be said about the future. Nehru, however, was not convinced. He cautioned Ayub Khan that any change in the status quo would not only "have an upsetting effect in Kashmir itself, but also in India. We had a large population of Muslims in India and on the whole they had been integrated. But any wrong step taken by us would affect them injuriously and prevent further integration". Nehru also referred to the constitutional provisions which made it more difficult to change the present status. After pointing out numerous other changes and developments in Kashmir and its relations with India, Nehru told Ayub Khan that "it seems to me that the only practical and feasible course was to allow the matters to rest where they were, more or less, and to accept the position as it was". Persisting in his argument, Ayub Khan said that "the present position was a result of military conflict and an ad hoc cease-fire line which had no real justification as a frontier. As such, it could hardly be accepted, and it was there only because armies stood on either side." Answering his point, the Prime Minister said "adjustment could be made to conform to geographic or like features, provided the basic position was accepted. Any other course was not practicable or feasible now and would lead to trouble and difficulty." When Ayub asked Nehru to give "full thought to this question and find a way out", Nehru closed the argument, saying that he had been "considering this matter for the past dozen years and (he) would continue to give thought to it. But (he) could see no way out other than the one (he) had suggested". When Nehru asked him if he had any specific solution in mind, Ayub suggested none, and said he only wanted Nehru to give thought to it (Emphasis added).

62. After the 1962 India - China conflict, there were several rounds of discussions, between the two neighbours once again to find an amicable solution, but proved abortive as there was no meeting ground on the basic issue. Pakistan insisted that there was no other solution except a plebiscite, and India was equally emphatic that this route was no more available, due to the changed circumstances, and other implications. At the High Commissioner to Pakistan G. Parthasarathi's suggestion, it was decided to explore the alternative of a political settlement. In discussing the political alternative too, Pakistan initially insisted on making plebiscite a pre-condition, but finally agreed to drop it. India insisted that the political solution too had to be "practical, realistic and final". India insisted that any political solution involving territorial adjustment had to be on a "rational basis taking into account geographic, administrative, and other considerations and involving the least disturbance to the life and welfare of the people". Pakistan, on the other hand, suggested that the territorial division should take "into account the composition of the population, control of rivers and requirement of defence". (emphasis added)

63. Indicating the extent of territorial adjustment, India was prepared to concede certain areas west of the Valley and north of the Valley, in favour of Pakistan. After pretending that this was a ‘shock’ to Pakistan, leader of the Pakistani delegation, Zulfikar Ali Bhutto indicated that, according to their criteria, only a little more than the Kathua district on the Punjab border, in the extreme south of Kashmir, could be given to India, Pakistan being entitled to the entire State of Jammu and Kashmir, right up to Ladakh in the north-east and including the Valley, as well as the southern areas, including Jammu, Udhampur, Akhnur, Riasi, etc. After a couple of rounds, it was clear to India, that there was no meeting ground between the positions of the two countries, but was still keen to let the talks continue as long as Pakistan was prepared to talk. New Delhi wanted that if the breakdown in talks were to come, it should be from Pakistan’s side. The talks therefore went on to the next round.

64. After the third round of talks, on March 3, 1963 Bhutto, who by now had taken over as the Foreign Minister of Pakistan, addressing a press conference, and once again harped on the plebiscite and Pakistan’s determination to secure for the people of Jammu and Kashmir the right of self-determination. On May 16, 1963 the talks finally ended without any results. Prime Minister Nehru made a statement in Parliament on May 7, to this effect and regretted that "our differences with Pakistan will remain". Assuring Pakistan of India’s friendly intentions towards Pakistan, he once again repeated his offer of ‘No War Declaration’ made several times in the past. Allaying Pakistan’s apprehensions about India’s defence potential being built up then, Nehru sought to convince Pakistan that it was "for the effective resistance against the Chinese aggression" of which Pakistan was well aware of, though it minimised the threat and put the blame for India’s problem with China at New Delhi’s doorsteps.
65. Bhutto refused to be convinced by Indian assurances, and said in a statement on May 9, 1963 that it only confirmed Pakistan's "genuine apprehensions that there has been no real desire on the part of India to reach an honourable settlement with us on Kashmir". Bhutto firmly rejected any proposal involving the partition of Kashmir, and said: "I would like to state categorically and without equivocation that we have been firmly opposed to any such idea." He reiterated Pakistan's willingness "to examine any proposal or solution of the Kashmir problem, in accordance with the internationally accepted principle of self-determination". He accused India of denying this to the people of Jammu and Kashmir, "under one pretext or another". Though the Kashmir talks had not yielded much, Pakistan drew satisfaction from the fact that India, which had earlier declared Kashmir as a settled matter and an integral part of India, at last had come out to talk about its future and to that extent, it was an advance over the previous position.

66. Two parallel subterranean developments were taking place almost simultaneously, which changed the course of South Asian politics. The initial bonhomie in India-China relations had already come under severe strain on the border question from about the mid-fifties and had gradually come on the surface, to the shock of the Indian public, which had thrived on Hindi-Chinni Bhai Bhai slogans, for better part of the 50s. It was this development that Pakistan sought to gain from. About the same time, the two great communist allies, the Soviet Union and China, were struggling with their relationship. Of the two communist powers, China was more important to Pakistan visa-a-vis its utility in relation to India, particularly on the Kashmir question. As far as the Soviet Union was concerned, it had already over-committed itself on Kashmir and was a lost case. But an opening was now available to China, and Pakistan sought to seize it.

67. During the hey-days of the India-China détente, China had endorsed the Indian position on Kashmir that the state had acceded to India. Then there was a subtle and nuanced change in the Chinese position, that this was now a question to be settled between India and Pakistan, albeit peacefully. In 1962 China's attitude openly underwent a significant change. When India reminded China that as early as March 1956, the Chinese Premier, in his talks with the Indian Ambassador R. K. Nehru, had accepted the Indian position on Kashmir, and hence there was no common border between China and Pakistan, Peking repudiated this Indian assertion and said that its acceptance had not been "without any reservations".

68. The failure of the Kashmir talks was also a turning point in Pakistan's foreign policy. Pakistan, which had over-sold itself to the West in an alliance against communism, started drifting away from the West, in its efforts to woo China. Offers of military aid to India by the West in the wake of Chinese aggression disillusioned Bhutto with respect to the West. He lamented the West's augmentation of India's military strength in a "formidable manner", leaving Pakistan 'weaker'. Not placing enough trust in the assurances of the West, that their arms would not be used by India against Pakistan, he insisted on the need to maintain a military balance within the sub-continent and on the need to "correspondingly augment Pakistan's military strength". In his speech to the National Assembly on July 26, 1963, he highlighted the customary charges of Indian "arrogance and aggressiveness", and repeated that the new dangers facing Pakistan required reappraisal of its foreign policy, and that it was for the West to ensure that the past relationship was not damaged. The High Commissioner G. Parthasarathi informed New Delhi on July 23, 1963 that the American Ambassador in Islamabad had confirmed to him, that Pakistan wanted a "restoration of the military balance between India and Pakistan, as it stood last October/November" (1962). Foreign Secretary, M. J. Desai on July 24, 1963 confirmed to the High Commissioner, the "understanding reached between the Pakistanis and the Chinese about joint aggressive pressure on India".

69. In this fast changing scenario, Pakistan moved quickly. On March 3, 1963, it signed with China a boundary agreement, ceding large chunks of occupied Kashmir to that country, unmindful of Indian sensitivities. China, in order to refurbish Pakistan's image, sought to project New Delhi as the new ally of the West, by accepting their military aid. On March 31, 1963, Chou En-lai said: "the situation has changed; is now characterised by the fact that non-aligned India has become an aligned country, best appreciated by the United States in South Asia, while Pakistan, which was an ally, is regarded by the United States as a more or less nonaligned country"; that the US "will use Pakistan to check India". On July 16, 1963, High Commissioner G. Parthasarathi reported to New Delhi that his sources had informed him that Sino-Pakistani relations were "much deeper" and were likely to develop further. According to his sources, the Chinese had "assured Pakistan of all possible help against India" including military. The High Commissioner, however, had some reservations on Pakistan having already received military aid from China.

70. Pakistan continued to maintain that India had provoked the Sino-Indian conflict, which was, otherwise, nothing more than a limited border clash. President Ayub Khan, on November 5, 1962, with his military sense and keeping the weather in mind, was convinced that it was intended to be only a limited conflict. Drawing on his own experience, he feared, that the large quantities of military hardware being rushed by the US and the UK and others, would have the effect of enlarging the conflict between India and China, besides adding to the "already existing" concerns of the Pakistani people and government, that "these weapons may well be used against them (Pakistani people) in the absence of an overall settlement with India". Though Pakistan had earlier entered into talks with India on Kashmir, under pressure from the West, it remained convinced that not much could be expected from India on this issue.

71. On July 17, 1963, Pakistan Foreign Minister Bhutto told the National Assembly that India was aware of the limited nature of its conflict with China, which was "brought upon by India's own impetuosity". He said it was a pretext to garner military help, not "so much against communist China, but against the country which it has declared to be her enemy No. 1." Warning India, he said:

"God forbids, if there was to be a clash, if India in her frustration turned her guns against Pakistan, the international situation is such today that Pakistan would not be alone in that conflict.
That conflict does not involve Pakistan alone. An attack from India on Pakistan is no longer confined to the security and territorial integrity of Pakistan. An attack by India on Pakistan involves the territorial integrity and security of the largest state in Asia and therefore, this new element and this new factor brought in the situation is a very important element and a very important factor." (Emphasis added)

72. Interestingly, there was no such statement emerging from the Chinese leadership in clear cut terms declaring its support to Pakistan in so many words. It appeared, that Bhutto had seized upon the statement of Chinese Vice Premier Chen Yi, made at the United Arab Republic National Day reception at Peking that the Indian Air Force holding joint manoeuvres with the US Air Force and the Royal Air Force was a "grave step taken by the Indian government in closer collusion with imperialistic powers and (was) a deliberate attempt to create tension anew on the Sino - Indian border." He described it as a threat not only against China, "but also a threat to India's other neighbours and particularly Pakistan". (Emphasis added)

73. Bhutto continued with his tirade, blaming India for the Sino - Indian conflict. He repeated this to the British Foreign Secretary on October 16, 1963 in London. He said 'the Chinese attack had been provoked by Indians who had not made any provision with the Chinese for the status quo on the border pending an agreement and had thus helped to create their own problem'. He maintained his thesis that India was using China's hostility as a ploy to augment its defence capability. Since Pakistan itself had no intention, of keeping to the terms of its alliance with the West, that their arms would not be used against India, it too was not sanguine about the American assurances that US arms assistance would not be used against Pakistan. He therefore, insisted on the need to maintain a military balance on the sub-continent, adding that "it would be necessary also to correspondingly augment Pakistan's military strength..." Emphasising the customary charges of Indian arrogance and aggressiveness, in a July 1963 speech in the Pakistani National Assembly, Bhutto repeated that the new dangers facing Pakistan required a reappraisal of its foreign policy, and that it was for the West to ensure that the past relationship was not broken.

74. Pakistan's view, that India had provoked the clash with the Chinese to get arms from the West, was fortified by Chinese Premier Chou En-lai, in his interview with the Associated Press of Pakistan on March 31, 1963. Chou En-lai had said that "India wants to get arms from the United States to satisfy its expansionist ambitions", but he maintained that India was being "more isolated" in Asia, Africa, and Latin America.

75. In August 1965 Radio Peking endorsed the Pakistani position on infiltrators in Kashmir. It described Kashmir as the "Indian occupied sector of Kashmir", the infiltrator as "freedom fighters", and accused India of "crush(ing) down the people there". On September 4, 1965, the Chinese Vice Premier Chen Yi, told a press conference in Karachi, that "China completely sympathises with and supports the Kashmir's people's just struggle to resist India's tyrannical rule". Supporting Pakistan's action in Kashmir, he said "China firmly holds that the Kashmir question should be settled according to the pledges made by India and Pakistan to the Kashmiri people and in accordance with the aspirations of the Kashmiri people". The Indian offensive on Lahore was described by the Chinese Government as an "openly launched massive armed attack on Pakistan", which was "a still more serious act of aggression".

76. The Sino - Soviet conflict, impacted South Asian politics in its own way. The Chinese challenge to the Soviet leadership was not merely ideological but a politico-military one, considering that the two had a long common border and China had laid claim to a substantial chunk of Soviet territory. After China, the Soviet Union, which in the fifties had unequivocally endorsed the Indian position on Kashmir, was seen to be meandering towards Pakistan. As pointed out above, the West's offer of military assistance to India had disillusioned Pakistan. The Soviets were keenly watching Pakistan's frustration with the West. The American Senate too, had drastically slashed military allocation proposed by President Eisenhower for Pakistan. Moscow's ambivalence towards Kashmir, even if it was subtle, was intriguing to New Delhi, and it could see enough straws in the wind, that convinced New Delhi that Moscow could not be taken for granted. The 20th Congress of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union (CPSU) mandated an improvement in relations with the Baghdad Pact countries, Turkey, Iran and Pakistan. In 1961, the Soviet Union had offered Pakistan its first chunk of economic aid, $30 million for mineral and oil exploration. Also in the same year, Z.A. Bhutto, the then Minister of Trade had visited Moscow to improve avenues of better trade between the two countries. In the aftermath of the Cuban Missile crisis, resulting in the détente in East - West relations and bereft of the sheen that Pakistan's membership of the CENTO had, Moscow could look to a more relaxed relationship with Pakistan.
77. With the passing away of Jawaharlal Nehru in May 1964, Lal Bahadur Shastri took over the reins of the Government of India. For the first time since independence, a separate Foreign Minister, Swaran Singh, was appointed to look after the External Affairs Ministry, which, since independence was the domain of the Prime Minister himself.

78. The Kutch conflict in February - March 1965 offered Pakistan and the Western powers some solace. Both the US and the UK seized the opportunity to actively involve themselves in the dispute to convey to Pakistan their usefulness to it. They interceded with New Delhi to agree to arbitration on the Kutch dispute, which Pakistan was quite happy to accept. Pakistan did not lose much time, to draw its own conclusion from the Kutch outcome. It may have been Pakistan's calculation, that if it were to force a similar conflict in Kashmir, either way it could stand to gain. If the conflict were settled in its favour, so much the better, otherwise, there was bound to be Western intervention of some sort, and if like the Kutch, India was pressurized to accept arbitration in Kashmir in some form, or some UN intervention, the dormant issue would get a fresh lease of life. It would be a win win situation for Islamabad either way.

79. New Delhi appeared a little disappointed with Moscow, for it felt that the Soviet support was lukewarm on the Kutch issue. While the Chinese Government, in a statement issued through Hsinhua, the Chinese news agency on May 4, 1965, blamed India for provoking armed conflict in the Rann of Kutch "in an attempt to forcibly occupy the disputed territory by armed attack", the Tass statement of May 8, was a trite affair which hoped that the "differences between India and Pakistan will be settled by them by way of talks, with consideration for the interests of both the countries". While the negotiations for the modalities for a settlement of Kutch were still underway with the intervention of the US and the UK, a worried Prime Minister Lal Bahadur Shastri decided to travel to Moscow, to see if the Soviets were willing for a more active intervention and support, before he accepted the West sponsored arbitration route to solve the Kutch issue. He met General Secretary Brezhnev on May 14, 1965 and his disappointment was palpable and reflected in what Shastri told Brezhnev:

"May I say, Mr. Brezhnev that India and the Indian people have great faith in the Soviet Union. They have appreciated greatly Soviet Union's attitude on Kashmir. Their expectation is that in the matter of recent Pakistan aggression Soviet Union will lend its support to India. In fact my visit here has been interpreted by the Indian people, at this difficult juncture, I shall get the Soviet Union's moral support and it will help in changing the present climate which prevails in regard to this aggression by Pakistan. If there is no such indication, I might say that it would cause me and the people of my country much disappointment...I do not mean to suggest that Soviet Union should not advise us for a peaceful settlement, but if there is no indication in regard to Pakistan's attitude it would in a sense weaken our policy of non-alignment. Those who are aligned will have the facility to commit aggression. It should not mean that those who uphold non-alignment should not express their views somewhat frankly."

Brezhnev replied:

"Mr. Shastri, I request you to understand that the matter is not of strong words, but of dedication to policy. Each word of yours has a weight to it and force and strength behind it. It is very important that we do not spoil this policy by loud polemics - this policy of peace and peaceful coexistence….In your statement I felt a hint that at some stages, Soviet Union has not rendered sufficient help. With this I cannot agree. In the Sino - Indian conflict we took a correct stand. It contributed to the fact that this conflict did not develop. The Chinese leaders consider our statements to have been wrong and still blame us. On the Kashmir question, we took a clear stand. We never changed it taking into consideration that whole complex.

"When Ayub was here, he interpreted this in his own way. I personally told him how much we valued India and her policy of non-alignment…I gave him a sharp rebuttal to his remarks against India and this conflict…"

"We understand that you expect more firm support from us. But we assure you that would inflame the whole world. Mr. Kaul (Ambassador) told me in a reception that we could make (changes) here or there. We shall consider this."

80. The next day, on May 15, Shastri sat down with Premier Kosygin to discuss the draft of the joint communiqué, to be issued at the end of his visit to Moscow. He pointed out to Kosygin the lack of reference "to the aggression by Pakistan" and added that while he understood Soviet difficulty, "it would have given us greater strength in meeting the situation as it has arisen on our borders". Kosygin in trying to reassure the nervous Prime Minister said:

"I can tell the Prime Minister once again about Pakistan. When we had talks with Ayub Khan, we told him in no uncertain terms, that all conflicts whichever arise on India - Pakistan border, he will not meet understanding from us. He said there would not be any such conflict and he added, he understood our position. We are of the opinion that any reference in the communiqué to border conflict will not solve anything, but may complicate the situation, and both sides may have to seek allies in the West. We feel it is better to avoid this. There is no question of mentioning anything in black and white."

81. Prime Minister Shastri was apparently not too happy with the response he got in Moscow. But he was worried about the Soviets' changing stance on Kashmir! Here too, he betrayed his nervousness in his talks with Kosygin and said that while India would make every effort to avoid violent conflict, one could not be too sure of Pakistan's attitude "if they will adopt peaceful policy not only in Kutch - Sind border but elsewhere". Accusing Pakistan of "nibbling" at Indian territory Shastri added:

"They (Pakistan) think unless Kashmir is given to them, they will continue to fight in this manner. We have very clear and categorical views on Kashmir. We have declared it from the very beginning as part and parcel of India and we cannot part with it. I am glad Soviet Union's position on Kashmir is the same as it was before. We are thankful for the attitude adopted by the Soviet Union so far. …But if Pakistan persists in creating trouble, because it (Kashmir) is not handed to them, I can imagine the difficulties in putting things in black and white in the joint communiqué, but I have an impression during the talks I had with you and Mr. Brezhnev that you very well understand our position and as you said your sympathies are with India and will remain with India".

Shastri felt assured that at least on Kashmir, he had tied down the Soviets to their old position of support for India's stand on the issue.
82. This had become necessary, as pointed out above, of late New Delhi had perceived some shift in Soviet attitude towards Pakistan, and therefore Kashmir. Foreign Secretary C. S. Jha in his letter of March 4, 1965 to Ambassador T.N. Kaul in Moscow expressed his surprise and concern at this shift, which he said was "noticed at the Security Council meeting last year (1964) on the Kashmir question". He sounded somewhat worried that "it is possible that even though their basic stand on Kashmir should remain unaltered, the USSR might not give us the same support on procedural aspects as before". The Foreign Secretary recalled the stand taken by all the members of the Security Council, including the Soviet Union that "India and Pakistan should, in direct negotiations and without third-party intervention, try to reach a peaceful and honourable settlement". While Jha stressed the need for India to come to some settlement with Pakistan, he conceded that Pakistan's hardened position left little chance for "a favourable climate for negotiations to develop" to produce a settlement acceptable to both. The Foreign Secretary counted two prepositions which had been offered to Pakistan for settlement: one, a ceasefire line with some modifications and two, "the idea of a confederation". Ambassador Kaul, however insisted that Soviet Union would not "go back on our legal title to the whole State", while supporting a "realistic political settlement of the Kashmir problem more or less on the basis of the ceasefire line with minor adjustments." He felt assured that Moscow would support "our claim to the valley both for strategic reasons as well as on the grounds of our secularism". Ambassador Kaul however, was not certain how the Chinese factor would work. The Soviet Union believed that "China will not embark on a military adventure against India in the present circumstances," but she may keep on giving us pin-pricks here and there" which Kaul felt India should be able to manage.

83. It did not take long for Kashmir to arrive at the scene, and again to India's chagrin Moscow was seen initially standing at some distance. But it scrambled soon and made it known that it was determined not to let the West run away with the advantage of its diplomacy. While the US and the UK through the good offices of the UN Secretary General ensured that the war did not get prolonged beyond a point, it was the Soviet Union's deft handling that, for once the Americans found themselves edged out of the arena. The result was that both India and Pakistan agreed to meet at Tashkent under the Soviet auspices to settle their differences. In agreeing to Tashkent, after initial hesitation, Pakistan hoped, that Moscow in its anxiety to mediate in Kashmir, would take a more realistic and balanced position on Kashmir in future to prove its credentials as an honest broker. And that was enough of a gain to start with.

84. In the wake of Pakistani infiltration in Kashmir in August 1965, the Chinese wished to underline their utility to Pakistan once again. China described the infiltrators in Kashmir, as part of a movement by Kashmiri people, to shake off Indian army rule. Chen Yi, at a press conference on September 4, 1965 in Karachi, pledged "China's complete sympathies" to Pakistan and extended support to "the Kashmiri people's just struggle to resist India's tyrannical rule", and condemned India, "for its provocative acts of violating the ceasefire line and kindling and aggravating the conflict". He extended China's firm "support to Pakistan's just action in hitting back at India's armed provocations".
85. Pakistan's role in promoting Sino-American détente, strengthened Pakistan's credentials both with Peking and Washington. Playing the China card, Pakistan found it advantageous to scare New Delhi. Under the circumstances, China emerged Pakistan's most reliable option. It found it worthwhile to flaunt this relationship to browbeat India. As late as January 1982, in a speech delivered at the Federal Council, Pakistan's so-called parliament, Foreign Minister Agha Shahi described China, as a "reliable friend and partner" with a "shared commitment to principles and a continuing convergence of interests" and a country which "has proven its strength and durability". Praising China, he said: "It has stood by Pakistan as a dependable and generous friend." Giving an examples of China's generosity, Agha Shahi recounted China's help in establishing in Pakistan "the Heavy Mechanical Complex, the Heavy Forge and Foundry, the Tank and Aircraft Rebuild Factories, and last but not the least, the great Karakoram Highway which links the two countries in everlasting friendship". What Agha Shahi did not mention was more important, the nuclear and missile technology that China gave to Pakistan.

86. Reverting to India-Pakistan bilateral issues, there were many issues, that needed sorting out as a result of the partition. In the East Pakistan, the essential issues related to the treatment of minorities, border question, and sharing of Ganga waters. In the West, there were far too many issues besides Kashmir, which needed attention. Some of the major issues were Junagadh, the canal water/Indus Waters, borders, Kutch, evacuee property, financial settlement including the division of sterling balances of the undivided India, trade, transport and many more. While trade and transport may be common to both wings, other issues were purely relevant to West Pakistan.

87. The Canal Waters question confronted the two countries immediately on partition. During the colonial period, the British had constructed a network of canals, after the annexation of the Punjab in 1849, to irrigate the wastelands belonging to the Crown. Since most of the crown lands lay in that part of the Punjab, which went to Pakistan, it also enjoyed the advantage of the irrigation system in a disproportion manner. In the scheme of the partition, the headworks of the waters feeding these canals fell in the Indian Punjab. As per the arrangement worked out jointly by the Chief Engineers of Indian and Pakistani Punjabs, and approved by the Punjab Partition Committee, the supply of water was continued to the Punjab (P), on the basis of existing usages as on the date of partition, for the period up to March 31, 1948, to be replaced by a fresh agreement to be negotiated, before the expiry of the Stand Still Agreement. Since Pakistan did not care to ensure, that there was another agreement in place before the expiry of the arrangement made on partition, the supplies got disrupted. Pakistan made loud noises. The Pakistan Prime Minister Liaquat Ali Khan complained to Nehru. Following the latter's intervention, a high-powered team was invited to visit India to negotiate a fresh agreement. The Pakistani team headed, by Finance Minister Ghulam Mohammad, visited New Delhi and a new agreement was signed on May 4, 1948. On the Indian side, it was signed among others by Prime Minister Nehru himself for India and on the Pakistan's side by Ghulam Mohammad and others. Under this agreement, while supplies were assured to Pakistan Punjab, the Government of Pakistan recognised India's anxiety, to develop fresh areas on the Indian side, where water was scarce. The two governments agreed to approach the problem in a practical spirit, on the basis of India progressively diminishing supplies to Pakistan canals, in the hope that Pakistan will take the necessary steps to make alternative arrangements. After initial working of this agreement, Pakistan wanted to renge from it, on the pretext that it was signed by Pakistan under duress, which hurt Nehru to no end, since had personally negotiated and signed the agreement to ensure full justice to Pakistan.

88. The Indus system of rivers comprises six rivers - the Indus, the Jhelum, the Chenab, the Ravi, the Beas and the Sutlej. The Indus and the Jhelum between them carry two-thirds and together with the Chenab about four-fifths of the waters of the entire system. The culturable area commanded by the Indus system is roughly 26 million acres in India and 39 million acres in Pakistan i. e. in the ratio of 40:60. About 18 percent of the area on the Indian side was irrigated at the time of partition; the area falling in Pakistan was about 51 percent. India used only 5 percent of the total inflow in the rivers against 39 percent by Pakistan.

89. Acute food shortages in post-partition India, underlined the need for increasing the irrigated area and build a new network of canals and water conservation and storage projects. India felt there was enough water in the Indus system for the reasonable requirements of both the countries. Out of the annual flow of 168 million acre-feet, 120 million acre-feet could be developed for irrigation, whereas at the time of partition only 72 million acre-feet were being used—8 million by India and 64 by Pakistan. There was thus an unutilised flow of 48 million acre-feet which flowed straight into the sea. India's efforts to involve Pakistan, in a joint technical study of the problem, did not bear any fruits since Pakistan insisted on referring the problem of sharing the waters to the International Court of Justice (ICJ). Pakistan would also not agree to an ad hoc tribunal of the judges of both the countries looking into the problem. Meanwhile in 1951, Mr. Lilienthal, former Chairman of the Tennessee Valley Authority (TVA in the USA), after a visit to India and Pakistan, concluded that the canal water problem between the two countries was a feasible engineering problem to be settled by engineers with the help of the World Bank. His idea appealed to the World Bank and its President Eugene Black showed interest in the scheme. He set up a working party of three engineers, one each from India, Pakistan and the World Bank, but his efforts too did not succeed in finding an acceptable solution. Finally, the World Bank came out with its own broad solution that the entire flow of Western rivers, Indus, Chenab and Jhelum be earmarked for Pakistan and the Eastern Rivers, Sutlej, Beas and Ravi for India. The scheme envisaged that Pakistan would undertake, with international financial help, alternative works to divert its present uses from the eastern rivers to the western rivers, for which there would be an interim period and finally the eastern rivers being exclusively reserved for India's use. India was allowed certain non-consumptive uses of the western rivers. After eight years of negotiations, through the good offices of the World Bank, the Indus Water Treaty was signed in Karachi on September 19, 1960 by Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru and President Ayub Khan.
Treaty laid down the rights and obligations of both sides in relation to the use of waters of the Indus system of rivers. It also laid down a framework for the resolution, in a cooperative spirit, of the questions, the differences or the disputes that might arise in implementation of the Treaty, either bilaterally or through neutral international arbitrators. India agreed to pay Pakistan 62,060,000 Pound Sterling to build replacement links from the existing Eastern to the Western rivers. The most important feature of the Treaty was that, it could not be abrogated or terminated by either side unless it was replaced by "another duly ratified treaty concluded for that purpose between the two Governments". As long as there is life on this planet, the rivers have to flow carrying the life-giving water for both the countries, who have to share it. Hence the permanent nature of the Treaty.

90. The limited use of water from the western rivers by India was subject to the certain limitations laid down in the Treaty, and India has scrupulously honoured those limitations. Against its entitlement of a storage capacity of 3.6 million acre-feet of water, India has yet to build any storage capacity. As against the irrigation permitted for 1.34 million acres, India has created an irrigation capacity for 0.792 million acres. Similarly out of the total potential of 18,653 MW of hydro-power which India could generate, only 2,324 MW have been commissioned with another 659MW-capacity projects are under construction.

91. The Treaty is the most comprehensive document to be negotiated between the two countries. It deals with the entire river system of the Indus including its tributaries, sub-tributaries and even streams, in an all inclusive manner. It is a tribute to those who negotiated it. In its existence of more than half a century, only once an issue had to be referred to the neutral international experts. All the other issues that arose between the two sides were settled by the Permanent Indus Commission composed of Indian and Pakistani experts.

92. The Indus Water question though a highly technical issue, had its political ramifications too. It involved the construction of Mangla Dam by Pakistan in Pakistan Occupied Kashmir. India apprehended that if its construction was linked to the Indus water question, as part of the replacement works, it might ipso facto mean recognition of Pakistan's juridical claim to the area of Kashmir under its occupation. This issue was resolved, when it was agreed that neither the replacement and development works to be constructed by Pakistan - which would include Mangla - nor the Indus Basin Development Fund, which would finance the replacement works under the Indus Treaty, would be part of the Indus Water Treaty. It was clearly understood that the financing of the Mangla project works would be the subject matter of a separate agreement between Pakistan and the funding agencies or countries. The fact, that works, which were built by Pakistan in its occupied territory of Kashmir, did not figure in the Treaty, but India's uses of waters of the Western Rivers in Jammu and Kashmir State are specifically laid down under Article III (2) of the Treaty. India's contribution was paid to the credit of the World Bank, since India was not a member of the Indus Basin Development Fund. Similarly there were other clauses in the agreement which safeguarded India's political interest in Kashmir, by the allocation of Western Rivers to Pakistan and their development.
93. The resolution of the Indus water question left India and Pakistan with a similar problem in the eastern region, the sharing of the Ganga Waters. Historically the Bhagirathi carried the main channel of the Ganga and therefore bulk of her water, which kept the Calcutta port flushed and going for centuries. In the last couple of hundred years, there was a shift in the flow of the Ganga, the Bhagirathia - Hoogly losing its status as the main channel, with the bulk of the water turning southeast towards the Padma. This caused siltation in the Bhagirthi channel, which in turn led to increase in the intensity and frequency of tidal bores in the Hoogly thereby impeding navigation. Various studies conducted in this regard before and after the partition, suggested the need for a barrage on the Ganga to augment the supplies in the Hoogly, to save the port of Calcutta. The Radcliffe Boundary Commission, dividing the province of Bengal, taking note of the problem of the Calcutta port, had awarded the Muslim majority district of Murshidabad, where the barrage was to be located to India and compensated Pakistan with the Hindu majority district of Khulna.

94. After the partition, India seriously started looking into the possibility of the barrage at Farakka, since the problem of Calcutta port had become acute. For instance in 1938, ships of a draught of 26 ft could use the port for nearly 300 days in a year. In 1961 it could not be opened to such vessels for even a single day. In 1974-75 the port handled traffic of 7.5 million tons against the 11 million tons in 1964-65. Besides, siltation of the river and consequent increase in the salinity adversely affected the health, sanitation and industrial life of the entire area, historically dependent on the river.
95. Notwithstanding the preponderance of the Indian claim on the Ganga waters, India had not been unmindful of the needs of East Pakistan, a co-riparian and as such was prepared to accommodate its reasonable needs of water and entered into negotiations with Pakistan. Unfortunately, this benign attitude of India, was to prove quite costly. It is ironic that Pakistan, which in 1968 claimed almost the entire flow of the Ganga, was not even aware initially of the quantity of water, needed for East Pakistan. It may be instructive to recall the course of the negotiations with Pakistan before the emergence of Bangladesh on the scene. At the first June - July 1960, official level discussions, Pakistan pegged the needs of East Pakistan at only 3,500 cusecs in April, the lean period, a negligible quantity, (considering the minimum flow of 55,000 cusecs even during the lean period). During the subsequent meetings, Pakistan's demand continued to swell as the Ganga swells during the monsoons. At the second meeting (October 1960), it demanded 18,090 cusecs, in April 1961, 29,352, in December 1961-January 1962, 32,010 cusecs and finally at the fifth meeting, in May 1968 it demanded 49,000 cusecs (all quantities being for the month of April). The last indicated quantity was almost the whole of the flow in the lean period of April. Since the supporting evidence was too flimsy, to give satisfaction to New Delhi, India was not quite convinced that Pakistan's stand was in keeping with its avowed policy of discovering a problem where none existed. It was clear to the Government of India that Pakistan wished to create conditions, like the ones on the Indus and get the issue of Ganga waters internationalised. It intended to stall, in the meantime, the construction of the Farakka Barrage, which the Government of India was determined to prevent at all costs. In all the negotiations with Pakistan on the Ganga waters, India made sure that the discussion remained at the technical level only.

96. Knowing the Pakistani intentions, India ignored Pakistan's objections, and went ahead with the Farakka project. When Bangladesh came into existence, at the end of 1971, the Barrage was complete at a cost of Rs. 1560 crores (15, 600 millions) and the construction of the feeder canals was in progress. The question therefore was how best India could help the new country by sharing the available flows? This question has since been settled by mutual negotiations and each one showing the understanding for the needs of the other.

XIII

97. Another problem, which bothered India, was the question of the evacuee properties, left behind by the Hindu and Sikh refugees in West Pakistan, at the time of partition. Since the migration from East Pakistan to India, immediately on partition was on much smaller scale and there was no ethnic cleansing, as it happened in the West, East Pakistan did not present with a problem of evacuee properties. However, as pointed out above, in the next couple of years, as the treatment of minorities in the East Pakistan worsened, leading to an exodus. The Nehru - Liaquat Pact of April 1950, stemmed the tide for the time being. It not only stopped the migration but those who had already migrated, were able to return and claim the complete ownership rights of their properties in either country. They could sell, or exchange such properties and could even recover the rent of immoveable properties. Since the Hindus in East Pakistan were in a large number, even though a substantial minority, their number gave them some security, a problem of the scale and kind as in West Pakistan, did not exist in the east. This problem was, however acute in the western region, where the migration had started, even before the formal inauguration of Pakistan. The partition was accompanied by a virtual pogrom in which hundreds of thousands were killed. It created such a fear among the non-Muslims that they would not dare to look at their properties back home. There were killings on the Indian side too, but their number was much smaller because the Indian leaders, like Mahatma Gandhi, Prime Minister Nehru, Maulana Azad etc., launched a peace offensive to prevent people leaving India. As the peace returned, even those who had left were invited to come back with the assurance of the return of their properties, jobs and security. About a lakh of Muslims did return home to claim their properties and jobs. But there was no such move on the part of Pakistani leaders to assure the non-Muslims not to migrate or to offer them an olive branch after they had left.

98. With millions finding their way into India, in search for a safe haven, the Government of India, took upon itself the task of providing them succour and rehabilitation. In so far as the properties left behind by the displaced persons in West Pakistan were concerned, negotiations started with Pakistan immediately on partition. The problem was discussed at a number of Indo-Pak conferences. While some agreement was reached, relating to the moveable properties and their claims in respect of court deposits, contractors' claims, bank accounts, and fixed deposits, pay, pension and provident funds of serving and retired government and local bodies' employees; no agreement could be found for the immovable property. The Government of Pakistan adopted a cussed attitude towards the plight of the displaced persons.
Pakistan's refusal to come to some agreement on the question of immoveable properties was inhibited by the awareness by Karachi, that the properties left behind in Pakistan by the non-Muslims were far in excess in value in comparison to the value of the properties left behind by the Muslim migrants from India to West Pakistan. This aspect was also stressed by President Rajendra Prasad in his note mentioned above. It was estimated that the approximate value of the properties left behind by Hindu and Sikh displaced persons was Rs. 500 crores (Rs. 5000 million), against 100 crores (Rs. 1000 million) left behind by the Muslims. Besides, the agricultural land left behind by displaced persons in West Pakistan was about 90 lakh acres, a considerable portion of which was canal irrigated, whereas the Muslim evacuees left about 60 lakh acres of comparatively of much inferior quality. Pakistan insisted that the displaced persons could visit their properties, sell them, exchange them, or rent them as they liked. Pakistan knew it was an unworkable proposition, yet insisted on it to avoid payment of the difference. Pakistan refused to concede that given the security situation, which in the first instance drove them out of their homes and hearths, would prevent the displaced persons to undertake the hazardous visits. Besides, such sales/exchanges were not easy to negotiate and would lead to cartelisation of buyers and lead to distress sales if at all it were possible.

99. In July 1950, Liaquat Ali Khan was visiting New Delhi for talks with Nehru. Gopalaswamy Ayyangar, Transport Minister, who was also looking after most of the issues arising out of the partition, had got made an estimate of Rs. 300 crores as the paying capacity of Pakistan on this count. He suggested to Nehru who was to hold talks with Liaquat:
"The figure of 300 crores as representing Pakistan's capacity to pay was estimated by Deshmukh at my request, but it will be too much to expect that we could, for squaring the amount relating to evacuee property, ask Pakistan to shoulder the whole of this amount as a debt, she would owe to India on account of evacuee property alone. We should be prepared, if there is going to be an ad hoc arrangement to accept much less. I think it will be worthwhile to do so in order to end all the trouble we are going through in this connection. I would personally be content with Pakistan accepting a liability for a hundred crores, but this is a matter for bargaining. If you propose to have a talk with Liaquat Ali Khan on this question, I would suggest your discussing with him the main principles of the scheme without committing yourself to any definite figures. If they are prepared to discuss figures also, we can give some vague indications of the figures that we have in mind."

100. However, during the visit of Liaquat Ali Khan, this issue was not discussed. Nothing much came out of the discussions at various other levels either. The Government of India was getting desperate at the failure of a settlement on the question of immovable property since the displaced persons were living in make shift quarters and in distressed conditions needing permanent rehabilitation rather desperately. On October 13, 1952, the Government of India informed the Government of Pakistan that the policy of sale or exchange of property, by the owners in each other country has not worked even after five years. The owners of the properties, had neither received any rent nor were they in a position to visit their properties to sell or exchange for obvious reasons. It also said that in the meantime, all the evacuee properties had been occupied by the refugees on temporary basis and the Custodians who were in-charge of the properties, were not in a position to look after them.
Similarly, the refugees who were in temporary occupation, had their own problem to look after them, and as such the properties were deteriorating for lack of repairs. It was suggested to Pakistan since direct negotiations had failed, the Government of India would be agreeable to refer the method of evaluation of these properties to an arbitration or an impartial tribunal agreed upon between the two governments. To obtain Pakistan’s consent to some arrangement on this vexatious question, New Delhi went on to suggest, that, if Pakistan desired, the matter could be referred to the International Court of Justice or an ad hoc court consisting of the nominees of the two governments. This suggestion of international arbitration was made, since it was clear to the Government of India that Pakistan put greater faith in the international arbitration than Indian and Pakistani judges sitting as arbitrators.

101. There was, however, no response from the Government of Pakistan, to any of the suggestions. In order to resolve the issue, Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru himself wrote on January 13, 1953 to Pakistan Prime Minister Khwaja Nazimuddin, commending the October 13, 1952 proposal of government to government exchange of properties. He insisted that there was no chance of any of the displaced persons going back to their homes to look after their properties or sell them, and also because the properties were fast deteriorating, it was an ideal solution. In a lengthy reply dated March 5, 1953, the Pakistan Government went into the entire history of the evacuee property issue, blamed the Government of India for failure to come to an acceptable arrangement. He concluded that the Government of India’s decision to assume the properties of the Muslim migrants and compensate the Indian refugees amounted to expropriation of the Muslim properties, which would only create fresh difficulties and problems, for which the responsibility would be that of the Government of India. The Government of India, unmindful of the Pakistani objections, went ahead and settled the problem of immovable properties as it proposed. This greatly facilitated the permanent rehabilitation of the refugees and gave them some stability in their lives to move on.

102. On the question of moveable properties, the situation was slightly better, in that some agreements were reached but implementation remained tardy, the level of satisfaction obtained remained low. An agreement on moveable properties was first reached in June 1950 and further decisions were reached in subsequent years in 1953 and 1955. The agreement covered all items of moveable properties, such as personal and house-hold effects, trade goods, merchandise, seized property including fire-arms, buried treasures, lockers, and safe-deposits, gold loan accounts, joint stock companies, court deposits, shares and securities etc. A high powered Implementation Committee was set up to ensure speedy implementation of decisions arrived at between the two governments. Since the decisions were never backed by quick implementation, it only increased the level of frustration of the displaced persons. The Implementation Committee's meetings ceased after 1963. The deterioration in the political climate, between the two countries, in the meantime had hit a nadir, followed by Kutch and 1965 Kashmir conflicts. Thereafter, there was stalemate and the matter went into limbo with most of the decisions remaining unimplemented. These claims involved several crores of rupees, which were huge amounts in those days.
103. After the Kashmir conflict of 1965, followed by the Tashkent Declaration, the relations between India and Pakistan limped back. Tashkent, however did not offer Pakistan a solution of the Kashmir issue. The level of dissatisfaction and therefore frustration with India continued in Islamabad. Pakistan, however had come to realise that an armed conflict was no longer an option either. Be it, as it may, India soon found that Pakistan's fervour for Kashmir had diminished a little. At the first ministerial meeting with Pakistan held in March 1966, India found to its regret, that Pakistan's post-1965 priorities were to refurbish its depleted arsenals, building up tensions and hatred against India, draw up pictures of Indian tyranny in Kashmir to convey that India was faced with an acute political, social and security crisis in Kashmir.

104. By the middle of 1967, some progress towards normalisation had been achieved, namely in respect of withdrawal of forces to the pre-1965 positions, exchange of prisoners of war, restoration of full diplomatic relations, resumption of over-flights, restricted visa facilities etc. However the uncomfortable feelings in the relations refused to go away. Seized properties, as provided for in the Tashkent Declaration, had not been exchanged, trade remained at a standstill, despite India's unilateral decision to remove all trade embargos, and to return all seized properties. Travel between the two countries remained restricted, and communications were not fully restored. On the Kashmir issue India had been more than willing to talk but within certain parameters i.e. within the oft-repeated, very precise basic position of India that the State of Jammu and Kashmir having finally and irrevocably acceded to India, was an integral part of the Indian Union. Therefore, any talks on the Kashmir question would have to be within this basic framework and keeping in view the ground realities. India made it known that the plebiscite was out of question and that the principle of self-determination had no relevance to integral parts of sovereign States.

105. While both India and Pakistan had learnt to live with this stalemate, trouble was brewing for Pakistan on the domestic front and India was sucked into it. In the post-Tashkent period Zulfikar Ali Bhutto's successful campaign against Ayub Khan, particularly on Kashmir, had made him make way for another General, this time Yahya Khan. As pointed out above, the fractional politics of the country worked in favour of the western wing, at the cost of the more populated East Pakistan. For too long had the people in the East looked meekly and submissively as the West rode rough shod over it. The iniquitous arrangement had generated dissatisfaction among the populace, which enabled the East Pakistan based Awami League to unite the province politically under the leadership of Sheikh Mujeebur Rahman, to challenge the West Pakistan domination and its monopoly of power at the centre, since the creation of Pakistan in 1947. It is true, there had been prime ministers from the eastern wing too, but they depended for their political support on the western elite. Besides, since 1958 the Punjabi-Pathan army, under the leadership of General Ayub Khan and now Yahya Khan and their coterie of army officers, had monopolised the political power. All this favoured the western elite class and the East was left to look for political crumbs thrown by the West. Now, prudently, the East consolidated itself under one political party and one leader to challenge the domination of the West.

106. This consolidation of political forces in East Pakistan demonstrated the magic of electoral majority for once. General Yahya Khan had promised to hold elections, based on adult franchise, for the first time in Pakistan's history. The people waited for this opportunity with bated breath. In November, a few weeks before the elections (scheduled for December 1970), East Pakistan suffered a terrible cyclone, in which between 150,000 to 200,000 people were killed and another 1.5 to 2 million were rendered homeless. The tardy manner and slow speed of the relief operations, convinced the people here once again, that in their plight they were alone. The ensuing elections were seen as an opportunity to take revenge. In the election results, the worst fears of the army and of the Western political elite came true. The Awami League won 160 of the 162 seats it contested and along with 7 of the indirectly elected seats reserved for women, it made a total of 167 out of the total strength of the National Assembly of 313, and therefore the right to form its government at the centre. In the East Pakistan Assembly, it won 288 elected and 10 indirectly elected women's seats, making a total of 298 out of the total strength of 310, a clean sweep. The Pakistan People's Party led by Zulfikar Ali Bhutto could only win 81 seats in the National Assembly. Its victories were mainly in the Punjab (62) and Sind (18). It won just one seat in North Western Frontier Province and nothing in Baluchistan.
107. In the entire life of Pakistan, the leaders of the western wing had not faced such a situation. They found the political power slipping out of their hands. The red herring was the election manifesto of the Awami League, that, were the party to come to power, it would draft a new constitution providing for decentralisation of power and autonomy for the constituent units, based on the six-point programme. In a rear guard action, Bhutto leading the charge against the East, declared on December 20, 1970 that neither a new constitution, nor any government at the centre could be formed, without the cooperation of his party, which had emerged the largest in the West. Bhutto's assertion was based on the spurious thesis that the real power of the central government was derived from the Punjab and Sind, the two provinces where his party had also won in the provincial elections, and therefore the party winning solely in the East could not be trusted with the complete authority of the central government. Gen. Yahya Khan's vacillation and Bhutto's mulishness prevented even the process of convening the National Assembly being put into motion. The historic opportunity for the emergence of a democratic set up, after Pakistan's first ever general elections, based on adult franchise, was allowed to slip. The arrest of Mujib, East Pakistan's declaration of independence, Genral Yahya Khan's response with Martial Law, the army repression that was let loose in the East, the genocide, the stream of refugees pouring into India and India's response, international neglect, Pakistan attack on Indian cities in the Punjab provoking India into war, now all part of history, formalised the geographic split of Pakistan into a political reality. Henceforth two wings of one country became two independent and sovereign states, equal members of the comity of nations.
108. The developments leading to the emergence of Bangladesh had put Indian diplomacy to a severe test, which it faced successfully. It met the twin dangers from Pakistan and China. We have already discussed above the emergence of Pakistan - China axis against India. India was not unaware that China too had its soft belly in its conflict with the Soviet Union both ideological and political. Chinese claim to large chunks of Soviet territory, had made the armies of the two countries face each other, eyeball-to-eyeball.

109. The tragedy played within East Pakistan before the emergence of Bangladesh, did not spare India. The Pakistan army's crackdown in East Pakistan, indulging in rape, pillage and genocide, made almost ten million people seek refuge in India. The World community, to India's chagrin, remained indifferent to India's efforts to draw its attention to this horrendous development at its doorstep, and the burden that the ten million refugees cast on its socio-economic health. New Delhi was distressed. Pakistan's frustration on its failure to repress the people of East Bengal and control their aroused emotions was palpable. The people of East Bengal, who by nature are a peaceful people, given to life of art and literature, dance, drama and song were facing the bayonets of the army from West Pakistan, an experience they had not known before but now faced with a do or die spirit. They had organised themselves into a voluntary force called the Mukti Bahini. Mujibur Rahman's arrest and detention in West Pakistan for treason had added fuel to the burning fire. Pakistan was getting desperate by the day and had moved several divisions of its army from West Pakistan to East Bengal. In its effort to cut off Indian support to the Mukti Bahini, Pakistan army mounted air attacks on Indian cities across the border in the Punjab.

110. India had seen all this coming for quite some time. It was New Delhi’s assessment, that the situation in East Pakistan was getting out of Pakistan's control and in order to divert attention from developments in the East, it might mount an attack in the West. Naturally, New Delhi was prepared for the worst. To shore up its armed strength, to meet the duel challenge from Pakistan and China, efforts were made to procure some essential military supplies and equipment from the Soviet Union. India was too well aware that the Soviet Union had also evinced a good deal of interest in the Pakistan developments and was concerned about them. According to Pakistan Ambassador in Moscow, Jamsheed Marker, in his book Quiet Diplomacy, the Soviets had indeed been in touch with all the stakeholders in Pakistan including Mujib and had conveyed their concern at the developing scenario, which to them was quite disquieting, at the highest level in Pakistan. A note handed over to President Yahya Khan personally by the Soviet Ambassador in Pakistan at the beginning of March 1971, sought to convey Soviet's explicit interest. The note said that in Moscow, friendly attention was being given to the situation developing in Pakistan, and though the deteriorating situation was mainly the matter of internal concern, 'the tension of the situation in friendly Pakistan, which is a neighbour of the Soviet Union, cannot but arouse the concern of the Soviet people, as in situations of this kind, problems of internal character are often inseparable from matters of the outside political situation'. The Soviet Foreign Office even briefed Pakistani Ambassador Jamsheed Marker in Moscow, of their demarche in Islamabad and their deep concern about political developments in Pakistan. The Soviets were in touch with Mujibur Rahman also and had even passed on his messages to the Pakistan authorities. As the talks between Yahya Khan and Mujib failed and broke off, the Soviet Consul General in Karachi, according to the account of Ambassador Marker, met Yahya Khan in Karachi, when he returned from Dacca on March 28 and conveyed to him the oral message from Kosygin, containing Moscow's concern at the possible use of army. The message inter alia said:

"But to be quite frank we would like to express our opinion that fratricidal conflict in East Pakistan will inevitably give rise to the sense of deep anxiety and negative reaction in the Soviet Union and as we are sure, amongst all friends of Pakistan".

Moscow advised immediate resumption of negotiations and measures ‘for the cessation of bloodshed in East Pakistan’. Pakistan did reply to Soviet demarches assuring them that all efforts were being made to address the situation, it, nevertheless, left Pakistan worried at the overt and excessive interest shown by Moscow and its repeated interventions, and demarches.

111. It may be recalled, that in January 1971 there was a hijacking of the Indian Airlines Srinagar - Jammu flight to Lahore where it was allowed to be blown up by the hijackers. New Delhi was so incensed at the callous attitude of the Pakistan Government, who made no effort to save the aircraft, that on February 4, 1971 it suspended all over-flights over its territory by Pakistan military or civil aircraft.
112. On March 14, the Indian Deputy High Commissioner from Dacca reported that Pakistan was moving two and a half Divisions of its army under Lt. Gen. Mitha Khan from Quetta to East Pakistan, a move with ominous forebodings. Mujib, through his emissary, had also conveyed to the Deputy High Commissioner that he had reached the stage of no return, since Pakistan had decided on use of army to crush the civil population after the failure of talks. Gen. Yahya Khan, in a broadcast from Islamabad on March 26, dubbed Mujib’s decision to launch a civil disobedience movement, treason. In a desperate move to stem the developing unrest, which was nothing short of a civil rebellion, Pakistan banned all political parties and political activity of all types.

113. On March 23, 1971, the Indian Ambassador in Moscow Durga Prasad Dhar, made a farewell call on the Soviet Premier Kosygin, though he was to leave for India after a few weeks. He took this opportunity to inform him that after the recent general elections in India, the Prime Minister was now more self-confident and prepared to take new initiatives in foreign and domestic policies. He also discussed with him the latest developments in relation to Pakistan and China. He particularly mentioned Chinese intransigence in responding to Indian efforts for better relations. Ambassador Dhar also thanked him for the supplies of military hardware which New Delhi had requested, but conveyed some disappointment, at the lack of progress on the Indian request for bomber aircraft, which had become critical in view of the developing situation in the subcontinent and the well equipped Pakistan Air Force.
114. On June 5, 1971, Ambassador Dhar made his farewell call on the Soviet Defence Minister Marshal Grechko. The Marshal, was aware of the fast deteriorating politico-military situation on the sub-continent. He was too well aware of the fact, that New Delhi had failed to make any headway in its relations with China, and had become vulnerable in the present scenario. He took the opportunity to revive the old Soviet proposal for a friendship treaty, made a couple of years ago to Prime Minister Mrs. Gandhi, who then did not bite. Marshal Grechko now smelt the opportunity and revived the proposal with Ambassador Dhar. In the Ambassador’s assessment, the Soviets were somewhat convinced that the events on the subcontinent were inching towards an armed conflict between India and Pakistan, with the Chinese watching on the sidelines, and this was the opportune moment to sell the treaty to India. The Soviet interest in the treaty with India was tied to their own deteriorating relations with China. Moscow’s move for an Indo-Soviet Treaty was a strategic one, to encircle China, as later developments were to prove. Ambassador Dhar in reporting his meeting with Marshal Grechko to Foreign Secretary T. N. Kaul, on the same day (June 5) emphasising the all pervasive Soviet interest in the treaty said that:

"the mention of this document in various forms from Pegov to Grechko, from our Central Committee contact to a junior dignitary as Labochev in Foreign Office makes it clear that in spite of the developing crisis in our relations with Pakistan, with the Chinese intervention as a distinct possibility, the Soviets would be prepared to accept the responsibilities and obligations which would devolve on them as a result of such a commitment". (emphasis added)
115. The Soviet initiative and interest in the treaty, contrary to the popular perception in India, particularly at the time when the treaty was signed, that this document was the product of Indian initiative, was a little known fact. Indeed New Delhi was perceived to feel jittery at the developing crisis in relations with Pakistan with distinct possibility of the Chinese intervention. It was considered to be an insurance document that New Delhi had negotiated. The fact was that it was a document, which Moscow was pushing at New Delhi for quite some time. It found the present situation, an opportune moment, since India appeared vulnerable and pushed it through. The Ambassador was more than convinced that it was the document of the hour and India should not refuse it, though he was little reluctant to stick out his neck at the fag end of his tenure. Making a forceful plea for the treaty he told the Foreign Secretary in his letter of June 5, 1972:

"Zaheedi’s shame-faced threat to us that Iran would come to the assistance of Pakistan, the activities of the so-called consortium of some Islamic countries, the continuing threats from China, all put together make me wonder whether we are being wise in reacting in a lukewarm manner to the Soviet offer of unequivocal help to us. The pros and cons of this proposal and its present and ultimate utility can best be judged in New Delhi in consultation with the Foreign Minister and other concerned authorities. It is, however, important that we do have some sort of an understanding of what we expect the Soviet Union to do for us in the event of our country being involved in a conflict with Pakistan singly or along with her allies. I am not taking merely in terms of the political requirements of the situation as it will develop as a consequence of a conflict of this type. I am more interested in the military aspects of the aid and assistance which we will need and which we are bound to seek."
Ambassador Dhar felt if there were any reservations in having an open treaty with Moscow, the option of a secret document was also available.

116. In trying to sell the treaty to India, Marshal Grechko went to great lengths. What Dhar was seeking was supply of certain weapon systems, but Marshal sang a different tune altogether. He told Dhar not to worry about Pakistan, but "take into account the unpredictable enemy from the North". He spoke of the tense situation that had developed on the eastern borders of the USSR, where China had laid claim to 1.5 million kilometres of Soviet territory, embracing a population of 8 million. The Marshal gave a detailed account of the Soviet army, air and naval deployment, which had made the Chinese "aware of the superiority of the Soviet forces on the Eastern border and this had 'disowned their tail'". He said the Chinese knew of the Soviet mood and would not dare to play any prank with them. The Marshall added for good measure: 'the Chinese were aware that India was relatively militarily weak. They could, therefore, afford to be aggressive, even insolent and arrogant towards India. They had to be watched and India had to be careful'. After a long sermon on the Soviet strength, he said it would be of vital importance 'if our friendship was "fixed" in a treaty of mutual help of the kind recently concluded by the USSR with the United Arab Republic'. He went to the extent of telling the Ambassador, that the draft of the treaty had already been worked out and it had been shown to Swaran Singh, when he had earlier visited Moscow as Defence Minister. Reminding the Ambassador of the deployment of massive Soviet armed strength on the Soviet - Chinese border, he delivered his final punch line, and said: "Do you think, that the massing of our troops in the Western and North-western borders of China does not help India directly in her defence against China? If the Chinese had not to contend against our forces, they would release their hordes for use against you (India). We have to understand these problems in the military sense-in the operational sense". (emphasis added)

117. The political situation in New Delhi had undergone a substantial change from the days when the treaty was first proposed by Moscow around 1969. Prime Minister Mrs. Gandhi was internally fighting a political battle of her own and did not find it prudent to give any ammunition to her political rivals, by joining in an open alliance with the Soviet Union. She, therefore, avoided committing herself to any such proposition. Beside, New Delhi then faced no military-related challenge. The political scene in India now presented a different picture with the success of Congress Party in the general elections held in March 1971. Mrs. Gandhi had emerged politically stronger. New Delhi could also foresee a conflict with Pakistan as a distinct possibility. It had become necessary to strengthen the armed forces to face the emerging challenge in East Pakistan. New Delhi was conscious of the Chinese hostility and feared a Sino - Pakistan collusion. Grechko had cleverly played on this combined fear to scare New Delhi. The convergence of Indian and Soviet interests, brought the two together and resulted in the Indo - Soviet Treaty of Peace, Friendship and Cooperation, which was signed in October 1971.

118. The war against Pakistan was fought and won. Pakistan had been weakened both politically and militarily. China, apart from making some incendiary noises, stood aside and was exposed. The challenge posed by the United States, which had despatched a warship in the Bay of Bengal, to overawe India at the height of the operations, was met. India won back the respect dented in 1962. New Delhi could heave a sigh of relief and bask in the glory of restored national dignity.

119. Soviet intentions for signing the Treaty of Peace unravelled themselves after Bangladesh war, though it was clear to New Delhi even then, that Moscow was obsessed with Peking. The Chief of Army Staff, General Manekshaw along with D. P. Dhar, (now Chairman of the Policy Planning Committee in the Ministry of External Affairs) visited Moscow in February 1972, with a shopping list, intended to replenish the losses of the war and to further strengthen India's defence potential. On February 25, 1972, they, together had a meeting with the Soviet General Staff, led by Defence Minister Marshall Grechko. The COAS, talked of his apprehensions of a renewed round of conflict with Pakistan in the near future. Marshal Grechko felt that India was "overstating the Pakistan threat" but "missed the ominous source from where the real threat to India emanates namely China". Strategist as he was, Marshal Grechko speaking in military terms, told both the Army Chief and DP Dhar that "China was the real danger and India would be well advised to constantly remind herself of this fact. She could ignore this only at her own peril". Mincing no words, he delivered his lines, as in a dramatic performance. He said: "history has cast the role (of) allies (on us) against this menace". Both must get to "defend them together against this menace and it would be wise for both the countries to coordinate their strategies and plans and harmonize their defence organisations for meeting such an eventuality".

120. Without making any bones, he specifically suggested a "military alliance" between the two. Addressing directly Gen. Manekshaw, he said, "India would need the Soviet Union and the Soviet Union would need India and her support to deal with the designs of China". He advised that, it was important, therefore, to talk in terms of realities of the situation rather than "little phantoms like Pakistan". Answering the Chief's request for military hardware to strengthen the Indian defence potential, the Marshal put it straight and bluntly:

"If we have an alliance, I shall earmark 50 IBM's for your defence against China. I shall not locate them on your soil but on my own so that you do not run any risk." (Emphasis added)

121. The Chief, sidetracking the alliance question, returned to the question of defence equipment. Marshal Grechko too avoided a straight answer and said: "The question of equipment was not of very importance". He believed that the time had come when India and the Soviet Union must enter into a detailed understanding of how and in what manner they should meet the Chinese threat, whenever it materialised. Concluding he asked D. P. Dhar to "convey his warmest and deepest regards to Prime Minister (Mrs. Gandhi) and an assurance on behalf of the Soviet Union armed forces that they would always be at her disposal".

122. Mr. Dhar, matching wits for wits with the Marshal, told him that relations with China had indeed not registered any improvement. India took into account "the possible malevolence of Chinese intentions". Answering the Marshal's suggestion for a new treaty, Dhar said that there already existed a treaty between the two countries for "mutual consultations and coordination of our strategy and tactics, in terms of Article IX of the Indo-Soviet Treaty" and therefore a fresh document now appeared redundant. The Marshall was indeed disappointed. Dhar saved India from being tied to the apron strings of Moscow and become part of the cold war politics. Ever since independence, it has been the principal objective of the Indian foreign policy, to avoid becoming entangled in the cold war politics of the super powers and play a second fiddle to any one country. To avoid such an eventuality, India had taken the initiative to launch the non-aligned movement, with the other stalwarts of the time like Nasser, Tito, Nkru ma, Kaunda, and Bandaranaike. India could not undo what it had created and nurtured for many years.

123. The emergence of East Pakistan, as a sovereign state, was the accomplishment of the historical process, set in motion by the Lahore Resolution of 1940, which had promised the people of the East an "autonomous and sovereign" state along with the people of the West. But the narrow platform of Islam on which the demand for Pakistan was articulated upon and having surrendered the leadership to a shrewd and clever politician Jinnah, the leadership of East Pakistan drifted to the solution of a single nation, single state and found itself in the company of the people, with whom it had nothing in common except the religion. As late as 1946, at the Muslim League Convention held in New Delhi, where the newly elected party legislators gathered, Abdul Hasham, a member of the Bengal Muslim Provincial League delegation, strongly opposed the draft resolution, which called for an independent and sovereign state of Pakistan composed of the eastern and the north-western zones, on the ground that it was contrary to the letter and spirit of the 1940 Lahore resolution. He insisted on the formation of a separate State in the east, since a composite state, with two wings, separated by a hostile country, would neither be economically viable nor militarily defendable nor culturally homogenous. He was over ruled. On April 9, 1946, the Muslim League finally and unanimously passed a single state resolution, which became the basis for the Mountbatten Plan of June 2, 1947. In a last ditch effort and waging a lone battle, Abul Hasham, once again, opposed the formation of a united Pakistan. At the meeting of the Council of the All India Muslim League, which met in New Delhi’s Imperial Hotel, on June 9, 1947 to endorse the Mountbatten Plan for the partition of India, he called it a betrayal of the Lahore Resolution. The liberation of East Pakistan and the declaration of Bangladesh in 1971 was, therefore, the culmination of the historic process, set in motion at the Lahore session of the Muslim League in March 1940 - a goal they were cheated of, while moving toward the final destination.

124. The war had ended with about 90,000 Pakistani prisoners of war in India, who had surrendered to the Joint Command of Indian and Bangladeshi forces. In West Pakistan, the Pakistani authorities rounded up the people from East Bengal living in the western wing, as civil servants, professionals or businessmen, in concentration camps as hostages. The diplomatic relations between India and Pakistan had been snapped in the wake of the war. Over flights had been suspended even before the war, in the wake of the hijacking incident. Rail and road traffic had come to a standstill. Trade, which in any case was negligible, too came to a total halt. There was the question of the recognition of Bangladesh by the international community and its admission to the United Nations, to give the new state a legal status, as a member of the comity of nations. Above all, there was the question of the recognition by, what was left of Pakistan, of the reality of the situation emerging from the struggle of the people of the East Bengal for an independent sovereign state.

125. There was hectic activity at several levels internationally, to enable India and Pakistan to resolve their differences. Pakistan had carried out intense lobbying internationally, to build pressure on India for the release of the POWs. India was caught in an unusual situation. The POWs had surrendered to the Joint Command of the Indian and Bangladesh forces and hence the latter, which by now was an independent sovereign nation, had to be taken on board, in deciding the POWs issue. Unless Pakistan accepted the reality of the ground situation and extended the recognition to the new nation, as an independent sovereign state, Bangladesh would not talk to Pakistan. India could not unilaterally take a decision on the fate of the POWs. Pakistan's refusal to accept the reality of Bangladesh, by extending it formal diplomatic recognition, or to submit some of the POWs to justice for war crimes, and insistence on treating the Bengalees stranded in West Pakistan as hostages, were impediments to an amicable and early resolution of the problems emerging from the war.

126. The negotiations on all these issues between India and Pakistan took place during 1972 and 1973 over several conferences. Prime Minister Mrs. Indira Gandhi represented India and Prime Minister Zulfikar Ali Bhutto represented Pakistan at the most important of these conferences, which was held at Simla in July 1972. (Bhutto had taken over the administration of Pakistan from Yahya Khan, who resigned, after Pakistan's defeat.) This conference also set the agenda for the subsequent conferences. The Simla Conference represented the desire of the leaders of the two countries to find a bilateral and peaceful approach to India - Pakistan problems and a way to social and economic progress of their peoples. It resulted in an in-principle agreement on several issues, like the vacation of occupied territories in the Western sector, as also the exchange of POWs taken in that sector, the restoration of air, surface and commercial links, bilateral trade, cultural exchanges, etc. But it failed to solve the question of POWs taken in the Eastern sector, numbering more than 90,000, because Pakistan was not yet ready to extend recognition to Bangladesh. It is noteworthy that by the time the Simla Conference was held, Bangladesh had been recognised by 75 countries; and admitted to the WHO and UNCTAD. Bangladesh too had accepted the Geneva Conventions and yet Pakistan dragged its feet on the recognition question. Dhaka had made a public announcement that until Pakistan had recognised the ground reality by extending the new state the recognition as an independent and sovereign country, it would not enter into any discussions/negotiations with Islamabad on any issue. Since the POWs could only be released with the consent and approval of Bangladesh, this issue got stuck and the POWs languished in camps. India was under pressure from various friendly countries on the issue of release of POWs on humanitarian grounds. Anticipating adverse Pakistani propaganda on this account, External Affairs Minister Swaran Singh took the precaution of informing those friendly countries, well before the Summit, of the hurdles in this regard. Prime Minister Mrs. Indira Gandhi herself, on June 12, 1972, in a personal letter to the French President Georges Pompidou, apprised him of these facts, since he had expressed his personal concern on the POWs issues.

127. Soon after Bhutto took over the administration in Islamabad, he started working towards a post-war settlement with India. He toured a number of Muslim countries and finally he went to Moscow to garner support of the Soviet leaders. He calculated that given the close Soviet - Indian relations, Moscow was in the know of New Delhi’s mind better than any other country. Moscow could be expected to exercise some of its moderating influence in New Delhi too. He wanted to use this route to channel some of his preliminary probes of New Delhi’s mind and also for sending signals to New Delhi, on the type of settlement that would be acceptable to Islamabad. His visit to Moscow in March of 1972 indeed paved the way to Simla. In his meeting with Brezhnev on March 17, 1972, as recorded by Pakistani Ambassador Marker in his above referred book, Bhutto opened up his mind and told his interlocutor that he expected him to intercede with Mrs. Gandhi for a honourable settlement. He, of course, told Brezhnev that he had ‘given a pledge to the Indian Prime Minister for a ‘turning over of a new leaf’ which he was repeating now’ to him. Having said that, he stuck to the old Pakistani position of the need for mechanism to settle bilateral disputes. When Brezhnev asked him if he would agree to an understanding, renouncing the use of force, Bhutto’s answer was oft repeated Pakistani stand that 'in order for it to be effective, it should contain some mechanism for a peaceful settlement of disputes'. Obviously Kashmir was uppermost in his mind, as Marker went on to add that he (Bhutto) told Brezhnev that 'relations with India and the Kashmir question, in particular, were not susceptible to a 'declaration in a vacuum'. Marker wrote, 'as an advance over the existing position' Bhutto suggested that he was prepared to change the name of the 'Ceasefire line' to 'Line of Control'. Marker described this suggestion as a 'landmark in the regional geopolitical developments that ensued'. In any case, Bhutto expected the Soviet leaders to help pull his chestnut out of the fire and ensure that any settlement between Islamabad and New Delhi did not look like one between a victor and a vanquished.

128. Bhutto was quite happy with his Moscow visit. He was confident that the Soviet role would be helpful to Pakistan for the settlement of the post-war issues. A few days before the Summit in Simla, Bhutto sent Aziz Ahmad, his Minister of State for Defence and Foreign Affairs to Moscow as his Special Representative. If his own visit was to discuss the issues in a general way and set the broad parameters of the peace process, Aziz Ahmad's brief was about specifics, since Bhutto had by now crystallised his ideas on the future relationship with India and the new nation of Bangladesh. Aziz Ahmad also carried a message from Bhutto for Mrs. Gandhi, which he wanted the Soviets to pass on to New Delhi. The broad line of his message was that he would settle for nothing less than an honourable peace.

129. In order to keep New Delhi updated with the developments in the wake of Aziz Ahmad's visit, the Soviet Union despatched a memorandum to New Delhi, which summarised the discussions with Aziz Ahmad. The Memorandum contained their perception of Pakistan's position on Kashmir particularly and the message, which Bhutto had desired to pass on to New Delhi to facilitate the talks and decisions. The Memorandum, a Top Secret document, was delivered to the Ministry of External Affairs in New Delhi on June 27 by the Soviet Ambassador. It was meant for the Prime Minister, who had by that time left for Simla. The memorandum was received by External Affairs Minister Swaran Singh. It contained the resume of the discussions in Moscow between the Soviet leadership and Bhutto’s Special Representative Aziz Ahmad. It contained the following message from Bhutto for Mrs. Gandhi:

“We want to live in peace with India. We wish also the restoration of peace and normal conditions in Bangladesh. This is the paramount goal. The President is ready to discuss with Mrs. Indira Gandhi any problem, which she would like to touch at the forthcoming meeting, including the question of a peaceful settlement. We think it will be unrealistic to consider that all the problems, including Kashmir which could not be settled for 25 years, can be solved during one 5-day meeting. If all the issues are not settled at one meeting, the leaders of our countries could meet once again.

“Finally, the Prime Minister of India may count on President Bhutto’s readiness to go as far as possible in the joint search for a peaceful solution. But he had no right to agree to such a settlement which would be dictated by India or would be connected with the renunciation by the President of main principles of basic national interests. The settlement should be an honourable, honest and just one for the both parties. Otherwise, there will be no settlement and that would have disastrous effects."

130. The Memorandum contained Soviet observations on the talks with Aziz Ahmad. It said inter alia that Ahmad "produced an impression that Bhutto is ready to achieve ultimately in principle an agreement on this matter already in Simla on the condition that such agreement would remain strictly secret for some time, until the President paves the way in Pakistan for making this agreement public".

The Soviet leaders, being aware of the importance of Kashmir in any settlement, tried to probe Aziz Ahmad on Pakistan's thinking on this issue specifically. They too wished to exercise their influence "in favour of making Bhutto to adopt a more realistic position on this most important issue". The Memorandum added:

'that initially Aziz Ahmad was only talking in terms of both the countries withdrawing from the ceasefire line in Kashmir to the positions, held by them before the armed conflict in 1971. Also Ahmad was "insisting on observance of the UNO Resolutions on the Question of the ceasefire line, it seems to us that the Pakistani side had a reserve position on the problem of Kashmir". The Message continued "when A. Ahmad realised that the Soviet side completely supported the Indian point of view on the necessity of a final settlement of the Kashmir question on the mutually acceptable basis, he was quoted as having said, that President Bhutto was "not against discussing this question in Simla". The Soviets giving their assessment of the final position of Pakistan on Kashmir said: "Without giving up the condition on the withdrawal of troops in Kashmir, that Bhutto is ready, in principle to consider the possibility of converting the ceasefire line into the permanent international frontier." (emphasis added)

131. The Soviets asked Aziz Ahmad to convey to President Bhutto the following message: which, the Memorandum said was known to Prime Minister (Mrs. Gandhi):

"We drew the attention of the Pakistani side to the fact that it was highly important for the success of the forthcoming talks at Simla to come forward with a peace programme which would create a basis for a settlement of all the particular disputes between Pakistan and India. We stated, in particular, that we expected Bhutto to fulfill his promise, given in Moscow to take constructive steps towards concluding a political treaty or an agreement with India, towards settlement of a realistic basis of the Kashmir and other outstanding questions through bilateral negotiations." (emphasis added)

132. The Soviet leaders also conveyed to New Delhi, the gist of the talks Pakistan had with China, in preparation for Simla. The message said that, according to Aziz Ahmad "he (Bhutto) had given to Chou En-lai the information on Pakistan's position similar to that which he was conveying to us (Soviets). The Chinese side claimed to have said that it was striving for the establishment of peace in the subcontinent and standing for the existence of a strong and independent Pakistan".

133. That morning (27th June), the Soviet Ambassador in New Delhi met External Affairs Minister Swaran Singh, to discuss the memorandum, he had delivered earlier. Swaran Singh told the Ambassador that "if the Soviet assessment turns out correct about Bhutto's readiness to work towards a final settlement on Jammu and Kashmir in the form of conversion of the ceasefire line into a permanent boundary, then the Summit will succeed in creating an atmosphere of peace and in reversing the military confrontation between Pakistan and India". On Kashmir External Affairs Minister further added:

"Our position should be made clear. This is in regard to conversion of the ceasefire line into an international boundary. If settlement is in sight, we will propose this. If settlement is not in sight, our traditional position will remain viz., that Jammu and Kashmir is an integral part of India and is entirely ours by legal accession.

"But in the interest of a lasting peace, we are willing to recognise the line of actual control, with minor modifications, as the international boundary. This will be the final position and will not be at the beginning of the process. It cannot be the starting point on which Pakistan can again raise objections."

XVIII

134. But the message Bhutto gave to the people of Pakistan, on the eve of his departure for Simla, in his broadcast did not bear out the Soviet assessment that Pakistan was ready to accept the ceasefire line as international border. His speech delivered on June 27 still harped on "the right of self-determination" to the people of Jammu and Kashmir, which he described as being "enshrined in numerous Resolutions of the UN and acknowledged by Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru". At Simla, in the meeting on July 1, when the two delegations were led by their respective heads of government, President Bhutto did not go beyond saying "in the foreseeable future an agreement will emerge. It will evolve into a settlement. Let there be a line of peace, let people come and go. Let us not fight over it." (emphasis added) Mrs. Gandhi was not satisfied with this position and told Bhutto: "Our Prime Minister Shastri paid with his life over the Tashkent Agreement. He would have had a very difficult time if he had come back." Endorsing Mrs. Gandhi’s observation, Swaran Singh added: "Shastrijii received a great set back when he talked to his family after signing the Tashkent Agreement. There was a great deal of suspicion in both our countries".

135. As far as Kashmir question was concerned, Bhutto succeeded in carrying the day at Simla. The Agreement did no more than call for “respecting” the line of control, emerging from the ceasefire of December 17, 1971 "without prejudice to the recognised position of either side". Obviously, the Soviet assessment of Aziz Ahmad was misplaced, or in presenting the Pakistani view point to Moscow, Aziz Ahmad exceeded his brief in allowing that impression to go around with Moscow.

136. The only advance with regard to the Kashmir issue was that the ceasefire line was renamed the "Line of Control". But, as pointed out above, according to Pakistan Ambassador Marker, Bhutto had himself suggested this in March to Brezhnev.

137. India, though, not fully satisfied with the outcome at Simla, was nevertheless happy that some agreement had been reached and the first step towards normalisation of relations had been taken. It was also Mrs. Gandhi's assessment, that while President Bhutto was more helpful, the officials accompanying him were not, and that Bhutto was aware of this. She conveyed her feelings on this account, in a letter to Sirima Bandaranaike, the Sri Lankan Prime Minister on August 7, 1972. She said: "So far as we are concerned, it (the agreement) is not wholly satisfactory and many matters remain to be settled. But it is the beginning. Much depends on President Bhutto's attitude and the direction he gives to his people."

138. Whether or not there was some unwritten understanding on the Kashmir question, as is generally believed in India, that in due course, the Line of Control would be accepted by Pakistan as the international border, has remained conjectural. The Principal Secretary to Prime Minister P. N. Haksar, who was the chief negotiator from the Indian side, had in a newspaper article later claimed it to be a verbal understanding. He argued that Bhutto at that stage did not feel confident of his ability to sell it to his people, if it was reduced to writing. Islamabad has since challenged India on several occasions that since their search in Pakistani archives had failed to produce any such evidence, let New Delhi produce it, one way or the other.

XIX

139. The Simla agreement left out the question of the 90,000 POWs, who had surrendered in the eastern theatre, because Pakistan was unwillingness to recognise Bangladesh at Simla. Mrs. Gandhi had insisted that "POWs surrendered to the Joint Command. We are bound by this. I told Sheikh Mujibur Rahman in Dacca that the repatriation of POWs would be with his concurrence". Since Bhutto had then said: "I intend taking up this matter in August", this issue was held over for another day. In the next few months, the two countries strived to break this logjam. In his letter of August 22, 1972, Bhutto regretted that Bangladesh was using the POWs question "to extract recognition from Pakistan" which he said had led to the hardening of the public opinion in Pakistan.

140. India and Pakistan had their next round of talks in New Delhi on August 25 - 29, 1972 to work out the implementation of the Simla Agreement. This meeting resulted in the agreement, to delineate the Line of Control in Jammu and Kashmir, along the entire length on the map. On the question of POWs, again there was not much progress, since New Delhi continued to maintain that Bangladesh was a "necessary party" and that the "recognition of Bangladesh by Pakistan would facilitate further progress in this regard". After several rounds of discussions at the level of the army commanders of the two countries, the line of control was formally delineated on December 11, 1972. On December 20, 1972, the Chiefs of Army Staff of India and Pakistan reported to their respective governments that "their forces have been withdrawn to their sides of the international border in conformity with the Simla Agreement".

141. Pakistan took the first step towards easing the situation on the repatriation question when it announced on November 26, 1972 the decision to repatriate, as a first step, 10,000 Bengali women and children held up in Pakistan. In a reciprocal gesture, the Governments of India and Bangladesh too announced on November 30 their decision to "repatriate to Pakistan, families (women and children) of Pakistani civilian internees, who sought protection with the Joint Command of the India - Bangladesh forces and families of prisoners of war who had surrendered to the Joint Command".

142. As time dragged on, India came under lot of international pressure on the question of the release of the POWs on humanitarian considerations. Pakistan launched a sort of worldwide propaganda campaign to malign India on this issue. The reports of the International Committee of the Red Cross, (ICRC) on the visits to camps were misused to highlight their alleged ill treatment. Numerous inspired articles were written in the international newspapers and the advertisement space was bought in the important international dailies to highlight the plight of the POWs and their families. Pakistani ministers and other important persons went round the world maligning India. A delegation of the wives of the POWs was also sent around to the western capitals to make emotional appeals and accuse India of allegedly treating them inhumanly. It was also realised in New Delhi, that the delay in their release, besides eroding the international goodwill, was also impacting their value as the bargaining chip, in negotiations with Pakistan. It, also involved heavy expenditure on their maintenance, which was exclusively borne by India, besides the security problem it created in the camps.

143. On April 17, 1973, India and Bangladesh made a Joint Declaration laying stress on the need to restore "friendly, harmonious and good neighbourly relations between India, Bangladesh and Pakistan on the basis of sovereign equality". It blamed Pakistan's failure "to recognise the realities in the sub-continent" for the delay in normalisation process. The statement unilaterally announced that India and Bangladesh had decided "to seek a solution to all humanitarian problems through the simultaneous repatriation of Pakistani prisoners of war and civilian internees, except those required by the Government of the People's Republic of Bangladesh for trial on criminal charges, the repatriation of Bengalees forcibly detained in Pakistan and the repatriation of Pakistanis in Bangladesh i.e. all non-Bengalees, who owned allegiance to Pakistan and have opted for repatriation to Pakistan". It called upon Pakistan to respond to the "constructive initiative taken by the two governments to solve the humanitarian problems". It was designed to be a step forward, but introduced a new element of criminal trials of some of the prisoners, for violations of human rights and war crimes.

144. The Pakistan Government in a statement of April 20, 1973 said that the normalisation process had been "obstructed by India continuing to hold in illegal captivity over 90,000 Pakistani prisoners". It described the April 16 Joint Statement as a challenge to Pakistan's sovereignty. Pakistan insisted, since the alleged war crimes were committed on Pakistan territory by the Pakistan nationals, it was the responsibility of the Government of Pakistan, to bring them to justice, and showed its readiness to "constitute a judicial tribunal of such character and composition, as will inspire international confidence, to try the charged persons of alleged offences". Pakistan described as "extraordinary" the offer of Bangladesh to send back Pakistani nationals in Bangladesh. It accused the Bangladesh government of expelling an "ethnic, linguistic and political minority" thereby creating an obligation on Pakistan to receive them. In a parallel move, the Pakistani Minister of State for Defence and Foreign Affairs Aziz Ahmed in a conciliatory letter of April 23 to External Affairs Minister Swaran Singh described the April 16 Joint Statement as opening the door for a dialogue between India and Pakistan and offered to receive an Indian delegations to discuss this matter further.

145. Taking note of Pakistan's statement of April 20, Bangladesh issued a statement on May 3, asserting that, there were 250,000 non-Bengalees Pakistan nationals who had opted to return to Pakistan, and as such Pakistan was under obligation to take them back to that country. It repeated that of the Pakistani POWs, there were 195 who had committed grave war crimes against humanity and must face trial in Bangladesh. Meanwhile External Affairs Minister Swaran Singh replying to Aziz Ahmed on May 8, reminded him that Bangladesh was a necessary party to discuss the repatriation of Pakistani POWs and civil internees, and it was only after the recognition of Bangladesh by Pakistan that any meaningful discussions could take place. The External Affairs Minister also conveyed to Aziz Ahmad, his unhappiness on Islamabad questioning the competence of Bangladesh, to put on trial, some of the POWs for war crimes. In an Aide Memoire of May 11, Pakistan once again insisted, that it was for India to discharge its obligations under the Geneva Conventions, by simply releasing the POWs since these cannot be subject to extraneous considerations. Describing the 'Joint Command of India and Bangladesh' a "myth", it said, Pakistan never recognised Bangladesh as a detaining power. Similarly the Bangladesh proposal to repatriate non-Bengalee Pakistani nationals in that country to Pakistan was described as an "attempt to blackmail Pakistan". On May 12, the Pakistan Government in a statement described the "use of prisoners of war as a lever of pressure for extracting concessions", as violating "the humanitarian principles of the Geneva Conventions".
Simultaneously, the Pakistan Government moved the International Court of Justice on POWs question claiming, that under the Convention on the "Prevention and Punishment of the crime of genocide," Pakistan had exclusive jurisdiction over the 195 POWs, who were sought to be put on trial by Bangladesh for genocide. India however, questioned the jurisdiction of the ICJ to entertain Pakistan's complaint, since India maintained, that it had ratified the Convention with "reservation" and as such ICJ had no jurisdiction to hear the Pakistan's case. While the ICJ was considering the question of jurisdiction, the negotiations between the two countries went ahead. Once an agreement on the repatriation of Pakistani POWs and other internees in India, Bengalees in Pakistan and Pakistanis in Bangladesh had been reached in August 1973, Pakistan felt that the relief it sought from the ICJ had been effectively obtained. The case was, therefore, withdrawn from the ICJ by agreement between both India and Pakistan in December 1973.

146. After prolonged exchange of communications, it was decided to discuss the "problems and modalities relating to the repatriation of the three categories of individuals, indicated in the Joint Declaration of April 17, 1973", i.e. the Pakistani POWs and internees in India, the Bengalees in Pakistan and non-Bengalee Pakistanis in Bangladesh.

147. On July 9, before the proposed discussions were held, Pakistan National Assembly adopted a resolution, accepting in principle the recognition of Bangladesh, leaving the timing of actual recognition to the "judgement of the Government" (of Pakistan). The resolution, however, strongly opposed the trials either of POWs or of civilian internees by Bangladesh.
148. Talks between the Indian and Pakistani representatives were held in Rawalpindi between July 24 and 31, 1973. At these discussions, Pakistan took the firm position, that on no account would it accept trial of any POW or any civilian internee. To do so would be to reach a point of no return. To the proposal that while releasing all the POWs and holding back 195 of them against whom there were charges of serious war crimes, Pakistan insisted that in that case it would also hold back 203 Bengalees in Pakistan against whom there were also serious charges of treason and sabotage against Pakistan for 'counter trials'. Pakistan also showed willingness to accept the repatriation of a specified number of non-Bengalee Pakistanis in Bangladesh (49,000 straight away and another 20,000 later), even if there were 2,60,000 of them who had opted for Pakistan. On the recognition of Bangladesh, Pakistan's stand was inelastic, in that the National Assembly Resolution prevented it until all the POWs had been repatriated and also war trials were dropped against all including the 195. Since there was no final agreement at Rawalpindi talks, another round of discussions was scheduled later.

149. On August 15, 1973 the Special Envoy of Prime Minister P. N. Haksar visited Dhaka and briefed the Bangladesh leaders of the Rawalpindi talks and also finalised the strategy for the second round of discussions with Pakistan. The discussions were positive in that Bangladesh was willing to soften its stand on the trial issue and was also solicitous of India's concern that delay in the release of the POWs was a source of international embarrassment for New Delhi, apart from other complications.
150. The second round of discussions with Pakistan was from August 18 to 28, 1973 in New Delhi. Though formally the discussions were bilateral, for all practical purposes, these were trilateral, in the sense that India made sure that all discussions were relayed to Dhaka on daily basis by telegram and the latter's point of view was fully reflected in subsequent discussions with Pakistan the following day. Similarly, all decisions were made only with the prior concurrence of Bangladesh. The final agreement, which was signed by the Special Representatives of the Heads of Government of the two countries, specifically recorded in the last paragraph that "Bangladesh also conveyed the concurrence of the Bangladesh Government in the agreement". It provided for the repatriation of Pakistani POWs except 195 (who would remain in India pending final decision about them at a tripartite meeting of all the three parties sitting together) and civilian internees in India, the Bengalees in Pakistan to Bangladesh and a specified number of Pakistanis in Bangladesh to Pakistan. It was understood in parenthesis that the 195 Pakistani prisoners, detained in India, would not be put on trial, while the repatriation process was on. It was also understood by Pakistan, that participation of Bangladesh in the tripartite discussions would be on the basis of sovereign equality, meaning after Pakistan had accorded diplomatic recognition to Dhaka.

151. Once the repatriation process started in September of 1973, there was an easing of tension in the sub-continent. Pakistan, however, continued to drag its feet on the question of full normalisation of relations, which included restoration of all types of communications, travel, trade, etc. On February 22, 1974 Pakistan formally recognised Bangladesh. By March 1974, a substantial number of POWs (30,000) had been repatriated, as acknowledged by Bhutto himself in his letter to Mrs. Gandhi. Bhutto, however, made an accelerated normalisation with India subject to the final release of the 195 POWs held in India, and whom Bangladesh wanted to try for human rights violations.

152. The recognition of Bangladesh by Pakistan eased the atmosphere substantially. It was now agreed that a Tripartite Conference of the three countries would be held in April, to achieve the complete normalisation of relations among them. The Conference, which was held in New Delhi, and attended by the foreign ministers of the three countries, from April 5 to 9, 1974, expressed satisfaction at the progress achieved in the three-way repatriation as agreed in the August 1973 Agreement. It also decided to accelerate the process of repatriation to bring it to successful completion. The sticking question of 195 Pakistani prisoners, who had been guilty of committing crimes against humanity, as also the question of bringing them to justice, was finally resolved. Pakistan's Minister of State for Defence and Foreign Affairs Aziz Ahmed accepted that "his government condemned and deeply regretted any crimes that may have been committed". It was further noted, that the Pakistani Prime Minister had made a public declaration, that he would visit Dhaka and appeal to the people of Bangladesh to forgive and forget the mistakes of the past, in order to promote reconciliation. In finally resolving this ticklish question, the Joint Declaration issued at the end of the Tripartite Conference inter alia said:

"In the light of the foregoing and, in particular, having regard to the appeal of the Prime Minister of Pakistan to the people of Bangladesh to forgive and forget the mistakes of the past, the Foreign Minister of Bangladesh stated that the Government of Bangladesh had decided not to proceed with the trials as an act of clemency. It was agreed that the 195 prisoners of war may be repatriated to Pakistan along with the other prisoners of war in the process of repatriation under the Delhi Agreement."

153. Thus ended the story of Pakistan's split and emergence of Bangladesh as an independent sovereign state. The normalisation process between India and Pakistan, moving at the snail's pace earlier, picked up. Simultaneous with the signing of the Tripartite Agreement, the Foreign Ministers of India and Pakistan signed another agreement, for the release and repatriation of all nationals of either country, irrespective of the charges on which they were detained, prior to the conflict of 1971, "with the maximum despatch but in no case later than 14th August 1974." The India - Pakistan Joint Communiqué issued separately, on the same day said that "discussions would commence shortly for working out fresh agreements, where necessary, for the resumption of postal and telecommunication links, restoration of travel facilities, particularly for pilgrims on a priority basis". It was further agreed that the defence personnel of the two countries, reported missing in the conflict of 1971, would be located and facilities would be afforded to the Tracing Agencies of the International Committee of the Red Cross for this purpose. On April 15, 1974, External Affairs Minister Swaran Singh met the US Secretary of State Henry Kissinger in New York. Talking to him of the progress in achieving normalisation of relations on the subcontinent, he told him: "84, 000 prisoners of war have gone back. Almost all Bengalis in Pakistan, who wanted to go to Bangladesh, numbering about 124,000 have gone to Bangladesh. There may be about 2000 or 3000 left, but the Pakistanis in Bangladesh are still there in large numbers."

XX

154. In May 1974, India conducted a peaceful nuclear explosion, which was misunderstood in Pakistan. Mrs. Gandhi, however, in a personal letter to Pakistan Prime Minister Bhutto, on May 22, assured him that India remained "fully committed to (its) traditional policy of developing nuclear energy resources entirely for peaceful purposes" and the recent explosion in "no way alters this policy". But Pakistan harbouring some misgivings postponed the scheduled talks on normalisation of relations "until such time as the atmosphere (was) more favourable for a constructive outcome". Later Pakistan offered to resume the talks for normalisation, but wanted to be "publicly assured that India still stands committed to those provisions of the Simla Agreement that forbids the use of force or threat of force-including use or threat of nuclear weapons". Meanwhile there were exchange of charges and counter charges of hostile propaganda between the two countries, which spoiled the climate of constructive talks. In the midst of such exchanges, the Foreign Secretaries of India and Pakistan met in Islamabad on September 12-14, 1974. They concluded agreements on exchange of letter post, and Postal parcels, resumption of telecommunication services, and Visa and Travel between the two countries. Understanding was also reached regarding the cessation of hostile propaganda, while talks were to be held on air-links and over-flights as well.
155. In the meantime, Pakistan had been canvassing with the United States for a resumed supply of defence equipment, since the 1971 war had depleted its military strength. Early in 1975, the United States lifted its embargo on supply of defence stores to Pakistan. This decision naturally had an adverse reception in India. On February 25, 1975, Pakistan Prime Minister Zulfikar Ali Bhutto, in a letter to Mrs. Gandhi, described the Indian reaction as unfortunate. He said that "if one of the countries in South Asia feels that it is militarily incapable of ensuring the protection of its independence and territorial integrity" then such "disparity would continue inevitably to impart a basic fragility to any structure of peace". Mrs. Gandhi replying on March 20 reminded Bhutto that Indian reaction was in the background of the "conflicts on the sub-continent and the history of the use of American weapons against India". She observed that India regretted this decision "because it threatens once again to increase tension in our region". Rejecting Bhutto's theory of need for parity in defence capability between India and Pakistan, Mrs. Gandhi argued that the stability of peace in the region could not be based on parity of arms, "without considering a country's size, its land frontier and coastline and diverse problems". Mere arms parity would turn into an arms race on the sub-continent, which would not be conducive to peace and progress, she argued. Bhutto, however, in his letter of April 25 insisted that "given its preponderant military strength, India had no reason to expect threat from Pakistan". Despite this difference of opinion and perception between the two countries on arms question, the normalisation process, halted in the wake of Indian nuclear explosion, was resumed. Foreign Secretaries met on May 15 - 20, 1975 in New Delhi. Pakistan agreed to have another look at its objections to the design of the Salal Hydro-electric Project in Kashmir within a specified time frame. (Finally in April 1978 Pakistan and India signed the agreement, with Pakistan concuring in the design of the Project) However discussions on the air-links and over-flights remained inconclusive.

156. This bonhomie did not last too long. Indo - Pak relations since 1947 had been prone to periodic accidents and there were too many of them. In 1975, there was the Court judgement annulling the election of Mrs. Indira Gandhi to the Lok Sabha. Soon thereafter emergency was proclaimed. The political situation within the country gave some cause for concern. Asserting Pakistan's resolve to "remain more vigilant in order to defend the nation's independence and territorial integrity," Bhutto stressed the need for Pakistan to be watchful "lest Mrs. Indira Gandhi bedevilled and bewildered by the present crisis seeks to extricate herself from this mess by embarking upon an adventurist course against Pakistan". In March of 1976, Pakistan accused India for the slow process of normalisation of bilateral relations as required under the Simla Agreement. On March 27, Bhutto in a letter to Mrs. Gandhi, again harped on the slow progress towards normalisation, which, he said, had practically come to a standstill. To carry conviction with New Delhi, he offered to normalise trade relations and also offered to withdraw Pakistan's case from the International Civil Aviation Organisation (ICAO), on over-flights. It would be recalled that New Delhi had suspended the over-flight rights of Pakistan aircraft in 1970 following the hijacking of an Indian Airlines Fokker Friendship flight between Srinagar and Jammu in January of that year. The exchange of correspondence between the two prime ministers, led to the meeting between the foreign secretaries of India and Pakistan in May 1976, and the decision to withdraw the case and resume air-links and over-flights between the two countries, establish diplomatic relations, resume rail traffic, and relaxation in the visa regime. To carry the process a step further, on June 16, 1976, Foreign Secretary J.S. Mehta issued instructions to Heads of Indian Mission abroad, asking them to resume social and diplomatic contacts with their counterparts in the Pakistan diplomatic missions.

157. In March 1977 there was a change in the government in New Delhi. Morarji Desai took over as Prime Minister and Atal Bihari Vajpayee as Foreign Minister. Pakistan had floated the idea of a summit of non-developed countries in order "to organise a common approach" to the problems of the third-world countries and "to establish a new and just international economic order". Bhutto deputed a Special Envoy to New Delhi to canvass Indian support. The Special Envoy, after several meetings with the Prime Minister, Foreign Minister and Foreign Secretary, drew little support for the summit idea. India feared that the Pakistani idea could derail the existing mechanism - the NAM or the G-77. Morarji Desai, in replying to Bhutto's letter of April 3, which expressed his desire of "durable peace" said that instead he stood for "permanent peace". On June 6, the Pakistani Ambassador in New Delhi met Morarji again on the Summit question. Morarji spelt out in some detail India's reservations. He was of the opinion that "such a gathering would become a Third Bloc, which would not be in the interest of the developing countries". The Summit proposal died a natural death, since in the meantime, its author was overthrown in a military coup in July 1977.
158. New Delhi took a cautious approach to the military takeover and described it "an internal affair of Pakistan". This indeed was a matter of great satisfaction to the new rulers in Islamabad, who, in turn, at the highest level, pledged to "abide by the terms and conditions of the Simla Agreement". Gen. Zia-ul-Haq, the new Chief Martial Law Administrator, at his meeting with Ambassador K.S. Bajpai on July 9 said, that he was not a "war monger" and that the "Generals are always the last people to want war". He assured Ambassador Bajpai that Pakistan "will act as best as possible in the spirit of the Simla Agreement". It was a mark of the new bonhomie that Pakistan's Secretary General Agha Shahi held a dinner in honour of Foreign Minister Vajpayee while both were in New York, in connection with the UN General Assembly session.

159. The visit of External Affairs Minister Atal Bihari Vajpayee to Pakistan, in February 1978, was a landmark occasion. It afforded an opportunity to the two sides to discuss various issues of bilateral interest at the highest level of Pakistan's ruling establishment. General Zia conveyed his appreciation for the Indian attitude to developments in Pakistan, as otherwise, he said, "India could make things very difficult for us." He told Vajpayee that "three things" were necessary "in order to put our relations on firm and friendly footing"— "trust", "understanding" and "no mutual fear". The last element, he insisted, as a bigger country it was incumbent on India to "take the initiative to eliminate fear from its smaller neighbours". When the External Affairs Minister met Agha Shahi, Advisor on Foreign Affairs, the latter assured his guest, that Pakistan regarded the Simla Agreement as "the basic instrument governing the relations between our two countries". Vajpayee, on his part assured, his host of India's desire "to go ahead with the process of normalisation under the Simla Agreement". In order to accelerate this process, the External Affairs Minister suggested strengthening of cultural and people-to-people contacts. Agha Shahi, finding an opportune moment during the course of the talks, threw bait in order to bring in the Kashmir issue. Knowing India's anxiety on Salal Hydel Project in Kashmir (referred to above), he offered to resume the suspended talks to come to an amicable solution and then suggested talks on the Kashmir issue to complete the process initiated at Simla. Vajpayee, of course welcomed the resumption of Salal talks, but told Agha Shahi in no uncertain terms, that he would not like to raise false hopes on Kashmir. He told him that after going through the record of the Simla talks he had found that "there was some informal understanding". After much discussion, whether the ceasefire line should be referred to as the "Ceasefire Line" or the "Line of Actual Control", it was officially referred to as the "Line of Control". He emphasised that the words chosen then had their own importance. Advising him not to allow the Kashmir issue to become a "political plaything" in Pakistan, Vajpayee advised Shahi to guide the Pakistani public opinion to the "path of reason and understanding", and "at some time the people will have to be told on either side that the issue has to be solved on the basis of realities".

160. On September 1, 1978, General Zia had a very cordial meeting with Morarji Desai, in Nairobi where both had gone to attend the funeral of Kenyan leader, Jomo Kenyatta. Zia described his talks as a "beginning of the dialogue" process, and therefore "exploratory" in nature.
161. Before the year ended, there was a storm in the proverbial tea cup on the Kashmir question. Pakistan's repeated reference to Kashmir and self-determination, caused a great deal of irritation in Indian media. The External Affairs Minister in his statement in Parliament on December 6, spoke in sharp words, warning Pakistan that repeatedly raking up the issue of Kashmir and the self-determination, could have disastrous results for the relations between the two countries. It created a storm in the Pakistani media as well as in the political circles in Islamabad. Ambassador K.S. Bajpai was summoned to the Foreign Office to convey Pakistan's reaction and unhappiness. Later on December 30 the Pakistani Ambassador in New Delhi, Abdul Sattar himself sought an interview with External Affairs Minister Vajpayee to convey Pakistan's disappointment with the Indian reaction. Vajpayee in a forthright manner drew his attention to the repeated statements from Pakistan's side on Kashmir, without even making any reference to the Simla context, which caused certain misgivings in the public mind. The Government, therefore felt compelled to reassure the public, that it was seized of the matter and was not ignoring it. Vajpayee told Sattar, that Pakistan might feel that its statements were routine or innocuous, but in India this is a "delicate matter". When the Pakistan Ambassador assured the External Affairs Minister that Pakistan was committed to the Simla Agreement, Vajpayee advised him, that it was important to work in that spirit too. He also drew the Ambassador's attention, to certain other irritations, coming from Pakistan, like communalising the recent cricket matches between India and Pakistan, which had been played after a long gap to create goodwill.
162. The main feature of relations in the post-1976 period (after the May 1976 agreement on normalisation of relations) had been for President Zia-ul-Haq to keep India believing in his good intentions, since he was himself going through his own stabilisation process, after the overthrow of the elected government of Zulfikar Ali Bhutto. Zia, a military man himself, realised that India had emerged stronger, since the Bangladesh war and in the meantime had had a nuclear explosion even if it was a peaceful one; Sikkim had been integrated and India enjoyed internal political stability as well. But whereas India was interested in more trade, increased cultural and people-to-people contacts, Pakistan did everything to limit both trade and contacts.

163. Cultural and academic relations provided one example of the difference in approach. Nothing frightened Pakistan more than the thought of the Pakistani mind being exposed to Indian culture and democratic values. The Pakistani establishment, ever since the birth of Pakistan had tried to orient its moorings towards the West Asian identity from the South Asian (Hindu) identity. As pointed out at the very beginning, Pakistan built on the two-nation theory, did not root for secular ethos, always wanting to look different from India, justifying the raison d’etre for its existence. It was the homeland for the Muslims, with no honourable place for others. It is interesting that more Pakistani scholars, singers, artists, musicians and politicians visited India than the Indians could possibly go to the other side. There was, in fact, resentment against the Government of India., from the Indian artist community for allowing too many Pakistanis to visit this country, when they were denied the reciprocal opportunities by the Pakistan Government.
Another big reason for Pakistan to sensitise its people from India was to keep them ignorant about the progress and development India had made in science and technology, industrial and scientific and various other fields, thereby preventing an unflattering comparison. The Pakistani ruling class, which for most part of its existence, was drawn from the feudal/military class, abhorred the Indian democratic institutions, had a vested interest in keeping the mass of their people ignorant about India's democratic traditions and values.

XXII

164. The developments in Afghanistan about this time became the focus of international attention. The disturbed conditions created a refugee problem for Pakistan. Pakistan closed its border with Afghanistan. This adversely affected Indian trade with Afghanistan, which necessarily had to transit through Pakistan. As time went by and the situation in Kabul did not stabilize, Pakistan feared Afghanistan might at some stage invoke the Afghan - Soviet Treaty of Peace and Friendship and invite direct Soviet intervention in that country. Nevertheless India assured Pakistan that Pakistan's relations with Afghanistan were in no way linked to Pakistan's relations with India. India would endeavour not to contribute to Pakistan's internal or external difficulties or see them exacerbated. Pakistan particularly noted with appreciation that India-Afghan joint communiqué, issued at the end of External Affairs Minister's visit to Kabul in May 1978, did not include any adverse reference to Pakistan. India, too took the correct position on the Durand Line, forming border between Pakistan and Afghanistan. India allayed Pakistan's apprehension by not moving extra troops on its border with Pakistan. But, to Pakistan's misfortune, the Soviet Union suspected Pakistani interference in Afghanistan, and was greatly concerned about it. The Soviets had already cautioned Pakistan about it. As the year 1979 was ending, Pakistan's fears about Soviet intervention in Afghanistan came true. Its western frontier had become alive and worst, the Soviets had accused Pakistan for the troubles in Afghanistan not only by allowing insurgents to use its territory for anti-Afghan activities, but also of allowing the US and the Chinese aid (weapons) to reach the insurgents.

165. The new developments created an eerie feeling for India too. The Soviet intervention was accompanied, with the announcement of resumption of arms supply to Pakistan. Pakistan sought to assure India, that this was a unilateral decision of the United States, and Islamabad had not been consulted, something which New Delhi found difficult to stomach. When these developments were taking place, India had a new government, following the elections in December 1979. Mrs. Indira Gandhi took over as the new Prime Minister. Her choice for the External Affairs' Ministry was a little known, but an erudite and suave politician from the state of Andhra Pradesh, P. V. Narasimha Rao. The Pakistan Ambassador in New Delhi, Abdul Sattar met the Foreign Secretary on January 7, 1980. He apprised him of his country's assessment of the situation, and the unilateral announcement by the US of the resumption of arms supply. The Foreign Secretary appreciated the information and clarification on this behalf. Sattar pointed out that this development had brought Pakistan into a confrontationist situation, which was none of its making. He felt that both India and Pakistan, could work together, in diffusing the situation in Afghanistan. India, however felt that the US decision did not augur well for the future of the region. It gave the impression, that Pakistan was being rearmed, to use as a frontline state to meet the Soviet challenge. Ever since independence, it has been New Delhi's endeavour to save this region from the cold war politics and its intrigues. The cold war now appeared to be knocking at the subcontinent's doors. This left India in no happy situation.

166. Prime Minister Mrs. Indira Gandhi was deeply concerned about the developments in Afghanistan. On January 15, 1980, in replying to President Zia's felicitation letter on her victory in the elections, she spoke of "far reaching consequences for our two countries" of the recent developments, and underlined the need for "our two governments (to) have a clear understanding of each other's thinking", since she felt these developments could "irrevocably damage the interests of our region, and indeed of the world as a whole". Post haste Zia welcomed Mrs. Gandhi's suggestion for consultations and also assured her of Pakistan's earnest desire to build friendly relations with India and stay by the Simla Agreement, which, he said, bore her personal stamp.

167. The Indian Foreign Secretary R. D. Sathe visited Islamabad in February 1980 to exchange views on bilateral issues and more importantly on Afghanistan. Recapitulating his discussions with Sathe, President Zia told Mrs. Gandhi in his letter of February 17, that the "military penetration of a country so strategically situated, as Afghanistan, threatens to revive cold war and to subject our region in particular to super power rivalry". But Zia also betrayed his lack of faith in India and sought Prime Minister's assurance about Pakistan's security. He said: "
...I would like to express appreciation for your reaffirmation that in making arrangements for the security of our country, we can proceed on the basis that 'India presented no problem to Pakistan'. The converse is implicit in the facts of the situation. I can assure you in categorical terms that Pakistan has no intention to present a problem to India."

Linking the question of arms aid for Pakistan, with the Afghan developments, he shrewdly made out a case for Pakistan to receive military hardware. He said:

"You, Madam Prime Minister, have said yourself that every country has the right to take necessary measures to ensure its security. Pakistan has not questioned or protested against India’s programme of modernisation and up-gradation of its military forces and its commitment to an expenditure of billions of dollars on the purchase of sophisticated weapons systems from abroad while possessing formidable indigenous capacity of its own for production of arms. We have neither the resources, nor the capacity to engage in an arms race with India. ...We seek an augmentation of our defence capability in accordance with our legitimate security needs. We have neither the desire nor the capacity to acquire and maintain a defence establishment which could in any way be a source of concern to India".

168. He said India's opposition to Pakistan's acquisition of arms, under the circumstances "embitters feelings in Pakistan and raises the questions in regard to India's intentions". On February 27, Ambassador K.S. Bajpai, in his report to New Delhi on his talks in Islamabad, with various senior functionaries of the Pakistan government including Zia, said that Pakistan was anguished with New Delhi on two counts-(i) New Delhi’s endorsement of Soviet line that Pakistan was promoting insurgency in Afghanistan and
(ii) improving Pakistan's defence capability was responsible for tension in the region. Though Bajpai disabused Islamabad of any such notions, the trust between the two was the casualty again.

169. In April, 1980 Prime Minister sent Swaran Singh, former Foreign Minister, to Islamabad as her Special Envoy. Assuring Zia of India's goodwill for Pakistan, Swaran Singh told him that he had been asked by Mrs. Gandhi to tell "Your Excellency that the Indian people desire a relationship of stability, peace and cooperation with Pakistan". Zia's complaint to Swaran Singh was on the predictable lines. It was India's opposition to Pakistan's acquisition of arms, which, in his perception, was only insignificant in quantity, compared to what India had acquired, and lack of India's appreciation of Pakistan's security concerns, due to Soviet intervention in Pakistan's neighbourhood. Swaran Singh, on his part, tried to assure President Zia, that there was a national consensus in India about relations with Pakistan. India only wanted stability and good relations with Pakistan and wished to see Pakistan's security strengthened. To this end, India would be "willing to make any contribution necessary to safeguard this". Zia once again, tried to impress upon his interlocutor, that while Pakistan never objected to Indian acquisition of arms like the recent Jaguars' deal or earlier acquisition of Mirages, India should also likewise not misunderstand Pakistan's efforts to acquire arms to face the new security challenge. He insisted Pakistan's acquisition of arms was not against India, but due to the situation developing on its western frontier with Afghanistan. Trying to instil confidence in Zia of India's sincerity towards Pakistani's security, Swaran Singh conveyed to him that India did not agree with the Soviet Union on Afghanistan. He, too, did his best to assure him of India's bona fide as far as the security of Pakistan was concerned. Zia did not appear to appreciate India's expression of concern for Pakistan's security. The veteran former foreign minister making another attempt at assuring Zia said:
INTRODUCTION

"If we cannot convince you of our genuineness then there can be no meeting point. Please do believe me that I do not speak out of charity or in moral terms, although I believe in morality. You must believe us. It is sheer self-interest that we need a strong Pakistan. Today, Afghanistan is in difficulty. How can a country like India ever wish to dismember Pakistan?\n
170. India had, over the years, repeatedly assured Pakistan of India's commitment to Pakistan's security and stability. If Bangladesh happened, it was Pakistan's own undoing. On the other hand, India had a lot to complain of the pin pricks from Pakistan. One had to look at Pakistan's reaction to Moradabad riots in August 1980, or, persistent references to Kashmir in the Pakistani utterances, at all international gatherings, or at the UN. In the geo-strategic sense, India regarded Pakistan as an integral part of sub-continental security. India, therefore, repeatedly pointed out to Pakistan, that it was committed to respecting its territorial integrity, national unity, political independence and sovereign equality. Pakistan, unfortunately failed to cash on this geo-strategic perceptions of India's policy in the South Asian region. This underlying feature of Indian policy, was valid not only in relation to Pakistan but to all the other countries around it, which though not geographically contiguous among themselves, yet were provided linkages with each other through India. Pakistan, before Bangladesh, and even after Bangladesh, refused to reconcile itself, to the disparity between the two countries in terms of their resources, size and economic development. Pakistan's rejection of India's offer of 'No War Declaration' in the fifties and similar offer of a treaty of peace and cooperation in the eighties, its offer to discuss the ratio of armed forces to be maintained by the two countries, in keeping with the length of their land and sea frontiers to prevent an arms race, underlined its misplaced sense of self-confidence visa-a-vis India. And yet, its lack of faith in itself, created uneasiness in its mind and continued to haunt its leaders, preventing a tension-free relationship to develop between them. Membership of military alliances was pinned by Pakistan on its feelings of insecurity in relation to India, and hence the need to seek allies and arms to strengthen itself on borrowed muscles. This, as Pakistan learnt to its cost, did not bring it the desired sense of security.

171. The problem of security for Pakistan was born, more out of the need to seek parity with India in all respects, since psychologically Pakistan believed that the legacy of the Mughal Empire had fallen on its shoulders. Preceding the British conquest of India in stages, various Muslim dynasties had ruled India for almost seven centuries. Pakistani elite perceived Pakistan as the continuation of the Mughal and Muslim rule in India. The believers of the two-nation theory had a misplaced faith in the superiority of the Muslims vis-à-vis the Hindus. Obsessed with history, the Pakistani elite believed, that in any war against India, their victory was assured, as they were the chosen people. Nevertheless, being aware of the size and resources of India, it wanted to make up for the lack of the same in comparison, by military alliances and military aid that would flow as a consequence of this policy and give it added confidence to look down upon India. As pointed out above, India looked with disdain at such thinking. In the post war scenario, international politics was dominated by the cold war. India believed that the newly independent countries of Asia and Africa, which had suffered the colonial rule for a century or two, must safeguard their newly won independence, by steering clear of the East-West politics and stay together. They should not appear to be partisans in the conflicts of the Big Powers, and avoid military alliances, which sought to bind them to their apron strings. Pakistan chose to walk the road which was anathema to India and was bound to create problems between them and it did. As Nehru had warned, it brought the cold war to the doorsteps of the Sub-continent. To express its displeasure on this development, India informed Pakistan that its action had changed the context of their bilateral relations and future relations between them would be conducted under its shadow.

172. After being member of Western sponsored CENTO for almost two decades, Pakistan decided to quit it, which, for all practical purposes, was extinct. It decided to join the Non-aligned Movement and sought India's support in this endeavour. On March 12, 1979 Pakistan formally withdrew from the CENTO and its participation in the activities of the organisation ceased. It, however, did not give up the US-Pakistan bilateral defence arrangement. It argued that there were other countries in the Non-aligned Movement, who had similar bilateral arrangements, and hence it was not in conflict with the objectives of the NAM. Earlier, India had extended support to Pakistan's participation in the Belgrade Conference of NAM Foreign Ministers. Pakistan assured India, that unlike in the past, Pakistan was not allowing the US to set up any military bases in Pakistan. The arms that flowed were to strengthen Pakistan's security, to meet the challenge from Afghanistan.

173. In the evolution of India - Pakistan relations, the next important initiative came, once again, from Prime Minister Mrs. Gandhi. In January 1982, Agha Shahi, the Foreign Minister of Pakistan was in New Delhi for talks between the foreign secretaries of India and Pakistan. On January 31, Shahi made a courtesy call on Prime Minister Mrs. Gandhi. She took him by surprise, suggesting a Joint Commission between the two countries, as an umbrella platform, to discuss all aspects of the relations. Taken by surprise, Agha Shahi gathered his wits, welcomed the suggestion coming from the Prime Minister. Even otherwise, Shahi's visit had resulted in better understanding between the two countries. Responding negatively to the offer of Mrs. Gandhi, he ran the risk of spoiling the atmosphere so created. On February 21, General Zia, in his letter to Mrs. Gandhi, acknowledging the positive trend of the discussions, which Agha Shahi had in New Delhi, said: "The goal towards which these talks are directed is a noble one and could if achieved produce an unprecedented transformation in the quality of our bilateral relations and consequently a profound impact on the entire regional situation." He, particularly, described the proposal for a joint commission a "positive" one.

174. Unfortunately, this happy trend was interrupted, as always, by the insensitive remarks, made by the Pakistan's representative at the UN Human Rights Commission, Agha Hilaly. He raised the Kashmir question, during the consideration in the Commission, of an item dealing with the application of the right of self-determination, to peoples under colonial and alien domination or foreign occupation. External Affairs Minister Rao reacting in the Parliament on February 25, 1982, described the suggestion of Pakistan as "preposterous" and postponed the scheduled visit of Foreign Secretary to Pakistan. Pakistan, however, justified the action and said, the reiteration of the factual position on Kashmir, did not warrant any Indian reaction. It continued to harp on the point that Pakistan's articulation of its position on Kashmir was as determined under the Simla Agreement. On April 12, the new Foreign Minister of Pakistan Sahabzada Yaqub Khan said, that Pakistan found it difficult to accept the condition that it could not raise the Kashmir issue at any international gathering. Simultaneously, expressing Pakistan's readiness to talk on the non-aggression pact, he added that there "was no hope of any immediate result... as it was an intricate matter and the path led through a craggy and rugged highland since Indo - Pakistan ties had been marked by extreme bitterness in the past."

175. The exchange of felicitation messages between Narasimha Rao and Yaqub Khan on the latter's appointment as Pakistan's Foreign Minister and the reply on May 25 from Mrs. Gandhi to Zia's letter of February, broke the ice. Mrs. Gandhi said in her letter that despite "serious differences in perception," the two countries "should persevere in efforts to restart the process of negotiations". In the same month, May 31, the foreign ministers of India and Pakistan met on the sideline of the NAM foreign ministers' conference in Havana and agreed that the foreign secretaries' meeting, then scheduled for August would be a "significant" step. The appointment of former Indian Ambassador to Pakistan Natwar Singh, however, as Secretary in the Ministry of External Affairs, dealing with Pakistan, hastened the process of consultations and the meeting at the secretary level took place in June itself.

176. As part of the normalisation process, Pakistan proposed a treaty of non-aggression. India countered it by a proposal for a treaty of peace, friendship and cooperation, which was positive in its tone and nuance. It may be recalled, and as pointed out above, as early as December 1949, India had proposed to Pakistan a 'No War Declaration' to be signed by the two countries, that come what may, 'they shall settle their differences peacefully and not resort to war'. However, Pakistan's insistence on certain pre-conditions, proved an impediment. The prolonged correspondence, essentially between the two prime ministers, then had proved infructuous, and the proposal got dropped, in course of time. The atmosphere, in the meantime, too had got vitiated by Pakistan's decision to join the western military alliance system. Its revival now in the eighties was a new phenomenon. India had no objection to the proposal, in principle, but was keen that the factors, which vitiated the political climate in the past, must be avoided and the elements, which help create a better understanding, were embedded into the new proposal. India, therefore, countered the Pakistani proposal for a non-aggression pact, which had negative connotations, with its own suggestion for a treaty of peace and friendship. Pakistan's objection to Indian draft treaty was on two counts: (i), India's insistence that Pakistan would not give military bases to foreign powers and (ii), all outstanding issues between the two countries would be resolved through bilateral negotiations. Zia told Voice of America in an interview, the text of which was carried by the Dawn on May 22, 1984, that it "would tantamount to Pakistan demanding that India should not buy anything from the Soviet Union, or that, it should not give any military bases to that country". He said "these pre-conditions were unacceptable as they undermined (Pakistan's) sovereignty as an independent state". He wanted 'Pakistan's commitment to peace and security and improvement of bilateral relations with India', to be accepted on face value and "Delhi should not insist on having a few words written in an agreement". Pakistan's draft of the non-aggression pact was a simple document, long on pious hopes but short on meaningful commitments. These fundamental differences failed to get reconciled and neither of the proposals took off.

177. The bilateral relations did see some movement on other fronts. The Non-aligned Summit in March 1983 brought Zia-ul-Haq to New Delhi. He scrupulously avoided any acrimony in his speech at the Summit and his reference to Kashmir, though in acceptable terms, did invite an official response from New Delhi. As a by-product of the visit, the Agreement on Joint Commission was signed, which Zia, later in his letter of April 14 1983 to Mrs. Gandhi described it "of historic import and far reaching significance". But whatever goodwill was generated soon got dissipated. Pakistan took umbrage to the comments made by Prime Minister Mrs. Gandhi and External Affairs Minister Rao on the on-going agitation in Pakistan for the restoration of democracy. Pakistan described them as interference in its internal affairs. India insisted that the remarks "were made in a strictly domestic context of explaining or assessing events which might have repercussions for us". Pakistan was not convinced and described the Indian explanation "illogical".

178. After a period of deep freeze in relations for the most part of 1983, due to troubles within Pakistan, 1984 saw the resumption of dialogue, with the exchange of visits by the two foreign secretaries. By now, however, a new element of discord crept into bilateral relations, which dominated the India-Pakistan discourse for most part of the following years. In the post-Bangladesh period, Pakistan apparently made a reappraisal of its policy towards India. A weakened Pakistan realised that in any military conflict, it could not have parity with India and hence a military confrontation with New Delhi should be ruled out as an option. But India too had its domestic underbelly, as Pakistan perceived it. India faced problems in Kashmir and the Punjab. If New Delhi could, as Pakistan believed, fish in its troubled waters, Pakistan could exercise that same option with impunity.

179. It all started with the incidents of hijacking of domestic flights of the Indian national carrier, the Indian Airlines, by certain disgruntled elements that saw safe havens in Pakistan. The fact that all hijacking cases from India landed in Pakistan, and the treatment and protection they received in that country, which normally should not have been available to them, under various international civil aviation conventions, created the suspicion, that the hijackers had some prior assurances that they would be in safe hands. Pakistan, however, making virtue of necessity, shed crocodile tears. As early as August 1982, Pakistan had conveyed their apprehensions to New Delhi that these incidents had the potentials for "creating misunderstanding between the two countries not to mention the losses inflicted on civil aviation in Pakistan." It called upon New Delhi to "take effective measures in order to prevent recurrence of such incidents".

180. Pakistan's malevolence towards India during this period took several forms. The way developments in the Punjab, at the height of insurgency were projected in the Pakistani media, particularly, the official TV, was distorted, mischievous and malicious. President Zia and some of his senior ministers made gratuitous, highly objectionable and provocative statements about developments in India. The unmistakable picture that emerged was of a deliberate attempt to exploit the Punjab situation and inflame the emotions of the Sikh community, with a view to inciting separatism, communal disharmony and disaffection within India. From now on the Punjab situation became a new irritant in the relations between the two countries.

XXIV

181. Following the assassination of Mrs. Gandhi in October 1984, and general elections, Rajiv Gandhi had taken over the administration in India. The 1985-89 period when he was in the charge, there was unprecedented diplomatic activity between the two countries. Rajiv Gandhi made concerted efforts to improve the bilateral relations. However, all this was made subject to Pakistan's good conduct vis-à-vis the Punjab. Its support to the Punjab extremists was one topic, which remained on top of the agenda of all interactions between the two countries. Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi had several one-to-one meetings with President Zia-ul-Haq, as well as his Prime Minister Mohammad Khan Junejo, at various venues, wherever they happened to be together, attending international engagements. They met in Moscow, New York, Muscat, Dhaka, Kathmandu, Stockholm, New Delhi and Islamabad. The foreign ministers and the foreign secretaries too met more frequently during this period than at any other five-year time slot. There were talks at the level of home ministers and home secretaries too. A record number of agreements, three of them—(i) the Prohibition of Attacks against Nuclear Installations and Facilities; (ii) the Avoidance of Double Taxation and (iii) Cultural Cooperation, were signed. There were several meetings of the Joint Commission and sub-commissions, when important decisions were taken on various aspects of the bilateral relations. Prime Minister Gandhi visited Islamabad twice, once to attend the SAARC Summit in December 1988 and the other time, in July 1989 for a bilateral visit. This bilateral visit of an Indian prime minister to Pakistan took place almost after thirty years, if one were to discount the visits of Rajiv Gandhi to Pakistan for the funeral of Badshah Khan in January 1988 and for the SAARC Summit in December of the same year. The visit of Prime Minister Lal Bahadur Shashtri to Pakistan in October 1964, was essentially a stop-over visit, when he made a halt of a few hours in Karachi. Before that, a regular bilateral visit was by Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru in September 1960, for the signing of the Indus Water Treaty. In that background the present bilateral visit had a great significance in itself.

182. In his meeting with Pakistani Prime Minister Benazir Bhutto, Rajiv Gandhi bluntly told her that there were three areas of major concern -- (i) Pakistan's weapons-oriented nuclear policy, (ii) terrorism and (iii) Siachen. They noted their differences of approach... to nuclear weapons. India believed that the nuclear disarmament was a global process, which could not be dealt with at a regional level, while Pakistan wanted to resolve it, at a bilateral or regional basis. On terrorism, Ms. Bhutto stated that it was a global concern and not just the concern of any individual country. While appreciating Indian concerns on this account, she maintained, that the interests of the two countries could be best served by strictly adhering to the principle of non-interference in each other's internal affairs and assured Prime Minister Gandhi, that it was her hope, that there would be no cause for any concern in future. Rajiv Gandhi however, remained sceptical. On Siachen it was agreed, that the talks between the two Defence Secretaries would resolve the issue.

183. Terrorism continued to be a source of friction between the two countries, vitiating their bilateral relations. The discussions and assurances at various levels of the Pakistani leaders, failed to assuage the Indian concerns. India found no let up in the terrorist activities either from across the border or with the help and assistance from the same source. New Delhi was exasperated while Islamabad, to New Delhi's chagrin, continued to pooh-pooh the Indian concerns. An added source of worry was the activities of the Sikhs settled abroad and holding foreign passports visiting Pakistan and carrying on their anti-Indian activities with the connivance of Pakistan. Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi had personally drawn the attention of President Zia to such activities at their meeting in New Delhi, on 17 December, 1985 and the latter had assured Pakistan's full cooperation, in the efforts to counter the illegal activities of these persons. This matter was also discussed between the Foreign Secretaries, several times during their meetings. India had handed over to Pakistan lists of certain extremists including those based abroad but operating from Pakistan, along with impeccable evidence of their nefarious activities. India demanded curb on them and their return to India to be brought to justice for heinous crimes. New Delhi made sure, that the Pakistan Ambassador was kept in the loop.

184. Unfortunately, Pakistan remained in a complete state of denial. On February 28, 1986 Ambassador S. K. Singh had a lengthy meeting with Pakistan Foreign Minister Yaqub Khan and the latter repeated the standard Pakistani vocabulary that Pakistan had rendered no assistance to the Sikh extremists and neither was Pakistan capable of doing so. Next day, March 1, Ambassador S. K. Singh met Zia in Lahore, before leaving for India for consultations. Again there was a detailed discussion on this subject. The Ambassador failed to detect any remorse on the part of Pakistani leaders. Nevertheless, Zia wanted to assure Gandhi of his bona fide. He gave Ambassador Singh an oral message for Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi. (The message was given at a slow speed to enable the Ambassador to transcribe the same verbatim.) It too contained Zia's assurance of not helping the Sikhs. His message said:

"I know also that a lot of people in India think, and also say so, that Pakistan is aiding and helping the Sikhs, and by doing so Pakistan has already gone away from the letter and spirit of Simla Agreement. But please, believe me, we are not helping the Sikhs. In fact, we are doing many things to ensure realisation of our policy of supporting the unity and integrity of India. The Sikh problem is an internal problem of India. Only India can solve it. We wish to have nothing to do with it."
185. In his discussions with the Ambassador before and after dictating the message, President Zia maintained, that Pakistan had given no help to the Sikhs and even went on to suggest, that either the heads of the intelligence agencies or the Home Secretaries of the two countries could meet quietly (secretly) somewhere (suggested places were: Vienna, Geneva, Singapore, Hong Kong, or Tokyo), and exchange notes. Zia’s assurances failed to satisfy Prime Minister Gandhi, who in return also sent an oral message through Ambassador Singh which said:

"You have given me the assurance that you will take all measures to stop assistance of any kind to the Sikh extremists. From the information we have, this assurance has not been implemented. This is a vital matter for our security and at this moment it is of basic importance for improving our relations."

186. The Ambassador in his briefing note (March 3, 1986) to the Ministry for policy formulation towards Pakistan emphasised that:

The concept of Khalistan, with a view to destabilising a strategic border region of India, has been an important element in keeping India on the defensive. For the dissidents, militants, radicals and extremists among our Sikhs, Pakistan has been over the years a conduit of Western assistance as also an original source of support, backup and training."

He suggested certain options available to India like diplomatic persuasion; political pressure; outright threat or finally making our friendship attractive to Pakistan. The Ambassador went on to suggest that if India were to be tough with Pakistan, it should be prepared for "open hostilities".
187. Despite several warnings to Pakistan, that its involvement in the activities of the Sikh extremists, had placed in jeopardy, the normalisation of Indo-Pak relations, and the Pakistan Government vehement and persistent denial of the same, India called upon Pakistan to come clean on the question of its support to terrorists, both Indian and foreign. It demanded that the Pakistan Government should make a public announcement, at the highest level, denouncing the concept of "Khalistan" and deploring all terrorist activities and in particular those directed against India. No such public statement however, emanated from Islamabad, at the desired level. Worried at attempts to subvert the loyalties of the Sikh pilgrims, visiting Sikh shrines in Pakistan, New Delhi warned Pakistan to be beware of such nefarious activities.

188. Since promoting unrest and terrorism had become an instrument of Pakistan's India policy, there was no respite and cross border terrorism continued to flourish with Pakistan's assistance and blessings. On April 13, 1988 in a Note to the Pakistan Embassy in New Delhi, Ministry of External Affairs, while noting the Pakistani denial and assertion, that there was "no justifiable reason to believe, that the Government of Pakistan would wish to encourage extremism in the Punjab", that "Pakistan does not wish to see the unity of India threatened from any quarter and that "Pakistan strictly adheres to the principle of non-interference in the internal affairs of other countries", India was at pains to remind Pakistan that "notwithstanding such assurances and denials" by the Government of Pakistan from time to time:

"Pakistan has continued to provide encouragement and assistance to extremist activities directed against India. Such assistance has taken a variety of forms, including the continued supply of arms, the setting up to training camps, providing a safe refuge for Sikh extremist, hostile propaganda designed to incite anti-Indian secessionist feelings etc. There is incontrovertible evidence about Pakistan's continued complicity in subversive anti-Indian activities, which belies its protestations of wanting to improve relations with this country. Pakistan's assistance to terrorist and secessionist elements in India is in clear violation of its commitments under the Simla Agreement and is inevitably a stumbling block in the process of normalisation of relations between the two countries. It is hoped that Pakistan will fulfil its assurances given on this issue, including at the highest level, and desist from aiding and abetting terrorist activities directed against India."

189. Persisting with its denial mode, on May 14, 1988, Pakistan expressed its "disappointment and dismay", while dismissing the Indian allegations as "old and discredited". Adding, it said "propagandist repetition cannot, of course, convert falsehood into truth". New Delhi was simply exasperated and incensed at this denial frame of the Pakistani mind.

190. The war of words between the two countries continued unabated. Meanwhile, Kashmir continued to be targeted repeatedly. The escalating activities of the terrorists financed and trained by the Inter Services Intelligence (ISI) of the Pakistan Army, encouraged them to more daring acts, more heinous and hideous crimes. The bellicose statement from Pakistan invited strongest rebuttal even from the mild mannered Prime Minister V.P. Singh. On April 10, 1990, he warned that if a conflict was forced upon India, "we are not going to stop till we achieved our objectives" and that "we have the capability to inflict a very heavy cost on Pakistan for its territorial goals against India." Speaking in Parliament, on the budget of the Ministry of Defence, he said "Ms. Bhutto talks of thousand-year war for Kashmir, Pakistan has to see whether it could fight for even 1000 hours." In this war of words, hiatus of sorts came, when the foreign ministers of India and Pakistan met in New York on April 25, 1990 on the sidelines of the UN General Assembly session and agreed to call a halt to hostile statements from both the sides. The meeting led to the foreign secretaries talks in July, 1990. The only achievement of these talks was that they "sat together and were able to understand each other's position in detail, brushing aside cobwebs". Amidst all the hullabaloo, the two countries saw it prudent to sign two significant agreements in April 1991 as confidence building measures-- 'Agreement on the Prevention of Air Space Violations and for Permitting Over Flights and Landings by Military Aircraft' and the 'Agreement on Advance Notice on Military Exercises, Manoeuvres and Troops Movements'.

XXV

191. In June 1991, after the general elections in India, former External Affairs Minister, P. V. Narasimha Rao took over as Prime Minister of India which generated some sense of euphoria in the bilateral relations. But Rao, who had seen enough of Pakistan in his earlier avatar as foreign minister, was not impressed. He told the Parliament that every time there was a change of government, either in India or Pakistan, "there is a sense of euphoria." He was, however; frank to admit that "we have not been quite successful in persuading Pakistan to improve relations with India". There was the usual bonhomie when Rao had an opportunity to meet his Pakistani counterpart Nawaz Sharif at Harare, on the sidelines of the Commonwealth Summit, in October 1991, which enabled him to say on return to New Delhi that India and Pakistan had rejected mediation by "friendly countries" to help them resolve their differences.

192. As in the past, there was yet another round of talks between the foreign secretaries of the two countries in November 1991 and even if some forward movement was said to have been recorded on some of the contentious issues, to give satisfaction to the two sides, in concrete terms, the issues remained where they always were, whether it was the question of Sir Creek, Wullur Barrage, Siachen, or Kashmir. As the sun was setting on the year 1991, on December 31, Pakistan demanded a drastic cut in the staff strength of the Indian Consulate in Karachi. The summit meeting between Prime Minister Rao and Prime Minister Nawaz Sharif on February 2, 1992 on the sidelines of the World Economic Forum, was marked by usual pleasantries, but had no concrete achievement to report. The statement after the talks, frankly accepted that "our talks are not in the nature that we should be regularly reporting progress in the discussions".

193. India reacted furiously to the Pakistan National Assembly's adoption of a resolution on the Babri Mosque in August 1992, and later in December when it was demolished by a crowd claiming the site to be the birth place of the mythical God Rama. In the past, invoking the Nehru - Liaquat Pact of 1950, it had become a common practice, for one country to protest the alleged "ill treatment" of the minority in the other. But in the Simla Agreement of July 1972, both countries pledged that they would follow the principle of "non-interference in the internal affairs" of each other and as such it became incumbent on them to treat any problem in relation to a minority to be an internal problem of the country concerned, with no right of the other to take up the cudgel on its behalf, as was the practice hitherto fore. In the post-1972 period, India would not give any locus standi to Pakistan if ever there was such an unfortunate incident in India. New Delhi rejected any Pakistani claim to act as the guardian of the Muslims in India. This was the case, when the Charer-e-Sharif shrine got burnt in a fire in Kashmir and Pakistan sought to take advantage of the situation for propaganda.

194. Pakistan added further provocation by making an audacious claim that the terrorists and infiltrators in Kashmir were the "freedom fighters" and 'indigenous Kashmiris, who had taken up arms against the "tyrannical rule of the Kashmir government". While the fact was that the infiltrators, trained and armed by Pakistan's army intelligence, ISI from across the border, taking advantage of the long and porous border succeeded in sneaking into Kashmir and other parts of India, to carry out their criminal acts of sabotage and terrorism. The opposition cried hoarse for retaliatory action and asked the Government of India to go in for the hot pursuit of the terrorists coming from the Pakistan-occupied Kashmir. Though such demands emanated from the public and opposition sources with no official stamp of approval, yet, the Pakistan Foreign Office spokesman responded belligerently on June 28, 1995 that Pakistan did not take these threats lightly, and warned that "if India were to cross over into Azad Kashmir, it would be construed as an act of war by Pakistan", which could endanger the security of the entire region. Thumbing his nose, he said the repeated terrorist attacks on Indian targets and their success was a failure of the "600,000 fully armed (Indian) troops to crush the Kashmiri movement."
195. It was a war of words with no holds barred. On January 4, 1996, Minister of State in the Ministry of External Affairs R.L. Bhatia described Pakistan as a "terrorist State". Returning the compliments, the same day, the Spokesman of the Pakistan Foreign Office said: "if any state deserved to be called a terrorist State it is India". The Spokesman accused India of using its "military might across international frontiers repeatedly since 1947" to dismember big and small states including Pakistan. He said Pakistan was in touch with "all its friends including the USA" to make it clear "as to which country in the region was fomenting terrorism in South Asia".

196. As the intensity and frequency of cross border terrorist incidents increased and spread to various other parts of India, New Delhi warned Pakistan, that it had taken "the most serious note" of the growing incidents of cross-border terrorism being promoted by Pakistan against India. Increased acts of terrorism provoked New Delhi to charge Pakistan once again as an "acknowledged sponsor of state terrorism". On March 17 1998 India advised Pakistan to look inward at the "serious and endemic ethnic and sectarian violence with which Pakistan itself was beset" and ponder over the consequences of the encouragement which it provided to fundamentalist and terrorist groups. In parent thesis New Delhi told Islamabad that its "attempts to divert the attention of its people from its own policies, which are now recoiling on itself, are pathetic and ridiculous."

197. In the midst of charges and counter charges, the dialogue process was lucky to survive. In November 1998 as part of the Composite Dialogue, the Home Secretaries met to talk, but the result was no better than what was achieved in the past. New Delhi watched helplessly the terrorists roaming the streets of important Pakistani cities, particularly Lahore, and made open and public threats of violence against India. Lashkare-Tayyaba with its headquarters at Muridke, near Lahore, spearheading the violence against India became internationally well known. To India's consternation, Pakistan government was loath to take even modicum of action against it. There were other similar organisations like Harkit ul Mujahdeen. Their activities spread now all over India and innocent people, going around their daily chores, were targeted. Their immediate objective was to create communal disturbances in India, in which they miserably failed.

198. With the withdrawal of the Soviet Union from Afghanistan, America obsessed with its success, felt happy that Moscow had a bloody nose. Taking the problem solved, the United States turned its back on Afghanistan. It did not bother the US, that there was no credible government in Kabul to give political stability to the country, which was the need of the hour. Afghanistan needed financial help, to put in place, a viable politico-economic structure, to deliver to the people good governance and a decent life. In the vacuum thus created in Afghanistan, the Taliban, with the help of Pakistan, walked into Kabul. Pakistan's ISI became its financer and therefore its manipulator. The Taliban too allowed the Al Qaida, with its large purse, to set up shop in Kabul. The cadres of both the organisations, who needed to be engaged, were diverted by the ISI towards India, taking advantage of the long and porous border in Jammu and Kashmir. The hijacking of Indian Airlines flight, IC - 814, flying from Kathmandu to New Delhi to Kandhar in December 1999, and several other hijacking cases in the past, as also the several terrorist attacks in Jammu and Kashmir including the attack on the State's Legislative Assembly, and on the Indian Parliament in December 2001 broke the camel's back. India said enough was enough. A few months later, occurred the 9/11, the attack on the Twin Towers in New York, which stirred the world conscious. New Delhi's warning stood vindicated that, if terrorism was not checked in its tracks, it could hit at targets anywhere and everywhere came true. The 9/11 did bring about a change internationally, but from India's perspective, it wasn't enough. In the face of American demand that Pakistan cooperate (or else...) to eliminate the Taliban and Al Qaeda in Afghanistan, Pakistan was quick to realise that the Taliban game in Kabul was up. Pakistan not only dropped the Taliban regime in Kabul, but announced measures to modernise its own society ostensibly to wean the people away from fundamentalism. To propitiate Washington, it took on the role of a frontline State, in the fight against the fundamental forces in Afghanistan and in return, received millions of dollars in military and economic aid. This served to strengthen Pakistan militarily thereby disturbing the balance of power in a delicately poised region. India was disappointed, since it did not find enough evidence on the ground, to match Pakistan's 'sincerity' in its fight against terrorism per se. India looked cynically at the measures announced by Musharraf on January 12, 2002 and termed them simple rhetoric. Washington remained lukewarm to Indian concerns as long as it felt convinced that its own interests were apparently being served by Pakistan. President Musharraf was happy at the success of his strategy, which was well received in the US "as a courageous step to fight terrorism".
199. Left to fight its own battle, India withdrew its High Commissioner from Islamabad, cut the strength of its mission to the minimum and asked Pakistan to do likewise, banned overflights, the Lahore - New Delhi bus service as also the trains services between the two countries were suspended. In the largest troop movement, since the 1971 Bangladesh operations, about a million Indian troops were mobilized all along the India - Pakistan border and the LOC. In May 2002, to express its strong annoyance with Pakistan on yet another horrendous (Kaluchak) attack, in Jammu & Kashmir in which 32 people were killed, besides many injured, New Delhi warned Pakistan of a "decisive battle" and asked Pakistan to withdraw its Ambassador from New Delhi. Pakistan's public pronouncements of continued moral and political support to secessionist forces in Kashmir and branding them "freedom fighters" was seen in New Delhi as an affront and challenge to India's sovereignty.

200. With the two armies positioned eyeball to eyeball all along the border, the international community was apprehensive of a wider conflict between two nuclear-armed South Asian States. In April of 2002, Musharraf in an interview with the German newsmagazine Der Spiegel had said that "in an emergency (use of) even the atom bomb can also be considered". Responding to international concerns at the escalating situation, and war clouds hovering over the sub-continental sky, New Delhi decided, once again, to give peace a chance. It decided to redeploy its troops from forward positions, without impairing their capacity to respond decisively to any emergency. Redeployment of troops, coupled with the decision to remove restrictions on Pakistani over-flights, and to withdraw naval warships from forward positions unilaterally, despite Pakistani intransigence, was greatly appreciated by the international community as proof of Indian sincerity to promote peace and tranquillity in the region.

201. Terrorism was not only injurious to India--Pakistan relations, which touched their nadir in 2002, it restricted India's foreign relations with other countries. Sensitizing the international community to Pakistani activities became the principal concern of India, particularly so in relations to the United States, the UK and the EU. Concern for internal security and sufferings of innocent victims of terrorism, led to neglect in other fields of activity. Similarly India's preoccupation with Pakistan, created vacuum in relations with important regions, particularly, Africa, Central and South America where interaction got reduced to the minimum.

202. On July 1, 2002 Prime Minister Atal Behari Vajpayee in an interview to the News Week reiterated the fact that infiltration from Pakistan was unabated and training camps for terrorists were functioning as usual. The Indo - Pakistan relations for most of this period remained in a state of suspended animation, since India insisted that no business could be transacted with Pakistan as long as Pakistan continued to promote cross-border terrorism and allowed training camps in Pakistan and Pakistan occupied Kashmir. It was on the same premise, that the Agra Talks had earlier collapsed. There was also sufficient evidence filtering in that despite official ban on the Lashker-e-Tayyaba and Jaish-e-Mohammad and other outfits, they continued to function unhindered under different umbrellas and labels, unchecked and with official connivance.
203. The SAARC Summit in 2004 in Islamabad provided the break through, which promised to usher in a new beginning. In a bilateral meeting between Prime Minister Atal Behri Vajpayee and President Musharraf on January 6, 2004 on the sidelines of the Summit, Pakistan implicitly admitted encouragement to terrorism from its soil and "assured Prime Minister Vajpayee that he will not permit any territory under Pakistan's control to be used to support terrorism in any manner". (emphasis added) Reference to "territory under Pakistan's control" included the area in Kashmir under Pakistan's occupation. It was on this solemn declaration that it was agreed to restart the 'composite dialogue' process.

XXVI

204. The general elections in April 2004 resulted in the change of government in New Delhi. Dr. Manmohan Singh took over as Prime Minister. The dialogue process recommenced and raised hopes of a new era of relationship, ushering peace in South Asia. Besides, the talks between the Foreign and Home Secretaries of the two countries, talks were also held between the narcotics control agencies and investigative agencies of the two countries to work out ground level cooperation. The Home Secretaries at their first meeting, as part of the Composite Dialogue, met in August 2005 when they "reiterated their resolve to combat terrorism and re-emphasised the need for effective steps for the complete elimination of this menace". This commitment was again reiterated at the next Home Secretaries meeting in May 2006. Unfortunately, despite these commitments, the Indian people continued to bear the brunt of terrorist attacks in various parts of the country.

205. Giving Pakistan the benefit of doubt, New Delhi, however persisted with the dialogue process. It was felt in New Delhi that perhaps certain non-state actors, not under the control of the Pakistan Government, were acting independent of the Government in Islamabad. It was the pious hope of India that the Pakistan Government would, in course of time, succeed in bringing these elements too under its control and this menace would get uprooted completely. But persistent attacks convinced New Delhi, of the hopelessness of the situation. The patience of the public and the Government had been stretched too far. The Mumbai terror attack in July 2006 did rattle the government in New Delhi but it again chose to be more patient. Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh after the Mumbai attack said "India and Pakistan have to establish new pathways to establish friendly relations". Underlining the importance of peace to the progress of both India and Pakistan, he said "both the countries need peace for stability and need to be free of terror to realise their potential. All this could not move forward if terror, aided and abetted by outside continued to take the lives of innocent citizens as it did in Mumbai and Kashmir in the previous week". Lamenting that the terrorists were having a free time, the Prime Minister reminded Pakistan of the January 2004 commitment that "Pakistan territory would not be used for aiding and abetting terrorism in India". Soon after the July-2006 Mumbai attack, Prime Minister Dr. Singh and President Musharraf met at Havana in September on the sideline of the NAM Summit and decided to set up an "Anti Terrorism Mechanism", a forum for discussing all issues relating to terrorism. Justifying the mechanism, the Prime Minister said on September 24 in Nanital that its objective was to "test" how Islamabad would fulfil its responsibility towards fighting terrorism.

206. Terrorism did not take too long to revisit India. In February 2007 there was a bomb blast in the Samjhauta Express (the train running between India and Pakistan). Despite this unfortunate incident, the first meeting of the Anti Terror Mechanism took place on March 7, 2007 and then in July the Home Secretaries of the two countries met to convey the message that the Composite Dialogue process had not been interrupted. The Home Secretaries, as in the past, condemned all acts of terrorism and underlined "the imperative need for effective and sustained measures against terrorist activities". The second meeting of the Anti Terror Mechanism was held in October 2007. But it proved as ineffective as past efforts of New Delhi to put an end to the menace of terrorism. The 'mechanism' itself went into limbo thereafter, as New Delhi was convinced of the lack of sincerity on the part of Pakistan to take any meaningful steps to control this menace.

207. The year 2008 struck with a double whammy, at the hands of Pakistani terrorists. First, in July, the Indian Embassy in Kabul came under attack from Pakistani terrorists and then, a bunch of terrorists, taking a boat from Karachi, struck in Mumbai (26/11). Both attacks were lethal. The Kabul blast killed senior Indian diplomats and staffers besides several Afghan visitors to the Embassy. In the Mumbai attack, the count of those killed ran into a couple of hundred, including some foreign nationals. The war cries went out loud and clear from the people of India, who had suffered, and suffered enough, at the hands of the Pakistani terror machine that it was time to put an end to this menace. A lesser government would have wilted under public pressure, but wiser counsel prevailed in the upper echelons of the Government of India. Though the immediate result was that, the composite dialogue process came to a halt, more blood was prevented from being spilled. Whatever little was achieved, in terms of normalisation of relations since the January 2004 Joint Statement, was washed away in the tears that rolled down the cheeks of the people of India who abhorred terrorism because it was against human decency, violated human dignity, took away innocent lives, rendered families distraught, and children orphans.

208. What got dented most was the trust, which had got some fresh lease of life after the Joint Statement of January 6, 2004. A gentle Prime Minister was hurt to no end, since he was very keen on establishing a durable peace with Pakistan. He repeatedly said that one can choose one’s friends but not neighbours. On December 14, 2008, speaking in Kashmir, Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh ruled out normal relations with Pakistan until it ensured that its soil was not used for terrorists activities against India and added "the fight against terrorism will continue at all costs and at all levels." Taking a tough line the Home Minister P. Chidambaram said, Pakistan would have to give "cast iron guarantees" that it soil would not be used to launch terror attacks on India or else it would pay an "enormous price". Clarifying, he said, "the guarantees would have to come from those who control the levers of power and that means, the elected civilian government plus the army. These are not guarantees you can execute on a piece of paper. These are guarantees that have to be given to the international community."

XXVII

209. Before the start of the 2004 composite dialogue process, two major peace initiatives by India must be noted. In 1999 it was proposed to start a bus service between New Delhi and Lahore to facilitate travel between the two countries and create an important linkage to promote people-to-people contacts. Prime Minister Atal Behari Vajpayee decided to take this bus on its inaugural run to Lahore, in February 1999. A Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP) Prime Minister, leading the coalition government in New Delhi, visiting Pakistan had a particular symbolic value, though it was not articulated openly. When in May 1996, BJP had formed a short-lived government in New Delhi, the Pakistan Foreign Office had expressed "misgivings and unhappiness" over the growth of Hindu fundamentalism in India and cited the demolition of Babri Mosque at Ayodhya as an example. While stating that it was not Pakistan's concern, which party formed the government in New Delhi, the Spokesman added that he hoped that "the new government will protect Muslims and resolve the Kashmir issue peacefully".

210. Whatever the Pakistani reaction in 1996, when the BJP returned to power later in 1998, for a longer period, Pakistan was reconciled and was prepared to do business with it. In his message of felicitations to Prime Minister Atal Bihari Vajpayee, Pakistan Prime Minister Nawaz Sharif on March 19, 1998, invited him to "work closely…. for ushering in a new era of durable peace and stability in South Asia". Vajpayee, in reply advised that "India and Pakistan must not remain mired in the past and the prisoners of the old contentions".

211. Be it, as it may, the visit by Prime Minister Atal Behari Vajpayee was highly successful and considered a major step towards creating a direct dialogue at the highest level. Pakistan Prime Minister Nawaz Sharif underlined the importance of direct talks, by giving the example of American duplicity, in conveying misleading messages. As an example, he quoted the example of Comprehensive Test Ban Treaty (CTBT). He said the "Americans were talking to both the countries and were telling each side what they wanted to tell. Neither India nor Pakistan had any way of knowing whether they were being given the correct picture regarding the other side. For Example, he said, the Americans had told them (Pakistanis) that India had agreed to sign the CTBT in May (that) year. He wondered if this was correct." Prime Minister Vajpayee told Nawaz that "it was not correct." Nawaz thereupon suggested that the foreign ministers of the two countries should meet once a year, to discuss all such issues and Vajpayee agreed with the suggestion.

212. The visit ended with the signing of the joint statement, the Lahore Declaration and the Memorandum of Understanding, to lay down the road map for deeper relations between the two countries. It was noted, that it was after 27 years, i.e. after the Simla Agreement, that documents of such importance were signed between the two countries. The Official Spokesman of the Pakistan Foreign Office, underlining the importance of the occasion, said "Both the Lahore Declaration and the MoU also contain the agreement of September 23, 1998 between the Prime Ministers of the two countries, that an environment of peace and security, is in the supreme national interest of both sides and that, resolution of all outstanding issues, including Jammu and Kashmir, is essential for this purpose." The External Affairs Minister Jaswant Singh told the Parliament on February 26 that, "the bus journey captured the imagination of the people of India, of Pakistan, indeed, of the world". But the statement made by Pakistan Foreign Minister Sartaj Aziz was set, in the past history of conflicts between the two countries and particularly the Kashmir issue. On March 8, in his statement to the National Assembly, on the visit of Prime Minister Vajpayee, Aziz gave primacy to the Kashmir issue and touted it as its main achievement, in that, the Kashmir issue, which was lying dormant, had been resurrected and thrust into the forefront. He said: "there is increasing appreciation in the world now, that peace, progress and prosperity in South Asia, are not possible without an environment of security and stability, for which purpose, it is imperative to resolve the root cause of tensions - the Kashmir dispute."

213. But, no sooner was the ink dry on these historic documents that India had to face the ugly reality of Kargil. It was like one step forward and two backward. The entire atmosphere of goodwill, generated by the visit of the Indian Prime Minister, was not only washed out in one stroke, it led to a major clash of arms since the Bangladesh war. The Pakistani regulars and irregulars, masquerading as "Kashmiri freedom fighters", as Pakistan chose to dub them, infiltrated across the Line of Control in Kargil, a highly sensitive sector of Jammu and Kashmir. In the ensuing conflict, India resisted any mediatory role, either by the UN Secretary General or the US President, until the whole area was cleared of the intruders. It was made clear at the highest level that until all Pakistani elements, regular or irregular, had withdrawn from the Indian side of the Line of Control, as established by the Simla Agreement of July 1972, which eventually happened, there can be no talks for peace with Pakistan nor was India prepared to concede any space for any mediatory role to any country or individual at any level. Pakistan even tried the Chinese card to browbeat India. Pakistan Prime Minister Nawaz Sharif, on My 29 in a telephonic talk with Prime Minister Vajpayee, offered to send his Foreign Minister Sartaj Aziz to New Delhi "to discuss all issues". The Pakistan High Commission in New Delhi followed it up with a Note to the Ministry of External Affairs on the next day, May 30 asking for convenient dates for the visit. New Delhi agreed to receive Aziz on the 12th June. In a sudden move, it was announced in Islamabad that Aziz would make a dash to Beijing before visiting New Delhi. After his visit to Beijing, on June 10-11, Sartaj Aziz announced that China had "assured its deep and abiding interest in and support for the sovereignty, territorial integrity, independence and security of Pakistan", the usual clichés Chinese were used to pronounce without meaning much. New Delhi was least perturbed by such pronouncements of Pakistan or for that matter of the Chinese. India refused to accept Pakistani ingenious explanation that the LoC in the Kargil sector was not well demarcated and caused confusion. In yet another attempt to draw the Chinese into the conflict, Nawaz Sharif himself made a dash to Beijing and when Chinese apparently disappointed Pakistan, Nawaz knocked on the doors of President Clinton for help, who provided the fig leaf of face saving. Peace was restored after Pakistan withdrew all its intruders on its side of the LoC. While Kargil was a setback for the bilateral relations between the two nations, it did dent the position of Nawaz Sharif domestically. Within a few months, in October he was overthrown by a military coup by his Chief of Army Staff, who had him arrested and tried in a military court. He was saved from being awarded a death sentence, by the intervention of the Saudi King and the US President Clinton, and exiled with his family to Saudi Arabia. That he managed to return home later, is another story.

XXVIII

214. Another effort at peace making with Pakistan was made in July 2001 at Agra. Prime Minister Vajpayee decided to invite the new ruler of Pakistan, General Musharraf for talks to test his commitment to peace, since he had been talking big on better relations with New Delhi. To create the necessary climate of goodwill preceding the Summit, India took several confidence building measures, such as offer of scholarships to Pakistani students for study in Indian technical institutions, invitations to poets, artists and intellectuals to visit India, issue of visa to Pakistani passport holders at the border check posts, no arrest of fishermen who inadvertently crossed into Indian waters while fishing etc. While Indian effort was at creating a climate of peace and confidence between the two countries, before tackling any problematic issue, Pakistan, on the other hand, remained obsessed with Kashmir. In several media statements and interviews, which Musharraf indulged in, before his arrival in New Delhi, one single theme which ran through them was that of Kashmir. India recognised that Kashmir was an issue which needed to be tackled, but only when the necessary and conducive climate for that had been created. This was articulated by Prime Minister Atal Behari Vajpayee in his opening remarks at the plenary of the Summit. He said "we remain committed to the establishment of trust and confidence to develop mutually beneficial cooperation and to address all outstanding issues including Jammu and Kashmir." However Prime Minister believed that the "core concern of our people is their struggle against poverty, want, hunger and deprivation". Conceding that there were differences between the two countries on the question of Kashmir, he was willing to "address these differences and to move forward". Vajpayee insisted that "it is important to create a conducive atmosphere". He, however cautioned Musharraf that the "terrorism and violence being promoted within the State from across the borders, do not help to create such an atmosphere". This was the crux of the whole problem, which did not find ready resonance from the General. While Prime Minister was motivated in taking this initiative by his desire to fill the gap in the trust-deficit, Musharraf's perception appeared to be that India's quest for peace was prompted by the deep wounds that terrorism had successfully inflicted on the Indian people and dented India's resolve. But Vajpayee disabused him of any such notion and told him that India would "counter these resolutely" and "let no one think that India does not have the resolve, strength or stamina for continuing resisting terrorism and violence". Failure of Pakistan to imbibe this warning, contained in these words, led to the failure at Agra.

215. For India, Agra’s failure marked the end of its renewed effort to drive home the message to Pakistan, that without end to terrorism, there was little chance of restoring trust between the two countries. Since Musharraf’s emphasis remained merely on Kashmir, it was made clear to him that India-Pakistan relations "ought to, or cannot be held hostage by any single issue" and that India believed in "the totality of approach which addresses all issues (and) as we move along improving bilateral relations we will continue to address the issue of Jammu and Kashmir as well."

216. Pakistan admitted that the talks broke down on the question of "the relationship between settlement of the Kashmir question and progress on normalisation of relations." Pakistan Foreign Minister Abdul Sattar, however chose to believe that "we came close to arriving at the settlement" and he remained hopeful that "a full agreement can be reached in the next meeting". He added that the two leaders "succeeded covering a broad area of common ground in the draft declaration" which he said would "provide a valuable foundation for the two leaders to reach a full agreement at their next meeting". Hoping that there would be more talks in future, Sattar described the Agra Summit "inconclusive" and not a failure. Be it, as it may be, the December-2001 terrorist attack on the Indian Parliament vitiated the atmosphere completely. It not only destroyed any chance of another immediate effort at peace making, but there was a real danger of a hot war breaking out between the two countries, as their armies faced each other eyeball-to-eyeball all along the international border and the LoC.

XXIX

217. Pakistan which embarked on the road to terrorism, in moments of its weakness to wreck vengeance on India, for splitting Pakistan, and to weaken it internally, by creating communal disharmony in a multi-religious Indian society, had to eat a humble pie. If these terror attacks mounted on India failed to break the delicate fabric of communal harmony or to set the Ganga or the Sutlej on fire, the credit must go to the institutional strength of the society, so assiduously built since independence. The secular and inclusive society, that India endeavoured to build, paid dividends by withstanding the tribulations of the past years, marred by insurgency in north India and terrorists attacks in several parts of the country. One wonders, whether Pakistan has at all realised, that terrorism was a hydra-headed Frankenstein which could strike back and gobble those who ride it. Terrorism knows no national or international frontiers. It attacks as much others as those who breed it. It is like an avalanche, if it cannot get the direction on one side, will find another outlet and cause the devastation whichever way the space becomes available. If the Pakistani terrorist groups have not found it possible to turn their wrath on India anymore, because of its exercise of greater vigilance, they have turned venom on their creators and Pakistan is now reaping the whirlwind it sowed for India.
218. That Pakistan, despite the split following 1971 war with India, did not change much, was perceptible in many ways. It continued to distort intellectual perceptions and domestic and foreign policy planning, at various levels. Increased fear of proportionately bigger India, the impulses among the younger army officers to avenge the 1971 defeat, and a more acute crisis of identity, considering that Pakistan housed only 1/3rd of the Muslims of the sub-continent, were major factors contributing to the anti-India bias in Pakistan. Most of Pakistan’s foreign and defence policies, as evolved and pursued since Bangladesh, are explained as stemming from this approach.

219. India continues to be a paramount factor in Pakistan's perception and determination of its policies on international issues, colouring both its internal and external developments. Its Islamic consciousness, needed to keep the Kashmir issue alive, and the need for Indian bogey to contain democratic aspirations of its people are chief contributory factors of almost fixed anti-India bias in Pakistan. This policy of uncompromising hostility towards India, gave it advantage of simplicity and of unprincipled manoeuvrability, thus justifying subservient role to the Western policies in cold war era and thereby also acquire economic and military inputs in substantial quantities. However, the internal consequences of a continuing confrontation with India have proved disastrous for its socio-economic and political growth as well as its institutions. The emergence of Bangladesh can be considered as the direct result of the same policies. Massive foreign involvement in its militarisation also encouraged lopsided growth leading to an overwhelming role and influence for the military establishment in its society and social and economic life, which led to the subversion of democratic institutions too.

220. The developments in Afghanistan, first in Soviet intervention in 1979 and later the US war on terrorism, in the aftermath of the 9/11 attack on Trade Towers, catapulted Pakistan to the role of the front line state, bringing in tons of money in economic and military aid besides the huge quantities of arms and equipment. These developments, while further strengthening the army's position in Pakistan, had an unfortunate effect and were not at all blessings in the long run. First intervention created the Taliban, whom Pakistan exploited in the following years to strengthen its standing in Kabul. The second intervention by the United States, was to eliminate the Pakistan supported Taliban, who had in the meantime become the proclaimed guardians of the Islamic fundamentalism and allowed international terrorist organisations like the Al Qaida to set shop in Kabul, and in conjunction, had now challenged the Western world by declaring it the enemy of Islam. In turn, Afghanistan became the epicentre of international terrorism. This development too resulted in massive dose of military equipment being injected into Pakistan thus once again strengthening the military establishment further with serious and pernicious impact on the society and democratic institutions.

221. The United States and the West, failed to realise that in allowing itself to become the frontline state, Pakistan was fighting to protect its own strategic interest on its western border with Afghanistan. It helped it to set up a client state in Kabul, to the exclusion of other powers, particularly India, which had then to wind up its mission in Kabul. The American intervention now, was against the Pakistan's strategic interests, it had built up in Kabul. In playing an acquiescent role, in joining the war against terrorism under the American threat, (as pointed out above, "or else"), one has to remember that during the period of Soviet intervention and in the intervening years, following the Soviet withdrawal, much of the Pakistan area adjoining its western borders with Afghanistan, too had come under the Taliban's influence and the Pakistani and Afghani Taliban had developed a synergy between them. Therefore rooting out Taliban from Kabul meant war against Pakistan's home-grown Taliban too. Much of Pakistan's military strength had to be deployed against its own Taliban in the Frontier Province and the adjoining Federally Administered Area, where they had a sort of complete freedom, shorn of sovereignty, right from the colonial period.

222. Pakistan's military establishment reckoned that defeat of the Taliban in Kabul, in the long run would result in the loss of a client state. India's massive economic programme to develop the economic and social infrastructure of Afghanistan, meant return of the Indian influence in Kabul, which too was anathema to Pakistan. Slowly but surely, the United States discovered Pakistan's fight against terrorism in Afghanistan was not only half-hearted but surreptitiously undercutting the American efforts, by encouraging terrorist groups fighting the United States. The presence of a number of Al Qaida top leaders including Osama bin Laden, despite Islamabad's denial of their presence on Pakistani soil, though unconvincing to the United States, provided enough proof of Pakistan's perfidy. Pakistan may have gained some crumbs from the United States' munificence, but its duplicity established Pakistan as a terrorist state, where world terrorists could expect to find a safe haven, along with home grown elements. In the process, it, not only compromised and undermined its position in the eyes of the world, but also its sovereignty, where foreign powers, could with impunity, mount clandestine operations to hunt out the terrorists and even launch drone attacks on terror outfits operating from its soil, with or without its connivance.

223. Today Pakistan is besieged by extremism and terrorism in more than one way. There are radical religious groups fighting against each other. Islamic fundamentalism has spread its toxin to an extent that even the Pakistani liberal society has come under its attack and receded into the background. The assassination of one of Pakistan's most charismatic leaders, Benazir Bhutto, underlined the extent to which the Pakistani society had been brutalised. The army, in order to retain its stranglehold on the Pakistan polity and society, developed a vested interest in ensuring that Islamic fundamentalism retained its vice like grip on the institutions of the State. Despite the restoration of democracy after the overthrow of Musharraf led military regime, the democratic institutions are gasping for breath and their sustainability is tested almost by the day. Some false hopes were, indeed, raised that after several spells of disastrous military rule, Pakistan had perhaps realised, after all, that democracy, like liberty needs to be nurtured and cannot be taken for granted. For it to succeed, socio-economic development of society was the pre-requisite. But development cannot come without peace, both internal and external. Pakistan has to realise that terrorism is the anti-thesis of both peace and development. In the case of Pakistan there are too many imponderables putting a question mark on the success of democracy. Unfortunately for Pakistan, the democratic government has come under severe attack from one of the strongest pillars of a democratic polity, the Supreme Court of Pakistan. The Supreme Court's challenge to the Government is so harsh, that the survival of the regime looks grim, and it should not surprise anyone, if the army were to strike once again.

XXX

224. As stated in the very beginning, the origin of Pakistan was based on Islam. But one had hoped that in the age of reason, liberalism and socialism, and since much of the history of Pakistan movement was steeped in the democratic movement, Pakistan would move in the direction of a liberal society even if it was an Islamic society. The speech of Mohammad Ali Jinnah at the Constituent Assembly on August 11, 1947 raised those early hopes too. But alas, after his death, Pakistan moved towards the narrow path and created a theocratic state. Gradually, the ruling elite, whether democratic like Zulfikar Ali Bhutto or military like Zia-ul-Haq, in order to perpetuate their rule, fell back on Islamic fundamentalism, distorting noble Islamic values, thereby undermining the institutions of the state to their own benefit. It resulted in alternative political phenomenon promoted by both international and national forces. As long as, state institutions were not distorted, benign Islam did no damage to society. It propagated righteous values and virtuous behaviour. It caused the greatest damage, when Islam was made to sub-serve the personal interests of individuals. Islam and Islamic fundamentalism are two distinct phenomena and they do not complement each other. One is antithesis of the other. It was the latter phenomenon, which proved pernicious and caused the maximum damage to the Pakistani society and state, because it promoted backwardness, social deprivation, a low level of consciousness, poverty and ignorance.

225. The people of India and Pakistan have lived side by side for centuries and in two separated independent states for more than six decades now. The partition was an opportunity for the two to go their own ways and build egalitarian societies for the benefit of their people in their own chosen way. Given the bonds of geography, history, and culture, it was expected that they would grow together complementing each other. Alas that was not to be. Pakistan used its Islamic self-consciousness based on two-nation theory, to keep alive the animosities of the past and added fresh ones to keep alive, the Indian bogey to contain democratic aspirations of its people, and create an anti-India bias in Pakistan. The feeling of insecurity that it sought to create for itself and its people, drove Pakistan to seek security from sources, which exploited it to their own end, while creating the mirage of security. In this process, it became a pawn in the cold war politics of great powers. Obsession with Kashmir drove Pakistan to an uncompromising confrontation with India, to establish international connections which though brought it economic and military aid, used it as a base for confrontations of their own. But the internal consequences of a continuing confrontation with India have proved disastrous for Pakistan's socio-political growth and therefore its economic development too was stunted. Bangladesh was a direct result of this confrontationist mentality. Massive foreign involvement in Pakistan's militarisation also encouraged lopsided growth leading to an overwhelming role and influence of the military establishment in Pakistani society.

226. It is time for Pakistan to realise, that more than six decades of its existence, in confrontation with India, has only undermined its social, economic and democratic institutions and its development. India may have, to a great extent, succeeded in sensitising itself from Pakistan's baggage, but its growth and development has not remained unaffected. Both were one country, one economy, one market, one culture and one people. Going separate ways but living side by side, in peace and harmony, complementing each other, could have been a great asset in creating a prosperous South Asia, benefiting other smaller nations in the region too. Alas, South Asia after sixty five years of post-colonial history, remains the most volatile region, riven with poverty, ignorance, and disease. This has to end.

INDIA-PAKISTAN RELATIONS
0001. JOINT DEFENCE COUNCIL ORDER, 1947

11 August 1947

In exercise of the powers conferred by sub-section (1) of section 9 of the Indian Independence Act, 1947, and in pursuance of subsection (1) of section 11 thereof, the Governor – General is pleased to make the following Order:

(1) (i) This Order may be cited as the Joint Defence Council Order, 1947.

(ii) It shall come into force at once.

(iii) It shall cease to have effect on the first day of April, 1948.

Provided that the Governor – General of India and the Governor – General of Pakistan, acting jointly, may direct that this Order shall remain in force for such further period as may be specified in the direction.

(2) (i) The Interpretation Act, 1889, shall apply for the interpretation of this Order as it applies for the interpretation of an Act of Parliament.

(ii) In this Order,

‘Indian forces’ has the same meaning as in the Indian Independence Act, 1947.

‘Dominion forces’ means the armed forces of the Dominion of India or of Pakistan.

(3) (i) As from the 15th day of August, 1947, there shall be set up a Council to be known as the Joint Defence Council for India and Pakistan.

(ii) The said Council, hereinafter referred to as the Joint Defence Council, shall consist of

(1) The Governor – General of India,

(2) The Defence Minister of India,

(3) The Defence Minister of Pakistan, and

(4) The Supreme Commander of His Majesty’s Forces in India and Pakistan (hereinafter referred to as the Supreme Commander).

(4) The Governor – General of India shall be the independent Chairman of the Joint Defence Council.

(5) The person who at the date of the commencement of this Order is the Commander – in – Chief of His Majesty’s Forces in India shall be the Supreme Commander.
(6) (i) If a Defence Minister is for any reason unable to attend any meeting of the Joint Defence Council, he shall be entitled to depute another Minister or the High Commissioner for the Dominion concerned to attend the meeting in his place, and such other Minister or High Commissioner shall have for the purposes of that meeting all the powers of the Defence Minister.

(ii) If the Supreme Commander is for any reason unable to attend any meeting of the Joint Defence Council, he shall be entitled to depute a member of his 'Chiefs of Staff ' committee to attend the meeting in his place, and such member shall have for the purposes of that meeting all the powers of the Supreme Commander.

(7) At any meeting of the Joint Defence Council,

(a) A Defence Minister may be accompanied by another Minister;

(b) A Defence Minister or the Supreme Commander may call in to assist him at the meeting in an advisory capacity one or more experts.

(8) The Joint Defence Council shall be in exclusive control of

(a) The division of the Indian forces between the Dominions and their reconstitution as two separate Dominions forces;

(b) The allocation, transfer and movement of officers and men belonging to the Indian forces for the purposes of such reconstitution;

(c) The allocation, transfer and movement for the purposes of such reconstitution of plant, machinery, equipment and stores held by the Governor – General in Council immediately before the 15th day of August, 1947, for the purposes of the Indian forces;

(d) Such naval, military and air force establishments as the Joint Defence Council may specify, for such temporary period as that Council may consider necessary or expedient;

(e) The general administration of naval, military and air force law, and the maintenance of discipline, in the armed forces of each of the two Dominions;

(f) The general arrangements for the payment, food, clothing, medical attendance and equipment of the armed forces of each of the two Dominions;

(g) Any armed force which may be operating, or may hereafter be sent to operate, under joint command in such areas near the boundaries between the two Dominions as are for the time being declared by or under a Provincial law to be disturbed area;
(h) Any Indian forces which are for the time being overseas.

Provided that the control of the Joint Defence Council shall not extend,

(i) Except in relation to the forces mentioned in paragraphs (g) and (h) of this Article, to the disposition and operational control within the Dominion, and the local administration, of the armed forces of either Dominion, or

(ii) To the selection and recruitment of officers and men for the armed forces of either Dominion and their training, when such training takes place elsewhere than in a training establishment specified by the Joint Defence Council under paragraph (d) of this Article.

Provided further that the Joint Defence Council shall cause such measures to be taken as will enable them gradually to withdraw their control in respect of all or any of the matters mentioned in paragraphs (d), (e) and (f) of this Article with a view to the cessation of control as early as may be practicable and in any event before the 1st day of April, 1948.

(9) The executive authority of each of the two Dominions shall be so exercised as to give full effect to any orders or directions that may be made or given by the Joint Defence Council in the exercise of the powers conferred on them by this Order.

(10) The Supreme Commander shall be responsible for giving effect to the decisions of the Joint Defence Council and shall act in conformity with such directions as may be given to him in that behalf by the Joint Defence Council.

(11) The post and promotion of any officer of His Majesty’s forces who is not a member of, but is attached to or serving with, any of the Dominion forces, shall be made only in consultation with the Supreme Commander.

(12) Where by virtue of the provisions of this Order any members of the Indian Forces are for the time being subject to the command or control of the Supreme Commander, the Supreme Commander shall exercise

(a) In the case of such members as are subject to the Army Act, 1911, the powers of the Commander – in – Chief under that Act; and

(b) In the case of such members as are subject to the Indian Air Force Act, 1932, the powers of the Air Officer Commanding – in – Chief under that Act; and when any such powers are so exercised by the Supreme Commander, the powers of the Central Government under the Indian Army Act, 1911, or as the case may be, the Indian Air Force Act, 1932, shall be exercisable by the Joint Defence Council.
(13) There shall be two Joint Secretaries of the Joint Defence Council nominated, respectively, by the Governor – General of India and the Governor – General of Pakistan, and such other secretarial staff as may be appointed by or under the authority of the Joint Defence Council.

(14) There shall be set up by order of the Joint Defence Council a financial and accounting organization charged with the duty of scrutinizing and advising on proposals involving expenditure, giving financial sanction thereto and accounting for all the expenses referred to in the next succeeding Articles.

(15) All expenses incurred by or under authority derived from the Joint Defence Council or the Supreme Commander for carrying into effect the purposes of this Order shall be borne by the Dominions of India and Pakistan in such proportion as may be determined by the Joint Defence Council.

ARBITRAL TRIBUNAL ORDER, 1947

In exercise of the powers conferred by section 9 of the Indian Independence
Act, 1947, and of all other powers enabling him in that behalf, the Governor – General is pleased to make the following Order:

(1) (i) This Order may be cited as the Arbitral Tribunal Order, 1947.
(ii) It shall come into force at once.

(2) The interpretation Act, 1889, shall apply for the interpretation of this Order as it applies for the interpretation of an Act of Parliament.

(3) (i) As from the Fourteenth day of August, 1947, there shall be set up an Arbitral Tribunal (hereinafter referred to as ‘the Tribunal’) consisting of a Chairman who shall be nominated by the Governor – General, and two members who shall be so nominated, one to represent the future Dominion of India and the other to represent the future Dominion of Pakistan.

(ii) If the office of the Chairman becomes vacant it shall be filled by such person as the Governor—General of the two Dominions may agree to nominate as Chairman, and if the office of a member becomes vacant it shall be filled by such person as the Governor—General of the Dominion concerned may nominate as member.

(4) (i) The Tribunal shall have power to make awards in respect of references made to it before the first day of December, 1947, or with the permission of the Chairman before the first day of January, 1948, by any of the bodies hereinafter mentioned being references relating to any of the following matters, namely:

(a) The division between the Dominions of India and Pakistan, of the assets and liabilities of the Governor—General in Council;

(b) The apportionment between the Dominions of India and Pakistan of expenses incurred by or under authority derived from the Joint Defence Council or the Supreme Commander for carrying into effect the purposes of the Joint Defence Council Order, 1947;

(c) The amount of assets and liabilities of the Reserve Bank of India to be transferred to Pakistan when the Reserve Bank of India ceases to be the bank of issue for Pakistan or the Central Bank of Pakistan;

(d) The apportionment between the Dominions of India and Pakistan of the current earnings of foreign exchange including current releases of sterling by His Majesty’s Government in the United Kingdom, during the period when the Reserve Bank of India administers common exchange controls on behalf of both the Dominions;

(e) The division between the new Provinces of East Bengal and West Bengal, of the assets and liabilities of the existing Province of Bengal;

(f) The allocation to the new Province of East Bengal of any of the assets and liabilities of the Province of Assam;

(g) The division between the new Provinces of West Punjab and East Punjab, of the assets and liabilities of the existing Province of the Punjab; and

(h) Any other matter arising directly out of partition.
(ii) The bodies referred to in paragraph (i) of this Article are the bodies which on the date of the commencement of this Order are known as

(a) The Partition Council,
(b) The Provisional Joint Defence Council,
(c) The Bengal Separation Council,
(d) The Punjab Partition Committee, and
(e) The Assam Separation Council, and the corresponding bodies which are to be set up as from the date of the establishment of the Dominions of India and Pakistan.

(iii) Whenever the appropriate body mentioned in paragraph (ii) of this Article is unable to reach an agreed decision in regard to a matter mentioned in sub – paragraphs (a) to (g) of paragraph (i) thereof, that body shall make a reference to the Tribunal, but before the first day December, 1947, or with the permission of the Chairman before the 1st day January, 1948, setting out as clearly as may be the matter or matters in difference.

(iv) Whenever any of the bodies mentioned in paragraph (ii) of this Article is unable to reach an agreed decision in regard to a matter mentioned in sub – paragraph (h) of paragraph (i) thereof, but is agreed that a reference should be made to the Tribunal, that body may make a reference before the first day of December, 1947, or with the permission of the Chairman before the first day of January, 1948, setting out as clearly as may be the matter or matters in difference.

(5) (i) Whenever any of the bodies mentioned in paragraph (ii) of Article (4) is unable to agree whether or not a matter is one in regard to which the body is required by paragraph (iii) of that Article to make a reference in the contingency mentioned therein, that question shall be referred to the Tribunal whose decision shall be final.

(ii) Where a question has been referred to the Tribunal under this Article,

a) If the two members of the Tribunal are agreed as to the decision to be given, such decision shall be the decision of the Tribunal; and

b) If the two members are not agreed, the Chairman shall decide the question and his decision shall be the decision of the Tribunal.

(6) In respect of any reference made to the Tribunal under Article (4):

(a) If the two members of the Tribunal are agreed as to the terms of the award to be made, the Chairman shall make the award in those terms; and
(b) In the event of disagreement between the two members with regard to any matter arising out of the reference, the Chairman shall decide such matter and make the award accordingly.

Provided that the body making the reference may, at any time before the award is made, withdraw the reference by notice in writing to the Tribunal.

(7) (i) Every award made in accordance with the provision of Article (6) shall be binding on the two Dominions and all Provinces and other parts thereof, and on all persons directly or indirectly concerned in or affected by the award.

(ii) Every such award shall be communicated forthwith by the Chairman to the body by which the reference was made, the Governments of the two Dominions, and the Governments of the Provinces concerned if any.

(8) (i) The Tribunal shall have power

(a) To make an award conditional or in the alternative;

(b) To correct any clerical mistake or error arising from any accidental slip or omission;

(c) Subject to the provisions of this order, to determine its own procedure; and

(d) To appoint such ministerial officers as it may find necessary.

(ii) The Tribunal shall have all the powers of a civil court for the purpose of receiving evidence, administering oaths, enforcing the attendance of witnesses and compelling the discovery and production of documents, and shall be deemed to be a civil court within the meaning of sections 480 and 482 of the Code of the Criminal Procedure, 1898.

(9) Nothing contained in the Arbitration Act, 1940, shall apply to proceedings before the Tribunal.

Amritsar, August 18, 1947.

Three days ago, transfer of power took place in India and Pakistan and new Governments were installed. This historic event was celebrated with great enthusiasm almost everywhere except in the Punjab. In both West Punjab and in East Punjab, instead of rejoicing there was continuing disaster and suffering.

The first act of our Governments was to consider this serious situation in the Punjab and statements and appeals were immediately issued. On the morning of August 17 we visited Ambala and a conference was held there consisting of the Governors, Ministers and the senior officers of West and East Punjab. Sardar Baldev Singh, Defence Minister, India was present, as also the Deputy Supreme Commander (Army) and the Commander of the Punjab Boundary Force. We had also the advantage of conferring informally with the various leaders of communities, including Master Tara Singh and Giani Kartar Singh.

At this conference, it was unanimously decided that every possible step must be taken immediately to put an end to this orgy of violence, arson and crime both in East and West Punjab. These steps will include administrative and military arrangements, as well as an appeal by the leaders of the people. No government worthy of the name can tolerate such lawlessness and crime. The present Governments, whether at the Centre or in the Punjab, are new Governments, three days old, and they want to break from the past. They are fully responsible today for everything that occurs and they are determined to bring peace and order and security to the Punjab. It is clear that every community has suffered and will suffer if disorder continues. Arrangements have, therefore, been made for concerted action between the Governments of East and West Punjab, supported by the Central Governments and with the full cooperation of the leaders of all communities, to put down firmly and immediately all elements of disorder.

All officers of whatever grade and standing are desired to act according to this policy and they will be fully supported in any action taken in a bona fide manner. If disorder continues in an area this means the failure of any officer on duty there. The Governments of East and West Punjab and the Central Governments expect every officer, whatever his grade, to do his duty at this critical juncture without showing any partisanship or weakness.
Any steps that the Governments may take must necessarily depend on public support and we appeal, therefore, to the public of East and West Punjab to forget the past and give their full support to this policy and thus to help in suppressing anti-social elements which are a grave menace to all communities.

Both the Governments of the Punjab and the Central Governments will do their utmost to give help and succour to the evacuees and refugees.

We are confident that the measures which have now been initiated will succeed. Indeed, a marked change for the better is already noticeable. The Central Governments are giving first priority to the Punjab situation and will render the fullest assistance to the two provincial governments. What-ever the cost, peace and order will be restored.

0004. Accusation by the Pakistan Prime Minister that India intended to sabotage Pakistan.

Lahore, September 14, 1947.

Addressing the Punjab Muslim League Council in Lahore on September 14, Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan, Prime Minister of Pakistan, remarked that the carnage of Muslims in the East Punjab followed the execution of an unholy plan chalked out by the enemies of Pakistan to sabotage it on its very birth.

He regretted that the Government of India and of the East Punjab had not been able fully to implement the decisions jointly taken by Governments of Pakistan and India in Lahore but as an honourable nation he said we have scrupulously adhered to all the decisions.

He called upon the Muslims to face the present grave crisis with dauntless courage and grim determination to overcome it and assured that if they grappled with the calamity with resolution and perseverance they would emerge victorious.

The gruesome happenings in the East Punjab, he said, have deeply cut the heart of every Muslim. But it is no time to indulge in emotionalism as it will serve no useful purposes, rather it will help to destroy the chances of our recovery and regeneration. There never was a greater test for the character and courage of the Muslims in all their history.
Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan remarked that the carnage of Muslims in the East Punjab followed the execution of an unholy plan chalked out by the enemies of Pakistan to sabotage it on its very birth.

Dream Frustrated

Comparing present conditions in Pakistan with those in England during the last war, Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan said we are surrounded on all sides by forces which are out to destroy us. They fear that with the consolidation of Pakistan their cherished dream to rule all-over the sub-continent of India will not be realized.

The Pakistan Premier referred to the sufferings of the Muslims in the East Punjab and expressed the view that Muslims were routed only by the bayonets of the forces of law and order. It was his firm conviction that Muslims would have stoutly stuck to their posts if the military and the police had not turned on them.

Evacuation

Referring to the problem of evacuation of Muslims from the East Punjab, Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan said that his Government was determined to utilize all its resource for the rehabilitation of the Muslim refugees in Pakistan. No Government in the world, he added, was ever faced with the problem of refugees on such a gigantic scale as we are but we shall not shirk our duty to help them to any extent.

He regretted that the Governments of India and of the East Punjab had not been able fully to implement the decisions taken by the Governments of Pakistan and of India in Lahore, but as an honourable nation, he said, we have scrupulously adhered to all the decisions.

Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan suggested to the West Punjab Government to consider the availability of appointing a Minister exclusively for evacuation and rehabilitation operations and expand the Cabinet if necessary.
0005. Press Note issued by the Government of India on the decisions taken at the Lahore Conference.

New Delhi, September 15, 1947

A Press communiqué on the Lahore conference* decisions says: The Prime Minister, Pandit Nehru, gave a brief report of yesterday’s discussions at Lahore with representatives of the Governments of Pakistan and West Punjab, at today’s meeting of the Emergency Committee of the Cabinet.

In particular, he referred to the joint decision taken by both Governments to discontinue the practice of searching the evacuees in West or East Punjab.

Accordingly, he reported that the following order had been issued by the East Punjab Government:

“Irrespective of any controls or previous administrative orders to the contrary, no convoys of evacuees and no temporary camps of evacuees about to move from West to East Punjab and from East to West Punjab will be subjected to any kind of search either by the police or the military, and both Governments reiterate their previous decision that evacuees will be permitted to take away at their discretion and within the limits of transport available movable property including licensed weapons, food, domestic animals, carts and motor vehicles which are not licensed for public use.”

How to associate women with the recovery of abducted women and children was considered and the matter was referred to the United Council for Relief and Welfare for a report tomorrow (September 16).

Evacuation of Officials

The Royal Indian Air Force will evacuate stranded officials from Chaklala to India by air. The Committee also directed the Royal Indian navy to report whether stranded officials could not be brought by sea from Karachi to the nearest port in Gujarat of Kathiawar.

* The meeting which took place in Lahore was attended on the Indian side by the prime ministers of the two countries Jawaharlal Nehru and Liaquat Ali Khan, Defence Minister Baldev Singh, Governor of East Punjab Chandulal Trivedi, Home Minister of East Punjab Swaran Singh, General Carriappa of the Indian Army, Finance Minister of Pakistan Mr. Ghulam Mohammad, Governor of West Punjab Sir Francis Mudie, and members of the West Punjab Cabinet and C-in-C of the Pakistan Army General Messervy. The meeting was informed that there were only 45000 Hindus and Sikhs remained in NWFP. As regards Sind, Liaquat Ali Khan informed the meeting that the province was largely quiet and there was no mass evacuation of Hindus from Sind and the needs of those who were leaving Karachi and other places were being met by normal train services. Government of India appointed Mr. Tirlok Singh former private secretary to the Prime Minister Nehru as the Custodian of Evacuee Property in East Punjab.
An offer by officers and men of the Royal Scots Fusiliers who are in transit and who have volunteered to assist in running refugee camps in their spare time was gratefully accepted by the Committee. They will give their services equally to Hindu-Sikh and Muslim camps, but they will not be used as escorts.

The Press note says: A large number of women have been abducted. Some have already been rescued but a very considerable number still remain. It was suggested at the Lahore conference that organized steps be taken, with the co-operation of the East and West Punjab Governments and their police and military for the recovery of such women. It was further suggested that volunteer women workers be associated in this work and that the cooperation of women and relief organizations sought.

Women Volunteers Needed

The Governments of India and Pakistan are giving earnest consideration to this problem and it is hopped arrangements will be arrived at which will yield satisfactory results. It is requested that all persons in possession of information about abducted women should communicate to the Deputy Commissioner who will forward it to the Provincial Governments.

0006. Press Conference by the Leader of Pakistan’s Delegation to the U. N. Zafrullah Khan regarding treatment of minorities in India.

Mr. Zafrullah Khan, Chief of the Pakistan Delegation to the U.N. Assembly, warned that unless the Government of India took steps “to end the slaughter of Muslims a formal complaint would be filed with the United Nations. If satisfaction is not obtained, the Government of Pakistan may have to resort to direct measures.”

Mr. Zafrullah Khan asserted that the Indian Government had done nothing to control the communal disturbances. Answering correspondents whether he was authorized by his Government to make a formal complaint to the Assembly, Mr. Zafrullah said: “Not yet, but if the situation is not adequately controlled immediately by the Dominion of India, I am expecting any moment to be asked by the Pakistan Government to raise the matter before the United Nations Assembly, as this situation constitutes a grave threat to the peace of the world.
“If this deliberate and planned extermination of a people continues unchecked by India. Pakistan as a last resort must seek satisfaction through the United Nations, and if it fails to get that satisfaction, it may have to resort to direct measures.”

Mr. Zafrullah said that killing of Muslims had been going on for more than a month in the province of East Punjab and lately in the Province of Delhi.”

He said that the horrible and ruthless killing in that part of India put the whole delegation of Pakistan in a very depressed and mournful mood, and added: “Naturally the delegation is very much concerned at the moment with the happenings in and near our homes where our dearest and nearest may at any moment be destroyed.”

“The responsibility for this rests entirely on the Government of India which so far has utterly failed to discharge its responsibility or even face it squarely.”

Mr. Zafrullah asserted that the only thing the Indian Government had done so far to control the trouble was “to appeal to reason but inflamed non-Muslim sections of the population cannot be expected to react to these appeals, particularly when the Government's own police force in many instances abetted and encouraged and even participated in the extermination of Muslims.”

0007. Statement to the Press by Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru expressing regrets at the speech of Pakistan Prime Minister Liaquat Ali Khan to the Muslim League Council.

New Delhi, September 17, 1947.

My attention has been drawn to a statement made by Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan, Prime Minister of Pakistan, to the Punjab Muslim League Council on September 14 at Lahore, in the course of which he is reported to have said:

(1) Today we (Pakistan) are surrounded on all sides by forces which are out to destroy us. They (these forces) feel that with the consolidation of Pakistan, their cherished dream to rule all over the sub-continent of India will not be realized;

(2) That the Muslims in East Punjab were routed only by the bullets and bayonets of the forces of law and order;

(3) That the Governments of India and East Punjab had not honoured and implemented the decisions jointly taken by the Governments of the two Dominions in Lahore some days ago*.

I am both surprised and pained that these statements should have been made on the very day that representatives of the Governments of India and Pakistan met in Lahore to consider ways and means of making more effective the measures previously agreed upon to localize and end the present tragic situation.

It is well known that, before partition came, many of us sought to avert it. Since partition was decided upon, it has been the constant endeavour of the Government of India to discharge faithfully all their obligations flowing from that decision. Some of us still hope that, when the present unhappy commotion has ended and amity between the two communities has been restored, the two Dominions may, of the free will of their respective peoples, unite.

None of us, however, has thought of treating Pakistan as an enemy or harboured an intention to destroy it. It is unfortunate that any such motive should be imputed to the Government of India.

As regards Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan’s second charge, it is to be regretted, but it is true that there have been instances of dereliction of duty by the forces of law and order. Such dereliction, however, has not by any means been exclusive to the forces of the Government of India or of the East Punjab. It has been practiced on both sides of the border. My colleagues and I have publicly condemned it and we are doing our best, and not without success, to eliminate this serious defect.

It is fair, however, to record that, at least so far as the forces of law and order in India are concerned impartiality rather than partisanship has been the rule.

Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan has regretted that the Governments of India and East Punjab have not honoured and implemented the decisions jointly taken by the Governments of the two Dominions. I am not aware of any deviation from our undertakings. At the meeting in Lahore last Sunday, the only complaint placed before us by the representatives of the Government of Pakistan related to some delay in the movement of a Muslim convoy from Jullundur to West Punjab. The slight delay was due entirely to the need for giving the evacuees adequate protection. In fact, the convoy started soon after and is well on its way.

*The conference of the representatives of the two Governments on 3 September 1947 spelt out measures for restoration of law and order and protection of refugees in East and West Punjab. The transfer of refugees from the two States was to be organized by military authorities under proper escorts. Steps were also stipulated to deal with forced conversions, seizure of property and damage to religious sites.
Every Muslim refugee camp in East Punjab, every group of evacuees has been given military protection. According to our agreement, the Pakistan forces were supposed to protect non-Muslim refugee camps and convoys in West Punjab. This has not been done adequately by them and because of this our task has grown greater and our forces have been stretched to the utmost. They have not grudged the strain. Everything that can be done is being done to discharge the obligations which we have assumed.

Another Pakistan Minister, Mr. Ghazanfar Ali Khan, is reported to have stated in an interview in Karachi, after a 21-day tour of the riot-affected areas in West Punjab only, that well over 100,000 casualties have occurred in East Punjab and about 10,000 in West Punjab. The figures of refugees mentioned by Mr. Ghazanfar Ali Khan are 1,100,000 from East Punjab to West Punjab and between 200,000 and 300,000 from West Punjab to East Punjab.

I am not aware on what data these figures are based; according to our information, they are completely wrong. No one can estimate even approximately at this stage the number of casualties, but we have some reason to believe that the casualties in West Punjab have been greater than in East Punjab. The figure of refugees, which is more accurately calculable, would appear to be roughly equal, at least so far, from both sides. About a million and a quarter have crossed the border from either side.

I do not wish to say anything that will add to the dangers of an atmosphere already surcharged with passion, and of a situation fraught with tragedy. We desire and seek nothing but a rapid restoration of peace and the establishment, on lasting foundations, of amity between Pakistan and India.

That has been the steadfast purpose and endeavour of my colleagues and myself; it will remain so. I can only say, and I say it with profound regret, that statements of the kind on which I have had to comment do not advance the cause of peace or friendship.

Aide Memoire Prepared by Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru and handed over to Pakistan Prime Minister Liaquat Ali Khan on September 19, 1947 and a copy was sent to the British Prime Minister Attlee on September 24.

New Delhi, September 19, 1947.

Representatives of the Governments of India and Pakistan as well as the Governments of East and West Punjab have met repeatedly and passed a number of resolutions. Complaints have been made that these resolutions have not been fully implemented on either side. These complaints can be inquired into. But apart from the implementation of directions given by higher authority, an important question arises as to the general policy being pursued by the respective Governments. Unless there is full understanding and a belief in the sincerity of that policy on either side, it is not likely that any implementation will take place.

2. Without entering into past history and matters of controversy it is clear that on both sides of the Punjab as well as elsewhere many horrible things have happened and people have misbehaved. On the part of the Government of India we have both admonished our own people and taken action against them. On the part of the Pakistan Government no such thing has been done and it has been made to appear that all the fault lay with the Government and people of India, that the Government and people of Pakistan were blameless. This kind of attitude is not only utterly wrong and opposed to facts, but is also very irritating and leads people to think that the responsible authorities of the Pakistan Government are not sincere in their policy or statements.

3. Members of the Government of India and others in responsible positions have scrupulously avoided saying anything in public which might worsen the situation. They have not indulged in recrimination and such statements as have been made have been deliberately worded moderately so as to avoid offence. On the other hand, Mr. M. A. Jinnah’s recent statement confined itself to condemning in strong language happenings in East Punjab and Delhi and did not even mention what had happened in West Punjab, the Frontier and elsewhere in Pakistan. This statement was completely one-sided. Mr. Ghazanfar Ali Khan’s utterances have been bellicose and totally irresponsible. Sir Zafarullah Khan’s recent statement was amazing as coming from a representative of the Pakistan Government to the United Nations Assembly He adopted a warlike threatening attitude. Speeches and utterances like these necessarily increase the tension between the two countries and lead people to think that the real policy of Pakistan is not to promote peace but further conflict.
4. Newspapers appearing in Pakistan, notably Dawn in Karachi and the Zamindar in Lahore, as well as many other papers, have been full not only of the vilest accusations which have no basis in fact but also of threats of war and extermination of the Sikhs. The attention of the Pakistan authorities have been drawn to these previously, but no action appears to have been taken. The natural inference is that all this is in furtherance of a set policy by the Pakistan Government. If that is so, then there is not much point in carrying on conversations at high levels and coming to decisions which are negatived by this baseless propaganda. At one of the Joint Conferences it was decided to have concentration camps for armed bands. The East Punjab Government has passed an ordinance authorizing these to be done. Apparently West Punjab Government has taken no steps.

5. The East Punjab Government and the United Provinces Government have repeatedly imposed collective fines on villagers. No such fines have been imposed in West Punjab. Some months ago fines amounting to Rs.3,000,000 were imposed in Rawalpindi district. Apparently these fines have been remitted. Thus no real action is taken to punish evil-doers.

6. Repeatedly Indian troops and police have taken strong action against individuals or groups who have attacked camps, convoys or places of residence of Muslims. Heavy casualties have often been inflicted. The action taken by the West Punjab Government has been exceedingly feeble in such matters.

7. In his telegram, dated 17th September 1947, Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan stated that evacuees from West Punjab were moving peacefully in large numbers while evacuees from East Punjab were not moving at all. At the Lahore Conference this subject was fully discussed and it was made perfectly clear that we were doing our utmost to expedite the despatch of Muslim evacuees and otherwise, more especially the big Muslim convoy from Jullundur was being fully protected and expedited. The reason for a slight delay was explained. Actually the convoy moved the very first day via the Canal Road. Owing to heavy rain later this road became difficult and it was decided that in order to avoid delay the rest of the convoy should be taken via Amritsar with sufficient protection. Also the Bulldozed Road skirting Amritsar was rapidly made. Actually the convoy is passing through and we have now got three roads to be used alternately or simultaneously:

1. Canal Road
2. Bulldozed Road
3. Via Amritsar

8. It is clear from this that everything possible has been done to take the Muslim convoy to West Punjab. There has been no real delay. We are also giving the fullest protection. Protection given to non-Muslim convoys from West Punjab is totally inadequate and they have been repeatedly attacked. Only recently these convoys have suffered heavy casualties at Balloke Head. In our anxiety to expedite and give full protection to the Muslim convoys from East to West Punjab we have used up 98 % of our forces in East Punjab for this purpose. The West Punjab Government, however, in spite of their agreement with us, have not provided any protection what-soever for non-Muslim convoys in West Punjab. We claim to have done our utmost to fulfill our obligations. The West Punjab Government has not done so.

9. Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan refers to the lack of medical attention and food among the Muslim refugees in East Punjab. He gives no instances and mentions no place.

10. As long ago as the 22nd August it was pointed out to the Pakistan authorities that there was a serious lack of food in East Punjab and they were requested to send foodstuffs which were due from the West Punjab to the East as the East is a deficit area and the West is a surplus. It was suggested that this could be adjusted later. We have tried our best to make our food go as far as possible.

11. It is surprising that in spite of the full explanation given and the real facts of the situation in regard to the Muslim convoys and the steady flow of Muslim evacuees from East Punjab, a threat is given that the lives of non-Muslim evacuees in West Punjab are in danger presumably as a kind of retaliation. It has been made perfectly clear on our side that we have strained our resources to the utmost to facilitate evacuation of Muslim refugees.

12. As for the statement that lawlessness prevails in Amritsar district and town, if serious occurrences are a test of lawlessness, far more have occurred on the West Punjab side. Recently among the non-Muslim refugees coming from Pakistan to Amritsar there were a number of men and women who have been stripped naked. Others had been searched rigorously and deprived of their belongings. The sight of these refugees and more specially the naked women infuriated people in Amritsar. Many other incidents have taken place as well as reports of attacks made on the non-Muslim camps and convoys. There are cases of refugees having had no food for several days and no adequate protection. Even now the huge convoy of 400,000 which is moving for East Punjab is not sufficiently protected. It is vulnerable and there is a danger of heavy casualties.

13. It is not understood what Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan means by saying that he cannot believe the excuse that troops are not available. We are not presenting any excuses to be accepted but are presenting facts in a co-operative way to further a common task. If the attitude in regard to these conversations and communications is not friendly, then there is no particular purpose in having these conversations. Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan knows that we have been anxious to get back our troops from the Frontier Province and have repeatedly asked for it. It has not been our fault if there has been delay in their transfer. A majority of them are on their way to India now and they will, no doubt, be used to the best advantage. It must be stressed, however, that we cannot use up nearly all our troops in protecting Muslim convoys and in allowing non-Muslim convoys, which should be properly protected by the Pakistan Government, to face serious peril and danger.

14. Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan refers to the Indian Government’s responsibility in the Sikh States. He should be aware that under the terms of agreement and accession, the internal affairs of the States are not within the scope of the Indian Government. Nevertheless, we have been doing our utmost to impress upon the States that they should carry out the general policy agreed upon between the Indian and Pakistan Governments and we have intervened on numerous occasions in this matter.

15. In regard to the Pakistan employees and their families in Simla, steps are being taken to evacuate them to Pakistan.

16. Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan has suggested that I should make Amritsar my headquarters. I shall certainly go to Amritsar whenever need arises. But the control of operations generally rests in Delhi and I can be of more service by being in touch with these operations in Delhi than by cutting my-self away from them. We are trying to keep in constant touch with the East Punjab Government and one of our Ministers is likely to spend much of his time in East Punjab.

17. Numerous reports from West Punjab indicate that the situation there has greatly deteriorated and the condition of non-Muslim evacuees is very grave and full of danger. They have not got adequate protection and repeated attacks are made upon them. These attacks have been made at Balloke Head where casualties are said to number 500, at Dhaban Singh (casualties 60) and at Sacha Sauda. A train from Mia Channu which arrived at Lahore on the 16th afternoon had 12 casualties as well as one Gurkha escort killed and two wounded. A M.T. convoy escorted by Muslims going to Amritsar and carrying non-Muslim evacuees was attacked at the railway crossing in Lahore, casualties exceeding 15 killed and 30 injured. Sardar Bahadur Charanjit Singh, a retired railway official, was shot dead on the 18th morning near Ganga Ram Hospital. Reports from outlying districts of West Punjab indicate that the conditions are very bad. All this shows a state of lawlessness and lack of adequate protection which prevail in West Punjab.
18. It was decided on the 14th September that there should be no searches of evacuee camps or convoys. Subsequently, however, there was a thorough search at Wah station when everything, including cash, clothes, ornaments and licensed arms were taken away in spite of protests and a reference to the joint statement issued at Lahore. Searches have also taken place at Jhelum. At Wah it is reported that no food has been given at the camp for 4 days, nor has any food been provided for a month. Clothes were taken away by the camp people.

19. From among other places reports have come that licensed arms have been taken away by the West Punjab police. This is against the agreement arrived at some time ago, and these arms should be returned.

20. The position in D.I. Khan is stated to be desperate for the non-Muslim evacuees. It is reported that they are getting no food, and recently there was an attack upon them involving considerable casualties. Apparently, they have no adequate protection.

21. In Sind the situation is said to be progressively deteriorating. At Hyderabad station 15,000 people are reported to be waiting. These persons are said to be humiliated by the police and the National Guards, and various articles, including clothes, have been confiscated.

22. In West Punjab and Sind forcible conversions are reported to have taken place in very large numbers.

23. Reliable reports have reached us that tribal people from the North West Frontier have been brought, fully armed, in large numbers on motor transport to western Punjab. These H.T. convoys carrying them passed through Hasan Abdal and these tribal folks proclaimed loudly that they are going to invade eastern Punjab and they shouted “Chalo Delhi”. Their numbers are estimated at 50,000 or more. This act of bringing armed tribal people near the border can only lead to the conclusion that the Pakistan Government has unfriendly intentions towards India and is planning raids or some kind of a coup.

24. Government of India have raised no objection to the stationing of Pakistan representatives in any number in India. It is clear that the situation in the North West Frontier Province is very abnormal and full of danger to the non-Muslim inhabitants there. News does not come from that Province in any regular fashion and only recently there was a riot at D.I. Khan. In other places also the situation is very critical. The refusal for a Deputy High Commissioner to go there leads one to suspect that there is something to hide and there is fear of exposure. It was stated that a Deputy High Commissioner would require some kind of guard. While this may be true, that surely is not an excuse for objecting to his presence.
Indeed it is all the more reason for some representative of the Government of India to be there to help and soothe people there who look to that Government for relief.

25. When this proposal was first made, it was accepted by the Pakistan Government in principle although the name suggested was not approved of. Another name was then suggested and it was only then that objection in principle was raised. Later, in conversation with Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan, even this name was agreed to. But, subsequently, the Prime Minister of the North West Frontier Province raised difficulties. The Pakistan Government will, no doubt, appreciate that this objection to the stationing of our Deputy High Commissioner in Peshawar will not be considered a friendly act by the Indian Government and will increase the suspicions and apprehensions of our people.

26. When Sardar Abdur Rab Nishtar came to Delhi he was given a draft announcement regarding the evacuation which it was proposed to issue jointly by the Governments of India and Pakistan. This formal suggestion was made on behalf of the Government of India. But strangely enough no reply came from Pakistan. We are now informed that the matter has not even been considered yet by the Pakistan Cabinet. This delay in dealing with a vital matter does not lead to the conclusion that the Pakistan Government is applying itself seriously to the problems which have been jointly discussed so often.

27. Mr. Chundrigar, the Minister for Commerce in the Pakistan Government, has recently refused to give clearance to our shipping in Karachi on the ground that they must not go to Kathiawar port but must proceed direct to Bombay. This limitation and obstruction of our shipping plans appears totally uncalled for. The ships we intended sending were special chartered ships for the removal of evacuees and they did not interfere with the regular line.

28. We have been supplying vaccines to the Pakistan Government. A further order for a very large quantity has now been received. It is not clear why such a large quantity is needed and how it is going to be used. Is it going to be used for the non-Muslim evacuees among whom cholera has already broken out? In one of the joint statements of the two Governments it was stated that public institutions should be specially considered as trust property and allowed to function. We understand, however, that difficulties are being placed in the way of the Ganga Ram Hospital in Lahore.

New Delhi, September 22, 1947.

A conference was held in New Delhi on September 19 and 20 between the representatives of the Dominion Governments of India and Pakistan at which the following were present:

Government of India: The Prime Minister, Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru, Deputy Prime Minister, Sardar Patel, Sardar Baldev Singh, Dr. John Matthai, Mr. C. H. Bhabha, Mr. K. C. Neogy.—

Government of Pakistan: The Prime Minister, Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan and Mr. Ghulam Mohammad.

Frank Discussions

There were full and frank discussions and many complaints received by either Government were considered. Explanations were given or inquiries were promised to be made in regard to them. Regrettable incidents had taken place in both West and East Punjab and elsewhere. It was decided that details of these should be communicated by one Government to the other and it was agreed that these should be investigated and the persons found guilty should be drastically punished.

The two Governments were in complete accord that they should co-operate in the establishment of peaceful conditions. Any conception of conflict between India and Pakistan was repugnant not only on moral grounds but because any such conflict would result in disaster to both. The two Governments would, therefore, work, to the utmost to their capacity to remove causes of conflict and to reduce, as rapidly as possible, both, the area and intensity of the present communal conflict. In particular, it was decided that statements by responsible persons, which are either bellicose or one-sided, and which lead to irritation and ill-will, should be avoided.

It was pointed out that certain newspapers were giving publicity to completely false reports and writing editorials of a highly inflammatory nature. It was agreed that the Governments concerned should take steps to prevent the publication of such false and inflammatory material.

In order to maintain close contact between the Governments to facilitate joint consideration of problems, it was decided that frequent meetings should take place between the Ministers of the two Governments alternately in Delhi and Lahore. The Prime Minister of Pakistan stated that he proposed to make Lahore his headquarters till such time as conditions became more settled in the Punjab.
Movement of Convoys

The conference considered the issues of policy arising out of the movement of convoys in evacuees from East to West Punjab and from West to East Punjab and agreed on the following joint declaration. The situation in the Punjab has developed in such a way that a mass movement of Muslims from East Punjab and of non-Muslims from West Punjab is taking place.

The Governments of India and Pakistan have, therefore, decided that the movement of these people from East to West Punjab and vice versa is to have first priority. They have agreed to co-operate with each other on this matter to the fullest extent and to take all steps to ensure that the movements in both directions are completed with the greatest possible speed and with the fullest measure of security.

Both Governments appeal for the co-operation of every member of the public in this matter. Violence begets violence and it cannot be too strongly emphasized that any interference with the movement in either direction will inevitably delay and imperil the movement in the opposite direction. Consequently any persons who may attempt such interference will, in effect, grievously, injure their own people.

The Governments of India and Pakistan are resolved to use all available resources to expedite and secure the safety on these movements: and they have armed themselves with the most drastic powers to ensure that those found guilty are summarily dealt with in the severest manner.
0010. Cable of Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru to Pakistan Prime Minister Liaquat Ali Khan.

New Delhi, September 23, 1947.

The High Commissioner of the United Kingdom has handed over to me copies of messages which have passed between you and the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom. I have read these messages with considerable amazement. Your telegrams to the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom contain a one-sided and exaggerated account of what has happened with which we cannot agree. But what has surprised me even more is the fact that you made no mention of this correspondence to any of us in Delhi on the occasion of last meeting. Your last telegram to the U. K. Prime Minister is dated 18th. You met me on the 19th and 20th and made no reference whatever to these messages. Further, the decisions we arrived at on the 19th were opposed in spirit and letter to the request you have made to the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom. I do not wish to discuss this matter any further at this stage, but I must point out to you that the whole purpose of representatives of the two Dominions meeting together and frankly discussing the situation and coming to conclusions is frustrated when other activities are carried on without our knowledge. This can lead to lack of faith and confidence and to the inference that no real value is attached to our conferences and decisions.

It seems to me that the only effective way to deal with this important situation that has arisen is for the Governments to have open and frank dealings with each other and cooperate in restoring peace and order. This has indeed been the policy declared repeatedly. Any outside intervention may actually be harmful because we would look to others for relief and not to ourselves. No outsider can solve our problems which are mainly psychological at present.

It is in this context that we have given our earnest consideration to your proposal about observers from U.N.O. being invited to India. It is not clear what the functions of these observers will be and it is obvious that it will take some considerable time before they can even function. It is quite possible that such a move may lead to greater difficulties being created in the way of the psychological understanding of the situation. We are anxious and eager to have impartial investigation whenever necessary. But such investigation should be entrusted to Indians whose impartiality cannot be doubted. Both Governments may nominate Indians who neither Hindu nor Muslim nor Sikh, or both can nominate judicial office who can tour together and report on various incidents. Such a procedure will not introduce any further complications, such as reference to foreign authorities or individuals might do.

New Delhi, September 24, 1947.

Your High Commissioner delivered to me last Sunday copies of the communications that have originated between you and Prime Minister of Pakistan. Beginning with latter's telegram to you dated 10th September 1947 and, ending with your telegram dated 20th September. I have handed to Sir Terence Shone for transmission to you by telegram (A) the text of an aide-memoire which I handed to Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan on 19th September which gives our appreciation of recent tragic events and (B) an agreed statement of the agreement as reached at a conference which some of my colleagues and I had with Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan and his Finance Minister on the same date. The Pakistan Prime Minister's account of happenings is so one-sided that I feel compelled to take steps to point out that the murder, arson, looting and offences against women of which he complains were begun in the Punjab by Muslims last March in Malaga and have continued practically without intermission though with varying intensity in West Punjab ever since. They are the result of two-nation theory and its concomitant doctrine of hate which Muslim League has been sedulously preaching for years.

In his telegram of September 16th, Prime Minister of Pakistan has asserted that Government of India are apparently unwilling or powerless to restore order. In his telegram of 18th he has stated "promises made, assurances given by Indian Government have not been translated into directions or schemes." Best answer to these charges is provided by prominent Muslims. On September 18th, day on which Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan's secret telegram was dispatched, Mr. Khaliquazzaman, one of the influential members of Working Committee of Muslim League, said: "It is not correct to say that Government of India are responsible for what has happened in spite of them and their efforts. It should be realized by Muslims of Pakistan that the whole prestige of Congress Government as well as Congress organization is involved in present struggle to restore peace in the country and Congress Ministries at the Centre and in the Provinces are striving hard to shoulder it."

On 19th the acting High Commissioner for Pakistan in New Delhi said: "The first thing that I wish to make clear is that no representative of Pakistan desires in any way directly or indirectly to question any measures that the Government of India considers desirable for restoring law and order. All Muslims believe that Mahatma Gandhi, Pandit Nehru and Mr. Neogy, in fact, all members of the Government, are genuinely anxious that existing panic should disappear; also that refugee camps are properly looked after."
2. In Para 5 of your telegram to Prime Minister of Pakistan dated the 15th September, you have said: “Nothing can help so much as continued contact, frank discussion and cooperation between the two governments, and encouraged by their conduct, similar attitude among their people.” That this has been both our policy and practice ever since the present troubles began. On our side, we have honestly and consistently endeavoured to act according to this policy. You can well understand, therefore, my surprise, not unmixed with resentment, that, even during our last meeting which took place on the 20th, Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan should not even have mentioned to me privately and personally the fact that he had been in communication with you and had suggested a conference with Commonwealth representatives. I confess the procedure adopted by him has been most extraordinary and, so far as I am aware, is without precedent in the history of Commonwealth relations. Both in our public utterances and in our private discussions with Pakistan Ministers, my colleagues and I have observed candour, forbearance and restraint. It is not my purpose to make suggestions on anyone. You must draw your own inferences from secrecy observed by Prime Minister of Pakistan regarding his correspondence with you.

3. In his telegram of September 10th the Prime Minister of Pakistan urged that the Government of United Kingdom, along with other members of Commonwealth, should immediately consider effective ways and means of saving the gravest situation in India which presents a serious threat not only to peace of this great sub-continent but that of whole world. As you will observe from agreed statement of conclusions reached by our conference with Prime Minister of Pakistan and his Finance Minister on 19th “any conception of a war between Pakistan and India is abhorrent, not merely on moral ground but for the reason that any such conflict would spell ruin to both of them”. We are convinced of the truth of this declaration and determined to adhere to it. If Government of Pakistan are similarly disposed, there should be no question of a war between the two Dominions. It follows that there should be no need to convene a conference of Commonwealth Ministers to discuss a contingency which, we are both determined, shall not arise.

4. Such a conference could therefore only consider ways and means of dealing with present situation, which is not one of war between two Dominions but of communal strife, over which appeals to reason and action of forces of law and order, at least in Dominion of India, are rapidly asserting themselves. In reference to East Punjab and in Delhi, the situation, though still difficult in parts, has materially improved. In the other provinces of the Dominion of India, the Provincial Governments have, throughout the disturbances, managed to maintain law and order; they have both the will and, I believe, the means to continue to do so. Our major anxiety now is for the safety of non-Muslim evacuees from West Punjab and certain other parts of Pakistan who have not yet been able to move into safety of our borders. This is a problem of protection and transportation which only the two Dominion Governments can solve by the fullest cooperation at all levels. The resettlement and rehabilitation of refugees who have moved from one Dominion into the other is a problem to be handled by each Government separately. We have created a special Ministry for this purpose and, although, considering the very large numbers involved, our task will not be easy. This is not a responsibility the discharge of which need involve a threat to either Dominion.

5. Both of the problems are involved and their magnitude is such that no outside intervention, however well meant, could provide an effective solution. Physical measures, including the use of force to suppress disorder, however important, cannot be sufficient to quell an upheaval which is fundamentally psychological. On both sides of the border, the mind of the mass in it has been stirred and inflamed by gruesome deeds but, even more, by spirit of revenge which such deeds have aroused. Only leaders of communities, in both Dominions, can restore tranquility among the vast majority of their followers by appeals to goodwill and by practice of forbearance and restraint. At this stage, any discussion of the situation on a multinational plane outside India will only serve to revive controversy and to rekindle passions. For these reasons, and not from any desire to reject consultation or cooperation with the other Commonwealth Governments, I find myself unable to agree to the idea of convening a special conference with Commonwealth Governments to review or to deal with the present situation in India.

6. In the early stages of the disturbances, we were so completely occupied in dealing with a situation at once grave and fluid that it was not possible to keep representatives of friendly powers in Delhi informed of developments from day to day. But for over ten days now, military spokesmen have been holding conferences, to which heads of missions in Delhi have a standing invitation and which, at their own request, have now been reduced to two a week. For the information of the Commonwealth Governments, I shall now arrange that, hereafter, all official reports that we receive from our representatives in Pakistan and from our own officials in India should be communicated to the United Kingdom, the Canadian, and the Australian High Commissioners. This will enable the Governments of these countries to maintain an up-to-date picture of events in the disturbed areas. New Zealand and South Africa have no representatives in Delhi, but I shall be happy if you or Secretary of State for Commonwealth Relations will keep them informed also.

7. Since you have communicated to Prime Ministers of the Dominions the text of the correspondence that has passed between you and the Prime Minister of Pakistan, I would request text of my message to you, and of other papers referred to in paragraph one of this message, should also be telegraphed to them and, of course, to the Prime Minister of Pakistan.

8. This and my immediately preceding telegram will be sent to Karachi by air mail on the 24th.

0012. Cable of Pakistan Prime Minister Liaquat Ali Khan to Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru.

YOUR TELEGRAM REGARDING CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN (us) AND PRIME MINISTER OF UNITED KINGDOM. I NOTE THAT YOU DO NOT AGREE WITH MY ACCOUNT OF HAPPENINGS IN PUNJAB AND ELSEWHERE. YOUR OWN ACCOUNT AS GIVEN IN THE AIDE-MEMOIRE WHICH WAS HANDED TO ME IMMEDIATELY BEFORE CONFERENCE ON 19 SEPTEMBER IN DELHI IS REPLETE WITH UTTERLY UNFOUNDED ALLEGATIONS AND INSINUATIONS. I AM REPLACING TO THAT AIDE-MEMOIRE SEPARATELY AS I STATED AT THE TIME THAT I COULD NOT BE EXPECTED TO DEAL WITH IT WITHOUT FURTHER EXAMINATION AND INVESTIGATION.

2. THE CONFERENCES WE HAVE HAD SO FAR HAVE SERVED A USEFUL BUT LIMITED PURPOSE. AS I STATED IN MY TELEGRAM OF 9 SEPTEMBER TO YOU THE HAPPENINGS IN EAST PUNJAB AND IN DELHI ARE THE RESULT OF A PREARRANGED PLAN BY THE SIKHS AND CERTAIN OTHER ELEMENTS TO WIPE OUT MUSLIMS SECTOR BY SECTOR. I TRIED TO DRAW THE ATTENTION OF YOUR GOVERNMENT TO THIS ASPECT OF THE MATTER MANY A TIME AND STATED IN MY TELEGRAM TO YOU OF 12 SEPTEMBER THAT WE MUST COME TO GRIP WITH BASIC ISSUE WHICH IS DETERMINATION TO LIQUIDATE MUSLIMS IN EAST PUNJAB. I MUST SAY THAT YOUR GOVERNMENT HAS NOT BEEN PREPARED TO FACE THIS ISSUE WITH THE RESULT THAT CONFERENCES BETWEEN US SERVED ONLY TO MITIGATE ITS EVIL EFFECTS TO A CERTAIN EXTENT BUT DID NOT REMOVE ROOT CAUSE OF ALL THE TROUBLES. THE MAIN OUTCOME OF THESE
3. It was because we wanted to remain in continuous touch with you to secure your utmost cooperation that we repeatedly asked that joint conference of both governments should be held at highest level to devise joint measures. The Lahore conferences of 29 August and 3 September, the Lahore conference of 14 September and the Delhi conference of 19 September were all held at our request which shows that we have tried to do our very best in way of mutual consultation.

4. As I have said above results of achievements although useful were limited and in our intense anxiety to restore law and order and save thousands of innocent lives and misery to millions we felt that what had not been achieved by consultations between the two governments might be possible of achievement if the representatives of all dominion governments and United Kingdom met in conference to discuss the whole matter and to devise ways and means of securing peace. This method was not to supplant but to supplement the joint conferences between us.

5. Regarding your complaint that I did not make a reference to this matter in our meeting on 19 and 20 September I should mention that we had already on 18 September asked Prime Minister of United Kingdom to bring the matter to notice of all dominions including of course India dominion and as such it was left to United Kingdom Prime Minister to transmit correspondence to you.

6. My object in suggesting neutral observers from outside was partly to have an impartial account of these disturbances so that accusations of onesided versions are avoided and partly to apply psychological pressure on people to be on their best behaviour. We regret that you do not approve proposal.

7. Both dominions have accepted the principle of impartial investigation. The next question is what the personnel of the investigation commission should be. You have raised objections to foreign authorities. On the other HAND THERE ARE OBVIOUS DIFFICULTIES IN THE WAY OF SELECTING PERSONNEL FROM WITHIN THE TWO DOMINIONS. WE HAVE ALREADY MADE A CONCRETE PROPOSAL THAT REPRESENTATIVES OF ALL THE DOMINIONS SHOULD MEET IMMEDIATELY AND THINK OUT WAYS AND MEANS OF BEST COURSE TO BE ADOPTED. THIS CONFERENCE SHOULD ALSO CONSIDER THE QUESTION OF APPOINTMENT OF AN IMPARTIAL COMMISSION AND ITS PERSONNEL. I TRUST YOU WILL BE ABLE TO AGREE TO THIS PROPOSAL.

8. LET ME ASSURE YOU AGAIN THAT WE HAVE ALWAYS BEEN READY AND EVEN NOW ARE READY AND WILLING TO DO ALL WE CAN BY COMMON EFFORT AND JOINT CONSULTATION AND CO-OPERATION TO RESTORE PEACE AND MAINTAIN LAW AND ORDER.

New Delhi, September 30, 1947.

Please refer to your telegram dated 28 September. I shall not comment upon it in detail, but would limit myself to two points:

(i) In paragraph 4 you say that a conference of representatives of the U.K. and of the Dominions, including India and Pakistan, might help to devise ways and means of securing peace between India and Pakistan. Since in our joint statement of 20 September we have both agreed that the very idea of war between the two Dominion Governments is abhorrent morally and likely to prove ruinous to both, I do not see how the question of a breach of peace rises as between the two Governments. The problem which we have to face is mainly psychological and can hardly be dealt with by people, who, however well-intentioned, can, in the very nature of things, exercise little influence on mass opinion whether Hindu, Muslim or Sikh. It is a problem essentially to be dealt with by leaders and representatives of the two Dominions. India and Pakistan alone can solve and to that end bend all their energies. Your suggestion that the conference should devise ways and means of dealing with the present disturbances involves a considerable delay. A conference of the kind that you envisage will take some time to convene and our other efforts might thereby be halted or weakened meanwhile. The restoration of order and normal relations between the communities in both Dominions is a problem of such urgency that its solution can brook no delay.

(ii) In paragraph 7 you suggest that the conference which you propose should also consider the question of the appointment of an impartial commission and its personnel. This is a new suggestion and I am unable to understand what the functions of the commission would be. Such commissions in the past have taken inordinate time and ended without producing any results.

Lahore, October 7, 1947.

Only 54 days have passed since Pakistan came into being. In the history of nations and States, 54 days are but a moment. Yet it was the will of God that in this short span of time Pakistan should face calamities and tribulations which might well have daunted many a State more seasoned and mature than we had the chance to be.

When a few days ago, the Quaid-e-Azam broadcast to you from Lahore, we were confronted mainly with the upheaval in the Punjab. Today we see Delhi and its environs added to the long and dreary list of towns and villages where the murderer has been at work and where life has been made impossible for the followers of Islam.

In these 54 days, the enemies of Pakistan have indulged in their black hatred to their full. But Pakistan stands undaunted. Their foul deeds have bred for us a host of problems each of them of gigantic proportions, but the people of Pakistan stand firm in their resolve to face all calamities with faith and courage.

Can we say, however, that in these dark days, none of us in Pakistan raised his hand in revenge and retaliation? We cannot, alas say this truthfully. Undoubtedly some among us fouled their hearts with the desire to retaliate and to match evil.

Perhaps, there are still some among us who following the dictates of their passions or giving ear to the promptings of others, nurse evil feelings in their bosom. If there are any such, it is for them that I address these words.
Agreement on Division

My countrymen, we neither desired nor expected these bloody events to follow the attainment of Pakistan. The decision to divide the country was, after all, in the nature of a settlement which all parties had agreed to honour. We wished to render unto others what we wished them to render unto us, the right of a nation to live a life of peace, prosperity and self respect. To achieve this peace, for ourselves and for others, we even acquiesced in decisions and awards which we strongly felt to be less than just and less than fair.

We ardently wished, on the achievement of Pakistan, to put all bitterness and bickering behind us and apply ourselves peacefully to the task of building up our State and to work for the welfare of our people. Was it not in the interest of a newly-born State that it should have peace within and peace without in order to grow to its full manhood? Or does anyone think we were so foolish as to wish our hands full with disorders and upheavals?

Who among us could desire that hundreds of thousands of our Muslim brethren beyond our borders should lose their homes, their lives, and be driven out of the land where they and their ancestors had lived for centuries, to flee into the wilderness in mortal terror? We neither desired, nor intended nor expected this horrible future for millions of human beings. But those who resented Pakistan and grudged its peace and prosperity did not hesitate to poison our life-blood. Let them know that we shall face our calamities with undiminished courage.

Overwhelming Obstacles

Pakistan has bent all its powers to this end and geared its entire administration to the task of overcoming the worst obstacles that may be put in our path. And by the grace of God we shall not fail. Today I am more certain than before that if we do not lose our faith in ourselves and cast all fear from our minds, this troubled phase of our national life will soon pass. We have to turn to our future without losing a single day or a single minute. For Pakistan is not a shooting star that shines for a brief moment. Pakistan will not die. It is a matter of greatest urgency, therefore, that we should soon get out of our present troubles and start to build.

In order to build; we must have peace. Therefore, those who talk to you of war and conflict are not your friends. Beware of them and stop counting your gains and your losses in the gamble of death and destruction. Turn your faces to the future. Those who whisper revenge and retaliation to you seek to lead our energies to waste and ruin. We have a great deal to do that is of that utmost importance to us.

We in the Government are firmly resolved to put down all disorder with a firm hand. Please help us in this, the greatest of all national duties today. Those who have the slightest political sense know that any conflict between the two Dominions is suicidal for both. You can be sure, therefore, that peace is just as important for India as it is for us and that those who disturb the peace across the border are stabbing their own country in the back. This is as plain as daylight to everyone who knows the barest elements of the situation. If we forget or ignore this truth, we shall be stabbing Pakistan in the back.

Also please remember that we have on many occasions taken the pledge before our conscience and before the world that Pakistan shall conduct itself according to the principles of tolerance. Justice and fair-play. Please look into your hearts and ask yourselves whether, you really tried; you have not forgotten the lesson that God and his Prophet taught the whole of mankind, whether your own calamities and sufferings have not made you callous to the sufferings of others.

I am putting this in particular to my fellow Muslims. The whole world knows that it is not we who did the greater wrong, but that is no great consolation to me.

I still consider it a disgrace for Pakistan that in certain parts of West Punjab the majority should have failed in their duty to protect the minorities.

Nor is the name of the Frontier Province, or for that matter of Baluchistan and Sind, entirely unsullied, even though the ugly incidents in these parts were comparatively minor. How dare I compare, you will explain, these lamentable but comparatively minor incidents, with the bestiality and revolting brutality that was let loose upon large tracts in India?

This argument, I am afraid, will not help us, for retaliation is to be condemned under all circumstances. I appeal to you, therefore, to desist from it. I say so not because if you did not desist you would be exposing fellow Muslims in the other Dominion to yet greater peril. To talk in terms of expediency in these days would be to disgrace our moral sense. I urge you to show tolerance, forbearance and to protect the weak and less numerous, because this is what we fought freedom for.

Did we not always intend to build Pakistan not on violence and aggression, but on the love of humanity and fair-play? Should we then trample these principles under feet because others are doing likewise? I know that those among you who are not blooded and have been embittered by their sufferings, will find my word unpalatable but I beg them to control themselves and to be quite sure that if we do not purge our heart of all feelings of revenge and violence, Pakistan will not be the country we longed for.

Dear Lord Mountbatten,

As you know, we have been trying our best to have meetings and conferences with representatives of the Pakistan Government. The conferences we held thus far have yielded some results. We have attached importance to maintaining these personal contacts at a high level. We have tried to bring together the Ministers and Governors of East and West Punjab. There were proposals for the exchange of information also between the two Provincial Governments.

The West Punjab Government has not cooperated to any appreciable extent in these attempts. For a considerable time the East Punjab Government sent them their situation reports, but the West Punjab Government did not send information from their side. The Governor of East Punjab complained about this repeatedly and he has again been drawing our attention to the fact that he does not get any reply from the Governor of West Punjab.

Recently we have put forward several proposals for some kind of joint functioning or joint consideration of problems by the East and West Punjab Governments. Mr. Neogy and Mr. Gopalaswami Ayyangar discussed these proposals day before yesterday at the Lahore conference and came back disappointed, as none of them were accepted. It seems clear from their report that the main obstacle in their way was Governor Mudie. Some of the West Punjab Ministers would agree to the proposals or would initiate it, but Sir Francis Mudie would reject it. It seems to be the set policy pursued by Governor Mudie, and apparently accepted by the Provincial Government, that they should have as little to do as possible with the East Punjab Government, or even representatives of the Dominion of India. I have reason to believe that Governor Mudie dislikes not only my going to Lahore or anyone else representing our Government.

This makes it difficult for any of us to thrust ourselves on the West Punjab Government. Personally, I have no desire to go to Lahore if this is the kind of reception that awaits me there, but this is not a personal matter and it is something which is having unfortunate consequences. Obviously, our difficulties will be far greater if contacts between the East and West Punjab and the two Dominions begin to fade away. Those contacts have thus far been maintained because of the mutual desire of the Ministers on both sides, but Sir Francis Mudie's likes and dislikes and the general policy he has pursued, is now making it difficult to continue these contacts. It was no pleasure to me to go to Lahore to meet him, as his past record in India has been one which has made him publicly disliked by large numbers of people. That record has been a destructive record and one of creating friction and preventing any united functioning. What his objective may be it is difficult for me to say. He has now gathered round himself some other retired British civil service men from the U.P. and the Punjab who have also gained in the past a most unenviable reputation. All this does not help.

I do not know if you can do anything in the matter. I am writing to you chiefly because I felt that you should know how I feel about this and because in future my going to Lahore may be affected by the attitude that Sir Francis Mudie has taken up. Unfortunately, what Sir Francis Mudie says or does influences public opinion and, somehow or other in the present tense state of affairs, affects Indian reactions to British officials. Quite wrongly they judge from individuals.

About a year ago I wrote a number of letters to Lord Wavell about Sir Francis Mudie who was then functioning as Governor of Sind. I pointed out that Governor Mudie had been guilty of misbehaviour and that he had acted improperly in many matters. I described this then as a public scandal. Lord Wavell agreed with me that Governor Mudie had acted wrongly, but he did not judge him quite so harshly as I did, or take any action in the matter. Now Mudie is functioning in West Punjab at a critical moment in the history of India and it is a matter of deep concern to me that he should be in a position to sabotage our efforts to settle our problems amicably. In the past, in my opinion and the opinion of many of my colleagues, he has done great injury for the cause of India and helped in sowing the seeds of disruption. The present is an even more dangerous time to experiment in this way.

Yours sincerely

Jawaharlal Nehru
0016. Press Note issued by the Government of Pakistan on the decisions of the Inter-Dominion Conference held at Lahore.

Lahore, October 9, 1947.

The proposal made by the representatives of India that some sort of a coordinating body should be set up at ministerial level to deal with the problems arising out of the existing state of affairs in the East and West Punjab was not accepted by the representatives of Pakistan who, however, agreed that as occasion arose meetings at provincial and administrative level might be held by the Ministers or officials concerned to discuss particular problems.

It was agreed on by both Dominions regarding the prohibition of searches of evacuees' convoys and evacuee camps should be implemented by provincial governments other than those of the East and West Punjab also.

The representatives of Pakistan accepted the proposal that persons sent by evacuees to move property from their premises in the West Punjab who might receive identification certificates from the India Deputy Commissioner at Lahore be allowed to remove that property.

The Pakistan representatives agreed to consider any concrete proposals regarding insurance companies put forward by the Government of India.

Evacuees' Property

It was agreed that both Governments should consider questions regarding the treatment of property left behind by evacuees and make proposals with the object of carrying out a common policy.

It was agreed that there should be very close co-operation between the custodians of evacuee property of the East and West Punjab.

The Pakistan representatives agreed to give to the Government of India copies of the discussions which the Minister of Finance, Pakistan had with the Lahore banks.

The representatives of India agreed to examine the circumstances in which the Deputy Commissioner, Ambala, induced all Muslims to leave their houses in 48 hours and communicate the result of their inquiry to the Government of Pakistan. They also agreed to look into the complaint that food and protection were not being given to Muslim evacuees in Ambala division.

The representatives of Pakistan agreed to examine the complaint regarding the feeding of evacuees in the NWFP if details of that complaint were supplied by the Government of India.
It was agreed by both Governments that the minimum guard and escort to be provided for district liaison officers was one and four.

Evacuation Plans

It was agreed that plans of evacuation will be prepared on the basis of the total figure of Muslim population in the East Punjab including non-Muslim states and the total figure of non-Muslim population in the West Punjab and NWFP. The figures of population will be based on 1941 census.

It was the responsibility of the East and West Punjab Governments to provide facilities and arrange for the evacuation of minorities leaving their areas and the two Governments should co-ordinate their plans to effect speedy evacuation.

The evacuee movement organizations of the two Governments should draw up within a week their joint plans for evacuation and then the representatives of the two Dominion Governments should meet to take final decision.

0017. Exchange of correspondence between the Pakistan High Commission in India and the Ministry of Home Affairs regarding reciprocal arrangement for officer of one Dominion arrested in the other.

No. PC/P/8 – 60 New Delhi, the 14th/15th October, 1947

Dear Sardar Patel,

Your letter of 13th October 1947 for which many thanks

2. I agree without any hesitation that there ought to be full reciprocity in the matter of treatment of the officers of one Government if they are arrested by another Government.

3. As far as I can see our reciprocal arrangements would cover the following points:-

(i) When any official is arrested, information should be supplied immediately to the High Commissioner or one of his representatives, stating the name of the officer, the circumstances in which the arrest has taken place and the charges against him.
In case the official or his Government is unable to arrange for his defence, the Government of the Dominion responsible for his arrest should arrange for defence and intimate the arrangements made to the Government official, as well as the High Commissioner.

If the High Commissioner or one of his representatives is in a position to produce any facts from which it would appear that the charges are of a vexatious character or are unfounded, the Government of the Dominion where the arrest has been made will take action to withdraw the case.

4. If you agree with the above, I will telegraph to my Government and obtain their concurrence.

Yours Sincerely

Sd/- Zahid Husain.

Hon’ble Sardar Vallabbhai Patel, Minister of Interior, Govt. of India,
New Delhi.

Letter from the Deputy Prime Minister Sardar Vallabbhai Patel to the Pakistan High Commissioner Zahid Hussain.

New Delhi, November 8, 1947.

Thank you for your letter No. PC/P/8 – 60 of the 15th October 1947. Official proposals regarding the reciprocal arrangement on the subject covered by our correspondence would now be made to you by the Home Ministry.

2. I am sorry it has not been possible for us to agree to item (iii) of para. 3 of your letter in the form in which you have stated it, but we would of course give every consideration to any representations which you might like to make on behalf of your officials and we hope that the same consideration would be extended to the representations from our High Commissioner in Pakistan.

Yours Sincerely,

(Vallabbhai Patel)

Zahid Husain, Esq.,
High Commissioner for Pakistan in India,

Government of India
Ministry of Home Affairs

From: R.N. Banerjee, Esquire, CSI, CIE, ICS.,
Secretary to the Government of India.

To: The High Commissioner for Pakistan in India,
New Delhi.

New Delhi, the 19/20th November, 1947.

Subject: Officers of Pakistan Government — arrested in India and vice versa – reciprocal arrangements regarding.

Sir,

I am directed to refer to the correspondence resting with the Demi–official letter from the Hon'ble the Home Minister dated the 8th November, 1947, and to say that the Government of India consider that the reciprocal arrangements that may be agreed to between the two Governments should extend to all officers of one Dominion who reside, whether on duty or on leave or otherwise, in the other Dominion.

2. The Government of India agree to item (i) of para. 3 of your letter No. PC/P/8 – 60 dated the 14th October, 1947.

3. As regards item (ii), the Govt. of India consider that the primary responsibility for making arrangements for defence should rest on the arrested officer, or failing him, on the High Commissioner concerned. The respective Governments should however give all reasonable facilities for that purpose.

4. That Hon'ble the Home Minister has already explained to you in his demi–official letter referred to above that it is not possible for the Government of India to agree to item (iii) of your letter in the form in which you have stated it, but that the Government of India will give every consideration to any representation which you might like to make on behalf of any of your officials.

5. The Government of India hope that you will place these proposals before your Government and intimate the result to the Government of India so that reciprocal arrangements on these lines may be entered into between the two Dominions.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your most obedient servant,
To
The Secretary to the Govt. of India,
Ministry of Home Affairs,
New Delhi.

Sub: Officers of Pakistan Government arrested in India and vice versa reciprocal arrangement regarding.

Sir,

I have the honour to invite a reference to the Government of India, Ministry of Home Affairs' letter No. 6744 – D/47 – Pol (I), dated 19th November, 1947 on the subject noted above

2. The Government of Pakistan agree to enter into reciprocal arrangement with the Government of India about item (i) of para 3 of my predecessor’s letter No. PC/P/8 -60 dated the 15th October 1947 to the Hon’ble the Home Minister. I enclose herewith a copy of the instructions which the Government of Pakistan have issued in this connection to their Provincial Governments; and request that I may kindly be furnished with a copy of the instructions which may be issued by the Govt. of India on the subject.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,

Your most obedient servant.

K. Shahabuddin
High Commissioner for Pakistan in India.

ENCLOSURE TO THE ABOVE LETTER:

From : The Secretary to the Govt. of Pakistan,
Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Commonwealth Relations,
Karachi.

To : The Chief Secretary to the Govt. of West Punjab
Govt. of N.W.F.P., Govt. of Sind
Govt. of the East Bengal
The Hon’ble the Agent to the Governor General and Chief Commissioner in Baluchistan.

There have been in the past, some cases of arrests of the officials of Pakistan in India and of the officials of India in Pakistan. On account of proximity of both these Dominions and conditions peculiar to them, it is likely that such cases will keep cropping up from time to time. With a view to extending as much assistance as possible to these officials, the Government of Pakistan suggested to the Govt. of India that their High Commissioner in India should be informed of the arrest, as soon as it takes place, of an official of Pakistan in India, with his name, circumstances under which the arrest took place and the charges against him. The Government of India express their readiness to accept this suggestion provided the Government of Pakistan adopted a similar procedure with regard to the officials of India, arrested in Pakistani. This arrangement was to cover all officials of one Dominion who reside, whether on duty or on leave or otherwise, in the other Dominion. The Government of Pakistan have accordingly authorized their High Commissioner in India to enter into an agreement with the Government of India on these lines. You are therefore requested kindly to inform this Ministry of the arrests, as soon as they take place, of the officials of the Government of India, in Pakistan with full particulars as indicated above, so that the High Commissioner for India in Pakistan may be informed accordingly.

Nasim Husain
for Secretary to the Govt. of Pakistan.
0018. Press Communique issued by the Indian Ministry of Information and Broadcasting announcing the adoption of the Voluntary Press Code contained in the Resolution of the All India Newspaper Editors Conference.

New Delhi, October 21, 1947.

The President of the Standing Committee of the All India Newspaper Editors Conference has forwarded to the Government of India the following resolution adopted at the meeting held in Bombay on October 11, 1947:

“1. The Standing Committee of the A.I.N.E.C. is of the opinion that the present multiplicity of Codes and Conventions obtaining in the Centre and the Provinces should be replaced by a general uniform convention to be followed throughout the Dominion of India. In pursuance of this and while the present emergency lasts and until the position is again reviewed in the light of experience, newspapers and news agencies shall be guided by the following Conventions in the treatment of news, comments and other matter, bearing in mind the need for the cultivation of harmonious relations between the various sections of the people and the paramount obligation of the Press to contribute in a positive way to the restoration and maintenance peaceful conditions in the country.

(a) All editorial comments, expression of opinion whether through statements, letters to the Editor, or in any other form, shall be restrained and free from scurrilous attacks against leaders or communities, and there shall be no incitement to violence.

(b) News of incidents involving loss of life, lawlessness, arson, etc. shall be described and reported in strictly objective terms and shall not be heavily displayed.

(c) Items of news calculated to make for peace and harmony and to help in the restoration and maintenance of law and order, shall be given prominence and precedence over other news.

(d) The greatest caution shall be exercised in the selection and publication of pictures, cartoons, poems, etc.

(e) Figures of casualties and names of communities shall not be mentioned in headlines.

(f) The source from which casualty figures are obtained shall always be indicated and no figures shall be circulated or published without the fullest possible verification.
(g) Nothing shall be published that is in conflict with the safety of the State.

2. Provincial Press Committees will be free to come to any working arrangements, not inconsistent with the above, with Provincial Governments.

3. As the conditions under which an Ad Hoc Committee was brought into being at Delhi at the instance of the Central Government no longer exist, the Ad Hoc Committee which has served its purposes, now lapses."

Consistent with their policy of allowing maximum possible freedom to the press and appreciating the value of a uniform code voluntarily adopted by its accredited representatives, the Government of India have decided to accept it as a working arrangement in the belief that it will help in the supreme task of the restoration and maintenance of peaceful conditions in the country. The Standing Committee have apparently come to the conclusion that the working of this voluntary code should be left to the good sense and responsibility of the Editors themselves rather than to a representative Central body of theirs. The Government of India accept this arrangement in the hope that all sections of the press throughout the Dominion will make a positive and determined effort to adhere to the code in spirit as well as in letter. They take this opportunity of thanking the members of the ad hoc Committee for their valuable cooperation and assistance in a delicate task.

The All India Newspaper Editor Conference, the Central press Advisory Committee and the Provincial Press Advisory Committees will continue to function and will receive the same recognition at the hands of the Central and Provincial Governments as heretofore.

Lahore, November 1, 1947.

[As recorded by Lord Mountbatten]

[Having made the excuse of Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan’s illness to enable me to take Pandit Nehru to Lahore for a joint Defence Council meeting, I felt it was essential that part of the J. D. C. meeting should take place in Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan’s presence. On arrival at Lahore, however, I discovered that he was still too ill to come to Government House. I, therefore, got rid of 24 of the 26 items on the agenda with Mr. Nishtar as the Pakistan Government’s representative, and then the whole J. D. C. moved down to the Pakistan Prime Minister’s House and continued the meeting in his bedroom. Liaquat was sitting up with a rug round his knees still looking very ill.]

[After the two controversial items had been disposed off everyone left the room excepting Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan, Lord Ismay and myself.]

I began by giving him the statement by the Indian Chiefs of Staff on the sequence of events in Kashmir which I took back from him after he had read it.

I then proceeded to explain the position as I saw it, beginning with the accession of Junagadh and going on through the whole history of the Kashmir situation.

As so much of this is the same as I was later to repeat to Mr. Jinnah, it is not recorded at length.

The burden of Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan’s contention was that the Maharaja had categorically refused any form of negotiations or even discussions with Pakistan and that he had brought about a serious situation by allowing his Hindus, and in particular his State forces, to massacre Muslims in the Poonch and Mirpur areas and across the border of Jammu.

This had been more than the tribes could stand and this was the origin of their raid on Srinagar.

I asked him whether he expected us to believe that Afridis and Mahsuds could have come from beyond Peshawar in motor transport without the Government of Pakistan being at least aware of this. He did not deny knowledge of the movement but defended himself by saying that if they had made any attempt to interfere with the movement of tribes in their own buses this would have precipitated trouble with the rest of the tribes on the Frontier.
I told him that my Government were quite sincere in their offer of a plebiscite, and showed him the draft formula which would also cover Junagadh.

Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan appeared to be very depressed and almost disinclined to make any further effort to avoid war. Lord Ismay and I did our best to cheer him up, the former pointing out that, if the leaders on either side abandoned hope of peace, all was indeed lost.

As time was getting on and as Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan looked very tired, we said we would go back to lunch with Mr. Jinnah at Government House and after discussion with him, we would, if he wished, come back and continue our conversation with the Prime Minister. This he gladly accepted and bade us a very friendly au revoir.

MOUNTBATTEN’S DISCUSSION WITH MR. JINNAH, DATED 1 NOVEMBER 1947

INTRODUCTION

In the course of 3 1/2 hours of the most arduous and concentrated conversation, Kashmir took up most of the time Junagadh took next place and Hyderabad the least. We darted about between these three subjects as well as talking about the over-all policy affecting States. I have divided this note into four parts, although this was not necessarily the order in which the subjects discussed nor of course were all the remarks made consecutively.

PART I: INDIA’S POLICY TOWARDS STATES WHOSE ACCESSION WAS IN DISPUTE

I pointed out the similarity between the cases of Junagadh and Kashmir and suggested that plebiscites should be held under UNO as soon as conditions permitted. I told Mr. Jinnah that I had drafted out in the aeroplane a formula which I had not yet shown to my Government but to which I thought they might agree. This was the formula:

“The Governments of India and Pakistan agree that, where the ruler of a State does not belong to the community to which the majority of his subjects belong, and where the State has not acceded to that Dominion whose majority community is the same as the State’s, the question of whether the State should finally accede to one or the other of the Dominions should in all cases be decided by an impartial reference to the will of the people.”

Mr. Jinnah’s first observation was that it was redundant and undesirable to have a plebiscite when it was quite clear that States should go according to their majority population, and if we would give him the accession of Kashmir he would offer to urge the accession of Junagadh direct to India.

I told him that my Government would never agree to change the accession of a state against the wishes of the ruler or the Government that made the accession unless a plebiscite showed that the particular accession was not favoured by the people.

Mr. Jinnah then went on to say that he could not accept a formula if it was so drafted as to include Hyderabad, since he pointed out that Hyderabad did not wish to accede to either Dominion and he could not be a party to coercing them to accession.

I offered to put in some reference to States whose accession was in dispute “to try and get round the Hyderabad difficulty” and he said that he would give that his careful consideration if it was put to him.

I then pointed out that he really could not expect a principle to be applied in the case of Kashmir if it was not applied in the case of Junagadh and Hyderabad, but that we naturally would not expect him to be a party to compulsory accession against the wishes of the Nizam.

PART II: HYDERABAD

I told Mr. Jinnah how much I regretted that at this serious moment he should have been compromised by the behaviour of the Ittehad-ul-Muslmīn’s delegation to Karachi:

He asked me what I meant. I told him that the two delegates, Yamin Zuberi and his companion, who had been reported by the Press as having seen him in Karachi had returned to Hyderabad and were alleged to have influenced the Nizam into going back on his word to accept the stand-still agreement which his Executive Council had passed by six votes to three. The inference had been drawn that they had carried a message to H. E. H. from Mr. Jinnah, and that this was the case of the latter’s reversal of his decision.

Mr. Jinnah assured me categorically that he had merely seen these two men out of courtesy, for a matter of five or perhaps seven minutes. They had told him that H. E. H. was about to sign an Instrument of Accession to India and they begged Mr. Jinnah to intervene. Mr. Jinnah had replied that it was outside his power to intervene and that it was only a question for the Nizam and his own Government to decide.

I then recounted to Mr. Jinnah briefly the events which Sir Sultan Ahmed had related to me on 31 October, and Lord Ismay substantiated this account from a letter he had received from Sir Walter Monckton.
Mr. Jinnah once more affirmed most solemnly that he had nothing whatever to do with the recent reversal of the Nizam's decision. He had sent no verbal message whatsoever to Hyderabad. The advice he had tendered to H. E. H. in writing some time ago was that he was between the devil and the deep blue sea. If he acceded to India, there would be bloodshed in Hyderabad; and if he did not accede, there would equally be bloodshed. Thus an agreement, but not accession, seemed to be the only hope.

I told him that the Nizam had sent me a letter through Sir Sultan Ahmed, dated 30 October, in which he implied that if negotiations now broke down with a new negotiating committee he might have to consider entering into an agreement with Pakistan.

Mr. Jinnah laughed and said, “That looks to me as though he is threatening you. It has nothing to do with me. I have never discussed any form of agreement with the Nizam.”

I asked him straight out whether he would be prepared to sign a standstill agreement with Hyderabad if he were asked to by the Nizam. He replied that a standstill agreement implied that there were relations or intertwining factors which formed the basis for a standstill agreement. He could not think of any such factors between Pakistan and Hyderabad, and whereas he did not envisage wishing to sign such an agreement, he would have to examine the matter carefully if it were put to him, before refusing.

I drew his attention to the unfortunate effect it would have if in fact he were to start negotiations with the Nizam after they had been broken off with the Dominion to which he was irretrievably linked geographically and by majority of population.

Mr. Jinnah said he would bear this in mind.

PART III: JUNAGADH

I read out to Mr. Jinnah the following extract from a statement made by Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan, which had been published in the Statesman of Friday, 21 September:

“The correct position is that the Indian Independence Act of 1947 has left all Indian States completely free to join either one Dominion or the other or to enter into treaty relations with either. Legally and constitutionally there can be no question of putting limitations on this right of the States. Muslim League leaders before 15 August and the official spokesmen of the Pakistan Government thereafter have publicly declared their agreement with this view; and have, since rigorously stood by it. No objection has been raised by Pakistan to any State acceding to the Dominion of India."

I asked Mr. Jinnah if he still stood rigorously by his Prime Minister's statement. He looked somewhat uneasy but admitted that it represented the legal position. I told him I would revert to this when talking about Kashmir, but in the meanwhile wanted to know what he proposed to do about Junagadh.

He admitted that there was no sense in having Junagadh in the Dominion of Pakistan, and said that he had been most averse from accepting this accession. He had in fact demurred for a long time, but had finally given way to the insistent appeals of the Nawab and his Dewan.

I told him that in the case of Babariawad and Mangrol, it was clearly the wish of the people that they would be in the Dominion of India, and that they had in fact signed Instruments of Accession to that effect. How then could he refuse them the right of accession? He said that Mangrol's accession had been forced on him, and withdrawn almost before the ink was dry. In any event, he had persuaded the Nawab of Junagadh to accept legal arbitration.

I told him that the Government of India would not have minded the position so much if Junagadh had played the game and not interfered internally in these small States; but that they were oppressing the people, imposing fines and removing their grain. I pointed out that repeated telegrams had been sent protesting at this. Mr. Jinnah denied this, and stated categorically that neither Pakistan nor Junagadh had sent any soldiers or armed police into these States.

I told him that we had definite information that Junagadh had sent armed police into both of them, and that they were oppressing the people. Pandit Nehru had telegraphed to Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan about this, and the latter had undertaken to ask Junagadh to withdraw their forces.

When they had failed to do so, the Government of India had telegraphed, a few days back, saying that we would have to protect the interests of these States if the Junagadh forces were not withdrawn. Since they had not been withdrawn, India were going to put in forces to protect their interests, subject to a plebiscite being subsequently held in these States about final accession. They would go in under a flag of truce, with loud-hailers and inviting the cooperation of Junagadh authorities.

Mr. Jinnah lamented that the Government of India had not invited the cooperation of Pakistan beforehand. I pointed out that they had in fact been unable to enforce their own orders and that so far as I was aware, Indian Forces had been sent into these two States that very day.
POLITICAL RELATIONS: 1947-1954

PART IV: KASHMIR

I handed Mr. Jinnah a copy of the statement of events signed by the Indian Chiefs of Staff, which I had shown to Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan. He asked if he could keep it, but I made him return the original and gave him an unsigned copy. Although he expressed surprise at the remarkable speed at which we had been able to organize sending troops into Srinagar plain, he did not question the document or my statement.

Mr. Jinnah’s principal complaint was that the Government of India had failed to give timely information to the Government of Pakistan about the action that they proposed to take in Kashmir.

I pointed out the speed at which events had moved. It was not until evening of the 24th that reliable reports had been received of the tribal incursion, and it was not until the 25th that observers had been sent up to confirm these reports. Thus the decision to send in troops had not been taken until the 26th, by which date the Maharaja had announced his intention of acceding to India. There had not been a moment to lose. I added that I could not recall the exact time, but that it was my impression that Pandit Nehru had telegraphed to Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan on the 26th, immediately the decision to send in troops had been taken.

Mr. Jinnah complained that this information should have been sent much earlier—in fact on 24 October. “If”, he said, “they had on that date telegraphed saying that critical situation was reported to be developing in Kashmir and they had sent in observers to confirm these reports and suggested that Pakistan should cooperate in dealing with the situation, all the trouble would have been ended by now.”

Lord Ismay agreed that the Government of Pakistan should have had the earliest possible notification. This was the first thing that had occurred to him on his return to Delhi from the United Kingdom, and, indeed, he was under the impression that it had been done. To the best of his recollection, Pandit Nehru had told him on the 28th that he had kept Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan in touch with what was happening all the time. If this had not been done, the oversight must have been due to the pressure of events, and not because the Government of India had anything to hide.

Mr. Jinnah looked up his files and said that the telegram had arrived after the troops had landed, and that it did not contain any form of an appeal for cooperation between the two Dominions in this matter; it merely informed him of the accession and the landing of troops. Continuing he said that the accession was not a bona fide one since it rested on “fraud and violence” and would never be accepted by Pakistan.
I asked him to explain why he used the term “fraud”, since the Maharaja was fully entitled in accordance with Pakistan’s own official statement, which I had just read over to him, to make such accession. It was therefore perfectly legal and valid.

Mr. Jinnah said that this accession was the end of a long intrigue and that it had been brought about by violence. I countered this, by saying that I entirely agreed that the accession had been brought about by violence; I knew the Maharaja was most anxious to remain independent, and nothing but the terror of violence could have made him accede to either Dominion; since the violence had come from tribes for whom Pakistan was responsible, it was clear that he would have to accede India to obtain help against the invader. Mr. Jinnah repeatedly made it clear that in his opinion it was India who had committed this violence by sending her troops into Srinagar; I countered as often with the above argument, thereby greatly enraged Mr. Jinnah at my apparent denseness.

From this point, he went on to say that the Government of India authorities had encouraged the Kashmir Government to massacre Muslims in the Poonch and Mirpur areas. I repudiated this as obvious nonsense. He then said, “Very well, it was the Congress party that did it.” I pointed out that if there had been any such massacre by Hindus in the Poonch area (which I did not deny) this had been done entirely by Kashmir Hindus and could hardly have been done with object of inciting the tribes to invade Kashmir and come so close to capturing Srinagar, merely to afford the Maharaja an excuse for acceding to India for the purpose of obtaining help.

I then explained to Mr. Jinnah, at some length, the policy which I had consistently pursued in regard to Kashmir, namely—trying to persuade the Maharaja to institute progressive government, ascertain the will of the people and then accede to the Dominion of the people’s choice before 15 August. I recounted how I had tried to persuade H. H. to do this during my visit to Kashmir in July, and how I had told them my views privately whilst driving in the car with him; but that when I had wished to have a formal meeting with him in the presence of his Prime Minister and my Private Secretary on the last day of my visit, he had pleaded illness and gone to bed to avoid the meeting. On leaving Srinagar, I had instructed the Resident to give the Maharaja this advice officially; and finally Lord Ismay had gone up at the end of August with instructions to advise the Maharaja to hurry up and ascertain the will of the people. But the Maharaja had invariably avoided the issue, and had always turned the conversation to lighter topics.

Mr. Jinnah paid a handsome tribute to the correctness of my policy and admitted that it was I who had put the ex-Premier of Kashmir (Pandit Kak) in touch with him when he came to Delhi.
Mr. Jinnah next referred to the statement which he had issued to the Press that day and enlarged on his difficulties in not being able to have any reasonable conversation, either personally or through representatives, with the Maharaja or even with his Prime Minister; and that, not only had the Maharaja brought his troubles upon himself by this attitude, but had greatly aggravated them by the massacres to which he had incited his Dogras against innocent Muslims. He said that even today at Jammu 90,000 Muslims were in danger of being massacred.

I told Mr. Jinnah that Pandit Nehru had expressed horror at the massacres that had taken place and had issued stringent orders that everything possible was to be done to stop them. Only the night before I had supplemented those instructions myself through an Indian Brigadier who had just returned from Kashmir and who fully agreed with the necessity for stopping any further killing of Muslims.

I informed Mr. Jinnah that we already had a Brigade Group of 2,000 men in Srinagar; that a 4th Battalion would be flown in that day and a 5th Battalion within the next two days. I said that we should have no difficulty in holding Srinagar and that the prospect of the tribes entering the city in any force was now considered remote.

Lord Ismay suggested that the main thing was to stop the fighting; and he asked Mr. Jinnah how he proposed that this should be done. Mr. Jinnah said that both sides should withdraw at once. He emphasized that the withdrawal must be simultaneous. When I asked him how the tribesmen were to be called off, he said that all he had to do was to give them an order to come out and to warn them that if they did not comply, he would send large forces along their lines of communication. In fact, if I was prepared to fly to Srinagar with him, he would guarantee that the business would be settled within 24 hours.

I expressed mild astonishment at the degree of control that he appeared to exercise over the raiders.

I asked him how he proposed that we should withdraw our forces, observing that India’s forces were on the out-skirts of Srinagar in a defensive role; all that the tribes had to do was to stop attacking. I also pointed out that we could not possibly afford aeroplanes to fly the Indian troops back. Lord Ismay suggested that they should march back via Banihal Pass.

I asked Mr. Jinnah why he objected so strongly to a plebiscite, and he said he did so because with the troops of the Indian Dominion in military occupation of Kashmir and with the National Conference under Sheikh Abdullah in power, such propaganda and pressure could be brought to bear that the average Muslim would never have the courage to vote for Pakistan.
I suggested that we might invite UNO to undertake the plebiscite and send observers and organizers in advance to ensure that the necessary atmosphere was created for a free and impartial plebiscite. I reiterated that the last thing my Government wished was to obtain a false result by a fraudulent plebiscite.

Mr. Jinnah repeated that he and I were the only two who could organize a plebiscite and said that we should do it together. Lord Ismay and I went to great trouble to explain that I was a constitutional Governor-General and a Britisher, and that even if my Government would trust me sufficiently to see this through, I was sure that Mr. Attlee would not give his consent.

Mr. Jinnah complained bitterly that after the extremely generous gesture on the part of the Government of India in accepting his invitation to come to discussions at Lahore, the illness of one man should have prevented some other Minister from coming to conduct the negotiations; why for example, could Sardar Patel not have come? It was a matter of the greatest urgency to get together on this problem, and he asked me how soon Pandit Nehru could come to Lahore.

I countered by saying that it was now his turn to come to Delhi since I had come to Lahore, and I invited him cordially to stay as my guest, when I would take him to see Pandit Nehru in his bedroom.

He said that this was impossible. I pointed out that I had been to see Pandit Nehru personally in his bedroom and that I failed to see what was improper in this suggestion. He assured me that it was not a question of going to anybody’s bedroom, but that he was so busy he simply had no time to leave Lahore while his Prime Minister was on the sick list.

I asked him afterwards if there was any single problem more serious or urgent than Kashmir. I pointed out that when one was so busy one had to arrange work in order of priority. If he admitted that Kashmir was top priority, then all other work should stand aside for it and he should come to Delhi at once. He said he regretted that this was impossible, for the whole burden of events was on his shoulders at Lahore. I explained that he need only be gone for the inside of a day and that I was anxious to return his hospitality. He said, “I would gladly come a hundred times to visit you; I just cannot manage it while my Prime Minister is ill”. I asked him to come as soon as his Prime Minister was well enough to travel, and he said, “We shall have to see.”

Lord Ismay pointed out that the “best way to stand well in world opinion was for him now to come and return my visit and discuss Kashmir with Pandit Nehru. Mr. Jinnah said that he had lost interest in what the world thought of him since the British Commonwealth had let him down when he had asked them to come to the rescue of Pakistan.
I ended the meeting, as I had started it, by making it quite clear that I had come unbriefed and unauthorized to discuss Kashmir, since I had not had a chance of seeing Pandit Nehru after he had informed me he would be unable to accompany me. I told him I was speaking not as Governor-General of India but as the ex-Viceroy who had been responsible for partition and was anxious to see that it did not result in any harm coming to the two Dominions. He said he quite saw this but hoped that I would be able to discuss the various proposals which we had been talking about with Pandit Nehru and send him a firm telegram. I undertook to convey this message to Pandit Nehru.

Round about 5.00 p.m. it was obvious that we were going to be too late to go and see Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan again, so Lord Ismay left the room to telephone our apologies to him. I took the opportunity of Lord Ismay’s absence to ‘tell off’ Mr. Jinnah. I told him that I considered it was unstatesman like, inept and bad mannered for him to issue a statement which directly accused the Government of India of “fraud and violence” in Kashmir a few hours before he expected the Prime Minister of India to come and discuss this very question in a friendly manner; and that had he been feeling well enough to come, such a studied and ill-timed insult would have been enough to send his temperature up again. I finally pointed out that Pakistan was in my opinion in a much weaker position than India, not only from the obvious military point of view, but I was sure, the world would think they were in the wrong; and that this form of abuse before a discussion commenced could only put Pakistan even deeper in the wrong.

At the end Mr. Jinnah became extremely pessimistic and said it was quite clear that the Dominion of India was out to throttle and choke the Dominion of Pakistan at birth and that if they continued with their oppression there would be nothing for it but to face the consequences. However depressing the prospect might be, he was not afraid, for the situation was already so bad that there was little that could happen to make it worse.

I pointed out that war, whilst admittedly very harmful for India, would be completely disastrous for Pakistan and himself.

Lord Ismay tried to cheer him up out of his depression but I fear was not very successful. However, we parted on good terms.

Suggested proposals to Pakistan Government to form the basis of discussion

1. It is of paramount importance, not only to the Governments of India, Pakistan and Kashmir, but also to the cause of world peace, that the fighting in Kashmir should cease at the earliest possible moment.
2. The best, if not the only, hope of achieving this object is a very early meeting between accredited representatives of the two countries.

3. The Government of India, for their part, have no desire to maintain troops in Kashmir, once the valley is safe from attack and law and order have been restored. They are, therefore, prepared to give an undertaking to withdraw their troops immediately the raiders have left the country and returned to their homes.

4. It is the sincere desire of the Government of India that a plebiscite should be held in Kashmir at the earliest possible date and in the fairest possible way. They suggest that UNO might be asked to provide supervisors for this plebiscite, and they are prepared to agree that a joint India-Pakistan force should hold the ring while the plebiscite is being held.

5. The Government of India suggests that both Governments should agree on the form of the public announcement to be made in regard to the procedure for accession of those States in which this matter is in dispute. A draft is attached as a basis of discussion.

6. They suggest that the above proposals should be the subject of a round-table discussion at the earliest possible date.

0020. Message From the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom to the Prime Minister of India.

Office of the High Commissioner for the United Kingdom, 6, Albuquerque Road, New Delhi

"Kashmir. Your message to Prime Minister 256 received on 1st November through your High Commissioner in London. I am very appreciative of the fact that with all your great preoccupations and when seriously indisposed you should have found it possible to send me such a full account of the situation which confronted you. It was beyond doubt one of immense difficulty.

2. I would only like to say this. Events have so fallen out that it has become somewhat hard for each of the two Governments themselves to believe entirely in the good faith of the other and almost impossible for the mass of their supporters. It is for this reason that I stressed the overwhelming necessity of continuous and constant contact between the two Governments. I have frankly been nervous lest the strain between the two should become so great as to render consultation impossible. Luckily that has not so far happened and if I may say so it seems to me that you made a notable step towards the eventual restoration of mutual confidence by the announcement in your broadcast of yesterday that your Government was willing when order has been reestablished to have a referendum under international auspices. Your statement that you will withdraw your troops after restoration of order is of course also of the first important.

3. With best wishes for your early recovery.

4. Your High Commissioner in London has been supplied with copies of my previous messages to you and also with this.”

0021. Communique issued by the Supreme Commander’s HQ to dissolve the Joint Defence Council.

New Delhi, November 12, 1947.

The Supreme Commander has recommended to the Joint Defence Council of India and Pakistan that his headquarters should be dissolved with effect from November 30.

“The Supreme Commander says the reasons for this recommendation were that it was becoming impossible for him and his officers to discharge their tasks of reconstituting the former armed forces of British India into new and separate forces for India and Pakistan, because of the absence of the necessary spirit of goodwill and co-operation between the Principal parties concerned.

Task Completed.

The Government of India have categorically affirmed their wish that the Supreme Commander’s headquarters should be closed on November 30 as the task of reconstituting the armed forces has, in their opinion, been largely completed. In the opinion of the government of India, it was not necessary to retain the Supreme Commander’s headquarters to finish the remaining work and his could be done by some other method to be agreed jointly between the Governments of India and Pakistan.

The Government of Pakistan, on the other hand, are equally insistent on the need for retaining the Supreme Commander’s Headquarters in being as a neutral organisation, until it has virtually concluded its tasks that is until April 1, 1948 the date originally laid down in the Joint Defence Council order of August 11, 1947, under which the Supreme Commander’s headquarters was constituted.

“The Pakistan Government further consider that they had given and would continue to give full co-operation to the Supreme Commanders Headquarters. The Government of India also hold that they had given necessary co-operation to the Supreme Commander.

Mutual Agreement

“The Supreme Commander’s headquarters was set up by mutual agreement between the leaders of the Congress Party and the Muslim League with the approval of the then Viceroy and Governor General of India acting on behalf of His Majesty’s Government in the United Kingdom. The officers and other Ranks in Supreme Commander’s Headquarters all belong to the British navy, army and air force and are on loan from these services for the sole purpose of assisting the Joint Defence Council in its task of reconstituting the armed forces.

In view of the situation which has arisen and of the representations of the Supreme Commander, His Majesty’s Government in the United Kingdom have reluctantly come to the conclusion that it has no option but to withdraw these others and Other Ranks including the Supreme Commander himself. His Majesty’s Government in the United Kingdom do not think it right to allow these Officers and Other Ranks to be saddled with a responsibility which circumstances have made it no longer possible for them to discharge efficiently.

The result of this will be that Supreme Commander’s Headquarters will automatically cease to exist on November 30, 1947. After this date therefore, there will no longer be any neutral joint central organization to deal with the reconstitution of the armed forces.

Although, so far as the reconstitution of Armed forces is concerned, central joint control will thus disappear on November 30. A central headquarters to control and look after the units of the British Army and Royal Air force and the British Officers and Other Ranks serving with the Armed Forces of the Dominions of India and Pakistan will still be required. Owing to the world scarcity of shipping it is not anticipated that the repatriation of these British nationals of whom there are expected still to be at least 18,000 including families in India and Pakistan on November 30, can be completed before the end of February, 1948.

All British Officers and Other Ranks serving in the Supreme Commander’s Headquarters or with the Armed Forces of India Pakistan are under His Majesty’s Government in the United Kingdom to whom the Supreme Commander is responsible for their welfare and control. When the Supreme Commander leaves on November 30 therefore, there must be some authority who can exercise this responsibility in replacement of the Supreme Commander until December, 31.

New Authority

It has been decided that this authority will be a Commander, British Forces in India and Pakistan who will have the powers and responsibility at present vested in the Supreme Commander in respect of units of the British Army and Royal Air Force and of British Officers and Others Ranks serving in his own Headquarters or with the armed forces of India and Pakistan.

This new Commander, British forces will have no responsibility whatever for the completion of the armed forces of the two Dominions neither will he have any concern with these forces except in respect of the British personnel serving with them.

His Headquarters will be located in Delhi. He and his Headquarters will disappear on December 31, when the present contracts of British Officers and Other Ranks serving with the armed forces of Pakistan and India come to an end. After this date the retention of the services of British Officers and Other Ranks with the armed forces of India and Pakistan is a matter for each Government to decide in agreement with His Majesty’s Government in the United Kingdom, or with the individuals themselves as the case may be.

Separate Headquarters

Some form of organization, however, will still be required after December 31, 1947, to control and administer the British Forces including the individuals Officers and Other Ranks, who will still be in India and Pakistan, because there have not been ships to bring them home. This control will be provided in the form of two small independent British headquarters under a Major General and Air Commander located at New Delhi and Karachi respectively.

These headquarters will have the sole duty of administering the units and individuals awaiting repatriation in these two areas and of arranging for their proper embarkation. These two headquarters will not be under a joint central control, but will communicate directly with His Majesty’s Government in the United Kingdom and with the High Commissioners for the United Kingdom in India and Pakistan respectively. They will also communicate directly with the Governments of India or Pakistan as the case may be.
Two years ago, on this very day, I was at Nankana Sahib, the birth-place of Guru Nanak. These two years were marked with a succession of events of unparalleled importance and magnitude in history. The last four months comprise a period in which immense destruction was wrought in many parts of the country. Common men like us are swayed by passions of the times we live in but great men mould the era in which they are born and leave an indelible impress of their personality on it.

Lives of the great teach us that it is more proper to look at our own actions with a critical eye than hasten to blame others. A race or a civilization dies of its own internal weaknesses and not because of external aggression. There are many amongst us who sully the fair name of India by their thoughtless words and deeds.

I ask you to put yourselves in a world twenty years hence and then look back at the present from that distance and angle. That will afford us a better perspective and enable us to look at the present situation dispassionately. Just imagine what posterity will have to say about us. I have no doubt they will find us guilty of many unworthy acts. Whether it is an individual from Pakistan harming one of us or vice versa, it is an Indian injuring another Indian.

India cannot and will not remain divided. That is my conviction no matter how much I am personally criticized for having accepted partition. Non-acceptance might perhaps have proved to be a greater evil. Perhaps the present struggle might forge a stronger bond of unity between us.

The political division of India cannot change certain fundamental things which still are the same in both Dominions. India and Pakistan shared a common heritage and history. They have common economic relations which though broken for the time being will have to be established again.

Anyone who is not carried away by momentary passions will easily realize that ultimately both the Dominions will unite into one country. The unity, I am confident, will be brought about not by force but by the march of events all over the world and consideration for mutual interests. The differences between India and Pakistan cannot be ironed out by the use of force and anybody who adopts this method will only succeed in creating greater complications and more difficulties in the way of a solution.

The relations between the two Dominions are strained at present, but that does not change the fact that we are neighbours and are so placed that we cannot live in isolation from each other. There are only two courses open to us. Either we unite or go to war against each other. Even if there is war between the two, it cannot last forever. After the war they will have to follow the other course of merging themselves into one united country.

It is possible for one country to invade another and occupy it by force, but that should not be mistaken for a union of the two countries. The set-up of things in the world at present is such that big problems cannot be solved by the use of force. If India is attacked, all possible force will certainly be employed to defend her and no quarter will be granted to the invader, but for solving Indo-Pakistan problems peaceful methods alone should be adopted or they are liable to become more serious and complicated.

The past two years in India have been full of unpleasant happenings. Dreadful things have taken place during the last four months. Much blood has been shed and suffering caused in this country, but that should not be permitted to warp our judgment. The people of India must think dispassionately and take stock of what they did and in what way it was different from what they should have done. The people who get carried away by their passions always come to a sad end. It is their duty to find out their own mistakes before pointing out mistakes committed by others. A nation really falls not due to attacks by her enemies but on account of the misdeeds of her own people.

Time has now come for everyone to make an honest and firm resolve not to say or write anything which is liable to create ill-feeling between the two Dominions. There are times when strongly-worded replies are called for, but we must learn to restrain ourselves as ultimately it is saner thinking alone that helps.

Guru Nanak, whose birthday we have gathered here to celebrate, has been a great apostle of unity among all sections of humanity and goodwill towards everyone. In the present state of distrust and bickering, his teachings are of great value, and his message can bring about lasting peace.

I appeal to the Indian press to exercise restraint in their writings. I regret that of late they have done more harm than good to the country. They must realize that a balance in writing is absolutely essential for the peace of the country.
I reached Government House at 10 p.m. to keep an appointment with Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan who had arrived earlier in the evening. I was taken to the Governor-General first as he was anxious to see me before I saw Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan. Although he intended speaking to me for a few minutes only, actually our conversation lasted for nearly an hour, while, presumably, Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan was waiting for me.

2. Lord Mountbatten told me that he had had an hour’s talk already with Liaquat Ali Khan and had found him in a friendly mood, eager to come to some kind of a settlement. In fact he had never found him so chastened. He said that it would be a tragedy if we could not take advantage of these circumstances now and put an end to the fighting in Kashmir, of course on terms advantageous and honourable to India. A continuation of the conflict, whatever the result, would mean a very great deal of trouble to India and even more so to Pakistan and would stop progress for a long time. Lord Mountbatten was greatly worked up and made repeated appeals both on national and personal grounds. He said that he had never been so exercised about any matter as this one because he felt that so much was at stake. The next day would be vital in the history of India. We were very near a settlement and the highest statesmanship and the good of India demanded that we should take advantage of the present favourable circumstances to bring such a settlement. Favourable circumstances evidently referred to Liaquat Ali Khan’s desire for a settlement. Lord Mountbatten referred to the great increase in the prestige of India all over the world if we could bring about a settlement and to our immediately applying ourselves to the various internal problems which demanded our attention. The settlement of course should essentially be on the lines we have repeatedly laid down, i.e., reference to the U.N.O. to stop the fighting and when this is done and peace and order restored a plebiscite under U.N.O. auspices.

3. Lord Mountbatten also said that Liaquat Ali Khan was greatly exercised at the possibility of the Government of India repudiating or going back on the financial settlements arrived at. These settlements according to Liaquat Ali Khan had taken place nearly a month ago and nothing had been done yet to implement them. Was the matter going back to the Arbitral Tribunal for decision?

4. I stated in reply that there was no question of our challenging or repudiating the financial agreements arrived at. The only question that arose was when to make the payments. We would stand by the agreements and the Arbitral Tribunal would not be concerned with them. Our difficulty was that if we made any payments now, when a kind of undeclared war was going on between us, that money would be used in carrying on that war against us. It would be foolish for us to make those payments until this Kashmir business had been settled.

5. Lord Mountbatten said that the money was really Pakistan’s i.e., it was a joint fund and this part of it therefore belonged to them. He appreciated however our difficulty, but would suggest that we should not emphasize this fact of non-payment in our difficulty, but would suggest that this would raise further difficulties. We might make it clear that so far as the financial agreements were concerned we did not challenge them.

6. Regarding Kashmir I pointed out that the immediate issue was one of aggression directly or indirectly by Pakistan on India. No other issue arose till this was settled. We proposed to refer this particular matter to the Security Council of the U.N.O., charging Pakistan with aggression and asking U.N.O. to call upon Pakistan to refrain from doing so. Otherwise we would have to take action ourselves in such a manner as we thought fit to stop this aggression at the base.

7. Lord Mountbatten said he agreed with that reference, but could we not add to it that after law and order has been restored U.N.O. would supervise and carry out a plebiscite as we had previously declared? I said that we could not add this to our reference. It was entirely a separate matter and much would depend on developments. We were committed not only by our settlements but also by our general policy to allow the people of Kashmir to decide their future. Indeed it was not possible in the present context of things for us to hold Kashmir against the will of the people. But we were definitely of opinion that this could not be tied up to the present reference to U.N.O. In that reference there would no doubt be a historical narrative which would contain mention of the fact of our offering a plebiscite under U.N.O. auspices. Apart from that there would be no further mention of this. Our demand would be that aggression must cease and the raiders should withdraw. It was possible that as a consequence of U.N.O. taking action in this matter, whether by sending a commission or otherwise, other developments might take place. We would deal with them as they arose.

8. There was a great deal of talk roundabout this position. Lord Mountbatten was anxious that I should somehow talk on the plebiscite in some form or other so as to enable Liaquat Ali Khan to put it across his people who were greatly excited about Kashmir. I repeated what I had said before and informed him that our Cabinet had considered this matter and was quite clear that it should not bring in the question of plebiscite in this reference. That did not mean that we wanted to avoid a reference to the people. But how and when this should take place would depend on circumstances. We could not have a continuation of war and the idea of a plebiscite to go together. It was nearly three months ago that we had made this offer and it has not thus far been accepted and aggression had continued.

9. Lord Mountbatten mentioned also casually that Mr. Jinnah had been given a maximum of six months by his doctors and he was very ill.

10. At about 11 p.m. we went to Liaquat Ali Khan’s room. The Governor-General accompanied me although probably it was not his previous intention to do so. No doubt he felt that his presence might be helpful in bringing about a more friendly approach.

11. We were with Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan for little more than an hour, till soon after midnight. I must say that I found him very much toned down and chastened, indeed almost, if I may say so, humble in his approach to the problem. Unlike previous occasions, there was hardly any argument or discussion.

12. Lord Mountbatten started off by saying that there was no intention on the part of the India Government to repudiate the financial agreements arrived at and that this matter would not go up before the Arbitral Tribunal. Further that we were thinking in terms of a reference to U.N.O. and that we stood by previous statement to the effect that the people of Kashmir would have to decide after peace and order were established about their future.

13. I then stated our position in regard to Kashmir. I said that nearly three months ago when we had intervened in Kashmir we had made a unilateral offer for a plebiscite under U.N.O. auspices after peace was established and all the raiders had departed or been pushed out. This offer had been repeated but there had been no response. Indeed the aggression had continued with every kind of violence and had been supported by the Pakistan Government. The invaders had been collected, transported, put in camps near the Kashmir border, armed and trained, all in Pakistan territory, and they had then been sent in batches inside Kashmir State. We considered that aggression of one state against another as a hostile act against India. Obviously we could not tolerate this, nor were we prepared to carry on this petty war in the way we have thus far done. We had sent relatively small forces into Kashmir in the hope that hostilities would cease and the raiders would be withdrawn. No such thing had happened and would necessarily have to take a more serious view of the matter and if no other development took place, we may have to strike at the base of operations and the lines of communications of the raiders. But as we were anxious to avoid far-reaching developments and being members of the U.N.O. we intended making a reference to U.N.O. charging Pakistan with acts of aggression and asking U.N.O. to call upon Pakistan to desist. In the alternative we would have to take such further action as we thought fit and proper.

14. Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan did not say much in reply to this except that he would welcome U.N.O.'s intervention as he was anxious that a third party should come into the picture. He complained of Sardar Patel's speech at Jaipur in which he was alleged to have said that India was prepared for war with Pakistan if the latter desired it. Mr Liaquat Ali Khan said that we had decided at Lahore that no provocative speeches should be made and no responsible person in Pakistan had made any speech or statement of a provocative nature since then. Unfortunately Sardar Patel had done so and this did not help in producing the atmosphere we desired.

15. I said that I had not myself read Sardar Patel's speech fully and I did not know what exactly he had said or what the context was. The speech had hardly anything to do with Kashmir and any reference could have been only casual and in some other context. I pointed out the way Pakistan newspapers were behaving and more specially the demand in a leading article of a Karachi Urdu daily calling upon the Muslims to kill Sardar Patel. Our High Commissioner in Karachi had written to Pakistan Government on this subject. Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan said that his attention had been drawn to this and he greatly regretted it. He was taking steps against that newspaper. He said further that newspaper in Pakistan and India were thoroughly irresponsible, more specially the Indian language ones, and he wished that something could be done to stop them. Lord Mountbatten expressed his own disapproval of the way many newspapers indulged in inflaming public opinion and had expressed his opinion that every newspaper should be licensed by Government, the licence being withdrawn in case of misbehaviour.

16. Lord Mountbatten said that as we were thinking of making a reference to U.N.O. it would be a good thing if the draft was shown to Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan before it was sent.

17. I said that we would naturally send a copy to Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan, but the reference being in the nature of a charge against Pakistan it could not possibly be a joint reference. It would be for Pakistan to reply to it and for the Security Council then to take action.

18. Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan said that he did not think it necessary to see our draft reference. What was necessary was that both parties should be eager to stop this fighting.
19. In the whole course of the conversation no mention was made about the internal administration of Kashmir or about the armed forces of the Indian Union that might be left in Kashmir later on. These were the two points on which a great deal of arguments had taken place on previous occasions.

20. Lord Mountbatten asked Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan if it would not be difficult for him to get the raiders out owing to the state of public opinion in Pakistan. He agreed that it was not going to be an easy matter.

21. There was some talk about raids on Pakistan territory by air and land.

22. I informed Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan that all the relatives of Ghulam Abbas, President of the Kashmir Muslim Conference, were alive and were in Pakistan except for one girl who was apparently in Amritsar and would be sent to Pakistan. The story about the murder and abduction of these people was thus not true.

23. Our talk then went on some other matters. I referred to Mehr Chand Khanna’s case. Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan said that he was meeting him the next day.

24. Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan asked me if I had seen the Muslim League resolution about having a minorities charter. I said that I had not read it carefully but I had glanced through it. I added that so far as we are concerned our Constituent Assembly had already carefully considered this matter and laid down provisions for the protection of minorities. Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan said that it would be a very good thing if both India and Pakistan would agree to similar provisions and would issue a joint statement to that effect which might be embodied in our constitutions. This would go a long way to lessen the feelings of fear and suspicion that exist. I agreed that it would be desirable to come to an agreement on these issues.

25. Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan then enquired about the order of Precedence in India as to where the Prime Minister and Ministers came into the picture.

The whole conversation with Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan, which lasted a little over an hour, was almost entirely free from argument which had previously accompanied such discussions. It seemed to me quite clear that for some reason or other Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan was eager and anxious for a settlement. He hardly raised any difficulties to what I said, though of course he did not agree to everything. He expressed a strong desire that India and Pakistan should have friendly relations and should put an end to conflict and misunderstanding.

0024. Comments of Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru on the Conclusions of the Joint Defence Council Meeting.

New Delhi, December 23, 1947.

I have read the paper prepared by the Conference Secretary, Joint Defence Council, in regard to the conclusions of a meeting held at Government House on Monday, the 22nd December, which was attended by the Governor General and Ministers of India and Pakistan.

2. I do not think that this paper gives a correct picture of what was agreed or what took place.

3. There is no question about agreement as detailed under Item-I on Kashmir. The Pakistan Ministers can hardly agree to being charged by us with various offences under international law. What happened was that I mentioned on Sunday, 21st night that the Government of India proposed to make a reference to the Security Council of the U.N.O. charging Pakistan with aiding and abetting aggression on Indian Dominion territory and asking them to call upon Pakistan to put an end to this.

4. This was a unilateral declaration on our part which required no agreement.

5. The next day I handed a letter to the Prime Minister of Pakistan in which we formally charged them with this aggression and asked them to stop it. This letter would, of course, elicit a reply within a few days and thereupon we would probably take the action contemplated by us, that is, reference to the U.N.O. Here again it is hardly correct to say that this was an agreement. It was just an indication of possible developments. I do not know what the Pakistan Government may say or do about this and our action would naturally depend on their action.

6. As for our preparing a draft of the application by India to the U.N.O., this is entirely a matter for us to consider as to when and how to do it and not a matter of agreement between Pakistan and us. Naturally we are anxious to expedite this and we hope to be ready for any further step as soon as the time comes for it. But every subsequent step is governed by the previous step and when these previous steps are not known, subsequent steps cannot be determined.

7. Action in regard to Item II (Financial Settlement): It cannot stand as it is when Item I is altered. It is a fact that in discussing Kashmir the question of the date of implementing the recent financial agreement between the two Dominions had not arisen.

8. It is also a fact that I confirmed on behalf of the Government of India that there was no intention to repudiate the financial agreements. We stood by them completely.
9. The way (iii) as stated does not appear to be wholly right. It is my business to report to my Cabinet what I consider proper. This is hardly an agreement between me and the Pakistan Prime Minister. As a matter of fact, I have received a letter from the Pakistan Prime Minister on this subject which is being sent to my colleagues in the Cabinet. This letter contains the Pakistan Prime Minister’s views on the subject.

10. Item III: What step the Government of India will take in regard to the disputed land between East and West Bengal, it is for the Government to decide. I do not see how the Secretary General, Pakistan, and the Conference Secretary to the Governor General could come to an agreement about this matter. The status quo might be maintained. But the status quo has recently been changed by force of arms by the East Bengal Government and we have the strongest objection to this. If there is to be any enquiry, as there should be, the status quo prior to this aggression must be restored. This is the business of the Home Ministry and it is not proper for any agreement by outside parties to be made over the heads of the Home Ministry and the Cabinet.

11. Item IV: Licenses for Arms. The draft given in appendix A is agreed to in so far as it goes. I would point out, however, that at a recent conference on Secretariat level an agreement was reached about the restoration of licensed arms and ammunition which had been confiscated. It was agreed that the two Dominion Governments should issue instructions to all the Provincial Governments to have the arms and ammunition restored wherever receipts for them were held. In case where no such receipts were held, the Dominion Governments should furnish lists of cases to each other and all such cases should be properly investigated. All this need not be stated in the press communiqué, but the following sentence might be added:

“In cases where arms and ammunition have been confiscated contrary to the inter-Dominion agreement, the two Governments would take steps to restore them to the rightful owners.”

12. Item V: The Minister without Portfolio stated that he would enquire into this matter. I find that the paper drafted by the Conference Secretary has already been sent to the Prime Minister of Pakistan. I regret that this should have been done without any reference to me as this, as I have stated above, does not give a correct picture of what happened. This is likely, therefore, to give a wrong impression and possibly to create misunderstandings.

This note is being sent to the Conference Secretary who has already been informed by telephone that I do not approve of this paper.

Karachi, January 1, 1948.

The Government of India have categorically declined to implement the financial settlement arrived at between them and Pakistan a few days ago. They refuse to hand over Rs.55 crores, the share of the Pakistan Government in cash balances. They have stopped even the slight trickle of military stores that were being nominally kept flowing in respect of Pakistan's share of stores," said Sir Mohamad Zafrullah, Foreign Minister, addressing a Press conference in Karachi.

In spite of these grave provocations the Foreign Minister said, Pakistan would endeavour to maintain friendly relations with the Dominion of India but not at the cost of dignity, honour and self-respect.

Apropos of the reported decision of the Government of the Indian Union to raise the question of Kashmir in the Security Council of the UNO, Sir Zafrullah Khan said that Pakistan would insist that the UNO deals with the whole problem of Indo-Pakistan relations in all its facets and not only with an isolated facet that Kashmir was.

Giving a complete picture of the Indo-Pakistan relations, Sir Mohammad Zafrullah Khan said: 'We realize that the demand for the partition of India on behalf of the Muslims was not welcome to the non-Muslim as a whole and that it became a major issue between the two peoples, when partition was eventually conceded, though subject to serious limitations, it must have occasioned a good dead of disappointment. It would be equally true to say that some of the features of the constitutional settlement offend and accepted by the major political parties in India occasioned equally serious disappointment to the Muslims more particularly the proposal to partition Bengal and the Punjab. It was patent, however, that the claims of the political parties being irreconcilable, whatever settlement was eventually arrived at would occasion some disappointment to both sides in some features.

"I believe I am right in stating that on the Muslim side, whatever disappointing features the settlement might have had, they accepted it bona fide with the fullest intention of carrying into effect and working it in letter and spirit. A background had already developed in certain disquieting features and there had been communal riots, large scale massacres in the various parts of India, for instance, in Ahmedabad, Bombay, Calcutta Noakhali, Bihar and Garhmukteshwar. We had hoped that in spite of the most regrettable and condemnable incidents, massacres and horrors, the country would finally, settle down to working out the settlement in good spirit and co-operation between the two sides.

“In March, last year there were regrettable happenings and incidents in Rawalpindi and Multan, where non-Muslims, particularly the Sikhs suffered great injury and damage in life, limb and property. That kind of happenings can never be justified or excused. Yet it is necessary to draw attention to this fact which has been consistently ignored that in both these areas these happenings were the consequence of very serious provocation.”

“Official records show, that in Rawalpindi, for example, a Sikh procession was taken out with drawn swords “through the principal streets of the town. The procession attacked a car containing Muslim passengers who were seriously wounded and one of them was killed. The procession then marched to the Jamma Masjid. Exaggerated reports of what happened in the town spread to the country side and set it aflame.

“In Multan town, local leaders had been delivering speeches repeatedly asserting that this year they intended to celebrate Holi not with red water but with red blood and obviously Muslim blood was intended to be shed for celebrating Holi. On the particular day when riots started, the students of the local DAV College marched in a procession through the streets of Multan shouting ‘Quaid-I-Azam Muradabad’. One should like to be enlightened as to what those responsible for the procession and these cries expected would happen, in Multan, a town largely populated by the Muslims. This started riots in Multan.

“Even before the provocations given in these two local areas, Master Tara Singh had on February 28 last, while coming out of the Legislative Assembly building in Lahore, unsheathed his kirpan, brandished it proudly and proclaimed that the sword would decide between the Muslims and the Sikhs. He said he was ready, his volunteers were ready and there was no reason why the Muslims should be driven out only from East Punjab.

“They would in fact be driven across the Indus. Other Sikh leaders made equally provocative pronouncements so that when processions like those, I mentioned in case of Rawalpindi and Multan, were organized in the first week of March in those areas which till then were perfectly peaceful, the Muslims began to imagine that the Sikh’s actions intended, to drive them across the Indus had begun.

“Like a blind man who in his terror strikes out indiscriminately in the dark, the Muslims lost their heads and acted in a most reprehensible manner. What happened in those areas was bound to happen when a foolish man throws a lighted match into a room full in inflammable gas. It must be remembered that the province was being administered by the Governor under Section 93 of the Government of India Act and that there was no popular ministry in office. Incidents continued to follow in Lahore and Amritsar. Nevertheless, it was hoped that once the boundaries of the East and West Punjab were fairly settled the two communities would resume peaceful relations with each other.

"Nine days before the Award was announced the first incidents of what turned out to be the calculated planned and organized Sikh campaign to clear the East Punjab of Muslims, combined with the plan to withdraw non-Muslims from the West Punjab, took place. A special train, carrying Muslim officers, Muslim staff and official records of the Pakistan Government proceeding from Delhi to Karachi was mined and derailed. That was the signal for the attack in the East Punjab. There was then a systematic extermination of Muslims in the East Punjab, including Indian States in the part of the country.

Their Technique

"Briefly the police first searched Muslim villages and disarmed the inhabitants. The Sikh attack then followed. In certain instances were Muslim inhabitants succeeded in repelling the attack they were fired upon by the police and in some cases even by the military forces of the Government of India so that the guardian of law and order became the abettors of aggression.

"Villages after villages were cleared up in that manner. I speak from personal knowledge, my own home was in that part of the world and was eventually looted and occupied. Denials and repudiations on behalf of the Government of India have been published. I am unable to say to what extent the outside world might have been disposed to give credence to them, but knowing what was happening and what had happened, the only conclusion one can draw is that either the Government of India were sorely deceived themselves or deliberately attempted to deceive the outside world.

"It is a matter for both surprise and regret that a man possessing the sense of responsibility which Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru undoubtedly possesses and having gone through the experience through which he has gone in the past, should have been inclined so readily to believe reports of subordinate officers of his Government which were so patently contrary to what was happening.

No Effective Action

Sir Zafrullah Khan deplored that Pandit Nehru's Government neither took effective action to check lawlessness of the people as well as of his own police and armed forces nor did anything to bring to book those guilty of horrible crimes.
“It has been said on behalf of the Government of India that this is a one-sided picture. Let me again emphasis that human suffering is a grievous thing irrespective of who is the victim and who is the aggressor. Undoubtedly in the West Punjab also deplorable things occurred during that period, but again two features must be emphasized.

It was not till Muslim victims of Sikh brutality in the East Punjab carried their tales of unspeakable horror and visible evidence on their persons of the torture to which they had been subjected in the East Punjab that the Muslims in the West Punjab flared up and made Hindus and Sikhs in certain areas subject of retaliations and reprisals. The second feature is fortunately the tale of massacre and maiming in the West Punjab did not turn out to be either so long or so sweeping as it turned out to be in the East Punjab.”

The Foreign Minister emphasized that “provocation, however, serious however heart-rending, furnishes neither the justification nor the excuse for what occurred. But its justice and fairness, it must be taken into account in drawing a fair and balanced picture that must be regarded as the first part of the tragedy.”

Boundary Award

Coming to the award of the Boundary commission, Sir Zafrullah Khan said: “The unfairness and injustice of the Boundary Award in allotting an equivalent of nine Muslims majority Tehsils to the East Punjab contrary to the terms of reference of the Boundary Commission enhanced the tragedy and that alone made some of his worst features possible.

“Another factor which contributed in the same direction was the failure of the Boundary Force effectively to discharge its duty, when lawlessness and disorder first broke out. Had the situation been firmly dealt with at that stage, the lawlessness and disorder would have been confined to small areas and would have speedily been brought under control.

“The Governor-General of India had on July 20, 1947, assured the Partition Council in Lahore that disorderly acts would be ruthlessly suppressed and anybody who raised a finger would be immediately cut down. It is needless to comment on the manner in which this assurance was not only not fulfilled, but was utterly repudiated in practice.”

Indian States

He added “Now let us come to another category. The differences that have arisen between the two Dominions as a consequence of the implementation or the failure to implement that part of the constitutional settlement which related to the Indian States, under the Indian Independence Act, each Indian State was at liberty to accede to either dominion and by implication was given the choice to remain independent if it so chose.

"Junagadh decided to accede to Pakistan. The territory of the state is not by land contiguous to Pakistan, but the state has direct sea communications with Karachi. Up to the time the Ruler decided to accede to Pakistan, there had not been a single incident of an untoward character within the state between the two communities. By its accession to Pakistan Junagadh became entitled to all the benefits of the standstill agreement between the two Dominions, particularly in the matter of communications railways, post officers, telephones, telegrams, etc.

"As soon as Junagadh’s accession to Pakistan was announced a campaign was started against the state which was closely reminiscent of Nazi technique for overwhelming weaker neighbours. A cordon was drawn round the state by the forces of the Dominion of India and some Kathiawar States. A ‘provisional government’ was set up in Bombay which subsequently moved to Rajkot and took forcible possessions of the state’s property in Rajkot.

Hitlerian Methods

"Active help was afforded to the so called provincial Government by the officers and authorities of the Dominion of India. Later, under the pretext of a so-called invitation from the Dewan of Junagadh State, forces of the Indian Dominion marched into Junagadh and an unchecked orgy of murder, loot, rape and arson was inaugurated against the helpless Muslim population of the State.

"The treatment for which the Rulers of Manavar and Manglor were subjected again, brought to mind the methods of Hitler. In the meantime extermination of Muslims in Hindu state, an accession with the Government of India, like Bharatpur, Alwar and Gwalior was proceeding apace in accordance with the technique and pattern which had become nauseatingly familiar.

Kashmir

"A similar campaign had been started in Kashmir. Muslims inside Kashmir and their relative and co-religionists outside Kashmir realized that the Muslims of Kashmir were fated to suffer all the atrocities to which, the Muslims had been subjected in the East Punjab and Kapurthala, Faridkot, Nabha, Jind, Patiala, Bhuratpur, Alwar and Gwalior. But there was in the case of Kashmir one feature which was absent in the case of other states, namely, that Kashmir was on all sides surrounded by predominantly Muslim areas.

"Realising that unless something was done to help the unfortunate Kashmir Muslims in their terrible plight, individual Muslims from surrounding areas did whatever they could to bring help to them. The Maharaja whose Government were directly responsible for what was happening in Kashmir at once invited the forces of the Dominion of India to march in.

“No consultations were held with the Pakistan Government. No intimation was given to the Pakistan government of what was intended. When the Pakistan Government became aware of what was happening, they made the fairest possible proposal to clear up the situation but it was not accepted.

“Since then tragedies like those enacted in the East Punjab and Indian states have been enacted in places like Ajmer—the very mention of which makes the blood of every Muslim boil with indignation at what was happening, and with shame at his own helplessness and impotence to safeguard the sacred shrines and the lives and property and honour of their co-religionists.

“Another aspect of the relations between the two Dominions. I will now come to. You will recall that only a few days ago it was announced with a flare of trumpets that happily all outstanding financial questions between the two Dominions had been amicably settled and that now there was no need for any of those matters to be adjudicated upon by Arbitration Tribunal. This happy achievement was described as a fore-runner of reestablishment of completely cordial relations between the two Dominions and it was so viewed by the Pakistan Government.

Financial Settlement

“The Government of India have since categorically declined to implement the settlement. They refuse to hand over Rs.55 crores which was determined to be the share of the Pakistan Government in the cash balances. They have stopped even the slight trickle of military stores which was nominally kept flowing in respect of Pakistan’s share of these stores. The excuse put forward is that the settlement was contingent upon the continuance of cordial relations between the two Dominions.

“In the first place no such contingency was attached to the settlement. These balances were not being allotted to Pakistan as a matter of charity or as a gift or even as a loan. They belonged to Pakistan. It was an accident of geography that they happened to be with the Dominion of India. These are instance of the manner in which the Dominion of India had tried to implement the constitutional settlement arrived at by consent between the two peoples”

Referring to the decision of the Government of India to raise the question of Kashmir before the Security Council of the UNO, Sir Zafrullah Khan said: “It has now been announced that the Dominion of India intends to take the matter of Kashmir to the UNO. It may be that they feel that they have not so hopeless a case, at least in their own estimation, with regard to Kashmir as must realize that they have with regard to other matters pending between the two Governments. But obviously Kashmir is but a link in the chain of differences that have unfortunately and unhappily developed between the Pakistan Government and the Government of the Indian Union.

Reference to UNO Welcomed

The Pakistan Government, as has already been announced, would welcome the intervention of the UNO for the purpose of a just and fair settlement of all these matters. They cannot be expected to agree to the isolation of one particular question divorced from its background and to its submission in that form to the UNO.

“I have said enough to indicate that the objective on the policy of the Government of India towards Pakistan through all these months has been to punish the Muslims for their temerity in demanding the partition of India. They apparently desire to beat Pakistan down to its knees so as to make it sue for re-admission into tender embraces of India.

“Even if they succeed that would spell disaster and calamity not only for Pakistan but also for India. The only sane and healthy approach to the problem is to recognize the fact that whatever merits or demerits of the demand for Pakistan in the eyes of the non-Muslims may have been, Pakistan had, entirely owing to the policy of the Indian National congress and the All India Hindu Mahasabha, become inevitable.

“A wise man must gracefully accept the inevitable and make the best of it. The idea of partition is fairly familiar to the members of the Joint Hindu Family. The members of such a family also realise that partition need bring in its wake no undesirable features if it is fairly carried out and the obligations imposed by it honorably discharged. That at least is our attitude.

Cordial Relations

“In spite of all that so far has accrued, in spite of threats that continue to be uttered against Pakistan, Pakistan has still every desire to restore its relations with India to a cordial co-operation and friendly basis as we are convinced that it is beneficial alone that can contribute towards fostering human welfare and happiness. We believe that a happy and prosperous India will be a source of strength to Pakistan. We desire to see a happy and prosperous India and are prepared to make such contribution by way of a friendly and beneficent attitude towards the achievement and consummation of that end.”

Sr. Zafrullah Khan was of the opinion that “India must equally realize that a happy and prosperous Pakistan would be a source not only of strength to India, but must constitute the principal factor in its security. It India succeeds in destroying Pakistan, which God forbid, or even in weakening it, or impeding its progress towards greater prosperity and greater strength, it will be only destroying the vital bastions of its own security prosperity and its very existence. When the partition of great countries like India has to take place the process is bound, like any major surgical operation, to leave throbbing wounds behind. It is the task of statesmen to seek to bind and heal the wounds rather than by calculated action to seek to convert them into running and poisonous ulcers”.

Sir Zafrullah Khan remarked that he had said all that in sorrow and he called the Pressmen to bear witness that he did not say anything in anger.

No official Information

Sir Zafrullah Khan in answer to a question said that the Government of India had not yet officially informed the Government of Pakistan that they had decided to take the Kashmir issue to the UNO.

Karachi, January 4, 1948

The Government of the Indian Union were accused of planning the destruction of the State of Pakistan by the Prime Minister, Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan, when at a two-hour Press conference at the main Pakistan Secretariat he reviewed the entire field of Indo-Pakistan relations since the partition of India.

Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan said: “I charge the Government of India: first, it has never wholeheartedly accepted the partition scheme, but her leaders paid lip service to it merely to get British troops out of the country.

Secondly, India is out to destroy the State of Pakistan which Indian leaders persistently continue to regard as part of India itself.

Thirdly, systematic sabotage against the implementation of partition; stoppage of coal and rail transport; deliberate withholding of Pakistan’s share of funds, arms and equipment; and the wholesale massacre of Muslim populations; which are all designed towards one aim, namely, the destruction of Pakistan.
Fourthly, India’s forcible occupation of Junagadh, Manavadar and others states in Kathiawar which acceded to Pakistan as well as the fraudulent procurement of the accession of Jammu and Kashmir State are acts of hostility against Pakistan whose destruction is India’s immediate objective.

Referring to the threat of Pandit Nehru to strike at the “imaginary bases” of Azad Kashmir Forces in Pakistan territory, the Prime Minister said that if any such action was taken by the Hindustan Government it would be a direct aggression against Pakistan. He warned: “I hope Pandit Nehru and his Government would not take any such precipitate action. We are, however, prepared for any such eventuality.”

The Pakistan Premier said that the Nehru Government were really out to keep Kashmir in the Indian Union by sheer force as was evident by their persistent refusal to settle the problem through peaceful negotiations.

No Partition

He categorically denied the report that Pakistan had suggested partition of Jammu and Kashmir State as a way out of the present impasse. This was at no stage of negotiations suggested by the Pakistan Government, for there could be no justification for such a proposal. For even in Jammu province, Muslims had a clear majority of 62 percent according to the 1941 census.

Referring to the Nehru Government’s action in referring the Kashmir dispute to the UNO, Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan said Pakistan had always shown its readiness to refer all outstanding disputes to an impartial international tribunal, because, it had nothing to hide. It would, however, insist that every disputed issue between the two dominions should be investigated by such a tribunal.

The Prime Minister, however said that Pakistan did not know what charges had been made against it by Hindustan before the UNO. The communication from Delhi in this connection was in a code which could not be deciphered.

Unilateral Action.

He pointed out that Pandit Nehru’s excuse that his unilateral action in referring the matter to the UNO was due to the non-receipt of a reply from Pakistan to his note of December 22 was not based on fact. Pandit Nehru had been informed on December 30 that Pakistan’s reply would be handed over to the Indian High Commissioner that day and it was actually done. The Nehru Government on the other hand, referred the matter to the UNO on December 30 by when they should have received Pakistan’s reply.

Referring to the war in Kashmir, the Prime Minister said that it was wrong to say that it was tribesmen who were fighting against Dogra and Indian tyranny.
The overwhelming number of people fighting for the liberation of Kashmir were Kashmiri Muslims themselves.

Cash Balances

The Prime Minister said that the Nehru Government had no moral or legal justification to withhold the transfer of Rs.55 crores which represented Pakistan’s share of the late Government of India’s cash balances. In fact if the Reserve Bank of India discharged its obligations faithfully to the two Governments it did not need the Nehru Government’s orders to pay the money to Pakistan.

Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan concluded his conference with the hope that the Nehru Government would realize the folly of their present policy which would only lead to ruination of both the Dominions. So far as Pakistan was concerned, the Prime Minister said it would continue its efforts to find a peaceful solution of all problems.

0027. Letter of Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru to Pakistan Prime Minister Liaquat Ali Khan.

New Delhi, January 5, 1948.

Dear Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan,

Your letter of the 30th December was received in New Delhi on the 1st January. I had gone to Lucknow for the day and did not therefore get it until the 2nd. On the 3rd I had to visit Ajmer and yesterday, the 4th, I was fully occupied with celebrations of Burma’s independence and other business. This will explain the delay in my sending you a reply.

2. I do not think that any useful purpose will be served by my attempting to answer, at length, the counter-charges that you have laid against India in paragraph 18 of your letter. Pakistan’s accusation that the accession of Jammu and Kashmir was procured by conspiracy, fraud and force has been repeatedly made by you and was frequently denied and refuted by us. So far as the cases of Junagadh and Manavadar are concerned, we maintain that there is no parallel between them and that of Kashmir.

3. Any impartial person familiar with the tragic happenings in the Punjab will recognize the complete baselessness of the suggestion that India organized the wholesale massacre of the Muslim population in any part of its territories. Massacres of non-Muslims began first in 1946 in Calcutta and in March 1947 in the West Punjab. What happened in India against Muslims was by way of retaliation against the atrocities perpetrated on non-Muslims first in Calcutta, and, later, in territories which are now part of Pakistan, e.g., Noakhali and the West Punjab. We have not only not encouraged, but openly and consistently condemned retaliation. We have also done everything in our power to protect Muslim minorities in India. We claim that we have done so more effectively than Pakistan.

4. I am not aware that there has been any stoppage of essential requirements, such as coal and rail transport, as a kind of sanction against Pakistan. Where delays have occurred these have been due entirely to other causes, e.g., shortage of wagons, or, in the disturbed areas of the Punjab, to dislocation of traffic owing to the disturbances.

5. There has been no deliberate withholding of Pakistan’s share of funds and arms and equipment with intent to apply pressure on Pakistan. As I have already tried to explain to you, we stand by the financial agreement that was recently reached. Payment has been deferred because we cannot, while operations against Jammu and Kashmir State are being conducted from bases in Pakistan, with Pakistan’s connivance and assistance, reasonably be expected to make available funds which might be used to intensify military operations against us.

6. The first two charges, viz., that India has never wholeheartedly accepted the partition scheme, and that India is out to destroy the State of Pakistan which her leaders persistently continue to regard as part of India itself, are completely devoid of foundation, and I must emphatically repudiate them. Had we not desired to accept the partition scheme, nothing would have been simpler for us than to refuse acceptance when the scheme was first put forth. India has no responsibility for the sequence of events which you regard as evidence of India’s resolve to destroy the State of Pakistan. It is true that some of us have expressed the view that India and Pakistan must draw closer to each other. The facts of history and geography fully justify this conclusion. Two neighbouring States such as Pakistan and India can either be friends, or live in a state of veiled or of open hostility. No responsible Indian leader has ever thought that friendship between India and Pakistan, which is more desirable than mistrust or enmity, should be achieved by forcible compulsion of Pakistan into political union with India.

7. In conclusion I would add that while I fully share your hope that our approach to the United Nations Security Council will help to lay the foundation of friendlier relations between Pakistan and India, it is not possible for us to invite the intervention of the Council on all the matters which you have mentioned. Peace between India and Pakistan is not threatened either by past events or by the entirely imaginary hostile motives that are attributed to us, but by the hostilities that are now in progress in general in Kashmir State between the Indian State Forces on the one hand and the invaders, tribesmen and Pakistan nationals, operating from bases in Pakistan and with assistance drawn from Pakistan, on the other. This is an issue at once clear-cut and urgent, and, unless valuable time is to be wasted on acrimonious debates, this is the issue for the settlement of which the Security Council must, in our opinion, exclusively apply itself.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

Following from Liaquat Ali Khan for Jawaharlal Nehru.

Your statement that India would be completely justified in attacking Pakistan territory on plea of attacking alleged basis of so-called invaders has created situation particularly in districts adjoining Kashmir territory which makes it undesirable that Indian Liaison Officers and troops should operate within 48 hours from following districts:—

Sialkot, Gujrat, Jhelum, Rawalpindi and Campbellpore.

Government of Pakistan will make all necessary arrangements for evacuation of any non-Muslims including abducted women still remaining in pockets.

0029. Cable from Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru to Pakistan Prime Minister Liaquat Ali Khan.

New Delhi, January 9, 1948.

Your telegram of 7th January. My statement that India would be justified in sending troops to Pakistan bases near Kashmir border to stop invaders from entering Kashmir was mere repetition of what I have frequently stated. If India is attacked by people coming from Pakistan or via Pakistan territory, we are entitled to expect Pakistan Government to stop them and prevent invasion of India. If Pakistan Government is unwilling or unable to stop them, then India is necessarily justified in taking measures to stop them herself. We have however avoided taking any such measures because of our earnest desire to prevent further conflict, involving grave consequences. We shall continue this policy unless circumstances compel us to act otherwise. Even now I would request your Government to prevent the use of your territory for purposes of invasion of Indian Dominion territory.

In view, however, of your request we are withdrawing our Liaison Officers and troops from Sialkot, Gujrat, Jhelum, Rawalpindi and Campbellpore districts.
We would request you also withdraw your Liaison Officers and troops from Gurdaspur district.

We trust that your Government will make all necessary arrangements for evacuation of non-Muslims left in pockets and more specially abducted women.
During last few weeks this process has slowed down very greatly on the Pakistan side while we have restored to Pakistan over 2,900 women. We propose to continue our efforts to restore abducted women and would earnestly request you to speed this process in Pakistan.

30. Letter From Deputy Prime Minister Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel to Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru.

New Delhi, January 9, 1948

My dear Jawaharlal,

I am sending you herewith a copy of the report which we have received from a source of the Intelligence Bureau operating at Lahore. You will notice from this that preparations are going on for making the general population war-minded and training it on military lines. It also appears that due to the tribal areas there is no dearth of small arms. It is also likely that a good deal of smuggling has taken place out of our own depots during the time that the Supreme Headquarters were in charge.

2. I do not think we can afford to look at all with any degree of complacency. While I do not propose to assume any alarmist attitude, I do feel that immediate organization and preparation on similar lines on at least the borders of Pakistan would have a salutary effect not only in raising the morale of the people on our side but also in creating a deterrent effect on Pakistan.

If you agree, I feel that the position requires consulation with our Military experts and formulation of some sort of plans for the organization of civil defence in the East Punjab and other border areas. Perhaps the best course would be if we discussed this matter at a meeting of the Defence Committee.

Yours sincerely

ENCLOSURE

REPORT FROM AN INTELLIGENCE BUREAU SOURCE AT LAHORE ON PREPARATIONS FOR MILITARY TRAINING

I had further opportunity to live here and visit Sialkot, Gujranwala, Wazirabad, Hafizabad, Pattoki, Kasur and other places and to meet many people and study the situation.

There is an all-out drive for the enrolment of the National Guards and all the district officers are vigorously engaged in surpassing one another in the number of enrolling able-bodied men for National guards. They have regular printed froms for enrolment and the candidates are accepted after due medical examination. Every city, town, police station headquarter, a big village and groups of small villages are the training centres of these Guards. Batches are seen drilling everywhere one goes with a spirit and proper discipline. In West Punjab alone their number will be over a lakh.
Every one says and thinks that war is inevitable and they are going to fight for Pakistan and defend it to the last man. Even the rich and men in high society and offices are very sincere and keen to sacrifice their all for Pakistan.

As for Kashmir and Jammu, the Pakistan Government and every Muslim is keen to fight to the finish and conquer it at all costs and sacrifice. Their morale is very high. At Sialkot Cantonment I learnt that almost half the troops stationed there had gone to fight on the Jammu front. They are sent in plain clothes and there have been a good many casualties amongst them. The same is the case at other places where troops are stationed Every ablebodied man here is a voluntary soldier with a spirit of free service and sacrifice for his dear Pakistan.

The officers in West Punjab holding key positions and high posts are very sincere and honest in eradicating corruption and inefficiency, but the Minister is both dishonest and inefficient.

The enclosed is a cutting from the C.M.G. [Civil and Military Gazette] which shows how they are infusing Islamic culture and spirit even in the police.

Pathans are still bringing women and cattle to Gujarat from Jammu and Kashmir State and take them further and sell them openly.

Kasur on the Ferozepur-Lahore border is a big refugee centre of Meos. They are encamped there and it is being planned to settle them on the Pakistan border. Majority of them have their country-made arms. They are dying of hunger but their spirits are high.

Rifles and other small arms are being manufactured in large quantities. There are war clouds on head hare and since last ¾ days the situation is very tense.

The reference of the J&K case to the UNO and the Indian Union’s withholding of the Payment to Pakistan have created a great panic.

On the 31st, a Sikh was brutally done to death at the railway station, Lahore Platform, as he was recognized by someone and yesterday, i.e. on the 2nd [January 1948] one Hindu was stabbed in Guru Arjan Nagar outside Shah-Almi Gate, Lahore city.

There is great hatred for Sikhs in the minds of every Mohammedan here.

The Hindus in Amritsar are also not happy about the behavior of Sikhs. This is a fact and I know of instances which prove that Sikhs have also looted Hindus and kidnapped their women in the border districts in Pakistan as well as Hindustan.

I was sorry to read Pakistan's reply to India's case on the Kashmir issue. It is full of lies. I was surprised that any responsible person could make such a statement.

Pakistan's case was that the Government of India, right from the start, was conspiring to destroy Pakistan. This is an absurd thing to say, because if that had been our intention, we would not have accepted partition at all, and would have resisted it with all our might. We agreed to the creation of Pakistan, much against our will, with the hope that when the present bitterness dies down, we would come closer. Of course, we realized that our old relationship, as in an undivided India, could not be re-established, but there was no doubt that the two countries would come closer to each other.

Since partition we have been guided in all our actions by a spirit of settlement with Pakistan. This is clear from the speed and manner in which we settled all outstanding matters between the two Dominions. We could have easily referred all the issues to the Arbitral Tribunal and thus delayed their settlement by months and months. It is, therefore, wrong on anybody's part, be he in the Pakistan Government or outside, to think that we want to absorb Pakistan. India and Pakistan have their own problems to solve, and if today the Pakistan Government were to ask for a reunion, we shall definitely refuse it as we don't want to burden ourselves with the problems they have created for themselves. We do not want a war with Pakistan, or for that matter, with any other country, because we feel that war is bad and also because we want to build up our country. Even talk of war is harmful for us as it creates unnecessary panic. However, this does not mean that we will not prepare ourselves to resist an invasion. But we want peace to develop and strengthen our country. We want to link up the problem of rehabilitation of refugees with our development schemes. In this effort, we want the cooperation of our people.

A tremendous change has also come in our relationship with other nations. People do not seem to realize that Pakistan is now a different country and there are only two methods of dealing with a foreign country. The first is by negotiation and agreement, and the second is through war. There is no middle course. If something untoward happens in Bombay, we can ask our friends there to see that it is set right. Some people, however, seem to think that this Government should give orders to Pakistan. They do not realize that Pakistan is not a part of India.

Policies of important nations in the world are not so much based on justice as on their self-interest. In these critical times only that country counts, that is strong. And so when they see India and Pakistan fighting with each other—Pakistan has not been very strong from the beginning but India is potentially strong—they feel that these two will fritter away their energies and need not be taken seriously.

Some people might claim that they were not to be blamed for anything; it was Pakistan that started it. I know this is so. But that does not mean that we too should stoop down to their level. It is a mistake to think in terms of turning out the Muslims. Even self-interest shows that it is wrong. If Pakistan persists in her policy she will be ruined. We have to understand that in India, for thousands of years, people of many religions have been living peacefully. There are Hindus, Muslims, Sikhs, Christians, Jews and Parsis. Turning out Muslims would mean that we would be following in the foot-steps of Mr. Jinnah. Today, if we started exterminating the Muslims, tomorrow we might start with Christians, Sikhs, Jews and Parsis, and a stage might arise when Hindus would fight among themselves. Our freedom would be short-lived if we were guided by such questionable principles.

“I was shocked to learn of the most dastardly attack on the life of Mr. Gandhi, resulting in his death,” said Quaid-i-Azam Mohammad Ali Jinnah. Governor-General of Pakistan, on hearing the news of the death of Mr. Gandhi.

He added: “There can be no controversy in the face of death. Whatever our political differences he was one of the greatest men produced by the Hindu community and a leader who commanded their universal confidence and respect.

“I wish to express my deep sorrow and sincerely sympathise with the great Hindu community and his family in their bereavement at this momentous, historic and critical period so soon after the birth of freedom for Hindustan and Pakistan.

“The loss to the Dominion of India is irreparable and it will be difficult to fill the vacuum created by the passing away of such a great man at this moment.”

0033. Statement of the Government of Pakistan on the release of 89 aircraft to India.

Karachi, February 2, 1948.

“There is a great deal of misunderstanding regarding the release of 32 Tempest and 57 Spitfire aeroplanes to India, says a Press note issued by the Pakistan Government.

As regards Tempests they were at Drigh Road at the time of partition and, under the partition agreement, were the share of India. In the same manner, Tiger Moth, Harvard and Dakota aeroplanes numbering 54 in all which were the share of Pakistan were in India.

Out of these, Pakistan received 48 aeroplanes and six Tiger Moths are still due. Negotiations for some more Dakotas are going on. Therefore, the Tempests which were allowed to go were the property of India under the agreement and Pakistan was bound to honour the agreement.

The case of the Spitfires is quite different. These were the property of HMG and were sold by the British Government to India. It might be explained here that the British Government offered the Spitfires to Pakistan but they were not required.

Perhaps the confusion and misunderstanding in the public mind would not have occurred if the business of transfer had gone through in the ordinary manner.

But due to the misunderstanding of the intentions of the Government of India in the matter of the transfer of military stores which was accentuated by that Government’s refusal to transfer the Rs.55 crores of Pakistan’s share of the cash balances, the Ministry of Defence detained the Tempests and the Spitfires in Karachi.

The position was clarified at the meeting of the Joint Defence Council on January 11 when categorical assurances were given that Government of India would do all in their power to expedite the transfer of Pakistan’s share of Military stores. The Ministry of Defence then directed that the aeroplanes be released.

0034. Tributes paid to Mahatma Gandhi by the Sind Assembly.

Moving the condolence resolution on the death, of Mahatma Gandhi, the Sind Premier, Mr. Khuhro, said that everyone knew that Mahatma Gandhi devoted and dedicated his entire life to the cause of the freedom of the Indian sub-continent.

He struggled throughout his life for the freedom of the people and he made every possible sacrifice that a human being was capable of. Little did one realize that his efforts would be crowned with success so soon, but on Aug 15 as a result of his able leadership the country was liberated from foreign yoke and the two Dominions established.

The Premier added: “But really speaking his work which was far more important began from August 15. Everyone knows through what things and what conditions people in Indian Dominion—when I say people I refer particularly to Muslims in that Dominion, the minorities as such—were passing through. We know that they had to go through the blood bath. So many innocent people, men, women and children, were killed, massacred and property looted. At that time this man rose to the occasion and he struggled very hard to see that the innocent and helpless minorities are protected. He fasted at Calcutta and at Delhi to save the lives of those minorities.

“I must say that the minorities, particularly the Muslims in the Indian Dominion, were very grateful to him and they owed a great deal to his work from August 15 till the day he breathed his last.

Mearest Thing

“It is indeed, a very sad thing and one of the meanest in the history that the very man who taught the lesson of freedom and Independence to the people of this country should be assassinated by one of his own people. Many people in India hung down their heads in shame when they think what the world will think of them that they became so narrow minded that a person who has been trying to lead them along the right path and who has been trying to maintain and preserve peace between the various communities and nations should be misunderstood and such a mean and dastardly attack should be made on his life.

“His example could well be compared with the great historic figure of Julius Caesar or Jesus Christ. They suffered at the hands of their own men who they came to uplift and improve in their times and in our times he is the example that can be compared.”

Shame for Humanity

Mr. Sirimul Vishindas (Cong) said it has a matter of shame for humanity that Mahatma Gandhi’s life should have been ended like this. He was one of the greatest men of the world and his greatest contribution was to create a sense of manliness and self-respect among Indians. He smashed religious orthodoxy among Hindus. He raised the status of women. He was a saint among politicians and a politician among saints. He was the greatest messenger of Hindu-Muslim unity. He hoped that Mahatma’s death would create such forces of unity and love that would bring the two Dominions together.

Kazi Mohd. Mujtaba, speaking in Urdu said Gandhi was people’s man, and a great friend of workers. His work for betterment of Pakistan and India would be written in letters of gold in history. People might differ from his politics, but nobody would question his sincerity of purpose.

His efforts in the field of Hindu - Muslim unity would be always gratefully remembered by Muslims. He was a great friend of Pakistan.

The speaker said Pakistan should take a warning from the assassination of Mahatma Gandhi by reactionary forces. There were similar forces at work in Pakistan who were exploiting religion for creating disruption. Such forces should be put down by Pakistan Government.

Haji Maula Baksh said the best way to commemorate the Mahatama would be for the two Dominions to come to an agreement and take back minority refugees and provide fullest protection to the minorities.

Mr. Ali Mohammad Mari and Miss Jethi Sipahimaluni and Syed Ali Akbar Shah also supported the resolution.

Associating himself with the sentiments expressed by the various speakers; Syed Mirza Mohammad Shah said the Mahatma ruled the hearts of men. Words could not cover the depth of sorrow which people felt over his assassination. Everybody should follow the path the Mahatma had chalked out for them.

The House then passed the resolution, all members standing, and adjourned for half an hour.

0035. Tributes paid to Mahatma Gandhi by Pakistan Parliament.

Karachi, February 24, 1948.

“He died in the discharge of the duty in which he was engaged. He was a man of Principles and when he was convinced and when he believed that it was his duty he took it up and performed it,” said Quaid-i-Azam Mohammad Ali Jinnah associating himself with the tributes paid to Mahatma Gandhi by all sections of the House when the first session of the Pakistan Parliament began.

[The first session of the Pakistan Parliament began on Monday at 11 a.m. with recitations from the Holy Quran by Maulana Shabbir Ahmed Usmani, Quaid-i-Azam Mohammad Ali Jinnah, the President of the Assembly was in the chair.]

One of Greatest Men

Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan, the Leader of the House then rose to condole the death of Mahatma Gandhi. He said: “It is with a deep sense of sorrow that I rise to make a reference to the tragic death of Gandhi ji. He was one of the greatest men of our times and during the last 30 years he occupied a great and prominent place on the stage of Indian politics. It would be no exaggeration to say that the present strength and greatness which the Congress party enjoys is due solely to the untiring efforts of this great leader.”
The Leader of the House added: “Thirty years ago, Gandhi ji preached the doctrine of non-violence and it is indeed an irony of fate that the man, who had been preaching for 30 years this doctrine, should be the victim of an assassin’s bullet.

“As the house is aware, during the last few months, people of India lost their sanity and communalism in its worst form-murder, rape and arson visited that unfortunate country. Gandhi ji realized that if this cult was to continue, it would mean the ruination and destruction not only of the minorities but of the whole nation.”

“As he was always anxious for communal harmony, he threw himself, heart and soul into this work of establishing communal harmony in India and everyone knows that even at the risk of his life, he carried on his noble mission. The immediate cause of his tragic death was certainly his effort to re-establish communal harmony in India.”

He further said: “All those who are well-wishers of the country, all those who love communal harmony and peace would always remember the supreme sacrifice that Gandhiji made in cause.

“His death, especially at this juncture is an irreparable loss to India and we send our sympathies and deep sense of sorrow to the sister dominion of India in their great bereavement and we hope and pray that what Gandhiji could not achieve in his life, might be fulfilled after his death viz establishment of peace and harmony between the various communities inhabiting this sub-continent. Mr. President, Sir, I will request you to send the sympathies of this House to the peoples of India and Gandhiji’s relations.”

Khwaja Nazimuddin

Khwaja Nazimuddin, the East Bengal Premier said: “I associate myself with the feelings expressed by the Leader of the House. Gandhiji led the freedom movement in the pre-partition India and during 1922, Muslims and Hindus worked together for Indian independence. After partition, Gandhiji recognized that partition was an established fact and he impressed on all Indians that in the interest of both Pakistan and India, it was necessary that the two Dominions should work together in harmony and cooperation.

“It is most unfortunate that at the time he was trying his best to protect the minorities in India, he should have fallen a victim to the bullet of an assassin. I feel that his death is not simply a loss to India; it is a loss to Pakistan too. He was trying to bring about good relations between India and Pakistan.”
Mumtaz Daultana

Mian Mumtaz Daultana, the West Punjab Finance Minister said: “On behalf of the people of the West Punjab, I would like to associate myself with the sentiments expressed on the death of Mahatma Gandhi. We believe that he was killed when he was fighting for a noble cause viz the establishment of communal harmony and peace between various peoples of Hindustan and Pakistan. He realised more than anybody else that only with the establishment of peace and goodwill the two Dominions can prosper.

“Our hearts are full of grief and sorrow at the loss of this great man who by his noble and spiritual greatness enriched the culture of the world. I hope by his death the two peoples of Hindustan and Pakistan will have mutual friendship, concord and goodwill.”

Congress Party Leader

Mr. Sirish Chandra Chattopadhya (Acting Leader of the Congress Party). Said “I fully associate myself with the sentiments expressed by the Leader of the House. This is a matter which is very painful to me, more so because the assassin was a Hindu. I always put this question: “Is this a sample of Hindu culture?”

“The Jews 2,000 years ago crucified Jesus Christ and they are being badly treated by the world today. I do not know how the Hindus will be treated by the world on account of the assassination of Gandhiji by a Hindu.”

He added: “Gandhiji died because he was preaching communal harmony. He was preaching there will be no theocratic state in Pakistan or Hindustan. He was preaching that there will not be a Hindu state in the Indian Union and I think that was the reason for his assassination. Those who wanted a Hindu state were the conspirators to kill Gandhiji. I do not want a Hindu state or a Muslim state. I want a people’s state.”

Further, the acting Leader of the Congress Party said:”He (Gandhiji) was a great man and it is the duty of every Indian to preach communal harmony and finish his unfulfilled mission. If we could do that, good will come out of this evil.”

Sind Premier.

The Sind Premier, Mr. M. A. Khuhro said: “I on behalf of myself and the people of Sind, sincerely and whole-heartedly associate myself with all that has been said by the Leader of the House. Gandhiji was undoubtedly one of the greatest men that the world produced and one of the greatest leaders of our times. He tried hard to achieve independence and freedom for his country from foreign yoke. He struggled for freedom through non-violent means but it is indeed tragic that he was a victim of violence.

"After August 15, when separate independent Dominions of Hindustan and Pakistan had been established, he tried his very best to maintain communal harmony and peace. He did a great work and it was his stay in Delhi that the minorities, especially the Muslims, were saved. Unfortunately his life was cut short and he could not complete his mission.

"Let us hope that the work he left undone will be done by the peoples of India and Pakistan and that the minorities in the Indian Union will be protected and saved from the tyrannies they have experienced so far."

The Quaid-i-Azam then spoke with deep emotion. He said: “I have heard the deep expression of sorrow and grief and I associate myself with the tributes that have been paid to this great man and his greatness. He died in the discharge of duty in which he was engaged. He was a man of principles and when he believed that it was his duty he took it up and performed it.”

He added: “His tragic death, however, much we may deplore and condemn it, was a noble death for he died in the discharge of the duty in which he believed. I will convey the message as desired by you, Mr. Prime Minister, to the Indian peoples in due course.”

0036. Accession of Kalat State to Pakistan

**********

A. Resolution passed by the Diwan-i-Aam of Kalat State declaring its future relations with Pakistan on the basis of a Treaty.

Dhadar (Kalat), February 25, 1948.

“This session of the Diwan-i-Aam (Lower House) maintains the resolution passed by this House on Dec 14, last that all future relationship between Pakistan and Kalat should be on the basis of a treaty.

“The House further resolves that a deputation consisting of the members of both the Houses and the Government should leave for Karachi to negotiate future relations between the two states in the light of the declaration of the former Government of India which recognized the independence of Kalat."

The Khan of Kalat, who inaugurated the session, impressed upon the members that a great responsibility rested upon them. "Whether we can maintain friendly relations with our Muslim neighbor states Pakistan, and get our legitimate rights accepted from her is at stake," he said.

**********

B. Press Note issued by the Pakistan Ministry of Foreign Affairs about the “accession” of certain parts of Kalat State to Pakistan.

Karachi, March 18, 1948.

The States of Kharan, Las Bela and Mekran applied for accession and the accession of all three were accepted by Pakistan, states a Press Note issued by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, Government of Pakistan.

**********

C. Cable of Kalat Foreign Minister to Pakistan’s Foreign Minister Zafrullah Khan requesting him to stop Pakistan Foreign Ministry from taking hostile action against the State.

Quetta, March 20, 1948.

In a cable to Sir, Mahamaddin Zafrullha Khan who is at present presenting Pakistan’s case before the UNO at Lake Success, Mr. Y.D. Fell, Kalat’s Foreign Minister says:

“On March 9, His Highness the Khan of Kalat received a communication on behalf of Quaid-I-Azam Mohammad Ali Jinnah stating that His Excellency the Governor-General of Pakistan had decided to cease to deal personally with Kalat State, and to leave the conduct of the negotiations to decide the future relations of Pakistan and Kalat to the Government of Pakistan.”
“Please take steps so that no illegal or hostile action will be taken against Kalat State by the Foreign Office during your absence.”

In the same cable, Mr. Fell asserts that Las Bela and Kharan are but two feudatory states of Kalat, and Makran is one of its districts.

The Foreign Minister adds: “Kalat desires to reach a satisfactory solution with Pakistan by negotiation and the Government have taken no decision for or against accession and will take no such decision until you have yourself discussed the matter formally with Kalt’s representatives”.

***********

D. Telegram from the Kalat Foreign Minister to the Pakistan Foreign Ministry describing the Pakistan Radio report of accession of Kalat’s feudatories to Pakistan as tendentious.

Quetta, March 20, 1948.

“The attention of the Kalat Government has been drawn to a Radio Pakistan announcement that the Pakistan Government has accepted the accession of Kalat’s two feudatories, Las Bela and Kharan, and the district of Makran. “The Kalat Government request that this report should be immediately and publicly denied. The action reported by the Radio would be contrary to the Standstill agreement concluded last July and recently reaffirmed in the British House to Commons by Mr. Gordon Walker, Under-Secretary of the Commonwealth Relations Office.

“His Highness the Khan of Kalat received a personal communication on behalf of Quaid-i-Azam Mohammad Ali Jinnah stating that relations between Kalat and Pakistan would now be negotiated between the two Governments. A formal approach to the Pakistan Government is under preparation and the Kalat Government would protest strongly against any action in anticipation of the receipt of this.

“Also, it is not expected that Pakistan as a Muslim State, will desire to take any high-handed or unjust action against a Muslim neighbour and on this grounds also, he is confident that this mischievous report will be denied immediately.”
KALAT COMMUNIQUE

Late last night, Star's Quetta correspondent cables, a Press Communique was issued from Kalat House in Quetta. It stated:

"His Highness the Khan feels strongly that Pakistan, as the leading Muslim State and the chief champion of Muslim rights the world over, will be the last State to infringe the rights of a small Muslim neighbour whose ruler and people have both during the fight for Pakistan and since its achievement given valuable co-operation and assistance to her.

"It is however, necessary to explain that Makran is a district of the Kalat State and has no separate status. Las Bela and Kharan are feudatories of Kalat whose foreign policy was placed under the control of the Kalat Government by the British Government last July.

"The rulers of these two States have attempted to evade this control by application for separate recognition to Pakistan. Pakistan has hitherto refused this recognition and has offered to recognize Kalat's control formally in consideration for Kalat's accession to Pakistan; the subject is now under negotiation.

"The Kalat Government does not believe that the Pakistan Government has any intention of anticipating the results of these negotiations and therefore discredits the recent radio announcement.

"As regards the negotiations the position is that informal talks had taken place before and after August 1, 1947, between Quad-i-Azam Jinnah and His Highness the Khan and between representatives of the State and the Pakistan Foreign Office. These negotiations were informal and inconclusive and the Kalat Government is asking that formal negotiations should begin as soon as possible. As these negotiations have not formally begun that Kalat Government does not desire to comment on the questions involved.

"The present relations between Kalat and Pakistan are governed by the standstill agreement negotiated by the then Viceroy of India, Lord Mountbatten, between Pakistan and Kalat. The Kalat Government has honoured this agreement in the letter and spirit and is confident that Pakistan will do the same."

E. Protest lodged by Kalat State with the Pakistan Government on the separated accession of Makran to Pakistan.

Kalat, March 25, 1948.

Kalat lodged a note of protest against Pakistan’s acceptance of the accession of Makran to the Pakistan. The Deputy Premier and Foreign Minister of Kalat Y. D. Fell lodged the protest with the Pakistan Foreign Office. In an interview with Star, Mir Ahmed Yar Khan, the Ruler of Kalat, said: “The question of Kharan and Las Bela is a different issue from Makran. Makran is a district of Kalat and has been under our control for more than 220 years. We will deal with the question of Kharan and Las Bela separately.”

The acceptance of the accession of Makran, he said with emphasis was a direct violation of the Standstill Agreement that existed between Kalat and Pakistan.

“If Pakistan has no justice for us, it is natural that we should look to others, especially the Muslim countries, the International Court of Justice and the UNO, whom we have informed of the developments.”

The Ruler of Kalat repudiated reports of the “gutter Press” that Kalat has any truck with Pakistan’s enemies or that Mr. Y.D. Fell had gone to England in order to approach the United Kingdom to have direct relations with Kalat.

Mr. Fell had gone to England on a personal visit and if he tried to use this opportunity to buy arms for the Kalat police and army and engaged a few retired officers of His Majesty’s Army it was with the knowledge of Pakistan, he said.

Mir Ahmed Yar Khan concluded by saying that a friendly gesture on the part of Pakistan could win greater friendship and assistance from Kalat which she always gave to her unreservedly in the past.

**********
F. Communiqué issued by the Ruler of Kalat acceding to Pakistan.

Quetta, March 28, 1948.

“On the night of March 27, All India Radio, Delhi, announced that two month ago Kalat State had approached the Indian Union to accept its accession to India and that the Indian Union had rejected the request. This news in most surprising and disturbing to me as a Muslim neighbour of Pakistan.

“It has never been my intention to accede to India as my Government or myself never moved the Indian Union either in writing or through any agent that it should accept the accession of Kalat State. A telegraphic request was at once made to the Governor-General of India to contradict the announcement or as an alternative to release to the Press for public information any correspondence that the Indian Union may have received on this subject.

“Prima facie this is nothing but a piece of false propaganda carried on by an interested section in India with two motives behind it: First to spoil the negotiations that are at present being conducted between Pakistan and Kalat and, secondly, to give a false impression to the world that they are right in their policy in respect of Kashmir, Junagadh and Hyderabad (Deccan).

“Let me make it clear in unequivocal terms that no earthly power can separate Kalat and its Ruler from Pakistan as we are all Muslims, followers of the same Prophet (Peace be upon him), believing in the Quran and worshipping a single God. We have to live and die together.

“We perhaps have differences, but not to the extent that may cause disunity and lead to separation. Whatever efforts during the past ten years the Ruler of Kalat has been able to put in under the guidance of the Quaid-i-Azam, for the achievement of Pakistan, are no secret.

“Some time was and perhaps is still required for clarification of difference of viewpoints existing between Kalat and Pakistan.

“But, my very first reaction after hearing the news was that no time should be lost to put an end to the false propaganda and to avoid and forestall the possibility of friction between Muslim brethren in Kalat and Pakistan as result of the mischievous news.

“It is, therefore, declared that (a) from 9 p.m. on March 27, the time I heard the false news over the A.I.R. I forthwith decided to accede to the Dominion of Pakistan; (b) whatever differences of view point at the present exist between Kalat and Pakistan shall be placed in writing before the Quaid-i-Azam whose decision I shall accept.
“I trust that by the grace of God my Sardars and people will welcome the decision taken by me.”

***********

G. Reaction of the Government of India to the Statement of the Ruler of the Kalat State.

New Delhi, March 28, 1948.

The assertion that the Khan of Kalat had made an approach to the Government of India with an offer of accession was made yesterday at a Press conference by Mr. V.P. Menon Secretary of the States Ministry. He said that “Kalat had approached the Government of India through an agent one or two months ago, but we refused to have anything to do with that State.”

Mr. Menon described as “utterly false” the report that there had been “negotiations” between India and Kalat State though Kalat had made an approach. He repudiated the idea that India could think of giving any financial help or bribe.

Mr. Menon added that the Government of India “would not have anything to do” with any state within or contiguous to Pakistan.

H. Editorial in the Dawn: “Kalat’s Accession” to Pakistan

SOMEWWHAT dramatically H.H. the Khan of Kalat has taken the inevitable step and decided to bring the remaining parts of the Kalat confederacy into the Dominion of Pakistan. More than half of the territory had already acceded and Mir Ahmad Yar Khan’s accession affects only residuary Kalat. His decision, because of the delay, the manner of its making, and the preceding circumstances publicly known and unknown, may not create any excess of enthusiasm but it is very welcome. It does clear the atmosphere considerably and eliminates the chance of complication which might have arisen had His Highness continued to follow any other course. To that extent he deserves to be congratulated. A helpful factor which smoothed the path of wisdom was presumably the friendly but unambiguous exposition of what we may call the realities of the situation by the Pakistan Foreign Ministry’s able representative Lt.-Col. A.S.B. Shah who had gone to Quetta for that express purpose. He has been, fortuitously, assisted in his mission by a spokesman of the Indian States Ministry who, by inadvertence or design, blurted out a statement of grave import at a New Delhi Press Conference. One or two months ago, he said, Kalat had approached the Government of India “through an agent” with an offer of accession to the Indian Dominion. His Highness had himself categorically denied earlier unofficial reports to that effect, but this official assertion by the Secretary of the Indian States Ministry put the matter in a very different light. Happily, the Khan of Kalat was prompt in taking in the significance of the matter and decided to give the lie to the Indian assertion not by a mere counter assertion but by positive action which would show his loyalty to Pakistan. In view of this it would be in the nature of an unprofitable post mortem to continue public speculation as to whether such an offer was or was not made to India.

Incidentally, it should be noted how naive the Secretary of the Indian States Ministry, Mr. V.P. Menon, wanted to be when he said that “the Government of India would not have anything to do with any state within or contiguous to Pakistan.” After having accepted the accession of Tripura state which is much more contiguous to Pakistan than to Indian territory, and after having not only engineered the Maharaja’s accession but also started a war of conquest of Kashmir, such a pose ill becomes India. Mr. Menon, we are afraid, met with ill success in trying to make a virtue of necessity.

The Khan of Kalat refers to the existence still of “differences of viewpoint” between himself and the Pakistan Government but gives a categorical undertaking that he will place them in writing before the Quaid-i-Azam “whose decision I shall accept.” It is to be hoped that these differences are not of an insurmountable nature specially as His Highness has now willingly transferred to the Pakistan Government a great deal of responsibility over the affairs of the state. In any case, the Quaid-i-Azam, if he agrees to give once more his personal attention to the question can be depended upon to be fair and just in his decisions, which we imagine, would naturally take into account the situation created by the earlier trouble-free accessions of Kharan, Las Bela and Makran.

On one very important aspect of the prevailing internal situation in Kalat we feel bound to address a special word to His Highness the Khan. His policy having so long been what it was, a particular political organization, the Kalat National Party, has received much encouragement, especially in the last few months. Formerly it was against the Khan but believing that the Khan was opposed to Pakistan it swung over to strong support of him. This was not because they loved the Khan any better than before but because they were bitterly anti Pakistan. The so-called Kalat Nationals are known to be in touch with anti-Pakistan elements in India, and for all one knows, with similar elements elsewhere. They are creating disruption and fomenting an anti Pakistan agitation. Due to the peculiar circumstances which arose recently, the Khan perhaps thought it advisable to encourage them. For the same reason, on the testimony of an impartial British newspaper correspondent who had lately been to Kalat, the States Muslim League has been “virtually banned” in the State. His Highness will realize that a radical change in his attitude and his Governments policy towards these political parties is now called for. Parts of his Press communiqué announcing the accession are splendidly worded, for instance where he declares: “We are all Muslims, followers of the same Prophet (Peace on upon him), believing in the Quran and worshipping a single God. We have to live and die together.” These are noble words. Therefore, His Highness’s first duty, if we may venture to say so, is to put down with an iron hand the disruptors who are talking of “Baluchistan for the Baluchis,” of “Baluch nationalism,” and poisoning the minds of the ignorant tribesmen by such propaganda, which is the very negation of the ideal of “one God, one religion, one people.”

I. Acceptance of accession of Kalat State by Pakistan.

Karachi, March 31, 1948.

The Instrument of Accession, signed by the Khan of Kalat on March 27, was placed before the Quaid-i-Azam Mohammad Ali Jinnah on March 31 and was accepted, says a Press communiqué.

Kalat is composed of three units namely, Jhalawan Sarawan and Kachhi. Fifteen important Sardars from these three areas who are the leaders of the various tribes along with other minor Sardars, formed the Confederacy of which the Khan of Kalat is the head.

Las Bela, Kharan and Makran having already acceded to Pakistan, there will now be four separate independent and sovereign states in Baluchistan, whose Defence, Foreign Affairs and Communications, will be managed by the Government of Pakistan.
With the accession of these four states to Pakistan the land frontiers of the Dominion will run along with Afghanistan for nearly 600 miles and with Iran for nearly 550 miles.

These frontiers were being guarded by Pakistan army even before the accession of these states under the standstill agreements. There were Levy Corps also in these areas.

It is presumed that there will be a reorientation of the Pakistan Government’s policy vis-a-vis these areas. An early change in the administration, on the lines declared by the Quaid-i-Azam in the Sibi Darabar with a new AGG is considered likely. The evolution of a uniform policy towards these four states is being considered by the Pakistan Government.

The position of the leased areas namely Quetta, Bolan, Nazirabad and Nushki is also under consideration by the Government.

0037. Letter of Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru to Prime Minister Liaquat Ali Khan.

New Delhi, March 6, 1948.

My dear Nawabzada,

Will you please refer to your letter dated the 23rd February in which you refer to the alleged violation of Pakistan territory by regular Indian and Kashmir State troops and armed bands of civilians from across the border of Jammu and Kashmir State, and ask that I should use all my influence and authority to stop such raids?

2. I am having the incidents referred to by you very carefully investigated and I shall write to you further about the results of this investigation. I would like to assure you, however, in the meanwhile, that we have given the strictest instruction to our defence forces not to violate Pakistan territory; and the investigation of previous complaints made by you has amply demonstrated that these instructions have been loyally carried out by our troops.

3. I would like in this connection to recall to your mind our conversation when we last met in Lahore at a Joint Defence Council meeting. You then gave me a long list of frontier violations. I pointed out to you that even if the allegations were correct their total effect was insignificant in the context of events in Kashmir. I must frankly repeat that it does seem to me extraordinary that you should send me this complaint at a time when armed raiders from Pakistan and from the tribal area are streaming in thousands into Kashmir territory devastating villages, looting property, murdering people, and abducting large numbers of women.

4. You refer in your letter to Gandhiji’s supreme sacrifice and to the necessity of the best minds in both countries thinking seriously of the gulf between India and Pakistan. I am glad you have referred to Gandhiji and I agree entirely with you that both India and Pakistan should examine and constantly keep in view their conduct in the light of Gandhiji’s approach to the problem. I would inform you, however, that, as I have stated in my statement to the Constituent Assembly this morning, I had had the benefit of the constant advice of Gandhiji in the matter of our handling of the Kashmir situation, and the action that we have taken there had had his full support.

Yours sincerely
Jawaharlal Nehru

0038. Letter from Ministry of External Affairs to Provincial Governments in India regarding arrangements between India and Pakistan for extradition of offenders.

New Delhi, the 10th March, 1948.

No.F23-1/47-OS.V(PAK) March 10, 1948

Government of India
Ministry of External Affairs and Commonwealth Relations
New Delhi

From: T.B. Crossley Esqr., O.B.E., I.C.S., Deputy Secretary to the Government of India.

To: All Provincial Governments and Chief Commissioners.

Extradition of fugitive offenders from Pakistan to India and vice versa under the Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881 – Procedure*.

* While forwarding a copy of this letter to the High Commissioner of India in Pakistan he was instructed to send a copy of this communication to the Government of Pakistan.
Sir,

(With reference to your letter No HPL. 275/47/1, dated the 18th September 1947)
(With reference to the correspondence resting with this Ministry’s letter No. F. 23 – 1/47 – OSV(PAK), dated 18th February 1948) I am directed to say that the Government of India are advised that extradition of offenders as between the Dominions of India and Pakistan, which form part of His Majesty’s Dominions, will be regulated by Part I of the Fugitive Offender’s Act of 1881 read with Section 19 of the Indian Extradition Act, 1903, which by virtue of an Order – in – Council dated the 7th March 1904 is to be recognized, and given effect to, throughout His Majesty’s Dominions, as if it were a part of the Fugitive Offenders’ Act of 1881. The following procedure for the extradition of fugitive offenders from Pakistan to India should accordingly be followed.

The Provincial Government should send to the Government of India for transmission to the Central Government of Pakistan, warrants with duly authenticated copies of depositions and other documents on which they rely to prove that there is a strong and probable presumption that the fugitive committed the offence mentioned in the warrant. The depositions, warrants and document should be authenticated in the manner provided in Section 29 of the Fugitive Offenders’ Act, 1881. The Government of Pakistan, on being satisfied that the warrant has been issued by some person having lawful authority to issue it, will then take action under the Act. After the completion of proceedings the Pakistan Government may then order that fugitive offender be conveyed and produced before the Court in India which issued the original warrant.

The Government of Pakistan have agreed to the procedure outlined above and are issuing similar instructions to the Provincial Governments in Pakistan in this regard.

(The warrant and its accompaniments in respect of Muhammed Ali sent with your letter under reference, are returned herewith for necessary action in accordance with the procedure outlined above. The warrant in respect of the other accused, viz., Ghulam Hussain, has been forwarded to the Ministry of States for necessary action).

The procedure prescribed above should be observed by Indian Provincial Governments in respect of warrants received from Pakistan through this Ministry.

I have the honour to be,

Sir,

Yours most obedient servant

Sd/- T.B. Crossley

Deputy Secretary
0039. Extract from the Interview of Pakistan Governor General Mohammad Ali Jinnah to the Swiss paper New Zurcher Zeitung.

March 11, 1948.

The following is a record of the Interview given by Quaid-i-Azam to Dr. Eric Strelff, special correspondent.

Q. Is there any hope of India and Pakistan coming to a peaceful settlement of their own with regard to their differences and disputes on very vital and important matters?

A. Yes, provided the Indian Government will shed the superiority complex and will deal with Pakistan on an equal footing and fully appreciate the realities.

Q. Is Pakistan going to remain in the Commonwealth of Nations?

A. To begin with that is a matter for the Constituent Assembly of Pakistan to decide, and, secondly, it is obvious that it depends upon so many factors. We have to consider not one side of the business but also see whether by remaining in the Commonwealth of Nations it will be as much as to our advantage as to that of other sister nations in the Commonwealth.

Q. In international affairs, will Pakistan and India work jointly and also join hands for the defence of their border — both land and sea— and cooperate against any outside aggression?

A. Personally, I have no doubt in my mind that our own paramount interests demand that the Dominion of Pakistan and the Dominion of India should coordinate for the purpose of playing their part in international affairs and the developments that may take place, and also it is of vital importance to Pakistan and India as independent sovereign States to collaborate in a friendly way jointly to defend their frontiers both on land and sea against any aggression.

But this depends entirely on whether Pakistan and India can resolve their own differences and grave domestic issues in the first instance. In other words, if we can put our house in order internally, then we may be able to play a very great part externally in all international affairs.

Joint Statement issued by the Premiers of East and West Punjab assuring the people of Peace.

Lahore, June 12, 1948.

The Premiers of the West and the East Punjab, Khan Iftikhar Hussain Khan and Dr Gopi Chand Bhargava, in a joint statement to the Press today assured the people of the two provinces that there was no truth in the rumours regarding anticipated disturbances or large scale border raids on June 15.

They made it clear that the two Governments had issued orders that any person or persons spreading such false rumours would be arrested and dealt with effectively.

The joint statement said: Rumour has lately been current that border attacks and wide-scale disturbances on both sides of the border between the East and the West Punjab may take place on or about June 15. The governments of the East and the West Punjab have been trying to ascertain the basis of such rumours.

It is obvious that these rumours which are false and baseless could not have originated from well-wishers of the two provinces.

We wish to assure the people in the two provinces and, in particular those residing in areas close to the border that there is no danger of border attacks or disturbances and that the two Governments are fully prepared to meet any trouble that may possibly be created by local miscreants and to deal with them effectively. We would therefore, like all people to keep calm and maintain good relations on both sides of the border.

Our Governments have issued orders that any person or persons spreading such false rumours shall be arrested and dealt with effectively.
Letter from Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru to High Commissioner Sri Prakasa regarding relations with Pakistan.

New Delhi, June 16, 1948.

My dear Prakasa,

Thank you for your letter of June 10th. It is a very good report which I have read with interest.

Our relations with Pakistan depend on two major factors, Kashmir and Hyderabad, and certain other matters which are giving us a lot of trouble, notably disputes about canal water and more specially the digging of a water channel by West Pakistan. This digging is most dangerous from our point of view as it will lead to the breach of an embankment and thus to the Ferozepore head works being made rather useless. We had hoped to discuss this matter at the inter-Dominion conference but this has been postponed because Liaquat Ali Khan could not come here yesterday. I am interested to know how far Liaquat Ali Khan's illness was real or feigned. We have sent you a telegram on this subject.

Zafrullah Khan and others wanted to come without Liaquat Ali Khan but we told them not to. I have an intense dislike for Zafrullah which has increased since his utterances at the U.N. Security Council. I am sure his coming here will do no good to anybody.

I have today received a telegram from Liaquat Ali inviting me to come to Karachi for discussions in ten days' time. I am not sending an answer just yet but I have absolutely no intention of going to Karachi. I might at a pinch go to Lahore but even that is very doubtful. It seems to me that these Prime Ministers conferences which we had agreed upon are likely to fade away after Mountbatten goes, unless of course there is a radical change in the situation which is doubtful.

Mountbatten had decided to go direct from Delhi to the Persian Gulf on his way to England without stopping at Karachi. He wanted to avoid landing at Karachi even for refueling chiefly because of Jinnah who might very well have been discourteous. Now Liaquat Ali Khan has specially asked him to go via Karachi so that they might say good-bye to him if only at the airport. In view of the general situation, we are inclined to advise him not to accept this invitation and to skip Karachi.

During the last few days we have been discussing Hyderabad and it seemed that we were on the point of coming to an agreement. In fact, I was almost sure and the Hyderabad representatives here agreed but again, as before, the Nizam has stalled and tried to wriggle out. There are going to be no further discussions. If he does not sign on the dotted line within a day, it might be presumed that there has been a complete breakdown. This has a far-reaching consequence. We did our utmost to avoid this. Probably by tomorrow I shall give out all the facts to the press.

I have little doubt that Hyderabad has been hand in glove with Pakistan and it is Pakistan that has prevented them from coming into line with us. We have received definite information of a dispatch of two planes from Karachi to Hyderabad full of war material.

Regarding Kashmir the position is also a serious one in the sense that we are fighting the Pakistan regular army now. I have sent two telegrams I think, to Liaquat Ali Khan giving particulars about Pakistan Army’s functioning in Kashmir and have had no satisfactory reply. My own impression is that Liaquat Ali Khan refused to come here yesterday because it was inconvenient for him to discuss about Kashmir and the Pakistan Army’s functioning there.

I wonder if you have heard about G.K. Reddy, the Kashmir A.P. man and who later became the Director of Publicity of the ‘Azad Kashmir’ Government. After some months there he escaped via Karachi and he has given us a very full account of the way Pakistan has been running the Kashmir show, both politically and militarily. It is a very revealing account. It has appeared almost in full in Blitz newspaper of Bombay.

We do not propose to weaken in Kashmir and we shall fight on, Pakistan or no Pakistan. Indeed, we would have swept the whole place clear but for the intrusion of large numbers of Pakistan troops. The U.N. Commission will be coming here no doubt probably within two or three weeks. The fact that Pakistan is regularly fighting there will rather upset the case that Zafrullah tried to build up.

Yours sincerely
Jawaharlal Nehru.

0042. Communiqué issued by the Pakistan Ministry of Foreign Affairs regretting Indian Prime Minister’s Speech at Madras.

It is with the deepest regret that the Government of Pakistan have read the account of the Prime Minister of India, Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru’s speech* at Madras on July 25 in which he has accused Pakistan of basing her policy on falsehood and deceit, says a Press Communiqué issued by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Commonwealth Relations, Government of Pakistan.

The Communiqué adds: He has left no one in doubt with regard to his attitude towards Pakistan. Only recently on July 25 at Pathankot on the opening of the new Pathankot-Jammu Road he indulged in similar objectionable language. Nothing could be more ill-advised than these irrational and dictatorial assertions and nothing could be less conducive to the spirit of goodwill which throughout it has been Pakistan’s endeavour to achieve between the two Dominions.

His utterances pay scant respect to the spirit of the Calcutta Inter-Dominion Agreement and to the earnest appeal of the United Nations Commission that both Dominion should refrain from making or causing to be made any statement likely to aggravate the situation.

The Government of Pakistan are of the view that no useful purpose would be served by taking serious notice of Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru’s accusations and do not purpose to indulge in polemics with the Government of India.

It is evident that Pandit Nehru is still unable to accept the fact of Partition and that his and other Indian leaders consent to Partition was given with mental reservations which are now being revealed.

* Speaking in Madras on July 25 Prime Minister Nehru had accused the Pakistan Government of “building their policies on lies, falsehood and deceit.” Regarding Pakistan’s case in the UNO, he said that “Pakistan had achieved a remarkable capacity for piling falsehood upon falsehood.” On the partition he said: “We cut off something from the living body of India and it will take a long time for us to smile through it.” Adding he said partition came with “our consent. We are consenting party to it. We shall abide by what we have consented to. We consented because we thought that thereby we were chasing peace and goodwill though at a heavy price”. But he regretted that “we did not get that peace and goodwill, but got something terrible instead and I do not know if I have the same choice today what I would decide. But that is a foolish speculation because history cannot be unwritten. There is no going back on the decisions made”. He however added that if Pakistan and leaders of Pakistan wanted suddenly to join India to reverse that process of history, I am quite clear in my mind that we would not accept it for the present. For the present “if Pakistan wanted to join India and to undo that partition, we would not accept that”.

So long as this attitude persists no number of Inter-Dominion conferences can succeed in establishing normal and neighbourly relations between the two Dominions which Pakistan so earnestly seeks.

Whatever damage to the cause of peaceful settlement of disputed matters may have been done by Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru's aggressive diatribe, the Government of Pakistan will continue in every way possible to strive for the establishment of goodwill and good-neighborly relations between the two Dominions.

0043. Cable of Indian Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru to Pakistani Prime Minister Liaquat Ali Khan.

New Delhi, September 24, 1948.

In my telegram Primin 1619 dated 24th September regarding protection of minorities, I welcomed your approach and assured you of our willingness to cooperate sincerely in finding a satisfactory and lasting solution. You will agree that if your efforts are to succeed the right atmosphere must be created. From this standpoint, I wish to draw your attention to reports which, since 20th August, have been appearing in certain Pakistan newspapers. Following are examples:

1. Daily Inquilab, Lahore, dated 27th August 1948, referred in its editorial to “Jumma Masjid and Balli Maran* in Delhi as scenes of disturbances in which Muslims had paid with their lives”.

2. Daily Musalman, Karachi, in issue of 22nd August, published a front page news item under banner headlines: “General massacre of Muslims in Delhi is going on for the last one week; attacks on Muslims in streets and in trams; JONCM – a plan to surround the Muslims on all sides and exterminate them.”

3. Anjam of Karachi, 25th August, published an item under headlines: “Muslim blood flowed like water in the streets of Delhi.”

4. Musalman, Karachi, dated 8th September published news item: “Excited

* In yet another cable on 28 September Mr. Nehru drew attention of Pak Prime Minister to some of the editorials and Cartoons in the Dawn and said they “persistently represent me, my colleagues and the people of India as bitter enemies of Pakistan while cartoons offend every conception of decency.”
Hindu crowd fell upon Muslims at Sholapur – 16 Muslims killed." Same paper, dated 10th September, published news item: “Bloody clashes among Hindus and Sikhs in Delhi resulted in attacks on Muslims.”

(5) Inquilab, Lahore, dated 28th August, alleged that “100 Muslims detraining at Agra were killed by Sikh beasts.”

(6) Musalman, dated 22nd August, alleged that “12 to 30 Muslims were being killed every day in Calcutta in solitary attacks.”

(7) Daily Safina, Lahore, dated 1st September, published news item under banner headlines: “Communal riots break out in Colaba; District in grip of murder, loot and arson.”

(8) Ehsan, Lahore, dated 5th September, spoke of communal frenzy sweeping over States acceding to the Indian Union, and mentioned inter alia States of Mysore and Rampur.

(9) Sind Observer of 18th September talked of over 30,000 Razakars laying down their lives in front of advancing tanks, besmearing angry teeth of these tanks.

(10) Both Dawn and Sind Observer spoke of Muslims being gagged and removed to British regime prisons, India armies committing inhuman atrocities in name of establishing order and surpassing British treatment of Indians as filth after mutiny of 1857, complaint of maltreatment attracting bullets which silence complainants forever.

2. Everyone of these reports whether about India or Hyderabad is absolutely without foundation. In Delhi, for example, not a single incident has occurred for months. Razakars were killed in course of military operations and number killed is approximately 1200. There has been no gagging of peaceful Muslims or removal of any law-abiding person to prison, whether in Hyderabad or in India, and atrocities alleged against Indian troops are baseless slanders. Indeed, throughout critical days during which hostilities lasted in Hyderabad, there was not one single communal incident anywhere in Indian Union, and innumerable messages of appreciation received by me from Muslims and Muslim organizations from all parts of India prove that there was no need to ‘gag’ anyone. In Hyderabad State, no law-abiding citizen, Muslim or non-Muslim, has suffered in any way nor has he any cause for fear.

3. I have mentioned these reports because it seems only natural that they should embitter Muslim opinion in Pakistan and, because of their baselessness, produce similar effect on opinion in India also. You will agree that if we wish to create right atmosphere for better relations between our two countries, including safeguarding of position of minorities, every effort should be made to stop publication of false news. We are and have been doing everything possible on our side to achieve this, and I would appeal to you to use your great influence for similar purpose in Pakistan.

0044. Letter of the Indian Deputy Prime Minister Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel to S. H. Suhrawardy apprising him about Hate Campaign in Pakistan against India.

New Delhi, September 28, 1948.

My Dear Suhrawardy,

Thank you for your letter of 21 September 1948. I am so glad to read what you say about Hyderabad. On the question of Hyderabad, as distinct from Kashmir, the Indian Muslims have come out in the open on our side and that has certainly created a good impression in the country. With our success in Hyderabad we have removed one great source of potential mischief in the communal sphere. If we can similarly get Kashmir out of the way, both Muslims and non-Muslims in India could settle down in perfect peace and harmony.

2. As regards Pakistan, I have been closely watching developments there and I am sorry to find that the poison of hate which the League was spreading in India is being continued with redoubled vigour in Pakistan. I do not know if you had occasion to read the Urdu papers of West Pakistan, during the last three months particularly. All sorts of lies and base lies have been appearing in Urdu papers of inventing facts about communal disharmony and massacres of Muslims in the Indian Dominion and widely exaggerated stray incidents disturbing communal peace that have occurred. It seems to me that the Pakistan Government are either unwilling or unable to check this propaganda and, therefore, it is a part of a well-conceived plan to malign India in order to divert the attention of their people from their domestic difficulties to an imaginary enemy in India.

At the same time, the Prime Minister of Pakistan has the cheek to proffer his hand of friendship to India and to boast that so far Pakistan has been alone in extending the hand of friendship. I do not know what we can do to influence the leaders of Pakistan in this matter. From your own experience both Karachi and in East Bengal, it is quite clear that no opposition is tolerated.

Yours sincerely,

Vallabhbhai

0045. Letter from Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru to Pakistan Prime Minister Liaquat Ali Khan regarding condition in the North West Frontier Province.

New Delhi, October 3, 1948.

My dear Nawabzada,

I am writing to you after considerable hesitation. Indeed it is only after some weeks of thought that I have at last decided to write to you on this subject. I hesitated because I was afraid that I might be misunderstood. But I feel so strongly on this subject that I am impelled to write to you.

I am writing about conditions in the Frontier Province which, from all accounts, are very bad. I have no desire whatever to interfere in any way in Pakistan’s internal affairs. But I would be less than human if I was not powerfully affected by the kind of news that is reaching us, of the oppression and persecution of the Khudai Khidmatgars in the Frontier Province and more specially of Khan Abdul Ghaffar Khan, Dr. Khan Saheb and other old colleagues of ours, who have played such a notable part in the struggle for the independence of this country. Men of their stature compel respect and if they are treated with cruelty, all those who respect them and have affection for them must necessarily suffer pain.

Allegations have been made by the Pakistan Government about the Khan Brothers and the Khudai Khidmatgars keeping contacts with us here, receiving money, and being encouraged by us to adopt a rebellious attitude towards Pakistan. These allegations have been made without any reference to us or enquiry from us. If you had enquired, we would have told you that these allegations are completely without foundation. Even before the partition took place, our advice to them was to accept it fully and to function in accordance with it. Since the partition there have been no contacts at all between us and the Khan Brothers. Because of old friendship and comradeship I would have liked to write to them and receive letters from them. But I refrained from writing as I thought this might lead to misunderstanding. Whether you believe it or not, I can assure you that there have been no contacts between them and us.

But contacts or no contacts, we cannot forget old friendship, nor can we remain unaffected that our old comrades should be subjected to unfair and harsh treatment. The accounts that reach me of the state of affairs in the Frontier Province amaze me, for this appears to be worse than at any time under British rule.

You have often addressed me in regard to reports of persecution of Muslims in India. I do not know what sources of information you may have. But I do know that the situation in India has improved beyond recognition and there is no persecution of Muslims anywhere in India. Petty incidents may occur in some places and they are dealt with immediately and sternly. I am happy to say that Hindu-Muslim relations in India have stabilized themselves after the shock of the events that followed partition, and that they are improving with marked rapidity. I have no apprehension on that score, though even so we keep vigilant.

I have denied in public and I wish to deny again in private that India has no aggressive intentions against Pakistan. It grieves me to see baseless reports made about conditions in India, or India’s intention to be aggressive. The Pakistan press is full of these baseless reports put forward in a manner which is astonishing. One has the impression of a deliberate campaign being waged to worsen Indo-Pakistan relations and perhaps to bring about a conflict. So far as we are concerned, our policy is entirely opposed and we shall avoid conflict. All this, however, leads to distrust, ill-will, fear and an excited state of mind. This is not a good background for any country.

I would repeat again that I am full of apprehension and am greatly concerned about the Khan Brothers and the Khudai Khidmatgars. I am writing to you in my personal capacity and I am thinking of this problem not as a political one but as a human one. I trust that you will take this letter in the spirit in which it is written and will pay attention to the conditions in the Frontier Province, which cannot redound to the credit of Pakistan and which may well lead to very grave bitterness and the consequences of such bitterness*

Yours sincerely

Jawaharlal Nehru

* In his reply dated 15 November 1948, Liaquat Ali Khan stated that the action against the Khan Brothers and the Khudai Khidmatgars by the local authorities was taken “after the most careful consideration” and also having in view the internal security and integrity of Pakistan.
There is, I am afraid, only a superficial change in our relations with Pakistan. You must have read the many friendly references to Pakistan made in the Prime Minister’s speeches and broadcasts. The Pakistan Prime Minister’s reply was typical of him and the new State. In asking for deeds rather than words, he was merely quoting scriptures, and he has tried to make out as if Pakistan was doing the best it could to maintain friendly relations, and it [was] we who were setting all these well-intended efforts at naught. The Pakistan Government also seem to have fallen a victim to the familiar Nazi disease of seeing enemies all round themselves. The hysterical search for fifth columnists which seems to have been started in the typical Hitlerian fashion has the appearance of another excuse to drive out the comparatively few non-Muslims that are left there. In this Government is being supported in season and out of season by a warmongering Press. False and virulent anti-Indian propaganda, full of hate and venom, is being put across, particularly by the Urdu Press against Indian leaders and Central and provincial Governments. The Home Ministry have issued a Press note which gives some glaring examples of such propaganda. The Pakistan Government have endeavoured to counter these allegations, but in a comparison their case would hardly stand scrutiny, both from the point of view of importance of newspapers and their contents. Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan has sent a couple of telegrams to the Prime Minister professing friendship and peaceful sentiments, but he has taken care to emphasize that the Kashmir issue must be settled to their satisfaction. It is obvious that we cannot purchase peace at the expense of Kashmir. But from the oft-repeated references to a settlement of the Kashmir issue which he makes, it seems quite clear that Kashmir is rankling in their breasts. In the meantime, annoyances of all kinds continue, typical of which are the restrictions imposed on East Punjab Liaison staff in Lahore and the frequent incidents they create in the Patharia forest reserves on the borders of Assam and East Bengal.
0047. Cable of Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru to the Deputy Prime Minister Vallabhbhai Patel.

Had long private interview with Liaquat Ali Khan. Discussed Kashmir situation. No progress made in spite of repeated assurance on each side of necessity for peaceful settlement. Differences basically too great to be bridged over. Liaquat Ali would not agree to United Nations Commission’s Resolution as it is, unless terms plebiscite settled... He insisted on Security Council’s conditions for plebiscite to be accepted by us or in alternative, for full powers to be given to Plebiscite Commissioners to lay down any conditions they choose. I told him it was impossible for us to hand over any governmental functions to Plebiscite Commission though they can exercise full supervision over plebiscite. We parted with assurance of goodwill and of further exploration of avenues for settlement...

2. Discussed East Bengal exodus. Liaquat Ali said he was entirely opposed to this and would like to do all in his power to prevent it. He proposes to tour East Bengal for ten days from about 18th November. He wants to meet minority leaders and discuss situation with them and would like them to speak quite frankly to him about their difficulties. Would also like to meet Premier West Bengal. He said he considered it his sacred duty to satisfy minorities.

3. I drew Liaquat Ali’s attention to the false and malicious accounts in Dawn newspaper about occurrences in Hyderabad. He said that while they might be exaggerated he himself had received information from Hyderabad which was very distressing. I told him that Hyderabad had been, was and is astonishingly quiet and peaceful and information freely came from it without any censorship. He was under idea that there was strict censorship. He said that it would allay anxiety if Pakistan High Commissioner in Delhi could visit Hyderabad and report. I pointed out that official visit of this kind might be undesirable but there was no bar to neutral observers going there.

Karachi, November 8, 1948.

I came back to Karachi from London the day before yesterday. This conference of the Commonwealth Premiers and representatives, to attend which I had gone to London, was important in many respects.

It will not be wrong to say that the conference was successful and it is hoped that its results will be useful for all.

The greatest advantage of this conference was that the leaders of the Commonwealth had occasion to meet one another and the discussions between us resulted in the understanding by respective participants of one another’s problems.

I had sufficient opportunity of placing before the conference the Pakistan’s point of view and the leaders who participated in the conference are now fully informed about Pakistan’s affairs and point of view.

There was much of plain speaking in our discussions. No attempt was made from any quarter to shirk from tackling a problem simply because it was ticklish.

It is very reassuring and encouraging that every statesman whom I met took a keen and sympathetic interest in the affairs of Pakistan and fully appreciated what the people of Pakistan had achieved in one year.

Everyone told me that he was highly impressed by the courage and determination shown by our people and that it was highly commendable that the people of Pakistan, beset by difficulties on all sides, patiently faced every kind of misfortune and did not lose courage. Many people assured me that they had not the slightest doubt about the future and the success of Pakistan because the nationals of this State have given proof of a determination which have few parallels.

The Muslims in the Middle East look upon Pakistan with brotherly affection and held this Dominion in high esteem. Pakistan, Egypt and other Islamic countries can do a great deal for each other. The only solution of the difficulties through which the Muslim world is passing these days is unity of thought and action amongst the Muslim States.
Fortunately, for centuries our relationship has been of a nature conducive to perfect unity and co-operation. Besides there are many other factors which bring us nearer to each other.

The majority of us profess Islam in faith and we have all inherited Islamic culture and civilisation. It seems that Muslim countries are fully conscious of it. My discussions in Cairo have been, therefore, very hopeful.

Talks with Nehru

In London and in Paris I met the Prime Minister of India, Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru, on several occasions, when the subject of discussion was mostly Kashmir.

At this stage I do not consider it proper to go into the details of these discussions, but I made it abundantly clear to Nehru and others who discussed the Kashmir issue with me that the only just solution of this problem was to admit the right of the people of Kashmir to express their free opinion about the question of its accession to Pakistan or India.

“No Coercion”

No coercion should be exercised on these people. India believes in democracy, so does Pakistan. There is no reason why the people of Kashmir should not be allowed to decide their own future?

I made it perfectly clear that under no circumstances Pakistan will be a party to forcing the people of Kashmir to make their choice.

0049. Extracts from the Agreement reached at the Inter-Dominion Conference discouraging any sort of propaganda against each other.

New Delhi from 6th to 14th December 1948.

3. Any propaganda for the amalgamation of Pakistan and India or of portions thereof including East Bengal on the one hand and West Bengal or Assam or Cooch Bihar or Tripura on the other, shall be discouraged.

N.B. – The word “propaganda” shall be taken as including any organization which might be set up for the purpose.

4. (i) Both Governments recognize that the wholehearted cooperation of the Press is essential for creating a better atmosphere and therefore agree that every effort should be made, in consultation with the representatives of the Press, wherever possible, to assure that the press in each Dominion does not

(a) Indulge in propaganda against the other Dominion,

(b) Publish exaggerated versions of news of a character likely to inflame, or cause fear or alarm to the population or a section of the population in either Dominion,

(c) Publish material likely to be construed as advocating a declaration of war by one Dominion against the other Dominion or suggesting the inevitability of war between the two Dominions.

(ii) An Inter-Dominion Information Consultative Committee should be set up to meet once in two months, or more frequently if necessary, alternately in Delhi and Karachi and keep under review the activities of –

(a) The Press,

0050. Record of the decisions of the first meeting of the Inter – Dominion Information Consultative Committee regarding Press.

Present:

INDIA

The Hon‘ble Shri R.R. Diwakar, Minister of State, Information & Broadcasting…….. (Leader).

Shri B.L. Sharma.
Shri M.R. Bhide, Home Secretary, East Punjab Government.
Shri Durga Das Representatives of the Press.
Shri Tushar Kanti Ghosh Representative of the Press.
Shri J. Natarajan, Alternate.
Shri M.L. Chawla, Adviser.

PAKISTAN

The Hon‘ble Khawaja Shahabuddin, Minister for Interior, Information & Broadcasting….. (Leader).

Mr. S.M. Ikram.
Mr. Nur Ahmad, West Punjab.
I. Implementation:

The Committee reviewed the measures taken to implement the relevant terms of the Delhi Inter Dominion Agreement. The Committee was of opinion that appropriate action had been taken by both the Dominions and that further action should be taken on the lines indicated below. It was also agreed that in order to ensure implementation on identical lines the two Governments should keep each other informed of the action taken by them.

II. The Press:

(i) The Committee felt that there was some improvement in the tone of the Press, particularly English. There was, however, considerable scope for further improvement. As editorial comments were often influenced by statements made by leaders of public opinion, the Committee thought that it would be useful to seek their active co – operation in the matter. Accordingly it was decided that relevant extracts from the Inter – Dominion Agreement arrived at in Delhi in December last should be printed and distributed by Governments in each Dominion to political leaders, members of legislatures, editors of newspapers, publishers, text book committees, film producers etc. The extracts should be issued with a suitable covering letter of appeal from the Hon’ble Minister in charge of Information in each Dominion.

(ii) Representatives of the Press agreed to exchange voluntary Press codes adopted by A.I.N.E.C. and P.N.E.C. with a view to evolving a common code for consideration and adoption by the two organizations. They also agreed that newspapers in either Dominion should respect the sovereignty of the other Dominion and avoid comments prejudicial to the maintenance of harmonious relations between the two Dominions.

(iii) Tele-printer circuit between Lahore and New Delhi: In order to facilitate the transmission of news on the circuit, the two delegations agreed to bring the matter to the notice of their respective Communications Ministers.

0051. Record of the decisions of the 1st meeting of the Inter – Dominion Information Consultative Committee regarding matters other than Press.

PRESENT:

INDIA

The Hon’ble Shri R.R. Diwakar, Minister of State for Information & Broadcasting … (Leader).
Shri B.L. Sharma.
Shri M.R. Bhide, Home Secretary, East Punjab Government.
Shri M.L. Chawla, Adviser.

PAKISTAN

The Hon’ble Khwaja Shahabuddin, Minister for Interior, Information & Broadcasting … (Leader).
Mr. S.M. Ikram.
Mr. Nur Ahmad, West Punjab.
Mr. Mohammad Sarfaraz, Adviser.

I.  Broadcasting.

(i) Trends in broadcasts by All India Radio and Radio Pakistan were reviewed and the Committee agreed that the two organizations had generally observed the terms of the Agreement. It was further agreed that the two organizations should look into the few instances of alleged violation pointed out in the course of discussions. The Committee felt that, being Government organizations, Radio Pakistan and All India Radio should have no difficulty in fully carrying out the terms of the Agreement and that any undesirable tendencies should be avoided, or rectified, if brought to the notice of the authorities concerned.

(ii) The Committee agreed that normally there should be no ban on Radio listening – in (private or public) but the Committee recognized that in the interest of law and order it might be necessary for the local authorities to impose a ban in a particular locality, for a temporary period.

(iii) With regard to broadcasts by Jammu, Srinagar and Azad Kashmir Radio Stations, it was agreed that Governments of the two Dominions should use their good offices to bring about an improvement in their tone. The Government of India would request Jammu and Kashmir Government for a report on the complaints brought to its notice about its broadcasts; the Government of Pakistan would obtain a similar report from the Azad Kashmir Radio.

II. FILMS:

(i) The Committee considered the films to which either Dominion had taken exception. It was agreed that ‘Kashmir Story’ by Col. Gandhy, if still being exhibited, would be withdrawn and amended before further exhibition, if necessary. The Committee was informed that the Bombay Board of Film Censors’ report about ‘Lahore’ was still awaited by the Government of India. The Government of Pakistan agreed to make enquiries about the film called ‘Inqilab – e – Kashmir’ and to get it amended before further exhibition, if necessary. The Committee was informed that the film ‘Kashmir Hamara Hai’ which was released in August last had been previewed by the Director of Advertising, Films and Publications of the Government of Pakistan and amended and that its title had been changed to ‘Jang – e – Azadi’. It was, however, agreed that the Pakistan Government would make further enquiries and if necessary, have the film amended. The Public Relations Officer attached to the Indian High Commissioner in Karachi or to the Deputy High Commissioner in Lahore would see the film entitled ‘The Pakistan – First Year’ when released, and bring objectionable portions if any, to the notice of the Pakistan Government.

(ii) On receipt of the necessary details from the Government of Pakistan, the Government of India would make enquiries about a drama alleged to have been staged by Prithvi Raj Kapur in the Opera House in Bombay.

III. BOOKS AND PUBLICATIONS.

(i) The Committee agreed to recommend that Government publications produced before or after the Delhi Agreement which involved an infringement of the Agreement should be withdrawn from circulation and that this recommendation should be submitted to the Cabinet in each Dominion for approval.

(ii) It was also agreed that catalogues of publications issued by Ministry of Information & Broadcasting Division of the Government of Pakistan should be exchanged every month for selection of publications to be supplied free and/or on payment. The same procedure should apply to the exchange of publications issued by the Publicity Departments of Provincial Governments in either Dominion.

(iii) Each Dominion will bring to the notice of the other Dominion, objectionable non–Official publications produced in that Dominion for suitable action.
(iv) The Committee agreed that text books involving infringement of the Delhi Agreement should not be prescribed or recommended and that authors of text books should be requested – through the respective Ministries of Education – to include matter calculated to improve relations between the two Dominions.

(v) It was agreed that the book ‘An Ideal Constitution of India’ published by the Unity Party will be supplied by the Government of Pakistan to the Government of India for such action as is considered appropriate.

IV. POSTER:

Posters which contravene the spirit of the terms of the Agreement should not be allowed to be displayed.

V. MISCELLANEOUS:

(i) The Committee recommended that a comprehensive general appeal, in identical language, should be simultaneously issued by each Government to the Press, authors, publishers, religious divines, public leaders etc., after the recommendation of the Committee in III (i) above has been approved by the Cabinet in each Dominion.

(ii) Monthly reports indicating the action taken by each Dominion to implement the relevant clauses of the Delhi Agreement will be exchanged between the two Governments. However, serious breaches of the Agreement will be brought to the notice of the Govt. concerned as and when they arise.

0052. Statement by Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru in Parliament in answer to a question regarding Pakistani allegation of Indian involvement in the attempt to murder the Premier of the NWFP.

New Delhi, March 19, 1949.

Yes, the attention of the Government has been drawn to the communiqué issued by the North West Frontier Province Government in which various allegations have been made about a plot in which Red Shirts in the Hazara District are said to be involved. Government has seen this communiqué with surprise and great regret. While the communiqué does not mention the Government of India specifically, the entire wording of the communiqué insinuates that the Indian Union is a party to some plot against the North West Frontier Province Government and the Pakistan Government and it is stated that money has passed from India to the Red Shirts. So far as they are concerned, the Government of India repudiate these allegations and they have made a strong protest to the Pakistan Government in regard to the insinuations contained in the communiqué of the North West Frontier Province Government, which must have an injurious effect on the relations between the two Dominions.

2. Government have refrained from expressing any opinion so far in regard to the very serious happenings in the Frontier Province as well as the tribal areas in the North-West because of their desire not to interfere, in any way, with the internal affairs of other Governments. They have, however, viewed these developments during the past year with increasing concern. It is well known that the Khudai Khidmatgars, or the Red Shirts as they are sometimes called, under the leadership of Khan Abdul Ghaffar Khan and Dr. Khan Sahib, played a very notable part in the struggle for the freedom of India from foreign domination. The high integrity, selflessness and patriotism of these leaders have been admired not only all over India but in other parts of the world. They showed a remarkable example of peaceful action, even under the greatest provocation, and set a standard which it was not easy to follow even in other parts of India. Khan Abdul Ghaffar Khan took the doctrine of non-violent action to the brave and warlike Pathans and turned their great energy into peaceful channels. Perturbed by the partition of India, he nevertheless accepted it in all sincerity and publicly declared his adherence to the new order of things, claiming, however, that the Pathans were entitled to autonomy in regard to their internal affairs. He followed this policy of accepting Pakistan, but at the same time standing peacefully for the internal freedom of the Pathans, and it is impossible for any person acquainted with this gallant fighter for freedom to believe that he can be associated in any way with any underhand activities. His outstanding qualities are straightforwardness, integrity, courage and devotion to the cause of his people.

* The question was raised by Deshbandhu Gupta enquiring whether the attention of the Government had been drawn to a communiqué issued by the N.W.F.P. Government and what action the Government proposed to take in the matter. The communiqué, issued on 14 March 1949, stated: “A heinous plot of murdering the Frontier Prime Minister has been unearthed and it had been found that Red Shirts in Hazara district have been continuously passing information to the Indian Union and Sheikh Abdullah to checkmate efforts of Pakistan to bring Kashmir within Pakistan.” It accused India of sending money to the Khudai Khidmatgars with a promise to send more on the completion of the plot.

3. While the Government and the people of India, having accepted partition and its consequences, loyally abided by these changes and did not wish to interfere in the local happenings within Pakistan, it was impossible for them not to take the deepest interest in the fate of some of the bravest and finest soldiers of freedom that India had produced. They were distressed, therefore, at the series of happenings in the Frontier Province during which intense repression took place of the peaceful Khudai Khidmatgars, and their leaders were more especially subjected to treatment of a kind which one would not expect any Government to mete out. Khan Abdul Ghaffar Khan, a man of the highest standing for a generation past in India, has been kept in solitary confinement for over a year and his health has suffered greatly during this period. I do not wish to recount all that has happened in the Frontier Province during this past year and more, but the tale that has reached us from time to time is a sorry one. We have remained quiet and we have not had any kind of contact with the Khudai Khidmatgars or their leaders ever since the partition, but the sufferings of our old comrades of the days of our fight for India's freedom have distressed us exceedingly.

4. In the communiqué issued by the North West Frontier Province Government Sheikh Abdullah and Kashmir have been mentioned. It will be remembered that the Frontier Province Government, and more particularly its Premier, played a very active part in organizing and helping the raiders to enter Kashmir in October 1947 and onwards. In particular it is well known that its activities in regard to Kashmir have been most objectionable.

5. In conclusion, I would like to repeat that we regard the communiqué issued by the North West Frontier Province Government as unwarranted by fact and unfortunate in its effect on Indo-Pakistan relations which we have been trying to improve.

0053. Record of the meeting between Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru and Finance Minister of Pakistan Ghulam Mohammad.

New Delhi, April 1, 1949.

I met Mr. Ghulam Mohammad this evening and had about 45 minutes talk with him. He began by referring to a telegram I had sent to Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan about Dawn’s comment on our proposals to have a customs union. He drew my attention to Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan’s reply*, which has just come. He told me that they were eager to remove customs barriers between India and Pakistan, but that this could not be done in a hurry. We had to proceed gradually and step by step. He said that he would speak to Mr. Neogy (the Commerce Minister of India) about it.

2. He referred to Khan Abdul Ghaffar Khan and to the letter I have written to Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan on this subject. All he said was that Abdul Ghaffar Khan was not in solitary confinement, he was provided with books and newspapers, and that he had not lost weight.

3. I mentioned Noakhali to him and the arrest of some workers of the Gandhi Ashram. He said that he was very sorry to learn this and some people in East Bengal were very foolish and misbehaved. He could hardly believe that people connected with Gandhiji would be guilty of what had been alleged. The matter was being referred to the Governor-General of Pakistan.

4. He talked generally about the situation in China and the growth of communism in Asia. This required close cooperation between India and Pakistan as well as far-reaching agrarian reforms. The communist movement in Asia was essentially an agrarian movement and fed on backward social conditions. This could only be met by agrarian reform and socialized farming.

5. He then referred to the tension between Afghanistan and Pakistan. He assured me that Pakistan had not spent a pie in trying to create disorder in India. I told him that if he thought India had been spending money in creating disorder on the Frontier or elsewhere, he was very much mistaken. He said that if there was trouble in Afghanistan or on the border, India’s interests would also be affected and the Soviet would probably take possession of a certain frontier area in Afghanistan.

* Liaquat Ali Khan wrote on 1 April that Dawn was not controlled by the Pakistan Government and that the two articles mentioned by Nehru were mainly a criticism of the policy followed by the Pakistan Government, which favoured economic cooperation and collaboration "with India to mutual advantage." But he doubted India’s sincerity in pursuing such a policy and cited in support of India’s “refund of excise duty to every country except Pakistan.”
6. I asked him what Pakistan’s attitude was going to be at the Dominion Prime Ministers’ Conference in London. His answer was more or less to the effect that they would watch and see and much would depend on what India did. They had not yet decided whether Pakistan should have a republican form of government or not. They did not attach much importance to the forms, they were after the substance.

7. Finally he said that he was happy that Indo-Pakistan relations were improving. If only the Kashmir issue was solved, the progress would be rapid.

New Delhi, April 26, 1949

No. F. 12 – 5/49 – Pak. I.

the 26th April, 1949

Government of India
Ministry of External Affairs
New Delhi.

From : Jagat Singh, Esq.,
Under Secretary to the Govt. of India.

To : The Secretary to the Government of Pakistan,
Ministry of Foreign Affairs & Commonwealth Relations
Karachi.

Subject: Raids on Bikaner – Proposal for periodical meetings of I.G.P.
Bikaner and the Commissioner of Police, Bahawalpur.

Sir,

I am directed to state that the incidents on the Bikaner - Bahawalpur border have of late increased and in view of the seriousness of the more recent raids, the situation has, on the whole, deteriorated. The Government of India consider that periodical meetings and closer cooperation between the Heads of Bikaner and Bahawalpur Police Departments is likely to be of immense value in putting a stop to border raids and improving the situation. They, therefore suggest that the Inspector General of Bikaner State and the Commissioner of Police Bahawalpur State should be authorized to meet periodically in just the same way as the inspectors General of Police of East and West Punjab have been authorized to meet under the Inter – Dominion Agreement of December, 1948, for the purpose of devising measures to avoid border incidents.

2. The Government of India further considers it desirable that both these officers should be invited, whenever necessary, to the meetings of the Inspectors General of Police of the West and East Punjab.

3. I am to request that if the Government of Pakistan agree with the views of the Government of India, necessary instructions may kindly be issued to the Bahawalpur State and to the Government of West Punjab to put the proposal into effect. On hearing from the Government of Pakistan, the Government of India will issue similar instructions to the Bikaner State and the Government of East Punjab.

Yours faithfully

Sd/- Jagat Singh
Under Secretary to the Government of India

54.A. Letter from Pakistan Ministry of Foreign Affairs to Ministry of External Affairs.

From : The Secretary to the Government of Pakistan,
Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Commonwealth Relations

To : The Secretary to the Government of India
Ministry of External Affairs,
New Delhi.

Subject: Border Incidents

No. IC/13/4/49. the 26th November, 1949.

Sir,

I am directed to refer to your letter No. F. 12 – 5/ 49 – Pak. I, dated the 26th April, 1949, and to state that the Government of Pakistan agree it will be of great advantage if periodic meetings are held between the Inspector General of Police, Bikaner State, and the Commissioner of Police, Bahawalpur State, with a view to devise ways and means for preventing border incidents and improving the situation. They suggest that such meetings should be held between other bordering Provinces and States also, i.e. between Sind, Bahawalpur and Khairpur and Bikaner, Jodhpur, Jaisalmer and Kutch. The military authorities should also be represented at these conferences, but in order to restrict the number of participants and bring about speedy settlement of incidents locally it is suggested that the meetings should be confined to respective bordering States and Provinces only. In the beginning, joint meetings of all Provinces and States concerned may, however, if desired be held to work out details and to evolve as far as possible a uniform procedure.

2. It is suggested that the meetings should be held quarterly or more frequently, if necessary, and the general procedure at present in force for the prevention of border incidents on the East Punjab – West Punjab border vide paragraph 9, sub – paragraphs (2) – (5) of Appendix V of the Inter – Dominion Agreement of December, 1948, and Appendix B of the Delhi Agreement of the 4th April, 1949, should also be made applicable to all the borders in the above cases.

3. I am to request if the Government of India agrees to the above proposals, necessary instructions may please be issued to the appropriate authorities concerned in India and a copy sent to the Government of Pakistan so that similar instructions may be issued by them also.

I have the honour to be

Sir
Your most obedient Servant,

0055.  Note recorded by Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru to the Foreign Secretary on policy regarding Pakistan and Afghanistan.

New Delhi, June 15, 1949.

I have read through these papers. I thought that we had already defined our policy regarding Afghanistan and Pakistan and nothing has happened to make us reconsider that policy.

2. Shri Zachariah* has entered larger fields which of course are connected with this matter. But when people start discussing the Russian or communist menace, and adjust their other ideas accordingly, I think we should be a little vigilant. In a sense there is that menace. But it is so interrelated with world problems that it serves little purpose to consider it in relation to an invasion of India. It may be taken for granted that there is going to be no such invasion for a considerable number of years. Therefore, we can put it out of our mind. The real communist menace is an internal one, encouraged no doubt by external happenings as in China. That menace has to be met chiefly by political and economic measures and not by military steps taken to guard the frontiers.

3. It is easy to say that it is in the interests of India and Pakistan to be friendly with each other and to develop strong and contented States. It is even easier to say that it is in the interests of the world to have world peace and put an end to the present tensions. Nevertheless the tensions continue and the fear of war in the future.

4. Situated as India and Pakistan are, not only geographically but historically and otherwise, and having regard to recent history, it has to be admitted that they are unfriendly to each other. More especially Pakistan is unfriendly to India. That feeling of hostility is likely to continue for a considerable time and certainly till the Kashmir matter has not been settled. It may survive even that settlement in the event of that settlement being unfavourable to either party. Apart from this, the evacuee property problem gives rise to great bitterness.

5. We have to deal with this present situation. I am quite clear that the only way to do so is for India not to be aggressive but to be absolutely firm and not go out of its way to try to appease Pakistan. The whole of Pakistan policy, as that of the Muslim League that preceded it, is based on threats and bullying. Appeasement only leads to more bullying. We must, therefore, resist this and make it clear that we are not going to submit. At the same time we should do all this without ourselves becoming aggressive in any way.

* Kuruvila Zachariah, the then Director of the Historical Division in the Ministry of External Affairs.
6. Our approach really should be to make the Pakistan Government to feel that we will not submit to anything that we consider wrong and at the same time to make the people of Pakistan feel that we are not unfriendly to them and we do not wish them ill.

7. Some time or other, the relations of India and Pakistan will have to be adjusted properly. That time has not yet come. We should not do anything to obstruct such a settlement when the time comes for it.

8. In regard to Afghanistan we should be friendly and cooperative and helpful within limits. We cannot entangle ourselves in any untoward developments; nor should we act in a way so as to encourage a war between Afghanistan and Pakistan. But diplomatically and in matters of trade etc. we can be helpful.

9. According to both Machiavelli and Chanakya, India’s interests would lie with countries on the either side of neighbouring countries. That doctrine hardly applies in the modern world because of various developments, but there is something in it which cannot be ignored.

10. In any event, I think that we should not worry ourselves about the Russian bogey. We should worry ourselves about internal conditions in India which give rise to communism.

I. PRESS

(1) Press Delegates from both Dominions exchanged views on trends in the Indian and Pakistan Press.

(2) The Committee considered some instances of scurrilous writing and expressed its strong disapproval.

(3) On the point raised by the Pakistan Delegation regarding the treatment of the Afghanistan – Pakistan question in the Indian Press, the Indian Delegation pointed out that the matter could not be discussed by the Committee as it was already under correspondence between the two Governments. The Indian Press Representatives said that as already stated at the last meeting Karachi, Indian newspapers while reserving the right of freedom of expression, recognized the sensitiveness of Pakistan on the subject and as a measure of goodwill had been bearing this in mind and will continue to do so.

(4) Lists of breaches of the Inter – Dominion Agreement in the Indian and Pakistan Press will in future be exchanged between the two Governments every month.

(5) The Press Delegations agreed that the Press Delegates from Pakistan should refer the A.I.N.E.C. voluntary Press Code to P.N.E.C. and the Press Delegates from India should similarly refer the P.N.E.C. voluntary Code to A.I.N.E.C. to enable the two organizations to examine the possibility of evolving a common voluntary Press Code.

II. FILMS

The Committee took up the question of the films to which either Delegation had taken exception.
(1) Films considered objectionable by the Government of India

“Khoon – e – Kashmir”: The Pakistan Delegation stated that no such film had been produced at Pancholi Studios, Lahore, or submitted to the West Punjab Censorship Board or screened in the Province. Censor Boards in other Provinces had also been advised to be on the look-out and to ensure that offensive matter was deleted, if such a film was ever put up for censorship. Since, according to reports received by the Government of India, the film is being screened in commercial cinema houses by the Information Department of the Government of the North West Frontier Province, the Government of Pakistan will make enquiries on the subject from the Provincial Government.

“First Year of Pakistan”: This will be shown by the Government of Pakistan to the Public Relations Officer attached to India’s High Commissioner in Karachi shortly.

“Mujahid Kon”: The Pakistan Delegation stated that the film is not being screened as it is yet to be considered finally by the Board of Film Censors.

“Inquilab – a – Kashmir”: The Pakistan Delegation stated that the film has not been distributed at all and the Pancholi Studios have been asked by the Board of Film Censors to refer the matter to them if and when the Studio desired to release the film for exhibition.

(ii) Films considered objectionable by the Government of Pakistan

“Lahore”: The Bombay Board of Film Censors and the West Punjab Board of Film Censors will be requested for their reports by the Governments concerned.

“The last Refugee Train from West Punjab”: The attention of the Indian Delegation was drawn to press reports according to which a film of this title was being produced by the producer of ‘Lahore’.

“Apna Desh”: The Press Attached to the High Commissioner for the Government of Pakistan in Delhi will see the film, now being exhibited in Delhi, if desired by the Government of Pakistan.

III. PLAYS

“Hyderabad – Deccan”: The Government of India will make enquiries about this play and the objectionable posters stated to have been displayed in Moradabad to advertise it.

IV. PUBLICATIONS

Lists of non-official publications exchanged by the two Delegations will now be examined for suitable action by the respective Governments on receipt of details regarding publishers etc. from either side where these have not already been supplied.
V. BROADCASTING

The following trends in Pakistan broadcasts were pointed out by the Indian Delegation. Some illustrations were given which the Pakistan Delegation agreed to have examined.

1. Allegations of financial aid to North West Frontier Tribes from India; allegations to the effect that India is at the back of the Pathanistan movement.

2. Allegations of incitement of Afghanistan by India against Pakistan.

3. Pakistan’s incitement to Pathans to wage war in Kashmir; also violent and bellicose statements. Indians described as infidels and India as the “enemy”.

5. Misrepresenting Kashmir Government’s acts and policies particularly those affecting Muslims in the State; also, charges of suppression of civil liberty.

6. Misrepresenting Indian police on the question of the plebiscite and partition of Kashmir.

7. Misrepresenting relationship between India and Kashmir including allegations to the effect that accession was fraudulent; also alleging strangulation of Kashmir by India.

8. Propaganda alleging starvation and economic collapse in Kashmir; also, India’s responsibility for economic conditions in the State.

9. Propaganda designed to encourage communal strife and internal differences in India including allegations of suppression of minorities and the so-called Muslim States; also, allegations of Indian unfriendliness towards Pakistan.

10. Propaganda designed to show India’s inability to solve her refugee problem.

11. Propaganda alleging starvation and economic collapse in India.

12. Adverse propaganda on political conditions in India and on the nature and motives of her Governments; also, incessant publicity to views subversive of the Government of India.

(14) Personal attacks on Indian leaders including offensive language against Kashmir leaders.

(15) Propaganda alleging unrest in India.

The following trends in A.I.R. broadcasts were brought to the notice of the Indian Delegation by the Pakistan Delegations:

(1) Pro–Afghanistan and anti–Pakistan trend in the treatment of the Afghanistan – Pakistan relations. The Indian Delegation pointed out that the matter was outside the scope of the Committee as it was already under correspondence between the two Governments.

(2) Playing up dissident elements in Pakistan.

(3) Interpellation in factual stories of tendentious views and comments adverse to Pakistan. A few illustrations were given (items 2, 3 and 4 of Statement A on Broadcasting of Pakistan Delegation’s note). These will be examined.

It was agreed that broadcasts of the kind pointed out in so far as they are found on examination to reveal these trends, will be avoided. At the same time it was pointed out that this would not be construed to prevent either organization from (a) giving publicity to the point of view of its Government on matters in dispute between the two Governments, for example, the Kashmir issue or any infringement of an Agreement, and (b) treating reliable news reports and statements of important persons on their news value, provided there was no “mud–slinging” and good taste and decorum were observed.

Lists of breaches in future will quote each item fully, clearly stating the nature and description of the source in case it is a quotation. These lists will be exchanged frequently between the two Governments.

The two Governments will exchange lists of broadcast items complimentary to each other.

With reference to Para. I (iii) under “Broadcasting” of the Record of Decisions of the last IDICC meeting held on 16th March 1949 in Karachi the Indian Delegation stated that it will ascertain the position further.

Before taking up the question of the Azad Kashmir, Srinagar and Jammu broadcasts, the Indian Delegation raised the point that the Azad Kashmir Radio, according to their information, was not coordinated or registered for broadcasting purposes under the International Convention to which both India and Pakistan were parties and, if this was correct, it would be an unlawful station. The Indian Delegation further enquired whether the Pakistan Delegation had any information on this point. The Pakistan Delegation held the view that Azad Kashmir Radio being under the Azad Kashmir Government, the subject could not be discussed and that it should be taken up, if the Government of India so desired, at diplomatic level.

0057. Letter from Defence Minister Baldev Singh to Home Minister Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel about Pakistan’s unfriendly intentions towards India.

New Delhi, August 19, 1949

My dear Sardar Sahib,

I am by nature over-cautious and would not like to err on the side of under-estimating the opposing strength. How a country the birth of which is based on hatred of Hindus and Sikhs, can ever develop friendly relations towards us in spite of the best efforts on our part, I fail to see. To me and in fact to every right-thinking man it is clear that in all the talks subsequent to partition, the attitude of Pakistan has been far from satisfactory to say the least. They have been trying to get all kinds of advantages with the same technique with which they got Pakistan, i.e. bluff and threats. After partition one should have thought that they would settle down, but this has not been so. I hope and pray that I am wrong, but the more I think about this matter, the more convinced I feel that Pakistan’s intentions towards us are not clean. They seem to be proceeding on the basis that they are going to fight us. They have worked up the religious feeling of their people against us and the public there is made to look upon us as Kafirs. The ease with which they secured Pakistan and swallowed up non-Muslim property and wealth presumably encourages them to feel that they can add to their riches in case trouble starts. Even supposing, for argument’s sake, that the Pakistan Government is not at the back of it all, the situation seems to me so eruptive that a conflict seems to be in the offing. I will not be surprised if we have to face a crisis in October or November.

Yours sincerely
Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel

0058. Extract from the Speech of Pakistan Prime Minister Liaquat Ali Khan accusing India of war preparations.

Rawalpindi, February 5, 1950.

Prime Minister Liaquat Ali Khan charged India with preparing for a war. Huge ordnance factories in India, he declared, were working night and day and recruitment to the fighting forces was in full swing.

The Prime Minister, who was addressing a large public meeting, challenged any man to show which nation in the world had achieved what Pakistan had accomplished during its short life despite the crippling handicaps and hardships which this country had faced.

The world’s statesmen had described Pakistan’s achievements as a miracle, Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan said.

I was not the Government who deserved to be congratulated but the people, for the achievements were the result to their determination and sacrifices. “I am confident my people are capable of greater miracles,” he declared amidst great applause.

Making a pointed reference to the agonies of “our three million brothers in Kashmir” the Prime Minister held on the solemn assurance that Pakistan shall see that none but the people of the State themselves decide their future.

Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan was again lustily cheered by the huge gathering when he declared: “what ever the cost, we shall not let India annex Kashmir by force of arms.”

Advising the people not to get restive over the vexed Kashmir question, the Prime Minister explained to them that there were only two solutions of the problem. The first was the peaceful method— through the agency of the Security Council. The other was by the force of arms. While Pakistan preferred the former it was also prepared for the latter, should that become unavoidable.

“I am fully aware of the strong feeling which exists in the hearts of the people of Pakistan on the point. It gets stronger and stronger every moment and we find it no easy task to control it. Still we have been counseling our people to be patient”, Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan said.

But India on the other hand. Added the Prime Minister, complaints that the Pakistan Government encourages expression of unfriendly feelings for them in this country. I cannot imagine what the shape of things would have been had we not controlled our people and had the Pakistanis not been so patient.
He could not understand how a country like India where huge ordinance factories were rattling night and day and recruitment to the forces was in full swing—could accuse two-year-old Pakistan of preparing for a war. Every country in this world tries to be strong enough to defend itself. And what we are doing in nothing more.

Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan also administered a word of advice and warning to “our Afghan” brothers. Those who rule the brave Afghan people, he observed, were playing into the hands of the enemies of Islam and did not realize that they were the enemies of Afghanistan also.

He was of the view that Pakistan’s strength was the greatest guarantee of Afghanistan’s security, prosperity and happiness. “It is our hope that Heaven’s light will at last show our Afghan brothers the right path. Though misguided they are, we consider them our brothers and shall continue to consider them as such”, the Prime Minister remarked.

He said notwithstanding the three major difficulties — India’s aggression in Kashmir, economic war on Pakistan and the activities of some malignant people, the Pakistan Government has withstood the economic storm which brought down many established currencies.

The Government had strengthened its forces which, he claimed, were one of the best in the world. And besides all that the country’s internal economic development was progressing at a reasonably quick pace.

The Government were spending 899,000,000 rupees this year to ensure the safety of the country’s Independence. This obviously resulted in the slowing down of other nation building programmes. He was confident that it was justified expenditure and he wished it could be increased. “For what use are all the nation-building programmes when the priceless gift of national Independence is in danger”, he asked.

Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan said that he was aware of the hardships some of the people faced and were still facing and he bluntly told them he would rather give them a little of more hardships than offer them ease at the cost of independence. Are you prepared for it, the Prime minister enquired and his huge audience loudly replied in the affirmative.

Discipline is Power

Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan also advised the people to remember that discipline was power, it was time they realized that they were free and behaved as such. “Never forget”. He appealed to them, “that Unity. Faith and Discipline was the motto that won us Pakistan and we still need these qualities.”
0059. Editorial in the Dawn explaining the use of ‘Bharat’ for ‘India.’

A Misnomer Ended.

The use of the word “India” to denote the part of the sub-continent not included in Pakistan is justified by neither history nor geography. The constitution which that country had adopted calls it “Bharat”. By an uncouth paraphrasing the constitution elongates the name to “Bharat, that it India”, and conversely, “India, that is Bharat”. This is jugglery designed to exploit the old name which belonged as much to the people of Pakistan as to the people of Bharat — for propaganda advantages exclusively for one section of the now divided population. That misnomer we can end at least in our own country. From today the words “India” and “Indian” will, therefore, be replaced with the words “Bharat” and “Bharati” in all our columns, other than advertisement columns. We shall call that country henceforth by its proper, not the improper, name.

No. 110/50 – S Dated 20th March, 1950

2. As regards provocative writings in the Indian press, our Prime Minister has expressed himself publicly, time and again, against newspapers losing restraint in reporting or commenting on incidents of a communal character. With a few exceptions, the press in India has generally responded to his call for cooperation. On the other hand Pakistan newspapers, both in West Pakistan and in East Bengal, continue to indulge in fantastic statements about happenings in India. Frequent references to 'Master Plans' which exist only in the imagination of certain newspaper editors and others in Pakistan and scurrilous writings against India and Hindus cannot but cause excitement in Pakistan against the minority community. The Ministry of Information & Broadcasting of the Government of India, in their letter No. 24/3/50/P dated the 4th March 1950 to the Ministry of Interior, the Government of Pakistan, have mentioned several instances of highly exaggerated and tendentious reports which have, appeared in the Pakistan press and some of which have been broadcast by the officially-controlled Pakistan radio. Writings of a similar character continue particularly in the Dawn of Karachi and the Morning News of Dacca, to mention only two newspapers. In the face of all these unrestrained writings the Government of India find it extremely difficult to prevent the Indian press from presenting the other side of the picture.

0061. Resolutions passed at the Joint Meeting of the Standing Committees of the All India Newspaper Editors Conference and Pakistan Newspaper Editors Conference.

New Delhi, May 5, 1950.

This joint meeting of the Standing Committees of the A.I.N.E.C. and P.N.E.C. resolves that with a view to creating conditions under which it may become possible more easily.

I. 1. To ensure the implementation of the Nehru — Liaquat agreement.

2. To bring about better relations between India and Pakistan and the minorities and majority in each state.

3. To offer to the two Governments more effective cooperation with respect to these and other cognate problems;

4. To provide free access to news and to ensure adequate facilities to accredited correspondents of either country, to gather and file news.
5. To offer advice, whenever necessary, to the press in both the countries.

6. To check up from time to time the Press trends in both the countries.

7. To organize goodwill deputations on behalf of the Press.

8. To arrange for the dispatch of factual and objective news in the event of any important incident taking place anywhere in the two countries and

9. To take such other steps as might be deemed necessary for the achievement of those objectives or for the solution of any consequential problems, a committee consisting of the representatives of both the organizations should start functioning at once. The personnel of this Committee shall be chosen by the two Presidents who will have power to co-operate more members if and when necessary. The Committee may meet as often as necessary at intervals of not more than 3 months and any place in the two countries.

II. Whereas the Standing Committees of the AINEC and PNEC have met in Joint Session on the 4th May 1950 at New Delhi to take note of the Agreement between the Prime Ministers of India and Pakistan and make their contribution to the promotion of goodwill between the peoples of the two States:

Whereas the Standing Committees have noted with regret and concern publications in section of the Press of both countries matter calculated to create alarm and anxiety among minorities in each State and prejudice the maintenance of law and order, peace and security in both States;

Whereas the Standing Committees realize the Press which played a notable part in the fight for freedom owe a duty and responsibility to safeguard the fruits of freedom;

This agreement solemnly and sincerely affirms that the Standing Committees will use their influence in every way to ensure (a) that the Press of both countries in future observe in letter and spirit the terms of the Indo-Pakistan Press Agreement arrived in May 1948 and not indulge in propaganda against either State nor publish exaggerated versions of news calculated to rouse communal passion or cause fear or alarm to the population or a section of the population in either country, nor publish matter inciting a declaration of war by one State against the other or suggesting the inevitability of war between the two; (b) that the press of both countries, without prejudice to their rights and obligations to present news faithfully and comment thereon fairly, interpret these rights and obligations in the emergency conditions of today so as to promote good faith, goodwill and good understanding between Pakistan and India and between majority and minority communities.

III. This Conference of the Standing Committees of the AINEC and the PNEC records its appreciation of the assurances given by both the Indian and Pakistan Governments about the withdrawals of bans on newspapers circulating in both countries, and the agreement in principle to extend accreditation facilities to duly authorized correspondents of newspapers and news agencies and ensure proper conditions for the due fulfillment of their obligations by provisions of adequate facilities for news gathering and news filing, details whereof shall be worked out by the sub-committee which is being set up.

This Conference requests the Governments concerned that in all cases where action in contemplated against newspapers or news correspondents of the other State Government concerned will consult in advance the joint committee of the Conference before implementing their decision.

1. It was decided that the discussion should be confined to consideration of effective means to implement the Agreement on minorities of 8th April, 1950. The Committee felt that it would not be in consonance with the spirit of the April Agreement, and the changed atmosphere to scrutinize breaches of the 1948 Agreement in either country. The Committee thought that in order to advance the objects of the Agreement on minorities all efforts should be directed towards the future.

2. There was appreciative acknowledgement of the work done in the two countries so far to implement the Agreement; in particular, the Committee congratulated the presidents of the Pakistan Newspaper Editors' Conference and the All India Newspaper Editors' Conference and their Standing Committees on the resolutions passed by them on 5th May 1950 and the decisions taken regarding the reciprocal action to be taken by the press of the two countries to foster confidence and a sense of security in the minorities and to promote cordial relations between people of the two countries.

3. The Committee thought that while vigilance was necessary in order to see that clauses 7 & 8 of part C of the Agreement on minorities were strictly observed, at the same time, the efforts of all the information media organizations in the two countries should be directed more and more towards the creation and maintenance of an atmosphere favourable to the implementation of the Agreement and special endeavour should be made to obtain and disseminate information and other material which would help restore confidence in the minority communities and make known the determination of the Governments of Pakistan and India to implement the Agreement.

4. The Committee unanimously passed a resolution generally embodying the recommendations given in paras 2 & 3. The resolution is attached to this Record of Recommendations as an Appendix.
The Committee emphasized the importance of Indian and Pakistan language newspapers and recommended that effective publicity should be organized through them.

5. The committee further reviewed the steps already taken by the Information media organizations of the two countries to implement the Agreement on minorities. A brief account of the machinery set up, the procedure adopted and the principal points covered by each Government was given to the Committee and it was agreed that detailed notes on this should be exchanged between the two Governments.

6. The Committee recommended that in order to ensure speedy action on parallel lines in the two countries, information on the steps taken by either Government to implement the Agreement should be supplied to the other as necessary and that more frequent meetings of the Indo–Pakistan Information Consultative Committee should be held.

7. The Committee resolved that its next meeting should take place in Dacca in the 2nd week of June and that members should subsequently visit a few centers in East and West Bengal.

8. It was suggested by the Presidents of the PNEC and AINEC that liaison should be established between the Indo–Pakistan Information Consultative Committee and the Joint Committee of the AINEC and PNEC. The President of AINEC pointed out that two of the Indian Press Representatives on the Information Consultative Committee were also members of the Joint Committee of the AINEC and PNEC and this was useful for purposes of liaison so far as India was concerned. The President of the PNEC observed that two of the Pakistan Press Representatives also happened to be members of the Joint Committee, but that it would be advisable to invite also representatives of the Information Ministries of the two Governments to the meetings of the Joint Committee of the AINEC and PNEC. This, he thought, would ensure prompt action in the Joint Committee in as much as the views of the Information Ministries would be available to it.

9. The Presidents of the AINEC and PNEC urged that impediments in the way of free flow of news between the two countries should be removed; this, they thought, was necessary in order that misunderstandings which arose from lack of information should disappear. They suggested two steps for this purpose;

(i) Ban on entry of newspapers from one country to the other should be lifted. In this connection, reference was made to the Joint resolution of the Standing Committees of the AINEC and PNEC passed in New Delhi on 5th May 1950. The Presidents of the AINEC and PNEC agreed that removal at this stage of bans should not fetter the discretion of either Government to reimpose the ban on any newspaper but in order that either Government might not be misjudged in taking action against any newspaper, it would be advisable, if, before action was taken the Joint Committee of the AINEC and PNEC could be consulted. The Joint Committee would thus have the opportunity of exercising moral persuasion with the offending newspaper, and thereby eliminating the necessity of action on Government level.

It was also urged by one of the Press Representatives that in judging the question of re-imposition of ban on any newspaper, the right of fair comment and criticism, provided comment and criticism were not calculated to promote animosity between the two countries or between the majority and minority communities in the two countries, should be respected. Another representative of the Press emphasized that newspapers in each country no longer regarded the Government as an alien Government.

(ii) The President of the AINEC suggested that in present circumstances and as a first step, arrangements should be made for the accreditation of Indian nationals working as full time Correspondents of news agencies and newspapers in Pakistan and similarly for Pakistan nationals in India. Facilities like freedom of movement, unhindered transmission of messages, installation of telephones, etc., which were necessary for Correspondents should be ensured. The problem of “String Correspondents”, that is, persons who did part–time work as Correspondents to supplement their income, could be taken up after the changed atmosphere had been stabilized. Applications for accreditation should pass through the President of the Newspaper Editors Conference of the country to which the applicant belonged; Correspondents would thus be sponsored by responsible newspapers and news agencies and there would be a certain amount of organizational background to judge the quality of people who offered themselves for accreditation. It was, however, pointed out that in India, under the existing procedure, applications for accreditation were placed before the Central Press Advisory Committee, which was nominated by the All India Newspaper Editor’s Conference. It was also stated by the Pakistan Delegation that a similar machinery had been set up in Pakistan and a more or less similar procedure was being followed in regard to accrediting of Correspondents. The President of the PNEC thought it would be advisable for the Joint Committee of the AINEC and PNEC to discuss the matter and evolve a working formula before the question was considered further.

10. The Representatives of the Press suggested that for the effective implementation of the Agreement, it was necessary that the people should realize in a graphic way the new relationship that had developed between the two countries. The two Governments should, therefore, undertake a publicity campaign at least for the next six months or so to reach the masses that did not read newspapers. The aim of this campaign would be to promote amity between the nationals of the two countries. At fairs and festivals, visible demonstration of the new atmosphere should be provided by exhibition of films, by talks and through other media including gramophone records. Also, a band of young men should be recruited for the purpose. The cost of publicity, it was pointed out, would be far less than the cost of dealing with problems such as relief and rehabilitation of refugees resulting from disharmony.

11. The President of the Pakistan Newspaper Editors Conference urged that the two Governments should improve their machinery of coordination between the Centre and the States or Provinces in order that there was no time lag between the formulation of plans and their execution in all parts of either country.

APPENDIX

This meeting of the Information Consultative Committee of the Governments of India and Pakistan held in New Delhi on May 6, 1950, heartily welcomes and places on record its sense of relief at the change in the atmosphere that has followed the Indo–Pakistan Agreement on Minorities concluded on April 8, 1950. This meeting congratulates the Presidents and Standing Committees of the PNEC and the AINEC on the resolution passed on May 5, 1950, and decisions taken regarding the reciprocal action to be taken by the Press of the two countries to foster confidence and a sense of security in the minorities and to promote cordial relations between the peoples of the two countries.

The Committee further records that the efforts of all the information media in the two countries should be directed more and more towards the creation and maintenance of an atmosphere favourable to the implementation of the Agreement and that special endeavour should be made to obtain and disseminate information and other material which would help restore confidence in the minority communities and make known the determination of the Governments of Pakistan and India to implement the Agreement.

1. The question of implementation of Delhi Agreement by the Press in either country was raised. After some discussion in which reference was made to sections of the Press whose tone was objected to as being unhelpful to the implementation of the Agreement, the Committee agreed that the matter might be discussed at the meeting next day when representatives of the Press on the two delegations would also be present.

2. The two delegations exchanged notes on action taken in implementation of the Agreement since the last meeting of the Committee. While referring to the note received earlier from the Pakistan Government, the Indian delegation suggested that more might be done by the Pakistan Government with regard to the use of field publicity organizations for the implementation of the Agreement. The Pakistan delegation pointed out that they were using the limited field publicity organizations that the provincial Governments possessed, but they would consider the suggestion further.

It was agreed that suggestions, if any, for further implementation of the Agreement arising out of the notes exchanged between the two Governments from time to time should be communicated promptly by either Govt. by correspondence.
3. The Pakistan delegation enquired about a report regarding a ban on radio listening in Hyderabad (Deccan). The Indian delegation stated that long before the Agreement radio licenses of some tea shops in Hyderabad (Deccan) had been confiscated and had since been restored.

4. It was agreed that an enquiry would be made by the Government of India as to whether there was any ban in any district of Uttar Pradesh on listening in the Radio Pakistan.

5. The Committee reviewed implementation of the Agreement by the Radio organization of the two countries and noted that the agreement had been generally observed and a number of special steps had been taken to advance the objects of the Agreement. The Committee expressed the hope that such further steps as were necessary and practicable would be taken by the two organizations in the light of suggestion contained in the notes exchanged or to be exchanged between the two Government.

6. The Committee recommended that suitable action should be taken by the Government concerned in regard to non–official publications that tend to incite to violence or endanger the safety of the minorities or arouse communal passions. The Pakistan delegations referred to a publication entitled ‘East Pakistan – Graveyard of Civilization’ by Amerendar Prasad Chakravarty and a leaflet issued by the Council for Protection of Rights of Minorities. It was agreed that the Pakistan Government should address the Government of India on the matter. As regards the magazine, ‘Film India’, certain portion of which had been objected to by the Pakistan Government earlier, it was stated by the Indian delegation that the Pakistan Government had been informed about the action already taken.

ANNEXURE - I

Joint Press Code adopted by the All India Newspaper Editors’ Conference and the Pakistan Newspaper Editors’ Conference at its 4th meeting held on June 24-25, 1950.

The Joint Press Committee of the AINEC and the PNEC notes with satisfaction the response of the Press of India and Pakistan to the resolutions adopted by the joint meeting of the Standing Committee of the AINEC and the PNEC on May 5, 1950 at Delhi.

The Joint Press Committee calls upon the Press of both countries to help to facilitate the further implementation of the Indo – Pakistan Agreement:

(a) By avoiding the dissemination of news calculated to undermine relations between the majority and the minority communities in the two countries;
(b) By refusing to give currency to mischievous opinion of individuals or organizations likely to rouse communal passions or create a sense of insecurity among the members of the minority community;

(c) By rigorously excluding from the Press of each country opinion directed against the territorial sovereignty of the other or purporting to incite war;

(d) By seeking through normal Press channels or Government Agencies, verification of news of communal incidents before it is published;

(e) By always exercising due care and caution in regard to the publication of reports of communal incidents;

(f) By avoiding alarming deadlines for reports of communal incidents;

(g) By exercising care in the publication of pictures and cartoon likely to excite communal passions;

(h) By affording full facilities to Governments for correction or contradiction of published reports.

ANNEXURE - II
FILMS & PLAYS.

Films

The following Films were the subject of protest by the Government of India: -

1. Inquilab – e – Kashmir.
3. Pakistan The First Year.
4. Khoon – e – Muslim.
5. Mujahid Kaun.

In reply to our protest against the film ‘Inquilab – e – Kashmir’ Pakistan Government stated that the exhibition of this film had been stopped in April 1949. On our Deputy High Commissioner at Dacca reporting that the film was being exhibited there, a protest was lodged again with the Pakistan Government, who replied that the necessary steps had been taken to prevent the film from being shown. To our protest against the film at 2 above the Pakistan Government have stated that the film has been under a ban since April 1949. Films at 4 and 6, we are informed by Pakistan, have not been produced. The films at 3, according to the Pakistan Government, does not contain any scene or remark which is contrary to the spirit of the provisions of the India-Pakistan Agreement. As for ‘Mujahid Kaun’ at No. 5, the Punjab Board of Film Censors (Pakistan) is of the opinion that the film does not contravene the terms of the 1948 Agreement. It was felt that further correspondence on the subject with the Pakistan Government would serve no useful purpose. In reply to our protest against the last film ‘Josh-e-Jehad’ inciting war against India, the Pakistan Government have stated that the film was produced by a private producer with a view to rallying popular opinion in favour of participation in civil Defence activities at a time when 90% of Indian troops were massed on the borders of Pakistan, and the film having lost its topical value is rarely shown.

The Pakistan Government have protested against the following films: -

1. Lahore.
2. Apna Desh.
4. The last refugee Train from West Punjab.
5. Kashmir Hamara Hai.
6. Ham Ek hain.
7. Chinnamul.

The Government of Pakistan have been informed that the films at 1, 2, and 7 are not objectionable. The film at 3 has ceased to be on show and therefore no action is called for. The film at 4 has not been produced. From the film at No. 5 scenes showing raiders carrying away women were excised on the instructions of the Bombay Board of Film Censors. No. 6 was produced in 1946.

Plays.

The following two anti-Indian plays were staged in Pakistan during 1952: -

1. Naya Nishan.
2. Kashmir Hamara.

The Government of Pakistan have not so fare replied to the protest lodged by our High Commissioner at Karachi, against the play Naya Nishan. It was not considered desirable to lodge a protest against the other play ‘Kashmir Hamara’ which was staged in February 1952 in Dacca, in aid of ‘Quaid – e – Azam Memorial Fund’ as according to Press Attache Dacca the play was not a great success.
ANNEXURE - III

Books & Publications.

The Inter–Dominion Information Consultative Committee at Karachi on the 16th March, 1949, decided as follows:

(i) The Committee agreed to recommend that Government publications produced before or after the Delhi Agreement should be withdrawn from circulation and that this recommendation should be submitted to the cabinet in each Dominion for approval.

(ii) Each Dominion will bring to the notice of the other Dominion objectionable non–official publications produced in that Dominion for suitable action.

(iii) The committee agreed that text books involving infringement of the Delhi Agreement should not be prescribed or recommended and that authors of text books should be requested through the respective Ministries of Education to included matter calculated to improve relations between the two Dominion.

As regards (i), a reference was received from Khwaja Shahabuddin as to what was the intention of the IDIOC’s recommendation suggesting the withdrawal from circulation of books infringing the Agreement. Shri Diwakar replied that the intention of the Committee was that steps should be taken to stop further sale of such publications. Official publications and magazines of the Pakistan Government have been found to contain material which is likely to inflame communal passions. Our protest against 3 publications of the West Punjab Govt., viz. R.S.S., Note on Sikh Plan and Sikhs in Action, is still pending with the Pakistan Government. ‘Mah – e – Nau’, a Bengali monthly issued by the Pakistan Government, has also been publishing material in contravention of the India-.Pakistan Agreement.

(ii) The Government of Pakistan have so far protested against non–official publications. Action taken on these is as under

(a) Publications issued before partition.  7
(b) Publications other than books that came out before the Agreement of April 1950.  12
(c) Publications declared forfeited by State Govts.  13
(d) Publications out of circulation  10
(e) Action reported  21
(f) Publications found not objectionable  11
On the other hand we have protested against 58 publications. Replies received from the Pakistan Govt. can be classified in the following categories:

- Publications no longer in circulation: 10
- Publications issued before Delhi Agreement: 13
- Publications before partition: 2
- Action reported on: 10
- Publications relating to Kashmir, Hyderabad of Junagadh and held not actionable: 7
- Publications held not actionable in terms of para 1 of the minutes of IPICC meeting of 6. 5. 1950: 6
- Publication from which extracts have been asked for by Pakistan: 3

Anti – Indian propaganda designed to incite communal passions, indulgence in war cry and spread of hatred between Hindus and Sikhs as also the usual stories of persecution of Muslims in India are still being carried on in Pakistan through books and pamphlets. Correspondence on this subject has been going on between the Government of India and Pakistan. The effort on the part of the Pakistan Government to wriggle out of the obligations made in agreement is manifest in their correspondence on the subject. Pakistan Government has been trying to avoid action mostly by misinterpreting the first para of the minutes of the 6th May 1950 meeting of the IPICC. In this meeting, which by its very composition was competent to discuss matters relating to Press only, the following decision was recorded:
“It was decided that the discussion should be confined to consideration of effective means to implement the Agreement on minorities of 8th April 1950. The Committee felt that it would not be in consonance with the spirit of the April Agreement, and the changed atmosphere to scrutinize breaches of the 1948 Agreement in either country. The Committee thought that in order to advance the objects of the Agreement on minorities all efforts should be directed towards the future”.

The above decision, therefore, applies to the Press only. But the Pakistan Government have held the view that it applies to publications as well. They have consequently declined to take action on all publications produced before the Prime Minister’s Agreement and objected to by us. We, on our part, have been taking action on books produced before the Agreement and have informed the Pakistan Government that their interpretation is not correct. A further communication on this subject is under consideration in External Affairs Ministry.

An regards to books relating to Kashmir, Hyderabad and Junagadh, Pakistan Government have stated that these stand on a special footing and as such do not come within the purview of the India-Pakistan Agreement. It is quite clear that Agreement applies to both the countries and to all writings violating its terms irrespective of whether the books relate to Kashmir or not. We informed the External Affairs Ministry that Pakistan Government’s stand cannot be accepted, as objectionable books would continue to disseminate mischievous opinion on the plea that they relate to Kashmir etc.

Some highly objectionable publications such as “Quaid – e – Azam ka Akhri Lamhat”, “Taj Mahal – History of India and Pakistan” etc., have been held unobjectionable without any reason being furnished by the Pakistan Government.

As against 13 publications forfeited in India, not a single publication objected to by us has been forfeited by Pakistan, to our knowledge.

(iii) Far from including matter calculated to improve relations between the two Dominions, text books prescribed in East Bengal schools violate educational and cultural rights of the minority in East Bengal, and are likely to promote hatred against the Hindus. A protest against such text a book was lodged by Shri Biswas in his letter dated 13. 4. 1951 to Dr. Malik, but it seems objectionable text books are still being taught in East Bengal schools.
ANNEXURE - IV

Measures taken by the Government of India to implement the Indo Pakistan Agreement of December 1948 so far.

The Govt. of Pakistan protested against the book ‘Vishwa Ithas ki Rooplekh’ prescribed in U.P. schools and the same was removed from the list of approved books.

Thus even in the field of publications, the Agreement is not being implemented by the Pakistan Government, to the extent desirable. In one case, Pakistan Government have stated that a book objected to by us was sold out, but an enquiry by the PRO, Lahore, revealed that the book was available in the market.

0065. Resolutions adopted at the third meeting of the Indo – Pakistan Joint Press Committee.

The Joint Committee has noted with satisfaction the overall progress made in the pursuit of the objectives underlying the Nehru – Liaquat Pact as a result of the efforts of this Committee and the willing co–operation extended to it by the Press of both countries. In particular there has been

(a) Considerable improvement in the friendly and fraternal relations between the nationals of both countries;

(b) General avoidance of writings calculated to rouse communal passions and prejudices and to lead to harassment and victimization of the minorities;

(c) Free Flow of news between the two countries following provision of facilities for Correspondents to collect and file news.

Still several instances of breaches of the joint code brought to the notice of the Committee underline the need for constant vigilance and the JPC appeals to the Press in both countries to facilitate implementation of the Delhi Pact and thereby further the cause of goodwill and better understanding between the two countries and between the minority and majority sections of them by –

(a) Exercising greater care and caution in the publication of news and comments;
(b) Conforming in letter and spirit to the terms of the voluntary code, and
(c) Avoiding publication of anything calculated to create alarm and anxiety among the minority sections of the people of either country or create war psychology.

While firmly holding to the view that as far as possible all disputes arising between the two countries at all time should be settled peacefully, the JPC hopes that the Governments of India and Pakistan will endeavour to find ways and means to settle expeditiously and amicably the outstanding problems between the two countries thereby eliminating all sources of irritation, friction and distrust between the two people. The JPC expects the Press of both countries to create and maintain the atmosphere of goodwill, good faith and good fellowship to promote this purpose.

The JPC feels that even if some of the problems take time to resolve, “comments in newspapers should be confined strictly to the merits of the problems or problems in dispute and it should in no case be made the basis of a general attack against the two Governments or a personal contumacious or scurrilous attack against the respected leaders of either country, or the religion, culture and faith of the people of both countries”.

The JPC records its appreciation of the cooperation it has received at the hands of both Governments in the furtherance of its objectives and takes this opportunity to point out that it would considerably strengthen the hands of the Committee if the Governments concerned would consult in advance the JPC whenever panel action against the press is contemplated.

The JPC desires to stress that much of the improvement in the situation is very largely due to the exchange of news rendered possible by facilities offered in both countries to Correspondents of the news agencies (PTI and APP) and newspapers representing either country and trusts that such advice as may be tendered from time to time by the JPC will receive due consideration at the hands of Governments concerned as well as the news agencies and the newspapers.

With a view to providing facilities for emergency consultations during the period of the present crisis, in particular between East and West Bengal, the JPC authorizes the undermentioned Sub – Committee consisting of three members each representing West Bengal and East Pakistan with two alternate members for each area to meet as often as may be necessary at the discretion of the convenors of either area, to discuss matters particularly affecting the Press in East and West Bengal in consultation and co-operation with the two Provincial Governments and subject to the general control of this Committee.

By invitation:

The Hon'ble Shri C.C. Biswas
The Hon'ble Dr. A.M. Malik

Press

(1) The Committee reviewed the implementation of the Indo–Pakistan Agreement of 8th April 1950 by the Indian and Pakistan Press; some general tendencies which favoured implementation of the Agreement as well as those which stood in its way were pointed out. It was recommended that a Sub–Committee consisting of (a) one official of the Government of India and one representative of the Indian Press, and (b) one official of the Government of Pakistan and one representative of the Pakistan Press, should, a day or so before the Committee meets, examine in detail the material supplied by either Government regarding the Press, and make such recommendations as would facilitate the work of the main Committee. If considered necessary, the sub–Committee would meet in the interval between two meetings of the Main Committee.

(2) The President of the Joint Press Committee read out the Resolution passed by the Joint Press Committee on 31st October 1950 in Calcutta. General satisfaction was expressed at the Resolution, and the Committee desired that a copy of the Resolution might be attached to the Minutes for purposes of reference.

(3) The Committee also recommended that on the lines of the sub–committee for the Press a second Sub–committee should be appointed to facilitate the task of the main Committee so far as the review of material relating to Broadcasts, Films and Publications was concerned. This Sub–Committee would consist of two officials of the Government of India and two officials of the Government of Pakistan, and would meet and function on the same lines as the Press Sub–Committee.

Radio

(4) The Committee reviewed the steps taken by the two Radio organizations in further implementation of the Agreement; some details were described by the two Delegations.

(5) The Committee agreed that All India Radio and Radio Pakistan should avoid comments or emphasis on the origin of riots in East and West Bengal. It was also agreed that if talks on religion were broadcast, these should not be confined to only one religion.

PUBLICATIONS

(6) Information was supplied by both Delegations in regard to some publications which were alleged to have contravened the provisions of the Indo – Pakistan Agreement of 8th April 1950. The Pakistan Delegation agreed to omit from its list of publications considered objectionable by them the following three publications:

(1) Sardar Patel on Indian Problems
(2) Independence and After
(3) Divided India.

(7) The Indian Delegation drew the attention of the Pakistan Delegation to the publication “Quaid – e – Azam ke Akhri Lamhat” by Ashraf Ata published by Ashaat Manzil, which they considered objectionable; the Government of India would write to the Pakistan Government and point out the objectionable portions in the book.

GENERAL

(8) It was agreed to exchange notes on action taken by both the Governments of India and Pakistan further to implement the Indo – Pakistan Agreement of 8th April 1950.

1. 11. 1950              1. 11. 1950
Letter from Pakistan Prime Minister Liaquat Ali Khan to Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru.

Karachi, November 27, 1950.

My dear Pandit Nehru,

Thank you for your letter of the 24th November, 1950. It reached me last evening after 3.00 P.M. I am afraid in this letter you have revised so many issues that I feel constrained to send an immediate reply despite my numerous preoccupations.

2. I shall begin with the "No War Declaration". I am sincerely sorry that I have failed to convince you that a mere "declaration" of good intentions on our part unsubstantiated by concrete acts would carry conviction to nobody. May I, therefore, seek once again to convince you by drawing your attention to the logical end of an argument you have yourself advanced. In your letter you point out that in spite of the Charter of the United Nations, fierce disputes and impassioned arguments are in progress between nations. May I request you to pause and think why? I am myself convinced that if the leaders of the great powers agreed to issue a simple 'no war declaration' of the type you suggest it would not make the least difference. That is why I suggested and suggest once again that we should put substance and body in our declaration by devising a concrete procedure to solve some pending and all future disputes between India and Pakistan.

3. In paragraph 4 of your letter you have referred to the type of propaganda that, according to you, has been going on in Pakistan. It is a matter of regret to me that while you allow yourself to be perturbed by what is being said in Pakistan, you omit to note the attitude of the press throughout India and particularly in West Bengal, where the Delhi Agreement notwithstanding, even former Ministers of your Cabinet continue to conduct, apparently without hindrance, a virulent propaganda campaign against Pakistan and against the very Pact to which you have referred. These elements have gone to incredible lengths. They have set up what they publicly proclaim is the Provisional Government of East Pakistan. Mr. J. P. Mitter describes himself with impunity as its President. All this is very disheartening. Nevertheless, neither I nor the East Pakistan Government have at any stage slackened our efforts to implement the Delhi Agreement. I am glad to say that the life and property of the Hindus in Pakistan is completely safe and thousands of Hindus are every week returning to their homes. The Delhi Agreement did indeed produce a psychological change but I need hardly remind you that it was not a mere declaration of good intentions. It devised ways and means of giving form and shape to those intentions and set up elaborate administrative machinery to implement them. It was a closely considered and carefully worked out plan in which considerable attention was paid to details. It is because of this that it has met with success. Had it been a mere declaration it would have been forgotten by now.

4. My statement that the crux of the difficulty is the reluctance of your Government to substitute on any issue impartial arbitration for threatened and actual use of force seems to have surprised you. I must confess, however, that your categorical assertion that you have never resorted to or threatened to resort to force to settle disputes with Pakistan has surprised me ever more. I sincerely hope and trust that you have not forgotten that your military forces have occupied Junagadh and its neighbouring States which lawfully acceded to Pakistan and form part of its territories. I shall not refer to another sorry episode elsewhere which is still pending before the Security Council but I may remind you that not so long ago there was a large scale movement of the military forces of India and a considerable building up of warlike stores in forward areas very close to the borders of Pakistan. This was just before I came to Delhi for the conversations which resulted in the Delhi Agreement. You may recall that on that occasion you made a statement in your Parliament that you were on the brink of a precipice. It is with this background of uneasy Indo-Pakistan relations that I have been trying to persuade you that in the disputes that exist between India and Pakistan both you and I should take a more realistic view of the situation and not delude ourselves and our peoples into seeking solace in empty platitudes. You have referred to the failure of Sir Owen Dixon's mission and have drawn my attention to the fact that you have made a statement in one of your press conferences that India would not resort to war in Kashmir unless she is attacked. This is reassuring since Pakistan has no intention of attacking India. I have also declared over and over again that Pakistan wants peaceful settlement of the Kashmir question. Only Pakistan is irrevocably opposed to India gaining control of Kashmir by force against the will of the people and since India is in the military occupation of large areas in Jammu and Kashmir including the Valley it is obviously to India's advantage to prevent any plebiscite being held. Pakistan could not possibly acquiesce in this position.

5. In discussing the question of Kashmir you have explained at length why you are unable to accept arbitration on certain points of dispute regarding the timing of the withdrawal of Pakistan forces, the disbandment and disarming of Azad Kashmir forces and the withdrawal of India forces from Jammu and Kashmir territory. I put it to you that this is precisely the attitude which renders mere declarations meaningless. In my letter of the 21st I have stated that during the past years our joint undertaking to accept the decision of a free and impartial plebiscite of the inhabitants of Kashmir has remained a hollow declaration owing to refusal of your Government to implement this Agreement and the Resolutions of the United Nations Commission and the Security Council. Your Government has rejected every recommendation that their armed forces be withdrawn, while Pakistan has agreed that its armed forces be withdrawn, in order to certify that the plebiscite may take place without undue influence or compulsion by either side. When it was proposed to each of our Governments that we accept an impartial arbiter to settle the differences over the interpretation of the Agreement brought about by the United Nations, Pakistan concurred. India did not. How are we going to get anywhere if you persist that by agreeing to submit the issue to arbitration you would fail in your "duty" to and betray the people of Kashmir. It is our contention that the people of Kashmir have a right and should be given a chance to declare whether they wish to be protected by India.

6. Ever since the Kashmir question has been placed before the Security Council, India has persistently referred to what you describe as the "origin of the trouble". But was that not again precisely the point that India repeatedly urged before the Security Council and the UNCIP? Have they not considered it over and over again and not accepted India's contention? Surely no settlement is possible if one of the parties to a dispute persists in questioning the attitude and the actions of a body like the Security Council. If there is any aggression in Kashmir it is by India against the people of that State who are continuously being kept under India heel by means of force.

7. This letter has already become too long and I would not like to take too much of your time to go into the details of the Canal Waters Dispute. I regret, however, to find that your question the accuracy of my statement that "at the time of partition, Indian representatives joined in declaring that there was no question of varying the authorized shares of waters to which the two zones of the various canals are entitled". In my letters to you I take great pains to ensure accuracy and I repeat that the statement that I have made in my letter is correct. Nor, I must confess, do I see how you can deny that since partition India has sought to compel acceptance of greatly increased supplies for India at the expense of irrigation vital to Pakistan. As for the Agreement of May 1948, all that I maintain is that it was made under compulsion.

8. I am amazed that in paragraph 10 of your letter you have actually charged Pakistan with intransigence. May I draw your attention to my letter of the 23rd August? In that letter I have dealt with the question of technical investigation. In views of what I have stated therein the charge of intransigence is most unjustified. My contention is that even though engineers of the two countries have repeatedly met and there is a mass of factual data available this has not resulted in any progress in the settlement of the dispute. And how could it when you yourself say that such new proposals as you have considered since Partition are essential for the development of Punjab (India) and the adjoining areas in India; while we maintain that these works would inevitably devastate some of the richest areas in Pakistan, and your right to do this is the very issue to be adjudicated.

9. My statement that a tribunal such as the one proposed by you will be deadlocked is neither a reflection upon the impartiality of your judges nor on that of ours. But this is what we fear. And if past experience is any guide a deadlock is almost inevitable. In any case it would be wrong to make any plans without taking cognizance of what at least seems a very probable eventuality. It is for this reason that we suggest that reference might be made to a tribunal of undoubted standing - and "sitting thousands of miles away" so that it could decide the question dispassionately and without getting entangled into the barbed wire of political controversy. Nevertheless we have not rejected the idea of a tribunal. We have asked for a draft of governing convention. You have merely quoted from your previous reference. It was after seeing it that we felt that it was necessary to have a draft of governing convention. From my past experience I can say that unless details are clearly worked out we would find ourselves in the throes of new disagreements. If you would permit me to say so, you are so convinced of the rightness of your stand on every issue that I seem to have utterly failed to persuade you that there may be another side to any issue pending between us.

10. I notice that you have not made any new point with regard to the Evacuee property dispute. I am, however, glad to see that you recognize that the value of agricultural property would in certain areas depend upon the irrigation facilities that are available to it and in consequence, unless we made any progress with regard to the settlement of the Canal Waters Dispute, which vitally affects the most valuable, the most important irrigated area in Pakistan, it may be futile to talk of any equitable settlement. So far as the sale and exchange of urban evacuee property is concerned, if India will accept, as was once agreed upon, our repeated offers that there be freedom of sale and exchange of property, the problem would be greatly reduced.

11. You have summarily dismissed the question of the release of the assets of Pakistan by saying that you have counter-claims. I wish you had gone more into this question. My own view on the subject is that our claims in this respect also are of a character which could have been settled without any dispute had India shown an inclination to settle them.

12. I agree with you that it is our common misfortune that this correspondence seems to have produced no positive result. Despite my deep disappointment I assure you that I still believe that it is in the highest degree essential that our two Governments should settle all disputes by peaceful methods. I am convinced and I am never tired of saying so that a war between India and Pakistan would be an unmitigated disaster for both countries and I assure you that I shall continue to work for peace.

13. When you have had an opportunity to consider fully the views I have put forward, I believe it will serve the interests of our countries if we meet personally. I would very much welcome a visit by you to Karachi as soon as your duties permit.

Yours sincerely,

(Sd.) LIAQUAT ALI KHAN

The Hon’ble Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru
Prime Minister of India,
New Delhi.

0068. Letter from Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru to Pakistan Prime Minister Liaquat Ali Khan.

New Delhi, December 11, 1950.

My dear Nawabzada,

Your letter of the 27th November 1950 reached me that evening at about 8 p.m. It was too late then to include it in the printed collection that I was to lay on the Table of our Parliament the following morning. But I placed a copy of it along with the printed correspondence before the House. And, as there was no time to prepare a full reply, I made a statement in which I attempted to deal briefly with some of the points that your letter raised. For convenience of reference, I attach a copy of that statement. I am sorry for the delay in replying to your letter. I have been overwhelmed with work during these days and, as you are well aware, the international situation has become progressively more critical.

2. We have gone over the ground covered by your last letter so often that I find it difficult to say anything very new. I can only express my regret, once more, that, after all these months of argument, I have been unable to persuade you to accept the value of a simple no-war declaration. I am as convinced as ever that such a declaration would go a long way to clear the atmosphere for a friendly discussion of all the issues that are now outstanding between our two countries. In view of the dark clouds of war that are spreading all over the world, such a declaration by India and Pakistan would have peculiar value. However, even though we have not been able to agree on such a declaration, I welcome your assurance that Pakistan has no intention of attacking India, and your statement that Pakistan wants a peaceful settlement of the Kashmir question. As I stated before Parliament on the 28th November, India is pledged to peace and I gave a solemn assurance that we shall continue to work for peace with our neighbour country. There, I think, we must leave the matter for the present.

3. Press Propaganda: Although we have discussed these matters repeatedly, I feel that I should deal in this letter with certain observations that you have made. I shall take up first your reference to what you call the virulent propaganda against Pakistan in the Indian press. I must point out that the leading newspapers of this country have dealt with the Delhi Agreement helpfully and with a sense of responsibility. I am also satisfied that the tone of the Calcutta newspapers has improved considerably in recent months. Leading newspapers in Pakistan, however, stand out in sharp contrast and anti-Indian propaganda of an extreme type continues from day to day. This applies more especially to the Dawn of Karachi. In its leading articles and its news columns, there is unjust and unbridled criticism of India. Fictitious reports appear of economic and political conditions in India. All kinds of base motives are imputed to us; the latest example of this is the gross perversion of our relations with Nepal. It gives me no pleasure to say all this; I sincerely wish that things were otherwise. But for a fair appraisal, I think that we should try to see both sides of the picture.

4. Provisional Government of East Bengal: I have enquired into your allegation about the so-called provisional government of East Bengal. I did not know anything about it. I am told that in April last there was an announcement on the air from a secret source, by somebody calling himself “the Voice of East Bengal”, of the formation of a “Provisional Government of East Bengal” with J.P. Mitter as its “Head”. Attempts were made immediately by the police and others to locate this illegal transmitter, but without success. Since then there has been no announcement of this kind, nor have any activities of the “Provisional Government” come to our notice. You will no doubt remember that, during the communal tension in February, March and April, irresponsible statements were made in the two Bengals. I am told, for example, that immediately preceding the disturbances in Dacca last February, there was a broadcast from the Dacca Radio, after the 9 o’clock news one night, calling for vengeance on non-Muslims. I am sure you will agree that stray incidents of this kind are best ignored. In any case, I can assure you that I will not tolerate any illegal activities on Indian soil directed against the integrity and security of Pakistan. The large-scale movement of the military forces of India last February that you have mentioned was, as I stated in Parliament, a purely precautionary defensive measure, taken in a period of high tension.

5. Kashmir: As for Kashmir, you have repeated what has been said before on behalf of Pakistan, and no purpose will be served by my repeating what I have said so often on behalf of India. I would only point out that we are, and always have been, prepared to agree to any reasonable arrangements that would combine effective protection of the security of the State with complete freedom to the people of Jammu and Kashmir to decide their own future.

6. Canal Waters: In your letter dated the 21st November 1950 you had said that “at the time of Partition, the Indian representatives joined in declaring that there was no question of varying the shares of the two new countries in our Common Waters required for irrigation.” I characterised this statement as not correct in my letter to you dated the 24th November 1950 and I maintain that I was correct in so characterising it. You based your original statement apparently on the Report of the Reconstituted Committee - B appointed by the Punjab Partition Committee on the Division of Physical Assets of the Punjab.

In your present letter you have put within inverted commas certain words taken from this report which are by no means the same as what you had said in your previous letter. The actual words used in that Report are: “The Committee is agreed that there is no question of varying the authorised shares of water to which the two zones and the various canals are entitled.” It is only fair to point out that your original statement lacked accuracy. I note also that you have not referred to my further statement that, when this Committee’s report came up before the main Punjab Partition Committee, it was not agreed to. On the contrary, the Punjab Partition Committee concluded that “in regard to canals there was a difference of opinion over fundamental issues and it was decided to refer the matter to the Central Arbitral Committee after both sides had prepared their cases.”

7. Your further assertion that, since Partition, India has sought to compel acceptance of greatly increased supplies for herself at the expense of irrigation vital to Pakistan is absolutely without justification. India only proposes to utilise the waters to which she is entitled, but, before doing so, she has generously agreed not to prejudice any existing irrigation in Pakistan with such waters until Pakistan has had reasonable time to tap alternative sources which are so abundantly available in her own limits. This was fully realised by the representatives of Pakistan when they put their signatures to the Agreement of 4th May 1948. It is, I confess, a matter of amazement to me that you should still seek to maintain that that Agreement was made under compulsion.

8. Pakistan’s intransigence as regards the technical examination agreed to between the two countries hardly requires proof. Engineers of the two countries have no doubt met more than once, but if, in spite of these meetings and the mass of factual data available, no progress has been made in the settlement of the dispute, it can only be attributed to the refusal of the representatives of the Pakistan Government to permit the two sets of engineers to get on with the technical examination of the problem. It is incorrect to say that the works, which in India are now in progress, “would inevitably devastate some of the richest areas in Pakistan.” It is our firm conviction that, if only the technical examination is allowed to be made in a spirit of mutual understanding and accommodation, not only the richest areas in Pakistan but all other legitimately irrigable areas will get the supply of water they reasonably need. I have no doubt that, if the tribunal which I have suggested is established and is assisted by the results of such a technical examination, it would not be difficult for it to find an equitable solution of the problem.

9. Evacuee Property: I can only regret that you should still think that the tribunal we have suggested would not serve any useful purpose. I am also disappointed at your refusal to discuss the evacuee property dispute pending a settlement in the canal waters dispute, except on the basis suggested by you, namely, that there should be freedom of sale and exchange of urban property. In my previous letter I have explained why we feel that this method of approach to the evacuee property problem would not lead to a satisfactory solution. I need not repeat what I have said previously.

10. Pakistan Assets: I think you do me less than justice in saying that I have summarily dismissed the question of release of Pakistan assets. In my very first letter dated 18th January 1950 (paras 7 to 10), I had referred in detail to the nature of the disagreement which had arisen between the two Governments on this issue and also drawn your attention to the large financial claims by Government of India which have been outstanding for a long time. By way of illustration of these claims I may mention the sums due to us on account of the military stores transferred to Pakistan, the payment of sums realised by the sale of surplus stores, and the share of expenditure incurred by India on the Joint Defence Council. It would not be correct to say that the question of release of Pakistan assets is a matter on which negotiations between the two Governments have failed. In fact there have already been informal discussions and correspondence with the Governor of the State Bank of Pakistan and with your Finance Ministry and some progress has been made in clarifying the issues. You are aware that this question along with certain other financial issues in dispute has been placed by your Government on the agenda of the Inter-Dominion Conference at the Secretariat level. On our side too, we have proposed a number of financial issues for discussion at this Conference. I am sure you will agree that it is desirable to treat all these outstanding issues together rather than deal with them piecemeal. This Conference, which was to be held on the 4th September, has had to be postponed to suit the mutual convenience of the two Governments. I understand that it is going to be held on the 18th of this month.

11. In conclusion, I should like to thank you for your invitation to me to visit Karachi. I attach value to periodical meetings between us as they can help us more than anything to understand our respective points of view, to pave the way to a settlement of outstanding issues and, generally, to promote good relations between our two countries. This month our Parliament will go on until the 21st December at least and the session may be prolonged. On the 25th I expect the Australian Prime Minister here for a couple of days. As he goes from here to Karachi, his visit will doubtless keep you busy till the end of the year. Soon after that both of us have to go to London. It looks, therefore, as if my visit to Karachi will have to wait until after our return from the U.K.

12. As our previous correspondence has already been placed before Parliament here and your Constituent Assembly, I think that the present letter should be placed before our Parliament. Indeed I gave an assurance to this effect to Members of the House. I therefore propose to place a copy of this letter on the table of the House on the 15th December. If you like, you can publish it on the same day.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

I. General:

The two Delegations exchanged notes on –

(a) Action taken by either Government on the minutes of the 5th meeting of the Indo–Pakistan Information Consultative Committee held in Calcutta on 30th and 31st October, 1950; and

(b) Further action taken through media of publicity and by State and Provincial Governments in implementation of the Indo–Pakistan Agreement of 8th April, 1950.

II. PRESS:

On 7th March, 1951, the Press Sub–Committee of the Indo–Pakistan Information Consultative Committee examined material supplied by the two Delegations in review of news and comments appearing in newspapers of the two countries since the last meeting of the Committee. The report of the Sub–Committee was discussed. The Committee noted with satisfaction the general improvement in the communal situation and the substantial contribution made by the Press by responding to the appeal made to it in the meeting of the Indo–Pakistan Information Consultative Committee held in Calcutta on the 30th and 31st of Oct., 1950.

The Committee, however, felt that the major breaches of Clauses 7 and 8 of Part C of the Indo–Pakistan Agreement of 8th April 1950 occurred in the Press because sufficient attention was not paid to

(i) the necessity of avoiding publication of matter

(a) Advocating war or calculated to create a war psychosis, and

(b) Attacking the territorial integrity of either country.

(ii) Clauses (d) and (e) of the Joint Press Code which read as follows:-

“The Joint Press Committee calls upon the Press of both countries to help to facilitate the further implementation of the Indo – Pakistan Agreement;

(d) By seeking through normal Press channels or Government Agencies, verification of news of communal incidents before it is published;
(e) By always exercising due care and caution in regard to the publication of reports of communal incidents."

(iii) The following paragraph of the Resolution passed by the Joint Press Committee in the meeting held in Calcutta on 29th, 30th and 31st October, 1950:

“The Joint Press Committee feels that even if some of the problems take time to resolve, comments in newspapers should be confined strictly to the merits of the problem or problems in dispute and it should in no case be made the basis of a general attack against the two Governments or a personal contumacious or scurrilous attacks against the respected leaders of either country, or the religion, culture and faith of the people of both countries”.

The Committee thought it was necessary to reiterate the principles; in particular it was necessary to enjoin upon the Press that comments on problems in dispute between India and Pakistan should be discussed on their merits without introduction of matter arousing communal passion or attacking the territorial integrity of either country or advocating war or creating a war psychosis and should not be made the basis of contumacious, or scurrilous attacks against the religion, culture and faith of the people of either country or personal attacks against their respected leaders.

The President of the Joint Press Committee (Shri Deshbandhu Gupta) informed the Committee that the Joint Press Committee had earlier in the morning of 9th March 1951 unanimously adopted the following resolution:-

“Reviewing the position since it last met at Calcutta, this meeting of the Indo – Pakistan Joint Press Committee notes with satisfaction the progress made in the direction of restoring confidence and an increasing sense of security in the minorities, and is glad that a substantial contribution has been made to this end by the Press of both countries.”

“The Committee hopes that the Press will continue its efforts to establish the sense of security that is now increasingly prevalent and make it its direct and immediate objective in the publication of news and comments.”

“The Committee however notes with regret that during recent months there has been some deterioration in the tone of the Press in the following directions:-

(a) War – Mongering;
(b) Attacking territorial integrity;
(c) Scurrilous attacks against the religion, culture and faith of the people of both countries;
(d) Personal and scurrilous attacks against respected leaders of either country; and
(e) Rousing communal passions.”

“The Committee realizes that there are still some issues outstanding which have yet to be resolved between the two countries with growing goodwill on both sides.”

“The Committee reiterates its faith in the capacity of both countries to settle all outstanding points of difference by peaceful means and appeals to the Press of both countries to help in creating the atmosphere of goodwill and good neighbourliness to assist this process, and particularly to refrain from committing the lapses enumerated above.”

The resolution was welcomed by the Committee. While welcoming it, the Committee expressed the hope that the principles embodied in the resolution would find full response in the Press.

III. Films:

Reference was made to the following films:-

(a) Films produced in Pakistan and objected to by India.

(i) and (ii) Inqilab e– Kashmir and Mujahid Koun.

The attention of the Pakistan Delegation was drawn to the Government of India’s letter No. 24/27/49 – IP, dated 17th February, 1950, stating that, according to the Government of India’s information, the film had been shown in some districts of West Pakistan. The Pakistan Delegation stated that they had not received the letter under reference, but the films in question had been discussed in an earlier meeting of the Committee. On the request of the Indian Delegation, the Pakistan Delegation agreed that the Government of Pakistan would again make suitable inquiries and inform the Government of India. A copy of the Government of India’s letter of 17th February, 1950 would be supplied to the Government of Pakistan.

(iii) Kashmir Hamara Hai renamed Jang e– Azadi.

The Pakistan Delegation said that the Government of Pakistan would send a report on the film to the Government of India as soon as possible.
(b) Films produced in India and objected to by Pakistan:

(i) Lahore

The Indian Delegation stated that the Government of India had received the report of the West Punjab Board of Film Censors on the film with the Government of Pakistan’s letter dated 15th April, 1950, and that a reply would be sent to the Government of India after the matter had been examined.

(ii) Kashmir Hamara Hai,

(iii) Sajan Ka Ghar,

(iv) Aag

As the Indian Delegation had no information about these films and as the Government of Pakistan had not so far written to the Government of India regarding them, the Government of Pakistan would supply particulars of the films as well as their objections to the Government of India and the objections would be examined.

IV. Publications:

The Committee agreed that in order to enable either Government to trace all publications objected to by the Government of India or the Government of Pakistan, fuller particulars of the publications that might be objected to from time to time would be supplied. Also in future, as far as possible, precise objections to each publication would be stated. As regards official and non—official publications, which were still the subject matter of correspondence between the two Governments, correspondence would continue. Particulars of other publications to which either Government wished to object would also be communicated in writing. The Committee, however, discussed the following publications and agreed as below:-

1. “R.S.S."

2. “Note of Sikh Plan”

3. “Sikhs in Action”.

The Indian Delegation suggested that no reprinting of these publication might be done and further circulation of existing copies, if any, might be stopped. The Pakistan Delegation agreed to examine the suggestion.

“Great Impeachment”: The Indian Delegation stated that the publication was mainly a criticism of the Prime Minister of India and suggested that the objection of the Pakistan Government might be withdrawn.
“Jinnah Ke Khuda Ke Hazur Men”: The Pakistan Delegation drew special attention to this publication and requested early action on their communication.

“Defending Kashmir”

“Kashmir Fortnightly Issue of December, 1950”

“Rehabilitating The Uprooted.”

The Government of Pakistan would communicate in writing to the Government of India their objections to these publications; the objections would be examined by the Government of India.

V. Radio

The two Delegations exchanged the following notes:

(a) Note by the Government of India on breaches of the Indo – Pakistan Agreement of 8th April 1950 by Radio Pakistan, together with instances of such breaches.

(b) Note by the Government of Pakistan on breaches by All India Radio of the Indo – Pakistan Agreement of 8th April, 1950, together with instances of such breaches.

It was agreed that the notes would be examined for suitable action by the Government concerned in the light of the Clauses 7 & 8 of Part C of the Indo – Pakistan Agreement of 8th April, 1950.

VI. The Committee agreed to recommend to the Governments of India and Pakistan that the name of the Committee might be changed from “Inter – Dominion Information Consultative Committee” to “Indo – Pakistan Information Consultative Committee,” as, since the Committee was set up in December, 1948, India had been declared a Republic.

VII. The Committee agreed to recommend to the Governments of India and Pakistan that the provision in the Inter – Dominion Agreement of December, 1948, requiring that the Inter – Dominion Information Consultative Committee should meet alternately in Karachi and Delhi, should be suitably amended in order to enable the Committee to meet at other places in India and Pakistan as might, from time to time, be agreed to between the two Governments.

VIII. The Indian Delegation stated that a number of communications drawing attention to some breaches of the Indo – Pakistan Agreement of 8th April, 1950 in the East Bengal Press had been addressed by the office of the Central Minister of India appointed for the purpose of the Agreement to the Central Minister of Pakistan but no reply had been received. The Pakistan Delegation stated that they were aware of only one case, in which East Bengal Government had been addressed by the office of the Central Minister of Pakistan and copy of the communication had been marked to Information and Broadcasting Division. The Committee suggested for the consideration of the two Governments that it might be helpful if copies of such complaints regarding the press could in future be forwarded by the offices of the two Ministers to the respective Ministries of their Governments dealing with Information.

0070. Letter D.O. No. 239/51 – S. from the Indian Ministry of External Affairs to the Pakistan High Commissioner in India.

New Delhi, March 15, 1951.

Dear Mr. Ismail,

I attach a copy of a handout which has been issued by the Pakistan Deputy High Commissioner in Calcutta and distributed in Calcutta. We take serious exception to the distribution within our country by the representative of another Government of a statement which is so derogatory of our Prime Minister and so unfairly critical of our country. It is immaterial whether or not the handout quotes the report from a foreign newspaper. As you know such distribution is against the informal understanding which was reached by the two Governments. I shall, therefore, be grateful if you will kindly ask the Deputy High Commissioner in Calcutta immediately to stop publication of such statements. I understand that similar handouts were distributed by him in the past.

Yours Sincere

My dear Mr. Biswas,

I would like to draw your attention to the speech delivered by Dr. Shyama Prasad Mukerjee in Shahid Bag in Cooch Bihar on the 6th of May 1951. Even from the reports published in the Jugantar of the 8th of May and the Ananda Bazar Patrika of the 9th May, it is obvious that he has advocated in the clearest possible language that Indians should do their best to regain possession of East Bengal. Some of the words used by him like “we want back East Bengal”, “East Bengal cannot stay out of Bharat”, “taking it we will build a greater Bengal”, proves that he has been openly advocating the amalgamation of East Bengal into India by force. The speech, considering the audience of refugees to which it was delivered (even leaving out of consideration the much larger audience formed by the newspaper readers in India) was clearly intended to incite them to resort to force in the future for the sake of regaining possession of East Bengal. You will agree that this speech of Dr. Shyama Prasad Mukerjee like his previous utterances ever since he resigned from the Indian Cabinet last year is but another instance of flagrant violation of the relevant clause of the Delhi Agreement.

Many previous protests have been lodged by us against his always—provocative speeches and we were once assured by the late Sardar Patel that the Government of India would deal with him in their own way and at the proper time. We made allowances then as the Pact had just been signed and the exodus on both sides had not yet stopped. Full confidence had yet to return and both you and the Hon’ble Dr. Malik had to devote all your energies to the immediate task of restoration of normality. Now that so much has been done by both the Central Ministers on both sides and so many lakhs have returned and are busy trying to pick up the broken threads of their existence, such speeches are much more provocative and dangerous.

Both you and I cannot afford to let anything retard the progress so far made or recreate the unhappy conditions of last year. Speeches of this type provoke bitter resentment amongst all sections of the people of East Bengal and I have been flooded with questions as to what action will be taken against him under the Delhi Agreement. I regret to say that much good work done by officials and the leading members of the majority community during the past one year in this province, to recreate feelings of friendship and good neighbourliness towards West Bengal and her people is being criminally negatived by the utterances of Dr. Mookherjee and Dr. Khare in West Bengal. Neither of us can contemplate with equanimity the prospect of all our hard work during the past year being wasted completely by such irresponsible, unnecessary and dangerous statements. I would strongly urge you to apply your mind to this matter and let me know what action the Government of India propose to take to stop the unceasing efforts of these politicians (particularly Dr. Mukherjee) to develop a war hysteria in West Bengal again. I have no doubt that the newspaper reports referred to by me contain only a fraction of what Dr. Mukherjee said at this meeting. If you would send for the I.B. reports from the West Bengal police you will see for yourself how much more he has actually said.

I am sending a copy of this to the Prime Minister of Pakistan.

Yours sincerely,

Letter No. D.O. 439 – FS/51. from the Indian Ministry of External Affairs to the Indian Minister of State for Minority Affairs suggesting the draft reply to the letter received by him from the Pakistan Minister of Minority Affairs.

New Delhi, the 7th June, 1951.

Dear Mr. Biswas,

Kindly refer to your demi – official letter No. 229 – H.M. of the 31st May. The Prime Minister would like you to send the following letter to Mr. Azizuddin Ahmed in reply to his letter of the 22nd May:

"We have not seen the full text of Dr. Syama Prasad Mukerjee’s speech, but we are aware that his speeches have been unfortunate and sometimes deplorable. To our knowledge, he has not preached any violent action, but he certainly has mentioned, on several occasions, that Pakistan and India should be united and that East and West Bengal should be united. We agree that this is not proper and not in keeping with our Agreement.

2. Our difficulty is that under our Constitution we cannot take any steps against such utterances. You may have noticed in the Press the recent debates in Parliament at Delhi in connection with the Constitution Amendment Bill. In these debates our Prime Minister spoke with some warmth against Dr. Mukerjee’s views.

3. Apart from the legal difficulty pointed out above, there is the practical question as to whether a prosecution would be helpful or otherwise. We are convinced that any prosecution for such a speech against Dr. Mukerjee would not only result in giving a speech wide publicity, but would also bring a good deal of sympathy for him and his ideas, which otherwise is lacking. The fact of the matter is that Dr. Mukerjee’s efforts during the last year have very largely failed and few persons attach importance to what he says in this respect. Some loose talk goes on here and there, but no responsible person attaches importance to it.

4. You know that in Pakistan, especially Western Pakistan, there has been for many months a continuous and persistent propaganda for war against India; that is a much more direct and flagrant breach of our Agreement, apart from its creating great tension. Some weeks ago a party was formed in Western Pakistan called the Hindustan Hamara Party with the definite object of conquering India and attaching it to Pakistan. You will agree with me, I am sure, that this kind of thing goes a very great deal further than what Dr. Mukerjee has said.

The above text was reproduced by Mr. Biswas in reply to Mr. Azizuddin Ahmed letter of 22nd May 1951.
5. The fact of the matter is that certain irresponsible elements talk wildly. The real point at issue is what the Government's attitude is – whether they actively or passively encourage this talk and propaganda or discourage it in every way. Our Government's policy is perfectly clear and has been repeatedly stated in Parliament and elsewhere. That policy undoubtedly represents a great majority opinion in India.”

Yours sincerely

0073. Letter from the Pakistan Minister of Interior, Information & Broadcasting Division to the Indian Minister of State for Information and Broadcasting regarding hostile propaganda.

Karachi, July 9, 1951.

D.O. No. 35 (44)/51 – IPICC. Karachi, the 9th July, 1951

My dear Shri Diwakar,

Kindly refer to your letter PS. No. 660/51, dated April 30, 1951, received in reply to my telegram dated April 8, 1951.

You have said that “in almost all the cases” quoted by me in my telegram to you of the 8th April, 1951, “the reports published by newspapers in India had already appeared in London newspapers.” This, I am afraid, is not correct, except in one out of the twelve cases I had mentioned. The one exception is the Hindustan Times of March 14th, which selects parts, unfavourable to Pakistan, of stories from the Daily Telegraph and the Observer and gives its own versions of them. As you will see from Appendix I, all the other papers mentioned by me carry stories from their own correspondents either in India or Pakistan. And it appears that the Indian papers are still continuing their practice of irresponsible reporting. Many such cases have come to light since the last protest was made, but here I shall mention only two of the more glaring instances. The Sansar Samacharo of May 19th publishes its Karachi correspondent's report saying that those who have been arrested in connection with the conspiracy were financially supported by Russia. The Free Pres Journal of May 23rd carries a story from its Karachi correspondent to the effect that the reason for the conspiracy was the resentment of the Pakistani public against the leasing of bases to a foreign power.

It is, thus, clear that as I said in my telegram of 8th April "the Indian Press has been concocting all sorts of baseless stories about the conspiracy". Therefore the Pakistan Government is justified in strongly protesting against this.

You also say that the Indian Press is a free press, implying thereby that it can say whatever it likes; but may I point out that the Government of India has taken action in some cases. For instance, the Qaumi Awaz (Lucknow) of 4th May carried the news that the Editors of Siyasat and Aftab, two dailies of Cawnpore (Kanpur), had been arrested for publishing a news item to the effect that several thousand students demonstrated before the Collector's bungalow and demanded the expulsion from the city of Punjabi refugees. Surely, the instances quoted by me are more glaring than this.

And then, the very fact that the Government of India entered into the 1948 and 1950 Agreements with the Govt. of Pakistan shows that the former can take action against its Press, no matter how free it is, as otherwise the Agreements would be meaningless. Therefore the plea that the Indian Press is free, so that no action can be taken against it, is untenable.

You have drawn my attention to certain instances in which, according to you, "Press of Pakistan had adopted a highly regrettable attitude". Of the instances quoted by you, two are relevant to the conspiracy. It is true that the Pasban of March 17th did say things to which objection could be taken; but in face of all the provocation given by the Indian Press, of which I save only a few instances in my telegram of April 8th, it is not altogether surprising that a minor Pakistani paper was unable to maintain proper tone. The case of Khatoon of March 17th is not worth notice. No harm can be done by what appears in the Khatoon as it is a little known paper with very poor circulation but we have asked for the explanation of the paper concerned.

As regards the other cases pointed out by you, they fall under two categories:-

(1) Kashmir Question,

(2) the Prime Minister of India.
No. (1) Stands in a class by itself, and it was discussed threadbare by the Indo – Pakistan Information Consultative Committee at its meeting held at Karachi on March 8th and 9th, 1951. It was explained in this connection that there was an admitted dispute between India and Pakistan regarding Kashmir, and the Pakistani Press could not be stopped from discussing this question or giving expression to the public feeling.

As regards (2) much worse things have been said in the Indian Press about the Prime Minister and other leaders of Pakistan; so that if some Pakistani papers too were provoked to publish some items not quite complimentary to the Prime Minister of India, it is not wholly unexpected. We, however, do our best to discourage this, and whenever any objectionable item is brought to our notice, we specially advise the paper and take other suitable action.

You have also complained against some broadcasts of Radio Pakistan, extracts from which you have enclosed with your letter under reference. As regards the two extracts from the Grand Mufti's speeches it is not clear what is objectionable in his appeal for Muslim unity or his suggestion about struggle for the liberation of Kashmir. Pakistan does not recognize Kashmir as a part of India, and therefore any reference to a struggle for the State's liberation cannot be a challenge to India's integrity. On the other hand A.I.R. consistently describes the Azad Kashmir Government as "Raider Government" and Pakistan as "aggressor". The extract from the Kashmiri broadcast of March 18th also refers to the struggle of liberation of Kashmir, and the same remarks apply to this too. As regards the remaining two extracts, I have to point out that it has not been possible to trace any such broadcasts at the times and dates mentioned by you. Perhaps if correct details are supplied, the broadcasts objected to can be looked up.

While on this subject, I think one thing is clear about Kashmir — a dispute exists. Therefore expression of the view point of Pakistanis cannot be objected to by anybody. Nor can exception be taken to the use of the word jihad. The meaning of this expression was thoroughly discussed at the last meeting of the Indo – Pakistan Information Consultations Committee at Karachi, and I need not cover the whole ground again. On the other hand the so – called "Pushtoonistan" is, according to International agreements, part of Pakistan, and yet A.I.R., both in the Home Services and its external broadcasts, persistently plays up the "Pushtoonistan Movement". Activities of the so–called Pushtoonistan leaders are widely reported; unconfirmed reports of clashes between Pakistani troops and tribesmen and horrifying details of Pakistani atrocities are prominently featured. The whole idea seems to be to incite the tribesmen to revolt against Pakistan. Also advance publicity has been given to the so-called Pushtoonistan Conference in Calcutta and Delhi. Normally advance publicity is given when it is intended to build up a movement. (Some items bearing on the subject are given in Appendix II). Therefore, this is a clear case of inciting Pakistanis to rebel against their Government, and attack on Pakistan’s territorial integrity. The Government of Pakistan strongly protests against this, and hopes that suitable steps would be taken by the Government of India to restrain the Indian Press and the A.I.R. from indulging in statements in contravention of the Indo – Pakistan Agreements.

I am afraid this letter has become longer than I wished it to be, but you had quoted a number of instances in your letter. I think with regard to the lapses of the Press etc., the decision of Indo – Pakistan Information Consultative Committee has been that they may be brought to the notice of the Government concerned as and when they occur so that remedial and other action can be taken immediately. Of the policy followed by us I shall give you an instance. On 10th May, 1951, the Jung of Karachi published an objectionable item, to which our attention was drawn by the Government of India. We immediately contacted the newspaper and a contradiction was issued on 17th May, 1951. We, however, were not content with mere contradiction and as this item was very objectionable, wanted the newspaper to express regret. This, the newspaper was not very keen to do and it was after a great deal of persuasion that it published an apology in its issue dated 17th June, 1951. We hope a similar policy is being followed by the Government of India. Objectionable items will normally be pointed out on the secretariat level, and in specially important and urgent cases by me, and I hope they will receive prompt and due consideration.

Yours sincerely

Sd/- (Khwaja Shahabuddin)

The Hon’ble Shri R.R. Diwakar, Minister for Information & Broadcasting,
New Delhi.

0074. Telegram from the Prime Minister of Pakistan to the Prime Minister of India.

Karachi, July 26, 1951.

I am in receipt of your telegram No. Primin 21587, dated 24th July 1951. In my last telegram, which you have chosen to describe as propagandist, I merely stated certain facts, unpleasant perhaps, but nonetheless true.

2. The present crisis has been caused by the massing of Indian forces against Pakistan’s borders and the removal of this threat to peace should be our first concern. But as a number of issues have been raised in the course of this correspondence, I must perforce deal with them briefly.

3. Firstly, as to Junagadh, I need hardly remind you that Junagadh acceded to Pakistan, was invaded by Indian forces and its occupation by India is a continuing act of aggression against, Pakistan. The case is pending before the Security Council. Similarly, India’s aggression against Hyderabad is also before Security Council. Nepal’s independence was undermined by operations conducted from Indian territory and it is now virtually a dependency of India. The protest of Nepal Government against my reference to operation of Indian forces within Nepal is only further proof of this dependence, if such were needed.

4. You have referred again to alleged reduction of Indian Army in 1950-51. In the first place military strength of a country depends upon strength of its armed forces as a whole and NOT merely upon one arm of it. Your Navy, Air Force have admittedly been substantially increased and it is undeniable that strength of your armed forces as a whole has been on increase since partition. Secondly even in regard to Army the so called reduction is NOT an effective reduction in its fighting strength but merely a reorganisation and weeding out of Indian State forces which have been integrated into Indian Army. These State forces were always in past considered as second class troops and their reorganisation and integration as part of Indian Army has actually increased their fighting power. The truth of the matter is that effective fighting strength of Indian Army has been enhanced particularly by a notable increase in Indian Artillery which is major hitting weapon of Army. In debate on defense budget for 1950-51 your Defence Minister gave assurance that “at present there is NO desire to reduce strength of our Army, Navy or Air Force”. This is borne out by fact that in respect of army the original budget in 1950-51 was Rs. 131 (repeat 131) crores and revised budget went up to Rs. 144 crores.

5. The strength of India’s armed forces at the time of partition was double that of Pakistan. You have since persistently tried to increase that disparity,
NOT only by constantly building up your armed forces but also by attempting to hamstring Pakistan forces, by denying them the stores which were their rightful share under partition agreement. Pakistan has, therefore, been forced to spend considerable sums on purchase of equipment wrongfully withheld by India. In spite of this the increases Pakistan's defence budgets are less than half of those for an India's defence budget. To suggest therefore that you have NOT carried out a reduction in your armed forces because of Pakistan's actions is a complete travesty of facts. Because of disparity between armed forces of the two countries, it is fantastic to suggest there is any danger of aggression against India from Pakistan. The greater size of India's armed forces, the manner in which they have been used from time to time in neighbouring territory and repeated threats to the security of Pakistan by massing of your troops against Pakistan's frontiers can leave NO one in doubt as to where the potentiality of aggression lies.

6. I am astounded at your statement that outside a small and irresponsible section there has been no (repeat no) propaganda for war against Pakistan in Indian Press. Surely, you CANNOT be unaware that second largest political organisation in your country, the Hindu Mahasabha, the widespread influence of which is well known, has openly adopted as an article of its creed the undoing of partition, which is synonymous with liquidation of Pakistan. It has been carrying on intensive and persistent propaganda for this object. But Hindu Mahasabha, is not (repeat not) the only party in India doing this. One has only to cast a casual glance at the Indian Press to see the virulence of propaganda against Pakistan.

In this, as in all other matters, I am prepared to abide by judgment of any impartial person.

7. Your references to propaganda in Pakistan are misconceived. All that Pakistan has stressed is a free and impartial plebiscite in Kashmir under U.N. auspices so that the people of Kashmir can exercise their right of self-determination, free from fear, pressure and coercion. It is the persistent denial of this fundamental right by your Government and the continued occupation of that State by your armed forces which is driving NOT only the people of Pakistan, but all, peace-living people throughout the World to despair. It is the expression of this despair to which you take, exception. You wish to impose a solution on the people of Kashmir by force and if the people of Pakistan and of Kashmir say that they will NOT allow this imposition, they are doing No more than asserting a just and inalienable right. The quotations from the speeches or statements of responsible persons in Pakistan that you have given are capable of this and only this interpretation. They have been evoked by highly provocative speeches by yourself, your Ministers and others such as Mr.
TANDON, the President of the Indian National Congress. Again, I am prepared to abide by the judgment of any impartial person who reads your speeches and mine over Kashmir and relations between India and Pakistan to say where the responsibility lies.

Speaking in Indian Parliament last year about Kashmir and Bengal, you said with reference to Pakistan “If methods we have suggested are not (repeat not) agreed to, it may be that we shall have to adopt other methods”. It was clear to your hearers and to whole world what “other methods” you were referring to. In March 1951 in reply to a question at a Press Conference in New Delhi as to what guarantee there was that Indian troops would NOT occupy the whole of Kashmir if Pakistani and Indian troops were not (repeat not) withdrawn simultaneously you asserted that “It was their business to occupy the whole of Kashmir if there was any danger to any part of it”.

In June 1951 you made three objectionable speeches on Kashmir in the course of which you said “we will tolerate no (repeat no) nonsense about Kashmir, come what may”. Incidentally, it was in reply to this that Foreign Minister of Pakistan made statement you have quoted in your telegram.

Soon after this Mr. GOPALASWAMI AYYANGAR, the Minister for States, referring to minor border incidents which had taken place on both sides said “they were calculated to furnish an excuse for outbreak of major hostilities between India and Pakistan”.

Mr. JAIN, another of your Ministers speaking in Indian Parliament in April 1951 said “If Pakistan does not (repeat not) behave properly we shall have to do something to make them realise and behave in a civilized fashion”.

Colonel RAGHBIR SINGH, Chief Minister of PEPSU, referring, to possibility of war between India and Pakistan said “If it took place the battle would be fought on PAKISTAN soil”!

8. The major cause of tension between India and Pakistan is India’s refusal to honour its international agreement for a free and impartial plebiscite in Kashmir under U.N. auspices. The record on this point is clear and well known to the whole world. Every effort to implement the two UNCIP Resolutions of August 13th 1948 and January 15th 1949, has been defeated by Indian intransigence. These two Resolutions provide that “the question of accession of State of Jammu and Kashmir to India or Pakistan will be decided through the democratic method of a free and impartial plebiscite” and lay down a clear procedure for withdrawal of Indian and Pakistan forces and for creation of other conditions in free Plebiscite to be held under U.N. auspices. The U.N. Commission, the Security Council, the U.N. Representative, Sir Owen Dixon, the Commonwealth Prime Ministers, have all made efforts to get this International Agreement, demilitarisation and the holding of a free Plebiscite implemented. Every one of the proposals made by them was accepted by Pakistan and rejected by India. In the circumstances it is completely contrary to facts to suggest that the presence of Pakistan forces comes in the way of a peaceful solution. Under the International Agreement we have agreed to withdraw our troops along with withdrawal of Indian forces. We abide by and are prepared to carry out every letter of that Agreement provided India will do the same.

9. The root of whole trouble lies in your persistent refusal to withdraw your forces from Kashmir in an attempt to hold down Kashmir by force in utter disregard of the wishes of its people and of international obligations. The occupation of Kashmir by your armed forces under cover of a wholly invalid Instrument of Accession offered by the Maharaja was an act of aggression against Pakistan and against the people of Kashmir. May I remind you that when Pakistan accepted the accession of Junagadh in peaceful circumstances and without any opposition from the people, your Government wrote to us “Pakistan Government further unilaterally proceeded to action which it was made plain, Government of India could never and do NOT acquiesce in. Such acceptance of accession by Pakistan CANNOT but be regarded by Government of India as an encroachment on India’s Sovereignty and territory and inconsistent with friendly relations that should exist between two dominions. This action of Pakistan is considered by Government of India to be a clear attempt to cause disruption in integrity of India by extending influence and boundaries of Dominion of Pakistan in utter violation of principles of which partition was agreed upon and effected”. You have only to read Kashmir in place of Junagadh and India in place of Pakistan and vice-versa to realise in what light your action in respect of Kashmir appears to us and to the rest of the World.

10. Your claim that Kashmir is a part of Indian territory is wholly wrong and untenable and utterly opposed to international agreement followed by India and Pakistan according to which question of its accession to India or Pakistan is to be decided by a free Plebiscite. Your efforts to perpetuate your occupation of Kashmir by means of force constitutes gravest threat to international peace. You are now attempting to BOLSTER up this false claim by means of a puppet Constituent Assembly stage managed by an Indian controlled Administration under shadow of Indian bayonets. You are aiming thereby to present world with a fait accompli in utter violation of international agreement and in spite of condemnation by Security Council.

11. Pakistan CANNOT allow India to grab Kashmir by force. It is only people of Kashmir in a free and impartial Plebiscite held under U.N. auspices that can decide whether Kashmir is to accede to India or Pakistan. Pakistan will continue to make every effort to secure to people of Kashmir the right of freely to decide their own future and will NOT rest until that right, has been effectively secured to them. This determination and this attitude towards problem of Kashmir have found repeated expression in Pakistan. They are inspired by deepest regard for democratic principle of self determination and for international peace.

12. Because Pakistan demands self determination for people of Kashmir and presses for the implementation of obligations undertaken by India, you choose to regard this as sufficient justification for you to mass, the vast bulk of your forces against Pakistan’s borders. The surest indications of intentions of a Government for peace or for war are its actions. Pakistan had NOT made a single troop movement towards India’s frontiers when India set out to mass its forces against Pakistan’s borders. In fact for months before this you had been collecting equipment and stores, establishing bases and making roads in preparation for massing of your forces on Pakistan’s frontiers. All this was part of a carefully thought out plan; and preceding propaganda drive against Pakistan was a prelude and a cover to demonstration of India’s armed might over which Indian press is gloating and which it vainly imagines will intimidate the people of Pakistan and of Kashmir.

You asserted they are wholly precautionary and defensive measures. The concentration and disposition of your forces and, massing of your entire armour within easy striking distance of Pakistan are clearly offensive in character. But again I am prepared to accept the judgment of any impartial observer on this point.

13. You say that even now anyone can contrast the war propaganda and preparations of Pakistan with absence of any such activities in India. Massing of 90 per cent, of Indian army including all its armour against Pakistan’s borders would NOT strike any impartial observer as absence of warlike activity. As to propaganda, I would only ask you to read the Leading Article in Hindustan Times of New Delhi dated 23rd July 1951 with its reference to mailedReduce fist directed by India against Pakistan and utterly baseless and false allegation that Pakistan agreed to give bases to the Western Block in return for latter’s support over Kashmir.

14. Regarding NO War declaration the fact of the matter is that you are NOT prepared to accept any effective NO War declaration which would rule out use of force in its various forms in settlement of disputes and which would establish effective procedures for settlement of disputes. It is wrong to suggest I have added many conditions. All that I asked you was to accept arbitration if negotiation and mediation should fail to settle any dispute.

15. You have said that India has No intention whatever of attacking Pakistan. I assert categorically that Pakistan has No intention of attacking Indian territory.
Both of us have made similar declarations before. These have produced NO result because time and again you have threatened the security of Pakistan by demonstrations of force. The first and most essential step for relieving the present tension is for you to withdraw your forces to their normal peace time stations. If you do this, I am also prepared to cancel the troops carrying movements which I was obliged to make after the concentration of your forces against PAKISTAN’S borders.

16. For the restoration of a peaceful atmosphere and the establishment of friendly relations between our two countries on a permanent basis I make the following proposals:—

(i) The troops now concentrated on borders should immediately be withdrawn back to their normal peace time stations.

(ii) As soon as this has been done both India and Pakistan should reaffirm their agreement that “the question of the accession of the State of Jammu and Kashmir to India or Pakistan will be decided through the democratic method of a free and impartial plebiscite” held under U.N. auspices. To this basis both Governments should state their readiness to implement without obstruction or delay the obligations, undertaken by them under the U.N.C.I.P, Resolutions of 13 August, 1948, and 5 January, 1949, which include the observance of the Cease-fire Agreement and the withdrawal of their armed forces from the State, and to accept the decision of the Security Council in the event of any differences in regard to the interpretation and execution of these agreed Resolutions.

(iii) Both Governments should also declare their renunciation of the use of force as methods in the settlement of any other disputes and to refer such disputes to arbitration, or judicial determination if they are NOT resolved by negotiation or mediation.

(iv) Both Governments should reaffirm the obligation undertaken by them in the Delhi Agreement of April 8th particularly in clause C (VIII), that they “shall NOT permit propaganda in either country directed against the territorial integrity of the other or purporting to incite war between them and shall take prompt and effective action against any individual or organisation guilty of such propaganda”.

(v) Both Governments should make a declaration that they will on NO account attack or invade the territory of the other.

17. This is peace plan which I offer for your acceptance. I hope that in interest of International peace and friendly relations between our two countries you will accept it without reservation or qualification. If however you would like to discuss any provisions of this plan further I cordially invite you to visit Karachi as soon as first essential step towards restoration of a peaceful atmosphere namely withdrawal of concentration of forces has been carried out.

New Delhi, July 29, 1951.

Please refer to your telegram 2869, dated 26th July. A repetition of allegations which have been refuted frequently on previous occasions does NOT give greater substance to those allegations but only confuses the immediate issue. If, we both aim at an easing of tension between our two countries, that purpose will NOT be achieved by a continual exchange of argument and counter-argument. I am exceedingly anxious that this situation should be so handled as to remove the fears and apprehensions that darken the relationship between our two countries. I am convinced, as I have always been, that it is inevitable that India and Pakistan should work closer together and co-operate in common tasks to their mutual advantage.

2. Our whole past outlook and our long struggle for freedom, our Constitution, and the policy we have pursued, have the one aim of building up a State which, within its own borders, treats everyone alike and without difference of religion and seeks friendly cooperation with other countries. As you know, we have a very large Muslim population, over 40 millions, as well as large Christian, Sikh and other religious groups and we have endeavoured to give them an equal place in the life of the community and in governmental and other activities. In practice, people make mistakes and foolish persons make irresponsible statements, but our fixed and determined policy has the backing of vast numbers of our countrymen.

3. In consonance with the past history of our struggle for independence and the policies that we pursue today, we seek the friendship of all our neighbour countries; more especially, we desire friendly relations with the people of Pakistan, who though politically separated from us, yet have and must continue to have so much in common. Unfortunately the leaders of Pakistan were associated with movements which encouraged feelings of separateness and hatred between different religious communities. We had hoped that after the partition, these feelings and passions would die away and we would develop the closest cooperation between two neighbouring independent and intimately connected countries. To our great sorrow this has NOT taken place. The old policy of promoting communal hatred continues to guide the authorities in Pakistan.

4. After the tragic major upheaval consequent on the partition, we had again hoped that the worst was over and gradually we would develop normal relations. But in the months and years that followed, non-Muslims were driven out of Pakistan till ultimately we have arrived at a stage when all but a handful of the large non-Muslim population of Western Pakistan have come away and become refugees in India. That same process started later in Eastern Pakistan, but was fortunately checked by the Agreement arrived at between us in April 1950. Conditions however, from this point of view, deteriorated later and recently another exodus of non-Muslims from Eastern Pakistan has begun.

5. I draw your attention to these matters in no spirit of controversy but to point out the basic difficulty that we have had to contend against during these last four years. We have endeavoured to follow a policy of peace internally and externally and of curbing the spirit of narrow-minded communalism which must do grave injury to any country that adopts it. We have had our difficulties and we have faced them without flinching and have NOT deviated from our policy.

6. The question of Kashmir would have been decided peacefully long ago, in accordance with the wishes of the people there, as we desired right from the beginning, but for the major fact that Pakistan first encouraged and then actively took part in violent aggression against the State and its people. This is NOT just an odd fact but the dominant consideration. Pakistan tried to take possession of Kashmir by violent means. You are aware also that during the past 20 years a movement for freedom from autocratic rule developed in Kashmir State. For long years the struggle for freedom continued and a powerful mass movement came into existence aiming at political and social progress. It is out of that mass movement that the present Government of Jammu and Kashmir took shape as a genuine people’s Government, progressive, autonomous, and seeking to build up a State on the basis of harmony and cooperation between different communities. It has made great progress in administrative, social, educational and economic matters. Land laws have been changed to the great benefit of the vast majority of the population. All this could only be done with the active cooperation and support of the mass of the people. On the other side in the so-called Azad Kashmir areas, conditions are entirely different.
7. It is NOT for India or Pakistan, whatever our wishes, to decide the future of Kashmir. Kashmir and the people of Kashmir are NOT commodities for barter or for bargain. It is their inherent right to determine their own future. It is this right that we openly acknowledged long before Pakistan came into this picture. We stand by that declaration and, even in our relations with the Kashmir State, we have shown that, in spite of the abnormal conditions that have prevailed, that State has had the fullest autonomy to develop according to the genius of her people.

8. We are convinced that only the people of Kashmir could finally decide their future and we stand by every assurance we have given to the United Nations in this behalf. But we have laid stress on one fact that proper conditions must be created first before they can decide fairly and according to their wishes. It is on this subject of pre-conditions that India and Pakistan have differed thus far.

9. You have invited me to visit Karachi, but you have made this visit conditional on India withdrawing her forces from near the border. I am led to think that your invitation could NOT have been seriously meant because the condition that you attach to it was obviously such that, in present circumstances, could NOT be accepted by us. The condition in effect was that we should accept your main argument, which we challenge and consider wholly wrong. It was only, after very serious and earnest thought that we, as a Government responsible for peace being maintained and realising the conditions requisite for the fulfilment of that responsibility, decided to move certain troops towards the frontier. Whatever the reasons we had previously for the step we took, surely the open war preparations in Pakistan and the general hysteria that prevails there, are compelling reasons for us to continue our precautions. With a clenched fist raised against us, do you seriously expect us to leave our frontiers unguarded and open to possible aggression? We have said before, and I repeat with all emphasis and earnestness that NOT the slightest step of an aggressive character will be taken on our part so long as NO aggression takes place on Indian territory on the part of Pakistan. I wish to make it clear that this includes Kashmir. Either we are going to settle the various issues between us, including Kashmir, by peaceful methods or by war. I want to rule out war and I invite you to do the same. If you agree on this basic fact, then other consequences easily follow.

10. You have invited me to meet you conditionally and the condition attached, as I have stated above, is such that the invitation has NO meaning. I am perfectly prepared to meet and discuss every matter of concern to us without any conditions attached. I would welcome you, therefore, to come to Delhi at any time convenient to you to discuss these matters without any pre-conditions.
11. You say the present crisis has been caused by the massing of Indian forces against Pakistan borders. May I remind you that even the normal disposition of Pakistan forces all the way from Rawalpindi, Sialkot, Jhelum, Lahore and beyond has been right near the Indian border: This applies to some parts of Eastern Pakistan also. These forces are always in a position to commit aggression without any further preparations or delay and, with the calls for Jehad in Pakistan and the statements of men in responsible positions, NO country could afford NOT to take precautionary measures against the possibility of such an attack which was being urged all the time. Even now our forces are much further away from the border than yours. The whole difficulty has arisen because your Government is continually saying or hinting that you will resort to force to settle the dispute. We have to take precautions against this threat. If your declaration that Pakistan has NO intention to attack India explicitly includes Kashmir and the temper of war so manifest in Pakistan is cooled, then the danger of war between the two countries will cease. I pointed out to you in my last telegram the contrast between the widespread preparations for war and the deliberate attempt that is aimed to excite the people of Pakistan by blackouts, civil defence measures, and generally creating an expectation of war on the one hand and, on the other, conditions in India where we have resorted to NO such measures and life goes on evenly. There is a complete absence of war psychosis in India because we neither want war nor prepare for it.

12. Our activities have been largely concentrated on great plans for development. We have just been giving thought to a great Five-Year Plan for the building up of the economic and other resources of India. We are busy also with, arrangements for general elections which are going to be the most colossal in the history of democracy.

These activities, apart from, others, absorb our attention. How can they be fitted in with war, which will upset all the great schemes which we have in hand?

13. I must firmly deny your charge that India refuses to honour its international agreements, for a free and impartial plebiscite in Kashmir under U. N. auspices. It was we who first offered to let the people of Kashmir decide their future and we stand by that pledge.

The delay that has occurred in implementing the UNCIP Resolutions has been due to the non-fulfilment of assurances on which the two resolutions were accepted by us. The very first condition laid down by these resolutions was the withdrawal of the Pakistan army from the Jammu and Kashmir State territory.
14. As regards what you call your peace plan, I have already dealt with—

(i) the withdrawal of our forces which have recently been moved towards the Pakistan border and

(ii) the settlement of the Kashmir dispute.

(iii) As regards (iii) we are ready to affirm again that the Government of India renounce the use of force as a method of settling all (repeat all) disputes. We have NOT rejected either arbitration or judicial determination as a method of settling, disputes which are NOT resolved by negotiation or mediation. All that we have contended is that the question of arbitration or judicial or some other method of determination should be decided with due regard to the merits of each case. You will remember that we made proposals for the judicial determination of two of our major disputes, namely canal waters and evacuee property. But you did NOT accept these proposals.

(iv) We accept again the obligation undertaken by the two Governments about propaganda against the territorial integrity of both countries. In taking action we have to act within our own Constitution and in accordance with judicial pronouncements about freedom of expression which limit our action. Our Government's policy however is clear and has been repeatedly affirmed. In this connection, may I draw your attention to the type of propaganda which has been and is taking place in Pakistan, propaganda which often calls NOT only for war but the conquest of India by Pakistan. We are NOT troubled by these fantastic outbursts, but inevitably they produce some reaction here. You refer to the Hindu Mahasabha and some like organisations. You will permit me NOT to agree with you about their strength or influence in this country. May I draw your attention to the Hindustan Hamara Party in Pakistan which demands the incorporation of India into Pakistan?

(v) I entirely agree with you that we should make a declaration that neither Government will on any account attack or invade the territory of the others. I must ask, however, that this declaration should cover the State of Jammu and Kashmir, the future of which must be decided by peaceful means.
0076. Telegram from the Prime Minister of Pakistan Liaquat Ali Khan to Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru.

Karachi, August 1, 1951.

Your telegram Primin 21602, dated July 29th 1951, opened with expression of a desire to eschew allegations and counter-allegations and immediately threatened to make a series of baseless allegations against Pakistan. I have NO desire to enter into a fresh controversy and shall make NO further comments beyond categorically denying these allegations. I shall if necessary deal with them on some other occasions.

2. The present crisis demands that we should apply our minds with the utmost seriousness to finding a constructive solution of our problems. I urge you most earnestly to give careful consideration to the peace plan which I proposed to you and which you seem to have brushed aside.

3. As I stated before, first and most essential step is that the troops concentrations should immediately be withdrawn to their normal peace time stations. This applies equally to both sides. I do NOT know, how you came to the conclusion that I had asked only for withdrawal of Indian troops and had made this a condition of my invitation to you to come to Karachi.

I had stated clearly that if you withdrew your forces to their normal peace time stations I would also cancel the troop movements I was obliged to make after the concentration of your forces against Pakistan's borders. When two opposing forces stand face to face across a border, even a trivial incident might touch off a conflagration. Indeed judging from the manner in which you magnified minor border incidents out of all proportion and reported them to the Security Council, naturally it is to be apprehended that your armed forces which stand poised for attack would utilise any incident as a pretext for launching their aggression. If however there is NO such intention, it is ordinary prudence to withdraw forces on both sides to their normal peace time stations to avert the possibility of a clash. That was why I invited you to come to Karachi after the immediate threat to peace had been removed. It is NOT the question of conditions: it is a question of creating a peaceful atmosphere. With guns, pointing at each other it would be unrealistic to discuss ways and means of settling outstanding disputes and of establishing friendly relations on a permanent basis.

4. You have referred to preparations for civil defence in Pakistan and to the absence of similar preparations in India. It is NOT civil defence preparations that make wars: it is armies with guns and tanks that wage wars. Without any action on our part to justify it you massed almost all your army against us. Now you feel offended that people in Pakistan should prepare for defence and make that a reason for NOT withdrawing your forces even though I have offered to cancel our consequential troop movements.

You have suddenly discovered that the presence of Pakistan troops in their normal peace time stations is also a danger to India. Lahore, Sialkot, Jhelum and Rawalpindi to which you have referred were all cantonments in pre-partition days and our troops have been stationed in them for last four years without exciting any apprehension in your mind. Jhelum is over a hundred miles and Rawalpindi 180 miles away from your borders. Since West Pakistan is about 300 miles broad can anyone in reason maintain that the stationing of troops in these places is any threat to India?

5. The second point of peace plan deals with Kashmir. You have said that it is NOT for India or Pakistan to decide the future of Kashmir, that Kashmir and people of Kashmir are NOT commodities for barter or for bargain and it is their inherent right to determine their own future. These are admirable sentiments which I whole heartedly endorse but India’s actions in Kashmir are in contradiction of these sentiments. Your claim to Kashmir as Indian territory does NOT rest upon the free will of the people of the State but solely upon the action of the Hindu Maharaja who, despite the clearly expressed wishes of the people for joining Pakistan, conspired with the Indian leaders led to genocidal attacks by his Dogra army against the people and when they threw off his yoke, signed a wholly invalid instrument of accession in return for military help from India to subjugate the brave fighters for Kashmir’s liberation. By what right could this tyrant barter away to India the freedom of the people of Kashmir? And yet it is only upon this signature that you base your claim to occupy Kashmir by military force and to impose upon the people of the State a Government wholly subservient to you and obnoxious to them.

6. The occupation of Kashmir by your armed forces was an act of aggression against the people of Kashmir and against Pakistan and was immediately denounced by us. Nevertheless, when as a result of the efforts of the UN Commission, an international agreement embodied in the two UNCIP resolutions of August 13, 1948, and January 5th, 1949, was reached, we did NOT let these past facts come in the way of implementing that agreement. That agreement I would remind you, was reached after the entry of Indian troops, after entry of tribesmen and after the entry of Pakistan troops. All these facts were taken into account in arriving at that agreement to which India is a party. They can NOT now be used by India as arguments against implementation of agreement. I drew particular attention in my last telegram to provisions of agreement relating to cease fire and demilitarization. The former has been effected and must continue to be observed by both sides. There are UN Military Observers to watch and ensure its observance. The next stage in agreement is demilitarisation requiring withdrawal of Pakistan and Indian forces. Pakistan has repeatedly reaffirmed its willingness to withdraw its forces provided you will carry out your part of agreement relating to withdrawal of Indian forces. The sole obstacle in way of progress towards a free plebiscite under UN auspices is your refusal to withdraw your forces. Every effort made by UN and its agencies or other impartial statesmen e.g., the Commonwealth Ministers to persuade you to honour the obligations has failed.

7. You attribute the delay in holding a plebiscite to differences between India and Pakistan regarding the pre-conditions for a plebiscite. These conditions have been laid down in the International Agreement but you refuse to carry them out, seeking shelter behind untenable interpretations of your own invention. How then is progress to be made? This is only possible if both parts (parties?) accept the decision of the Security Council in regard to any differences that might arise in the interpretation and execution of the agreed UNCIP resolutions.

8. My third point related to the renunciation of the use of forceful methods, in the settlement of other disputes and reference of such disputes to arbitration or judicial determination if they are NOT resolved by negotiation or mediation. You, say that you have NOT rejected either arbitration or judicial determination, and that you made proposals, of judicial determination of the canal waters dispute. This means that you accept that this is a dispute for judicial determination. Nevertheless you are NOT prepared to refer it to the International Court of Justice which is the appropriate organ for judicial determination of such international disputes. Instead you proposed the creation of a new tribunal consisting of 2 Indian and 2 Pakistan Judges but when it was pointed out to you that a tribunal so composed would inevitably be deadlocked you were NOT prepared to agree to addition of a neutral Judge. In short you were NOT prepared to accept any effective way of arbitration or judicial determination but merely wanted more delay so that, taking forcible advantage of your position as upstream, riparian, you could hinder the construction of new irrigation projects designed to misappropriate water at the expense of Pakistan.

9. The next point in peace plan refers to the obligations arising out of Delhi Agreement of April 1950 and I drew particular attention to clause providing for cessation of propaganda in either country against the territorial integrity of the other or purporting to incite war. Here again, in violation of clear provisions of this clause you have persistently refused to take action against individuals or organisations carrying on such propaganda. If your constitution and judicial pronouncements about freedom of expression puts such limits on you that you cannot take action even against the most flagrant breaches of the Agreement, it was NOT fair to us that you should have undertaken an International obligation of this character which you were NOT in a position to implement.
10. Lastly I have proposed that both Governments should make a declaration that they will on no account invade or attack the territory of the other. Your reply to this is that I should include Kashmir in Indian territory, but this begs the very question which is at issue. As I have repeatedly stated, the peaceful settlement of the question as to the dispute in all its phases is governed by 2 UNCIP resolutions which both India and Pakistan have accepted. According to the Agreement embodied in these resolutions Kashmir is not Indian territory, since the question of its accession to India or Pakistan has yet to be decided and can only be decided by a free plebiscite under UN auspices. Pakistan is and has always been ready to implement this agreement in full. If you will do the same and will not insist upon your own interpretation but will be guided by Security Council in giving effect to the agreement, the whole problem of Kashmir and indeed of relations between India and Pakistan would be speedily solved in a peaceful manner.

11. To sum up the peace plan proposed by me provides for the withdrawal of the forces on both sides to their normal peace time stations, peaceful settlement of Kashmir and other disputes, cessation of hostile propaganda and a declaration that neither country will attack or invade the territory of the other. Unfortunately you have not accepted any one of these provisions without qualifications which practically nullify the effect of provision. In particular you are not prepared to agree to withdrawal of forces which is essential for removing fears and apprehensions that darken the atmosphere between our two countries. For what then do you invite me to Delhi? Last year I went to Delhi in an endeavour to preserve peace at a time of great stress regardless of fact that even then you had concentrated your forces against Pakistan although not on scale and with offensive dispositions of today. It is therefore not any consideration of false prestige that prevents me from going to Delhi. I would go to the ends of earth for sake of peace. But it is too much even for me to undertake an annual trips to Delhi each time you decide to threaten the security of Pakistan.

12. I have analysed in some detail the provisions of the peace plan offered by me. There is not one among them which does not apply equally both to India and Pakistan or which any peace loving person would hesitate to accept. I once again urge you to accept the plan proposed by me in the spirit in which it has been put forward. It is, I assure you, inspired by my strong conviction that war between our two countries would bring ruin to both and that the only right course for us is to strive for close co-operation and lasting friendships. I am convinced that your acceptance of plan would immediately relieve the present tension and lay the foundation for friendly relations between our two countries on a permanent basis. Should you however wish to discuss any provision of it further, I repeat the cordial invitation I extended you to visit Karachi.

I am in receipt of your telegram of the 1st August. What stands out conspicuously in this telegram is that you reserve the right to yourself to use your armed forces against Kashmir. The statement of Mr. Khaliquzznman published in this morning’s papers, expresses the same thought. Our views in regard to the method of settling the Kashmir dispute are thus diametrically opposed to yours. You have continually envisaged the possibility of using your armed forces to attack Kashmir. For us such an attack is an attack on Indian territory, which will have to be met fully, if it takes place. It is because of your constant threat of Jehad and war to achieve your purpose in Kashmir that we were compelled to take precautionary measures and make certain troop dispositions. So long as that threat remains, no Government in India can avoid taking all necessary defensive steps.

The issue is simple. We do not agree about the merits of the Kashmir question. Do we agree or not that there must be no further resort to warfare for the settlement of the dispute? We have offered to do so and you have refused to accept that position or to give the necessary assurance.

We have adhered in the past and shall continue to adhere to all the assurances that we have given to the United Nations. We shall keep to our undertaking to implement UNCIP’s two resolutions provided the assurances given to us by that Commission are also implemented. This is not a question of our interpretation but of the formal assurances given to us by UNCIP, on the basis of which we accepted its two resolutions. In any event, we stand by our pledge to the people of Jammu and Kashmir that they should decide their own future.

I have raised no objection to the stationing of Pakistan troops at the various places you have mentioned. I have only pointed out that, they are right near our border and that, in view of your aggressive attitude, threatening war, we have to take defensive measures. You mention that Jhelum and Rawalpindi are far away, but both are very near the Kashmir border which you are constantly threatening to attack.

You refer to the two opposing forces standing face to face across the border and to the danger of a trivial incident leading to a conflagration. I do not know where you have stationed your troops. But under our revised dispositions, no new unit of our forces is less than at least 20 miles away from the border. There is no question, therefore, of these forces creating any incident that may lead to a wide-spread conflict.
You say that our armed forces stand poised for attack and would utilise any ‘incident’ as a pretext for launching their invasion. Our forces are not poised for attack and will not, as I have repeatedly told you, take any action unless they are attacked. The new dispositions of our forces were not begun till we had evidence that Pakistan was preparing for aggressive action. In this connection, I might point out to you that on the 28th of June we learnt that Pakistan was moving a Brigade from Peshawar to Rawalkote which is 15 miles from Poonch. This move directly threatened Poonch and could have no other purpose. We drew the attention of the U.N. Observers to this on July 3rd. The move was physically completed on the 7th July. Till then we had not taken any steps to move our troops. Indeed, these movements began only on the 10th July. This is further proof of the purely defensive character of the new dispositions of our forces.

Your reference to our proposal for the decision of the canal waters dispute is far removed from the facts of the case. Our proposal was clear and provided for any possible deadlock. This could have been made precise, if you had not rejected the proposal out of hand. We are still prepared for a proper judicial determination of this canal water dispute as well as of the evacuee property problem.

May I, in conclusion, suggest to you that peace is not offered with clenched fists nor with threatened aggression and resounding cries of Jehad.
0078. Telegram from Pakistan Prime Minister to Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru.

Karachi, August 6, 1951.

Your telegram No. Primin 21613, dated August 4th, 1951, I regret to say, again seeks to confuse and evade the issue. The peace plan proposed by me rules out war and aggression by India and Pakistan NOT only against each other's territory, but also in Kashmir. My previous telegrams have made it abundantly clear that both India and Pakistan must adhere to and carry out the peaceful settlement of Kashmir dispute embodied in the two agreed UNCIP resolutions of 13th August 1948, and 5th January 1949. In marked contrast to this is your attitude which, in violation of solemn international agreement on Kashmir and in defiance of Security Council, claims Kashmir as Indian territory and seeks to enforce this unjust and unfounded claim by military means. This attitude is a challenge to UN and a grave threat to international peace. You are now threatening Pakistan with your armed might to intimidate us into acquiescence in your claim to Kashmir. Pakistan repudiates this false claim in most emphatic terms and will never submit to threats of force. It is only people of Kashmir in a free plebiscite held under UN auspices who can decide whether Kashmir is to accede to Pakistan or India. Pakistan is determined to strive to utmost for this peaceful, just and democratic solution of Kashmir dispute. Your allegation that Pakistan's refusal to acknowledge Kashmir as part of Indian territory implies war like intentions is utterly unjustified.

2. The issue in Kashmir is NOT a mere difference of opinion about the merits of an abstract question. The issue is that India is in wrongful occupation of Kashmir and is trying to perpetuate this occupation by means of force.

3. You say you will keep to your undertaking to implement UNCIP's two resolutions provided the assurances given to you by UN Commission are also implemented. You add that this is NOT a question of your interpretation, but of formal assurances given to you by Commission. The fact is that the Commission gave clarifications of the two resolutions both to India and to Pakistan. These clarifications have been debated before UN Commission, the Security Council and UN representatives. In NO case do they contradict the provisions of the two resolutions, nor do they release the two Governments from any of their obligations under these resolutions. You are seeking to evade those obligations by construing them NOT on basis of clarifications given by the Commission but on basis of your own interpretations of those clarifications. The Commission itself after making vain efforts for months to persuade you to honour your obligations finally suggested arbitration conciliations of Plebiscite Administrator Admiral NIMITZ of differences in interpretation of resolutions. If you had any faith in assurances to which you refer, you would have welcomed opportunity of putting them before Admiral NIMITZ and convincing him of correctness of your contentions. You did NOT take that course because of wholly untenable character of your interpretations. You are NOT prepared to accept the judgment of any impartial authority on value of your interpretations of agreed resolutions and of these so called assurances. Nor are you prepared to face the verdict of people of Kashmir in a free plebiscite. Your statement that you stand by your pledge to people of Kashmir that they shall decide their own future, is belied by each of your actions during the last two and a half years. You are now engaged in an effort to perpetuate your hold on Kashmir by manipulating a puppet Constituent Assembly under control of your armed forces.

4. You say that because your forces are stationed 20 miles away from Pakistan border, there is NO danger of their creating an incident that may lead to a conflict. You cannot be unaware that hundreds of border incidents have taken place during last two and a half years even with much smaller forces under UN observation. Any minor incident could be utilised by your armed forces to launches immediate aggression.

5. You have now put forward excuse that you massed almost whole of your army including an armoured car division and a number of infantry divisions against Pakistan borders because of movement of a single Pakistan Brigade in Azad Kashmir in June 1951. The excuse will NOT bear examination. In the first place it is NOT correct that till then you had NOT taken any steps to move your troops. In May, 1951 you reinforced your armed forces in Kashmir by four battalions. Secondly, the Pakistan Brigade to which you refer had been withdrawn from Kashmir a few months earlier for rest and it returned to Azad Kashmir with full knowledge of U.N. Military Observers. Even after this replacement Pakistan forces in Kashmir were much smaller than at time of cease fire and were less than one third of Indian forces in Kashmir. In the light of these facts it is NOT possible to maintain that there was any threat to your security when you started to mass almost whole of your army against Pakistan.

6. Regarding canal water dispute you say your proposal was clear and provided for any possible deadlock. The facts contradict this. After an argument lasting over two years when at last you admitted that question was one for judicial determination, you proposed that it should be referred to a tribunal consisting of two Indian and two Pakistan Judges. When we pointed out that a tribunal so composed would inevitably be deadlocked, you said that in such an event the two Governments should again try to negotiate a settlement and failing that, resort to adjudication by a mutually agreed agency or organisation.
You were NOT however prepared even to accept the principle that second tribunal should have on it a neutral judge. As we pointed out to you, this proposal contained a double veto and permitted of endless delay. Nevertheless we asked you to put your proposal for effective adjudication more precisely in form of a draft agreement. This you have NOT done.

7. This analysis shows that you continue to evade the issue. The real issue before us is to preserve peace and to settle our disputes in a just and peaceful manner. I put forward a plan to attain this object but you have NOT accepted any of its provisions. It is clear from your reply that you are NOT prepared to agree to withdrawal of forces on both sides which I proposed. This refusal on your part leaves situation full of the most dangerous possibilities. You appear determined to put in jeopardy the peace of the sub continent and of world for sake of staging a political farce and forcing through your programme of aggression in Kashmir. I have tried my utmost to point path of peace. The world must now judge between us.

8. The peace plan I have offered is still open for your acceptance. Briefly it seeks to secure.

(I) Withdrawal of forces on both sides to their normal peace time stations.

(II) Peaceful settlement of Kashmir dispute in accordance with two agreed UNICP resolutions under the guidance of Security Council which both countries should accept.

(III) Settlement of all other disputes by negotiations and mediation and failing that by arbitration or judicial determination.

(IV) Cessation of hostile propaganda.

(V) Declaration by both India and Pakistan NOT to invade or attack territory of other.

9. These proposals are clear and unambiguous. They rule out war altogether. As I have pointed out before they are equally applicable to both India and Pakistan. They are inspired by a most sincere desire to place relations between our two countries on a firm basis of cooperation and friendship.

New Delhi, August 9, 1951.

Your telegram 3109 dated 6th August. This correspondence has already grown so voluminous and repetitious that it is with the utmost reluctance that I permit myself some brief comments on some of the points raised in your telegram.

(1) You have disputed the correctness of my statement that we had taken no steps to move our troops until movement of your brigade in June towards Poonch. For this you rely on what you describe as reinforcement of our armed force in Kashmir by four battalions. There were no such reinforcements. There were, in some cases, reliefs. Our total force in Kashmir was reduced after the cease-fire by nearly forty per cent. After that, for every battalion that went in, one came out. With our forces in the State reduced to three-fifths of their original strength no one could regard the mere relief of four battalions in that reduced force as evidence of any offensive intention against Pakistan. Per contra, the recent movement of your brigade could be capable of no other interpretation than an intention to attack Poonch.

(2) You continue to accuse us of threatening Pakistan with our armed might and describe what you call “the occupation of Kashmir” as wrongful and as an act of aggression against Pakistan. I regret I cannot go on arguing endlessly against a persistent distortion of facts and allegations which are the very reverse of the truth. Everyone knows that not a single Indian soldier went to Kashmir till it was invaded from Pakistan and part of Kashmir State had been subjected for days to loot, rapine and massacre. It was only then that Indian soldiers went at the request of the lawful Government and the people of Kashmir to defend them against brutal aggression. In spite of your invasion of Kashmir and the military operations that followed, not a single soldier has set foot on Pakistan territory. May I remind you that the U.N. Mediator, Sir Owen Dixon, has held that Pakistan’s action in Kashmir was contrary to international law.

(3) You say that the peace plan proposed by you rules out war and aggression. But in effect you reserve freedom to yourself to attack Kashmir, on the ground of our alleged aggression against the people of the State and against Pakistan, unless we accept a settlement of the dispute on your terms. Considering that it is Pakistan that is the real aggressor in Kashmir that Pakistan denied that aggression until it became too obvious to be denied, that Pakistan is constantly proclaiming Jehad as the only effective means of solving the problem and making feverish preparations for it, no other conclusion is possible than, that the real alternatives you offer us are surrender to your wishes or resort by you to force. This is not a genuine attempt to settle the Kashmir dispute peacefully. So long as this remains your attitude, no Government of India can relax its precautions which are purely defensive.

(4) You also charge us with defiance of the United Nations. This is as baseless as your other charges. It is not defiance to ask that the U.N. honour their assurances to us.

(5) Your newspapers continue not only to preach war, but some of them demand the conquest of India.

2. In spite of the provocation to which we are being deliberately subjected by distortion of facts, by baseless charges, and by warlike propaganda, I assure you that we shall adhere to the unequivocal assurance that I have repeatedly given, namely that we wish to live in peace and friendship with Pakistan and that we are resolved not to attack it. With that assurance, honestly and firmly reaffirmed I am content to leave our conduct and our intentions to the judgment of history.

0080. Memorandum Submitted by Prominent Muslims of India to Dr. Graham UN Representative for India and Pakistan.

New Delhi, August 17, 1951.

“It is a remarkable fact that while the Security Council and its various agencies have devoted so much time to the study of the Kashmir dispute and made various suggestions for its resolution, none of them has tried to ascertain the views of Indian Muslims nor the possible effect of any hasty step in Kashmir, however well intentioned, on the interests and well-being of the Indian Muslims.
We are convinced that no lasting solution for the problem can be found unless the position of Muslims in Indian society is clearly understood.

Definition

“Separation of India and Pakistan, before this subcontinent was partitioned, discouraged any attempt to define Pakistan clearly and did little to anticipate the conflicting problems which were bound to arise as a result of the advocacy of the two nation theory. The concept of Pakistan therefore became an emotional slogan with little rational content. It never occurred to the Muslim League or its leaders that if a minority was not prepared to live with a majority on the sub-continent, how could the majority be expected to tolerate the minority.

"It is therefore small wonder that the result of partition has been disastrous to Muslims.

"In the undivided India their strength was about 100 million. Partition split up the Muslim people, confining them to their isolated regions. Thus, Muslims number 25 million in Western Pakistan, 35 million to 40 million in India and the rest in Eastern Pakistan. A single undivided community has been broken into three fragments, each faced with its own problems. Pakistan was not created on a religious basis. If it had been, our fate as well as the fate of other minorities would have been settled at that time. Nor would the division of the sub-continent for reasons of religion have left large minorities in India or Pakistan.

"This merely illustrates what we have said above that the concept of Pakistan was vague, obscure and never clearly defined, nor its likely consequences foreseen by the Muslim League, even when some of these should have been obvious.

"When the partition took place, Muslims in India were left in the lurch by the Muslim League and its leaders. Most of them departed to Pakistan and a few who stayed behind stayed long enough to wind up their affairs and dispose of their property. Those who went over to Pakistan left a large number of relations and friends behind.

"Having brought about a division of the country, Pakistan leaders proclaimed that they would convert Pakistan into a land where people would live a life according to the tenets of Islam.

"This created nervousness and alarm among the minorities living in Pakistan. Not satisfied with this, Pakistan leaders went further and announced again and again their determination to protect and safeguard the interests of Muslims in India. This naturally aroused suspicion amongst the Hindus against us, and our loyalty to India was questioned.

"Pakistan has made our position weaker by driving out Hindus from Western Pakistan in utter disregard of the consequences of such a policy to us and our welfare. A similar process is in operation in Eastern Pakistan from which Hindus are coming over to India in a larger and larger number.

"If Hindus are not welcome in Pakistan, how can we, in all fairness, expect Muslims to be welcome in India? Such a policy must inevitably, as the past has already shown, result in the uprooting of Muslims in this country and their migration to Pakistan, where, as it became clear last year, they are no longer welcome, lest their influx should destroy Pakistan’s economy.

“Neither some of those Muslims who did migrate to Pakistan after partition and following the widespread bloodshed and conflict on both sides of the India - Pakistan border in the north-west, have been able to find a happy asylum in what they had been told would be their homeland. Consequently some of them have had to return to India, e.g., Meos who is now being rehabilitated in their former areas.

“If we are living honourably in India today, it is therefore certainly not due to Pakistan which, if anything, has by her policy and action weakened our position.

“The credit goes to the broad-minded leadership of India — to Mahatma Gandhi and Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru, to the traditions of tolerance in this country and to the Constitution which ensures equal rights to all citizens of India, irrespective of their religion, caste, creed, colour or sex.

“We therefore feel that, tragically as Muslims were misled by the Muslim League, and subsequently by Pakistan and the unnecessary suffering which we and our Hindu brethren have had to go through in Pakistan and in India since partition, we must be given an opportunity to settle down to a life of tolerance and understanding to the mutual benefit of Hindus and Muslims in our country — if only Pakistan would let us do it. To us it is a matter of no small consequence.

“Despite continuous provocation, first from the Muslim League and since then from Pakistan, the Hindu majority in India has not thrown us or members of other minorities out of Civil Services, Armed Forces, the judiciary, trade, commerce, business and industry. There are Muslim Ministers in the Union and State Cabinets, Muslim Governors, Muslim Ambassadors, representing India in foreign countries fully enjoying the confidence of the Indian nation, Muslim members in Parliament and State legislatures, Muslim judges serving on the Supreme Court and High Courts. high ranking officers in the Armed Forces and Civil Services, including the police.

“Muslims have large landed estates, run big business and commercial houses in various parts of the country notably in Bombay and Calcutta, have their share in industrial production and enterprise in export and import trade. Our famous sacred shrines and places of cultural interest are mostly in India.

“Not that our lot is entirely happy, we wish some of the State Governments showed a little greater sympathy to us in the field of education and employment. Nevertheless we feel we have an honourable place in India.
Under the law of the land our religious and cultural life is protected and we shall share in the opportunities open to all citizens to ensure progress for the people of this country.

“It is therefore clear that our interests and welfare do not coincide with Pakistan’s conception of the welfare and interest of Muslims in Pakistan.

“This is clear from Pakistan’s attitude towards Kashmir. Pakistan claims Kashmir, first, on the ground of the majority of the State’s people being Muslims, and secondly on the ground of the State being essential to its economy and defence. To achieve its object it has been threatening to launch “jehad” against Kashmir and India.”

Invasion

“It is a strange commentary on political beliefs that the same Muslims of Pakistan who would like the Muslims of Kashmir to join them, invaded the State in October, 1947, killing and plundering Muslims in the State and dishonouring Muslims women, all in the interests of what they described as the liberation of Muslims of the State. In its oft-proclaimed anxiety to rescue the 3 million Muslims from what it describes as the tyranny of a handful of Hindus in the State, Pakistan evidently is prepared to sacrifice the interests of 40 million Muslims in India – a strange exhibition of concern for the welfare of fellow Muslims.

“Our misguided brothers in Pakistan do not realize that if Muslims in Pakistan can wage a war against Hindus in Kashmir, why should not Hindus, sooner or later, retaliate against Muslims in India?

“Does Pakistan seriously think that it could give us any help if such an emergency arose or that we would deserve any help, thanks to its own follies? It is incapable of providing room and livelihood to the 40 million Muslims of India, should they migrate to Pakistan.

“Yet its policy and action, if not changed soon, may well produce the result which it dreads.

“We are convinced that India will never attack our interests. First of all, it would be contrary to the spirit animating the political movement in this country. Secondly, it would be opposed to the Constitution and to the sincere leadership of the Prime Minister. Thirdly, India by committing such a folly would be playing straight into the hands of Pakistan.

Pak Policy

“We wish we were equally convinced of the soundness of Pakistan’s policy. So completely oblivious is it of our present problems and of our future that it is willing to sell us into slavery if only it can secure Kashmir.
“It ignores the fact that Muslims in Kashmir may also have a point of view of their own that there is a democratic movement with a democratic leadership in the State, both inspired by the progress of a broad minded, secular, democratic movement in India and both naturally being in sympathy with India. Otherwise the Muslim raiders should have been welcomed with open arms by the Muslims of the State when the invasion took place in 1947.

“Persistent propaganda about ‘jehad’ is intended, among other things, to inflame religious passions in this country. For it would, of course, be in Pakistan’s interests to promote communal rioting in India to show to Kashmiri Muslims how they can find security only in Pakistan. Such a policy, however, can only bring untold misery and suffering to India and Pakistan generally and to Indian Muslims particularly.

Future Suffering

“Pakistan never tires of asserting that it is determined to protect the interests of Muslims in Kashmir and India. Why does not Pakistan express the same concern for Pathans who are fighting for Pakhtoonistan, an independent homeland of their own? The freedom-loving Pathans under the leadership of Khan Abdu Ghaffar Khan and Dr. Khan Sahib, both nurtured in the traditions of democratic tolerance of the Indian National Congress, are being subjected to political repression of the worst possible kind by their Muslim brethren in power in Pakistan and in the NWFP.

“Contradictory as Pakistan’s policy generally is, it is no surprise to us that while it insists on a fair and impartial plebiscite in Kashmir, it denies a fair and impartial plebiscite to pathans.

“Pakistan’s policy in general and her attitude towards Kashmir in particular thus tend to create conditions in this country which in the long run can only bring to us Muslims widespread suffering and destruction. Its policy prevents us from settling down, from being honourable citizens of a State, free from the suspicion of our fellow country-men and adapting ourselves to changing conditions to promote the interests and welfare of India. Its saber rattling interferes with its own economy and ours. It expects us to be loyal to it despite its impotence to give us any protection, believing at the same time that we can still claim all the rights of citizenship in a secular democracy.

“In the event of a war, it is extremely doubtful whether it will be able to protect the Muslims of East Bengal who are completely cut off from Western Pakistan. Are the Muslims of India and Eastern Pakistan to sacrifice them completely to enable the 25 million Muslims in Western Pakistan to embark upon mad, self-destructive adventures?
“We should, therefore, like to impress upon you with all the emphasis at our command that Pakistan’s policy towards Kashmir is fraught with the gravest peril to the 40 million Muslims of India. If the Security Council is really interested in peace, human brotherhood and international understanding, it should heed this warning while there is still time.”

0081. Letter from the Indian Minister of State for Information and Broadcasting R. R. Diwakar to the Pakistan Minister of Interior, Information and Broadcasting Khwaja Shahabuddin.

New Delhi, August 18, 1951.

Government of India
Ministry of Information and Broadcasting

No. PS. 1186/51 New Delhi, August 18, 1951.

My Dear Khwaja Shahabuddin Sahab,

Please refer to your letter of the 9th July in reply to mine of 30th April. The references in the first part of your letter related to events in Pakistan in March last and as you must have noticed newspapers have since evinced little or no interest beyond routine reportage and publication of Pakistan Government official communiqués of the in-camera proceedings of the conspiracy trial. It is of course not possible to accept your argument that it was only Indian newspapers that carried such reports. As I pointed out in my letter of 20th April, the news item also attracted the attention of newspapers in U.K. and elsewhere and reports were published on the basis of dispatches of corresonds in Pakistan.

I have been greatly distressed to find that although at the various meetings of the Indo – Pakistan Information Consultative Committee, it was clearly accepted by both delegations that even in matters of dispute between the two countries comments in newspapers should be confined strictly to the merits of the problem or problems in dispute and it should in no case be made the basis of a general attack against the two Governments or a personal contumacious or scurrilous attack against the respected leaders of either country or the religion, culture and faith of the people of both the countries, there has been such a sustained campaign of hatred and war psychosis in the Press of Pakistan.

You refer to the Karachi meeting of the Indo – Pakistan Information Consultative Committee. May I remind you that at the meeting of the Joint Press Committee held at the same time, a resolution was adopted calling upon the Press to eschew war mongering and an appeal was made to help in creating an atmosphere of good – will and good neighbourliness. This resolution was accepted by the IPICC and was included in the recommendations of the Committee.

My Prime Minister has already referred in his correspondence with your Prime Minister to reports which have tended to keep alive this war psychosis in Pakistan. The accompanying extracts from the Pakistan Press since March last which are illustrative and by no means exhaustive speak for themselves. In fact, newspapers in Pakistan appear to vie with one another in carrying this war psychosis through inflammatory news items, editorials, letters, etc., fiery poems and alarming headlines. The most distressing part is the fact that the lead in this campaign is taken by important newspapers of Pakistan including the Dawn and Zamindar’. It may be noted that the editor of Dawn is an ex – President of the PNEC and the editor of Zamindar’ its acting President. The Dawn in its editorial on 1st May lent its support to the sponsors of the movement should not be churlishly spurned. I should also like to invite your attention to its editorial of 8th June, headed “Chastise the brigand”.

This is not the language of a responsible Press, and is a strange example of the manner in which the Agreement is being implemented in leading newspapers of Pakistan. The Zamindar makes no secret of its incitement to war in a series of poems, one of which printed in red ink declared, “We will one day sit on the throne. Delhi has been our capital for centuries”. In its issue of the 27th May, it spoke of the banners of Islam which fluttered from East to West and asked “When did geography limit our field of action? We have to wipe off kufr even today”. A typical illustration of this campaign of war psychosis in a leading newspaper is a report in the Dawn on 2nd August from its Dacca correspondent under the headlines “Panic spreads in Calcutta: Black out in West Bengal areas”. I was glad to see that this report evoked the necessary contradiction from people on the spot in Calcutta so that we can be certain at least in India of ensuring that such reports of the Pakistan Press do not affect the even tenor of life in India.

As regards extracts enclosed with my letter of 30th April, it is suggested by you that one of the newspapers mentioned, namely, Pasban, is a minor Pakistani newspaper, although I must recall the Editor was among the Press representatives of the Pakistan delegation at the Dacca meeting of the IPICC. The extracts, of course, were not intended to be exhaustive of all the Pakistan newspapers as I was anxious to draw your attention more to trends rather than to long lists. The extracts, however, included publications from leading newspapers in Pakistan such as the Dawn, Civil and Military Gazette etc. and it would have been helpful if action had been taken against these papers so that continued publication of such matters could have been arrested.

In your letter, some of the writings against our Prime Minister to which I had drawn your attention in my letter of 30th April are sought to be justified on the ground that worse things have been said against the Prime Minister of Pakistan. In one instance, however, to which you drew our attention, namely an objectionable heading in the Hind Samachar, an unimportant paper published in Punjab (I), the State Government was requested to take up the matter with the State Press Advisory Committee who held that the heading was objectionable and advised the editor suitably against its repetition. In fact, leading newspapers in India seldom indulge in systematic diffusion of scurrilous and contumacious matter even while discussing matters in dispute between India and Pakistan. There are, of course, occasional lapses, but you will kindly note that these are confined to very small newspapers of little or no significance. The recent extracts published by the Government of Pakistan on 11th August prove the truth of this inasmuch as many of the newspapers mentioned therein have little or no importance.

You also suggest that no exception should be taken to the use of the word Jihad by newspapers in Pakistan. I wish I could agree with you that this is a completely innocuous expression. So far, however, as can be judged from the writings in the Pakistan Press and statements and speeches of non – officials, the meaning that stands out in the context of its use is its association with a call to a religious war and conquest of India. The use of the word must, therefore, be regarded as part of the campaign persistently followed by Pakistan newspapers to rouse communal and religious passion, jeopardize the safety of life and property of minorities in Pakistan and create a war psychology against India in the name of religion. I do not, therefore, find it possible to agree that the kind of writings which have been indulged by newspapers in Pakistan, namely, propaganda which often calls not only for war, but the conquest of India by Pakistan can be justified, as you suggest, on the ground merely that they refer to a subject which is in dispute.

You have also referred to certain items broadcast by All India Radio. As the broadcasts mentioned occurred in February, I should have thought that the authorities of the Pakistan Radio would have brought these to the notice of the Sub–Committee which examined broadcasts by All India Radio and Pakistan Radio before the last meeting of the IPICC in March. I must, however, say that the extracts of AIR broadcasts enclosed with your letter do not include statements emanating from Pakistan which are also broadcast by All India Radio.

Yours sincerely

Sd/- R.R. Diwakar

The Hon’ble Khwaja Shahabuddin,
Minister of Interior, Information and Broadcasting,
Government of Pakistan, Karachi.

0082. Note Verbale from the High Commission for Pakistan in India to the Indian Ministry of External Affairs regarding an item published in the news bulletin of the Mission.

Office of the High Commissioner for Pakistan in India
New Delhi.

The High Commission for Pakistan in India present their compliments to the Government of India, Ministry of External Affairs, New Delhi, and with reference to their communication No. D – 5032 – Pak – III/51, dated the 24th July, 1951, regarding the two items published in the news bulletins issued by this Mission, which have been taken exception to by the Government of India, have the honour to say that these items contain factual account of the jirgas held by some tribesmen of the N.W.F.P., in which they condemned the formation of the so-called Constituent Assembly in Kashmir and urged upon the U.N.O. to expedite the solution of the Kashmir dispute. These items do not constitute any attack on the Government of India and do not in any way contravene the understanding arrived at between the Governments of India and Pakistan as they are not condemnatory of the Government of India. In this connection attention is invited to Mr. Dutt’s demi-official letter No. F.18 (7) Pak – III/50, dated the 20th March 1950, to the High Commissioner, which lays down the principle to be observed in such matters.

The High Commission take the opportunity to renew to the Government of India the assurances of their highest consideration.

 Seal of the Pakistan High Commission

No. 3575. According to Press reports Dr. Shyama Parasad Mukherjee has delivered another highly provocative speech on 26th August 1951 at Nagpur. In course of his speech, he has expressed violent sentiments against Pakistan and used language calculated to arouse passion of his audience against this country. Among other things he has sought to repudiate partition and has called upon Prime Minister of India to give an ultimatum to Pakistan and march troops into it. Government of Pakistan strongly protest against the continuance of such propaganda in utter disregard of provisions of the Prime Ministers agreement and subsequent assurances of the Government of India.

2. The attention of the Government of India has been repeatedly drawn to inherent dangers of this line of propaganda by Dr. Mukherjee. At a time when major part of India’s armed strength is concentrated against Pakistan borders the mischief of such incitement by leader of the major opposition party in India CANNOT be overstated. Unfortunately the Government of India have NOT so far felt able or shown willingness to take effective action. On the contrary Government of Pakistan have recently found themselves compelled to protest against similar anti partition propaganda emanating from responsible official representatives of the Government of India.

Cutting from the Hindustan Times, dated August 27, 1951 reporting on the speech of Shyama Prasad Mookerjee.

Pakistan Violated The Very Basis Of Partition - DR MOOKERJEE

NAGPUR, Aug. 26. – Dr. S.P. Mookerjee declared here today that India should tell the world that Pakistan had “violated” the very basis of the partition of India, namely, that minorities would be kept and protected to both countries.

“If Mr. Nehru musters courage and makes this announcement to the world, there is nothing illogical, unconstitutional or immoral in it.” Dr. Mookerjee said.

In a 70 – minute survey of Indo – Pakistan relations since partition at the Nagpur Forum, Dr. Mookerjee said partition was agreed upon not on “a communal or religious basis, but on a territorial basis." The fundamental condition being that the Hindus and the Muslims and others would continue to live in their own territories, India and Pakistan, respectively.

While India observed the agreement and extended protection to four crores of Muslims, Dr. Mookerjee said: "It is the settled policy of Pakistan to create a homogeneous Islamic State and not keep any minorities within its territories."

The process of turning the State into an "Islamic State had been continued without any interruption by creating conditions whereby the minorities would be compelled to leave Pakistan through methods "unknown to civilized conduct."

Dr. Mookerjee said West Pakistan had been cleared of Hindus and Sikhs while in East Bengal 50, 00, 000 out of the 150, 00, 000 (sic) Hindus had already been "squeezed out."

If Pakistan really wanted to keep its minorities, there would have been no trouble, he asserted – P.T.I.

0084. Cable from the Indian Ministry of External Affairs to the Pakistan Ministry of Foreign Affairs regarding the speech of Shyama Prasad Mukherjee.

New Delhi, August 31, 1951.

IMPORTANT.

No. 30573. Your telegram No. 3575 dated August 30. We agree with you that Dr. Syama Prasad Mookerjee's speeches have been objectionable, though he stated in Parliament that he did NOT suggest any military measures. But it is true that he has often made statements which are directly contrary to Government's policy. Our Prime Minister has given him an effective reply in Parliament and outside and No doubt will deal with this matter again. We might inform you that Dr. Mookerjee is Not repeat not the leader of the major or any opposition party in the Indian Parliament.

2. We have pointed out to you that in terms of our Constitution and judicial decisions freedom of expression, even though such expression might be highly distasteful to Government, is permitted. Because of the coming General Elections in India, Government have given a further assurance about freedom of speech. It is largely because of these General Elections that speeches attacking Government’s policy are being made by some individuals and groups. The Government, however, has taken a strong stand in regard to this matter and has NO doubt that this stand is upheld in the country. The principal national organization, the National Congress, has fully supported that stand. Government consider that the most effective method of dealing with objectionable speeches is to counter them in public instead of taking any repressive action, which is NOT only NOT permitted under the Constitution and laws but might give greater publicity and prestige to those who deliver such speeches.

Note Verbale of the Indian Ministry of External Affairs to the Pakistan High Commission in India regarding the Pashtunistan issue.

Government of India, Ministry of External Affairs

The Ministry of External Affairs present their compliments to the Pakistan High Commission in India and with reference to their note No. F. 13(7) P/51 – 1415, dated the 16th May, 1951 relating to the Pashtunistan dispute between Pakistan and Afghanistan have the honour to state as follows:-

The Government of India are unable to accept the contention of the Government of Pakistan that the Press in India has been other than impartial and neutral with regard to the dispute between Pakistan and Afghanistan on the subject of Pashtunistan. The differences between Pakistan and Afghanistan on this subject have received wide publicity through the radio and the newspapers both of Pakistan and of Afghanistan and in other countries, and it is not surprising therefore that they should have attracted interest in India. The Government of India have again carefully examined the material published in the Indian Press and are satisfied that the Indian Press has on the whole maintained and continue to maintain an attitude of objective and impartial presentation of news regarding the Pashtunistan movement. All important statements in regard to this subject made by the Government of Pakistan or by persons in authority in Pakistan have been fully and faithfully reported in the Indian Press. As already pointed out by the Government of India the Press in India is, within the limit set by the Constitution and the laws of India, perfectly free to express opinions or comments, including those which are hostile to the Government of India themselves. The Government of India cannot compel or coerce the Press or the public in India to hold any particular opinion.

The Government of India are also unable to accept the allegation that the All India Radio has shown any partiality in favour of Afghanistan in this dispute. Nor is there the slightest foundation for the charge that the All India Radio makes a practice of broadcasting “fabricated news”. The All India Radio makes use of news items available from the Bakhtar news agency or the Kabul radio in the same way as it uses news items emanating from the Pakistan Radio. For example on the 24th January, 1951 the All India Radio put out the denial by the Government of the N.W.F.P. of an alleged clash at Peshawar Cantonment. On the 22nd January, 1951 the All India Radio put out the statement by the Prime Minister of Pakistan on this subject. On the 10th April, 1951 the All India Radio broadcast the statement of the Pakistan Minister of Frontier Regions regarding raids by Afghan nationals and forces on Pakistan territory. These examples could be multiplied. They will show that the All India Radio puts forward the Pakistan views on these questions with equal impartiality. The sole criterion for putting out any item is its intrinsic news value. The Government of India have also carefully examined the commentaries, news items and other items forming the enclosure to the Pakistan High Commission’s note under reply. They would point out that in regard to several of these items the translations as given in the enclosure to the Pakistan High Commission’s note under reply are incorrect. Apart from this, the material given in the enclosure shows conclusively that the broadcasts of the All India Radio on this subject have been restricted mainly to factual news. In so far as any comments have been made with regard to the issues in this dispute, these merely point out that while the Government of Pakistan talk of self–determination for the people of Kashmir, they take an entirely different attitude towards the demand for self determination by Pashtoons.

The Government of India fail to see how the question of a breach of the Inter–Dominion Agreement of 14th December 1948 can possibly arise. The High Commission have quoted a sentence from paragraph 4 of letter No. 1948 – PM of December 11, 1950 from the Prime Minister of Pakistan to the Prime Minister of India. The context of that sentence will show that the subject under discussion related to the alleged setting up in India of an illegal “provisional Government of East Pakistan” with the motive of supplanting the Government of East Pakistan as established by the laws of Pakistan. The Government of India reiterate their determination not to permit any such illegal activity in India. Both the purpose and the content of sub – paragraph 8 of paragraph ‘C’ of the 1950 Agreement are perfectly clear. In the view of the Government of India that Agreement is intended to ensure that the Press of either country does not support demand in one country for an acquisition of territory included in the other country. The Agreement does not cover any questions relating to the relations between either of these two countries and a third country. No question of international law arises in this context and the Government of India entirely dissents from the proposition that the publication within India of news and views regarding a dispute between Pakistan and Afghanistan, with both of whom they have friendly relations, amounts to a violation of international law or usage.

The Government of India take this opportunity of drawing attention to the fact that both the Pakistan Press and the Pakistan Radio have frequently indulged in insinuations and in some cases explicit statements to the effect that the support of the Government of Afghanistan to the claim of the Pashtoons to be given the right of self-determination with regard to their future, originates from inspiration from India. The Government of India strongly protest against such baseless insinuations and statements which are extremely detrimental to the friendly relations between India and Pakistan on the one hand and India and Afghanistan on the other. The Government of India are also unable to accept the contention that the Pakistan Press has been sober and objective in regard to its coverage of events relating to India’s relations with Nepal, Tibet and China. The actual facts of past events are by now well established and the Government of India are no longer exercised in regard to several completely false and fabricated items of news which appeared in the Pakistan Press at that time. They would, however, point out that the sole object of these insinuations and allegations was to embroil the relations of India with her friendly neighbours and that such efforts reveal anything but a friendly attitude towards India.

The High Commission have again referred to the informal party given by an official of this Ministry to meet a number of journalist which was also attended by some Afghan journalists and others. The Government of India are still unable to understand why so much importance should be attached to a private function. The Government of India would, however, like to assure the Pakistan High Commission that the three persons, who have been specifically referred to by Pakistan, entered India on valid travel documents.

The Ministry take the opportunity to renew the assurance of their highest consideration.

No. F.18(19) – Pak. III/51. Dated 22nd September, 1951

The Ministry of External Affairs present their compliments to the Pakistan High Commission in India and, with reference to the High Commission’s note No. F. 13(7) P/51 – 2513, dated the 25th August, 1951, have the honour to say that the understanding reached between the Government of India and the Government of Pakistan in the correspondence resting with Mr. Dutt’s D.O. Letter No. F. 18(7) – Pak. III/50, of 20th March, 1950 was intended only to cover the inclusion in the news bulletins of a Mission of official press notes, statements etc. of the Government of the country which is represented by the Mission. Otherwise the safeguard against the publication of condemnatory statements in general would be rendered completely nugatory. It is immaterial therefore whether in fact certain jirgas were held or not by tribesmen of the N.W.F.P. on particular dates. The Government of India’s objection is not on the basis of inaccuracy of reports of such jirgas having been held, but to the fact that publicity was given in the news bulleting of the High Commission to resolutions or demands of these jirgas on the ground that the resolutions or demands are condemnatory of the policies of the Government of India.

2. The Government of India must therefore ask that subject to the exception mentioned in the preceding paragraph, the High Commission should not publish in their news bulletins and circulate within India any material which is condemnatory, whether directly or Indirectly of the Government of India.

3. The Ministry take the opportunity to renew the assurances of their highest consideration.

Extracts from the Press Conference of Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru.

New Delhi, November 3, 1951.

Q: Apart from the Kashmir issue there are many other outstanding issues between India and Pakistan, for instance, East Bengal. As Khwaja Nazimuddin belongs to Bengal, have you had any occasion through any source to talk about this question?

JN: No. Ever since Khwaja Nazimuddin became Prime Minister (of East Pakistan) there has been no special development in regard to East Bengal. Routine matters, of course, go on. But there are other matters. There is the evacuee property problem, there is the canal waters problem, and others. In regard to every one of them, and more especially in regard to evacuee property and canal waters, you may remember that we have offered to abide by judicial determination of both those problems.

Q: Do you feel there has been some change in the relations between India and Pakistan recently? And as you have always said that you are prepared to take any steps for better relations, have you taken any initiative?

JN: I think there has been a change, psychologically considered; people are in a better mood on both sides. There is an improvement, no doubt, and one should take advantage of it whenever it comes. But there is always a slight risk in overshooting the mark before you can take full advantage of an existing situation.

Q: Don’t you think that India is far too big for that and that India can always take the initiative?

JN: It is not a question of being big or small. If the initiative does not lead to results, if it is premature, then it leads you nowhere.

Q: Arising out of what you have just said, it was you who first made the gesture at the public meeting to condole the death of Mr Liaquat Ali Khan*, that controversies must be hushed in the face of death. On that the Pakistan Prime Minister extended a hand of goodwill in the same spirit and he appears to have said—that though he did not say in so many words—he appears to have complained that there has been no reaction from India.

JN: He did not ‘complain’. Some people asked him about the Chakravarty business and he said: ‘nothing doing’.

* Following Liaquat Ali Khan’s assassination at Rawalpindi on 16 October 1951, Khwaja Nazimuddin became the Prime Minister of Pakistan.

 It was reported in the press that B.N. Chakravarty (senior official of the Ministry of External Affairs) had visited Nazimuddin as Nehru’s special messenger and when asked to confirm, Nazimuddin clarified that Chakravarty’s visit was a courtesy call to convey condolences.

No. F. 13(7) P/51–3900 New Delhi, the 7th December, 1951.

The High Commission for Pakistan in India present their compliments to the Government of India, Ministry of External Affairs, New Delhi and with reference to their communication No. F. 18(18) – Pak. III/51, dated the 20th November, 1951, regarding the two items published in the ‘Pakistan News’, have the honour to say that, as already intimated in their communication No. F. 13(7) P/51 – 2513, dated the 25th August, 1951, the High Commission still consider and maintain that the two items in question were in no way condemnatory or critical of the Government of India, directly or indirectly. They cannot, therefore, entertain the contentions adduced in Government of India’s communication No.F.18(19)–Pak. III/51, dated the 25th September, 1951.

The High Commission take the opportunity to renew to the Government of India the assurances of their highest consideration.

Government of India, Ministry of External Affairs

The Ministry of External Affairs present their compliments to the Pakistan High Commission in India and with reference to the High Commission’s Note No. F. 13(7) P/51 – 3900, dated the 7th December, 1951, regarding the two items published in the “Pakistan News”, have the honour to say that this matter has since been discussed between the Secretary to the Government of India, Ministry of External Affairs, and His Excellency the High Commissioner for Pakistan in India on the 15th January, 1952. In the course of this discussion, His Excellency the High Commissioner agreed that the Government of India must be the final judge of whether or not a particular news item is condemnatory of the policies of the Government of India. In the case of the two news items, forming the subject of the present correspondence, the Government of India are of the opinion that the news items gave publicity to resolutions and demands of Non-Official gatherings which were condemnatory of the policies of the Government of India, and the publication of such news items therefore constituted a violation of the understanding between the two Governments. The Government of India would, therefore, request the Pakistan High Commission not to publish in future in their news bulletins and circulate within India such or any similar material.

2. The Ministry take the opportunity to renew the assurances of their highest consideration.

Note Verbale of the Indian High Commissioner in Pakistan to the Pakistan Ministry of Foreign Affairs regarding comments in the Lahore daily on a train disaster in India.

Karachi, June 16, 1952.

Office Of The High Commissioner For India In Pakistan
Jahangir Sethna Road, New Town
Karachi-5

The High Commission for India in Pakistan present their compliments to the Government of Pakistan, Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Commonwealth Relations and have the honour to state that the W AQ, Lahore in its issue dated the 22nd May, 1952, while ‘sympathizing’ with the relatives of the victims of the train disaster in Bikaner, has made the following comments:-

“There can be none else but Hindus and Sikhs in this part of India. Sorrow and anger linger in our hearts against the cruel Hindus and beastly Sikhs who made the Muslims homeless by bayonets and bullets. They desecrated our places of worship, graveyards and mizars of revered persons. They dishonoured our 70, 000 women. They killed babies in the wombs of mothers. We cannot help wreaking vengeance on these tyrants. Our historical traditions demand that we should wreak vengeance. When time comes, we will. But for the present we offer our sympathy to the victims of the tragedy because that is enjoined upon us by Islam”.

2. It is a matter of deep regret to the High Commission that the W AQ should have chosen a train disaster in India to indulge in this unprovoked and uncalled for tirade against the Hindus and Sikhs and to write about the wreaking of vengeance on them for alleged wrongs done in the past. The comments of the W AQ are calculated to arouse communal passions and to cause alarm amongst the minorities in Pakistan and are in flagrant violation of the Indo – Pakistan agreement of December, 1948 and the Prime Ministers’ Agreement of April, 1950. Such writings in the Pakistan Press cannot fail to have repercussions in India.

3. The High Commission emphatically protest against the above item in the W AQ and request the Government of Pakistan to take strong action against the newspaper, with a view to preventing the repetition of such objectionable writings. The High Commission would be grateful to be informed, if there is no objection, of the action taken by the Government of Pakistan in the matter.
4. The High Commission avail themselves of this opportunity to renew to the Government of Pakistan the assurances of their highest consideration.

0091. CONFIDENTIAL

Letter from the Indian High Commissioner in Pakistan Mohan Sinha Mehta to the Foreign Secretary of Pakistan M. O. A. Baig regarding inflammatory articles in the Pakistani press.

High Commissioner for India in Pakistan
Personal

Karachi, September, 10th, 1952.

My dear Baig,

I am writing this personal letter to share my thoughts with you. You will agree that it relates to a subject which is indeed very important from the public point of view. Unless effective measures are taken to curb the mischief, the society will possibly be exposed to a serious danger. I am sure your views and feelings on this subject are the same as mine. Can something be done to improve matters so that the efforts and intentions of men of goodwill to bring about progressive improvement in the relations between the two countries, India and Pakistan, may bear fruit?

Yesterday, an official communication (No. IIS – 27/52, dated 9th September), has been addressed by my Chancery to your Foreign Ministry on this subject. May I request you to read it and also to place it before the Acting Foreign Minister for his perusal. Ordinarily, I know what happens to such representations. They are received, duly acknowledged and quietly put away in cold–storage. My sensitiveness is getting accustomed to this cold and futile procedure. I am bothering you with this personal letter in order to drew your special attention to the seriousness of the situation. I do not wish to burden this letter by repetition of what has been said in the formal Note. The tone and language of the extracts and quotations included in that Note are eloquent testimony to the anxiety felt by me. There can be one and only one result of such thoughts and writings, namely, to poison the sources of human relations and excite men to violence. I cannot believe that any nation, religion or good cause can be served by such writings.

As soon as I heard about the incidents in Tripura State, I promptly tried to get the correct information about the events. The Chief Commissioner of Tripura State has sent me a confidential report which I would be glad to place in your hands. Reports in the Press are false, malicious and deliberately distorted with the obvious object of rousing peoples’ passion and bitterness.

It is quite untrue that the Deputy High Commissioner for Pakistan at Calcutta was not allowed to go to Agartala. In fact he did go there, made a statement about the unfortunate events, which followed the murder of a Hindu boy and he was satisfied that the civil authorities had taken prompt and appropriate action to bring the situation under control. The victims of the communal trouble were adequately compensated and almost all the Muslims who had migrated had returned. Even during the disturbances in many parts of the disturbed area, communal relations remained normal, even cordial. Many of the passages quoted in our communication of yesterday are patently so absurd and untrue that no evidence is necessary to show their anti-social object and violent effect.

The other day, you must have noticed that the Editor of the Dawn, the leading daily newspaper of the capital of Pakistan, easily outdid its own record by referring (in its editorial dated 3rd September) to the two incidents in the tour of the Frontier Province undertaken by our Prime Minister shortly before Partition. I wonder how an educated person can write things for the public Press which he would be ashamed of reading out to his daughter or sister at home. Incidentally, I may tell you that I have absolutely reliable authority to prove that both the incidents were wrong and never took place. We are accustomed to falsehood, malicious misrepresentation and complete distortion of events in the writings of the Dawn. But the consequences of this action and attitude on the part of an important newspaper are going to be seriously detrimental to the interests and sound progress of Pakistan itself, apart from the relations between the two countries. I do not know how such papers and writers serve Pakistan in any way.

I could go on multiplying examples but that would be only wasting your time. We know these trends so well. It may be that other high officers in your Government do not share your views and those of the Foreign Ministry.

It is widely believed, and there is ample evidence to support this view, that the Government of Pakistan exercises a fair measure of control over its Press in its general policies and news coverage. In that case, it should not be a very difficult thing to raise the standards of journalistic criticism on public events and in particular relations with other countries. I for one do not object to the use of strong language where the writer disagrees with or disapproves certain action or event. But strong language need not be indecent or obscene. Besides, and this is a most important point, there should be honest respect for truth and the facts and events should not be suppressed and distorted to serve a particular premeditated purpose.

I owe you an apology for writing to you in such a frank way. My personal esteem for your open – hearted nature and our kinship of ideas on such matters are my excuse for encroaching on your busy time. Besides, I am anxious to support in my humble way every effort which brings the two countries closer in understanding and good neighbourlines. Anything which defeats this purpose becomes a source of grief and distress. You will see that I am not even numbering this letter. It is only on a personal level that we can speak out our mind freely.

With kind regards,

Yours Sincerely

Sd/- M. Mehta

Letter from the Pakistan Foreign Secretary M. O. A. Baig to the Indian High Commissioner in Pakistan Mohan Sinha Mehta regarding inflammatory articles in Pakistan press.

Ministry of Foreign Affairs & Commonwealth Relations

Inflammatory articles in the Pakistan Press

My dear Dr. Mehta,

Will you please refer to your Personal and Confidential letter, dated September 10, 1952?

I have now seen your High Commission’s Note No. IIIS – 27/52, dated September 9, 1952, on the subject of inflammatory writings in the East Bengal Press regarding the alleged communal happenings in India. I agree generally with your comments, both in your letter to me and in your official Note.

The Pakistan Press is often guilty of malicious and low–bred propaganda. It is a tendency which I deplore, but which in the present state of education in this country is not likely to be remedied in the immediate future by public opinion, which is the proper corrective. Such items as the stupid editorial in the Dawn of September 3 do far more harm to the reputation of the tribesmen in particular and of Pakistan in general than they do to those who are the ostensible targets of criticism or attack.

I think that, in the majority of such cases, we may leave the gutter to claim its own and take no notice of such vulgarities. I agree however, that some of the more inflammatory writings may well have unfortunate effects on undeveloped minds and I am forwarding the whole case to our Ministry of Information and Broadcasting for appropriate action. I am confident that your Government will also take corresponding measures to keep some of the more extreme Indian papers within reasonable limits in their comments on this country and its affairs.

Yours sincerely

sd/- M.O.A. Baig

H.E. Dr. Mohan Sinha Mehta,
High Commissioner for India,
The Indian High Commission, Karachi.
0093. Letter from Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru to Minister of Commerce T. T. Krishnamachari.

My dear T.T.,

...The real question is a deeper one and does not relate to trade only. There is in Pakistan a group which is violently against India and is totally irresponsible. They have a considerable say in Government either on the Ministerial or official level. There are also many people in Pakistan who have no such animosity to India, except on special occasions when it is roused up, and have come to the conclusion that there should be better relations between the two countries.

In India also there are those who are always clamouring for the blood of Pakistan and there are many others who have no such wish and want peace and quiet and better relations. It so happens that each country hears a great deal about the extremist section of the other and thinks that that represents public opinion or Government's views. This embitters our relations.

I think it is perfectly true that so far as Governments are concerned, our Government has behaved better than the Pakistan Government. This is partly due to the fact that we have some standards which we try to maintain, and partly because we are a stronger Government. The Pakistan Government has no such standards and is a weak Government with numerous internal dissensions.

Any wise approach to the problem would make it clear that this continuous strain and conflict is not good for the two countries. This talk of economic sanctions completely ignores realities. Apart from our suffering as much as Pakistan might, the initiative goes to the extremists on both sides and conditions worsen.

If any Pakistan Minister wishes to come here to discuss matters, he should certainly be encouraged to do so.

Yours sincerely

Jawaharlal Nehru

0094. Note Verbale of the Indian Deputy High Commissioner at Dacca to the Government of East Bengal regarding false and grossly exaggerated propaganda.

Dacca, November 14, 1952.

Office of the Deputy High Commissioner for India at Dacca

No. 9(11) Sec/52 November 14th, 1952.

The Deputy High Commissioner for India in Pakistan at Dacca presents his compliments to the Government of East Bengal and begs to draw their attention to the intensification, during the last few weeks, of the propaganda against India not only in the Dacca Press but also in several public meetings at Dacca and in other important towns in East Bengal.

As instances of such entirely false or grossly exaggerated Press propaganda, he would mention the “news items” published on the front page of the Morning News dated the 30th October and 2nd November with banner headlines respectively of “Mass attacks on Muslims in Malda villages” and “400 Muslims killed near Alipore Duars” and the editorial in the same paper published on October 31 headed “Massacre at Malda”. The Deputy High Commissioner has already protested against some of these writings in his communication No. F. 9(11) Sec/52 dated the 31st October 1952. He has also personally drawn the attention of the Chief Secretary to the Government of East Bengal to the “news – item” headed “400 Muslims killed near Alipore duars” at the recent Chief Secretaries’ Conference held at Shillong.

He also begs to draw the attention of the Government of East Bengal to the following public meetings, some of them described in the Press as “mammoth” meetings, held at Dacca and elsewhere at which the fictitious “news” published in the Dacca Press about the alleged perpetration of “atrocities” against the Muslim minority in India appears to have been deliberately used to provoke the majority community against the minority communities in East Bengal and in particular against the Hindus:

“(1) An emergent meeting of the Working Committee of Provincial Anjuman – e – Muhajireen held at Dacca on October 25, Saturday.

(2) A meeting of the East Bengal Anjuman – e – Muhajireen held in Ward No. 3 of Dacca on 1st November (Saturday).

(3) A mass meeting of the Muhajireen held in Ward No. 4 of Dacca, under the auspices of Provincial Anjuman–e–Muhajireen on 7th November last.

(4) A mammoth meeting held in the first week of November at Dinajpore under the Presidentship of Shamsul Ahmed, Secretary of the District Muslim League.”

The Deputy High Commissioner is further informed that at some of the meetings held in mosques of East Bengal it was even decided to supply knives and explosives to the local goonda elements for use in communal riots to be provoked in this connexion on a date to be fixed and announced at future meetings. He, therefore, considers it his duty to place this information in his possession before the East Bengal Government so that they may take prompt action, both preventive and punitive, against the mischievous move to provoke communal disturbances in East Bengal which appears to have been set on foot already.

The Deputy High Commissioner will be grateful to be assured that the Government of East Bengal will take firm and effective steps to nip such propaganda in the bud and prevent the occurrence of any communal disturbances or oppression and harassment of minorities in East Bengal. He will further be grateful to be informed, if there is no objection, of the steps that may be taken by the Government of East Bengal in this regard.

The Deputy High Commissioner avails himself of this opportunity to renew to the Government of East Bengal the assurances of his highest consideration.

The Chief Secretary to the Government of East Bengal
Eden Buildings, Dacca.

0095. Note from Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru to Commonwealth Secretary about discussing certain matters with the new Prime Minister of Pakistan Khwaja Nazimuddin.

New Delhi, November 25, 1952.

Our High Commissioner need not take any particular step in this matter... It is for the Prime Minister of Pakistan to reply fully to my last message to him*. We can then consider what further step we should take.

2. You refer to Khwaja Nazimuddin getting in touch with our people in London. I do not know what you mean by this. Nobody in London is going to discuss these matters with him. Before leaving Pakistan, Khwaja Nazimuddin talked about raising the Kashmir issue in the Commonwealth Conference. If he does so, he will be snubbed and our representative will refuse to have anything to do with it.

3. Khwaja Nazimuddin is full of good intentions when he talks to our High Commissioner, but either he is incapable of giving effect to them, or he does not want to do so. Probably, it is the former.

4. I am prepared to discuss any matter with him. But it is clear that so far as Kashmir is concerned, there is not much room for us to vary our position. As for canal waters, and the evacuee property problems, we have suggested every kind of approach, including some kind of arbitration and reference to an international court. They have been rejected. I am prepared to discuss those fully. He should understand, however, that the East Bengal problem is not a minor one so far as we are concerned. It is, for the present, the most important issue we have to face vis-a-vis Pakistan.

A. Note Verbale of the Indian High Commission in Pakistan to the Pakistan Ministry of Foreign Affairs regarding statement in the Pakistan Parliament by M. A. Gurmani about alleged threat to Bhawalpur from India.

Karachi, January 15, 1953.

Office Of the High Commissioner For India In Pakistan
Jahangir Sethna Road, New Town, Karachi – 5.

The High Commission for India in Pakistan presents its compliments to the Government of Pakistan, Ministry of Foreign Affairs & Commonwealth Relations, and has the honour to draw their attention to the following extract from a statement made by the Hon’ble Mr. M.A. Gurmani in the Pakistan Parliament on 17th November 1952, while speaking on the Bill further to amend the Restriction and Detention Ordinance, 1944, as appeared in the Dawn dated 18th November 1952:

“We were completely isolated and Bahawalpur was on more than one occasion threatened by the Indian authorities of even aggression and of even sending their forces, and my reply to them was — and all these things are on record, I am not saying anything which I cannot substantiate — my reply to Pandit Nehru was that if a single Indian troop enters the soil of Bahawalpur, I will take it as an act of aggression and I shall deal with it with the limited resources that I have as much”.

This High Commission is instructed to point out that what the Hon’ble Mr. Gurmani has said is not correct. There was no question at any time of India taking any action in regard to Bahawalpur. In fact, the Hon’ble Mr. Gurmani himself approached the Government of India on the 14th August 1947 for a Standstill Agreement. The Government of India were clearly of the opinion that Bahawalpur would naturally be associated with Pakistan and, therefore, the Government of India were reluctant even to enter into a Standstill Agreement. The Hon’ble Mr. Gurmani has said in his statement that he is prepared to substantiate his statement. The Government of India would be glad if he did so.
The High Commission would appreciate an early reply in the matter.

The High Commission avails itself of this opportunity to renew to the Government of Pakistan the assurances of its highest consideration.

B. Letter of the Indian Deputy High Commissioner in Pakistan
J. K. Atal to the Indian Ministry of External Affairs regarding the alleged accusation by M. A. Gurmani of India threatening Bhawalpur.

Karachi, February 11, 1953.

High Commissioner For India In Pakistan

D.O. No. 2 – DHC. 53. Gen. February 11th 1953

Subject: Statement made by Mr. Gurmani in the Pakistan C. A. on November 17, 1952, about Bahawalpur.

Please refer to my letter of even Number dated February 7, 1953, to Akhtar Husain, a copy of which was forwarded to you with a covering letter by the High Commissioner.

I was summoned to the Foreign Office yesterday by the Acting Foreign Secretary. He conveyed to me his Government’s displeasure at what he considered “rude correspondence” in this case as well as in one or two previous cases. In this connection, he specially mentioned the protest we had recently sent to them regarding the language used by the East Bengal Government. He felt that it would have been better, in the changed atmosphere, to send our protests in more polite language.

The Foreign Secretary then went on to say that the extract of Mr. Gurmani’s speech appearing in the Dawn was not the correct version and gave me a copy of Mr. Gurmani’s speech, which is enclosed. This, the Foreign Secretary pointed out, was something quite different from what appeared in the ‘Dawn’.

The impression that the conversation left on me was that no notice was taken of this speech nor any importance placed on it and that there was no intention of maligning India.

In view of this, perhaps, you might like to consider whether any useful purpose would now be served by issuing a public disclaimer of the speech.

Yours Sincerely
(J.K. Atal)

B.F.H.B. Tyabji Esq., ICS,
Commonwealth Secretary,
Ministry of External Affairs,
New Delhi.

-------------------------------

Official version of Mr. Gurmani's speech as given to Mr. Atal

“When I went to Bahawalpur things were not very pleasant. We were completely isolated and Bahawalpur was under the threat of an aggression. There was raids from Indian side backed by forces. We on our own successfully faced these dangers and kept the lifeline of Pakistan open. All these things are on record, I am not saying anything which I cannot substantiate. I openly and clearly told Pandit Nehru and his Government that if a single Indian soldier entered the territory of Bahawalpur, I will take it as an act of aggression and fight it out to the last man. I am glad to say that the soft belly of Pakistan as Quaid–e–Azam described Bahawalpur at that time became Pakistan’s strong fortress”.

C. Note Verbale of the Indian High Commission in Pakistan to the Pakistan Ministry of Foreign Affairs regarding the statement of M. A. Gurmani about Bhawalpur.

Karachi, March 2, 1953.

High Commission of India In Pakistan

The High Commission for India in Pakistan presents its compliments to the Government of Pakistan, Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Commonwealth Relations, and has the honour to advert to this High Commission's Note of even number dated 15th January, 1953. This High Commission has noticed with deep regret that in spite of fact that the attention of the Government of Pakistan, Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Commonwealth Relations, was drawn to a statement made by the Hon'ble Mr. M.A. Gurmani, which was totally unfounded and inaccurate both in purport and in implication, a long time ago, yet the Government of Pakistan have not considered it fit even to express their regret over this. The Government of India have so far avoided issuing a public disclaimer because of their desire to maintain the friendly relations that exist between India and Pakistan. They would have also ignored the statement if it had no public significance. If, however, the Government of Pakistan wish that the false impression created by the statement issued by the Hon'ble Mr. M.A. Gurmani should be remedied only by the issue of a disclaimer, the Government of India may regretfully have to adopt that course.

The High Commission avails itself of this opportunity to renew to the Government of Pakistan the assurances of its highest consideration.

D. Note Verbale of the Pakistan Ministry of Foreign Affairs to the Indian High Commission in Pakistan regarding M. A. Gurmani’s statement on Bhawalpur.

Karachi, March 16, 1953.

Government of Pakistan
Ministry Of Foreign Affairs & Commonwealth Relations

No. 17 – SS/53. Karachi, March 16, 1953

The Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Commonwealth Relations presents its compliments to the High Commission for India in Pakistan and with reference to their note No.2–DHC–53–GEN., dated March 2, 1953, has the honour to state that when this matter was first brought to the Ministry’s notice the Foreign Secretary invited Mr. Atal, Deputy High Commissioner, personally and explained to him that the report published in the Dawn was incorrect. After seeing the correct official version of the Hon’ble Mr. Gurmani’s speech, of which a copy was given to Mr. Atal, he expressed the view that this should satisfy the Government of India whose primary object was to ascertain the correct version of the report before considering whether a disclaimer was called for.

2. Subsequently, Mr. Atal called again at the Foreign Office on the 17th of February to report that the Government of India’s objection was confined to the marginally noted sentence appearing in the official report of the proceedings of the Pakistan Parliament. He added that he had been instructed to say that no such communication had in point of fact been received by the Government of India from the Hon’ble Minister.

“I openly and clearly told Pandit Nehru and his Government that if a single Indian soldier entered the territory of Bahawalpur, I will take it as an act of aggression and fight it out to the last man”.

3. The matter was, therefore, referred to the Hon’ble Minister and it was subsequently explained to Mr. Rajwade* (in the absence of Mr. Atal from Karachi) on the 20th February, 1952, that when the Hon’ble Minister made this statement in Parliament, he did not mean that he had addressed a communication to the Hon’ble Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru to the effect noted in the margin or had spoken to him verbally but had made this statement at public meetings held in Bahawalpur and the Punjab at the time.

*Note: The question of alleged accession of Bhawalpur State to India erupted once again in 1957, when the Times of Karachi Published a facsimile of a letter attributed to Gurmani and addressed to Sardar Patel in this connection. The Pakistan High Commissioner saw Prime Minister Nehru on March 22, 1958 when the latter gave a true copy of Gurmani’s letter of 14th August 1947 offering to sign a Standstill Agreement with India and to which India did not respond.
4. As the High Commission is well aware it was, and still is, the common practice for political leaders to address each other through public statements. In the circumstances it is not understood what further clarification is required in respect of this matter or how the question of expressing regret or issuing a disclaimer can arise. The crux of the matter is that such a statement was made by the Hon'ble Minister at one or more public meetings held at the time.

5. As regards the statement in the note of the Indian High Commission dated January 15, 1953, that Mr. Gurmani himself approached the Government of India on the 14th August, 1947, for a Standstill Agreement, the facts as stated by him are as follows:-

Immediately before the transfer of power to India and Pakistan, Bahawalpur State along with other States was advised by the Crown Representative to enter into standstill agreements with the Dominions concerned in respect of matters of common concern. The Government of Bahawalpur discussed with the representatives of the Governments of India and Pakistan arrangements for the conclusion of standstill agreements on such matters. While the Government of Pakistan readily agreed to the proposal and concluded a standstill agreement with Bahawalpur State, the representatives of the Government of India insisted that they would only accept the standstill agreement on the standard form which they had prepared for all Indian states, as any exception in the case of Bahawalpur State was likely to create difficulties for the Government of India in negotiating similar agreements with the other States. The Government of India not only did not agree to enter into a standstill agreement with Bahawalpur State on the basis of restricted schedule of subjects containing subjects of common concern, namely (i) currency and coinage; (ii) extradition; (iii) irrigation; (iv) motor vehicles; (v) opium; (vi) relief from double income tax and other arrangements relating thereto; and (vii) existing privileges and amenities enjoyed by the Ruler; but did not even acknowledge the Prime Minister of Bahawalpur State’s letter dated the 14th August 1947 on the subject. A copy of the Prime Minister’s letter to the Government of India which was endorsed to the Government of Pakistan is enclosed for ready reference.

6. The Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Commonwealth Relations hopes that the matter will now be treated as closed as in its opinion any other course will only serve to revive old controversies which should be forgotten.

The Ministry avails itself of this opportunity to renew to the High Commission the assurances of its highest consideration.

The High Commission for India in Pakistan, Karachi.
Thank you for your top secret telegram 373 dated 25th January. I shall await your detailed reply to my letter. Meanwhile, I hasten to send you this brief reply.

2. Tomorrow is the anniversary of the establishment of Republic. That day is a great day for us because it means the fulfilment in some measure of what we had long struggled for. The struggle for the freedom of India was a joint struggle of all the communities, Hindu, Muslim, Christian, Sikh and others, who inhabited undivided India in those days. Fulfilment came to us at the end of a long period, but unhappily it brought division and much ill will in its train. We cannot undo history. We must accept it with good grace and try our utmost to put an end to those evil effects of ill will, fear and suspicion that have pursued us these many years.

3. Every thinking person in India desires that the tension between India and Pakistan should end and that the relations of these two countries, which have a long period of a common inheritance, should be friendly and cooperative. Indeed, not only history and tradition but geography demands that. In the world today, so full of fear and talk and preparation of war, it becomes doubly incumbent upon us to try to stop this rot, insofar as we can, and to settle our differences. I am sure that all reasonable people in Pakistan are of the same opinion.

4. I am convinced that war anywhere is a calamity, that a world war will be a disaster of unimaginable proportions, that a war between India and Pakistan would be even worse than normal conflicts between nations because it would have something of the nature of civil war because of our past close associations. Therefore, it becomes incumbent on all of us to avoid this uttermost folly and disaster. I am prepared to do my utmost to this end. I am sure that if we approach this question in the right spirit, we can achieve results.

5. I do not wish to enter into any argument at this stage or to cast blame for anything. But I would beg of you to consider what is so frequently said and written in Pakistan on this subject of war with India. I have drawn your attention to this frequently because it has distressed me greatly. There are constant demands for war against India and newspapers and public statements by persons presumed to be responsible demand war. I would like you to compare this atmosphere in Pakistan to the one that prevails in India, where there is hardly any reference to these subjects. It is true that a few persons belonging to our Opposition here talk irresponsibly. We have condemned them in public in the clearest language. But, generally speaking, there is no stress or strain in India in regard to Pakistan.

Nazimuddin had mentioned that India and Pakistan had “so far lived in an almost continuous state of tension and antagonism...and removal of this antagonism is the central problem of statemanship confronting us both.”

6. In Pakistan, as I pointed out to you in previous communications, responsible persons and great organizations like the Muslim League speak in terms of war. Only recently, your late High Commissioner in Australia and the present Vice-President of the Muslim League has said repeatedly that war is the only solution and that war is very probable in the near future. You can well imagine the reactions to this both in Pakistan and India.

7. You refer to the correspondence I had with your predecessor, the late Mr Liaquat Ali Khan. I would draw your attention to my answers to his letters. We would gladly refashion the world to our hearts’ desires. But our power to do so is limited. Therefore we have to proceed step by step towards our goal. I had suggested the first step, and it was a big step, that both our countries should formally and solemnly renounce any resort to war or armed force in settling our disputes. If we did that, as I earnestly hope that we will even now, that would immediately create an atmosphere which would help in the solution of our problems.

8. I agree with you that there are other applications of force which can be destructive of peace and justice, though nothing can be quite so bad as war. We should, therefore, avoid such application of force also.

9. On the eve of our Republic Day, I venture to address this appeal to you again.

 Nazimuddin in his cable had stated that war between India and Pakistan would bring ruin to both and that war was not the only means of settling disputes. He also stated that application of force in settlement of disputes whether by war or by any other means was equally repugnant to him.
Memorandum of the Government of India containing the decision regarding the National Status of officials of the Central Government or of the Provinces who opted for Pakistan in 1947 addressed to State Governments.

New Delhi, February 21, 1953.

No. F. 55/52 – PV. III

Government of India
Ministry of External Affairs

Memorandum

Subject:- National status of officials of the Central Government or of provinces who opted for Pakistan in 1947.

The Government of India have given careful consideration to a number of representations received from officials, who had opted for Pakistan in 1947, to the effect that, notwithstanding their option for Pakistan and subsequent residence in that country, they should be deemed to have continued to remain citizens of India. The conclusions of the Government of India on this question are as follows.

2. Any claim to citizenship of India has to be decided, pending the enactment by Parliament of any further law on the subject, by reference to Articles 5 to 10 of the Constitution of India. Articles 6, 8, 9 and 10 either do not apply or do not assist in regard to the matter under consideration. With regard to Articles 5 and 7, the Government of India are advised that –

(a) With regard to the requirement of Article 5 that the applicant should have been domiciled in India on the date of commencement of the Constitution, having regard to all the circumstances it must be presumed that Pakistan optees, having signified their intention to transfer their allegiance to the new State and their fixed intention to reside in that State for an indefinite period, must be presumed to have transferred their domicile to Pakistan. This presumption is, however, rebuttable; and

(b) Even if domicile in India on 26th January, 1950 can be proved, an optee must be presumed to have migrated to Pakistan within the meaning of the main or enacting clause of Article 7 and unless saved by the proviso to that Article, is excluded thereby from citizenship of India.

The legal and constitutional position therefore is that officials who opted for Pakistan in 1947 cannot be held to be nationals of India under the provisions of the Constitution.
3. From the political point of view it would be some advantage to India if there were persons in the service of the Government of Pakistan who have strong ties with or friendly feelings towards India. It is obvious that the attitude of a Pakistan official who is an Indian national and whose ultimate interests lie in India, would be entirely different from that of one who had no surviving links with or interests in India. There would also be economic advantages to India; apart from humanitarian considerations. In view of this, while in general this matter must be governed by the legal and constitutional position set forth in the previous paragraph, the Government of India would be prepared to consider individuals specially sponsored by State Governments for this purpose.

4. A person will be entitled to special consideration only if he satisfies the following conditions:

(a) The State Government is assured of the applicant’s good faith, value and friendly feelings towards India, and is satisfied about his character and antecedents. In this connection special consideration may be given to any services rendered by the applicant to the minorities in Pakistan.

(b) The recognition of Indian citizenship of the applicant will not in any way affect the pool of evacuee property in India. It should, however, be borne in mind that property in West Bengal, Assam and Tripura does not fall in the pool, and, therefore, this condition can be held to be satisfied regarding those Pakistan optees whose property lies only in these States. As regards those whose property lies in other States in India and is vested in Custodians of Evacuee property, the Government of India wish to avoid any action which would complicate the administration of such property or its ultimate disposal. Such persons must, therefore, normally be ruled out, but in very exceptional circumstances the Government of India might agree to the acknowledgement of his Indian nationality and the issue of an Indian passport to the applicant on receipt from him of a written waiver of any claim for the restoration of his property merely on the grounds of the recognition of his Indian citizenship.

(c) There is proof of a desire to keep up ties and links with India, e.g. the fact that the wife and/or children of the applicant have continued to stay in India, for whom he has continued to maintain a dwelling house in India. Continued payment of income tax or other taxes in India will create a strong presumption in favour of the applicant. Similarly the enrolment of the wife and/or children of the applicants as electors during the last elections would also constitute a presumption in favour of the applicant.

Persons who satisfy the above conditions or whom the State Government considers to be exceptional may be sponsored with full particulars, to the Ministry of Home Affairs. That Ministry will then come to a decision in regard to them taking into account all factors, political, social and economic.

5. The Government of India understand that a number of Pakistan optees serving in East Pakistan resigned their posts and returned to their homes in India before the 15th October, 1952. Although such resignation and return to India does not in itself affect the constitutional position regarding their national status, the Government of India consider that it will involve hardship if such persons, who have proved their strong interest in India by resigning from their posts, were to be compulsorily treated as Pakistan nationals. It is, therefore, suggested that such persons need not be treated as Pakistan nationals, nor registered as such. They may be allowed to remain in India with an undefined national status until such time as they re-acquire Indian nationality under the provisions of any citizenship law which may be enacted by Parliament.

0099. Letter from Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru to Pakistan Prime Minister Khwaja Nazimuddin.

New Delhi March 15, 1953.

My dear Khwaja Nazimuddin,

I must apologize to you for the delay in answering your letter of the 28th January 1953. That delay was caused because you had referred in your letter to a number of incidents and I had to make enquiry about them from the persons concerned. I have now received replies from our Minority Minister, Shri C.C. Biswas, from the Chief Minister of West Bengal, as well as from others, in regard to these incidents. I do not propose to burden this letter with a detailed reply in regard to these matters. But, as the information conveyed to you has been manifestly wrong in some respects, I am sending separately a note about these incidents.

2. Since I received your letter, we have exchanged telegrams. Those telegrams have, in part, dealt with the matters contained in your letter.

3. I do not think it will serve any useful purpose for me to send you an argumentative letter dealing with the major points in issue between India and Pakistan. We know, more or less, our respective positions and, unfortunately, they differ. I am not interested in a lawyer’s or a politician’s argument. I am interested in solving these problems and in putting an end, insofar as I can, to the disputes that have embittered relations between India and Pakistan to their mutual disadvantage and injury. I have no doubt that this can be done, provided we approach these questions with a fixed determination to solve them. It is obvious that neither India nor Pakistan stands to gain by tension and conflict between them.

4. It is true that some of these disputes deal with matters of national interest and sometimes these interests conflict. Hence the difficulty in solving them. Nevertheless, we should be far-seeing enough to realize that this continuation of tension is bad for all concerned.

5. I am quite sure that the vast majority of the people, both in India and Pakistan, would welcome a solution of our problems. When we are fortunate enough to bring this about, a burden would be lifted from them. It is also true that there are some people both in India and in Pakistan who are narrow and bigoted in outlook, and who prosper in an atmosphere of hatred and conflict. They generate a lot of heat. But what I had ventured to point out to you previously is this: No responsible person in India connected with the Government of India or outside it, encourages these tendencies or makes statements in the public press or otherwise which encourage communal passions and the tension between the two countries. What has pained me is that responsible persons in the highest positions in Pakistan constantly indulge in attacks on India, in veiled or open references to war, and, in general, keep up this unfortunate tension. Neither you nor I can control all our people or stop all mischief-makers, but we can work earnestly and even effectively as Governments and as responsible persons to minimize and put an end to these wrong and harmful tendencies. I regret that the impression I have gained is that leading and responsible persons in Pakistan do not function in this way. I am stating this not with a view to blame, but as a fact which should be borne in mind in order to understand our present difficulties.

6. As a Government, we have set our face against communalism. I do not deny that communalism exists in India, but we fight it with all our strength and succeed in keeping it in check. But I regret to note that the policy of the Pakistan Government is different.

* Nazimuddin had stated in his cable of 28 January 1953 that mere expression of desire to settle Indo-Pakistan disputes peacefully or condemnation of war talk would not “take us very far until we remove the causes of the bitterness... This can only be done if we find an effective method of ensuring that disputes that now divide us and create bitterness among our people will be peacefully resolved.” He appealed to Nehru to consider “our proposals in that behalf or if they are not acceptable, favour me with your suggestions as to an alternative method of settling our disputes.”
7. I have no doubt that the vast majority of the Indian people desire a friendly understanding with Pakistan. I have equally no doubt that the great majority of the people in Pakistan have a like desire. It is a natural desire and a right one, for our main problems are economic problems and we can help each other greatly in solving them if we cooperate.

8. I had suggested a “No-War Declaration” by both our Governments because I am convinced that that by itself would go a long way in lessening the tension between our countries and in producing an atmosphere which would facilitate our coming to grips with and solving our problems. Unfortunately, you have not thought fit to accept this proposal for the reasons you have stated. Those reasons do not convince me. In any event, so far as we are concerned, we have unilaterally made that “No-War Declaration” in regard to Pakistan, and we shall hold by it.

9. I am convinced that a solution of our problems will not come through the agency of any outsider, but by our facing them directly. I am prepared to do that in regard to each one of our problems without any previous commitments or limitation.

10. There has been a great deal of talk and wholly unjustified criticism in Pakistan on the canal water issue. This is being dealt with through the good offices of the World Bank. I am prepared to continue that and arrive at a settlement that way. If a direct approach is preferred, I shall accept that too. You will recollect my previous proposal, which did not exclude a reference to a mutually agreed international authority if necessity arose for that. But surely, the right course would be for us to deal with it directly. If we fail in any particular matter, we can then consider the next step.

11. The Prime Ministers’ Agreement of April 1950 brought great relief to our countries. I would be agreeable to a review of this agreement, so that its practical working may be improved, and such other measures might be taken to give the minorities a feeling of full security and partnership in the political and economic life of their respective countries.

12. In regard to trade and commerce also, we are perfectly prepared to discuss these questions with you. I believe some such step is being taken.

13. If you are agreeable, details of how these issues can most conveniently be dealt with could be worked out jointly by our two Foreign Offices for our consideration. In the same way, we may take up other issues later on.

 Nazimuddin declined the offer of Nehru to make a no-war declaration jointly with him, because, in his view, such a declaration had no value unless it was linked with the settlement of Indo-Pakistan disputes.
14. Ultimately, all these approaches depend on two factors—an earnest desire to find a way out and an acceptance of the bona fides of the other party. I can assure you, in so far as we are concerned, that we have that earnest desire and are prepared to consider all these questions in all friendliness.

Yours sincerely

Jawaharlal Nehru

0100. Extract from the Statement by Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru in the House of People (Lok Sabha).

* * * * *

Then again, an honourable Member, getting angry with Pakistan for what it has done, said that we should cut off diplomatic relations. How exactly that helps us is not clear to me. It may result in the exact opposite of what that Member possibly thought. This question of Pakistan has been discussed here on many occasions. I should not like to take up the time of the House much with it. But, I should like to say a few words about the general approach to this question, because we are accused of appeasement and not being stern and strong enough. Whenever we have asked as to how we can show strength, some suggestions have been made, which appeared to me then, and which appear to me now, as totally impracticable and undesirable as this suggestion about breaking off diplomatic relations.

Look at the picture of Pakistan today. What is happening there, in West Punjab especially and to some extent elsewhere? It is not a pleasant picture*. I am not concerned with their arguments there as to who is right as it is none of my concerns to interfere there. But, that picture is interesting from two points of view to me. One is that if we in India fall a prey to that narrow bigoted outlook which prevails in

* Demonstrations against the Ahmadiya community, an Islamic reform sect, were quelled in Karachi on 1 March 1953, but continued in West Punjab where 12 deaths were reported in the first week of March. The rioting broke out after the Government refused on 26 February a demand by the Al-Muslim Parties Convention for (1) the relegation of the Ahmadiyas to a minority status; and (2) the resignation of the Foreign Minister, Mohommed Zafrullah Khan, a member of the community. Police in Karachi arrested 300 demonstrators between 27 February and 1 March before rioting subsided. The West Punjab Government, on 28 February, banned the publication for one year of the Ahmadiya papers Al-fazl and Azaq, the extremist Ahrar organ.
Pakistan, we shall also equally suffer. It is well to remember that. Because, it is the same type of mind, although it may use different words, and different slogans, the same narrow bigoted type of mind which has brought Pakistan to this difficult pass in which it is today, politically, economically, in every way.

I have ventured to suggest to this House in the past that we must not mix up the Government or the governmental policy of Pakistan with the people of Pakistan. The people of Pakistan only a few years ago were the people of India. There is not much difference between them and us, and their failings or their virtues. And if, after the Partition, horror overtook us, it overtook us in both places, and both places had plenty of misbehaviour, to use a very mild word. Geography has thrown us together even though—whether it is due to our mistakes or folly, if you like, whatever it may be due to, or to circumstances—we parted. Nevertheless, they are there as our neighbours, and there they are going to remain.

Therefore we have to think of any policy that we may have to pursue, not in terms of the anger and passion of today, but looking a little further ahead, just as, if I may refer to something entirely different, if we have to think of any policy that we may have to pursue in regard to the Chinese State, we have to remember that we have a frontier of roughly 2,000 miles with them, and we are neighbours today, tomorrow and in the future. Therefore, whatever other countries do, whatever policies they may have—and I am not going into that question—we have to consider our policy in regard to China remembering not only whatever past we may have had, but the present and the future, that we have to live together in peace and friendship and, I hope, cooperation.

Coming back to Pakistan, we have to look a little ahead and not be swept away by the passion of the moment or by some ill-deed that we hear about from there, and thereby adopt policies which may bedevil us in the future. We have to solve this problem of India and Pakistan. It is better to solve it at leisure than to break it in haste. It is a difficult problem. Almost every problem is a difficult problem in the world of today.

11. The Indian and Pakistani Residents Citizenship Act of 1949 enacted by Parliament of Sri Lanka removed names of voters of Indian origin from the electoral registers but laid down that those Indians who would apply for Sri Lankan citizenship before August 1951 would be eligible for voting. However, only a small number of total applications submitted by Indian settlers could be dealt with before the May-June 1952 elections. The Act of 1949 laid down that an applicant, as proof of his intention to make Sri Lanka his home, should have his wife and dependents “ordinarily resident” with him—a requirement which was interpreted by the Commissioner of Registration in such a manner that only a few Indian settlers could become eligible for citizenship.
0101. TOP SECRET

Letter from High Commissioner for India in Pakistan Mohan Sinha Mehta to Commonwealth Secretary, Ministry of External Affairs B.F.H.B. Tyabji.

Karachi, April 3, 1953.

No. HC/53/PMC. April 3, 1953

High Commissioner for India
“Valika Mahal” Jahangir Sethna Road, New Town, Karachi

Subject: - Settlement of Indo – Pakistan disputes

My dear Badr,

Yesterday’s Bag brought your Secret and Immediate letter No. CS (T)/171 of 2nd April, 1953. In the meantime you may have received my telegram which was dispatched earlier yesterday.

Now that the good effort has been set on foot, it is desirable to pursue it with sincerity and earnestness. So far the response from the Pakistan side is also encouraging. We should pursue this matter in the spirit of our Prime Minister’s letter to Khwaja Nazimuddin, dated the 15th March, remembering “that this continuation of tension is bad for all concerned” and that we are “interested in solving these problems and putting an end . . . . . . to the disputes that have embittered relations between India and Pakistan to their mutual disadvantage and injury”.

The point contained in the 2nd paragraph of your letter is indeed important. For such negotiations to yield success it is necessary to bear in mind the natural psychological point of offering something to Pakistan which is almost as important and substantial for them as we might expect them to concede to us. On our side the review of the Prime Ministers’ Agreement on Minorities and a satisfactory working of that Agreement in its proper spirit would be a very good objective. From the point of view of Pakistan the one and most important subject is Kashmir. They are most impatient to try and reach a settlement with India on that issue. But I do not know whether anything is possible in the present circumstances to reach an understanding with them on this complicated issue.

There are, however, a large number of minor matters. Some of them do not appear to be very important when placed alongside with Kashmir and Canal Waters disputes. But a satisfactory settlement on them followed by an equally sincere implementation of the same would come as a great relief to a large number of people in both the countries. I am thinking of such things as pension claims, Post Office accounts, movable property and liberal facilities for travel etc.

In any case, the idea of attempting to bring about an overall settlement of outstanding complaints and disputes has already been conceived and set in motion. It would be unfortunate and indeed undesirable if we on our side were suddenly to show any coldness or indifference. Therefore, we should pursue the matter on the lines you have adopted, namely, holding the inter-departmental meeting as indicated in paragraph 6 of your Circular Letter to the different Ministries of the Central Government and then meeting one or two representatives of Pakistan Foreign Ministry to draw up an agenda for the proposed official meeting of the representatives of the two countries. This preliminary meeting which should be held within a week or ten days from now, should give you an excellent opportunity for sounding the Pakistan side. You would then know how their mind is working, to what extent they are keen to reach a full-scale settlement and what would be their expectations in the matter. If the preliminary meeting for drawing up the agenda and settling the procedure for future meetings turns out to be successful, that would be a hopeful indication for further discussions. I trust you agree with my view. If anything else occurs to me later, I shall write to you or send you a telegram. I am hoping to meet Akhtar Husain this evening and again tomorrow morning. I shall send you a telegram only if I find any fresh indications or developments.

In the meantime I hope to receive your reply to my telegram of yesterday as soon as possible.

Yours sincerely

(Mohan Sinha Mehta)

B.F.H.B. Tyabji, Esq., I.C.S.,
Commonwealth Secretary,
Ministry of External Affairs,
New Delhi.
My dear Khwaja Sahib,

Thank you for your letter of March 28th*. I received it last night on my return from a tour of our frontier with Burma. I hasten to reply to it.

I have already told you that I am prepared to discuss any subject of dispute or common concern between India and Pakistan. I am convinced that the right approach to any problem, between two nations is for them to deal with each other directly and not through intermediaries. After all we know each other and understand each other much better than any foreigner can do. If others intervene, then the direct link is lost and there is a tendency for either party to function as advocates of a cause. That is hardly becoming for self-respecting and independent nations.

It is true that some of our problems have become very complicated and what might have been easy at an earlier stage is more difficult today. This is so not only because of the complexity of the problems, but also because of the emotions roused in regard to them. Passions and emotions do not yield to logic or calm reason. Nevertheless, the only approach is that of logic and calm reason and that approach can only be made directly. The overriding fact is, and every sensible person must necessarily recognise it, that it is in the highest interest of India and Pakistan to cooperate in the largest measure possible. That cooperation can only take effective shape when the problems that beset us are put away and solved, or, at any rate, we go some long way towards their solution.

We must realise that the solution may not be easy or quickly arrived at because of the past background. But if we are determined to find a solution, I have no doubt that we shall find it, even though that may not be at the first attempt.

You refer to the Canal Waters dispute and to the good offices of the World Bank in this connection. I would have preferred this, as other matters in issue, to be decided by us directly. But since the World Bank has been good enough to interest itself and give us help, I welcome it and I hope that this will lead to

* The Pakistan Premier had referred to the Canal Waters dispute, a review of Prime Ministers’ agreement of 1950 and matters relating to trade and commerce between the two countries, and had proposed an early meeting with Nehru to discuss these issues.

 Referring to the Canal Waters dispute, Nazimuddin wrote that the immediate problem was to devise measures, which would ensure the maintenance of existing uses, as agreed to by both the parties, based on the World Bank’s proposal of 13 March 1952.
an understanding. We have agreed that existing uses will be continued so long as we are continuing these discussions with the World Bank, which, we hope will result in a satisfactory solution. We shall abide by that agreement and assurance. You refer to some kind of procedure for verification#. We have in fact appointed a special Commissioner on behalf of the Government of India to see to it that full effect is given to our assurance. If, at any time, you have the slightest doubt in this matter, I invite you to refer it to me, as I am taking personal interest in this question. I am sure, however, that there will be no occasion for your doing so.

While we welcome the good offices of the World Bank in this connection and will cooperate with them to the fullest extent to find a solution, I would not welcome any Inspectors or others of the World Bank to interfere with this matter. That is unbecoming for an independent nation. Indeed, we will have no objection to explaining anything to you or to your representatives at any time so that you can satisfy yourself.

You refer to the Kashmir dispute@. It is true that this dispute has embittered relations between India and Pakistan and the sooner it is resolved, the better it will be. I am perfectly prepared to discuss this with you. Indeed, I am convinced that a real solution can only come by mutual agreement and not by any attempt at imposition by any outside party. You will appreciate, however, that, both under our Constitution and for other obvious reasons, the Government of Jammu and Kashmir State has a very large say in this matter and we have to consult it in regard to any step that might be taken. However, I am perfectly prepared to discuss this subject with you.

During my absence from Delhi, I find that some telegrams have been exchanged between your Government and mine regarding a conference at official level between our respective representatives. I welcome this conference, and I hope they will discuss many matters that are unresolved still. I am told that it has been suggested on your Government’s behalf that the officials should discuss the Kashmir issue also. I have no objection to their discussing this or, any other issue, but it is obvious that much progress cannot be made at an official level in regard to the Kashmir issue.

You have been good enough to invite me to visit Karachi to meet you there. I

Nazimuddin had written that the Bank was trying to establish a procedure for the verification of water discharge data so as to obviate any fear of reduction of supplies. He was convinced that if a satisfactory procedure was devised, it would lead to the solution of the problem.

@ Nazimuddin had written that Kashmir remained the most contentious issue between the two countries and had suggested that the two Prime Ministers should meet at an early date for that purpose.
would gladly avail myself of any opportunity to meet you and to discuss matters with you. But I find it exceedingly difficult at present to fix up any such meeting outside Delhi. Our Parliament is meeting from day to day and this casts a heavy burden upon me. In addition to this the new developments in the international situation concern us, in many ways, rather intimately, and I have to give constant thought to them with a view, sometimes, to action being taken. From now on till the time I leave for London I am almost completely booked up with important engagements and I do not quite see how to do away with them. Secretary Dulles of the USA is coming here as he is going to Pakistan. Mr Adlai Stevenson is also coming here. I have promised some visits to our scarcity-stricken areas in the south and the working out of our Five Year Plan and Community Projects scheme is of vital importance and I am deeply committed to them.

You will appreciate my difficulties. Nevertheless I am eager to meet you. There is no point in my going to Karachi for an odd day. I must find at least three or four days and for the present I do not see my way to them. I shall, however, consider this matter further and see what can be done. In any event, it would be better to have the conference of officials as early as possible and then decide as to what further step we might take.

With kind regards,

Yours sincerely,

Jawaharlal Nehru

0103. Telegram of Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru to Pakistan Prime Minister Khwaja Nazimuddin

New Delhi, April 13, 1953.

I am surprised to read in Pakistan newspapers that I have objected to discussion of Kashmir and Canal waters questions with you*. As you know I have repeatedly made clear that I am prepared to discuss every issue with you and that further our officials also can discuss every issue. I do not understand therefore why these completely false statements are appearing in the Pakistani press and why the Pakistan Government does not contradict them as being wholly untrue.

I must express my regret also at the continuing attacks on India by responsible Pakistani Governors and Ministers. This is hardly a suitable preparation for friendly talks. So far as we are concerned, we are always prepared to consider any matter affecting India and Pakistan in a friendly and cooperative spirit. You should yourself make it perfectly clear to press and public in Pakistan what our attitude is in this matter and that we have never refused discussion on any subject.

* On 12 April 1953, Dawn reported that Nehru had “refused to discuss the Kashmir issue and the Canal Waters dispute with Nazimuddin.

 Responsible Pakistan Politicians like Abdur Rab Nishtar and F.K. Noon had been indulging in India-baiting and talking of an impending war to sort out various problems between India and Pakistan.
0104. Letter of Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru to former Governor General of India Lord Mountbatten.

New Delhi, April 19, 1953.

My dear Dickie,

You must have been surprised to read of the extraordinary developments in Pakistan*. The whole thing is rather Gilbertian. On Jinnah’s death, Nazimuddin becomes Governor-General. On Liaquat Ali’s death, Nazimuddin appoints himself as Prime Minister, which was rather odd constitutionally speaking, and makes Ghulam Mohammed the Governor-General. And now, Ghulam Mohammed dismisses Nazimuddin with little ceremony and almost at a few hours’ notice. Nazimuddin goes on protesting that he will not resign and that he still continues as Prime Minister de jure.

The fact of the Matter is that hardly any constitution functions in Pakistan and it is all palace politics and palace intrigues, without a palace. Some time back, Zafrullah Khan said that Pakistan was a part of the Middle-East. Geographically, that was far from correct, but it has proved to be correct in another sense, i.e., the politics of Pakistan are similar to the politics of the Middle-Eastern countries ... A number of unscrupulous persons control the destiny of this unfortunate country (that is, Pakistan) and I do not quite know where they will take it...

Yours

Jawaharlal

* Nazimuddin and his cabinet had been dismissed by Ghulam Mohammed, the Governor-General, who invited Mohammad Ali Bogra to form the new Government.

Letter from the Commonwealth Secretary, Ministry of External Affairs B.F.H. B. Tyabji to High Commissioner for India in Pakistan Mohan Sinha Mehta.

New Delhi, April 21, 1953.

No. CS (T)/171

Ministry of External Affairs
New Delhi

2nd April, 1953

Subject: Settlement of Indo – Pakistani dispute.

My dear High Commissioner,

You must have seen the telegram which I sent to Atal (Dy. High Commissioner) yesterday. I now enclose a copy of a note (not included here) which I have had distributed to the various Ministries of the Government of India for the forthcoming Conference with Pakistani officials.

2. You will note that there is not much that we can do on at least two of the three items which we had originally considered for discussion. There is also the difficulty that on most of the items for discussion that we can think of with Pakistan, it is the Government of India which has to make Pakistan concede to their point of view, and therefore a settlement of those issues is not likely to bring any kudos to the Pakistan Government. From our reading of the situation in Pakistan it will be difficult for the Pakistan Government to come to agreement with the Government of India on issues about which they themselves do not feel very strongly, and on which they are unable to obtain concessions which the Pakistani public would value greatly. It is therefore important, before we come to a decision on the Agenda of the proposed Conference, that we should know that the Pakistan Government is keen on obtaining from this Conference or Conferences. If we knew that, it may be possible for us to adjust the concessions that we hope to obtain from them with those which we may be willing to offer them. That would be the surest method of ensuring the success of the Conference and of reducing the tension between the two countries.

3. I should be grateful if you would kindly give urgent thought to this matter, and attempt to obtain as much information about it as is forthcoming from responsible persons in Pakistan, and let me have your views as early as possible.

Yours sincerely,

(B.F.H.B. Tyabji)

0106. Letter from Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru to Pakistan’s new Prime Minister Mohammad Ali.

New Delhi, May 7, 1953.

My dear Prime Minister,

Thank you for your letter of April 25. I was on tour when it reached Delhi and hence some delay in my answering it. I find that you are now touring in East Bengal. As I indicated to your predecessor, Khwaja Nazimuddin, I would be happy to discuss any of the matters in issue between our respective countries. It appears to be clear now that no such meeting is feasible before you and I go to London. We shall of course meet in London and I hope that we may have an opportunity there for at least a brief talk. But that is hardly a suitable place for any long discussions. We shall, therefore, have to meet later again.

But it would be desirable for a meeting at official level to take place as early as possible. You refer to officials meeting and working out an agenda and the procedure to be followed in dealing with it. I do not quite know why it should be necessary to take so much trouble over an agenda. No formal agenda is necessary in our meeting, and, even if it is necessary, it can be written without much trouble. I was hoping that our officials could meet as early as possible not merely to discuss preliminaries but to consider many matters. I still hope that this would be possible. Indeed it seems to me that such an official meeting is a desirable preliminary to our meeting. With all good wishes,

Yours sincerely

Jawaharlal Nehru

“Valika Mahal” Jahangir Sethna Road, New Town Karachi – 5,

D.O. No. HC/53/UPB/74. 12th May 1953

Subject: Anti – Indian propaganda in the Pakistani Press.
My dear Badr Tyabji

Your Secret letter No. P.III/53/55615/2, dated the 7th May was received here by the last Bag.

2. If, as suggested by you, we send a formal official note from the High Commission to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Commonwealth Relations of Pakistan, we know what will happen. After a week we shall receive a two line acknowledgment and perhaps after a period of anything between three to six months we shall receive a reply which will contain a long list of quotations from the Indian Papers like ‘Milap’ and ‘Tej’ and some others in Calcutta which would bear comparison with the foul and poisonous writings of the Lahore Paper Waqt. So, you will see that we shall have neither the advantage of any improvement that we desire nor even the moral effect of making them feel sorry for what is being written by some Papers in Pakistan. May I follow on this occasion another course which would perhaps be more direct and efficacious. I shall send the extracts contained in your Draft Note with a short covering letter to Shoaib Qureshi in continuation of what I told him yesterday. He is, as you know, the Minister for Information and Broadcasting now. This will also fit in at this time, because he gave me several examples of newspaper writings in India (Delhi, East Punjab and Calcutta) which published utterly false statements and anti-Pakistani sentiments. Among the examples he cited, I may mention two here:

(a) A Hindu was obliged to invite a large number of Muslims in East Bengal. The latter then killed a calf at the Hindu’s house and forced him and his family to eat the beef which was cooked on the spot. This news was baseless.

(b) Reports were published of the demolition of two temples in a village (also of East Bengal). The fact is that the two temples are still there and worship in them is going on. He also referred to the writings in the Press against the Muslims, their religion and urging the Government of India to march their Armies on Pakistan.

A D.O. letter to the Minister of Information may perhaps have some good results of which our past experience does not hold out any hope if a formal representation were made.

3. I do not mean that formal protests and expressions of our annoyance should not be made against the offensive and aggressive statements or writings. That method cannot be ruled out. But every time the method and occasion of our reactions should be considered. This is not a very good occasion for provoking a wordy battle on a subject in which the batteries on both sides have plenty of ammunition and are capable of holding their ground for a long time. We have recently had friendly gestures put out by the Leader of the New Government of Pakistan. No reason so far has shown itself to doubt the spirit or genuineness of those utterances. The two Prime Ministers are in correspondence with each other and the officials of the Pakistan Foreign Ministry are at this time sitting with you to draw up an agenda for the discussions between the two Governments on all important matters of differences and disputes between the two countries. In this atmosphere to shoot out this protest on a subject which is kept alive by the bigoted Newspapers on both sides seems to me to be somewhat inappropriate.

4. I shall await your reply before taking action on your letter. I hope you do not mind my writing to you frankly on this subject.

With kind regards,

Yours Sincerely

(Mohan Sinha Mehta)

P.S. In this connection you may perhaps like to see a letter which was received here from the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Commonwealth Relations, Pakistan Government. It should have gone to our Ministry of External Affairs a few weeks ago, but they could not send it earlier, because one of the letters to which a reference was made in that Note could not be traced all these days.

PRESS COMMUNIQUE

It has been agreed that the Prime Ministers of India and Pakistan will meet in London early next month. They will have preliminary talks on Kashmir, the working of the Prime Minister’s Agreement on minorities, the evacuee property payment question, and other issues having a bearing on Indo – Pakistan relations. Owing to their other preoccupations it will not be possible for the two Prime Ministers to discuss these matters in detail in London. That will await their return to their respective countries. They will meet again at the earliest possible occasion and will carry on their discussions for the purpose of arriving at a settlement of all Indo – Pakistan differences.

Meanwhile the Governments of India and Pakistan have agreed to issue a directive to those of their Ministries concerned to take up immediately the outstanding issues between the two countries with their opposite numbers. They will be directed to make every effort, in the light of the improved atmosphere and outlook that happily prevails on both sides, and the earnest desire expressed by the two Prime Ministers, to reach an early, friendly and lasting solution of these differences, so that the two countries may live together as good neighbours and cooperate with each other in all matters of common interest.

Steering Committee

In order that the two Prime Ministers may be kept fully informed of the progress made in these discussions it has also been decided to set up a Steering Committee composed of two officials nominated by each Government. This Committee will receive regular reports of the progress made towards settlement of the outstanding issues and will meet from time to time to consider them and to devise ways and means by which any issue remaining unsettled or pending for any length of time or any disagreement that may arise may be resolved to the mutual satisfaction of the two Governments.

The first meeting of the Steering Committee will be held in Karachi soon after the return of the Pakistan Prime Minister from the Commonwealth Prime Minister's Conference in London. In the meantime the Ministries concerned in both the countries will get in touch with their opposite numbers and either by correspondence or by personal meetings will endeavour to settle as many of the outstanding differences between them as quickly as possible.

Ministry of External Affairs

New Delhi, May 23, 1953.

* The issue of above communique followed a meeting between Pakistan Foreign Secretary Akhtar Husain and Secretary General, Ministry of External Affairs N.R. Pillai in New Delhi on May 14, 1953 to settle the agenda for a meeting between the Prime Ministers of India and Pakistan in London during the Commonwealth Prime Ministers' Conference.
0109. Extract from a Letter of Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru to the Indian High Commissioner in Pakistan Mohan Sinha Mehta.

New Delhi, May 25, 1953.

My dear Mohan Sinhaji,

...I am sending you a telegram about the suggestion of Mohammad Ali that you should also go to London. I do not think this will be the right thing to do. I shall certainly see Mohammad Ali more than once. But it does not help much for us to stay in the same hotel. My programme is terribly crowded and so no doubt will be his. It really is not possible to discuss anything in detail or at length there. All we can do is to refer to various matters and create some kind of a friendly and cooperative approach, which is important. If you go there, these meetings assume a more formal importance and it is presumed that all kinds of details are being discussed. As a matter of fact, neither you nor I can discuss effectively such problems as Canal Waters, Evacuee Property, East and West Bengal, except, in the broadest way."

As for Kashmir, that is very tough and any new approach will require reference to the Kashmir Government. It is best, therefore, for you not to go there.

As for Ghazanfar Ali, we all know him well enough. I do not propose to object to his name. I suppose he will try to carry out instructions given to him. He is pliable enough, but nobody can respect him for his integrity. If Mohammad Ali asks me, I shall be frank with him without being offensive to Ghazanfar Ali*.

Yours sincerely

Jawaharlal Nehru

* Mehta gave Mohammad Ali examples where urgent matters had been held up, such as (a) the agreements reached at the previous Passport Conference at the end of January which had not been ratified, (b) there were serious problems connected with border trade between East Bengal and the adjoining Indian States which caused widespread hardship to the people of that area. Mohammad Ali had indicated that he had selected Ghazanfar Ali as the Pakistan High Commissioner at New Delhi and that he had not yet informed his cabinet colleagues about it and proposed to do so after obtaining Nehru’s reactions. Ali was apprehensive that since Ghazanfar Ali was a member of the Interim Government of 1946 and the relations between the two parties were “not inspired by trust and understanding” then, Nehru might raise some objections to his appointment. Mehta had reassured Ali that so long as Ali had complete trust in Ghazanfar’s absolute “integrity” and “loyalty” to his policy, Nehru would not consider political differences of past as any disqualification.
0110. Order issued by the Government of India appointing the Steering Committee for the settlement of Indo-Pakistan differences.

New Delhi, May 26, 1953.

In accordance with the procedure agreed between India and Pakistan for the settlement of Indo – Pakistan differences, the Government of India have appointed a Steering Committee composed of:

Mr. B.F.H.B. Tyabji, Commonwealth Secretary, Ministry of External Affairs.

Mr. M.V. Rangachari, Joint Secretary, Ministry of Finance, who is also Joint Secretary in the Partition Secretariat.

The Secretary to the Steering Committee will be Mr. R.F. Isar, Deputy Secretary, Ministry of External Affairs.

The Pakistan Government is also expected shortly to announce the names of officials who will form their Steering Committee.

Each of these Committees will receive regular reports from the various Ministries of their Government of the progress made towards the settlement of the outstanding issues. The two Committees will also meet from time to time to consider these and to devise ways and means by which any issue remaining unsettled or pending for any length of time or any disagreement that may arise may be resolved to the mutual satisfaction of the two Governments.

The first joint meeting of the two Steering Committees will be held in Karachi soon after the return of the Pakistan Prime Minister from the Commonwealth Prime Minister’s Conference in London.

No. CS (T)/293  26th May 1953

Subject: - Settlement of Indo – Pakistani Disputes.

The following joint communiqué was issued by the Governments of India and Pakistan on the 23rd May 1953.

“It has been agreed that the Prime Ministers of India and Pakistan will meet in London early next month. They will have preliminary talks on Kashmir, the working of the Prime Minister’s Agreement on minorities, the evacuee property payment question, and other issues having a bearing on Indo – Pakistan relations. Owing to their other preoccupations it will not be possible for the two Prime Ministers to discuss these matters in detail in London. That will await their return to their respective countries. In the meantime, the Ministries concerned in both the countries will get in touch with their opposite numbers and either by correspondence or by personal meetings will endeavour to settle as many of the outstanding differences between them as quickly as possible.

2. In accordance with this Ministry’s Memorandum No. CS (T) 170 dated the 1st April 1953, Ministries had prepared lists of the more important items which they proposed to suggest for the proposed Indo – Pakistan official Conference. The lists were consolidated and copies handed over to the Pakistani Foreign Office officials who visited Delhi recently to settle the agenda of the forthcoming Prime Minister’s meeting and to evolve an agreed procedure for the consideration and solution of Indo – Pakistani issues. A copy of the consolidated list is attached. (not available) (The Pakistani list has not yet been communicated by them).

3. It was agreed with the Pakistani Foreign Office representatives that the items in this list should be classified as follows:-
   (a) Those which would have to be dealt with by the Prime Ministers.
   (b) Those which the Ministers concerned would have to deal with.
   (c) Those which could be dealt with at an official level.

The items in the consolidated list have been classified accordingly in the margin.

4. The intention is that the items classified as C should be taken up to start with in pursuance of the terms of paragraph 2 of the joint communiqué. Those are items which prima facie appear to be susceptible of receiving immediate attention and of a solution. The items classified as B will be dealt with as and when opportunity offers and time permits.

5. Ministries are requested to take up immediately the items classified as C with their opposite numbers either by correspondence or by arranging personal meetings of officers. In thus reopening discussions, Ministries are requested to bear in mind the recent improvement in the atmosphere of Indo – Pakistani relations and the desire of the Prime Ministers that lasting and friendly solutions of difference should be reached.

6. A further communication will be made very shortly about the personnel and functions of the Steering Committee.

My dear Dr. Mehta,

I have just received your letter No. HC/53/11/135, dated the 28th May, 1953, regarding the progress of the subject – matter of the recent agreement on Indo–Pakistan discussions. We have already circularized the various Ministries etc. of the Government of Pakistan with instruction to examine the list of items supplied by the Government of India and to prepare a similar list on our own side. We have also in hand the question of appointment of our representatives on the Steering Committee but as the Foreign Minister and the Prime Minister are both away at present, it may be some time before we are able to make the announcement. I would, however, like to assure you that we on our side are proceeding with as much expedition as is possible under the circumstances and will continue to do so.

0113. Telegram of Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru to Commonwealth Secretary in the Ministry of External Affairs B.F.H.B. Tyabji regarding the talks held between the two prime ministers.

London, June 16, 1953.

Your telegram 2859 June 15th*. I have had long talks with Pakistan Prime Minister. We agreed to begin with that our talks could only be of a preliminary and exploratory character. More detailed conversations to be followed in India or Pakistan.

We discussed briefly Canal Waters issue, Evacuee Property and East-West Bengal matters. On all these matters his attitude appeared to be cooperative and desirous of settlement. But he was not fully acquainted with details and did not therefore like to be precise and definite. Further consideration therefore was postponed.

So far as Canal Waters issue was concerned we decided to wait for International Bank Conference on this issue and in any event to settle matter between ourselves. In regard to Evacuee Property he was agreeable to a joint high-powered judicial commission, as previously stated by us, to consider this problem. In regard to East and West Bengal he was in favour of further facilities in regard to movement etc. being given and if necessary, abolition of visas.

We discussed Kashmir. Most of the talking was done by me and I pointed out various lines of approach. We did not pursue matter further. Mohammad Ali said that he is very anxious for a settlement but he wanted me to appreciate his position in Pakistan, which was not very strong and had its limitations. He left it to me to make more definite proposals at later stage. Maulana Azad had written to him suggesting our meeting in Delhi. He was perfectly agreeable to this and said that it would help him greatly if previously I paid a brief visit to Karachi even though this was only for one day. I said that I was agreeable to this subject to convenience of date which could not be fixed at this stage. Later he would come to Delhi for a longer period. Please inform Members of Foreign Affairs Committee.

I was naturally handicapped in discussing Kashmir because of present internal conditions there.

* The Prime Minister was replying to Tyabji telegram in which he had informed him that talks between the Secretaries of the two countries were not making progress because it was felt that the Pakistan Prime Minister’s statements in London were not seen as very helpful. So he was anxious to know the trend of talks in London. Later on June 26 on return to India, Nehru told a press conference in Bombay that his talks with Mohammad Ali were indeed friendly but preliminary and would be continued at a later convenient date.

Subject: Settlement of Indo – Pakistan differences.

My dear Badr,

Please refer to your Secret D.O. No. CS (T)/325, dated the 12th of June.

2. I had the Prime Minister and his wife at dinner at my place day before yesterday. After dinner I took an opportunity of a few minutes quiet chat with Mohammad Ali and put to him to the points urged by you in your letter referred to above.

3. He is very keen that our Prime Minister should visit Karachi as soon as possible, even if it is for a couple of days. If this meeting of the two Prime Ministers at Karachi about which so much has been said is put off, it would cause misgivings and disappointment in the public mind. The proposed meeting of the two Prime Ministers has been the subject of hopeful comments and discussions for the last two months. It would therefore be unfortunate if it was delayed.

4. Moreover, postponement of the proposed talks between the two Prime Ministers is likely to weaken Mohammad Ali’s position and the efforts which were started by him almost immediately after he became Prime Minister. Mohammad Ali thinks that even if Pandit Nehru is not able to stay long and even if the discussions do not reach any conclusions, his visit alone would create a favourable impression and then Mohammad Ali could follow it up by his visit to Delhi a little later. He also told me that he was thinking of going to East Pakistan very soon, but was not in a position to fix the date until he knew when our Prime Minister would be able to visit Karachi. He would prefer going to East Bengal after Panditji’s visit to this place. I do not know what our Prime Minister thinks on this question. There must be a lot of urgent and important work waiting for him after his return from Europe. The Korean question would have high priority in the list of those important matters. Then the All India Congress Committee meets at the end of the first week of July. Is it possible that the Prime Minister could spare two days soon after the A.I.C.C. meeting at Agra? After taking these factors into consideration, the date for the Prime Minister’s visit to Karachi should be fixed. It is desirable (a) to select a date as early as possible, and (b) to give intimation of that date to the Prime Minister of Pakistan so that he may be in a position to draw up his own programme.

5. I also spoke to the Prime Minister about the slow progress that had been made on the Pakistan side in preparing for the discussions of the various items between the Ministers and Secretaries of the two Governments. He said he was sorry about it and had already spoken to Rahim, the Foreign Secretary, to make things move speedily. I told him that even if the Foreign Ministry were energetic about it, it would make very little difference so long as the other Ministries were not earnest and expeditious in this connection. I suggested that he should also impress upon his colleagues to pursue the matter with zest and not allow time to pass. He liked the suggestion and promised to speak to his colleagues at the Cabinet meeting on Monday, that is, tomorrow. He realized and seemed to be sincere that the discussions of the various subjects should be taken up soon.

6. Now that their Members of the Steering Committee have been appointed (information of which has already been sent to you), will it not be a good thing to call a meeting of the Steering Committee in about a week’s time. If you agree to this, please let me have a telegram so that I could suggest this to Rahim. A meeting of the Steering Committee would provide an opportunity for supporting and strengthening the efforts of Rahim and the Foreign Ministry here in making things move on the Pakistan side. In any case, the Prime Minister’s meeting at Karachi has had such a wide and authoritative publicity that it cannot be put off much longer. For that reason also, a meeting of the Steering Committee at an early date is essential.

7. As things are, the dates both of the meeting of Steering Committee and of the talks at Karachi of the two Prime Ministers should be fixed soon, the former to be a week or so in advance of the latter. As soon as you are in position to know the date of the Prime Minister’s visit to Karachi, kindly send me a telegram and I shall communicate it to Mr. Mohammad Ali. He is expecting this information from us. Subject to the Prime Minister’s convenience, if the date could be fixed about the 10th or 11th of July, it would be a good thing and if this becomes possible, I hope the Steering Committee would meet at the end of the next week, that is 4th or 5th of July.

8. I was myself sorry and surprised to see Rajwade’s telegram to Puri. This telegram was sent without my knowledge. When I saw its copy two days after it had been dispatched, I expressed the same opinion which is contained in paragraph 2 of your letter. It was quite unnecessary to send that telegram and in no case should it have been addressed to Puri.
9. I thank you for your Top Secret letter No. CS (T)/337, dated the 18th of June which contains the gist of the talks between the two Prime Ministers in London.

Yours sincerely

Letter from Commonwealth Secretary B.F.H.B. Tyabji to High Commissioner for India in Pakistan Mohan Sinha Mehta.

New Delhi, July 1, 1953.

D.O. No. CS (T)/365,

Subject: - Settlement of Indo – Pakistani disputes.

My dear High Commissioner,

2. The Prime Minister has after his return given me some further account of his talks with the Pakistan Prime Minister in London, the gist of which he had telegraphed from London, and of which I had sent you a resume. There is nothing much to add to it. The Prime Minister’s talks in London were of a general nature and apart from giving them an opportunity of getting to know each other personally and appreciating each other’s point of view, no concrete results were achieved. That we shall have to work out here; particularly through the agency of the Steering Committee. As far as I can see, on the Pakistan side things are still moving very slowly indeed. In order to hustle them, I agree that it might be a good thing to have a meeting of the Steering Committees. If it is convenient to the Pakistan Government, our Steering Committee could fly down to Karachi on Saturday, the 11th, or Sunday, the 12th, and have meetings with their Steering Committee on Monday, the 13th, and Tuesday, the 14th, returning to Delhi on the 15th. Please let us know urgently whether this would be suitable. Our party would consist of M.V. Rangachari, Joint Secretary (Finance), and R.F. Isar and myself from this Ministry.

3. As you know, we have not yet received a classified list of the disputes to be discussed from the Pakistan Government. They have had our list for over a month now. This is pretty discouraging. It is difficult to foresee exactly what this meeting of the two Steering Committees will do in the circumstances. I presume its main purpose will be psychological: it may also help the Pakistan foreign office to stir up the other Pakistani Ministries. Apart from this, I enclose a list of the items which our Ministries here have already taken up with their opposite numbers in Pakistan, or are on the point of doing so. We should like particularly to discuss these items, and to see whether we cannot make any real headway with them.

4. As was envisaged from the very beginning, it is necessary that there should be a meeting of the two Steering Committees before the two Prime Ministers meet at Karachi. The importance of this is, if anything, emphasized by the results of the London talks between the two Prime Ministers. Neither of them – certainly not our Prime Minister – has the time to go into details of the various outstanding issues, and to resolve them, unless the ground is first fully prepared by the Steering Committees. You should kindly explain this to the Pakistan Prime Minister, adding that our Prime Minister has every intention of coming to Karachi before the next session of our Parliament. Provisionally, you might inform him that our Prime Minister hopes to come to Karachi on about the 25th July for a day or two. This is not an exact date; that will have to be fixed later due to the heavy demands that there are on the Prime Minister’s time after his absence abroad. Every attempt will, of course, be made to inform the Pakistan Prime Minister of the firm dates as early as possible.

5. In the meanwhile, we suggest that determined efforts should be made to expedite the various negotiations under way between the two Governments. We have already asked you to communicate our willingness to ratify the Passport Conference decisions (as now agreed upon by the Pakistan Government) to the Pakistan authorities. We should like to announce this publicly as early as possible. If it could be done before the Steering Committees meet, it would give them a good start off.

6. You will notice as the last item on the enclosed list of items for discussion “Exchange of Enclaves in East and West Bengal”. Regarding this the position is, as you probably know, that the total area of the Indian enclaves in East Bengal is greater than the total area of the Pakistan enclaves in West Bengal by about 6 sq. miles. The original proposal of the West Bengal Government was that these enclaves should be exchanged, and the Pakistan Government should be pressed to compensate us for the extra 6 sq. miles of territory, by allotting us territory elsewhere. Naturally, this proposition did not appeal to the Pakistan Government; and no progress on those lines was feasible. Now, however, the West Bengal Chief Minister has suggested that the adjustment in territory should be carried out by an adjustment of the boundary line between the two Bengals. This seems to be an eminently reasonable proposition. Dr. B.C. Roy, we believe, has written to the Pakistan Prime Minister about it; we do not know with what result. We should like you to find out informally what the reactions of the Pakistan Government are in regard to it. This should be done as informally as possible, as we are consulting the Defence Ministry about it, and would like to have their views on the suggested boundary adjustment before we take it up more formally with the Pakistan Government. I enclose a copy of Dr. B.C. Roy’s letter dated the 14th May, 1953, to the Prime Minister for your personal information. I shall send you the map mentioned in it later. We are getting copies of it prepared.

Yours sincerely

(B.F.H.B. Tyabji)

Letter from High Commissioner for India in Pakistan Mohan Sinha Mehta to the Commonwealth Secretary B.F.H.B. Tyabji.

Karachi, July 7, 1953.

High Commissioner For India
Damodar Mahal,
Karachi-5.

No. HC/53/PMC/211. 7th July, 1953

Subject: Settlement of Indo – Pakistani disputes.

My dear Badr Tyabji,

This is to acknowledge with thanks your Top Secret D.O. No. CS (T)/365 of the 1st July. In the meantime, I have already sent you a telegram and have just now received its reply with regard to the meetings of the Steering Committee. Although Pakistan has lost a lot of time for various reasons which you know, I am glad to find that after Rahim has taken over charge as Foreign Secretary, things are stirring up. With the inspiration that comes from the earnestness of the new Prime Minister and the steady dependability which one sees in Rahim, the future, I think, will not be so depressing as has been the past. When I meet Rahim, I get this impression.

2. He has now been able to shake up the other Ministries and at last they are within sight of the final list of subjects which await discussion and negotiation with their opposite numbers on our side. Final touches are being given to that list which, I understand, is fairly long. They hope to supply me that list by the 10th of July. Immediately on its arrival I shall have it dispatched possibly by a special bag (if it is not a bag day).

3. It is now definite that the Steering Committees would meet on Tuesday, the 14th July, and Wednesday, the 15th July 1953. Please let us know when you propose to arrive here.

4. I shall forward the list of items received with your letter under reply – it contains the items which the Ministries at New Delhi have already taken up with their counterparts at Karachi— to the Foreign Ministry here. It would be appreciated by them. On receiving your concurrence, I shall also send them a copy of the list of headings containing the various items arising from the Prime Minister’s Agreement, particularly with reference to the Hindu minority in East Bengal.

5. We had addressed the Foreign Ministry of Pakistan on the lines indicated by you our willingness to ratify the Passport Conference decisions. They have now agreed to ratify them on those lines. As regards the date of ratification, executive instructions will have to be prepared and kept ready on both sides to be issued on the appointed date from which the new policy will come into effect, simultaneously on both sides of the frontiers. The Pakistan Government have indicated that so far as they are concerned, it will take a little time, and they will inform us of the suitable date a little later. They are also examining the joint Press Communiqué drafted by you for simultaneous publication at New Delhi and Karachi, and have promised to return it shortly. In the meantime, the Prime Minister of Pakistan wishes to make a few announcements, one at Karachi on the 9th July and three others at Dacca on the 11th or 12th of July. About these I have sent you telegrams, one was dispatched last night and the other has been sent just now. I shall expect your telegraphic reply to them so that it could be conveyed to them. I would suggest that you may also make the same announcement on those subjects in India on the same dates, so that it may be quite clear that what Mr. Mohammad Ali announces is the result of mutual consultation and consent. I shall make this clear to Mohammad Ali also that in his announcement he should state that the agreement reached at the last Passport Conference had been ratified by both the Governments, and not talk of ratification by Pakistan Government only. You also desired that it will be a good thing to make a public announcement of the ratification of the Agreement of the Passport Conference before the meeting of the Steering Committees.

6. With regard to the last paragraph of your letter on the “Exchange of Enclaves in East and West Bengal” I had a brief talk with the Prime Minister. He told me that he had placed Dr. Roy’s letter and the map accompanying it before his Cabinet. The proposal was in principle accepted by his colleagues. He had sent the papers to East Bengal and the Map also has gone with them. I am hoping to meet Mohammad Ali again before he leaves for Dacca. I shall discuss this subject informally again with him. But I understood from him that so far as he and his Cabinet are concerned, the proposal made by Dr. Roy was reasonable and acceptable to them.

7. I shall expect your telegram in reply to my telegraphic messages by tomorrow evening.

Kind regards,

Yours sincerely

(Mohan Sinha Mehta)

No. 24/26/53 – I.P. New Delhi, 10th July 1953.

To: The Secretary to the Government of Pakistan, Ministry of Information & Broadcasting, Karachi.

Sir,

I am directed to refer to your letter No. 13/6/53 – IPICC dated the 11th June 1953 and to say that the Government of India agree to the inclusion of the first item proposed by the Government of Pakistan in the agenda. Presumably, it is intended to discuss the implementation of paragraphs 3 and 4 of Section I of the Indo – Pakistan Agreement of December 1948 and not Sections III and IV with which the Ministry of Information & Broadcasting are not concerned. It would also be convenient to amalgamate both the items into one which, if the Pakistan Government agree, might read as follows:

"Implementation of paragraphs 3 and 4 of Section I of the Indo – Pakistan Agreement of December 1948 and sub-paragraphs (7) and (8) of Section C and Section D of the Prime Ministers’ Agreement of April 1950”.

2. As regards the procedure for dealing with the subject, I am to suggest that it might be discussed, as heretofore, at a meeting of the Indo – Pakistan Information Consultative Committee. If the Pakistan Government agree, a suitable date in August 1953 for a meeting at Delhi may kindly be communicated.

3. With regard to the second item proposed by the Government of Pakistan, I am to invite your attention to our Ministry of External Affairs Memorandum No. F. 16 – 2/51 – Pak. I dated 12th July 1951 to the Pakistan High Commission in India, New Delhi, and to state that the matter has already received due consideration. The frequencies that are registered with the International Telecommunication Union for broadcasting services are meant for specific locations; apart from the technical difficulties of simultaneous use or time – sharing of frequencies, it will not be in consonance with the basis of registration for India and Pakistan to effect any changes in the notified use of frequencies. It would therefore be appreciated that no tangible results could be achieved by a discussion at the proposed meeting, the item also being outside the scope of the Indo – Pakistan Information Consultative Committee.

Yours Faithfully

(P.C. Chaudhuri)
Secretary to the Government of India

0118. Minutes of the first Joint Meeting of the Indo – Pakistan Steering Committees held in Karachi on 14th July. 1953.

PRESENT

INDIA                                      PAKISTAN
1. Mr. B.F.H.B. Tyabji                     1. Mr. J.A. Rahim
2. Mr. M.V. Rangachari                    2. Mr. A. Hilaly
3. Mr. R.F. Isar                           3. Mr. Anwar Ali (Messrs. A.A. Shah and S.M. Khan, Deputy Secretaries attended as observers).

1. Mr. Tyabji explained that in the forthcoming Prime Ministers meeting the Prime Minister of India would be negotiating direct with the Prime Minister of Pakistan both as Prime Minister and as Foreign Minister. In the Preliminary talks and correspondence between the two Prime Ministers and the representatives of the two Governments also, it had been agreed that while the Steering Committees would be appointed by the two Foreign Offices, they would keep the two Prime Ministers directly and constantly informed of the progress of the work.

2. It was agreed that items falling in categories ‘B’ and ‘C’ on the Indian and Pakistan lists should be taken up immediately at the official level through correspondence or conference (preferably the latter) in an attempt to obtain the maximum possible agreement. All Ministries should be informed that if no progress is made within one month from today, the matter should be referred to the Steering Committee concerned for guidance. If necessary, a joint meeting of the two Steering Committees would be held at which representatives of the concerned Ministries would be present. This joint meeting would then try to narrow down differences further and either recommend an agreed solution to the two Governments or submit the differences for discussion at Ministers level. In the event of the differences still remaining unresolved, the item would be submitted to the two Prime Ministers. It was essential that the two Steering Committees should keep themselves continually informed of the progress of negotiations by other Ministries with their opposite numbers and keep the two Prime Ministers informed of the progress made over the whole field.

3. Mr. Tyabji specially emphasized the need for reaching an early and final agreement on minor long pending issues which had already created unnecessary resentment by nationals of one country for the Government of the other, particularly financial claims by both officials and non–officials. He felt that one way of settling this was that minor and straightforward claims could be verified and adjusted through financial agreements on a Government to Government basis and thereafter responsibility for settling claims of individuals would rest with the Government of their own country.

Mr. Rangachari suggested that the Steering Committees should give a directive that verification of service records and verification of claims should begin at once without involving at this stage acceptance of liability for payment. This was the only method of expediting settlement in regard to such matters. If it were made clear that verification did not involve liability, one factor in both countries which has been delaying verification would disappear. Mr. Rangachari also suggested that claims on both sides should be reviewed to eliminate minor items. If this was done there would be nothing to prevent the two Governments from coming to a settlement in regard to payments.

Mr. Anwar Ali’s view was that in most of the cases clear decisions were taken at the time of partition and it was necessary to observe those decisions. He, however, agreed that within the framework of the decisions already reached verification and payment of claims should be expedited by both Provincial and Central Governments.

4. It was agreed that the interpretation of categories ‘A’, ‘B’ and ‘C’ under which all items in the Indian and Pakistani lists have been classified was the same on both sides although there was a difference in the language used.

5. It was agreed that any decision taken on items under categories ‘B’ and ‘C’ would be subject to confirmation in writing.
6. The extremely important and complicated nature of cases falling under “Demarcation of Indo – Pakistan Boundaries” was recognized by the two Committees. It was agreed that particular disputes in which joint surveys have already been made, and cases falling under the Bagge Award should be taken up at once by the two Central Governments. As regards boundary disputes relating to the Punjab it was agreed that each Steering Committee should conduct a quick review and communicate its views to the other on how best they could be settled in a speedy manner. To achieve this it would be necessary for each Steering Committee to hold a conference of its own provincial officials first and thereafter an officer each from the two Steering Committees assisted by the provincial experts could devise means of settlement.

7. Ghatti Kamale Wala. This is an uninhabited island in the river Sutlej above the Ferozepur headworks which is used sometimes for taking soundings of the river. The island is under dispute and it is now occupied by the armed forces of both India and Pakistan. As the Sutlej waters are rising, the troops from both sides are in a dangerous situation. It was proposed by the Indian Steering Committee that both sides should withdraw their troops and leave the island unoccupied until the dispute is finally settled. In the meantime if it is to be used for taking soundings by either side this could be done jointly. The Pakistan Steering Committee promised to send an early reply.

8. Bholaganj. It was agreed that the status quo would be restored to the extent that sub – Postmaster Aminullah or his substitute would get an appropriate long term visa indefinitely to enable him to remain or visit the post office building as caretaker. The possession of the post office building with all its contents intact including the cash would be restored to the Pakistan postal department. The post office would, however, cease to function as a post office pending the settlement of the boundary dispute, namely, the claim of Pakistan to sovereignty and possession of this area. The existing telegraph lines from this post office to Pakistan would remain intact and could be maintained but would not be used for any purpose except for transmission of departmental messages between the caretaker and his superiors in Pakistan. It was also agreed that the direct correspondence now taking place between the Government of Assam and the Government of East Bengal in regard to this case would cease and in future correspondence on the subject of this post office would be conducted between the two Central Governments. The possession of the post office building and its contents would continue to remain with the Government of Pakistan.

9. The Indian list was gone through and while it was decided that in regard to all the items therein negotiations by the Ministries concerned should begin immediately, a special effort should be made for the settlement of item No. 35 therein, namely, the arrest of 12 Indian police constables of the Rohri Police station in Rajasthan. The Pakistan Steering Committee promised to consult the Ministry of the Interior and come to an early decision in regard to this matter. Mr. Tyabji pressed that the negotiations which had started between the two Refugee Ministers should be expedited and an early official conference should be held to discuss this matter as had already been suggested by the Government of India in a recent written communication.

10. Mr. Tyabji also enquired whether pending the conclusion of a regular Extradition Treaty for extradition of criminals from both countries, an understanding could be arrived at to hand over each other’s escaped criminals unofficially. Mr. Hilaly expressed grave doubts as to whether it was proper to act in this way but promised that the matter would be examined.

11. The following points were specifically raised by the Indian Steering Committee in addition to those items from the original Indian list on which the Indian Ministries concerned have already made references to their opposite numbers:

(a) Exchange of enclaves.

(b) Settlement of the claims of India and Pakistan to the Embassy properties situated in Kabul, Kathmandu, etc.

(c) Remittance to India of the assets of the Indian Hockey Federation held by the Imperial Bank of India, Lahore (Rs.14, 000/-).

In regard to (a) it was explained that the matter was under the active consideration of the Government of Pakistan and it was hoped that a settlement could take place simultaneously with the four boundary disputes in East Bengal already adjudicated upon by the Bagge Tribunal.

It was agreed that (b) might be taken up immediately by the two Steering Committees.

The Pakistan Steering Committee promised to enquire and settle the matter referred to in (c) on receipt of a reference from India.

1. The various items on the Pakistan list were taken up. It was agreed that negotiations should begin between the concerned Ministries of the two Governments in regard to all items immediately and in addition the following special action should be taken.

(a) In respect of the transfer of service records under item 2, the Indian Steering Committee suggested that these should all be collected by the Central Governments concerned and then exchanged en bloc. This arrangement would not apply to the two Punjab's and the two Bengals and Assam which could continue to exchange them direct with each other.

(b) As regards the supply of other Government records, gazette notifications and indexes (item 17) etc., it was agreed that the Pakistan record finding organization at New Delhi should be revived.

(c) The division of libraries and archives (item 17) in accordance with the decision of the Partition Council should be pursued by Ministries concerned by arranging a delegation to visit India immediately.

(d) In regard to various financial items on the Pakistan list as between the two Central Governments, the Indian Steering Committee stated that India desired an overall settlement of all financial issues arising out of the partition, by the adjustment of the debt, as in its opinion this was the only practicable method at present considering that almost six years had elapsed since the partition. In particular, they desired that payments due to the nationals of each Government should be made after the verification of claims on an agreed basis, by the Governments concerned and adjusted through the debt settlement. No Government should at this stage be required to pay the nationals of the other.
The view of the Pakistan Steering Committee was that in regard to financial issues it was necessary that the decisions taken at the time of partition should be adhered to. Any departure from these decisions would substantially alter the basis on which the various agreements were reached. Pakistan was equally anxious for a settlement of the financial issues but in doing so it was important that agreements already reached should be implemented in point of time.

(e) In regard to item 9 it was agreed that in respect of the prize money to be divided between various Governments, the two Steering Committees should call for the papers concerned and endeavour to arrive at a settlement.

(f) In connection with item 12 the Indian Steering Committee requested information about Capt. Balbir Singh and Balbir Jagdish.

(g) In regard to item 15 (iii) the claim could be settled if Pakistan would return the Auster aircraft detained in Lahore.

(h) There would be no difficulty about supplying the information required under item 17 if Pakistan sent an officer to Delhi.

(i) In regard to claims of third parties (contractors, etc.) including claims for property requisitioned in East Bengal in war time, the view of the Pakistan Steering Committee was that along with the verification of claims, it was necessary to establish a procedure for payment to the parties concerned. In their view the real objective was to secure expeditious payments and it was accordingly necessary not only that the claims should be verified urgently but also that the Governments responsible for making these payments should agree upon a procedure for expeditious payments. The Indian Steering Committee, however, felt that the process of verification of claims should be expedited in the first instance as in their view this was the only means for establishing the correctness of claims. The question of the responsibility for payments could be settled later. It was agreed that this item should be separately discussed between the representatives of Finance Ministries of the two Governments.

(j) Items listed under 39 & 40 could only be discussed by the two Prime Ministers.

(k) The item under 42 could be taken up by the two Steering Committees.

(l) The Indian Steering Committee would do its best to endeavour to comply with the request under item 43.
(m) Item 55 on Pakistan list was amended to read as follows: “Implementation of paras 3 & 4 of Section 1 of the Delhi Agreement of 1950”. Indian had already written suggesting resumption of the meetings of the Indo – Pakistan Information Consultative Committee.

(n) Item 64. In regard to the outstanding financial issues between the two Punjab’s, the two Bengals, Assam and East Bengal, it was agreed that the Partition or Separation Councils concerned should be asked to meet immediately and complete the financial settlement arising out of the Partition. The Indian Steering Committee stressed that the final settlement in all these three cases should be included in the overall settlement between the two Countries. The matter was left for further discussion at a later stage.

2. The following decisions were also taken: -

(a) Current post partition transactions should be settled as quickly as possible. The periodical settlements of these transactions which had ceased for some time, should be resumed from an agreed date in future, for example, 1st September 1953. The respective Auditors – General should be consulted about this matter immediately and the other Government informed of the decision.

(b) All communication addressed by the Ministries of one Government to the Ministries of the other Government in respect of matters within the purview of the – Steering Committees should be sent in triplicate.

Karachi, July 25, 1953.

I began by referring to the long agendas prepared by the Steering Committees*. I said that many of the points mentioned there, though important in themselves, really flowed from other decisions that might be taken. Some of these matters would necessarily have to be discussed and worked out in detail by our respective officials. But it would be necessary for us, that is, the two PMs, to give a clear indication of the policy and the lines to be pursued.

I referred to the evacuee property problem and to the suggestion I had made that Shri Mehr Chand Khanna should come here to discuss it. I said that it was hardly possible for us to go into details, as this was a complicated matter with five years’ history behind it. Various proposals had been made by us from time to time, but there had been no common agreement about them and hence everything had continued in a suspended state. This was unfortunate as vast numbers of people, both in India and Pakistan, were personally interested in evacuee properties. If we could settle this problem, or at any rate the lines of settlement, that will go a long way in promoting better relations between India and Pakistan as well as in giving relief to large numbers of refugees in both countries. These refugees had been the principal cause of bitterness between the two countries. Wherever refugees had gone, they had been a source of infection. The settlement of this problem was, therefore, necessary not only from the humanitarian but from the political point of view.

I gave a brief account of some of the proposals we had made. I referred to the three classes of property:

1. Land.
2. Immovable urban property.
3. Movables.

I pointed out that the suggestion made to allow people to exchange properties would not be fair to the large numbers of evacuees who are interested in the common pool. Also that delay in deciding about this urban property was harmful as these houses were deteriorating rapidly. In fact, many had fallen during the recent rains. At the request of Pakistan we had postponed the proposed auction of some of these houses. But a decision had to be made soon so that we can proceed with our schemes for finalizing these matters.

* The steering committees of India and Pakistan, led by B.F.H.B. Tyabji, Secretary, Commonwealth Relations, MEA, Government of India, and J.A. Rahim, Foreign Secretary of Pakistan, respectively, met in Karachi from 14 to 16 July 1953 and prepared a long agenda for the Nehru-Mohammad Ali meeting.
PM of Pakistan generally agreed with what I said and was of the opinion that we should go ahead with this matter. He agreed that we should send for Shri Mehr Chand Khanna immediately so that we could discuss some of the principles with his help and, if possible, give directions for the future. Shri Mehr Chand Khanna can stay on after my departure for further talks and in order to work out details.

2. Canal Waters: We were agreed that this matter should be left to the working party which was functioning with the help of the International Bank and which was going to meet in September next. We hope that that would lead to an agreed approach.

I gave a brief account of the development of irrigation in the old Punjab and how it was intended to extend this to Eastern Punjab. In fact, it was with a view to this that the Bhakra-Nangal Project was evolved long before the Partition. So far as East Punjab was concerned, there was no alternative source of water supply and if we could not take advantage of the waters coming through the Bhakra-Nangal reservoir, etc., this meant that East Punjab as well as other areas, including parts of the Bikaner desert, could never develop. That was obviously a position which we could not agree to.

The only right approach was that both parties should do their utmost to find a maximum use for the waters of the Indus Valley. This should be enough and more than enough for both not only in the present but for the future. It would probably involve some engineering works construction, etc., to link up various canals and reservoirs. This was an engineering matter which was by no means difficult. So far as the financial aspect was concerned, the International Bank would probably help.

The legal aspects may be important and should, no doubt, be considered. But far more important was the human aspect. Both parties should proceed in a cooperative way to help the other as far as possible, realizing that East Punjab must have more water to develop and West Punjab must not be deprived of its essential needs.

PM of Pakistan asked if there may not be a 10 per cent reduction in water supply next year because of Bhakra-Nangal. He was under the impression that I had said so in London. I did not myself remember this, but I said that the Bhakra scheme will start functioning in about a year’s time and undoubtedly that will mean greater use of water on this side. Normally this will make no difference to the other side, but occasionally in a year of drought or for a short period there may be some difficulties. These could be provided for by engineering works suggested. I said that I had heard that some canals had already been made in Pakistan with this object in view. PM, Pakistan, said that something of the kind had been done.

I suggested, and PM, Pakistan, agreed, that we should instruct our representatives at the next meeting of the working party in Washington to try their best to find cooperative solution of the problem.

3. East Pakistan and West Bengal, etc: I said that fortunately this eastern zone had not been tied up with all kinds of intricate evacuee property laws, etc., as in the western zone. It was, therefore, easier to approach normality there. We should, of course, endeavour to bring about normality both in the east and the west. In the east there was no major obstacle, but there were many minor difficulties which could be got over if the right approach was made on both sides.

I referred to the passport and visa system and said that it should be possible to do away with the visa system or to make it much simpler than it was. We should encourage trade and communications.

I referred to the border areas between East Bengal and Assam and East Bengal and Tripura, which had suffered greatly because of the Partition, more especially in regard to the local trade. I said that we should put an end to these difficulties which were felt on both sides and facilitate normal trade across the frontier in these areas. PM, Pakistan, agreed.

The general approach in the eastern zone should be to bring back normality.

4. Enclaves: I mentioned the case of these enclaves. Mr Mohammad Ali said that his Government had agreed to exchange them. The only remaining difficulty was that West Bengal wanted some territory to make up for its loss by this exchange. Apparently, this amounted to about seven square miles. PM, Pakistan, said that it may be difficult to give a piece of territory like this. But he was prepared to consider giving some compensation.

I said that we might view it from another point of view also. Instead of one piece of territory to be handed over, an attempt might be made to adjust the frontier of West Bengal with East Bengal. This might involve minor rectifications of the border. Mr. Mohammad Ali said that this was worth considering. In any event, this question ought to be taken up soon and settled.

5. Gurdwaras in West Punjab: I referred to these gurdwaras and said that the principles governing them should obviously be that shrines and sacred places should be protected and full facilities given to people to go there. Mr. Mohammad Ali agreed. I said that there were large properties attached to these gurdwaras. I gave also some account of the way the British Government had dealt with this matter, the passage of the Gurdwara Act and the formation of the Shiromani Gurdwara Parbandhak Committee.

Mr Mohammad Ali said that, so far as he knew, these gurdwaras were well looked after and their properties had been kept separate. He asked me if the SGPC wanted to control them directly. I said that no doubt they would like to do so, but probably it would be better and more feasible to have a separate committee consisting of Sikhs for the purpose which could cooperate with the SGPC. It was decided to go into the details of this matter of the gurdwaras later.

6. Kashmir: Finally, the problem of Kashmir was referred to and Mr. Mohammad Ali said that in effect this was the only really difficult problem, all others could be easily adjusted. I agreed but added that every adjustment of other problems helped in creating an atmosphere for the solution of even this problem which was so tough.

I repeated what I had said in London that foreign interference should be kept out and every upset should be avoided. Else any attempt at a solution would create even more difficult problems.

I gave a brief history of Kashmir, going right back to the Greek period and after, how Kashmir had been a big cultural centre throughout this period and a place where there had been an astonishing amount of cooperation between different elements, Hindus, Muslims, etc.

I am leaving this note as it is without saying much more about our talks on Kashmir. In fact, there was not much more said as time was up. We shall continue these talks tomorrow morning.

 Nehru cabled from New Delhi to Mohan Sinha Mehta on 30 July, asking him to inform Mehr Chand Khanna that “we would like him to raise the question of gurdwaras and shrines during his meetings there. He should specially enquire about Gurdwara Bawli Sahib and Gurdwaras Chaubacha Sahib, Mozang and Shahid Ganj, all in Lahore city. Our information from our Deputy High Commissioner in Lahore is that Bawli Sahib has been razed to the ground by the Improvement Trust and the others are in a very dilapidated condition.”
I should like to express my very grateful thanks to the Governor-General, Prime Minister and others for their hospitality and friendly gesture, even more so, if I may say so, to you gentlemen and the people of Karachi for the extraordinary friendliness shown to me. I felt absolutely at home the moment I arrived here not only because I have very old friends here, but more so because of the very friendly atmosphere that surrounded all the places I went. People have been extraordinarily kind and gracious to me and I have been moving in a general atmosphere of friendliness here, which I cannot take merely as an expression of personal friendliness for me, although it is something of that also, but just something more. I think and I feel the ties of friendliness between the two countries have grown closer and closer.

I am sure that those feelings will be reciprocated in India, so that when we are considering our mutual problems this extraordinarily helpful atmosphere of friendliness in the two countries—which is something which I do not think existed to this degree during the last five years or so—will be helpful. This atmosphere itself is much more important than any minor or major decision which we may arrive at. This is a basic thing out of which decisions come, and we have been impressed by this change which has taken place in the two countries. Those horrors that took place after Partition created a barrier between the two countries of unfriendliness, frustration, fear, and even, to some extent, hatred. It was not difficult to understand all that. It was the suffering which the people had gone through and yet it was very great because of the consequences.

When we deal with any particular problem it is very difficult to come to grip with it because of imponderable factors like suspicion, fear and dislike. If you look at the world as a whole, there are major problems all over—they are in the Far East and they are in Europe; everywhere there are problems. Statesmen meet and talk about a particular subject. But how are they to deal with something which is imponderable? They try to change that atmosphere.

Coming to India and Pakistan, we have had this imponderable atmosphere of fear and suspicion. Many in India and many in Pakistan have had fear and suspicion. It is, therefore, a matter of deep gratification for me that that vicious atmosphere has now largely gone. That is a very good omen for anything further that we might do.

Now, about the questions that you have asked me. You will appreciate, gentlemen, that it is not particularly easy for me at this stage, when we are carrying on our talks, to enter into details of those talks, to tell you exactly what we have been discussing, what are our difficulties and so on and so forth. That would not help at all. So I cannot go into details.

I have already referred to this atmosphere of friendliness, which means also a desire to do one's utmost to remove the cause of unfriendliness or suspicion between the two people. I can tell you that the Prime Minister of Pakistan and I have been actuated by that desire. We have been working towards that end not merely because we are influenced by this atmosphere but because we are influenced with certain basic facts which cannot change even though people's feelings may change. There is the basic fact of geography. There we are: two countries adjoining each other. They inevitably adjoin each other whether we like it or not. There it is. It is geography.

Second: It is the fact of history. History: whether you take it in terms of hundreds of years; whether you take it in terms of the last generation; twenty years; thirty years, during which we struggled for our national freedom and independence.
People in Pakistan and India jointly struggled and jointly suffered for it. These are the major things that great people cannot in one day forget. It is not something which belongs to the past alone. These are basic and common features that are in our background and in our culture and in our language and in hundred other things.

The biggest test of it is that suppose some Indians and some Pakistanis go to another country anywhere in Europe or America. They may have some political arguments between them, if they want to argue! But leaving that political argument aside, they meet in foreign countries as people akin to each other.
They talk to each other in their own language; they discuss problems; they discuss their common friends and so on and so forth. They are nearer to each other than the nationals of any two countries can be. They may sometimes quarrel about political matters but then they have had common sufferings and culture and the like.

So, because of geography, in a sense, certain other factors arise: economic factors—trade and commerce, etc. Normally trade is influenced by geography unless we wish to twist it for political reasons. So, all these factors inevitably bring Pakistan and India nearer to one another. They cannot help it. They may occasionally, because of resentment or anger, do something to injure the other party but that is a temporary thing. But the basic thing is that they are there.
The basic thing is hundreds and hundreds of years of living together—quarrelling together, if you like, but still together. Now, because of these basic factors one has inevitably to function together whether you look at it from the long-term view or from short-term view.
Today we are tied with problems which are not basic. These are the outcome of Partition and what happened afterwards. These are temporary problems. The basic problems of India and Pakistan are essentially similar: development of industries; raising the standard of the people and generally to create more wealth in these countries by productive effort and to see to it that the wealth so created is properly distributed; that it does not go into a few hands: it does not make the rich richer and the poor poorer. These are the basic things and we stand more or less on the same footing in regard to them. India is slightly more industrial; Pakistan undoubtedly will develop.

In treading this path it is obvious that we can help each other and we can also hinder each other. Unless we are so immature and so selfish just to do things through sheer spite, regardless of consequences, we should realize that anything done to injure the other country reacts and injures our own country. If you look back the last five or six years and notice the story of relations between India and Pakistan you will find that attempts either by India or by Pakistan to do something which might injure the other country acted as a boomerang; it injured the first country, because the things are so interconnected.

Whether you consider this question historically, culturally, geographically—sentimentally, if you like—and strictly on a practical level, and if I may say so, from the opportunist level, you will come to the conclusion that it is necessary and essential for there being the greatest measure of cooperation between the two countries. This is to our mutual advantage and there is nothing which comes in their way because the national interests of one country are not opposed to the national interests of the other country. I need not give instances. In Asia and Europe the instances are there. The national interest of India and the national interest of Pakistan do not basically come against one another. If I may say so, the questions which we are discussing, they are not basic. They are important but not basic.

Situated as we are, any intelligent person can only work towards improving that relationship and going towards greater measure of cooperation. Many people both in India and Pakistan always realize that. Unfortunately, there are also many others who prejudice our passions in realizing that. Therefore, they work in a different direction. But they can ultimately be prevailed upon. If my analysis is correct, then this policy of theirs is opposed to the basic interests of the two countries. So that is my approach and I feel sure it is also the approach of Pakistan. So I say the approach to problems should be based on a large measure of understanding, and I am sure there are a vast number of people both in Pakistan and India who are earnestly creating goodwill and mutual understanding between the two countries. It is true there are other people also who may be called rather small or narrow-minded, who get excited at small things and forget big things and, therefore, come in the way of development of this cooperative working in the two countries.

So, I tell you, gentlemen of the Press, that it does not serve any good purpose to spread ill will. We must discourage it and, on the other hand, promote goodwill. We must inculcate the spirit of goodwill and mutual understanding and integrate all forces which may create a friendly atmosphere between the two countries and discourage all activities aimed at producing hate and dislike for each other. That is, to my mind, the basic approach.

Here, I might say that it is not quite proper for me to discuss details of the problems we are discussing. Many of you are obviously interested in the Kashmir problem, which, of course, during the last five or six years has become an old problem and is still more and more intricate and complicated—not that there have been any basic changes, but because when other factors come in, a new situation arises and one thing overlaps the other. So it becomes complicated. When we have to deal with a problem, we have to see that it is dispassionately and objectively considered; because it has become tied up to the people’s passions and when the people’s passions are aroused, then it becomes more difficult, as they do not use logic in solving it. Reactions from our side are followed by the other side, resulting in distrust and ill will. The obvious thing is that things are not understood in their true perspective. So in understanding a problem—obviously an intricate and difficult problem—past background should not come in our way and one has to be very careful that in every step that one has to take one must avoid making it further complicated. That is most important, gentlemen, not only in this connection but in every problem that you may be confronted with, logically speaking.

We are in the habit of—and for that matter the world is—trying to solve a problem, and afterwards producing a dozen more difficult problems. We have had two world wars, which were fought with the object of ending war and to establish democracy. On the one side, there were tremendous victories as far as military goes, and on the other, there was complete defeat. Very soon after the victory and defeat, the world was faced with problems which were far from solution. They have become more difficult. So it is not enough to consider a problem in an academic or debating society way. We have to consider its inter-relationship to all kinds of other problems and the consequences of every step, so that we may not be faced with fresh problems. One has to face all this complex situation in its various aspects in a calm and dispassionate atmosphere.

Now, you have asked me about the United Nations’ part in tackling the Kashmir problem. The United Nations, of course, had a fair go in this matter for the last five years. I am not going to argue as to whose fault it is, but the fact is that having had a fair go, it has not succeeded. Other people and other countries have been rather too generous with their advice, but that has not brought forth any remarkable results. Now, because of this, as well as because of other reasons, one feels, without any disrespect to the United Nations and other countries, that it would have been slightly better if we had dealt with the problem ourselves directly, without bringing others into the picture.

We have got minor as well as major problems in India and Pakistan. Minor problems, of course, will go on continually between the two countries and they can and will be solved mutually. Of the major problems, one might say, there is the Kashmir problem. Then there is refugee evacuee property business, which is also a major problem for obvious reasons, because it affects millions and millions of people, and anything which affects hundreds of thousands or millions of people is a major problem. It affects their future; it affects more directly their personal life than any other problem.

Then there is, as you know, the canal waters problem. There is also the general problem of the eastern Pakistan zone, because you will remember that that part has been dealt with differently from West Pakistan and the rest of India. Here on the western side you have all kinds of remarkable laws and legislation which came into existence long ago. I do not want here to trace their legal history, but unfortunately in the eastern zone there is no such thing. So the situation there being what it is, has been tackled differently in the past and ought to be tackled in a different manner. In tackling one single major problem, there are a number of minor difficulties which come in our way and give us trouble. They are obviously capable of solution if our minds are directed properly. A large number of people living on both sides of the border in East Pakistan and West Bengal, Assam, Tripura, etc., have been suffering tremendously. Those things can be dealt with in other ways.

Our objective should be everywhere in India and Pakistan to deter from causing injury to the feelings of the other side and to create amiable conditions, promote goodwill and discourage ill will. It is not easy to get rid of these things by a stroke of the pen, because these very laws and other conditions have produced an intricate relationship in the last five years. So we cannot just wipe out everything in just five years, but our objective should, in my thinking, be a return to normality, as two independent friendly nations. That should be our aim and we should develop it, and I think if we try, we can, not suddenly, but step by step, go back to this normality.

I have just mentioned that both in Pakistan and in India the evacuee property laws are extraordinary and I do not know if they are prevalent anywhere else in the world, especially of this particular type. I do not like them. I would like to get rid of them, but I cannot isolate them from other factors which are all tied up. Therefore, the simple way of dealing with a problem is to go step by step in its solution. It may not be a cent per cent solution, but if we know the right approach and we take a few steps regularly in that direction, success can come ultimately.

As regards the canal waters, we know that this matter has been referred to a working party of engineers. It was first referred to the International Bank. They have been carrying on their work for the last eighteen months. They have held various meetings. They are going to meet in September and I hope that will yield substantial results as to how to proceed. Because of this, there is no great necessity at this stage for us to go into details. Mr. Mohammad Ali and I discussed it at times and both of us agreed that it should be dealt with in a proper way which would yield results. But remember, that in this canal waters business, it does no good either to India or Pakistan to be cross with each other.

Nobody is going to put an end to all your schemes of development. You might say that it is a national conflict—national conflict of this type will be solved by finding some solution or by some legal methods, leaving out war, of course. The first thing is to know the quantity of water: how much is available. Is it enough or is it not enough? It is said that water in the Indus basin is only used either by India or by Pakistan to a very limited extent, and the rest goes to the sea. So it has become an engineering problem: how to reach water, by dams or by earthwork, whatever it may be. Obviously neither Pakistan nor India is going to accept anything which means the stopping of the development programmes. After all, you have to satisfy the needs of both the countries. Some formula is going to be evolved by the parties which are working on it very shortly. Finances required are not of stupendous magnitude and anyhow it is a matter for loans, etc. However, the International Bank will also be helpful.

There are other outstanding issues such as gurdwaras or shrines of Sikhs. They are naturally greatly excited on this account because their gurdwaras are in Pakistan. Well, it is a matter of principle. If both Pakistan and India agree that shrines, etc., should be preserved and facilities should be given to the visitors of such shrines or gurdwaras, then we will solve this problem. I am quite sure that the Government of Pakistan will look into this matter more thoroughly. I entirely agree with the principle of the preservation of mosques in the same manner.

Some questions have been asked about Junagadh and Hyderabad. All I can say is that you had been sleeping for so many years. I have forgotten this question. There is no such question; there is no such problem these days.

There is another very interesting question about the “no war” declaration. You will remember that I suggested to your late Prime Minister Liaquat Ali Khan that such a declaration is necessary. You have seen the effect of “no war” declaration in Europe, etc. The real object of such a declaration is to remove the sense of fear and suspicion.
India has avoided any relations with other countries which might have any deep political or military significance. We have not aligned ourselves with any group of nations. There is no argument for that. We feel that from the short and long range points of view of peace as well as from the national point of view, it is not desirable for us to align ourselves with any power bloc. However, naturally from the world point of view, I would like other countries to have the same policy not because it strengthens me but because it increases the area where war is unlikely. It increases the area which exercises a certain influence against war.

I do not imagine that India has got so much influence in world affairs that it can prevent any war or any catastrophe or any happenings. The world is too big. There are great, powerful countries which can decide the fate of the world. But every country, big or small, at the same time can make a little difference and that difference counts. I feel that such a declaration would be very helpful in creating an atmosphere of less fear and suspicion with each other. With any such declaration and assurance that may be possible in future, without any commitments, I can say it may be possible for us to confer together, to consult each other with regard to international matters, foreign affairs; if necessary, domestic matters.

We consult each other in the United Nations. There is an Arab-Asian Group which is now called Asian-African Group. The point is this that a number of countries in Asia and Africa consult together and function together although each country is independent. Our functions are friendly and we constantly consult each other about international affairs. I am sure the Government of Pakistan will see that we should, much more frequently, consult each other in our affairs, about our economic policies, trade policies and even domestic policies, so that the area of mutual consultations and cooperation should grow without the slightest compulsion on either side.

There are some suspicions in the minds of some people that India has some nefarious designs on the independence of Pakistan. Now, that is completely without any foundation. You cannot stop half-witted persons in India saying anything. An individual may say anything but you can yourself, without any hesitation, say that is absurd, on the very face of it. It is neither good for India nor for Pakistan. So we proceed on the basis of recognizing each country’s independence, integrity and respectability. It is desirable to recognize the necessity of cooperating in as large a field as possible. That must help us to remove suspicions and fears.

Someone mentioned about political prisoners in Pakistan and India. I would like to know what he meant by that. I cannot speak for Pakistan, obviously. In India I do not know whom you may call political prisoners. Normally we call people detained without trial as political prisoners. Ordinary prisoners have to go before a court of law for trial under regular rules of law. They are tried for their offences. We have in India a Detention Act but it is extremely difficult to use it. At the utmost, the maximum detention that can be put in practice is one year. You cannot go beyond that. And within a month or two, the case of the person who is detained has to go up to the High Court judges, not as a case but for their opinion. If they say, “No, there is no ground for detention”, out he goes. Not many people are therefore detained in India now. What happens is that sometimes, at the time of trouble, we may detain persons for a week or a fortnight but after that, they go out. Beyond this, the only case is that of persons who are convicted after normal procedure and appeal, etc. That is a matter of individuals and no question of political prisoners as such arises.

Now, someone asked me about suggestions regarding joint defence. In a sense, you might have observed that I have suggested something—though not joint defence, of course—which is consultation in international matters without binding down anybody. Now, defence and foreign policy are closely allied. You cannot separate them even if you want to. If the general foreign policy of two countries is similar, they automatically, without any alliance or agreement, think even in defence matters in common terms—I mean provided their foreign policy is allied.

There is another way, another aspect of this question. Now, in the world today—I am stating facts and not criticizing—large organizations have grown up for what is called mutual defence: in Western Europe, for instance, the community of western world called North Atlantic Community, or the ANZUS. It is open for any country to have such organizations. But, if I may say so, with all respect to them, my own approach to this question is without creating any hostile alliance. I do not deny the necessity of any country or group of countries protecting themselves or taking steps to protect themselves against possible danger. They may do so by all means.

At the same time again and again what a country should decide is, whether its policy generally leads towards promoting a peace or war atmosphere? Now, sometimes I find very little difference; people talk of defence whether it is defence or something else. In a specific case, one country calls it defence and the other country says that this defence is aimed against it. The other country also talks about defence and takes some other measures. So they go on mounting armaments. If you see the world today, tremendous armament is going on. I do not want to be a party to any alliance of a military type with any country so that similar other alignments may be created. The moment such an alliance is done with another country, the question inevitably arises against whom that alliance is directed? It is not in the air absolutely. It is directed against some possible enemy. Now, the moment you do that, you are already taking a position that another country is the enemy. Now, when persons talk about joint defence, if that means any kind of military alliance, it goes against our policy of having any military alliance with any country. But understandings are a different matter. Understanding in approaches and in consultation are always welcome.

Something was said about visas. Already so far we have tried to lessen many early difficulties about passport system, as much as possible. Wherever possible, we will do away with the visa system. It is a matter of common discussion with us.

0122. Joint Communiqué issued by Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru and Pakistan Prime Minister Mohammad Ali at the conclusion of their talks.

The Prime Ministers of Pakistan and India held several meetings on July 25, 26 and 27 and discussed at some length various problems affecting Pakistan and India. These talks were frank and cordial and both the Prime Ministers were actuated by the desire to solve the problems outstanding between the two countries and to promote their cooperation in matters of common interest.

Among the subjects discussed were Kashmir, canal waters, evacuee and trust properties and shrines, problems between East Pakistan and West Bengal and Pakistan enclaves in Cooch-Behar and Cooch-Behar enclaves in East Pakistan.

In regard to evacuee and trust property issues, the Principal Adviser of the Government of India in this matter and senior officers were sent for from New Delhi. They have arrived and have started a detailed discussion of the various issues involved with the officers of the Pakistan Government with a view to finding a satisfactory solution to them.

As regards Cooch-Behar enclaves, it was agreed that these should be exchanged. The terms and conditions of such exchange are to be considered further.

During the talks the question of restriction of travel and trade between the two countries also came up for consideration. It was agreed that these restrictions should, as far as possible, be removed or minimized. This matter will be examined further.

The major part of the Prime Ministers’ meeting was devoted to a discussion of the Kashmir dispute which was examined in all its aspects. These talks were necessarily of a preliminary character. They have helped in a clearer understanding of each other’s point of view, of the issues involved and of the difficulties that stand in the way of a settlement. They have prepared the ground for further talks which the Prime Ministers expect to resume in New Delhi in the near future.

The Prime Ministers are agreed that the independence and integrity of the two countries must be fully respected, each country having full freedom to follow the policy of its choice in domestic as well as in international affairs.

At the same time, the Prime Ministers are convinced that the interests of both countries demand the largest possible measure of cooperation between them and that, therefore, every effort should be made not only to resolve the existing Indo-Pakistan disputes, but also to promote goodwill and friendship between the two countries. They consider this essential to progress in both countries and to the promotion of welfare of the common man, which is their primary concern. It is hoped that the Prime Minister of Pakistan will visit New Delhi in the near future to continue these talks.

0123. Letter of Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru to Governor – General of Pakistan Ghulam Mohammed.

New Delhi, July 29, 1953.

My dear Governor-General,

I came back yesterday from Karachi* and I have been wanting to write to you since then, although writing a formal letter on such an occasion is a very inadequate way of expressing one’s feelings. So this is not a formal letter, but a very informal and rather personal note to tell you how deeply moved my sister and I were with your friendly and generous hospitality and all the affection that you showed us. I can truly say that I felt among friends and completely at home. The tragedies of the past few years seemed to fade away.

You need no assurance from me about my earnest desire to do everything in my power to remove every obstacle that comes in the way of true understanding and cooperation between India and Pakistan. Indeed, it would be a tragedy if this was not so. I feel convinced that we shall succeed, even though difficulties may come in our way.

I am moved, as you no doubt are moved, by personal considerations, but we are both also moved by national considerations. There can be no doubt that in this matter our national interests are one and that both countries prosper or not in the degree that they come nearer to each other. We have to contend against wrong and sometimes evil forces, but if we aim aright and pursue right causes, I have no doubt that we shall succeed.

I have brought back with me the happiest of memories from Karachi and I am deeply grateful to you.

Yours sincerely
Jawaharlal Nehru

* in a separate letter on the same day, Nehru also wrote to Prime Minister Mohammad Ali, conveying his gratitude to him and his wife, the Members of his Government, and “the warm-hearted people of Karachi,” and stated, “The overwhelming impression that I carried with me is of the goodwill and friendliness that I experienced there at all hands. I am exceedingly grateful to you and Begum Mohammad Ali not only for your hospitality, which was generous, but even more so for this atmosphere of friendliness that surrounded us. I am sure that if we function in this way and approach our problems in this manner we shall achieve success in this and in many other matters.”

New Delhi, July 29, 1953.

My dear Prime Minister,

In the course of our talks in Karachi, we discussed the question of the Cooch-Behar enclaves. You told me that you had decided that these should be exchanged. You mentioned, however, that the enclaves in Pakistan at present are somewhat bigger, from the point of view of territory, than the enclaves in India. The difference is really a small one and, according to what you told me, is about 7 square miles. Thus, if an exchange is made, Pakistan would get 7 square miles of additional territory. The West Bengal Government had suggested that this surplus area might be given to them somewhere else so as to make this exchange an even one. You told me that you would prefer giving some compensation for the surplus area.

I then suggested to you that it might be desirable to consider, in this connection, minor rectifications of the border which might be advantageous both to India and Pakistan. You said that this could be enquired into.

This matter really relates to East Pakistan on the one side and West Bengal on the other. We agreed that the proper course to adopt would be for representatives of East Pakistan and West Bengal to meet and consider this question and make their recommendations to the respective Governments. If they agree, there would be no difficulty in the Indian and Pakistan Governments also agreeing.

I suggest, therefore, that a conference might be arranged in Calcutta to consider this question. This would consist of representatives of West Bengal and East Pakistan Governments and also, if necessary, some representatives of the two Central Governments.

There were a number of other matters relating to the Eastern Zone comprising East Pakistan, West Bengal, Assam and Tripura, which we also discussed. These related to travel facilities and visas, trade, more especially border trade, and other matters relating to that area. These could also be considered conveniently at a conference in Calcutta. But that conference should consist of, apart from those mentioned above, representatives of Assam and Tripura also.

Perhaps the first conference could extend itself and deal with these other problems later. I should like your views on this matter.

So far as the evacuee property and like questions are concerned, they are being dealt with at present by our representatives in Karachi. I hope that these discussions will yield satisfactory results. They will include, I hope, questions of gurdwaras and other shrines.

There is one matter to which no reference was made in our talks. This was in regard to the recovery of abducted women in both countries. This recovery work has been one of the satisfactory instances of cooperation between the two countries. It has been rightly considered on a human and social level and not the political level. I hope we will continue this work at least for some time to come. I write this because I find that there is some misconception in this matter and it has been thought that we might discontinue this work. I do not think the time for that has come yet.

One important matter which we did not mention at all relates to our financial accounting. On the one hand, Pakistan owes India certain sums annually for the repayment of debt. On the other hand, India owes some sums to Pakistan. There have been some talks about this previously between representatives of our respective Finance Ministries. I think that it would be desirable to finalize these questions. This will have to be done at a fairly high level, preferably by the Finance Ministers. I understand that your Finance Minister is likely to come here sometime in September for a Colombo Plan meeting. If so, he could deal with these matters then or preferably if he came a little earlier. Anyhow, we shall be glad to have him here for these talks at any time.

I have mentioned a number of matters in this letter for your consideration. I shall be glad if you will indicate to me what you think about the suggestions I have made.

Yours sincerely

Jawaharlal Nehru
0125. Press Conference of Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru.

New Delhi, July 30, 1953.

Jawaharlal Nehru: Let us begin with my visit to Karachi although I have said a good deal about it, chiefly at my Press conference in Karachi itself. As I have said, that visit was remarkable for the atmosphere, the friendly atmosphere, that prevailed there. And that, I think, is really a much bigger thing than perhaps many people imagine becomes simpler if the approach is a friendly and informal one rather than a rigid and formal one.

Now, take evacuee property. I do not know at the present moment what the results of the talks that are going on there in Karachi in regard to evacuee property will be, but I do know that for the first time probably in the last few years, these talks are taking place in a different way, not in a formal, rigid way, arguing across the table, but in a friendly way, trying to understand the problem and to find a solution. Maybe, the solution, the entire solution, will not be found suddenly but it is a different way of approach, and, if I may say so, that applies to every problem that we discuss.

It was being much too over-optimistic to think that suddenly every problem would be solved by our meeting together, but something which is very important was this that we discussed many of our important problems in a much better way than had been done before. Some minor problems were solved; some major problems are being tackled more effectively, while some other major problems have not been solved. Nevertheless I will say that we are nearer the solution of every problem because of this approach. That is the background.

Now, it is not profitable or indeed proper for me to go into details as to what my talks with Mr. Mohammad Ali were, say, in regard to Kashmir or in regard to any other problem. It is not desirable to talk about matters discussed in private talks otherwise they lose that frankness and flexibility which one can give them in private. So you must not expect me to go into detail about these matters. Such information as I can give, I will gladly give you.

I should like to repeat what I have said elsewhere, to express my gratitude to the Pakistan Governor-General, the Prime Minister, and the rest of the Government for the very gracious hospitality they extended to all of us. But more particularly, it was very moving for me to receive the popular welcome that I received there. Many people had come from outside Karachi for the purpose—hundreds of them—and we are grateful to them. As I said there, I felt in Karachi completely at home. The fact is that apart from certain political controversies that we have between us, we are very near to each other. Hundreds of persons I met there were my colleagues in India. There are thousands of persons in India and Pakistan who have a brother, a sister or a father not only in the other country but possibly in the governmental services of the other country.

So all these are innumerable bonds. Then there is the very deep bond of language. We talked to each other in a language which belongs to both of us, not in a third language. If I talk to Mr Mohammad Ali or the Governor-General, it is mostly in our language, not in any other. It had a tremendous advantage and I had no feeling of being in a strange country or in an alien country. I do not know if you wish to ask me more questions about this matter, otherwise I will go on to Korea and the Political Conference, etc.

Question: In today’s papers are Mr. Mohammad Ali’s remarks about Kashmir and about your talks at Karachi. He is less optimistic now that the Kashmir problem may be solved within one year. Is this losing heart or really becoming pessimistic?

JN: A year is a long way off. Why lose heart?

Q: Another point he has mentioned is that, in all probability, these agreements and other problems will be dependent on Kashmir. Is that your impression?

JN: That is not my impression and in fact we are going ahead with other problems. The common feature which affects all problems, the connecting link, is the manner of approach, the friendly manner of approach. If the approach is one full of suspicion, well, it affects all problems and difficulties come in the way. If the approach is in a friendly way we can go ahead. And so it happens that every little step that we take and succeed, that helps in the second step. That is one particular way of looking at it. Every problem solved helps in the solution of the second and the third problem. That I think is perhaps a better way of looking at it than to expect everything to be solved suddenly. It is true that in almost every problem that we discussed, big or small, we made very good progress. I cannot say if any problem was solved. It requires further consideration at official level or some other level. We could not discuss some matters in detail but our general approach was similar.

You have heard about these Cooch-Behar enclaves, which was not a major problem but which has been hanging for some time. Well, we practically solved it subject to certain details being worked out. It is proposed now to hold a conference probably in Calcutta because the East Pakistan and West Bengal Governments are chiefly concerned with these matters. They can meet there and not only discuss this Cooch-Behar matter but other matters affecting what is called the Eastern Zone and go ahead with them. Any difficulties that arise may be referred to the Prime Ministers. Other matters too, Gurdwaras, shrines, etc., are being dealt with in Karachi now by our team discussing evacuee property. You will see, if I may say so, the astonishing progress that was made in these talks in regard to the actual subjects dealt with but the most satisfactory feature was the approach, the friendly approach, and the desire to find satisfactory solutions.

Now, it is true that so far as Kashmir was concerned, we did not find a full-fledged solution nor, frankly, could we suddenly expect one, however earnest our attempt. But even in regard to Kashmir I think our frank talks helped a great deal in our understanding each other's position and therefore, if I may say so, helped towards the solution. Quite a good deal has been accomplished and the way opened out for progress and accomplishment in a number of directions.

You refer to Mr. Mohammad Ali's statement. That does not directly affect Indo-Pakistan problems. Indirectly it might. For instance, I believe Mr. Mohammad Ali has referred to India's foreign policy and pointed out that that was not exactly the policy of Pakistan*. Well, you will remember the proposal made about joint defence. Defence has no meaning except in relation to foreign policy. Also, so far as we are concerned, we have thus far avoided—and we hope to avoid—anymilitary alliance of any kind because even in an alliance for defence, it might have another character which is looked upon by others as not being of defence. Also, the question arises, in having alliances, exactly against whom you have the alliance, or is it just in the air? All these questions arise which are dependent on the foreign policy we pursue.

What I suggested to Mr. Mohammad Ali, and what to some extent he has accepted, was that we should naturally retain complete freedom in our foreign or domestic policies but that we might consult each other in regard to important matters of policy. That will be helpful and yet it would leave each party free to carry out any policy it chose.

Q: Before you proceed further, Sir, some authoritative word from you on the current situation in Kashmir might be helpful since a series of rumours are in the air, which do not necessarily find their way into print but which are of a very disturbing character,

JN: Well, I think your question is completely justified. There is an amount of confusion at the moment in regard to—I won’t call it the internal situation of Kashmir—but in regard to the expressions of opinion by leading personalities

* Mohammad Ali was asked at his Press Conference on 29 July how it would be possible for Pakistan to discuss matters of foreign policy with India, since the latter had adopted an attitude of strict "neutrality". Mohammad Ali replied, "There is no obligation. It is not binding that there should be uniformity of policy." Replying to another question he said that the foreign policy of Pakistan was not identical with that of India.
in Kashmir which tend to produce this confusion. And, frankly, I am slightly confused myself. But I think if you look into the matter, apart from a lot of verbiage in it, the position is not different from what it was.

There is a feeling, naturally, of frustration in the minds of many there because of certain uncertainties and the rest, and this is given expression to in a variety of ways. The position so far as we are concerned about that—I can state it quite clearly—has been, throughout this period, that Kashmir by accession became a part of the Indian Union, but always we considered it as a special case. We never thought of it, because of various circumstances, as if it was any other State in India which was put into A or B or any other category. The reasons for that were not merely the fact that there were military operations in Kashmir or that the matter had been referred to the UN—those were reasons too—but there were other reasons which pertained chiefly to the whole geographical situation, the background, etc, in Kashmir which required this particular and special treatment. And that is our policy still, that is, to consider Jammu and Kashmir State as a special case requiring special treatment, as a part of the territory of the Union of India but with certain special considerations attached to it.

You will remember about the rather special position relating to Kashmir when the Republic came into existence and the new Constitution was finalized. It was somewhat indeterminate then. Even last year, when there were talks which resulted in what is called the Delhi Agreement, certain things were agreed to but always in the context of a special position for Kashmir. So that is the position so far as we are concerned about it.

Q: Before you left for Karachi it was stated in the Press communiqué that the talks in Karachi would be exploratory. How is the position now?

JN: I think you will find in the joint communiqué issued about these talks of the two Governments that these talks, most of these talks, have been of a preliminary nature. So you can weigh the words “exploratory” or “preliminary nature”, if you like. A talk is always exploratory because it explores avenues of a settlement, at every stage; till you arrive at a settlement, you are searching for the settlement.

Q: You have given us a very optimistic picture of your Karachi visit. Rather the other side of the shield was given in this morning’s Press. There is a report of Mr. Mohammad Ali giving an overall picture of the whole conversation that took place at Karachi where he is reported to have said that “the progress anticipated by me has not materialized.” Did he make any concrete suggestions to you which were turned down by India? What does he mean by that?
JN: These reports tend to emphasize something. I was just looking through a report. Here is the report. It says:

Mr. Mohammad Ali’s attention was drawn to the report of Mr. Nehru’s remarks in New Delhi that the problem was not nearer solution. Mr. Ali did not feel that way. What Mr. Nehru was reported to have said had not damped his enthusiasm. He was confident that both countries would go on making the best efforts to find a solution.

So it depends on the context and everything. It is clear we have not solved every problem. I think it is equally clear that we have gone a good way towards the solution of some problems and towards a fuller understanding of others, which is itself a way to solution. And if any report had appeared in the Dawn that I was pessimistic I do not think that report is justified. I think something I said at the airport was probably reported that way.

Q: In regard to joint defence you said, “Against whom is it going to be?” Then why should India or any other country have a defence at all?

JN: That is, if I may say so, a typical question which verges on what is called shastrarth, a metaphysical controversy.... It is quite a good question. The question was: if it is said that joint defence means defence against somebody, some aggressor, well, then, why have defence at all if you have no aggressor in view? Why have an Army, Navy and Air Force at all? I think there is a good deal of difference between the two. I think it will be a very good thing if a country was strong enough to give up entirely its defence apparatus. The strength would come from other sources—the capacity, nevertheless, of meeting any aggressor, any invader, and not allow him to come in, and be prepared to die in the attempt and let the whole country die. That kind of strength few countries possess. I am sure that would be the most effective way if we were strong enough, but that is rather pure theory, and people are not in any country yet adequately developed to that end. So the most one does is to make it difficult and very uncomfortable for an aggressor to think of invading.

Now, there are two types of defence. One is literally defence of your own country and your borders. The other is, what is perhaps not correctly called defence, defence outside your country. We are only concerned with defence of our country. Now, it is patent when we talk about defence that we are no match in terms of defence forces with the great countries of the world—obviously not, even apart from modern developments like the atom bomb. We have no atom bombs to throw about, or other modern weapons. So I may at once say and quite logically, when you don’t have them, you cannot beat an atom bomb. But there is a middle stage when your means of defence apparatus plus the will of the people to defend make it difficult for any outside party to think of invasion.
You may not be competent for going outside your country for warfare in a big way maybe, but you may be competent, very competent, in your own country to defend it by all kinds of ways which include very much the ways in which the people can join.

We do not think of the defence of India in terms of an army only. We think of the whole nation, man, woman and child, defending it if there is any invasion. So the whole conception is different. The man, woman and child cannot go outside India to defend it elsewhere, but they can in India, if only we tone it up, discipline it. But, when you go about making an alliance with other countries—to use the colloquial word, “ganging up” against others—it has a different interpretation, it has a different meaning.

Q: Have you given thought to Pakistan’s new foreign policy, as stated by Mr Mohammad Ali, of being a partisan to the Big Power struggle or conflict which is going on?

JN: Mr. Mohammad Ali has stated what was fairly well understood previously. So there was nothing new about what he stated.

Q: I heard over the radio last night that whereas India is neutral, Pakistan is definitely a partisan as far as this conflict is concerned.

JN: That has been the position for a long time past. There is nothing new about that except a clearer statement.

Q: Do you propose to associate the leaders of Kashmir directly in the future talks with the Pakistan Prime Minister?

JN: During the last five or six years, at every stage whenever Kashmir has been discussed in the United Nations or with the representatives of the UN, or with Mr Liaquat Ali Khan and others, we have always been in touch with the leaders of Kashmir and we have consulted them. In fact, usually there has been a representative of the Kashmir Government who was sent with the team to the UN or to Dr Graham. Always we have been in close touch with them because it is obvious that we cannot come to some conclusion over the heads of the people of Kashmir. It is for them to be consulted, to agree.

Q: Have you ever taken the trouble of consulting any non-official people from Jammu and Kashmir?

JN: I do not quite understand that. Governments consult Governments. If I go to England, I have non-official friends but my consultations are with the Ministers of the UK Government. I have plenty of contacts with Kashmir non-official friends. I know very well what their views are by privately meeting them, but I consult the Government of the State.
Q: There has been in existence a third party which has hindered solution of the Kashmir problem. Now that mutual negotiations have started between the Prime Ministers of India and Pakistan, would you like the Kashmir question to be withdrawn from the UN, if possible?

JN: That question was put to Mr. Mohammad Ali, and his answer is that unless the question has been discussed by both of us, no action was to be taken. I think that answer should for the moment suffice.

Q: What do you propose to do with the bronze head presented by Pakistan to you?

Answer: Presumably it will go to some museum. This head was made in November 1946 when I went to England. It was produced before Partition and was sent to Lahore and was there at the time of the Partition. Now they have been good enough to present it to me.

0126. Telegram from Pakistan Prime Minister Mohammad Ali to Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru.

Karachi, August 13, 1953.

Your message of August 11th was communicated to me by your High Commissioner yesterday.

2. You have expressed doubt about the wisdom of our meeting on 17th or 18th of August and would prefer that we meet on 5th or 6th September instead. You consider that a meeting earlier would be sudden and hurried and would not be conducted in a calm and dispassionate atmosphere, that our talks would under the circumstances be strained, not as friendly and co-operative as we both desire, and would thus be unlikely to yield any result.

3. I do not share your fears. A meeting on August 17th would not really be sudden as we would be meeting three weeks after your visit to Karachi and ten days after developments in Kashmir which have caused such grave misgivings in minds of our people as to outcome of our talks. Our meeting need not be hurried either, for I would be prepared to stay as long as may be necessary to ensure that we achieve positive results.

4. During our meeting in London and Karachi, we have, I think, covered enough ground to be able, when we meet, to get down at once to concrete proposals for a removal of the differences that have so far stood in the way of a settlement.

5. I am sure that, whatever the atmosphere in the country, both you and I are fully capable of discussing this problem calmly, dispassionately and in a friendly and co-operative manner whenever we should meet.

6. I have since received a further message from you intimating that you will be prepared to receive me at any time. I, therefore, propose to arrive in New Delhi on the 16th morning and would be prepared to stay there until the 20th or even longer if necessary. As I said to you in my last letter we must succeed because there is so much at stake that we must not fail.

New Delhi, August 17, 1953.

I had a two-hour talk with Mr. Mohammad Ali this afternoon. I began by saying that I was greatly distressed at the hysteria exhibited by the Press and others in Pakistan during the last few days over the Kashmir occurrences. I could understand a certain excitement, even some resentment, but what had actually taken place had amazed me and distressed me. Prominent people including Ministers and Governors had completely lost control of themselves and expressed themselves in a way which seemed to me deplorable. There was talk of jehad, etc. Khan Abdul Qayum Khan was present at yesterday’s meeting in Karachi where very strong speeches were made. Mr Firoze Khan Noon had also come out with wholly unbalanced statements. Chaudhuri Khaliq-uz-Zaman had talked about swords and horses of Islam being on the move.

2. I said that I had known Khaliq-uz-Zaman and Shuaib Qureshi for many years well and I had unfortunately come to the conclusion that they were wholly unbalanced and lived in some distant past. They had not got out of the late twenties.

3. With this background of hate and denouncement, it was not particularly easy to create the atmosphere for a friendly settlement which we all desired.

4. I referred to recent events in Kashmir and said that I felt unhappy about many things that had happened. Sheikh Abdullah was an old colleague, and to have to take action against him by detaining him hurt me. The situation in

Nehru complained to Mohammad Ali that Slogans demanding jehad and “Kashmir at all costs” were raised at a mass public meeting in Karachi on 16 August. The meeting, which was also attended by Abdul Qayum Khan, the Pakistan Minister for Food and Industries, passed a resolution calling upon the people of Pakistan to “join their Kashmiri brethren in their righteous cause and fight for freedom.” Firoz Khan Noon, Chief Minister of West Punjab, said in a public meeting in Lahore on 16 August, “The peace-loving Indian dove has again taken to bayonets in mowing down an innocent and peace-loving people.” He argued that the Partition of India had taken place after acceptance by the Congress of the two-nation theory, yet the Indian Government “went back on that international understanding between the two countries” by forcibly sending troops into “a predominantly Muslim country—Kashmir.” In a speech at Dhaka on 14 August, Khaliq-uz-Zaman, Governor of East Bengal, exhorted the people to “keep their swords shining and horses ready” to meet any future calamity. In a radio broadcast on 16 August, he said that the objective of carving out an independent country in order to serve Islam had bestirred the Muslims in undivided India and claimed that Pakistan had become “the light house in the ocean of Muslim world affairs defying...the canons of secularism, tribalism and provincialism.” Shuaib Qureshi, the Minister for Kashmir Affairs in Pakistan, in a speech at Rawalpindi on 11 August, assured all possible assistance to the people of Kashmir to ensure an unfettered expression of their will in the matter of the State’s accession.
Kashmir had been simmering for some months past. I had gone there before I went to England and found that internal conflict had reached a high pitch. This was resulting in instability, friction and the Government could hardly function. I had asked Sheikh Abdullah and others then to work together, and, at any rate, not to take any step which might create trouble till I came back from England and we could confer again together. When I came back, I wrote to him immediately asking him to come here, but he did not agree to do so. Meanwhile, the situation there became worse and worse and it became impossible for the Government to function as it was. The Executive of the National Conference was also split up, a great majority not agreeing with Sheikh Abdullah’s views.

5. Ultimately, I advised them that, if they could not pull on together in Government, they should declare their policy clearly and those who agreed with the majority view should carry on the Government. If Sheikh Abdullah had to leave Government because he represented a minority view, that could not be helped. Constitutional procedure should be adopted.

6. Some days later, events followed each other in quick succession and resulted in Sheikh Sahib’s arrest. I regretted this, but it was difficult for me to stop the course of events as the responsibility lay with the people in Kashmir. There were disturbances later and these had to be dealt with by the Government there. Otherwise, there would have been chaos and no Government could function in that way.

7. In Srinagar and the Valley, there were obviously two sets of people, one pro-India and the other pro-Pakistan. Most people, of course, were hardly political and only cared for their economic betterment. Then there were many people who looked up to Sheikh Abdullah particularly, and, as a consequence of his arrest, they naturally began to side with the anti-India elements, accusing India for what had happened. It was obvious that nobody wishing well to India could have deliberately liked these developments. But circumstances and events could not be governed and one step led to another.

8. I referred to the false and wholly exaggerated stories in the Pakistan Press about Indian Army and massacres of Muslims. Actually, so far as I knew, about 15 or one or two more persons had been killed by Police or Militia fire. This was regrettable, but, when riotous behaviour and violence was indulged in by a crowd, the Police had to take some action.

9. Mohammad Ali said he greatly regretted the hysterical attitude of the Press and some people in Pakistan. He had tried to check it but there were some people who were difficult to control. He referred specially to a Kashmiri woman by the name of Bhat who did a lot of mischief in this respect. He referred to Shuaib Qureshi also and said that he had himself come to the conclusion that he was not helpful at all and was very rigid and limited in his outlook.

10. I referred to the wonderful welcome that Mohammad Ali had received in Delhi. It was obvious that this was not a got-up affair but was spontaneous and all classes of people joined in it. This was because of their desire for friendship with Pakistan and because they thought that Mohammad Ali was working for this.

11. I then came to the problem of Kashmir and said that I was convinced that we must deal with this firmly and arrive at a settlement. How was this to be done? The easy way would be for us to come to some settlement by ourselves and thus end the dispute. I had once or twice mentioned this to Liaquat Ali Khan some years ago, but my proposal was not accepted. Although this was an easy way, I thought that this was no longer open to us. Any such ad hoc settlement would anger people both in India and Pakistan. The only way left was to cast the responsibility for the settlement on the people of Kashmir themselves. We, therefore, came back to the plebiscite. Let us work therefore for a plebiscite. We had talked about this for a long time and had got stuck over certain preliminary question, namely, the quantum of forces on either side. This question was not only one of numbers but of principle also, because we had claimed that there should be no Pakistan forces of any kind in ‘Azad Kashmir.’ Normally speaking, after these preliminaries had been decided, the decisions would have to be implemented. When that had been done, the UN Representative was supposed to declare that the work had been carried out and suitable conditions prevailed. At that stage, the Plebiscite Administrator came into the picture and he would take all necessary steps for the plebiscite.

12. All this was a prolonged affair and it could not be rushed. Even the preliminary steps might well take some months, perhaps six months or so. Then would come the Plebiscite Administrator, who would make a survey and present a report as to what should be done. Actual preparations for the plebiscite would take a considerable time. No plebiscite could be held in Kashmir during the four or five winter months.

13. We had talked of a plebiscite for the whole State. Dixon suggested another way. That was a much more logical approach, but, in the way he had suggested it, it was objectionable. We were not prepared to consider this question on the basis of Muslim areas and Hindu areas. But it was clear that the whole State could not be considered as a unit which should go this way or that way. There were some parts of the State which could not be absorbed by either India or Pakistan. Therefore, inevitably we had to come to the conclusion that some kind of a division of the State had to be made.
14. But this should only be done after a plebiscite of the entire State. The plebiscite should not automatically decide the question but should give the necessary data for this decision, and this decision would be largely governed by the result of the plebiscite. There were, however, other important questions. A division of the State would involve the fixation of an international boundary. This boundary should be related to geographical factors. It should avoid islands of territory and should be on the whole a clear physical line, which, as far as possible, gave effect to the wishes of the inhabitants. It would not be able to do so wholly, for that might produce an artificial and difficult frontier line. Therefore, after the result of the plebiscite was known, the two Governments should consider the question afresh and finally decide where the frontier should be. In this matter, we might have to consult others, including our Military Advisers on both sides. If we proceeded in the old way and tried to deal with the preliminary conditions for a plebiscite, we might be hung up again now. Besides, that was rather a technical question and military advice was needed. Could we postpone this question and say that, after a certain period, say six or seven months, the Plebiscite Administrator should be nominated? Before that we should undertake to settle the other preliminaries. After the Plebiscite Administrator comes in, he would take charge of the arrangements with our cooperation.

15. The Plebiscite Administrator would be appointed formally by the Kashmir Government. That had been agreed to previously, but, of course, it would have to be with the approval of India and Pakistan. I was quite clear that the Plebiscite Administrator should not come from any of the major powers. This would create difficulties and rivalries among the great powers because of the strategic position of Kashmir. Therefore, the Plebiscite Administrator should be chosen from the small and more or less neutral countries in Europe or Asia.

16. As regards the conditions preliminary to the appointment of a Plebiscite Administrator, there was the question of civil authorities in ‘Azad Kashmir’ and the question of refugees returning or not. The refugee question was an exceedingly difficult one, and I did not see how we could tackle it at all. Properly done, it would mean the examination of each claim and then possibly questions of rehabilitation and the like. This might take ages and yet prove unsatisfactory because proof would be lacking and all kinds of persons would claim to be refugees. Therefore, the only feasible way of proceeding was to leave out the refugees and have the plebiscite with the present population of the State as a whole.

17. This argument led to the following conclusions:

(1) A decision that a plebiscite must be taken and the result of the plebiscite should be the major factor in coming to further decisions about the future of the State.
(2) The Plebiscite Administrator should be appointed by a certain date, say, six months or so from now. He should come from the small and neutral countries of Europe or Asia and the staff should also be largely recruited from such countries.

(3) During this interval of six months or so, not only must the Plebiscite Administrator be chosen by consent, but the other pending questions about forces, etc., in Kashmir and civil administration and local authorities of ‘Azad Kashmir’, should be settled between India and Pakistan in consultation with the Government of Kashmir.

(4) The Plebiscite Administrator, after his induction, should take charge of that work and make his plans with our cooperation. The UN would be formally associated with his work. The date, etc., for the plebiscite would depend on his judgment and the progress of his work. That work is likely to take at least a year if not more.

(5) The question of the refugees returning should be left out, as this was wholly impracticable, and, in any event, would delay matters tremendously.

(6) It should be kept in mind that the final decision about the State was likely to be one of division. Where exactly the line of division might be drawn would depend primarily on the result of the plebiscite, but there were other important factors also to be considered in drawing up that international frontier line. It will be for the two Governments to consider the results of the plebiscite as well as all these factors, in coming to a decision about a practical and feasible frontier.

(7) All these decisions should be governed by our desire to upset things as little as possible, that is, our decision should not lead to migrations and the like as far as possible.

18. Mohammad Ali generally agreed with what I said, though I cannot say that he committed himself to everything fully. He agreed about the Plebiscite Administrator not coming from the great powers. On the whole, he thought that refugees should be left out so as to save time. He also said that our decisions will have to take other matters into consideration such as I had mentioned.

19. Our interview ended then. We meet again tomorrow afternoon.

Additional Note

I might add that I discussed briefly with Mohammad Ali the question of an independent Kashmir. I told him how this had gradually arisen in Sheikh Abdullah’s mind and taken shape. At first he vaguely talked of the whole State being more or less independent. Lately, having come to realize that some parts of the State would not agree to this, for instance Jammu, he had developed the thesis of a so-called independent Kashmir State for the Valley and some surrounding areas only, that is, what are considered the Kashmiri language speaking areas. This would be a very small State, neither politically nor economically viable. Apart from this, it would be an arena of conflict between India and Pakistan and possibly other countries also. Either of these countries would try to gain more influence there and in fact to make it a sphere of influence for itself and later enlarging its contacts with it. There would thus be no normality and in fact this independent Kashmir, far from bringing peace between India and Pakistan, would be a source of discord. Mr. Mohammad Ali agreed with this wholly.

New Delhi, August 20, 1953.

At this afternoon’s meeting with the Prime Minister of Pakistan, he produced a new draft which was very different, in important particulars, from the one that I had given him*. Evidently, Mr Zafrullah Khan was chiefly responsible for this. This draft went much further in many ways from what I had drafted. I pointed out that this would involve a de novo consideration of many matters.

2. After much discussion, I accepted some changes in my draft which I did not consider vital to our argument. The others I would not agree to.

3. In the course of our talks, we telephoned to Mr Zafrullah Khan and had a talk with him about some matters. Later, Aziz Ahmed came and saw his Prime Minister separately.

4. Thus, the talks this afternoon were rather difficult. Ultimately we agreed to a statement, copy of which I attach. This is to be released in the Press tomorrow morning, August 21, and not earlier.

5. Apart from some minor changes made, the two or three principal changes were as follows:

* Please see next Document
(1) It has been added that the Prime Ministers should appoint committees of military and other experts to advise them in regard to preliminary issues. (This is in the middle of paragraph 3.)

(2) At the end of paragraph 3, the following words have been added: “and take such other steps as may be considered necessary therefor.”

(3) Great stress was laid on the omission of the reference to the Plebiscite Administrator being selected from the smaller nations. The principle was agreed to fully, but Mr. Mohammad Ali and Mr Zafrullah Khan said that it would be very embarrassing for them to put this down in the communiqué without their referring to their colleagues in the Cabinet. They are prepared to let me have their formal agreement to that a few days later. They wanted to show this courtesy to their Cabinet. We argued this at some length. Ultimately, I agreed to take out the phrase about the selection of the Plebiscite Administrator from the small nations, and, earlier in paragraph 3 where it was said that “the Plebiscite Administrator should be selected and appointed by the end of April, 1954”, “selected and” have been omitted from the statement. It is clearly understood, however, that the Plebiscite Administrator will be selected from the smaller nations and this can be formally stated after a little while.

(4) Efforts were made to change the date for the appointment of the Plebiscite Administrator from the end of April to the end of February. I would not agree to this. Then an attempt was made to add “at the latest by the end of April”. I did not think this necessary.

(5) In the first paragraph Kashmir has been mentioned.

(6) One or two other minor changes have been made.

(7) Paragraphs 4 and 5 relating to Evacuee Property and Cooch-Behar enclaves, etc., were redrafted by Mr Zafrullah Khan. I accepted the redraft.

(8) It was suggested that we might add that the Prime Ministers should meet soon again. I did not think this necessary.

0129. Note by Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru was apparently meant to be a draft for Joint Statement after the talks with Mohammad Ali.

Points for Consideration

It is agreed that the future of the Jammu and Kashmir State should be determined after the wishes of the people of that State have been ascertained. The most feasible way of doing this is by a plebiscite, conducted fairly and impartially.

2. Although the idea of a plebiscite was accepted long ago, little or no progress had been made because no agreement could be arrived at on certain necessary steps to be taken prior to the plebiscite. In particular, discussions about the quantum of forces to be kept in the State led to a deadlock which has continued for the last two years or more.

3. While it is necessary to resolve this deadlock in regard to preliminary matters, it is desirable to make a somewhat different approach, so that the present deadlock on these issues should not come in the way of future progress towards a plebiscite.

4. In the event of these preliminary steps having been agreed upon and effect being given them, the next step would be the appointment of a Plebiscite Administrator, who would then review the situation in the State and present a report laying down his method of procedure and the steps to be taken in order to prepare for the plebiscite. These steps would inevitably be comprehensive and complicated. They would include preparation of electoral rolls for the whole State as well as all kinds of other arrangements.

5. It is desirable that a date should be fixed, provisionally at least, for the appointment of the Plebiscite Administrator and his induction to office. This date should be so fixed as to allow an adequate period for a settlement of the preliminary issues between India and Pakistan and the Kashmir Government and for giving effect to the decisions taken. The earliest feasible date for this purpose appears to be April 1954. That will give fairly enough time for all these preliminary steps to be taken. In any event, an earlier date would be climatically unsuitable because the winter comes in between and the Plebiscite Administrator will be unable to function at all before sometime in April.

6. The Plebiscite Administrator should be selected from some small and neutral country in Asia or Europe. It is desirable to avoid a choice being made from one of the great powers because that would lead to rivalries with other great powers and other complications. The choice would be made by India and Pakistan in consultation with the Kashmir Government. The UN would accept him, though the formal appointment would be made by the Kashmir Government as had been previously agreed upon.

7. The Plebiscite Administrator would then take charge of his office and, after his survey, take such steps as may be considered necessary. He would receive our cooperation in this work.

8. Meanwhile, that is, before the choice of the Plebiscite Administrator is made, India and Pakistan and the Kashmir Government would settle the preliminary issues. One of these issues relates to refugees. It appears to be completely impracticable to get refugees back to Kashmir for this purpose. If this was done properly, elaborate enquiries would have to be made in regard to each person so as to avoid wrong persons from coming in. Adequate data would be lacking and questions of rehabilitation would arise. All kinds of upsets would thus take place and the whole procedure would be indefinitely prolonged and might ultimately even so not produce any satisfactory result. Therefore, the only feasible procedure appears to be not to take the refugees into consideration for this purpose and to limit the plebiscite to persons resident in the State.

9. After the plebiscite is over, India and Pakistan would then proceed to decide the question of the future of the State finally. The Government of Kashmir would naturally be consulted. In taking this decision, the result of the plebiscite would naturally play a dominating part. But other important considerations would also have to be borne in mind. The most important of these is to create as little upset as possible, which might lead to large scale migrations from some part or other of the State territory.

10. It is likely that different regions of the State might vote differently. To compel a region to be attached to a country against its manifest will, would be improper and could only lead to continuing difficulties. Therefore, it must be borne in mind that as a result of the plebiscite there might be a partition of the State, so that the wishes of the people might be given effect to in the largest measure. Such partition, however, cannot be automatic. The partition will lead to a new border which will be an international frontier. That international frontier has to be carefully decided upon to avoid artificial border lines and to fit in with geographical conditions and a proper and easily demarcated defensible line in so far as this is possible. Pockets of territories will also have to be avoided.

11. The Governments concerned will, therefore, take all these matters into consideration, including principally, the result of the plebiscite, to determine finally what the frontier line should be.

12. It is only possible to go through these complicated procedures if there is peace and order in Kashmir and a cooperative approach on the part of India and Pakistan. It will not be possible to make any progress if the atmosphere is vitiated by attacks, denunciations and threats of war.

13. Therefore, it is essential that all attacks on each other and the kind of denunciations and threats of war that have been going on in the Pakistan Press, in public statements and even, to some extent, in the Pakistan Radio, should stop. Unless this is done, there will be no peaceful atmosphere and no satisfactory, fair and impartial plebiscite can be held unless these conditions prevail.

0130. Joint Statement issued on the conclusion of the talks between the Prime Ministers of India and Pakistan.

New Delhi, August 21, 1953.

The Prime Ministers of Pakistan and India held several meetings on August 17, 18, 19 and 20 in New Delhi. These talks were in continuation of the talks they had had in Karachi three weeks earlier. Kashmir and other problems outstanding between the two countries were discussed fully and frankly. Both the Prime Ministers were actuated by a firm resolve to settle these problems as early as possible, peacefully and cooperatively to the mutual advantage of both countries.

2. The Kashmir dispute was especially discussed at some length. It was their firm opinion that this should be settled in accordance with the wishes of the people of that State, with a view to promoting their well being and causing the least disturbance to the life of the people of the State. The most feasible method of ascertaining the wishes of the people was by fair and impartial plebiscite. Such a plebiscite had been proposed and agreed to some years ago. Progress, however, could not be made because of lack of agreement in regard to certain preliminary issues. The Prime Ministers agree that these preliminary issues should be considered by them directly in order to arrive at agreements in regard to them. These agreements would have to be given effect to and the next step would be the appointment of the Plebiscite Administrator.

3. In order to fix some kind of a provisional time-table, it was decided that the Plebiscite Administrator should be appointed by the end of April, 1954. Previous to that date, the preliminary issues referred to above should be decided and action in implementation thereof should be taken. With this purpose in view, committees of military and other experts should be appointed to advise the Prime Ministers. On the Plebiscite Administrator’s formal appointment and induction into office by the Jammu and Kashmir Government, he will examine the situation and report upon it. He will then make such proposals as he thinks proper for preparations to be made for the holding of a fair and impartial plebiscite in the entire State, and take such other steps as may be considered necessary there for.

4. The Prime Ministers considered the evacuee property issue and were glad to find that as a result of discussions between the representatives of the two Governments at Karachi, considerable progress had been made. Certain data were now being collected to enable final decisions to be taken. It was hoped that a meeting of the representatives of the two Governments would be held within a month for a further consideration of these problems.

5. At their meeting in Karachi the Prime Ministers had agreed that the Cooch-Behar enclaves in East Bengal should be exchanged with East(West) Bengal enclaves in Cooch-Behar. It was accordingly decided that a conference should be held in Calcutta as soon as possible to work out the necessary details. The conference should also consider travel and trade facilities and other issues, especially relating to East Pakistan, West Bengal and Assam. This conference should be attended by the representatives of East Pakistan, West Bengal and Assam and the two Central Governments.

6. The Prime Ministers are happy to record this large measure of agreement on vital matters affecting their two countries and they trust and believe that further success will attend their efforts so that all the problems which have unfortunately come in the way of good relations between the two countries should be solved satisfactorily. But progress can only be made in this direction if there is an atmosphere of peace and cooperation between the two countries. This has, therefore, to be actively encouraged. The Prime Ministers deprecate any propaganda or attacks on one country by the other in the Press, by Radio, or by speeches and statements made by responsible men and women of either country. They trust, therefore, that all organs and responsible leaders of public opinion will direct themselves to this great task of promoting goodwill between the two countries and thus help in solving all problems and disputes that might

A few days later Nehru expressed his satisfaction with the document to his confident the Governor of Bombay Girja Shankar Bajpai who had sent him a congratulatory letter calling it “a remarkable feat of firmness, patience and skill” on the part of Nehru. He had further said “So far as I can see, we have given nothing away and India’s position has been fully maintained.” Prime Minister in reply while expressing his satisfaction with the document said that he found the Pakistani Prime Minister “a much better person to deal with than any I have encountered thus far from Pakistan. He is really desirous of friendship and cooperation.”
exist between them. The Prime Ministers attach the greatest importance to this friendly approach and to the avoidance of words and actions which promote discord between the two countries.

7. The Prime Ministers intend to keep in close touch with each other so as to expedite progress in the directions indicated above.

0131. Letter of Indian Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru to Pakistan Prime Minister Mohammad Ali regarding hostile propaganda.

New Delhi, August 28, 1953.

New Delhi August 28th, 1953

My dear Prime Minister,

Your High Commissioner handed to me this afternoon your letter of the 27th August. This letter deals with some matter we had already discussed as well as with some new matters. I hope to send you a reply in regard to these at an early date.

2. But I must tell you that I am deeply concerned at certain other developments. Indeed, I thought of writing to you yesterday, but the news, which had appeared in the public Press, that you were sending a letter to me, led me to wait for it.

3. You will remember the penultimate paragraph in the joint statement we issued after our talks in Delhi. In this paragraph we made an earnest appeal to the Press, the Radio and to responsible men and women in both countries to help in creating a friendly and cooperative atmosphere, and to avoid saying or doing anything which would disturb such an atmosphere. We said, and we meant it, that we attached the greatest importance to this. Indeed, unless we make this approach and are supported by our colleagues and others who influence public opinion, it is manifest that our progress will be obstructed at every step. Some evil fate has pursued us in this Kashmir matter and our repeated attempts, on both sides, for a settlement have been checked and vitiates by the activities of people who apparently lack all goodwill and prefer conflict and trouble.
4. Our meeting in London and our subsequent meeting in Karachi had led me to hope that we would take a turn for the better and deal with this intricate and difficult problem in a spirit of goodwill. Subsequent to our meeting in Karachi, certain events happened in Kashmir, which led to a violent outburst in Pakistan against India. As I wrote to you then and mentioned to you when you came here, I could understand a feeling of resentment and irritation in Pakistan, but I was completely taken aback by the violence and intemperateness of language that was used not only in the public Press in Pakistan but by responsible Ministers, Governors and the like there. There were cries for jehad and war.

5. It was in this context that we met in Delhi. I am sure that you will agree with me that you found no trace of this intemperateness in language in Delhi. The contrast was rather remarkable. While the newspapers in Pakistan and public men were continually talking in strong language about war and jehad against India, just at the very time, you and your party were given the most cordial of welcomes here. That must have demonstrated to you the basic goodwill which existed in India for you and for Pakistan and the strong desire for a settlement and friendly relations. That goodwill could not be manufactured. It survived even the intemperate attacks in Pakistan. To me, that was a matter of the greatest satisfaction. It showed that our people, by and large, took a sane and long–distance view of our problems and were not swept away by momentary passion at some untoward developments.

6. We hoped that, as result of our talks and the appeal that we issued, there would be a definite calming down of the excitement in Pakistan. It was in the hope that we parted. For the first time almost, I felt that we had got out of the vicious circle which had caught us during these past years. We had not solved the problem, but it was a great thing to look at it aright and with hope and to take some definite steps in the direction of its solution. That was no small matter, considering the past background of fear and suspicion and interminable and fruitless debate.

7. After you went away, I was a little distressed to find that there was no great change in the Press of Pakistan and, more particularly, in what is called the ‘Azad’ Radio, which continued to pour out its venom from day to day. Nevertheless, I hoped that things would improve. To my great surprise yesterday, I found that a number of newspapers in Karachi had suddenly come out with big headlines accusing India, and more especially me, of flouting Delhi decisions. There was reference to Bharat’s campaign and Karachi being perturbed and at Nehru’s outburst on Nimitz. I need not refer any further to these newspapers, as you must have seen them yourself. More particularly, the Dawn and the Times of Karachi of the 27th August had these big headlines and comments. Probably other papers dealt with this matter in the same way, but I have not seen them yet.

8. This sudden outburst in the Karachi Press, following an identical line, could only have taken place under some kind of official inspiration. I cannot imagine this identical approach suggesting itself independently to a number of newspapers on the same day.

9. What was the cause for all this? I could not remember anything that I had said or done. Indeed I had not said a word in public, and very few words even in private, since our talks and the statement we issued. How then was “India flouting Delhi decisions”? What was “Nehru’s outburst on Nimitz”, which was resented? What was “Bharat’s campaign” which had perturbed Karachi? I was deeply intrigued by all this, because I could not lay my hands on anything. Then, I remembered that, while you were here, two days before you left Delhi, I had a brief talk with the correspondents of the Dawn and the Associated Press of Pakistan. When I fixed this interview, I was not clearly aware as to who they were and did not know that they were Press correspondents. I merely thought that they were members of your party who desired to see me, and I made an effort to find some time in spite of a busy morning. When I met them, I realized that they were newspapermen. We had a brief private talk, which I did not consider an interview for publication. In the course of this talk, I was asked, I think, about Admiral Nimitz and I replied rather casually that I had almost forgotten his appointment long ago. I added that in view of the world situation, it was better to avoid the great powers which were so entangled with each other. That was all that I said and I had no idea that it would be published. I found that something to that effect did appear in the Dawn.

10. That is the only reference I have made and that was before our statement was published or even agreed to. How then have I or has India flouted in any way the Delhi decisions or carried on any kind of agitation about Nimitz or anyone else?

11. You will appreciated my distress at all this. That distress would have been there even if some individual paper had indulged in this story which has no foundation. But it was all the greater because it seemed to me obvious that this had official backing and inspiration. Can we pursue any policy of conciliation in this context and with these continuous attacks and insinuations, which have no foundation whatever? Are we to be caught again in the vicious circle which has been our fate during the past few years? This is important because unless we have faith in each other’s bona fides, it is difficult to make any progress.
12. A great deal has been said in these Pakistan newspapers about Admiral Nimitz. I spoke to you about this matter, and you will remember that both of us spoke to Chaudhuri Zafrullah Khan also. I gathered the clearest impression that both of you agreed with my viewpoint but did not like the idea of any mention being made of this in the statement. Indeed, you said that it would be a discourtesy to your Cabinet colleagues for any reference to be made of this without their knowledge and consultation. I appreciated your point of view and gladly agreed to leave that sentence out of our statement. You had told me that probably within a few days, you would be in a position to send me your approval of this after consulting your Cabinet colleagues.

13. Imagine, therefore, my surprise at this sudden and organized attack, after a few days, in the Pakistan Press. I need not go into the merits of this question, as I explained myself clearly to you during our talks. Much has happened during the last four of five years, and the international situation has changed and developed. All kinds of new conflicts have arisen, in all of which the great powers are involved. Even while I was talking to you, the Political Committee of the United Nations General Assembly was carrying on a heated debate, in which the United States, and Britain and most of the Commonwealth countries, apart from others, were ranged on opposite sides. I spoke to you and Chaudhuri Zafrullah Khan about this UN debate also and pointed out some of the wider consequences of it. It so happened that India’s name had been dragged in, although India was not at all eager to find a place in the Korean Political Conference. The question before the UN Committee was, however, a much wider one and India happened to be just a symbol for the moment. I had hoped that Pakistan would side with the Commonwealth and Asian countries in this matter. To my regret, it did not do so. But that is entirely for your Government to decide and I have no right to complain. I can only regret a decision which rather comes in the way of peace in the Far East and impairs somewhat the cooperation of the Arab – Asian countries as well as that of the Commonwealth.

14. But this debate in the United Nations, and the deeper conflicts that it brought out, itself makes it evident that the great powers are too entangled in their difficulties and often pull against each other. Hence it has become the normal practice to avoid having representatives of these powers in any matter requiring some kind of a neutral and impartial approach. That is no reflection on any power, much less on an eminent person like Admiral Nimitz. It is merely an appreciation of the facts of present day politics.

15. I have taken an early opportunity to write to you on this subject because I have been greatly perturbed. It would serve little purpose for us to come to some settlements in our talks and then to have these upset not only in fact but, what is more important, in the psychological background which is so vital.

I shall write to you further in answer to your letter.

Yours sincerely

Jawaharlal Nehru

0132. Letter of the Indian Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru to the Pakistan Prime Minister Mohammad Ali regarding mischievous reporting in the Pakistan press.

New Delhi, September 23, 1953.

My dear Prime Minister,

You will forgive me for not having acknowledged your letter of September 5th earlier. As a Matter of fact, I had written to you on September 3rd some considerable length dealing with a number of points which had arisen in your previous letter. Probably our two letters crossed each other.

2. You refer to Admiral Nimitz. It is evident that I gathered a wrong impression from your talk with me. To me, it was obvious that, in the circumstances, there could be no Plebiscite Administrator from any of the great powers. Developments had taken place in the last three or four years which necessitated some other choice. Any other course would have been inconsistent with the foreign policy we have been pursuing. This had nothing to do with the merits of Admiral Nimitz, who is a man of eminence. It never struck me that you or your Government would attach any great importance to this matter and would find it difficult to appreciate our viewpoint.

3. I have already informed you of the casual and private talk I had with the correspondents of the Dawn and the Associated Press of Pakistan prior to our consideration of our joint statement. As a matter of fact, I had not met any Indian newspaperman and, in fact, have not done so ever since. The fact that Indian Press correspondents had discussed such matters previously is not difficult to understand. Vaguely they have been discussed long before, not at our instance, but because newspapers make intelligent surmises. We have vaguely discussed the Kashmir question with newspapers from time to time in previous months long before you came here. The journalists themselves often put forward suggestions. I doubt if there was any leakage at our end, though it is possible that some Cabinet Minister may have been loose in his talk. Personally I hardly ever see journalists except for an occasional Press conference once in two or three months.

4. Even if there was some misunderstanding or leakage in relation to Admiral Nimitz, I confess I do not understand the tremendous campaign in the Pakistani Press and Radio. The ‘Azad’ Radio has even excelled its own remarkable previous record. I have with me a huge pile of cuttings and reports from the Pakistani press and Radio. I do not wish to trouble you with these extracts. They are easily available to you and, in any event, it serves little purpose to bring out these unsavoury comments again.

5. It was a shock to me, however, to find that even Mr. Shoaib Qureshi should have encouraged what is called a Liberation Front in a speech at Muzaffarabad and talked about a war of liberation. He mentioned that East Pakistan had offered to send four lakhs of volunteers. This was reported in the Dawn of the 6th September.

6. I am reluctant to give you long quotations from speeches and statements of responsible Ministers. I would refer you, however, to a few reports of speeches, such as a speech by Khan Abdul Qayum Khan, which appeared in the Dawn of the 17th August; a speech by Sardar Abdul Rashid, Chief Minister, NWFP (14th August); a speech of Main Jaffar Shah, Minister, NWFP (18th August).

7. I think that you will find that during all this period no Minister in India, whether Central or provincial, had said anything aggressive in this context. In fact, anyone can notice the difference between the calm atmosphere of India and the hysterical outbursts in Pakistan. While the Pakistan Press was full of jehad and war, our newspapers discussed the Estate Duty Bill, the Andhra State Bill, the floods in various parts of the country and economic policies.

8. It is this atmosphere that counts if we are to make progress and it should be our endeavour to maintain an atmosphere of peace and goodwill. You have seen for yourself how the people generally feel from the reception you received in Delhi. I am sure that the people in Pakistan feel likewise. Unfortunately, the Press and some others are often bent on creating trouble.

9. It will continue to be my endeavour to work in every way for a peaceful settlement of all issues between India and Pakistan.

Yours sincerely
Jawaharlal Nehru
0133. Letter from the High Commission for India in Pakistan to the Indian Ministry of External Affairs regarding objectionable writings in the Pakistan Press.

Karachi, October 26, 1953.

No. C. 17/IHC/53.

My dear Trivedi,

Will you kindly refer to the Ministry's letter No. D. 6309 – P. III/53, dated 9th October, 1953, regarding objectionable writings in the Waqt of Lahore. As you are aware, we have taken up this matter with the Pakistan Foreign Office several times in the past, but there has been, unfortunately, no improvement in the tone of the writings in this paper from Lahore. We were on the point of taking up this matter again with the Pakistan Foreign Office on a personal level when I happened to see the reference to this question in the record of informal discussions between Mr. Tyabji and Mr. Hilaly on the 2nd October, 1953, at Calcutta. It was suggested then that “in view of the increasing number of protests being received by either side regarding objectionable writings in the press of the other country, unofficial convention might be established that the two sides will protest only against the objectionable writing in certain specified papers which had large circulation and generally considered representative of all shades of opinion.” It was also decided that this suggestion should be considered further.

From our records we find that the Waqt of Lahore is not a very influential paper. It has a circulation of about 2000 and is the organ of the Islam League which is fiercely anti-Indian and believes in Jehad against India.

Since its circulation is small and the paper is not very influential I should like to have your advice as to whether we should follow the suggestion made in Calcutta regarding lodging protest and take no further notice of the writings in this paper. I am sending a copy of this letter to the Deputy High Commissioner, Lahore requesting him to let you have his comments direct.

Yours sincerely

(M.A. Vellodi)

New Delhi, November 10, 1953.

My dear Prime Minister,

I am sending you two letters separately addressed to you formally as Prime Minister. One of them is in answer to two of your letters and the second deals with the complaint about canal waters.

I am taking the liberty of writing to you yet a third letter which is meant to be personal and informal, because I wish to convey to you my distress at various developments since we met last. It seems to me that all the goodwill that we created on the occasion is rapidly being frittered away and, instead of making progress, we appear to be going backwards. I am not writing to complain, and I know very well the difficulties you have had to face in many ways. But I think I owe it to you to express my mind with some frankness.

I shall not deal here with the matters referred to in my other letters. But I might refer to the strange fatality that appears to pursue every attempt made on our behalf to go some way in settling the evacuee property problem. Sometimes it has appeared that we are making a move forward and then we come back with a jump. I really do not know what I can do about it. It does little good to go on repeating the something on my side or on your side and in making charges and counter-charges of breach of agreement and the like. This was a simple issue which any two reasonable persons ought to decide on the facts. Is it that our mental processes work differently? Shoaib Qureshi’s statements surprise me. There is no argument in them nor any logic but just reiteration of something which has already been answered repeatedly. This almost reminds me of the strange doings at Panmunjon.

It seems to me that there is an apprehension on the part of Pakistan that, if this matter of evacuee property is pursued logically and any kind of enquiry held, this would lead to Pakistan being made liable for a very large sum of money, a burden which it is in no position to shoulder. I do not know what the result of an enquiry might be. But surely we realize, as well as you do, that there is a limit to the burdens that a country can carry. No one wants to put an impossible burden on Pakistan. We should consider this matter reasonably and in a cooperative spirit and try to decide this question, keeping in view chiefly the good of the displaced persons on either side.

I am writing this letter, however, for another reason. I would have hesitated to write it to anyone else but you. It may appear an unwarranted intrusion on my part and an interference in the internal affairs of Pakistan. I can assure you that I have absolutely no desire to interfere in this or any other way. What I am concerned with is the consequence which inevitably must flow from certain acts. That consequence affects us and, therefore, I want to bring it to your notice.

I had been estimated that the value of property by Hindus and Sikhs in Pakistan was more than 3,000 crores of rupees while the property left by Muslims in India was valued at 300 crores of rupees. The Pakistan Government, however, contended that the estimate of the non-Muslim property left in Pakistan was grossly exaggerated.

The recent decisions of the Pakistan Constituent Assembly about the name of the country being the Islamic Republic of Pakistan and various other provisions which relate to the Governor-General and to the laws etc., obviously place all non-Muslims in Pakistan in a special category. They may be protected in some way but they are not, and cannot be equal citizens nor can they share in all the privileges of citizenship. Pakistan is thus creating something that, to my knowledge, has ceased to be considered practical politics in progressive States for some hundreds of years. It is going back to a medieval conception of the State and of citizenship, where there are categories of citizens, and sometimes of non-citizens who may be permitted to function in a particular way within limits. This may not be wholly meant but it is the inevitable consequences of the decisions which have so far been taken by the Constituent Assembly.

The effect of this on the large numbers of persons constituting the minorities in Pakistan, and more particularly in eastern Pakistan, is bound to be considerable. Whatever the practical consequence might be, the psychological effect undoubtedly will be great, and these people will feel that they had been made some kind of second class citizens by statute, that opportunities for them were limited in many ways and that they were tolerated as an inferior species. Can you imagine their accepting this position with any satisfaction? They will feel frustrated and unhappy and will not fit in as they ought to.

I remember discussing this matter fully with Liaquat Ali Khan and he assured me then (this was in 1950 I think) that this kind of thing could never happen. In fact, some reference to it was made in the Prime Ministers’ Agreement of April 1950. That Agreement, so far as this matter is concerned, is gone by the board completely.

 On 31 October 1953, the Pakistan Constituent Assembly deviating from the original report of the Basic Principles Committee where the State was named as Pakistan only, decided that the name of the State should be the Islamic Republic of Pakistan. The Islamic character of the State was reinforced by the provisions that no legislature in Pakistan could enact any law repugnant to the holy Quran and Sunna and that a Muslim alone could be the Head of the State in Pakistan when every seventh citizen was a non-Muslim. The new Constitution also imposed separate electorates on the minority communities to the extent of sub-dividing the Hindu community into two electorates, though they demanded a joint or common electorate with the majority community. A State organization was to be set up to make the teachings of Islam known to the people. In 1953, the minorities constituted about 14 per cent of the total population of Pakistan and 25 per cent of the population of East Bengal. The Indo-Pakistan Agreement of April 1950 assured the minorities of both countries “complete equality of citizenship, irrespective of religion,” and of “equal opportunity, with those of the majority community, to participate in the public life of the country, to hold political or other offices and to serve in the country’s civil and armed forces.”
You and I have been anxious to bring about normality and friendliness between India and Pakistan. But something has been done which will very seriously come in the way of that. This is a matter of the deepest regret to me.

Only two days ago I was at Phillaur in East Punjab where there was a joint police tattoo of the police forces of the two Punjabs. Several hundred Pakistani police came there and participated in this tattoo. They were a fine body of men, and it was a joy to see how the police of the two Punjabs fraternized with each other, both the officers and men. They were full of old memories. As a matter of fact, it was impossible to distinguish them. They wore the same kind of uniforms and even the distinguishing letters on their shoulder straps were the same—‘PP’. Whenever the peoples of India and Pakistan come together, they are friendly, and one realizes the essential soundness of their approach to each other. And yet things happen which separate them, create barriers and prevent that very development which you and I seek.

There is another matter of the gravest importance to which I must refer. This is the news, which is publicly given about a coming military alliance between Pakistan and the USA. Again, it is not for us in India to come in the way of Pakistan’s foreign or internal policy. But, when we are affected by it powerfully, cannot ignore it.

I do not know how far this proposal for a military alliance has gone, but it is clear from American official statements that it has gone pretty far. If such an alliance takes place, Pakistan enters definitely into the region of cold war. That means to us that the cold war has come to the very frontiers of India. It means also that, if real war comes, this also reaches the frontiers of India. This is a matter of serious consequence to us, who have been trying to build up an area of peace where there would be no war whatever happens elsewhere. It must also be a matter of grave consequence to us, you will appreciate, if vast armies are built up in Pakistan with the aid of American money. A responsible newspaper, the New York Times, mentions that an army of a million men in Pakistan is in view. Such an army, across our frontier, and more especially with the atmosphere that sometimes prevails in Pakistan, will undoubtedly create an entirely new situation in India vis-a-vis Pakistan. All our problems will have to be seen in a new light.

There was some talk once of the common defence policy between India and Pakistan. All that, of course, goes completely by the board. There can be no common defence or foreign policy between the two countries when, in fact, their policies in both these matters are diametrically opposed to each other.
So far as we are concerned, we are firmly resolved to pursue our policy of non-alignment, and we do not propose to submit to any pressures or any inducements to alter that policy.

I shall not labour these points further. I have said enough, I think, to make you appreciate that these developments are going to affect not only Pakistan but India powerfully. Inevitably they will produce far-reaching reactions on our relations and on our problems.

Yours sincerely
JawaharJal Nehru

0135. Extracts from the Press Conference of Prime Minister JawaharJal Nehru.

New Delhi, November 15, 1953.

* * * * *

I come to the decisions of the Constituent Assembly of Pakistan. Obviously, it is completely open to Pakistan, as it is to any independent country, to have the Constitution of their choice. I am only concerned with it in two ways. One is, well, as a human being, the other as a person who is a neighbour of Pakistan, as a person also, who was concerned with the Pakistan area before the Partition and all that. As a human being, I am very sorry about this tendency in Pakistan to build up the type of State which is envisaged in these decisions, which it is rather difficult to understand from any modern point of view. It is a medieval conception, if I may say so. It is totally opposed to any democratic conception.

That is the general proposition. The thing that concerns me more is the effect of that on minorities in Pakistan and reactions in India. It is perfectly clear that such a Constitution creates at least two classes of citizens or two grades of citizenship, one having more opportunities, the other less. Also, it creates a sense of inferiority in the minorities who have less opportunity. That is not a democratic approach, or indeed a practical approach, from the point of view of having stability among all classes of the State. It may be that the minorities, as stated, are given protection, but the whole conception is that of a superior giving some kind of protection to inferiors. This is not liked even by persons who are supposed to be getting protection. The result is that the minorities quite inevitably, whether Hindus, Christians, Jews or Buddhists, will feel rather out of the picture, will feel frustrated and will have little hope for the future.

As a friend of Pakistan, I regret this kind of development because it can only lead to continuous tension and unhappiness. Then, I am, of course, concerned with its reactions in India. You remember perhaps that in 1950, in the Prime Ministers’ Agreement with Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan, actually in the joint statement that was issued—I speak from memory—some reference was made to this matter, and Mr Liaquat Ali Khan was pleased to say that there could be, and should be, no differentiation in their Constitution. According to the new proposal of the Constituent Assembly of Pakistan, it does come in. I am not concerned so much with, say, whether there is a breach in an agreement three years old; it is a rather petty lawyer’s argument. I am concerned with the larger consequence of this because inevitably certain elements in India, which are communally inclined, will take advantage of it to spread their wrong policy, wrong arguments and create ill will when we want goodwill....

Someone asked me about a military pact between Pakistan and the United States. I should like to answer that question when something more precise or definite is known. I do not exactly know what the position is, but one could safely say that there has been not only a great deal of talk between the two countries about such a pact, but further the things have gone pretty far. The press of the United States has said a great deal about it, and apparently with authority. Responsible organs in the US, and even in Pakistan, have given some indications that this is happening.

This is a matter which constitutionally or otherwise is not our concern what kind of pact Pakistan and the United States have—but practically, it is a matter of the most intense concern to us and something which will have very far-reaching consequences on the whole structure of things in South Asia, and specially on India and Pakistan. I am rather surprised, therefore, that this very major development should take place in the way apparently it is taking place. There is talk of bases, air bases being established in Pakistan. Again, it is open to Pakistan to have bases, to have foreign armies, anything they like in their territories. It is an independent country. It is open to it to give up its independence, if it so chooses, or to limit it. We can’t interfere. But we are concerned with the consequences of these developments and, therefore, necessarily we are watching these developments with the greatest care.
Q: Is it open to Pakistan to give bases in Gilgit because it is still a disputed territory?

JN: It is a hypothetical question. I should say it is obviously not open for them to do anything in Kashmir, much less to give bases.

Q: Can we presume that the Government has taken steps to make our views on this subject known to Washington before any decisions are taken?

JN: It is rather difficult for me to answer that question. We are constantly, formally or informally, discussing such matters, expressing our views to various Ambassadors, various Governments.

Q: Has there been any progress in the talks between yourself and the Prime Minister of Pakistan in regard to Kashmir, or with regard to other matters?

JN: Soon after my meeting the Prime Minister of Pakistan in Delhi, there was some correspondence or rather I wrote to him some letters on various topics—some flowing from our meeting and our joint statement. I must have written about three or four letters, I think, during the course of the fortnight or three weeks. The replies to them were rather delayed, on their side I mean, partly because Mr Mohammad Ali was ill, and partly because he was heavily occupied, I believe, by developments there. Then, only not long ago, I had a letter from him to which I have sent a reply. There the position rests.

Q: I think you suggested the possibility of India having some kind of a Monroe doctrine for us.

JN: I do not know what other people have said, but I made a reference to this, I think, in Madras two months back not referring to Asia at all, but referring to India, that is, I was referring to the French and Portuguese establishments in India, not to the whole of Asia at all.

Q: You must have seen in the Pakistan papers and some other Urdu papers reports of some Muslim convention in Aligarh. Have you any comments to make?

JN: Yes. I have seen those reports and other reports too. My general impression was that the convention itself was a small affair and not important from the point of view of numbers or influence, but I do think that the line adopted by that small convention was, if I may use a strong word, vicious.

Q: You said that you were aiming at better relations between India and Pakistan not only in regard to Kashmir, but in regard to other matters also. Are you planning to include the nature of the State that they are envisaging also in those negotiations?
JN: This particular development has taken place since we met, and it is always a rather difficult matter for one country to interfere in the internal arrangements or Constitution of another country, but in a friendly way it is always open to us to refer to these matters, especially pointing out the consequences.

0136. Letter from Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru to Pakistan Prime Minister Mohammad Ali.

New Delhi, December 12, 1953.

My dear Prime Minister,

Thank you for your letter of the 9th December. This was delivered to me as I was leaving Delhi for Dehra Dun and I am taking the earliest opportunity of replying to it.

2. It was not my intention in my previous letter to say anything against Islam or any, Islamic principles as such. I did not call any Islamic principles as "medieval". I am not competent to express an opinion about what are Islamic principles or not, and it would be improper for me to discuss the principles of a great religion without respect.

3. I referred to certain proposals made in regard to the Constitution of Pakistan. I am not aware of any constitutions of the modern type having been considered in the history of Islam in the past. Quite naturally, conditions were different in those times and they were dealt with accordingly. It is not criticism, much less a condemnation, of any principle or practice adopted at a previous period of history, to say that it might not be suitable when conditions differ completely. No one, I take it, will suggest that we should adopt the methods of transport and communication now such as existed some hundreds of years ago. The structure of society has changed and the life that human beings live have also changed very greatly because of the Industrial Revolution and all that has followed. Political problems have changed and necessarily different answers have to be sought for these new problems. In fact, these problems did not exist previously and, therefore, there was no question of finding an answer for them.

4. My use of the word "medieval" had nothing to do with religion. In the history of Europe, as well as Asia, there are instances in the past when citizenship was not a common factor for all the people who lived in a country and the privileges attached to such citizenship were not the same. This is what I call a medieval conception. In those days, it was perhaps a suitable way of dealing with the problem as it existed then. Today the well recognized approach is different. The only major deviation from this has been in Hitler's Germany, where one group of people were considered as dominant or master race and others were tolerated or even suppressed. We see this policy adopted, both in theory and practice, in the Union of South Africa. While not accepting this in theory, in practice there is racial discrimination in other parts of Africa and elsewhere in the world.

5. Whether the difference is that of race or colour or religion, the fact remains that different grades of citizens are created, some with somewhat greater privileges than others. The example I have given of Hitler may be an extreme one, but the principle is the same.

6. It was in this connection that I used the word “medieval”. If all citizens in a country are not, in law and by constitution, placed on exactly the same footing in regard to all matters, then it inevitably follows that there is some differentiation between different types of citizens. I am not for the moment referring to practice. But of course, even in practice, they should be treated in the same way. Practice, however, is a more difficult thing to seize hold of. But law and constitution are definite and precise. I would ask you to consider whether it is not a fact that some of the proposals made for the Pakistan Constitution create a different set of privileges for the nationals of Pakistan, who differ in religion. The special set of privileges might be limited. But once this principle is accepted, it goes against all modern democratic theory and conception. Once a step in that direction is taken, not only is the democratic basis of a constitution or structure of society undermined, but all kinds of consequences flow from it. There is no reason why further steps might not be taken in this direction later, because the principle of democracy has been bypassed. In any event, even a relatively small step in this direction created a division among the nationals of the country concerned and apprehension in the minds of those classes or groups which are deprived of certain privileges even by the constitution. They become inferior citizens in a sense and they are afraid of their future.

7. Modern States are more or less founded on the basis of some kind of nationalism. That basis may be a narrow one from the international point of view. But, if within the nation itself the national idea is broken up, that is a retrograde step and is certainly removed from democracy.

8. You refer to my statement encouraging the minorities in Pakistan to look elsewhere and thus to weaken their loyalty to their State. May I suggest that it is not my statement, but the proposed action in regard to the Pakistan Constitution that is bound to have that result.

9. You say in your letter that I should have waited for a reply from you to my letter before making a public pronouncement on the two issues you have dealt with in your letter. I made the first comment on these matters at a press conference when I was asked about them. I could not very well refuse to reply. Subsequently, a question was put to me in Parliament. Again I had to reply. But, apart from these questions, these matters had become vital issues which were agitating the public mind. Opinion in India was powerfully stirred up. No public leader could ignore this reaction and simply remain quiet to it. I am sure you could not have done so if you had been faced with a similar position.

10. So far as the question of a military alliance or aid between the US and Pakistan was concerned, I was not the first to refer to it. The press of the United States, including very responsible organs, which were supposed to be semi-official, had been discussing this openly and repeatedly for some time. Indeed, some of these articles in US press were circulated officially in Pakistan*. There was no denial or repudiation by the Pakistan Government about them. It was only then that I made the reference in the press conference and later in Parliament. I hope you will appreciate that it was not at all unreasonable for persons in India to conclude, in these circumstances, that there was some basis for these statements.

11. You have denied that there was any basis, and so has the Governor-General of Pakistan. May I draw your attention to what has been said by the President of the United States as well as the Secretary of State of the US, on these subjects. They have not denied them completely and, in fact, they have partly admitted these statements. Even lately, the American press has been full of references to heavy military aid being given by the United States to

* When Ghulam Mohammed, the Governor General of Pakistan, accompanied by Muhammad Zafrullah Khan, the Foreign Minister, met President Eisenhower and Secretary Dulles in Washington on 12 November 1953, they talked about a Middle East Defence Pact, predicted by the New York Times in its editorial of 2 November which the Pakistan Government had deliberately released to its press on 6 November. Nehru said on 15 November that this was a matter of serious concern to India whereupon the negotiating parties promptly denied any knowledge of such a move. In their statements on 9 and 17 December 1953, Mohammad Ali and Ghulam Mohammed denied that any military pact with the US was being negotiated. There had been some exploratory discussions, but the matter was still being deliberated and was nowhere near conclusion. Both President Eisenhower and the Secretary of State, Dulles, said that it was the purpose of US collective security policy not to create discord among friendly neighbours in the free world. Furthermore, the views and ideas of neighbouring countries, and in the particular case of India, will be taken into consideration in connection with any arrangements to be made with Pakistan.
Pakistan. Reference has even been made to the possibility of the US helping to build up a well-trained and well-equipped army of a million men in Pakistan.

12. These are matters of great moment and cannot be treated either by you or by me lightly, because their consequences are far reaching.

13. You refer to your desire and mine to build up friendly relations between India and Pakistan. That is, of course, my earnest desire and I know it is yours also. But friendly relations depend upon many factors and, chiefly, on the policies pursued by either country.

Even the trend of domestic or foreign policy of India or Pakistan can produce repercussions in the other country and affect these relations. If our domestic or foreign policies are totally opposed, it becomes very difficult, indeed, to have friendly relations. It was because of this major factor that I ventured to write to you previously on this subject.

14. I would again earnestly request you to consider these matters from the wider point of view, not only of Indo-Pakistan relations, but of the future of Asia and of the world.

Yours sincerely

Jawaharlal Nehru
0137. Aide Memoire handed over by the Indian High Commissioner in Pakistan to the Pakistan Ministry of Foreign Affairs.

Karachi, December 19, 1953.

F. No. P. III/ 53/19326/1-2. the 19th December 1953

AIDE MEMOIRE

It will be recalled that the Governments of Pakistan and India agreed in terms of sub – paragraph (2) of paragraph 9 of the Agreement between India and Pakistan at the Inter – Dominion Conference of December 1948 that the Inspectors General of Police of East and West Punjab, assisted by the local District Magistrates and Superintendents of Police, should meet at least once a month to review the situation arising out of the border incidents on both sides. They were to discuss individual incidents and to devise measures to ensure that such incidents were not repeated. This agreement was reiterated in the Delhi Agreement of April 1949 which stipulated that the decisions already arrived at in the Inter – Dominion Conference of 6th – 14th December 1948 in regard to border incidents between East and West Punjab should be implemented forthwith in letter and spirit. To achieve this end, detailed instructions were to be issued to the Governments of East and West Punjab emphasizing the need for frequent meetings between the two Inspectors General of police, accompanied by District Magistrates and Superintendents of Police. Subsequently, in their Note No. I (III) – 2/3/52 dated the 29th July, 1952, the Government of Pakistan agreed that these meetings should be held once a quarter but that if for any meeting both the Inspectors General of Police agreed that there was insufficient material for the agenda, they might postpone the discussion till the meeting for the next quarter. It was also agreed that in case the situation so required, the Inspectors General of Police might, by mutual agreement, meet oftener than once a quarter.

2. The scope of this agreement was later extended to other border areas of the two countries. This latter extension of the scope of the agreement and the procedure laid down therein were mutually agreed to by exchange of letters between the two Governments, namely, No. F. 12 – 5/49 – Pak. I, dated the 20th April, 1949, from the Ministry of External Affairs of the Government of India and No. IC/13/4/49, dated the 26th November, 1949, from Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Commonwealth Relations of the Government of Pakistan. In their letter the Government of Pakistan stated that it would be of great advantage if periodic meetings were held between the Inspector General of Police, Bikaner State and the Commissioner of Police, Bahawalpur State, with a view to devising ways and means for preventing border incidents and improving the situation. They further suggested that such meetings should be held between the other bordering provinces and states as well, i.e. between Sind, Bahawalpur and Khairpur in Pakistan and Bikaner, Jodhpur, Jaisalmer and Kutch in India. The meetings were to be held quarterly or more frequently, if necessary and the general procedure then in force for the prevention of border incidents on the East Punjab – West, Punjab border in accordance with the Agreements of December 1948 and April 1949 was to be made applicable in respect of these meetings also. Necessary instructions were accordingly issued by the two Governments to the State and provincial authorities concerned.

3. Meetings have since taken place between the inspectors General of Police of East and West Punjab, but only once meeting has been held so far between the Inspector General of Police of Rajasthan and Commissioner of Police of Kutch on the India side and the Inspector General of Police of Sind, Inspector General of Police of Khairpur and Commissioner of Police of Bahawalpur on the Pakistani side. The District Magistrates of the bordering districts did not, however, participate in these meetings.

4. The Government of India feel that the Government of Pakistan would no doubt agree that regular meetings between the Inspectors General of Police of the States and Provinces on the Western Borders, assisted by the District Magistrates concerned are bound to be productive of good results and help in furthering good relations between the two countries. If the Government of Pakistan agree to the proposal for regular meetings, the Government of India would be grateful if they would issue necessary instructions to the appropriate authorities concerned in Pakistan and forward copy to the Government of India so that similar instructions may be issued to the authorities concerned in India.
0138. Note Verbale of the Indian High Commission in Pakistan to the Pakistan Ministry of Foreign Affairs regarding objectionable publications.

Karachi, February 6, 1954.

High Commission Of India

No. F. 30(1)/54 – Genl. Dated the 6th February, 1954

The High Commission of India in Pakistan presents its compliments to the Government of Pakistan Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Commonwealth Relations and with reference to the correspondence resting with their Note No. 1 (I) 14/6/52, dated the 1st January, 1953, regarding an objectionable publication entitled ‘Fatwa’ circulated in Pakistan have the honour to state that the Government of India are unable to accept the view advanced by the Government of Pakistan that the meeting of the Indo – Pakistan Information Consultative Committee held on the 6th May, 1950, which was attended by the non – official members representing the press could take decisions on the publications, films or broadcasting, as the media other than the Press are the exclusive concern of the official members of the Committee in terms of para 4 (ii) of the Indo – Pakistan Agreement of December, 1948. The official members of the Committee did not meet separately on the 6th May, 1950. Moreover, the minutes of the meeting of the I.P.I.C.C. on the 6th May, 1950, also show that no other media except the Press were discussed at this meeting. This High Commission, therefore, would like to reiterate that the recommendations of this meetings of the I.P.I.C.C. hold good only for the Press in the two countries and cannot be made applicable to other media of publicity i.e. publications, films and broadcasting.

2. The reference made to para 8 of the letter dated the 22nd February, 1951, from the Ministry of Information and Broadcasting of the Government of India to their Pakistani opposite number, by the Government of Pakistan in their above mentioned note in support of their contention is considered inappropriate in as much as it was not intended to call for a specific reply in respect of the offending magazines but was merely to remind about an earlier communication regarding objectionable publications produced in Pakistan. The attention of the Government of Pakistan is invited to para 4 of the same letter which makes it abundantly clear that the Government of India were in no doubt about the recommendation of the I.P.I.C.C. meeting of the 6th May, 1950, being applicable only to the media of Press i.e. newspapers and magazines. The stand taken in the letter dated the 26th April, 1951, from the Ministry of Information and Broadcasting of the Government of India to their Pakistani counterpart was, therefore, a correct one.
3. The High Commission have been further asked by the Government of India to point out to the Government of Pakistan that it has not been the intention of the Government of Pakistan to make the decision of the I.P.I.C.C. meeting of the 6th May, 1950, applicable to publications produced in the two countries before the 6th May, 1950, which would be apparent from the fact that the Ministry of Information and Broadcasting of the Government of Pakistan continued to protest, even after the 6th May, 1950, against the publications produced in India before the 6th May, 1950. A statement (I) giving a few typical instances of such cases is enclosed herewith (not included here).

4. Besides, the meetings of the Indo – Pakistan Information Consultative Committee held after the 6th May, 1950, also discussed and took decisions about publications produced in either country before April, 1950. A statement (II) to this effect is also enclosed (not included here).

5. It would thus be obvious that it has not been the desire of the Government of Pakistan to exclude the publications produced before April, 1950, from the purview of the Indo – Pakistan agreements. Moreover, the Government of India are of the view that objectionable publications even though produced before April, 1950, continue to propagate mischief if they are allowed to circulate and cannot, therefore, be treated in the same way as newspapers or magazines.

6. As regards the publications about Kashmir, the Government of India cannot agree to the exclusion of those books relating to Kashmir, which contain material calculated to rouse communal passions and to incite war between the two countries, from the purview of the Indo – Pakistan agreements. Otherwise, the whole object of the agreements could be frustrated by objectionable matter coming through these publications.

7. In view of the position stated above, the Government of India have instructed the High Commission to emphasize once again that all those publications which come within the mischief of the Indo – Pakistan agreements, irrespective of their date of publication, are actionable. The High Commission would, therefore, request the Government of Pakistan to take drastic action against the persons responsible for the publication and circulation of the offensive booklet entitled ‘Fatwa’ and to confiscate all copies of it and ban its further circulations in Pakistan. The High Commission would be grateful to be informed of the action taken by the Government of Pakistan, if there is no objection.

The High Commission avails itself of this opportunity to renew to the Government of Pakistan the assurances of its highest consideration.

The Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Commonwealth Relations,
Government of Pakistan, Karachi.

0139. Letter from the Indian Ministry of External Affairs to the Indian High Commission in Pakistan regarding the action taken by the Government of Pakistan about the objectionable writings in the Waqt.

New Delhi, March 17, 1954.

Subject:- Anti – Indian Propaganda in Pakistan – Objectionable writings in the Waqt of Lahore.

Dear High Commission

Please refer to the correspondence resting with our D.O. Letter No. P. III/53/55615/2 dated the 31st October, 1953 on the subject mentioned above.

2. No intimation has been received as to whether any action was taken by the High Commission to bring to the notice of the Government of Pakistan the continued appearance of objectionable writing in the Waqt of Lahore irrespective of the warning given to the Editor of the said paper by the Pakistan authorities.

3. It is however, observed that there has been no change in the tone of this paper. The extracts of the objectionable writings which have since appeared in its issues of 28th November, 1953, December 2nd, 16th, 22nd and 5th January, 1954 are forwarded herewith for using them as additional material (not included here) in your demarches to the Pakistan Foreign office, if considered necessary.

4. The language used in the articles published on 23.11.1953 and 16.12.1953 viz, “Sword attacks on Muslims: Several Muslims of Kucha Chellan wounded:” “At Alwar and Bharatpur Mosques are openly being converted into temples,” “Three Mohallas of Muslims in Jullunder ordered to be razed to ground: More than one hundred mosques and graves of religious leaders to be demolished,” is highly objectionable and has been used deliberately to rouse the communal passions of the peoples of Pakistan against Indians. The news item of 22nd December 1953 is an open incitement to war against India.

5. The continued publication of such inflammatory writings and the propaganda which this paper is being allowed to carry on to poison the minds of Pakistanis against Indians is in violation of Indo – Pakistan Agreement and the Prime Ministers’ Agreement. If the matter has not already been taken up with the Pakistan Foreign Office it is suggested that it should now be taken up afresh and they be requested to take deterrent action against the editor and publisher of the newspaper concerned with a view to put a stop to the publication of such objectionable writings in future as writings of this type are bound to affect adversely the relations between the two countries.

6. We would be grateful to be informed of the action taken by the High Commission in the matter.

Yours ever

0140. Note Verbale of the Indian Ministry of External Affairs to the Pakistan High Commission in India regarding the article in the daily Milap.

New Delhi, April 19, 1954.

Ministry of External Affairs

New Delhi, the 29th April, 1954.

The Ministry of External Affairs present their compliments to the High Commission for Pakistan in India and, with reference to the correspondence resting with High Commission Note No. F. 13(116) P/53 – 1119 dated the 15/17th March 1954 regarding the publications of an article entitled Abdul Qaiyum jail men in the Daily Milap of 3rd November 1953, have the honour to state that it is regretted that this newspaper should have used the type of language that it used in describing Khan Abdul Qaiyum Khan’s political activities. The newspaper has accordingly been warned to avoid the use of such regrettable language in future.

Attention is invited in this connection to the views expressed by the Pakistan newspapers on the activities of Khan Abdul Qaiyum Khan and his Ministry in the N.W.F.P. The article in the Milap appears to be based mostly on the writings appearing in the Pakistan press on this subject during that period. Some of the typical instances of such writings are enclosed (Statement I—not included here).

The Government of India at the same time express their surprise that the High Commission should have thought it fit to take exception to the article in question.
appearing in a very minor paper of this type when the Pakistan Press has been heaping insults and abuses on leaders of this country, not even excluding the Prime Minister of India from the range of their invectives. The Dawn, a foremost English Daily in Pakistan, referred to him in its leading article of 21. 1. 1954 as “Greatest Primitive” and the Morning News of Dacca called him a ‘demented Maniac’ in its issue of 9.1.1954. Some other typical instances of such writings are shown in the attached Statement No. II (not included here). It is needless to say that such writings, particularly if they appear on important and widely circulated papers, are hardly conducive to the building up of good relations between the two countries and are against all agreements between them. The Government of India would be grateful if the Government of Pakistan are requested to take stern action against the Editors and publishers of these papers.

The Ministry avail themselves of this opportunity to renew to the High Commission the assurances of their highest consideration.

The High Commission for Pakistan in India,
New Delhi.

Karachi, May 19, 1954.

High Commissioner for India
Karachi

No. 96/54/T(3) May 19, 1954

Subject: High Commissioner’s tour of East Pakistan.

My dear Dutt,

This was my third visit to East Bengal after I took over as High Commissioner for India in Pakistan. The first time I went on tour to that Province in July 1952 and the second in February/March 1953.

2. Usually I send a short report of my tours in the different parts of Pakistan. In keeping with that practice, I am forwarding herewith brief notes of my tour which will indicate the account of my visits to various place, Institution, and also the various persons I met during my tour.
3. Generally there are many matters which I have to take up with the East Bengal Government when I visit their Province. Right from the time I arrive at Calcutta, and even at Tripura and Shillong (when I visit those places), I hear many complaints which affect other Indian businessmen or the minorities in East Bengal. They relate to a variety of matters, some of them minor and others important.

4. This time the position was quite different. The old Muslim League Government had been thrown out of office as a result of a general election (the first one in East Bengal based on adult suffrage) which is in many respects unprecedented in political annuals. The new Government had not yet been fully installed. The Chief Minister (Mr. Fazlul Haq of the Krishak Shramik Party) had been appointed and he had till then selected only three ministers. The victory of the United Front was maliciously ascribed by certain fanatical and anti Indian elements in West Pakistan to the help of the Hindu money and influence from West Bengal. At such an early stage of the life of the new Ministry, it would have been impolitic and certainly very little use, my approaching them with any complaints. However, the complaints would have related to the time of the Nurul Amin Government. Therefore, from this point of view there was directly and specifically much less work for me to do than on the previous occasions. And yet, probably, this tour was no less useful and informative, indeed much more interesting than the previous tours.

5. The election itself indeed affected a silent revolution in the Eastern Wing of Pakistan, the full effects of which will shake the central Government itself and will, therefore, be felt in the Western wing of the country also. In fact, it was a miraculous event which was under the observant eyes of the whole world. Not even the worst pessimists of the Muslim League, nor the most reckless optimists of the United Front, could have anticipated such a rout of the ruling party as actually occurred. It is not at all an aggregation to say that so far as the Eastern and the more populous part of Pakistan is concerned, the Muslim League, which was very largely responsible for the creation of Pakistan, has been hounded of existence.

6. The causes of this political landslide have already been analyzed and studied. Their repetition here would be waste of space and time. It is enough to say that there were clear political and economic issues—matters which affected the life of the common man, the voter, and were, therefore, grasped by him—which brought about this result. By and large the political attacks of the opposition related to the problems of Government of which the Muslim League had more or less betrayed the electorate. Jute prices had reached almost rock bottom limits. Food and cloth for the poorest people were either not available or became extremely expensive. The stoppage of the border trade had brought economic ruin in certain areas. The introduction of the Visa system was found to be very unpopular owing to delay and the cumbersome procedure. The rule of the haughty and unimaginative West Pakistani Officer was unpopular in the extreme. The latter had brought the outlook of a colonial administrator and the local Bengali population also regarded him as a foreign ruler. There was, in addition, a large volume of opposition in the Province to the idea of Pakistan entering into a pact with the United States in order to obtain military aid from that country. And above all, the language issue moved the people, both Hindus and Muslims alike, as they had never been moved before.

7. There were also the personal factors. The Muslim League Ministers were mostly weak, even corrupt, and certainly incompetent. They were completely out of touch with the people. They were challenged in the political arena by such stout, astute and seasoned wrestlers as Fazlul Huq, Suhrawardy and Bhashani. The later were supported by hundreds of University students who were indignant and had remained embittered after the firing in February 1952. The youth of the country had imbibed leftist ideals and were no longer moved by narrow sectarian ideals. Anti-Indian slogans left them cold. In any case in normal times the Bengali Muslim always has a fraternal kinship with the non-Muslim Bengali. The Partition had not, not even had the large-scale communal rioting of 1950, totally smothered this sentiment. I realized more clearly than ever before that in political consciousness East Bengal was far ahead of any other unit of West Pakistan. The backward Provinces of the Frontier, Baluchistan or Bahawalpur are no comparison. Even the Punjab, where the society still remains largely under the control of feudal families, is far less developed for democratic institutions than East Bengal. With this is related an interesting factor that in East Bengal the middle-class leadership supplied in the pre-Partition days by the Hindu zamindar and the Hindu intellectual had been squeezed out. This factor has and is going to have in future, an important bearing on the development of political life in this Province. In undivided India, we know, East Bengal supplied some of the greatest political leaders, scholars and thinker to the country.

8. The great electoral fight had taken place. A complete and wonderful victory had been won. In assessing the future of the United Front Party, which is now holding the reins of office, it would be good to remember that its electoral success, phenomenal as it is, largely constitutes a negative result. It has succeeded in inflicting an ignominious defeat over its political opponents, the Muslim League. But there are yet no grounds for associating with the United Front Party clear and definite hopes for implementing a positive programme of progressive policies. There is a big interrogation mark in front of the Province indicative of a great uncertainty.
9. I reached East Pakistan less than a month after the results had been announced. In fact, when I arrived, the period of disillusionment had already started. Doubts were being felt whether the “United Front” would remain united. Conferences were being daily held between Suhrawardy and Fazlul Huq. The formation of the Ministry could not be finalized owing to differences between the Party leaders. The Governor went away to Karachi and was postponing his return day after day. The people in the county were impatiently watching these developments. In fact, a first class political crisis was already visible in the distant horizon. Whether this small cloud would develop into a storm, which would bring about disruption and disunity, or blow over leaving a clear blue sky of amity and opportunity for constructive progress, remained in the realm of speculation.

10. For the present, the prospects were hopeful. Wherever I went, in my capacity as representative of India, I received a more hearty welcome than in the past—when it was correct, even cordial, but no so deep and touching on this occasion. The desire to cultivate closer relations, cultural and commercial, with India was very clear. Even the officials were moved by this feeling. When I met the new Ministers, a spontaneous and unsolicited assurance was given to me that the new Government would be extremely earnest in developing friendly relations with India and the neighbouring Indian States. In fact, one of the Ministers (Abu Hassan Sarker) emphasized it almost too much. Another Minister (Ashrafuddin Ahmed Choudhury), in a frank and sincere talk, implored me to convey that feeling to our Prime Minister. Some of the problems, about which I was very anxious (such as border trade), appeared to be near a satisfactory solution. And yet there was all the time a big doubt in my mind as to how far people, with the political background of Fazlul Huq and Suhrawardy, when they assume power, would implement their election promises.

11. The minorities were, of course, feeling much more secure and happy than before, although a few individual leaders continued to remain pessimistic. It was confidently hoped that Fazlual Huq would be inviting two Hindus (one of them the Scheduled Caste) to join his Cabinet. If the United Front had not gained such an overwhelming majority in the elections, the minority community would have had a very important position in keeping the balance between the two big Muslim groups. From that narrow tactical point of view, such a sweeping defeat of the Muslim League was somewhat of a disadvantage.

12. This Province still remains largely undeveloped all round. The two exceptions are the towns of Dacca and Chittagong. The former, being the capital of the Province, had to grow more or less as a matter of course, but the planning and expansion of the town and harbour of Chittagong is certainly a creditable record for the Port Authorities. Otherwise, the people remain poor, Industrialization has been slow and in communications the Province is still rather backward. There is great scope for improvement in the condition of the roads, Railways and steamer services. The cottage industries have not received anything like the encouragement which they need and deserve. Even some of the centers of higher education gave one the impression of lack of care and efficiency. In general, one gets the impression that there has been no impetus or drive towards social and economic progress. The standards of administration remain indifferent except that there are some very fine individual officers whose ability and character seem to leave a mark on their surroundings.

13. Generally, I attempt visiting 5 or 6 Districts in my tour which lasts about a fortnight. I try to visit small towns and villages, though, for lack of time, it is not always possible to achieve this purpose. Each year I repeat my visit to two or three Districts and visit some new ones. Thus there is a chance of making new acquaintances of places and people, and also of renewing old ones. This year Dacca, Chittagong and Sylhet were the places which I had visited before. Chittagong Hill Tracts, Mymensingh and Rajshahi were the Districts which I visited for the first time. Mymensingh is, from the point of view of population and the number of minority people, very important. Rajshahi was of a special interest, because (a) we would soon be establishing there our Visa Office in charge of an Assistant High Commissioner, and (b) a new University is going to be established at that place, the legislation of which has already been passed. Historically and culturally too, Rajshahi is an important centre. In quite a different class, and yet of special interest, was the Chittagong Hill Tracts District. It is situated far in the interior with no proper road communication, and the population of which is mostly Buddhist and of a different racial stock from the rest of the Province. It was a very interesting experience indeed to visit this hilly and Budi area. I visited a tribal village and spent a whole afternoon with the people. I saw them dance, sing and play at their huts. Their life and economy were different and of a colorful interest. The people were rather lazy and poor, but contented and in good health. Apparently, they live remote from the world currents of activity, but the recent elections must have stirred their stagnant life a little. This was evident from the fact that the Chakma Chief was defeated in the elections by a common man, although they still belong largely to the tribal system of society. My notes contain a brief account of their economic life and land tenure system.

14. I was prevented by the East Bengal Government from visiting Kaptai, the site of the Hydro-electric Project, and the Chendragona Paper Mills, down the stream of the Karnafuli River, because about a fortnight earlier there had occurred a serious trouble in the Paper Mill resulting in the death of 11 persons, including the General Manager. It is said that the cause of the dispute was the strong feeling of the local people against the West Pakistani Officers. The former resented the treatment of the later.
15. While it is evident that the result of the recent general elections in East Bengal will have far-reaching effect on the political future of Pakistan and on its constitutional structure and development, we in India will also have to take note of the sentiments and trends of thought which brought about that result. Not only the States of Assam and West Bengal, which will feel the impact directly, but our country as a whole should keep in view the psychology, the cultural, political and economic urge, and the general historical and geographical factor which swayed the electorate. Indian leadership will be wise in understanding these factors in formulating their plans and policies governing our relations with Pakistan. This matter cannot be too strongly emphasized.

16. From this follows, almost as a corollary, that the Branch of this Mission at Dacca under our Deputy High Commissioner will always have a special importance for our country and our Government. I am certain that the Ministry of External Affairs is aware of this.

17. Our present Deputy High Commissioner, B.K. Acharya, belongs to the Indian Civil Service (Bengal Cadre). He has been there for nearly 2 ½ years. His predecessor was a politician (Mr. Mukherji of Assam). I am happy to say that Acharya has shown himself to be a competent tactful and energetic officer. In the past in some matters his approach towards certain problems was different from mine. We frankly discussed our differences last year. I now find that even those differences have almost disappeared. Acharya has, as stated above, discharged his difficult duties with success and ability. In the administration of his office organization, which has become considerably large with the establishment of our Visa Offices at Dacca, Comilla and Rajshahi, he has shown qualities of impartiality and leadership. It would be desirable to let him continue at Dacca for at least another year, provided it does not work to his disadvantage. I feel sure that it would be very useful for the new High Commissioner for India in Pakistan to have at his disposal Acharya's experience at least for the first two or three months of his term.

18. The housing conditions under which our staff has to endure life are a matter of great anxiety to me. I am quite clear in my mind that when we send our officers and staff to a foreign country, we must provide decent sanitary houses for them not only for the Officers but also for the non-gazetted staff. It is a great shame that this matter is neglected in Pakistan, largely perhaps because of the psychological factor that the territory of Pakistan was once a part of India. This problem is, I am convinced, intimately connected with the quality of the work turned out by our staff and the standard of their behaviour. In this respect, we of this Mission have had to start with a heavy handicap. I would strongly recommend that our Government purchase land for building the Chancery, a proper residence for the Deputy High Commissioner and also quarters for the Officers and the staff. This would involve some investment but in the long run it would be a much more economical proposition from the financial point of view, apart from yielding valuable dividends in the shape of improved morale and conduct of our staff. Incidentally, it would also mean much greater security for our staff, our documents and our Mission in general.

19. The Visa Office Organization is being managed as well as it is possible under the circumstances. A very competent officer from the Indian Administrative Service from West Bengal started the office. In that he was a success. I was favourably impressed with the ability of our present Chief Visa Officers, Mr. Grewal. I could spend very little time in his office, but he seemed to know his duties and was discharging them properly. The building of the Visa office which we obtained with great difficulty is far from satisfactory. Our staff is congested in those sheds and the public who come to apply for Visas are put to great inconvenience particularly under rain and the heat of the Sun. It is certainly a depressing situation, but we are more or less helpless.

20. It is hoped that in two or three months our Chancery would be shifted to a new building which is situated on a main road and has decent surroundings. The Commercial and the Information Sections which are now in separate buildings will also be brought under the same roof. This would be a great advantage indeed and I feel very happy that we succeeded in obtaining the Government's sanction to rent this building which has been recently constructed.

21. Before leaving the province, I gave, in consultation with the Deputy High Commissioner, a few words of advice to the First Secretary and the Commercial Officer, which was, I am glad to say, taken in good spirit. Both of them are doing well except in one of two matters in which these suggestions were desirable.

22. On the whole the Chancery staff seems to be contented and attending to their duties well. I could not give to them as much time as I would like to have done. The new building will perhaps be an additional incentive in raising their standard of work.

23. Two Lady Social workers are posted at Dacca for the recovery of abducted women but so far as I could see they had hardly anything to do.

24. In connection with my tour of East Bengal, I usually visit Calcutta. There I make it a point to meet the Governor (Dr. Mukherji), the Chief Minister (Dr. B.C Roy) and the Secretaries of the West Bengal Government. My discussions with them are of special value. From Dr. Mukherji, with his impartial outlook and detached position, I receive valuable opinions and information. Dr. Roy is always fully posted with the events in the neighbouring Province of East Bengal. Many of the Secretaries in West Bengal Government have served in East Bengal in the old days. Contacts with them are also very helpful.
25. Similarly, I have managed to pay a short visit to Shillong to meet the Governor and Ministers of Assam. They are very appreciative of this action and discuss all those subjects which affect the relations of that State with East Bengal. Last year I went for two days to Tripura also. I could not include Tripura in my itinerary this year. At last, the Pakistan Government have, I found out, built their Customs post at Akhaura near the border (Tripura – East Bengal).

26. The complaints which were brought to my notice by Indian businessmen in East Pakistan will have to be taken up separately with the appropriate authorities at Karachi. There is very little hope of achieving much success in the present atmosphere when everything tends to get tied up in knots.

27. I utilized this tour of East Bengal for holding the third meeting of our Deputy High Commissioners at Dacca on the 19th and 20th of April. We have now made it an annual affair and my plan is to have this conference at the three centers – Karachi, Lahore and Dacca by rotation. I am happy to have started this periodical meeting of the three Deputy High Commissioners. It will have great value in coordinating the work of this Mission and keeping the three Deputy High Commissioners in close touch with developments in the three different units of Pakistan.

28. The 16 days that I spent in East Bengal had a full, rather hectic programme which made it all the more strenuous in the humid heat of April. I must have met scores of people in different stations of life—Ministers, officials, non-officials of different creeds and occupations. These contacts are of great value indeed. For the Head of the Indian Mission in Pakistan and his chief Assistants, I am convinced that it would be indeed very profitable to tour in the interior of the country in the different units of Pakistan in order to meet people in various walks of life, so that they could acquaint themselves first-hand with their feelings and aspirations not only for their own country but towards their great neighbour, India. Sitting as the Headquarters, one is too prone to judge the people’s mind by the writings in the daily press. The press in Pakistan is largely misleading because of its low journalistic standards and anti-Indian bias. Moreover, these tours would also give an opportunity to the High Commissioners for India of explaining and interpreting to the people in direct personal intercourse the policies and attitude of the Government of India. Left to the Government and the press of Pakistan, our views are frequently and manifestly misrepresented. My own experience has confirmed this time after time. With this belief, I hope that my successors would also visit the various units of Pakistan and meet the people directly.

29. At Dacca again this year I had a Reception to which a large number of prominent persons, both official and others, were invited. The Deputy High Commissioner had another Reception for me these two Receptions covered almost all persons in the various branches of public life of this Province residing at the capital, whom it was desirable for me to meet socially.

30. The fuller notes of my tour and the daily diary are here with enclosed* along with a map of East Bengal. They may be read in such parts as may be considered interesting.

Yours sincerely
(Mohan Sinha Mehta)

0142. Note Verbale of the Pakistan Ministry of Foreign Affairs to the Indian High Commission in Pakistan regarding objectionable writings in the Pakistani media.

Karachi, June 2, 1954.

Ministry of Foreign Affairs & Commonwealth Relations
Karachi

The Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Commonwealth Relations, Government of Pakistan, presents its compliments to the High Commission for India in Pakistan, and with reference to their note No. F. 20 (4)/53 – Genl dated the 30th March, 1954, regarding the alleged objectionable writings in the Afaq has the honour to say that the High Commission were informed on the 28th December, 1953, that the attention of the editor was drawn to the poem, and he has been warned against publication of matter which tended to embitter relations between the two countries.

2. It is not clear why the Government of India in the note, under reference, have also quoted items which appeared in the paper before the warning was administered to the editor. As the editor was warned on the 28th December, 1953, obviously it is not necessary to take any step against him for the writings from 4. 9. 53 to 12. 12. 53. With regard to the sixth item, the Government of Pakistan regret to state that writings of this nature in the Pakistan press are entirely due to the continued exodus of Muslims from India to Pakistan, the occurrence of communal riots and reports about shuddhi activities in India. Such reports being factual, it is difficult to take any action with reference to the complaint made by the Government of India. As regards item number seven, it has been dealt with separately and the High Commission informed vide this Ministry’s letter No. D. 2231 – I (I)/54, dated the 21st May, 1954. So far item eight is concerned it may be stated that it does not fall within the purview of the Delhi Agreement of December, 1948, the object of which was to discourage mass exodus of minorities from either country, and the Minorities Agreement of April, 1950, under which action is to be taken “to prevent the dissemination of news and mischievous opinion calculated to reuse communal passion by press…”

3. The Government of Pakistan are surprised that the Government of India in their note No. P. 111/53/55524/1 dated the 17th March, 1954, have stated that Partap is a comparatively minor and unimportant paper, and secondly the Government of Pakistan could have issued a contradiction to the item if they so desired. Partap has a circulation of over 20, 000 while Afaq has a circulation of only 2, 000. If this Government accept the Government of India’s stand about the outpouring of the Partap, which is considered by them to be a minor and unimportant paper, with a circulation of over 20, 000, it is difficult to accept their protest against material published by the Afaq which has a circulation of 2, 000 only.

4. With reference to para 3 of the note, under reference, the Government of Pakistan suggest that action against Partap may be taken on the lines of action which the Government of Pakistan took against the Afaq.

5. The Ministry avails itself of this opportunity to renew to the High Commission the assurances of its highest consideration.

My dear Dutt,

There is a big interrogation mark in the minds of people regarding the future of East Bengal. It is a very intriguing situation and the prospects about developments in that unhappy province remain covered under a heavy blanket of uncertainty.

2. The Prime Minister has committed his Government in no uncertain terms that Section 92-A Rule will be continued for the minimum period of time necessary to restore normal conditions of peace and tranquility in the Province. General Iskander Mirza has been promised and given wide powers to inspire in the people due respect for law and order. Although martial law has not been declared, the Governor will unhesitatingly enforce the spirit of martial law if any resistance is offered from any quarter. There would not be the slightest sign of weakness or reluctance in taking most ruthless measures to suppress agitation against his authority. He has lost no opportunity of impressing this on the people.

3. As you have already been informed, the meeting of the United Front Party which was to be held on Sunday last, 6th June, was not permitted. More than 700 people have been arrested and put in prison, including some members of the Provincial Assembly. Anybody who is suspected of having Communist leanings is locked up.

4. The complexity of the situation, I feel, arises largely from the personal character of the Governor himself. Iskander Mirza is a soldier. He is adored in the Army. They would be ready to lay down their life for him and in carrying out his orders. He would very soon start cleansing the administration. There is no doubt that he will not tolerate even a trace of criticism, much less opposition to his plans. At the same time he will be brutally fair, impartial and earnest in improving the lot of the common man. It is very probable that in his attempt to reform the administration he will expose the inefficiency, nepotism and corruption of the old Muslim League Government. He would have no respect for those dishonest Ministers, although they belong to the Party which rules at the Centre, and which selected him for this special and difficult responsibility. Then again, he has a contempt for the Mullah element and he is not the type of man who will conceal his feelings on any subject.

5. This leads one to the inevitable contradiction which this situation involves, i.e., the conflict between the promise of the Central Government to restore normal constitutional Government and the enforcement of the Governor's Rule under Section 92-A. It is hardly conceivable that Governor Iskander Mirza would be suitable for working as a constitutional Governor. If, therefore, popular democratic administration is restored, whether with the present Assembly in which the United Front party has an overwhelming majority, or after fresh elections, the present Governor would not, in any case, fit into that scheme. The conflict between the two will be quick and sharp. Even if they have fresh elections, it is pretty definite that the Muslim League has no chances whatsoever of being returned in a majority, and whoever the Governor may be, the Party which holds the majority vote in the Assembly will again re-assert itself. It is almost certain that in two important matters they will be forced by public opinion to take a strong line—(a) to press for the largest measure of provincial autonomy, i.e. to show their teeth to the Centre in a bitter, even retaliatory spirit, and (b) to support the views, aspirations and interests of the Bengali element against the refugee and West Pakistani People.

6. Thus the prospects of the unity and solidarity of Pakistan, of which one hears and reads so much in West Pakistan to-day, are indeed poor. That is the conclusion to which one is driven in the present circumstances. The bogey of bringing in Hindus and Bharat will not help them very much in the future. It will continue to be raised but it will yield diminishing returns as time passes.

7. Against this, one has to reckon a few other factors. In the first place, a strong and straightforward administrator, like Iskander Mirza, is bound to come into conflict with the weak, selfish and intriguing persons who at present form the loosely knit Central Government of Pakistan to-day. He will disregard them; in fact, he has already started the process. I am reliably told that the Central Government asked him to withdraw his order canceling 21\textsuperscript{st} February as a public holiday. The United Front had declared it as a “Martyrs’ Day” (you will recollect that there was firing at Dacca on the 21\textsuperscript{st} February 1952 in which two students engaged in a demonstration on the language issue were killed). Iskander Mirza refused to carry out the Central Government’s orders. Such occasions may arise again. Iskander Mirza did not ask for being sent to East Bengal and he will not stay there for a minute longer than he can carry out the purpose of his mission. Mohammed Ali, the Prime Minister, has completely forfeited the respect and support of his compatriots of East Bengal. There is no way by which he can regain his position in public life, unless he comes into conflict with Iskander Mirza’s doings at a later stage, and, if there is disagreement in his Cabinet, he resigns on that issue. That might restore his leadership in Bengal. One can easily imagine that he might follow this tactic. The Central Government, besides being a divided house, is composed of characterless individuals, who are busy grinding their own axes, separately and sometimes in cliques. The Governor General does not pull on with the Cabinet. The Army has not much respect for the Central Government. Iskander Mirza is universally liked in the Defence Services. I understand that the Governor General is likely to lean on the Army for support in case another political crisis develops in Pakistan.

0144. Note Verbale from the Pakistan Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Commonwealth Relations to the Indian Ministry of External Affairs regarding the publication Fatwa.

Karachi, June 30/July 2, 1954.

Ministry Of Foreign Affairs & Commonwealth Relations
Karachi

No. I (I) – 14/6/54. the 30 June/2 July , 1954.

The Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Commonwealth Relations, Government of Pakistan, presents its compliments to the Government of India, Ministry of External Affairs, and with reference to the correspondence ending with their note No. F. 30(1)/54 Genl. Dated the 6th February, 1954, regarding the publication entitled Fatwa, have the honour to state that the Government of Pakistan regret that they are unable to accept the stand taken by the Government of India in this matter. In this connection, reference is invited to para 10 of the minutes of the meeting of IPICC held on the 6th May, 1950, which is as follows: -

“The two Governments should, therefore, undertake a publicity campaign at least for the next six months or so to reach the masses that did not read newspapers. The aim of this campaign would be to promote amity between the nationals of the two countries. At fairs and festivals, visible demonstration of the new atmosphere should be provided by exhibition of films, by talks and through other media including gramophone records.”
Also, a band of young men should be recruited for the purpose. The cost of publicity, it was pointed out, would be far less than the cost of dealing with problems such as relief and rehabilitation of refugees resulting from disharmony.

2. The spirit of para 1 of the minutes of the meeting in question also supports this Government’s stand. This para reads as follows: -

“The Committee felt that it would not be in consonance with the spirit of the April Agreement, and the changed atmosphere to scrutinize breaches of the 1948 Agreement in either country. The Committee thought that in order to advance the objects of the Agreement on minorities all efforts should be directed towards the future.”

3. It could not have been the intention to exclude the breaches in matters of publications, films and broadcasting from consideration because a scrutiny of these breaches was bound to exacerbate feelings. If a changed atmosphere was desired, the obvious course was to start with a clean slate not only in the matter of press but also in the matter of publications, films and broadcasting.

4. The Government of Pakistan cannot agree to Kashmir publicity being treated otherwise than on a special footing. In the I.P.I.C.C. meeting held on the 1st and 2nd August, 1949, it was acknowledged that each Government was free to give publicity to its own point of view. The same freedom, obviously, could be exercised by the people of both the countries.

5. Under these circumstances, the Government of Pakistan cannot unreservedly accept the point of view of the Government of India on this vital question.

6. In suggesting drastic action against the persons responsible for the publication and circulation of the booklet Fatwa, and suggesting confiscation of its copies and banning its further circulation, the Government of India have, in the opinion of the Government of Pakistan, gone far beyond the decision arrived at the Indo – Pakistan Information Consultative Committee meetings. Reference is, in this connection, invited to the minutes of the meeting held on the 16th March, 1949. The relevant paras are: -

“III (i) The Committee agreed to recommend that Government publications produced before or after the Delhi Agreement which involved an infringement of the Agreement should be withdrawn from circulation and that this recommendation should be submitted to the Cabinet in each Dominion for approval.”

“III (iii) Each Dominion will bring to the notice of the other Dominion, objectionable non – official publications produced in that Dominion for suitable action."

7. The publication in question, being a non – official publication, falls in category mentioned in para III (iii) referred to above. According to the recommendation quoted above, the Government of India have a right to bring this non – official publication to the notice of the Government of Pakistan for suitable action. It is for this Government at its own discretion to decide what action should be taken in the matter. The Government of India have brought this publication to our notice and the matter should rest there so far as they are concerned.

8. Finally, the Government of Pakistan consider it strange that while the Government of India should carry on constant and persistent propaganda to mobilize public opinion against this country through various media of publicity, both official and non–official, they should feel perturbed about such an unimportant publication in Pakistan.

9. The Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Commonwealth Relations avails itself of the opportunity to renew to the Government of India the assurances of its highest consideration.

Note from High Commission of India in Pakisan to Ministry of Foreign Affairs.
Karachi, July 2, 1954
High Commission Of India
New Town, Karachi-5

No. F. 30(16)/54-Genl. 2nd July, 1954

The Indian High Commission presents its compliments to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Commonwealth Relations, Government of Pakistan and has the honour to invite with considerable regret the attention of the Government of Pakistan to the proceedings of the debates which took place in the Constituent Assembly (Legislature) of Pakistan on the 19th and the 22nd April, 1954. In course of this debate some members of the Assembly including responsible and highly-placed dignitaries of the country attacked India and her Prime Minister and advocated dire measures including war for taking over the State of Jammu and Kashmir.

2. The Indian High Commission has from time to time brought to the notice of the Government of Pakistan bellicose, abusive and mischievous writings in Pakistan press, some of them with very wide circulation in Pakistan. The Government of Pakistan have apparently taken no action and these mischievous writings continue unchecked. It is now a matter of profound regret that even in an august body like the Constituent Assembly of Pakistan, war with India should be advocated and abuses heaped on Indian leaders in the most unrestrained language. The record of the debate is available to the Government of Pakistan and the High Commission do not propose to quote extensively form all the speeches of this type. They, however, wish to draw particular attention to the following extracts from the speech of Sardar Abdur Rab Nisthar:-

"...Unfortunately, we are dealing with a man, (the Prime Minister of India) with all respect to him, if he analyses his conduct and character, will find him as "not a normal man...". "...But unfortunately he has got his swollen head. Some people think that a swollen head contains a contracted brain. May be it is correct; maybe it is not correct. But the way in which he behaves with the people has given me this impression and my experience of his approach to various problems has convinced me that be is a great bluffer. He always bluffs people; losses his temper, terrifies his people. But the moment you call his bluffs, he is all right." "...But if I may be permitted, I will submit to the Government that first of all they should give up the policy of appeasement. Pandit Nehru is not a man who could be brought to his senses by a policy of appeasement."
3. Sardar Abdur Rab Nishtar hinted at warlike measures in the following terms:

"... A national council should be set up for the purpose of liberation of Kashmir so that the whole national effort should be mobilized. The Government, if it is possible, should organize a national militia in Pakistan for the liberation of Kashmir. If Government, on account of any difficulties find it not possible—although I do not think there should be any difficulty when a certain attitude has been adopted by the other side then through that National Council which is set up they should be allowed to set up a national militia in Pakistan for the liberation of Kashmir..... Let us unite ourselves, let us mobilize our own people and if ultimately all peaceful avenues fail then let us for the defence of our country rise to a man. This is the only course which should be followed. It may avoid war – if war is avoided it will only be by this method – but if it is not avoided and we go to war, then I believe that Insha Allah we would succeed because we are in the right and righteousness has always the support of the Almighty....".

4. The Indian High Commission would like to point out that statements of the type quoted above by a person of Sardar Abdur Rab Nishtar’s position in Pakistan cannot but cause the utmost mischief. It is all the more distressful therefore that no less a person that the Hon’ble Chaudhuri Mohammad Zafrullah Khan, Minister for Foreign Affairs and Commonwealth Relations of the Government of Pakistan, congratulated the speakers “on the great restraint and moderation with which they have expressed themselves’ and then proceeded to say as follows:-

"... Little has been said during the course of the debate with which I find myself at variance or indifference except on matters of degree or emphasis here and there and except the suggestion made by one Honourable member in effect that we should do nothing. With that I entirely disagree. To that extent, therefore, my task is easy and has been rendered easy. I shall seek to fill in a few gaps in the case as stated"

"... I am very much inclined with a slight degree of difference over emphasis, to agree with every word that Sardar Abdur Rab Nishtar has said on this subject..."

5. The Government of Pakistan are no doubt aware of the desire and the determination of the Prime Ministers of India and Pakistan to maintain good relations between the two countries. In the joint communiqué issued by them after their talks in New Delhi, it was stated that “progress can only be made in this direction if there is an atmosphere of peace and cooperation between the two countries. This has, therefore, to be actively encouraged. The Prime Ministers deprecate any propaganda or attacks on one country by the other in the press, by radio or by speeches and statements made by responsible men and women of either country. They trust, therefore, that all organs and responsible leaders of public opinion will direct themselves to this great task of promoting goodwill between the two countries and thus help in solving all problems and disputes that might exist between them. The Prime Ministers attach the greatest importance to this friendly approach and to the avoidance, of words and action which promote discord between the two countries. The High Commission hopes that in accordance with the spirit of this Agreement, the Government of Pakistan would once again enjoin upon the responsible leaders of Pakistan the need for avoiding incitement of the communal passions of the people and creating war psychosis by bellicose statements.

6. The High Commission avails itself of this opportunity to renew to the Government of Pakistan the assurances of its highest consideration.

0146. Letter from Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru to Pakistani Prime Minister Mohammad Ali.

New Delhi August 23, 1954

My dear Prime Minister,

Thank you for your letter of the 14th July which you sent me in answer to my letter of the 13th April 1954. I hope you will forgive me for the delay in replying to it. You have been away from Karachi for a considerable part of this time and I have also been touring and otherwise very much occupied. I would also draw your attention to the letter addressed by me to you dated May 7, 1954, to which I have had no reply yet. This letter dealt with the evacuee property problem.

2. In your letter of the 14th July, you refer to the opening of the Bhakra canal. I need not deal with this matter fully at this stage because I am glad to find that, through the good offices of the World Bank, a further agreement about future negotiations, on the basis of the World Bank proposals, is in sight. But I should like to remove some misunderstanding. You have not been in touch with this matter except lately and I can, therefore, well understand that you are not fully posted with the background. When the President of the World Bank first made his proposal to the then Prime Minister of Pakistan and to me, and we both agreed to it, it was generally understood that the preliminary talks with the World Bank would take about six months or so. In my talks with Mr Black, this was mentioned as a rough estimate. I made it clear to him that we could not commit ourselves, indefinitely, to the assurance we had given about not diminishing the supply of water. We pointed out particularly that the Bhakra-Nangal project was under construction and would gradually take shape. We were spending vast sums of money on this project and we could not be expected to suspend it or stop its future development. It is true that no period was mentioned in the written assurance that was given.

3. Instead of six months, as anticipated, these talks went on for a year and then for two years. In the course of these talks, our representatives at Washington clearly mentioned that the Bhakra-Nangal scheme was developing and the time was rapidly coming when part of it would be ready and we would require additional water supplies. Early in 1954 this was clearly stated both to the Bank separately and at the joint meetings. Even when the Bank made its final proposal, this was pointed out by us. We were anxious that your representatives should be fully informed of the position. Later we gave formal notice of it when we found that the negotiations through the Bank had come to a standstill because, at that time, you were not prepared to accept the proposals of the Bank, which we had accepted.

4. You will appreciate that any assurance of the kind that was given by us is of an interim character. It could not possibly continue indefinitely regardless of other circumstances. Otherwise, it would be open to one party merely not to take any step and thereby prevent the other from functioning.

5. Further, as a matter of fact, even on the opening of the Bhakra canal and after, we did not reduce the normal supply of irrigation water to Pakistan, and I must confess I fail to understand the reason for the outcry in Pakistan on this subject.

6. Because of this self-denying act on our part, we have lost a whole season to the great disappointment of large numbers of agriculturists who were expecting this water.

7. I need not go into this question any further at this stage. I hope that further talks will take place now on the basis of the acceptance of the Bank proposal by both sides and, separately, an ad hoc arrangement will also be arrived at.
8. I should like to remind you of the canal water agreement between India and Pakistan which was arrived at on the 4th May 1948. That agreement was signed, among others, by your present Governor-General and by me. It gave India the right to restrict water supplies provided we gave Pakistan enough time to make other arrangements. In fact, we did not lessen or restrict the supply of water to your canals at any time during these six years. There was some argument about a year ago about some minor restriction, but that was, I think, adequately explained at the time. You will observe that we have tried our utmost during these years to be cooperative in this matter with Pakistan and not to take any step which might cause injury to the agriculturists in Pakistan.

9. The second point that you deal with in your letter is the question of military aid from the United States of America to Pakistan and its effect on the Kashmir issue. We have discussed this question repeatedly and I do not feel that I need add anything to what I have already written. I do not and cannot challenge your right to accept that military aid or to come to any arrangement with any country. But I ventured to point out to you the consequences of that step on certain important questions which concern us. You refer to the threat to your security. It is not clear to me from what source that threat comes, or how your security is endangered. If you think that threat comes from India, I think you are completely mistaken because that is not only entirely opposed to our policy but, in the circumstances of today, outside the range of possibilities. But, whether it is possible or not, if that aid is in relation to India, then naturally it affects us and we are concerned. If this bears direct relation to the Kashmir issue, then the whole context of that question changes and we have to consider it afresh from a new point of view.

10. In discussing certain preliminary steps to be taken in regard to Kashmir, we had repeatedly considered the quantum of forces to be kept there. We had not come to an agreement, but there was the possibility of an agreement on the facts as they then were. We were agreeable to withdrawing a very considerable part of our armed forces from Kashmir State, provided Pakistan took certain steps including the withdrawal of her forces from the Kashmir State territory occupied by her. This position changes completely when the military resources of Pakistan increase greatly because of the aid received from the United States. We do not know how much aid Pakistan has received or is likely to receive. But, in any event, it is a natural presumption that it will be considerable. In addition, Pakistan will have the powerful military backing of a great power. In these circumstances we have now to take into consideration this additional military strength of Pakistan. The basis of our previous discussions, in regard to quantum of forces, ceases to have relevance and entirely new considerations emerge and must apply.
11. It was on this preliminary question that we could not come to an agreement and because the preliminaries were not settled, we could not go further ahead. The present development renders the basis of our discussions on this subject unreal.

12. It is also evident that our approach to these problems differs widely. You have ruled out a no-war declaration, which I have repeatedly suggested, and you have accepted and rely more on foreign military aid. A no-war declaration brings more security than military preparation and creates a better atmosphere for the solution of problems. I agree that those problems have to be solved as soon as possible. But to oppose a no-war declaration till those problems are solved, neither brings security nor helps in the solution of these problems.

13. You are no doubt aware that some time ago my Government and the Government of the People’s Republic of China issued a joint declaration in which we mentioned five principles which should govern our relations. These included mutual respect for each other’s independence and territorial integrity; non-aggression, and non-interference with each other. Such a declaration gives far greater assurance of security and friendly relations than military pacts or military preparations. To agree to any such declaration does not mean that we should not try to solve our problems. It means that we should solve them in a better and more friendly atmosphere, having ruled out the possibility of a recourse to war, which should be your desire as it is mine.

14. I have in the past drawn your attention to the violent propaganda in Pakistan in favour of war with India. Many instances of this have occurred in recent months. You will appreciate that this is not a background for friendly talks. So far as I am concerned, I am anxious and eager for a settlement about Kashmir and other issues. In regard to the canal waters issue, we agreed to the World Bank’s proposals even though they threw a very heavy burden on us. No one can accuse the World Bank of partiality to India in this matter. They went deeply into this question and considered it, in consultation with your engineers and ours, for two and a half years. In regard to the evacuee property matter, my last letter to you, written more than three months ago, has elicited no reply.

15. During the last few months a great and welcome development has taken place in international affairs owing to the conclusion of the Geneva Agreements on Indo-China. The long drawn-out and disastrous war has been ended and for the first time after many years, there is no war between nations in any part of the world. That is a development for which all of us should be devoutly thankful. Grave perils and dangers still confront us in the world, but a new turn has been taken—away from war and towards peace. That can be strengthened by each country resolving to maintain peace and avoid war and not by preparing for war and having military talks and alliances which can only be meant against some other country. I would wish that Pakistan and India took advantage of this new situation that has been created and approached each other in a more friendly and cooperative way.

Yours sincerely
Jawaharlal Nehru

TOP SECRET
Letter from Pakistan Prime Minister Mohammad Ali to Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru.
Karachi, December 8, 1954.

PRIME MINISTER
Pakistan,Karachi,

December 8, 1954.

My dear Mr. Nehru,

Since the receipt of your last letter dated September 29th, I have been thinking intensely about the international situation, and in particular of the unhappy relations that obtain between our two countries. I have been led once again forcibly to the conclusion that we must do everything within our power to hasten the settlement of the disputes that continue distressingly to bedevil the relations between our two countries. I am confident that such a settlement would produce a profound effect on the situation in Asia and make a powerful contribution to world peace.

I would suggest, therefore, that you and I meet as early as possible and consider how best we can resolve our differences. If this idea appeals to you, my colleagues and I would be very happy indeed to receive you in Karachi at any time convenient to you next month. Alternatively, if it should suit your convenience better, I will be glad to come over to Delhi myself on a suitable date. In the meantime, I shall greatly look forward to our meeting in Indonesia.

With regards,
The Hon’ble
Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru,
Prime Minister of India,
New Delhi.

Yours sincerely
Sd/- MOHAMMAD ALI

IMMEDIATE

PRIMIN 22570.

December 16, 1954

MEHTA from Prime Minister.

Please convey following message to PRIME MINISTER MOHAMMAD ALI on my behalf.

2. Begins: Thank you for your letter of 8th December which was delivered to me yesterday by your High Commissioner.

I entirely agree with you that we should do everything in our power to settle such problems as exist between Pakistan and India. I would gladly meet you to discuss these matters. My only difficulty is the fact that I am almost completely tied up for some time to come. On my return from Indonesia early in January, I have to attend the Indian Science Congress session and have some other important engagements. After that I have just a few days in Delhi which are full of work and engagements prior to my departure for a fairly lengthy period. I shall be busy with preparations for our annual Congress Session which is being held in South India. I shall leave Delhi for the South about the 14th January and return on the 25th. After two days here, I shall leave for London.

You will see that my programme is a very tight one and it is difficult to make important variations in it. I will anyhow be meeting you at DJAKARTA and I am looking forward to it.
I would suggest to you that meanwhile we might take in hand immediately some of the relatively minor problems between us and have them discussed at official level. I am quite sure that there are quite a number of things which will help in bringing India and Pakistan nearer. Even travel facilities now are difficult and can be improved. Then there are various questions connected with the evacuee question, which have been discussed so often before. If you and your colleagues so desire, I can ask our new minister of Rehabilitation, MEHR CHAND KHANNA, to go to Karachi to discuss these Matters. Apart from that there could be an official level meeting in regard to some other matters. ENDS

LVI INDIA-PAKISTAN RELATIONS
0149. Note of the Pakistan High Commission in India to the Ministry of External Affairs.

New Delhi, January 12, 1955.

High Commissioner for Pakistan in India
New Delhi

F. I (3) P/54 the 12th January 1955.

The Pakistan High Commission in India present their compliments to the Government of India, Ministry of External Affairs, New Delhi, and have the honour to inform them that a new Steering Committee has been set up by the Government of Pakistan at Karachi to deal with matters which are under dispute between Pakistan and India. The Steering Committee comprises following personnel:

1. Mr. J.A. Rahim … Chairman.
2. Mr. M.S.A. Baig … Secretary.
3. Mr. M.A. Mozaffar … Joint Secretary, Ministry of Finance (Member)

2. The Pakistan High Commission would request the Government of India to kindly forward the names of the Indian Steering Committee* for onward transmission to the Government of Pakistan.

3. The Government of Pakistan consider it desirable that there should be a meeting of the two Steering Committees at an early date, and this High Commission would therefore be grateful to know from the Government of India as to which dates would suit them for a meeting of the two Steering Committees. It may also kindly be stated as to where the Government of India would like the Steering Committees to meet.

4. The High Commission, take the opportunity to renew to the Government of India the assurances of their highest consideration.

The Ministry of External Affairs,
Government of India, New Delhi.

* On January 15th in a Note No.P.II/54/679110/1-2 India Conveyed the three names of the Indian Steering Committee: S. Dutt Commonwealth Secretary MEA, M.V. Rangachari, Secretary, Ministry of Finance and V.C. Trivedi Director MEA. India agreed with need for an early meeting and invited Pakistan Committee to meet in New Delhi. It also asked Pakistan side to suggest suitable dates.
0150. Cable from Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru to Indian High Commissioner in Karachi Mohan Sinha Mehta regarding invitation to the Governor General of Pakistan to attend the Indian Republic Day celebrations.

New Delhi, January 12, 1955.

From: Foreign, New Delhi.

To: Hicomind, Karachi.

MOST IMMEDIATE

Primin.21013. January 12, 1955

Mehta from Prime Minister.

Please convey following message from our President to Governor General Ghulam Mohammad.

2. BEGINS:

I shall be happy if you can visit Delhi as our guest during the celebrations in connection with the Republic Day, January 26th. It is not usual for us to invite guests from abroad on Republic Day but, nevertheless, as the head of a friendly neighbour country and as a person closely associated with India in the past, your coming here on this occasion would be very welcome. I hope you will forgive this short notice. If it suits your convenience, you could arrive here on the 24th January, have some rest on the 25th and then participate in our various functions during the next two or three days. Any persons accompanying you will, of course, be also welcome.

Rajendra Prasad.

ENDS.

3. Raja Gazanfar Ali* suggested our inviting Ghulam Mohammad for Republic Day. At first I did not approve of the idea as we are much too busy then with our own functions and we do not invite outsiders. Also I shall be going away soon after to London. On giving the matter further thought, however, I felt that it might be desirable to invite the Governor General and I advised the President accordingly.

4. You will please convey this invitation personally and state that I would be happy also if the Governor General could come here. It will not be possible to have any long talks then because we shall all be terribly busy, but I feel the

* Pakistan High Commissioner mere fact of our invitation and his coming here will have very good results, both in India and Pakistan.

5. As these days are full of Republic Day functions, it will hardly be possible to have special functions for the Governor General. But we may have a banquet by the President on the 25th night.

6. I am leaving Delhi on 14th morning. Please send reply soon.

SECRET

Extract from the Weekly Letter of the Indian Ambassador in Djakarta to the Commonwealth Secretary Subimal Dutt regarding his meeting with the Pakistani Ambassador in Djakarta Choudhri Khaliquzzaman.

No.1/5/CO/55/1145 21st January 1955

4. I returned my call on the Pakistan Ambassador on the 15th. I intended only to be with him for the usual 20 or 30 minutes, but found it difficult to get away, as he started reminescensing. He was ironical about the reactions in the Pakistan press about our Prime Minister’s recent statement about Pakistan in which he said “Our culture is one, our language is the same, we dress alike” etc. The Pakistan Press was critical about this, taking its cue from Mr. Jinnah’s two-nation theory. He said that theory had been propagated for a particular purpose. That purpose was now accomplished, and it was absurd to go on harping on it, when it was so patently false. Politics was a game in which certain tactics had to be adopted to meet a particular situation, and that was all that had been intended then. He was again extremely critical and bitter about both Mr. Jinnah and Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan. About the Later, he said that he never hesitated in distorting the truth when it served him; and that the influence of both these people on the evolution of Pakistan had been fatal. Mullaism in Pakistan was really a creation of Liaquat Ali Khan. The wheel was, however, now coming back to its original position, and he saw no reason why a proper balance should not be reached with India.
He then went on to explain the circumstances of his leaving India. It was a long story, but the gist of it is that he had originally been left behind to look after the interests of India Muslims. He had done his best for them in the immediate post partition time of trouble, and had received the utmost cooperation from persons like Mrs. Naidu, Dr. Katju, Pandit Pant, Mr. Rajagopalachari, and of course Mahatma Gandhi, who, he said, had publicly called him a blood brother. His efforts had, however, incensed Mr. Jinnah, and his henchmen, as it was inevitable that he should criticize Pakistan for its attitude and actions, which had an adverse effect on the Muslim position in India. He instanced his statement made in reply to a statement made by Zafrullah Khan from San Francisco, charging the Indian Government for the genocide of Muslims in India in early September 1947.

He had been requested by Rajaji to see Ghandiji in Delhi to discuss the situation with him. He went to Delhi and saw Ghandiji, who told him that the best way of improving the communal situation would be for him to persuade the Pakistan Governments to deal fairly with the Hindus in Sindh and persuade them not to migrate to India. “That would involve a trip to Karachi”, he had told Ghandiji. Thereupon the latter advised him to go and see Mr. Jinnah for this purpose. He did so travelling with the same little luggage which he had brought with him from Lucknow to Delhi.

In Karachi, when he saw Mr. Jinnah, the latter was in a tearing rage. He came out of his room and read out his (Khaliquzzaman’s) statement referred to above in a loud voice as if he was an accused whom Mr. Jinnah was prosecuting. “This statement of yours has been broadcast all over the world”, Mr. Jinnah said. This made him, in his turn, angry and he replied, “Why should it not be. After all, I am the leader of 40 million Muslims in India”. Thereupon Mr. Jinnah calmed down and said that it had hurt them very much and caused great injury to the reputation of Pakistan. Then they had a long discussion and from it, it became clear to Choudhri Khaliquzzaman that the reason why Mr. Jinnah had wanted him to stay on in India was not to look after the interests of the Indian Muslims, but to organize them as a Fifth Column of Pakistan. That he was not prepared to do. He further found that he was quite unable to achieve the purposes for which he had been sent to Karachi by Mahatma Gandhi. Acharya Kripalani, whom Gandhi, had sent to put heart in the Hindus and to persuade them to stay on in Sind, was actually inciting them to leave. Though in public he made equivocal statements about it, privately, he advised them to leave Sind as early as possible. This discouraged him further. He wrote about it to Gandhiji, and he believed that it was as a result of this report on Acharya Kripalani’s activities in Sind, that later on Gandhiji’s attitude towards Acharya Kripalani changed, and the latter was removed from the Congress Presidentship.
All these happenings made him decide that there was no point in his returning to India and therefore he did not do so. He said that he was glad that there was a witness of his fateful conversation with Mr. Jinnah, referred to above. That was Mr. H. S. Suhrawardy.

* * * * *

With kind regards.

Yours sincerely

(B.F.H.B. Tyabji)

Shri S. Dutt, ICS
Commonwealth Secretary.

0152. Message issued by the Governor General of Pakistan Ghulam Mohammad on the eve of his departure for India to attend the Indian Republic Day celebrations.

Karachi, January 24, 1955.

I look forward to my visit to India. I am conscious of the value of the Invitation sent by the president of India and I hope that this may lead to a better and closer understanding in the various fields in which there have been serious and a basic differences between our two countries.

I do not know what my programme in Delhi is beyond attending the ceremonies connected with the independence day but I have many friends both in the Government and outside in Delhi and I shall try to make them understand our position and the need for an early settlement so that both countries can really get together and march ahead. I have felt for the last many years that such an understanding is necessary. I believe that without a closer and early settlement of the basic differences such a change cannot take place but I have faith in the people both in India and in my country that every efforts will be made to close the ranks and settle these differences as early as possible.

I have personally very close associations with India I mean pre-partition India and these associations could not be wiped out by passage of time. I have deep regard for the progress of both countries and shall try my best to promote settlement and understanding between them.

0153. Speeches of India President Dr. Rajendra Prasad and Governor General of Pakistan at the Banquet held in honour of the visiting Governor General.

New Delhi, January 25, 1955.

President’s Speech

I am very happy this evening to welcome the distinguished Head of our neighbouring country. You, Sir, are no stranger to India’s capital city. Many of us here remember your kind geniality and warm friendship. Your liberality of outlook, high sense of duty and lofty patriotism are still recalled with admiration by many in this country. We are particularly happy that despite the state of your health and heavy preoccupations you have found time to pay us a visit and participate in the festivities of our Republic Day.

Five years ago tomorrow India became a Republic. This was the day of which many of us dreamt in our early years and for which numerous people have made heavy sacrifices. Tomorrow is, therefore, a day of special significance to us in India. It is an occasion on which millions demonstrate their unity despite the diversity in their language, religion and culture. It is not only an occasion of joy; it is an inspiration for the future. We all, of course, exult in our hard-won freedom. We are, however, all the time conscious that freedom would be without any meaning if it did not result in the happiness and well-being of millions who have for ages been denied the minimum of food and clothing. To this task India’s leaders have pledged themselves. I know that the leaders of Pakistan also are determined to achieve the same end. And among them no one carried a greater responsibility than you, Sir. We have many bonds of friendship and understanding with your great country and have been watching your efforts with great interest. Many problems of our two countries are common and I feel sure that each can profit from the experience of the other in its endeavour to solve them. We wish you every success in fulfilling your great task.

I need not tell you, Sir, how millions in both our countries have lived the greater part of their lives together. Although we have voluntarily parted company, years of close association assisted by a common background and a common experience provide the foundation for enduring friendship and understanding between us. There is much in common in the languages spoken in our two countries, so that we can understand each other. There should, therefore, be no problem between our two countries which would not be capable of solution in a spirit of friendliness and understanding. I can assure you that my Government is anxious to do everything in their power to solve these problems in fruitful co-operation with yours.
On behalf of the Government and the people of India and on my own behalf I welcome you again. We are only sorry that your stay with us should be so brief. We are however, aware of the heavy responsibilities which you carry. We, therefore, appreciate all the more your kindness in accepting our invitation to be present with us on our day of national rejoicing. May I express the hope that you will find time later to pay us a longer visit so that we might have an opportunity of showing you something more of New India. Our best wishes are with you and your countrymen.

Pakistan Governor-General’s Reply

On the occasion of the celebration of the Republic Day of India, I offer you the sincere greetings and good wishes of Pakistan.

This is the first time a Head of a State has been invited to participate in these national celebrations. I am conscious of the honour, and the people of my country appreciate this kind sentiment. Since my arrival here I have been deeply moved by your kind hospitality, and I thank Your Excellency for it.

Your Excellency, the kind sentiments you have expressed about me have deeply touched me. The great part played by Your Excellency in the struggle for Indian freedom is well known. I am confident that when the history of our time comes to be written, Your Excellency’s name will deservedly find in it a revered and honoured place.

As a student, I had the opportunity to observe your work for India, and I was struck by your courage and sober determination. One could not help but be struck by your love for the common man and for your work in raising their level of living. As a result you acted as one of the leaders who seriously combated the evils of colonialism.

I am no stranger to this great country of yours, nor are most of my countrymen. In the freedom of this sub-continent, the peoples of India and Pakistan worked shoulder to shoulder, and it is due to their sacrifices that we enjoy the blessings of freedom today.

Both amongst the Hindus and Muslims, there are great heroes who played a distinguished part in winning the freedom of the Indian sub-continent. The name of Mahatma Gandhi comes to my mind for the very long and distinguished part played by him, as also the names of many other Hindu and Muslim leaders like the Quaid-i-Azam, Maulana Mohammed Ali, my distinguished friend and brother Dr. Ansari, C.R. Das, Pandit Motilal Nehru, Mrs. Sarojini Naidu and Tayyabji. Alas! many of the standard bearers of freedom are no more amongst us. Pakistan joins you in paying tributes to their sacred memory. The struggle for freedom had a host of other fighters who played important roles in the sacred cause. Even today, some of these Hindus and Muslims who fought for the freedom of the sub-continent are playing an important part in the service of their countries. They hold a high place in the esteem and affections of Indians and Pakistanis. I mention Dr. Khan Sahib who is here with me, and Mr. Shoaib Qureshi, at one time Minister for Refugee Rehabilitation and a co-worker of Gandhiji and of your Prime Minister.

As your Excellency rightly observed, the basic problems which are facing India and Pakistan are essentially the same. It is, therefore, very important for both countries that they co-operate in solving them and adopt the same principles and fellow-feeling in doing so.

It is a sad fact of history that some happenings in the wake of freedom have left behind a large legacy of misunderstandings and bitterness due to which our relations have not been very pleasant. I think this dark period of strain has now lasted too long, and the time has now come to end it completely. I am glad that your Prime Minister has also expressed the view that an atmosphere better than ever before now prevails for settling our mutual problem.

The ideal time has now come to prove sincerely that basic and major points of dispute can be mutually solved without delay. Otherwise our people will laugh at out insincerity and lack of leadership. Time for action is now — people will not wait.

You have men of goodwill and good sense. So have we. Our two Governments have common objectives - we seek international peace and amity. We seek to secure the uplift of the common man.

Let us put an end to our disputes. We owe this as a duty to posterity not to leave them a legacy of misunderstandings and bitterness. This will depend on the early solution of our disputes, and I feel that India also realizes the fundamental truth as we do. There is no alternative except that the two countries act in a spirit of truth and sincerity without which it seems difficult for them to achieve real prosperity and well-being.

I feel that with the presence of you, Mr. President, as the Head of the Indian Republic, and of Mr. Nehru as the Prime Minister, there should be no difficulty in realizing this truth and giving effect to an early settlement of these points, some of which have been for years the basis for misunderstanding and discord. Given the goodwill and the breadth of vision, I have no doubt that such an end could be realized much sooner than most of us can think of.

We live in critical and dangerous times. The very existence of mankind sometimes seems to be at stake. Our joint contribution in promoting the peaceful progress of mankind would be increased immeasurably if with our own problems resolved, we march together in the service of humanity.
May I again thank Your Excellency, the Government and the People of India on my own behalf, on behalf of my Government and the people of Pakistan, for friendship and hospitality that I have received at your hands.

0154. Note by Commonwealth Secretary S. Dutt on his meeting with Pakistan High Commissioner.

New Delhi, February 18, 1955.

Ministry of External Affairs

The Pakistan High Commissioner saw me yesterday made the following suggestions:

(i) The Indian Steering Committee should go to Karachi on the 26th February and meet the Pakistan Steering Committee there from the 26th till the 28th. I said that our Finance Secretary will have to be in Delhi on the 28th and must, therefore, leave Karachi on the 27th. I may stay on, if necessary. This I confirmed later after consulting Shri Rangachari.

(ii) The Pakistan Steering Committee will be in Delhi and meet the Indian Steering Committee on the 8th March. On the 8th March the Minister of Rehabilitation will also meet his opposite number at Karachi.

(iii) Subject to the consent of the Steering Committees, the first Ministerial level Conference should take place on the 14th March to discuss the following:

   (a) Relaxation of visa restrictions;
   (b) Shrines and religious places;
   (c) Movement via Khokhrapar;
   (d) Opening of more railway connections between India and West Pakistan;
   (e) Substitution of shuttle trains by regular mail trains;
   (f) Customs check post on the borders to be abolished and checking to be done at Amritsar and Lahore; and
   (g) Border incidents on East and West Pakistan.

2. In regard to the proposal for the Ministerial meeting I said that I could not say anything without consulting our Ministries concerned. I also did not see why discussions should be confined, if at all they take place, to the items mentioned. We should, for example, raise the question of migration of Hindus from East Bengal. However, I should like DS (P) to communicate the Pakistan High Commissioner’s proposals to our Ministries concerned and obtain their views.

Office of the High Commissioner for Pakistan in India
New Delhi

No. F.2 (43) P/55. 18th February, 1955.

The High Commission for Pakistan in India present their compliments to the Ministry of External Affairs, Government of India and have the honour to draw their attention to the Tribune of today’s date reporting a speech by Mr. C.P.N. Singh the Governor of Punjab (India) to the public at village Reru on the 17th of February, 1955.

This High Commission have read with shock and amazement the statement of His Excellency the Governor ascribing to the Pakistan Government the intention to create a rift between the Hindus and Sikhs citizens of India as a result of the welcome accorded by the people of Lahore to Sikh visitors from India during the recent Cricket Test Match at Lahore.

The Pakistan High Commission wish to point out that details of the innumerable acts of welcome have been widely reported in the Indian Press as also in the Pakistan Press, and nowhere, so far (as) this High Commission is aware, has there been the slightest suggestion, insinuation, or assertion that the treatment accorded to the Indian visitors was either overtly or covertly discriminating in favour of persons of any particular denomination. All reports that have appeared in the press are almost unanimous in stating that the welcome given by the Pakistanis was spontaneous, affectionate, and friendly in the extreme. If in certain cases emphasis have been given to the welcome accorded to Sikh visitors, it has obviously only been done because such unprecedentedly friendly treatment belied the misgivings that may have existed in some quarters that Sikh visitors would not be welcomed in Pakistan. But nowhere, to our knowledge has it been suggested in any press or other reports that the treatment to Hindu citizens of India was in any way discriminatory or less cordial than that accorded to Sikh citizens.

The Pakistan High Commission would not have felt constrained to attach importance to a newspaper report which is obviously so contrary to the real facts which are widely known, had it not been that this statement emanates from so important and prominent a person as the Governor of a State whose statements will be regarded rightly or wrongly as reflecting the views of the Government of the country. The Pakistan High Commission would further like to state that on the occasion of the last Republic Day the same eminent person in a message made a statement on the controversial subject of Kashmir which is at the moment a stumbling block in the way of the establishment of lasting goodwill between the two countries. The Government of India’s attention was drawn to that message in a friendly and informal way on a personal level. The Pakistan High Commission hope that the Government of India will agree that the present statement of the Punjab Governor is calculated to undo a great deal of the good that has been so laboriously and so painstakingly built up in recent weeks. This statement will not only cause confusion and disbelief in India, but will also have adverse repercussions in Pakistan.

The Government of India’s attention is also drawn to that part of the newspaper report which says that the Governor’s “voice trembled with anger” when he made this speech. Both this statement and the manner in which it has been made militates against the creation of that friendly atmosphere between the two countries which is so essential for the success of the forthcoming meetings between their representatives, and particularly for the forthcoming meeting between the two Prime Ministers.

The Pakistan High Commission therefore hope that the Government of India will kindly take note of this statement and take such steps as will not only prevent a repetition but will also undo the mischief that will undoubtedly be done if it is allowed to go un-contradicted. The statement is not only unfair to the Government of Pakistan but is also an unjustified attack on all those citizens of Pakistan who demonstrated their goodwill and friendliness to those citizens of India who had occasion to enjoy their hospitality recently in Lahore.

The Pakistan High Commission avail themselves of this opportunity to renew to the Government of India the assurances of their highest consideration.

Government of India,

Letter of Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru to the Punjab Governor CPN Singh regarding the complaint made by the Pakistan High Commission on his speech.

New Delhi, February 18, 1955.

My dear CPN,

I see from a report of your speech delivered at Jullundur yesterday that you criticised severely what was reported to be preferential treatment given to the Sikhs when they recently visited Lahore to see the test match. I must confess that I have read this report with great surprise and some distress. You were certainly right in your warning against communalism but to pick out this visit to the test match and say that the Sikhs were treated better was surely a very unwise thing to do. Apart from encouraging the very communalism that we are against, this was bound to have a bad effect in Pakistan. In fact, I have actually received an official protest from the Pakistan High Commissioner, and we could say little in reply.

I have read long reports of the visit of our people to Lahore on the occasion of the test match. All these reports have testified to the goodwill shown to all Indians. It is probably true that the Sikhs were especially welcomed because this was the first time that a large number of Sikhs went there and also because Sikhs are supposed to be very anti-Muslim.

We have enough trouble with Pakistan. Just when relations between the peoples of the two countries are improving, it is very wrong to say anything which comes in the way. I do not personally think that there was any evil motive behind the treatment of the Sikhs in Lahore.

Yours sincerely

Letter of the Punjab Governor CPN Singh to Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru explaining his speech about the treatment given to the Sikhs in Lahore.

Lahore, February 21, 1955

Governor’s Camp Punjab
Circuit House, Chandi Mandir.

My dear Panditji,

I have received your letter regarding press reports of my speech at Jullundur. In this connection I held a press conference this afternoon and a copy of the statement issued is being enclosed for your perusal. It is a pity that Raja Ghazanfar Ali should have based his protest on what appeared in the Tribune which was such a garbled version of what was spoken. Even so far (as) Pratap is concerned, there are a few inaccuracies, but its version is a near approach. That this is so was admitted by Pratap’s representative in the Press Conference.

Incidentally, it would interest you to read what Vir Bharat has quoted from what was published in a Pakistan paper called Shahabaz. I am enclosing relevant cutting from Vir Bharat dated the 21st February 1955.

I will be able to talk about this subject when I see you at Delhi.

Yours sincerely

Statement of Governor of Punjab at the Press Conference

The Governor has noticed with deep regret the controversy which has developed in the Press over his speech at village Rehru in Jullundur District. He finds on going through the relevant reports that it is mainly due to the totally wrong version of it in the Tribune of 18.2.1955 which varies materially from what appeared in other papers, e.g. Pratap of 19.2.1955. It has been stated that the Governor’s voice ‘trembled with anger’ when he referred to the preferential treatment accorded to the Sikhs in Lahore. Nothing could have been further from the truth and there was, in fact, no occasion of anger. Two other points reported are, that the Governor warned Pakistan against creating a wedge between Hindus and Sikhs. It is also said that he castigated the Sikhs for their communalism and asked them to hang their heads in shame. In both these respects a wholly garbled version has been made out of certain innocuous remarks made in the ordinary course. He did refer to the invidious treatment which had been given to Sikhs and Hindus, but all that he added was that he did not understand its basis. He incidentally mentioned that if anybody tried to create a wedge between Hindus and Sikhs, he was certain that such an attempt would be unsuccessful. The Governor never implied that the Pakistan Government could have had any hand in the matter. In fact, he made friendly references to Pakistan and congratulated the Pakistanis on the hospitality which they had shown to the visitors. He added that if people of Pakistan came to India, hospitality in the same manner should be shown to them. As far as references to Sikhs are concerned he praised them and their religion. He generally spoke about the progress that Punjab was making in the last few years and hoped that the pace of development would continue if only petty considerations would not detract the people from right path. He gave a general warning against communalism, and when he mentioned that Indians should consider themselves Indians first, he referred not only to Sikhs, but also to Hindus, Harijans and others.

D.O.No.31/146//NGO 22nd Feb. 1955

My Dear Chari,

You must have read in the Pakistan press reports of, and comments on a speech made by Shri C.P.N. Singh at village Reru near Jullundur on the 17th February 1955. The Pakistani High Commissioner called on the Commonwealth Secretary in this connection on the 18th February and lodged an emphatic protest against it. He followed it up with a formal note verbale, a copy of which is enclosed herewith. The Prime Minister thereupon wrote a secret and personal letter to Shri C.P.N. Singh pointing out the implications of the reported statement.

We have decided not to give a formal reply to the protest note from the Pakistani High Commissioner. The Commonwealth Secretary would explain the position to him. I am, however, writing this to you for the personal information of yourself and the High Commissioner.

Today’s Indian papers carry a statement from Shri C.P.N. Singh to the effect that he was entirely misreported and that his comments were taken out of their context by one reporter.

Yours sincerely

EDITORIAL FROM THE DAWN, KARACHI  20-2-1955

Mr. Singh and the Sikhs.

Recently a large number of Bharati Hindus and Sikhs visited Lahore to witness the Test Match. They were accorded very friendly treatment by the local Pakistanis. The Sikhs in particular appreciated the friendliness because it was against that community that bitterness had been greatest following the tragic events of partition time. One should have thought that the Bharati authorities would have been glad and grateful at this change for the better in the feelings of Pakistanis towards the Sikhs and Hindus. But, believe it or not, the Governor of East Punjab, Mr. C.P.N. Singh, has been mightily annoyed that the Sikhs were so well treated in the Punjab! Addressing a village public meeting, that worthy gentleman is reported to have demanded to know: “What does Pakistan mean by according better treatment to Sikhs?”—and all the while (so reports Tribune) his voice “trembled with anger”. Mr. Singh also warns the Sikhs “not to be happy” at the good treatment they received in Pakistan but to “hang their heads in shame”. These outbursts would have been ludicrous but for the fact they proceed from a person holding the high position of a provincial governor. It can only be presumed that Mr. Singh— and Hindus of his way of thinking—do not themselves care much for the Sikhs, which is rather a strange state of affairs because Mr. Singh happens to govern a province which the Sikhs can claim to be their own. Our High Commissioner in Bharat has lodged a protest against the Governor’s outburst to Mr. Nehru’s Government, and it remains to be seen what the latter’s reaction turns out to be.
My dear Desai,

As an old friend and co-worker, I wish to send you my warm welcome. India and Pakistan, carved out by mutual consent, had to face some very bad results in so far as a large number of innocent men and women were unnecessarily killed and women were the most unfortunate victims, and a kind of life was forced on them which should be a disgrace for any civilized nation.

Your coming here as India’s High Commissioner should help me in ending that era of 7 years’ suffering and, will I am sure, create a better understanding and co-operation between our countries.

As an old co-worker, you know my views and I will be glad to help you in this regard.

With kind regards,

Yours sincerely

0159. Letter from the Indian High Commissioner CC Desai in reply to the Pakistan Governor General Ghulam Mohammad’s letter of welcome.

PRIVATE AND PERSONAL

HIGH COMMISSIONER FOR INDIA

My dear Mr. Ghulam Mohammed,

I was deeply touched receiving this morning, on arrival at the Governor General’s House, your kind, affectionate and cordial letter which would make, my difficult but pleasant task in this country all the more easy. When this post was offered to me, I accepted it without hesitation as I knew that I had many good and genuine friends in this country and also as I felt that it was time that something was done to put an end to all this madness and to place the relations between these two countries on a permanent good-neighbourly basis. As I remarked to some friends on arrival here, I have come here from relations to friends and it is well known how one feels more attracted to friends in preference to relations. Fortunately for me, the atmosphere has improved since you gave the lead a few months ago and it would be a pleasure to build on that foundation and to labour for the closest and most friendly relations between the two sister-nations to their mutual advantage and prosperity. Indo-Pakistan amity is a matter of vital concern to every one of the three hundred and sixty million on our side and the seventy million on this side of the Partition Line. As you say, Sir, the Partition was carried out by mutual consent and there is none in India, except a few mad men, who would be found anywhere in the world, who desire any change in that situation. What we now want is to live as brothers and good neighbours, to stand by each other in any contingency or crisis, and to contribute to that prosperity and glory of this sub-continent which, as common partners in the struggle against our foreign masters, we all had dreamt of before we divided.

2. Following the proverb that the first stroke is half the battle, I consider myself fortunate in being a recipient of the warm and cordial welcome at your gracious hands. When I went to Deva Shariff a few days before I left India, I prayed for the establishment of brotherly relations between our two countries in general and for your good health and long life in particular as I knew that there is no greater and more ardent advocate of that brotherly relationship between India and Pakistan than your good self.

3. May I once again thank you for your very warm and affectionate letter and end this letter by praying to Almighty God that He may spare you for many more years in the interest of the four hundred and thirty million people living in this sub-continent and looking to you and the Prime Minister of India for wise guidance and that He may be pleased to crown your noble efforts with success.

4. I have taken the liberty of writing this personal letter encouraged by your confidence which I hope I shall do nothing to forfeit while I am here and even after I have left. I was myself going to ask for your photograph but you forestalled me and gave me one before I could even open my mouth. I was truly overwhelmed by that gesture which is typically yours. The photo will be a priceless treasure with the poor Desai family.

With kindest regards and always at your disposal,

Yours ever

Sd/- C.C. Desai

Letter from the High Commissioner in Karachi C. C.
Desai to the Secretary General of the Ministry of External Affairs N. R. Pillai reporting his call on the Governor General of Pakistan.

High Commissioner for India
Karachi

February 24, 1955

My dear Rag,

Immediately on arrival here I asked for an appointment to call on the Governor General. On the 23rd, he asked me for a quiet private and informal lunch at which no outsider was present. Before he came into the room, his Private Secretary came and handed over to me a personal letter, a copy of which is herewith enclosed. Then the Governor General himself came and gave me a copy of his photograph framed in silver bearing his signature and saying, “To my co-worker in India, Yours ever, Ghulam Mohammed”. After returning from lunch, I have sent a reply to his personal letter, a copy of which is also herewith enclosed. The Private Secretary particularly told me that this should be treated as personal correspondence going neither to the Press nor to the Secretariat files. I thought, however, that you must see the correspondence and perhaps you may care to show it to the Prime Minister.

2. At the lunch, most of the talking was done by Ghulam Mohammed, only ten per cent of which, I am afraid, I could follow. All the time he was talking of the Prime Minister as “Jawahar” and in between he used to talk about some facet of life of Gandhiji. He also asked me as to when our President would be coming to Karachi. He wondered whether it would be possible for him to come here next month. I presume that the invitation to the President must have been conveyed to him during his last visit to Delhi. If that is so, I suppose they would be waiting for an indication from us that the invitation will be accepted, before extending a formal invitation. I would be grateful for your instructions in the matter.

3. One of the things which Ghulam Mohammed said was that he did not think that he would ‘live for more than three months and that during this period he hoped and prayed that some of our principal outstanding questions might be settled, so that the two countries could co-exist in amity and friendship. I must say that I was quite impressed by the genuineness of his desire for settlement and of his urge to do something before it is too late insofar as he himself is concerned.

4. The others at the lunch were Dr. Miss Sobani, her sister, Baby Sobani, and her brother, Isa Sobani, who are the children of Omar Sobani, an old Congress worker and a well known figure in the Bombay political life in the previous generation. One sister of theirs is, I believe, settled in India and is probably well known to the Prime Minister. Her name, I presume, is Mrs. Usman Sobani. These girls are personal friends of Moolraj Kishendas, and were good enough to come to the Ship when I arrived here also at the instance of Moolraj.
I understand that they are personal friends of the Governor General and have considerable influence in the Palace.

5. I arrived here on the 21st and the same evening there was a dinner party at the Prime Minister’s house for Anthony Eden, the British Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs. Along with the other Commonwealth High Commissioners I was also present at the dinner. Thus I had dinner with the Prime Minister and lunch with the Governor General within two days of my arrival. When I went to the Prime Minister’s house on the 21st morning for presentation of the letter of credentials, he had a Cabinet meeting coming on and so that gave me an opportunity of meeting all the Cabinet Ministers who had collected in the Drawing Room for the meeting.
6. This morning I went to the Mazars of Jinnah and Liaquat Ali Khan and as usual placed wreaths on their tombs.

7. Karachi is at the moment rather quiet because everybody of importance has gone to Lahore in connection with the Horse and Cattle Show, which is being held there. I understand that this show has been organised during the last three years in which it has made tremendous strides.

8. The Turkish President is in Pakistan and is now in the Peshawar-Lahore area. He is returning here on the 26th when again there will be a round of functions which also coincide with the last Test Cricket Match between India and Pakistan which will be played in Karachi on the 26th, 27th, 28th February and 1st March.

9. I have thus given you a rough account of my three days’ stay in Karachi, which already has been crowded with many events and functions.

With kindest regards,

Yours ever
(C.C. Desai)

Letter from Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru to President Rajendra Prasad regarding his visit to Pakistan.

No.239-PMH/55 New Delhi, February 26, 1955.

My dear Rajendra Babu,

Our High Commissioner in Karachi has written to us that, when he visited the Governor-General, he was asked when our President would be visiting Karachi. He enquired further whether it would be possible for you to go there next month.

This is the first I have heard of any invitation having been extended to you by Ghulam Mohammd. I do not know if he had mentioned this matter to you when he was here.

In any event, I do not see how you could possibly go there in March, as you will be full of engagements during this period and we are having many important guests*.

Sd/- J. Nehru

Dr. Rajendra Prasad,
President,
Rashtrapati Bhavan, New Delhi

*President Dr. Rajendra Prasad in his letter No.1899 dated 28.2.1955 informed Mr. Nehru that he had not given “any definite reply” to Ghulam Mohammad’s proposal for a visit but he also added it is not easy to refuse such a request.” He, however said that July-August period would be convenient for him to go to Pakistan. P.M. minuted “We need not send any answer yet” to Pakistan.

   6. Mr. S. Chaudhuri. Under Secretary, Government of India.

The Committee proposed the following categories for classification of the outstanding and pending cases: -

A. For discussion at Prime Minister’s Level.
B. For discussion at Minister’s Level.
C. (i) For discussion
   (a) In Steering Committee.
   (b) By the Ministry of Foreign Affairs (Pakistan) and the Ministry of External Affairs (India).
(ii) By the Ministries of Finance.
(iii) By the Ministries of Refugees and Rehabilitation.
(iv) By other Ministries and Divisions directly with their opposite numbers.

2. The Pakistan and Indian lists were classified accordingly as in the annexure. (not available)

3. The position in regard to item (5) of the Pakistan list was explained and the Indian Steering Committee promised to look into the Pakistan Steering Committee’s request for extending the date line for the payment of post war credit money and balance of wages from the 28th of February to some other suitable date.

Indian Steering Committee wanted details of item No. 17(e) which the Pakistan Steering Committee undertook to supply.

Items 57, 58, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66 & 67 of the Pakistan list were omitted and substituted by the omnibus item No. 59, “implementation of the Prime Ministers’ Agreement of April, 1950” The item was classified as (b)

Item (60) of the Pakistan list was amended as follows:
“Protection of places of public worship.”

Item (75) of the Pakistan list was amended to read as follows: “Pakistan’s share of the Library of the Central Board of Irrigation.

Item (77): The Indian Steering Committee explained that India suggested the revival of the IPICC and this should dispose of item No. (77) of the Pakistan list and item (79) of the India list.

The Steering Committees omitted from the Indian list items 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 28, 31, 32, 33, 34, 45, 60, 63, 66, 67, 70, 78, 96, & 97.

Item No. 36 (iii) was amended to read as follows:-
“Claims on account of bonus of Cantonment Employees”.

Item 37 of the Indian list was settled and it was agreed that the microfilm copies of the Woolner collection of Sanskrit manuscripts of the Punjab University, Lahore, would be given when facilities were available at Lahore to take the microfilms. Alternatively, the Government of India could arrange to send their apparatus to Lahore to take the microfilm of the collection.

The Indian Steering Committee agreed to give facilities for obtaining copies of similar documents or collections from India if Government of Pakistan wanted to do so in future.
Item 40: The leader of the Pakistan Steering Committee agreed that there is to be no restriction on the movements of High Commissioners and Deputy High Commissioners in India and Pakistan on reciprocal basis. He further added that it is desirable that advance information of intention (preferably 48 hours) to tour in any area may be given to authorities concerned.

Sub – Item (i) – (XIV) of item 41 were deleted since this was covered by the general heading of the item, “implementation of the Prime Minister’s Agreement of April, 1950”.

Item 42 of the Indian list was amended to read as follows:-

“Protection and restoration of places of worship”.

Item 43 was settled since the matter was not in dispute and the Pakistan Steering Committee agreed to settle and account when it is received.

Item 44:- This was not a matter in dispute and it was agreed to exchange information regarding visas for period ending 31st December, 1954, as early as possible and thereafter, every quarter as agreed to.

Item 74:- The Pakistan Steering Committee requested for further details on this case which the Indian Steering Committee promised to supply.

Item 79:- The Indian Steering Committee pointed out that this item was covered by the decision of item 77 of the Pakistan list.

5. Items 51, 93 and 94:- The Chairman of the Pakistan Steering Committee said that his Committee was precluded from discussing items relating to Hyderabad. The Chairman of the Indian Steering Committee said that no dispute between the two Governments should be excluded from discussion. It is only a question of at what level the discussion should take place. In the view of the Indian Steering Committee, this is an item which should be discussed at the Prime Minister’s level.

6. The Steering Committees recommended that Ministries/Divisions concerned should resume negotiations for settlement of outstanding disputes with their counterparts at once and submit progress report on these cases by the 15th of April to their respective Steering Committees.

7. The Steering Committees noted the procedure for solution of disputes adopted by the Joint meeting of the Indo – Pakistan Steering Committees held in Karachi on 14th July, 1953, contained in paragraph 2 of the minutes that if no progress is made in regard to the solution of the dispute, the matter should be referred to the Steering Committee concerned for guidance. If necessary a joint meeting of the two Steering Committees should be held at which the representatives of the concerned Ministries would be present. This meeting would try to narrow down differences further and either recommend an agreed solution to the two Governments or submit the differences for discussion at Minister’s level. In the event of the differences still remaining unresolved, the item would be submitted to the Ministers concerned or the two Prime Ministers. It was essential that the two Steering Committees should keep themselves continually informed of the progress of discussions by other Ministries with their opposite numbers and keep the Prime Ministers informed of the progress made over the whole field. The Steering Committee agreed to continue the procedure.

8. Attention was drawn to the decision of the minutes of the first Joint Meeting of Indo – Pakistan Steering Committees held in Karachi on the 14th July, 1953 that any decision taken on items under categories ‘B’ and ‘C’ would be subject to confirmation in writing.

9. The Steering Committees agreed to meet at Delhi on the 11th of March for further meetings.

0163. Press Note issued at the end of the meetings of the Steering Committees of India and Pakistan to discuss outstanding issues between the two countries.

Press Statement

The Steering Committees appointed by the Governments of India and Pakistan for discussion of outstanding issues met jointly at Karachi on the 26th, 27th & 28th of February. The Indian Steering Committee consisted of:

1. Mr. S. Dutt, Secretary, Ministry of External Affairs.
2. Mr. M.V. Rangachari, Secretary, Ministry of Finance.
3. Mr. V.C. Trivedi, Director, Pakistan Division, Ministry of External Affairs.

The Pakistan Steering Committee consisted of:

1. Mr. M.S.A. Baig, Joint Secretary, Ministry of F.A. & C.R.
2. Mr. M.A. Mozaffar, Joint Secretary, Ministry of Finance.

Rja Ghazanfar Ali Khan, High Commissioner for Pakistan in India and Mr. R.T. Chari, Deputy, High Commissioner for India in Pakistan attended by invitation. Both the Steering Committees were assisted by Advisers. The meetings of the Steering Committees were held in an atmosphere of cordiality and the lists of outstanding items prepared by both the Governments were scrutinized and classified. The procedure for discussions at the various levels was formulated and Ministries and Division concerned are being asked by the Steering Committees to take up their outstanding items with their counterparts and to report the progress of the negotiations by the 15th April. It is expected that there will be discussions and meetings at Minister's level for resolving some of the items. The Steering Committees have agreed to meet again at Delhi on the 11th of March when they will attempt to resolve some of the issue which are capable of solution at their level.

Letter from the Commonwealth Secretary Subimal Dutt to the High Commissioner C. C. Desai regarding a proposal from the Prime Minister of Ceylon.

New Delhi, March 3, 1955.

Ministry of External Affairs
New Delhi

No. CS/977 March 3, 1955

My dear Desai,

I have received your d.o. letter No. HC/55/3 of the 27th February and am showing it to the Secretary General. We entirely agree with you that you should not take any part in local politics in Pakistan or supply any information to Mohammed Ali about his colleagues or about the situation in his country in general.

I am returning the enclosures to your letter.

Yours sincerely

Enclosures to the Above Letter
High Commissioner for India
Karachi

No. D.O. No. HC/55/3 27th Feb. 1955

My dear Subimal,

I enclose herewith copy of a letter which I have just received from Sir John Kotelawala, the Prime Minister of Ceylon. I met him at the Airport in Bombay on the 18th when he was returning from England and going to Ceylon. There he told me that the previous night he had met Mohammed Ali, the Prime Minister of Pakistan, and had a talk with him about me. Sir John further told me that he had assured Mohammed Ali that he would find me a very helpful and useful colleague. Apparently, Mohammed Ali canvassed Sir John’s support to his proposition that I should advise Mohammed Ali of any intrigues against him which come to my notice in the course of my work as well as my contacts with friends and others! Sir John told me that if I could be helpful to Mohammed Ali in this way, the latter would be very grateful indeed. I am merely mentioning this to indicate what is going on and it is no intention of mine to do anything of the kind or to burn my fingers in the pie, whatever I may have done in Ceylon. Special attention is invited to Sir John’s letter dated the 21st to Mohammed Ali in which he is talking about his proposed visit to China. The proposal to a joint visit to Australia and the invitation to Mohammed Ali to stay for a few days in Ceylon by way of a holiday are indications of the growing cordiality between these two Prime Ministers. Sir John told me in Bombay that he got on very well with Mohammed Ali.

With kindest regards,

Yours ever,

(C.C. Desai)

Prime Minister–Ceylon
Colombo

23rd February, 1955

My dear Desai,

I arrived here last Friday afternoon and everybody in Ceylon was enquiring about you, and I told them that Ceylon’s loss was Pakistan’s gain.

I had my usual lunch with Oliver today at Queen’s House and both of us talked about you and how we miss you here just now. Anyway your appointment to Pakistan is a promotion. After all if you can settle the Kashmir problem, you will compete with me for the Peace Prize.

I am enclosing a copy of a letter I wrote to Mohammed Ali on my return. I trust you will be of help to him as much as you have been to me. Gunasena de Soyza who is with me at the moment misses you very much, although he has good nights’ rest now. Please drop me a note as to how you are getting on and what I can do for you.

With kind regards,

Yours sincerely

His Excellency Shri CC Desai ICS.
Prime Minister – Ceylon
Colombo

21st February, 1955

My dear Mohammed Ali,

I am so sorry I was not able to write to you earlier. Since my arrival here last Friday afternoon, I have been very busy with one thing or another.

The scheme I had in mind for visiting Indonesia and Australia has now to be modified, because I feel it would be best to meet Mr. Chou en lai before he comes to Bandung. I would be useful if I could make an assessment of him and apprise you of it.

I am afraid we will have to think of giving up our trip to Australia for the present and you can therefore return home with me and spend a fortnight in Ceylon. Or, if you wish it the other way, you can certainly come as early as you can to Ceylon and I will make you comfortable before I leave for China.

On my way back home at Bombay I met Desai who indicated to me that he was leaving the next day for Karachi. As I told you he is one of the best friends I had in Cambridge and is an extremely capable man. I asked him to help you and to be loyal, and he has assured me that he would cooperate with you to the fullest. I am sure you will find him a very likeable person.

Please remember me to the Begum and the Governor-General.

With kindest regards,

Yours sincerely

Sd/- J. L. Kotelawala

P.S.

I am handing a picture of mine to your High Commissioner in Ceylon to be forwarded to you. Please do not fail to send me yours.

The Honourable Mohammed Ali,
Prime Minister of Pakistan.
Cable from Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru to High Commissioner C.C. Desai.

New Delhi, March 3, 1955.

Your personal telegrams* 128 and 130.

2. I entirely agree that meeting between Mohammad Ali or Ghulam Mohammed and me should take place only after broad agreement has been reached. To meet and talk in the air and then separate is bound to lead to frustration and disappointment all round. It is clear to me that no such fruitful meeting can take place this month. We are not ready for it yet. At the same time, obviously, I do not wish it to appear that I do not want the meeting. If, however, because dates do not suit or for any other adequate reason, the meeting is postponed, I would welcome it.

3. Meanwhile, I agree that we should go ahead to relax tension on all fronts. This will certainly create better climate. But it must be remembered that Kashmir issue is not merely question of tension but of basic national conflicts. Hence, separate private approach will have to be made in regard to it before any result is achieved. As I have told you, I see no possibility of settlement in foreseeable future except on basis of recognition of status quo with such minor changes as may be considered necessary. Again, I do not wish to put this forward as it would mean my going back on idea of plebiscite. You should, however, keep all this in mind.

4. Ghulam Mohammed coming here rather suddenly would obviously raise all kinds of expectations, and it would be unfortunate if this was followed by disappointment. After all, mere appeals to each other do not take us very far, and we have to come to grips with the subject.

5. So far as I am concerned, I have heavy programme in March and many distinguished foreign statesmen are visiting us. I shall be in Delhi, however, except on 12th, 13th, 22nd and 23rd March. I shall be absent again on 6th and 7th April. On morning 15th April, I leaves for Djakarta.

6. One question which is agitating us greatly is great influx of migrants from East Pakistan to West Bengal. This is creating serious situation and West Bengal Government is greatly worked up about it. In fact, Chief Minister is coming here on Saturday and will discuss this problem with me.

---

* The Prime Minister's telegram was in reply to Mr. Desai's message that Pakistan Minister of Interior, Iskandar Mirza, had told Ghulam Mohammed that there was no use in his going to Delhi unless “substantial progress” was made in discussions and time was ripe for signature for which he (Ghulam Mohammed) should go personally. Mirza also said that he was not in favour of the two Prime Ministers holding discussions towards the end of March until definite ground was prepared and there was some chance of success.
0166. Cable from Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru to High Commissioner C.C. Desai

New Delhi, March 8, 1955.

Your telegram 141 March 7* It was not my idea that you should suggest any postponement of my meeting with Mohammad Ali, but rather to point out that meeting without prior preparation was not likely to lead to any satisfactory result. This applied even more to Ghulam Mohammed’s coming here. There is no particular difficulty about my suggesting postponement of meeting, but there is no point in such postponement unless something is to happen in between. Indeed postponement at our request will cast burden on us to produce something before next meeting. I would rather therefore not have any postponement and face the meeting now even though that leads to no result. At least we shall come to some kind of grips with present situation.

2. I had expressed my views with some frankness in my letter to Ghulam Mohammed and I expected some reply from him. You must remember that it is Ghulam Mohammed who counts in Pakistan much more than Mohammad Ali.

3. I might point out that in April we shall be going to Indonesia. Early in June I shall go to Soviet Union. In May I shall be in Delhi for part of the time. We are likely to have some Ministers from Egypt here then as well as possibly from other countries. However, it is possible to have meeting in May on some

* The High Commissioner had cabled on 8 March saying he had told Mohammad Ali that while a visit from Pakistan leadership was welcome, “it was desirable that some ground should be prepared for bringing two viewpoints as near as possible before such high level meeting is held when their intention is that it should if possible be last and successful meeting.” Meanwhile Mr. Desai reported that Mohammad Ali had told him that “he was convinced that unless there was good hope of some real advance towards solution, merely meeting and parting this month would create more bitterness and jeopardise existing atmosphere of goodwill. He was therefore of the view that postponement was lesser of the two evils.” The Prime Minister Ali also suggested the idea of a secret representatives of the two prime ministers meeting to explore possibilities under a fresh approach. Prime Minister Nehru agreed to the postponement of the meeting and suggested that it to be desirable that an identical communiqué be issued both in New Delhi and Karachi to avoid any misunderstanding. He suggested the following text for the identical announcement:

Begins.

On the invitation of the Prime Minister of India, the Prime Minister of Pakistan had agreed to visit New Delhi on March 28th in order to discuss pending questions between India and Pakistan. It appears now that owing to heavy pressure of engagements of both Prime Ministers and the visit of eminent statesmen from foreign countries to Karachi and Delhi, it will not be possible to have full talks during this period before the Asian-African Conference meets at Bandung in Indonesia. It has been decided therefore to postpone this meeting of the Prime Ministers of Pakistan and India in Delhi to sometime after the Bandung Conference. Ends.

Nehru suggested that the High commissioner consulted Pakistan about the draft communiqué and inform New Delhi if they agreed with the text. suitable date provided ground is cleared before then. Otherwise it is far better to allow present programme to stand.

4. You should, therefore, meet Ghulam Mohammed and Mohammad Ali and tell them that it is not my desire to postpone meeting or delay talks. But that I had pointed out in my letter certain obvious difficulties of present situation and the necessity of some fresh approach to this problem. I should like their reactions to this. Unless in all these circumstances they decide otherwise, meeting on 28th March in Delhi will hold good. You should not refer to question of plebiscite in your talks.

5. Regarding foreign policy, questions relating to Tunisia, Morocco, etc., offer no difficulty. But there is a wide divergence of our foreign policies in basic matters. Just as American aid for Pakistan created new situation for us, so also extension of Middle East pacts involving both Pakistan and UK would create another new situation. We are pointing this out to UK. International situation is very serious at present and all these moves on either side likely to make it worse. We are intimately concerned with these matters as they affect us as well as question of war and peace. This paragraph is for your personal information.

136. Recovery of Pakistan’s share of the expenditure on account of Hazaribagh Reformatory School.

137. Recovery of Pakistan’s share of the expenditure on account of pension, Scholarships and cheques of N.W. Railway.

2. Item 133: The Pakistan Committee stated that they had made exhaustive enquiries regarding the whereabouts of these officers but had been unable to get any information on the subject.

Item 2 of the Agenda (Attached): Consideration of C 1 items:

The Committees considered the following issues classified as C 1 at their last meetings in Karachi in February, 1955 and the following decisions were reached:

Item 56: Pakistan List: Demarcation of Indo – Pakistan boundaries.

The Steering Committees agreed that the Indo – Pakistan boundaries in the Eastern and Western Zones should be demarcated with all possible speed. As far as the Eastern Zone is concerned, the demarcation is proceeding, but the authorities concerned should be instructed to expedite it.

2. As far as the Western Zone is concerned, no substantial demarcation has yet taken place. The surveyors General of India and Pakistan, assisted by officers of the States and Provinces concerned, should meet immediately with a view to devising a programme for the completion of demarcation in this zone within one year, if possible.

3. The Steering Committees agreed that all unsettled boundary disputes should be reviewed at an Indo – Pakistan Conference with a view to reaching a settlement. Any disputes involving interpretation of the Radcliffe Award, which may still remain unresolved, should be referred to an impartial Tribunal (not the Bagge Tribunal) consisting of one India Judge, one Pakistani Judge and one independent Chairman jointly agreed upon by the two Governments, for their adjudication and final settlement. The Conference should also decide on the procedure to be adopted for the solution of the remaining disputes.

The Pakistan Committee handed over a letter in this connection to the Indian Committee. The Government of India would examine this reply and communicate their comments to the Government of Pakistan at an early date.

Item 142: Pakistan List: Revised procedure for the repatriation of released prisoners detained for contravention of the Passport Regulations.

The Committees decided to re-examine the procedure in this behalf agreed to at the Indo-Pakistan (Eastern Zone) Conference held in Calcutta in September–October, 1953.

Indian item: 125: Care and maintenance of pillars on the Rajasthan–West Pakistan border.

The Pakistan Committee stated that their Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Commonwealth Relations would reply shortly to the suggestion made in this behalf by the Government of India.

Item 76: Pakistan List: Disposal of Hattersley Mills.

The Steering Committees agreed that the Hattersley Mills should be treated as the joint property of the undivided Government of India and its book value taken into account in the financial settlement between the two Governments.

Item 126: Indian List: Opening of Land Customs Stations for facilitating movement of goods of Tripura and Assam.

The Pakistan Steering Committee agreed to notify Chattak, Chetlapur, Tamabil, Bellonia and Latu as additional routes on the existing five land customs stations on the Pakistan frontier and to examine the question of opening further land customs stations which were suggested during the discussions held in New Delhi between the Members of the Central Boards of Revenue of the two countries on the 8th and 9th February, 1954.

Item 129: Indian List: Opening of check–posts for Dharmanagar Sub–Division and at Simna – Teliapara in Sadar Sub–Division.

The Secretary, Indian Steering Committee, undertook to supply details in regard to check posts and authorized routes which the Pakistan Steering Committee undertook to examine.

Item 68: Pakistan List: Record relating to the Pak–Burma Boundary.

The Indian Steering Committee agreed to issue instructions to the authorities concerned for the supply of these records to Pakistan.

Item 110: Indian List: Visit of a party officials of the Punjab (I) Rehabilitation Department to Punjab (P) Colony Districts for the comparison and correction of defective records.
The Financial Commissioner, Resettlement, Punjab (P) explained that the item related to expediting the verification from Colony records of accounts of persons who alleged that they had made payments in respect of Colony lands. It was added that in the meeting held at Jullundur on the 4th of February, 1955, between Commissioner, Relief and Rehabilitation, Punjab (I), and Financial Commissioner, Resettlement, Punjab (P), it was stated that special arrangements had been made to complete these accounts district-wise through special staff. Target dates had been fixed. The item, therefore, had already been disposed of.

Item 86: Pakistan List: Division of books of Calcutta High Court Judges Library.

The Indian Committee explained that in regard to these books belonging to the library of the High Court Judges of Calcutta, the Chief Justice of West Bengal had ruled that the duplicates of the books in the library had already been supplied to East Bengal. They added, however, that they would request the Chief Justice, West Bengal, to supply to Pakistan any copies which may not be duplicates but are copies of different editions of the same book and which the High Court Judge library could spare.

Item 6: Indian List: Recovery of Rs. 69, 513/13/9 on account of repairs etc. to Pakistan aircrafts.

The Pakistan Committee stated that this item need not present any problem as a reply to the Government of India would be issued shortly.

Item 88: Pakistan List: Division and transfer of the assets of the Red Cross Society.

Item 92: Indian List: Red Cross Society Funds, Claim of the Punjab States Branch in India.

The facts before the Committees were not quite clear. It was, therefore agreed that the Secretaries of the two Committees will correspond on these items with a view to clarifying the facts.

Item 79: Pakistan List: Pakistan’s claim to a share in the payments received by India from the United Kingdom and Allied Governments in connection with war time internees.

The Pakistan Committee stated that they had since received a reply from the Government of India.

Item 50: Indian List: Recovery of Pakistan’s agreed share of expenditure incurred on aerial photography of the West Bengal – East Bengal boundary carried out in 1948.
The Pakistan Committee agreed to pay half the cost of expenditure incurred in this behalf, provided that the Government of India would supply to Pakistan, on request, copies of prints on contact scale etc., if there were any such copies which had not been supplied so far in accordance with the agreement reached between the two Governments in that regard.

The Pakistan Committee stated that duplicate copies of some of the prints already supplied to them may be required. The Indian Committee agreed that if such prints were readily available, they would be supplied. If however, fresh copies had to be made, they would be supplied on payment.

Item 78: Pakistan List: Unauthorized entry of Indian nationals through Khokhrapar.

The Pakistan Committee stated that they would examine this matter further. It was, therefore, decided that the consideration of this item should be postponed for the time being.

Item 103: Indian List: Evacuation of armed forces belonging to the two sides from Ghatti Kamalewala near Forozapur as agreed to by the Governments of India and Pakistan.

Item 104: Indian List: Return by Punjab (P) to Punjab (I) of the control of the lower reach of the Right Marginal Bund above Ferozepore Headworks in Indian territory.

These items were discussed but no agreement could be reached. It was, therefore, decided to postpone further consideration of these items for the time being.

Item 84: Pakistan List: Repatriation to India of Muslim migrants who had migrated to West Pakistan Between the 1st February, and 31st May, 1950.

The Indian Committee stated that the original concession was to take back these migrants from U.P. up to the 31st December, 1950. As a large number of persons could not avail of the opportunity of returning to India before the 31st December, 1950, the Government of India allotted further quota for the return of these migrants even after that date. When India had communicated this arrangement to Pakistan in May, 1950, travel between India and the Western Zone of Pakistan was regulated by a permit system which had not incorporated any procedure for the return of such migrants. It was, therefore, necessary to evolve a special procedure for the return of the migrants to U.P.

Since then, a passport and visa scheme was introduced between India and Pakistan. This scheme incorporated a procedure for the return of such migrants for permanent settlement in India on the basis of the long term visa. The India Committee, therefore, stated that those migrants who have still not been able to return to India under the old procedure, should apply to Indian Diplomatic Missions in Pakistan in accordance with the new procedure. Their applications would be considered on merits.

In order to avoid hardship, however, to about 5,000 persons, whose applications had been verified by the Government of the U.P but who have still not been repatriated to India, the Indian Committee agreed to the repatriation of those persons under the old scheme as a special case.

Item 89: Pakistan List: Division and Transfer of liquid assets of the offices of the Administrator - General and Official Trustee, the Official Receiver and the Official Assignee.

The Secretary, Pakistan Steering Committee will supply the facts relating to this item.

Item 92: Pakistan List: Water Supply to Chhanga Manga Plantations

The Pakistan Committee were examining this matter further. It was therefore, decided to postpone the consideration of this item for the time being.

Item 47: Indian List: Excessive Reference to Centre made by Pak Visa issuing Authorities in India (Calcutta) before issuing Visa to A. B. E and F categories/ non-issue of E & F Visa.

It was agreed that the Governments of India and Pakistan will issue instructions to the authorities concerned to avoid excessive references to the Central Government, in accordance with the agreements already arrived at between the two Governments.

Item 69: Indian List: Recovery of contribution payable to the Government of Assam by the Mymonsingh District Board.

The Indian Committee stated that they were willing to forego this claim.

Item 77: Indian List: Public Accounts Committee 1952–53 – Suggestions for action in cases of fraud.

The Pakistan Committee agreed to consider the suggestion made by the Government of India in this behalf.

Item 128: Indian List: Opening of Akhaura – Agartala out – Agency.

It was agreed that the Railway authorities on the Pakistan side and Tripura authorities on the Indian side will discuss this matter further with a view to reaching a satisfactory settlement.

The Pakistan Committee agreed to expedite the reply of the Government of Pakistan to the reference made to them in this behalf by the Secretary General, International Civil Aviation organization.

Item 3 of the Agenda (Attached): Joint Communiqué.

It was agreed to issue a joint communiqué as at Annexure ‘C’.

ANNEXURE ‘C’

Joint Communiqué issued at the end of the India-Pakistan Steering Committees’ Meeting

The Steering Committees appointed by the Governments of India and Pakistan for discussion of outstanding issues met jointly in New Delhi on the 11th and 12th March.

The Pakistan Steering Committee consisted of:

1. Mr. J.A. Rahim, Foreign Secretary, Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Commonwealth Relations.
2. Mr. M.S.A. Baig, Joint Secretary, Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Commonwealth Relations.

The Indian Steering Committee consisted of:

1. Mr. S. Dutt, Commonwealth Secretary, Ministry of External Affairs.
2. Mr. M.V. Rangachari, Secretary, Ministry of Finance.
3. Mr. V.C. Trivedi, Director, Pakistan Division, Ministry of External Affairs.

Both the Steering Committees were assisted by Advisors including representatives of the Governments of the two Punjab and West Bengal.

The Steering Committee discussed some of the items which, according to the decisions at their meetings held in Karachi in the 2nd of February, 1955, were to be discussed by the Ministry of External Affairs, Government of India, and the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Commonwealth Relations, Government of Pakistan, and by the two Steering Committees. The discussions were conducted in a cordial atmosphere and the Committees were able to reach agreement on a number of outstanding items.

The Steering Committees will meet again as soon as possible.

0168. Cable from Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru to Indian High Commissioner C. C. Desai regarding the postponement of Prime Ministers’ meeting.

New Delhi, March 15, 1955.

High Commissioner of Pakistan saw me this morning and delivered letter dated March 8th from Governor General, Pakistan. High Commissioner was much excited about postponement of Prime Ministers’ meeting and indicated that neither Mohammad Ali nor Ghulam Mohammed wanted this postponement. He hinted that your information on this subject was not correct. He further referred, and Governor General has also referred, to your mentioning to latter about fate of forty million Muslims in India if any reopening of Kashmir question. I do not think your stress on this aspect was wise. Also, as I have emphasised previously, we were not anxious for postponement of meeting. We only wished to point out certain difficulties of problems which had to be dealt with realistically.

2. I find that Pakistan Radio announced this morning that postponement of Prime Ministers’ meeting has been done at India’s instance. All this is rather unfortunate. I want you to be particularly careful in dealing with Pakistan authorities and not make any statements which might embarrass us.
New Delhi, March 17, 1955.

My dear Governor General,

Your letter of the 8th March was handed over to me by your High Commissioner in Delhi yesterday, March 16th. Thank you for it. Since you wrote to me, some developments have taken place, as you must know, and Mohammad Ali’s visit to Delhi has been postponed.

2. I suppose that in the circumstances it became necessary to postpone this meeting. But I confess I am not very happy about it. I am particularly unhappy because there appears to be some misunderstanding on the subject. Your High Commissioner here told me quite definitely that some messages I had received from our High Commissioner could not be correct.

3. I think it is important that if there is any misunderstanding of this kind, it should be removed. We can hardly proceed to discuss any matter seriously if there is any thought in our minds that we are not dealing fairly with each other.

4. When I wrote to you my letter of the 27th February, I tried to convey to you my thoughts and feelings in so far as I could do so. There was my anxiety for India and Pakistan to solve their differences as speedily as possible. There was at the same time an apprehension that our pursuing the old path might not yield that satisfactory result and might even have a contrary effect. I unburdened myself, therefore, to you. I waited for your answer. That written answer came only yesterday. But meanwhile, C.C. Desai reported some conversations with you and with Mohammad Ali and I sent him my reactions which presumably he conveyed to you and Mohammad Ali. Naturally I pointed out that the meeting we were going to have on the 28th March might not yield fruitful results, partly because we had not previously explored the situation adequately and partly because we would be meeting in a rush with all kinds of pressing engagements facing us. I was having a visit from U Nu, Prime Minister of Burma, just about that time. Within a few days I was having a visit from the Foreign Minister of North Vietnam, and there was heavy parliamentary work all the time in which I was particularly involved because I am in charge of some important legislation. Mohammad Ali also appeared to be very fully occupied. In fact he had asked me to change the date by two or three days, as the 28th March did not suit him. I had not been able to change the date because just then U Nu would be here. I knew also that Mohammad Ali and you were facing serious constitutional difficulties which were taking much of your time.
5. Because of all these factors, I asked C.C. Desai to explain the position to Mohammad Ali. I was not at all anxious that the meeting should be postponed because we might have to face the same difficulty later.

6. C.C. Desai reported to me that Mohammad Ali also felt that in the circumstances it might be desirable to postpone the meeting. Thereupon I asked C.C. Desai to make it quite clear that mere postponement might not be desirable and therefore I was not keen on it. The reply to this came that Mohammad Ali thought that on the whole postponement was a lesser evil.

7. Thereupon I sent a message through C.C. Desai to the effect that I would agree to the postponement till after the Asian-African Conference. It was necessary, however, that a joint communiqué to this effect should be issued so that there might not be different statements from Karachi and Delhi. I sent a draft communiqué for this purpose.

8. The next evening we had a telephone message from C.C. Desai, followed by a telegram, stating that Mohammad Ali had agreed to the issue of that communiqué as it was and was anxious that this should be published the next morning as he was leaving Karachi. We issued it to the press. But no such communiqué was issued from Karachi and the statement made there was somewhat different.

9. When your High Commissioner in Delhi saw me a day after, he expressed his great surprise at all this and stated categorically that he could not believe that Mohammad Ali had agreed either to the postponement or to the joint communiqué. I really cannot understand all this and why this misunderstanding has arisen. I am again asking C.C. Desai about it.

10. I was looking forward to meeting Mohammad Ali in any event at Djakarta or Bandung in the course of the Asian-African Conference. I was returning to Delhi about the end of April. The next few days were the last few days of the Parliament session which were very heavy with work. I was then going to Berhampur in Orissa for a meeting of the All India Congress Committee. I suggested, therefore, that we might fix a date for the meeting about mid-May. I think I suggested the 14th or 15th May.

11. These are the facts, so far as I know them. If there is any mistake about them, I should like to know what it is.

12. I now come to your letter of March 8. I do not think it requires any reaffirmation from me or you that a settlement of the problems that trouble us between India and Pakistan is a matter of great importance and the more speedily this is brought about, the better. Also that fortunately there is a very favourable atmosphere, so far as the people are concerned. Therefore, I am eager to do everything in my power to help in this settlement and I welcomed your own strong urge to do so. But I pointed out that a realistic approach to the situation was necessary and an understanding of the present position and the possible consequences of any action. It was not a question of India’s difficulties or your difficulties but rather of the essential difficulties of the situation. We could not run away from the problem because of these difficulties. But we could only solve if we appreciated them and not ignored them.

13. You tell me in your letter that Desai said to you that any reopening of the Kashmir question and any settlement that we might arrive at would jeopardise the position of Muslims in India. If Desai said this, he did not represent my mind correctly. If we are to deal with the Kashmir question, we have to reopen it with the intention of arriving at a settlement. Otherwise there is no question of dealing with the matter, nor was I thinking at any time of the position of the Muslims in India being jeopardised in the way that is suggested. The position, as you say, is entirely different from what it was in 1947*. What I had said was of some wider import. That is, any step taken in Kashmir which, instead of giving a healing touch to our relations, might upset them, would be unfortunate. Therefore we had to be careful as to what step we take and how we take it.

14. I have no doubt that your presence in Delhi when we have any talks would be very helpful indeed, even though you might not formally associate yourself with those talks. You would be very welcome here.

15. I do not wish to discuss this whole question over again in this letter. But I wanted to write to you immediately, not only to thank you for your letter but to try to remove some misunderstandings.

With regards and good wishes,

Yours sincerely
Jawaharlal Nehru

* Ghulam Mohammed had in his letter of 8 March stressed that “without settlement of Kashmir by mutual agreement, I feel that my work in the field of improving India-Pakistan relations .... cannot be sustained.” Regarding any fear of disturbance as a result of the Kashmir settlement, Ghulam Mohammad did not anticipate any of the problem that arose at the time of partition and said “that the conditions today are not the same in India and Pakistan as they were in 1947. The partition was immediate and minds were very disturbed. All I feel is that except for a section of the Indian people, who could be described as communalists and who rely on extreme opposition to you also, there should not be any such danger, and even if it should arise you have the proper means, both with your army and police, to deal with the situation. In Pakistan you can fully rely on me....”
Letter from Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru to High Commissioner C.C. Desai.

New Delhi, March 18, 1955.

My dear C.C.,

The Prime Ministers’ meeting on the 28th is off. But we appear to have been landed in some kind of a muddle. Ghazanfar Ali Khan makes all kinds of charges and practically says that you misled us about what his Prime Minister said or wanted done. This naturally is very annoying. Ghazanfar Ali Khan sent a telegram to Mohammad Ali at Dacca and got a reply which he is flaunting about. This whole matter must be cleared up. I dislike greatly any impression being created that we have tried to overreach anybody or backed out of any assurance. That is why I have been repeatedly telling you to be exceedingly careful. Do not proceed on inferences or impressions. The Governor-General becomes highly emotional in his talk and says many things which have no particular meaning. Mohammed Ali is vague. We cannot afford to be caught up in any way.

I have sent you a letter to the Governor-General today which I hope you will deliver immediately.

I was much surprised to learn that you visited that shrine of Deva Shariff in Bara Banki. No doubt, you did so that this gesture might please the Governor General. But I think it was overdoing it and people who have heard about it do not like it at all. Even Maulana Saheb (Maulana Abdul Kalam Azad) was disturbed when he heard about this from Ghazanfar Ali.

Yours sincerely

Jawaharlal Nehru

0171. Cable from Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru to High Commissioner C.C. Desai.

New Delhi, May 3, 1955.

Mulraj* came to see me yesterday and gave me some account of his talks in Karachi. I do not think these talks yield out much hope.

2. Mulraj told me that Governor General was anxious to meet me in Delhi or elsewhere. If he so wishes, I shall of course gladly meet him. You know my programme. I leave Delhi 8th morning for Orissa returning 12th May early afternoon.

3. Please inform Governor General that I have learnt that he wishes to meet me. I shall be very happy to meet him if he would be good enough to come to Delhi. This means that the earliest that I can meet him is 12th May afternoon. We shall be glad to have him as our guest here if he comes then.

4. Please let me know his reaction.

* Mulraj was resident in Karachi and known to both Ghulam Mohammad and Nehru and acted as an intermediary between the two at the instance of the former. But Nehru regarding Mulraj as a well meaning persons but had some doubts about his judgement.
Report of the Intelligence Bureau (Ministry of Home Affairs), Government of India on the visit of the Akali leader Giani Kartar Singh to Lahore.

New Delhi, May 4, 1955.

A note on the visit of certain Akali leaders led by Giani Kartar Singh to Lahore on the 21st, 22nd and 23rd April, 1955, is enclosed.

(B.N. Mullik)

DIB U.O. No. SA/714 – IV dated the 5th May, 1955

Visit of Akali leaders to Lahore

The Akali leaders arrived late for the tea party arranged for them as well as the Municipal Commissioners of Amritsar by the members of the Corporation in Bagh-e-Jinnah, Lahore, on the evening of 21-4-55. Raja Ghazanfar Ali Khan, informally speaking welcomed them to Lahore and expressed gratification on the restoration of cordial relations between the peoples of the two Punjabs. He deplored that ‘motives’ had been attributed to Pakistanis for allegedly showing ‘preferential treatment’ to Sikhs visiting Lahore on the occasion of the earlier Cricket Match. He said that Hindus had been visiting Lahore ever since the partition but not the Sikhs. If friends on meeting after such a long lapse of time showed exuberance of hospitality and goodwill, there was nothing sinister in that. Giani Kartar Singh thanking Raja Ghazanfar Ali Khan for the sentiments expressed by him, assured him that responsible public opinion in India did not subscribe to the views that the Sikhs were shown any preferential treatment with any ulterior motives.

Arrangements were made for the Akali leaders to stay in the Municipal High School, Mozang. As the Akali leaders passed through Anarkali Bazar, the Pakistanis gave them a great ovation and rousing reception. The crowd shouted ‘Giani Kartar Singh- Zindabad’, ‘Muslim-Sikh Itehad – Zindabad’. Giani Kartar Singh was asked to stand up in the jeep for the people to see and to make a speech. He stood up in the jeep but said that he would be attending a poetical symposium on the following day when he would make a speech. Thereafter, the party of Akali leaders visited Gurdwara Dera Sahib.

Late in the same evening (21-4-55) at about 9 P.M., Raja Ghazanfar Ali Khan sent his car to fetch Giani Kartar Singh. Giani Kartar Singh returned to the Municipal High School, Mozang, where he was staying, after about two hours. He told his colleagues, on their enquiry, that he and Raja Ghazanfar Ali Khan had had a detailed discussion on the Sikh affairs. According to Giani Kartar Singh, Raja Ghazanfar Ali Khan sympathised with the Sikhs for unjust treatment being meted out to them by the Indian Government. He said that it was this highly communal Hindu mentality which had compelled Mr. Jinnah to demand Pakistan. Mr. Jinnah used to say that the Banias (trading class) should never be trusted. He refused to join hands with the Congress leaders as he knew that their call for unity was only a subterfuge to turn out the British. Had he fallen in their trap, the Muslims would have met the same fate as the Sikhs were meeting now. He said that the Sikhs committed a blunder in not accepting a ‘buffer’ Sikh State between India and Pakistan which both the British and Mr. Jinnah were ready to concede. The Congress leaders at that time painted a very rosy picture about the future of the Sikhs and the Akali leaders joined hands with them. He said that the demand for a Punjabi Suba (state) was just and constitutional and had the backing of over 95 per cent Sikh population as was evident from the Akali victory in the SGPC elections. He said that he had been keeping his Government fully posted with the developments in Sikh affairs and the people in Pakistan fully sympathised with the Sikhs for their sad plight. Raja Ghazanfar Ali Khan continued that the position of the nationalist Sikhs in India was no better than that of the nationalist Muslims of the Preparation days, and once the Punjabi Suba was formed like Pakistan, they would meet the fate of the nationalist Muslims. Giani Kartar Singh said that he told Raja Ghazanfar Ali Khan that there was no use crying over split milk. He enquired from him as to whether it was merely lip sympathy on the part of the Pakistanis or they were in a position to help the Sikhs in any way. Raja Ghazanfar Ali Khan said that if the Sikhs so desired, the Pakistan Government could take the issue of the Punjabi Suba to the United Nations, where he was hopeful it would have the support of America, United Kingdom and some Muslim countries. In that way, the hands of the Congress Government could be forced for its earlier acceptance. Giani Kartar Singh said that the proposal was not one which could yield immediate results. More important than that was the question of Gurdwars left in Pakistan. Master Tara Singh had already made a proposal for a Sikh Zone on the border of Sialkot or Lahore districts of Pakistan in lieu of the lands attached to the Gurdwaras so that from the income derived from such lands the Sikh religious shrines in Pakistan might be looked after and maintained. Raja Ghazanfar Ali Khan said that he had already read the appeal of Master Tara Singh and assured that it would receive a favourable consideration at the hands of the Pakistan Government. He said that he would bring his influence to bear on the Government to give visa facilities more liberally for the Sikhs to visit and look after their Gurdwaras in Pakistan.

On 22-4-55, Giani Kartar Singh met a number of Pakistan dignitaries including Malik Feroze Khan Noon and Begum Salma Tasadaq, MLA, as well as a number of journalists and offered to explain to them the proposal of Master Tara Singh for a Sikh Zone in Pakistan. Giani Kartar Singh told them by way of explanation that if it was not possible for the Pakistan Government to allot all the land at one place, then the Sikhs could have land at two or three places both at the Sialkot and Lahore borders. Some of the Pakistani papers whereupon published Master Tara Singh’s appeal.

On 23-4-55, the Akali leaders were entertained at a tea party by Sheikh Sadiq Hassan, MLA. As a president of the organisation for the recovery of abducted women, the host (Sheikh Sadiq Hassan) appealed to the Akali leaders to help in the recovery of Muslim women abducted in the disturbances. Giani Kartar Singh replying said that the Akali Party had always lent its support to the recovery work and would also do so in future, but the matter was one which could only be effectively taken up at governmental level, as the goonda element which was keeping back the womenfolk in their possession could only be tackled by the Government.
0173. Minutes of the Talks held between Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru and Pakistan Prime Minister Mohammad Ali and Interior Minister Iskander Mirza.

New Delhi, May 14, 1955.

Mr. Mohammad Ali, Prime Minister of Pakistan, and General Iskander Mirza, Minister of the Interior, came to my house at 11.35 am on 14th May. Maulana Azad and Shri Govind Ballabh Pant were also present. Our talk lasted for about an hour and a half when we went to lunch. After lunch, Mr. Mohammad Ali and General Iskander Mirza went away. It was decided that we should meet again tomorrow, 15th May, at 10.00 am in my house.

2. General Iskander Mirza began by expressing his deep regret for the incident at Nekowal village near the Jammu border. He said that Premier Mohammad Ali had expressed his deep regret already to the President. This incident was most unfortunate and effective steps should be taken to prevent a recurrence of any such happening. Pantji said that this was not only very unfortunate in itself but the time when it occurred was still more unhappy. I said that all of us had been deeply distressed by this incident, and there was much public feeling. A large number of border incidents had been occurring during the past few years. They could be divided in two or three categories. One was a large category consisting of what might be called criminal acts, stealing, driving away cattle, dacoity, etc. Sometimes, there was a little shooting involved too. A border always attracted such criminal elements. Then there were other incidents which were not criminal and where there was a petty clash, sometimes involving shooting. This particular incident however at Nekowal was rather unique. Oddly enough, our military headquarters did not receive any news of it till almost twenty hours after it had occurred. The first news that came to us was through our Food Ministry which was running a farm there. A tractor had been sent there under one of our officers, Major Badwar, accompanied by a guard of six persons and some civilians. Previously, that is, a year or two ago, in order to avoid incidents, it had been agreed that none of our armed forces should go to the Nekowal village or within three hundred yards of it. On this occasion, Major Badwar was apparently demarcating a line some five hundred yards away. Suddenly, there was firing on him from across the Pakistan border. Major Badwar was immediately killed. Probably, the armed guard accompanying him returned the fire but they were also shot at and killed. The civilians accompanying them also suffered casualties. The Pakistanis took away these bodies as well as the tractor.

3. The UN observer came later, and the bodies were recovered as well as the tractor. The tractor was drilled with bullets on three sides. Two or three of the civilian bodies bore no trace of a bullet mark, but they had been mutilated with big gashes. The backs of some of these bodies were lacerated indicating that they had been dragged along the ground for a long distance.

4. I said all this had shocked us greatly and was deeply distressing. It was clear from this account that our people were peacefully engaged in ploughing. No one would commit aggression with a tractor.

5. Mr. Mohammad Ali said that the account they had received was somewhat different but they would await the result of the enquiry and would certainly punish those who were found guilty. I said that General Shaikh who had come from Pakistan soon after the incident, had expressed his great regret and had spoken rather strongly to the villagers and others about condemning them for their misbehaviour. The next day, however, he appeared to have taken up a somewhat different attitude.

6. Both Mr. Mohammad Ali and General Iskander Mirza said that the guilty must be punished whoever they were and steps must be taken to prevent any such thing happening in future anywhere on the border. General Iskander Mirza said he would like to discuss these border problems separately with our Home Minister, Pantji. He said that it was absurd that both our countries should keep large forces facing each other on the border. We should gradually withdraw them. To begin with, they might withdraw on both sides to some distance. Later, they could be thinned out and, later still, only some police check posts need be kept on either side, as was becoming for friendly countries.

7. I said that we were quite willing to consider these matters in a friendly spirit. General Iskander Mirza fixed some time to meet Pantji tomorrow, 15th May, at his house. This was, I think, 3.00 pm, but I am not sure of the time.

8. Mr. Mohammad Ali then referred to the Kashmir issue and said that we must settle this. He said that we, that is India, held the key, and he would like to know what we suggested about settling it. He spoke at some length about the necessity and desirability of settling this question, and having friendly and cooperative relations between the two countries.

9. I entirely agreed with him. I pointed out, however, that we had been discussing this matter for the last seven and a half years without having made much progress. Meanwhile, all kinds of developments had taken place, and the position had to some extent stabilized itself on either side of the ceasefire line. It was not much good our covering the old ground again and talking at each other. We knew the background and we must approach this question in a friendly and realistic manner.

10. I then referred to past history—how the first news came to us about the raid at Muzaffarabad, how we were agitated about it but could think of doing nothing at the time, how further news came of the destruction of the Mahora power house and the sack of villages, etc., en route by the raiders, ending up with the sack of Baramula, etc. All this alarmed us and we felt that if the raiders reached Srinagar and sacked that city, this would create a very dangerous situation, passions would be aroused and all this might lead to war between India and Pakistan. Just then, appeals for help came to us both from the Maharaja’s government and the National Conference. Both suggested the accession of the Jammu and Kashmir state of (to) India, presuming no doubt that this would enable us to help them in defending the country from the raiders.

11. We met in the Defence Committee and sat for long hours discussing this very difficult situation. Lord Mountbatten presided over that meeting. We did not think then that the Pakistan army was involved, although we felt that Pakistan had encouraged and helped the raiders. Ultimately, we came to the conclusion, late in the evening, in October 1947, that we must do something to prevent the raiders reaching Srinagar. We made preparations overnight and sent a small force of about two hundred and twenty soldiers by air early next morning to Kashmir. These people arrived there just in time to prevent the airfield falling into the hands of the raiders. They went into action immediately and gradually pushed back the raiders. The next day, we sent another batch of two hundred and fifty or so by air. Gradually, we had over a thousand soldiers there, and they succeeded in driving the raiders out of the valley and right up to and beyond Uri. Our troops then found a wall of resistance facing them. This was the Pakistan army. The situation changed. We were no longer dealing with a number of raiders but with the Pakistan army. After that, these military operations developed and spread out.

12. In the early months of the Kashmir operations, I met the then Pakistan Premier, Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan once, I think, in Delhi and once in Lahore. We discussed this matter and I felt that we were not very far from an agreement, although no agreement was arrived at. I had a feeling then also that some of the senior British officers in Pakistan, notably the then Governor of the Punjab, threw their weight against a settlement. I had had this experience in discussing other matters also in Lahore.

13. Some months later, I met Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan in London at the Commonwealth Prime Ministers’ Conference and, later, in Paris where I had a long talk with him about Kashmir. I told him that I was deeply distressed at this war going on between our armies. All our background was against war but we had been compelled to resort to armed defence because we felt strongly about this invasion. All over India there was this strong feeling. I had no doubt that his view was different and there was possibly equally strong feeling in Pakistan.
What, then, were we to do? I felt that, in the balance, the Indian army was stronger than the Pakistan army and we would win in the end, but it was obvious that the war would be a prolonged one and would deeply injure both India and Pakistan. Apart from this, I was anxious to put an end to this war. For us to try to impose each other’s will on the other by armed might would bring disaster to both. I was anxious, therefore, to put an end to this as soon as possible. We had talked about a plebiscite, etc. I was prepared for that, but I had no doubt that we would have to face great difficulties and a long time would elapse before we could give effect to this, and even then it was by no means clear if there would be a satisfactory settlement. The only feasible and practical approach seemed to me to accept things as they were at that time and put an end to this war on that basis. Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan did not agree to this, and there our talks ended. This was in the latter half of 1948.

14. Since then, much had happened – UN Commission, Mr. Dixon, Dr. Graham, etc., etc. We had agreed to the UN resolution about a plebiscite, but it was clearly laid down in that resolution that certain things had to be done and certain conditions established before the plebiscite could take place. So, we started talking about these preconditions. There were many of them, but gradually talks centered round one aspect of this question. This was the question of the quantum of forces to be kept on the Indian side as well as on the other. We discussed this at length with Dr. Graham without finally coming to a decision, although we seemed to approach each other. According to the UN Commission’s resolution, the Pakistani Forces had to be withdrawn completely and we had to withdraw the bulk of our forces. The Pakistan interpretation was somewhat different.

15. Thus, although we came rather near to the solution of this problem of the quantum of forces, we did not actually arrive at an agreement. The other important preconditions were not even discussed then. It was about this time that I met Mr. Mohammad Ali for the first time in this connection, and we arrived at an agreement about the future approach to this question.

16. A little later, new developments took place in the international field which changed the context of this problem. This was American military aid to Pakistan. Much later, indeed recently, Pakistan had got tied up with Western and Middle Eastern military blocs. This had changed the entire picture in this area and brought the prospect of world war right to our borders. I could not and did not challenge the right of Pakistan to make any decisions or any arrangements with other countries but I had to consider the consequences of those decisions in regard to ourselves and our own problems, more especially, the Kashmir problem. I did not wish to discuss our basic international policy which was nothing new for us. It flowed from our thinking in pre-independence days and,
I was convinced, that it was the only policy that India could pursue both for herself and for the good of world peace. Anyhow, the Kashmir problem had to be seen in this context, and our previous discussions had to be revised accordingly.

17. Mr. Mohammad Ali said that each country naturally had to decide for itself but even their alignments with foreign countries were partly the result of their conflict with India. If that conflict ceased, no doubt that would have some effect on their international policy. I said that I agreed with this to a considerable extent. There was action and interaction in regard to these matters and each influenced the other.

18. Mr. Mohammad Ali said that if there was complete friendliness with India, Pakistan would not spend so much on its army and would devote its resources more to economic development which was so necessary. I agreed and added that we had ourselves been anxious about reducing our army. In fact, some years ago, we had reduced it by about fifty thousand and intended reducing it further. The difficulty however arose about providing employment to those persons discharged from the army. Some of them joined gangs of dacoits, especially in Rajasthan, and gave us many headaches. We, therefore, toned down our army reduction till we could make provision for those discharged. Even so, we were proceeding to reduce our army by about ten thousand a year.

19. I further pointed out that our whole mind in India was today directed towards economic development. We were not interested much in political matters or even in international matters, although we could not help participating in them. Above everything, we wanted economic and industrial progress, the raising of standards of our people and the reduction of the number of unemployed. Owing to the growth of population, we had eighteen lakhs of fresh employable persons every year, apart from the old reservoir of unemployed. This was a terrific problem and we were trying to face it in our Second Five Year Plan. A country was really strong only if it was economically and industrially advanced. As I had said at Bandung, I did not believe in a country or an individual being weak. The weak went to the wall. If there was no strength in a country, there was a power vacuum which others filled, as it happened when the British came here. I did not want any further power vacuums in India and that was the position of other Eastern countries too. Therefore, our absorption in economic matters. Nothing could please us so much as a settlement of problems which came in our way, like the Kashmir problem.

20. Mr. Mohammad Ali asked me what then were we to do about Kashmir. I said that we had to face the situation as it was. During these seven and a half years, many changes had taken place. The position had stabilized itself somewhat on both sides of the ceasefire line. On our side in the Jammu and Kashmir state, considerable progress had been made. Economic conditions were better than for many years. Prices were lower. A big hydroelectric scheme had just been completed, and would supply light and power. Other schemes to prevent floods had also advanced greatly. The Banihal tunnel was also well on its way. By the end of this year, probably the tunnel would be pierced through.
In another year’s time, it ought to be working. This would make a difference in the valley. There were many other small schemes and improvements in the J&K state. Altogether, the position had stabilized and was an improving one.
Naturally, I could not say what was happening on the other side of the cease-fire line. Mr. Mohammad Ali would know much better. In any event, a certain measure of stabilization must have taken place there. Were we to upset all this? Anything which had that effect of upsetting, would not lead to the solution of the problem, but rather to the aggravation of our difficulties and, perhaps, more bitterness. If large numbers of refugees trooped out either to Pakistan or to India, they would bring trouble and discord and bitterness with them, and the relations of India and Pakistan would be poisoned afresh. All the good that had happened might be washed away. At present, fortunately, there was a good deal of goodwill among the people of India and Pakistan as we had seen in Lahore, Amrits, Jullundur, etc. Therefore, I was anxious to avoid any step which had an upsetting result.

21. I wanted to stand by the commitments we had made but sometimes commitments overlapped or clashed with each other. There were the commitments about the plebiscite, etc. I wanted to stand by them, although I realized how progressively difficult this had become. Then, there were the commitments to the Kashmir Government and people. In fact, we were constitutionally bound in many ways to the Jammu and Kashmir Government.
All our states were autonomous to a large extent, but the J&K state was more autonomous than others, and we could not interfere in most matters. We could advise, of course. Sometimes, things were done there by the Government, which were not to our liking, but we could not help that. Therefore, we could not bypass that Government. In fact, constitutionally and according to our agreement, we could not do so.

22. Keeping all these international and national matters in view, and having given the most earnest consideration to this problem, we had come to the conclusion that the only practical and safe way of dealing with it was to accept present conditions as they were, that is, the status quo, and then proceed on that basis. Having accepted that, one could consider what rectifications of the border, etc., could be made to suit both parties. But the main thing was an acceptance of the principle of the status quo.
23. Mr. Mohammad Ali had listened patiently to all this. Occasionally, he said a sentence or two, and so did General Iskander Mirza. Maulana Azad and Pantji also occasionally made a remark. When I had finished, Mr. Mohammad Ali said that he would like a further elucidation from me as to what I meant by these rectifications and the consequences of our proceeding on the basis I had mentioned. He said that we might consider this further tomorrow when he said we might have a map to help us.

24. We agreed to this, and we are meeting tomorrow at 10.00 am at the Prime Minister’s House.

0174. Minutes of the meeting between Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru and Pakistan Prime Minister Mohammad Ali and Interior Minister Iskander Mirza.

New Delhi, May 15, 1955.

We met at 10.00 am. Mr. Mohammad Ali, Prime Minister of Pakistan, Mr. Iskander Mirza, Maulana Azad and Shri Govind Ballabh Pant were present, apart from me. The meeting lasted for about an hour and three quarters.

The map of the Jammu and Kashmir state was examined. I was asked by Premier Mohammad Ali to elucidate and follow up what I said yesterday. I replied that I had made our approach clear. I thought that there were only two courses open to us: (1) to aim at a final settlement now, leaving nothing over, (2) to try to prepare the ground for a final settlement at a much later stage, trying to work towards it.

3. It was not possible or desirable to settle a part of the problem finally now and leave another part for later decision. This would be unfair and would leave a feeling of uncertainty. Personally, I preferred the first alternative, that is, a final settlement if that was possible.

4. Mr Iskander Mirza pointed out the difficulty of his Government in accepting things as they were. How could they possibly put this across to their people? No government would last twenty-four hours in Pakistan on this basis. I said that a similar difficulty would arise on both sides. In addition, we had our constitutional difficulties. I read out the part of our Constitution referring to Kashmir as contained in the President’s Order of the 14th May, 1954. This ran as follows:
“Provided further that no Bill providing for increasing or diminishing the area of the State of Jammu and Kashmir or altering the name or boundary of that State, shall be introduced in Parliament without the consent of the legislature of that State.”

5. I said that either party trying to make a major change in the status quo as at present, would not only produce violent reactions on the other side but would have a gravely upsetting effect. Therefore, there appeared to be no other way except to proceed on the present basis. Any major change would mean our facing the problem of migrations on a large scale.

6. Mr Iskander Mirza referred to the past talks, etc., and how they had been affected by American aid to Pakistan. That aid had nothing to do with Kashmir or India. It was merely in self-protection. He would like to have common defence with India. He pointed out the dangers of the Persian Gulf being occupied by a hostile power and that the defence of the Persian Gulf depended upon Pakistan and India.

7. I said that we would like to coordinate our defence policies as well as other policies with Pakistan, but what exactly did common defence mean. Against whom was it intended? Presumably against the Soviet Union. I could not conceive of the Soviet Union attacking Pakistan or India. There was a possibility, in case of war, of the Persian Gulf being threatened. Even that was a contingency that would only arise in case of a world war when of course military and strategic conditions would be considered from a world point of view. The major theatres of war would be Europe and the Far East. The Middle East might be in danger but nothing much would depend upon it. The real issue would be determined elsewhere.

8. Also, that in existing circumstances no aggression by any party anywhere in the world could take place without provoking a major war. That in itself was a strong deterrent. We felt therefore that the best way to seek security was to make a different and a friendly approach to countries, at the same time of course keeping one’s own country as strong as possible.

9. I referred to Sir Winston Churchill’s idea of the next war—its instantaneous and terribly destructive character. Also to what Admiral Radford of the US said recently. He had said that the Western powers were strong enough to defeat the Soviet Union, etc. He had added, however, that there would be no victor in the next war.

10. Because of all this, war had to be avoided and these local defence arrangements had no significance. I ventured to say to Mr. Iskander Mirza that his analysis was out of date in the new atomic age.
11. Reference was made by Mr. Iskander Mirza to some kind of negotiations that had been carried on informally with the Governor General of Pakistan. I said that there had been some vague and informal exchanges through Mr. Mulraj and I understood that one Mr. Wajid Ali, whom I had not met, was also involved. The broad proposals made on behalf of the Governor General were that a large piece of territory in Jammu, north of the Chenab, should be transferred to Pakistan. Also, that Kashmir proper should be under some kind of a joint control of a joint army.

12. I pointed out that these proposals were completely impractical. I could not conceive of any kind of joint control of Kashmir for practical reasons. From constitutional reasons also, it had to be ruled out. As for large tracts of territory north of Chenab being transferred, this was quite out of the question. No one on our side could possibly think of this. We could never get people to agree to it, and it would create enormous problems of migration, etc. I also pointed out that this would mean cutting off a small area of Jammu left with India, from Kashmir.

13. Mr. Iskander Mirza said that he himself did not think this proposal of transfer of all these territories north of the Chenab, as practical. Mr. Mohammad Ali and Mr. Iskander Mirza again pointed out their difficulties with their people in accepting anything which completely ignored their wishes and demands. Something had to be done to make them feel that they had gained something. I was asked again to indicate our precise proposal. What was the least or the most that we would accept? I said that was difficult for me to indicate precisely the variations in the present ceasefire line. That would depend on geographical, administrative and other factors. These would have to be considered carefully by people on both sides. I pointed out for instance that the northern ceasefire line was not a happy one. The Kishanganga was a suitable line but actually the ceasefire line was a few miles away. These considerations might apply to other places too on both sides. Apart from these minor alterations, I said that I thought it might be possible to consider the transfer of a certain part of the Poonch area which was on the Indian side. I was asked what part. I said I could not say definitely because I was not acquainted with the exact position but, roughly speaking, the Poonch area. Even this transfer, I added, might involve the migration of about fifty thousand persons from the areas transferred. That in itself would be a grave problem.

14. I added that one of the reasons which actuated me in suggesting this Poonch area was the fact that this was a major recruiting ground for the Pakistan army and many people in that army came from this area.

15. Mr. Iskander Mirza said that he did not see why anyone should leave the Poonch area because it was transferred. These people would not only be allowed to stay on but would be given a fair treatment. I said that this might be so but conditions were created and forces began to work which could not be checked.

16. At this stage, our talks about the Kashmir issue were adjourned. Mr. Mohammad Ali said that he would give us their reactions tomorrow after consulting their officers and experts.

17. Mr. Iskander Mirza then asked what other matters there were for us to discuss. I mentioned the exodus from East Pakistan which was formidable and most embarrassing for us. He acknowledged that this was a serious matter and that the actual figures of the exodus had been examined and found to tally on both sides. The Pakistan Government had issued stringent orders on this subject to the East Pakistan Government. He would show us copies of the telegrams issued.

18. This question of the exodus from East Pakistan was further discussed as to the causes underlying it. It was admitted generally that there were economic causes. Some reference was made to the Zamindari legislation by Mr. Mohammad Ali, which affected not only the zamindars but the considerable number of people who were dependent upon them in various ways.

19. I said that I was quite sure that the Pakistan Government did not want this exodus. I could not say definitely about the East Pakistan Government, but the real difficulty came from hosts of minor officials in East Pakistan. I added that nothing was more surprising than the charge made in the Pakistan press that India was deliberately inciting these people to migrate from East Pakistan. We must be mad indeed to invite trouble in this way.

20. I then referred to the canal waters issue which was now being considered in consultation with the World Bank. I gave a brief summary of the old history of this issue and referred to our meeting on May 4, 1948, at which the present Governor General, Mr. Ghulam Mohammed, was also present, and the agreement then arrived at. I pointed out that, so far as certain areas of East Punjab were concerned as well as Pepsu and Rajasthan, there was no hope for them at all except to get water from the Sutlej. The Bhakra-Nangal scheme had been thought of long before Partition in order to provide these waters. We realised, of course, that West Pakistan must not suffer and that had been our approach throughout, and the World Bank's approach. This might involve some big construction in West Pakistan involving an expenditure of sixty or seventy crores of rupees. India was prepared to share in this burden. Anyhow, I hoped that a settlement would be arrived at under the auspices of the World Bank.

21. I referred to the evacuee property question and said that this had been discussed by Mr. Iskander Mirza and others with Shri Mehr Chand Khanna. Some satisfactory decisions had been arrived at, but a part of the problem still remained.
22. I then briefly referred to other questions like visas, etc., which Mr. Iskander Mirza was going to discuss with our Home Minister. Mr. Iskander Mirza said that we must get rid of these objectionable, humiliating provisions about reporting to the police, etc. I agreed.

23. As Mr. Iskander Mirza was going away, he referred to the question of mosques and temples. He said that it was hardly possible for these innumerable mosques and temples to be looked after properly, when there was no one present in those areas who took interest in them. What should be done was to make a list of all important mosques, temples and gurdwaras on either side and these should be properly looked after. The others should simply be allowed to decay. Pantji suggested some kind of a joint Board to look after these places of religious worship.

24. The meeting terminated at 11.45 am. It was agreed that we should meet again tomorrow, Monday, the 16th May, at 10.00 am at the Prime Minister's Home.

0175. Minutes of the Talks between Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru and Pakistan Prime Minister Mohammad Ali and Interior Minister Iskander Mirza.

New Delhi, May 16, 1955.

The talks began at 10.10 am and lasted till about 12.30 pm. The same persons were present as on the previous days.

2. Mr. Mohammad Ali began by saying that if they accepted my proposals of the previous day, they would be blown sky-high in Pakistan. There was no possibility of their getting through with this in Pakistan. By accepting India's proposals they committed themselves to getting out of the Security Council and other foreign forums and thus save India from these entanglements. What did Pakistan get out of it? This had been suggested two years ago by the PM of India. Unless there was some major adjustments now, the only course was to continue with the Security Council, etc., and consider the question of the plebiscite and try to come to an arrangement about the conditions governing the plebiscite.

3. Maulana Azad laid stress on the great advantage of finishing this dispute between Pakistan and India. There was this difference now from the previous occasions when they met: there was undoubtedly a strong and new urge on both sides to come to a settlement. What India had suggested was a practical step in view of all the circumstances.

4. Mr. Mohammad Ali said that India was a big country, the big sister of Pakistan. She was a great nation and there had been much progress in India. India should, therefore, be generous and magnanimous.

5. Mr. Iskander Mirza said that his Government would fall if India’s proposal was accepted.

6. Pantji pointed out that seven years had passed bringing many changes in their train. They could not ignore these changes, and they had to look at this question from practical point of view. Maulana Azad also emphasized that they must adopt a practical course and accept the status quo as a base.

7. Mr. Iskander Mirza said the present proposals were not acceptable and so they had to go back to the old talks. They would consult their advisers about this matter.

8. I referred again to the tortuous history of the past seven and a half years and how repeatedly we had got deadlocked not so much because of Pakistan’s or India’s attitude, but because of the inherent difficulties of the situation. Those difficulties had become far greater now than they were previously. While we might not come to an agreement, events marched on and produced changes. We could not ignore these changes. There were changes internally in the Jammu and Kashmir state, there were changes in Pakistan and in India, and there were changes in our international relations with other countries. Pakistan’s tie-up with the Western system of alliances brought Western Europe, in a military sense, to the borders of India. This fact was important and could not be ignored. Equally important was what had happened internally both on the Indian side of the ceasefire line and the Pakistan side. There had been a certain stabilization. A large number of people had been settled there. To upset all this would be a serious affair, would not bring about a settlement but further troubles. Of course, we could discuss along the old lines but this had failed to produce any result previously and in the altered circumstances of today, the possibility of success was far more slender. Therefore, to talk in old terms was not helpful.

9. Mr. Iskander Mirza said that they had come from Pakistan because the Governor General had given them to understand that there was a broad acceptance of a new base for negotiations. He was of the opinion that formal talks should only be held when privately and informally a broad agreement had been arrived at. Mr. Mohammad Ali agreed with this and said that that had always been his opinion. In fact, he did not want to come here till some such broad agreement had been reached informally. Unfortunately, the Governor
General’s serious illness had upset plans. Mr. Iskander Mirza said that he was coming here previously for this particular purpose. It was easy for ministers to come ostensibly for some other object and have private discussions. This had not happened and now it appeared that there was much misunderstanding about the negotiations with the Governor General.

10. I referred to these so-called negotiations and gave a brief account of them. I pointed out that I did not like this way of approaching each other as it was liable to create misunderstandings. Mr. Mulraj was a good man whom I had known for long but obviously he did not understand this problem and had no political bent. He had been sent for by the Governor General through some intermediaries. He had then come to me with some vague proposals of the Governor General. In the main, these proposals were that a large area of the Jammu province including Poonch, Riyasi, Udhampur, etc., should be transferred to Pakistan, that Skardu might be transferred to India, and that Kargil area should be attached to Kashmir and should be governed by future decisions about Kashmir, and that there should be some joint control by India and Pakistan, both political and military, of this Kashmir area. Some kind of a plebiscite of the Kashmir area, from five to twenty years hence, was envisaged.

11. I was much surprised to receive these proposals through Mr. Mulraj. I had told him that I could not even consider them. It was quite impossible for us to transfer these large areas to Pakistan. No government in India could do it, apart from this involving huge political and social upheavals in these areas which were settled and progressing satisfactorily. We were not very much interested in the Skardu area which was very sparsely populated and mountainous. As for joint control of Kashmir, this was unthinkable, and such a thing had not happened anywhere before with success. I gave nothing in writing to Mr. Mulraj.

12. Mr. Mulraj returned, and came back about two months later. He told me that the Governor General realized that it was not feasible for the Udhampur area to be transferred. He did not think it would be difficult to come to an agreement about some other areas in the Jammu province when he met me as he proposed doing. About Kashmir proper it was said that no change in the present Government was desired, but some formal supervision jointly by the President of India and the Governor General of Pakistan. That is to say, in theory both had an equal share.

13. I pointed out that I could not, from any point of view, constitutional or other, imagine this kind of joint supervision. Kashmir was an autonomous area and we could not deal with it in this way. As for Jammu areas, I again pointed out that these large transfers were not at all feasible or desirable. It might be possible for us, as I had hinted, to consider the Poonch area in this connection.
14. This was the last talk I had with Mr. Mulraj. It appeared to me that this way of doing business was most unsatisfactory and was bound to create misunderstandings as, in fact, it appeared to have done.

15. Mr. Iskander Mirza agreed that this was very unsatisfactory and this had given rise to wrong notions in the mind of the Governor General. Anyhow, he said that there was no option now but to go back and report to the Governor General.

16. The map of the Jammu and Kashmir state was again examined. Mr. Iskander Mirza said that while they could not at present accept my proposals, we should not break. The communiqué we would have to issue, should be very carefully drafted to avoid any impression being created that we had broken or ended negotiations. We should say that we would continue these negotiations but it was not desirable to meet formally in future till some basis of agreement had been arrived at by previous informal talks.

17. There was some talk then about the recent serious illness of the Pakistan Governor General when all hope of his recovery had been given up. But by some kind of a miracle, he pulled together again and recovered.

18. Mr. Iskander Mirza referred to his talks with Pantji the day before about various matters and said that they hoped to issue a note or a communiqué on that subject soon. A joint committee was examining in detail those matters.

19. I referred briefly to another undecided issue between India and Pakistan. This was a financial arrangement between them. This had been discussed by the two Finance Ministers on two or three occasions but the matter was still pending. Mr. Iskander Mirza said: “Do not ask us to pay any money because we have not got it.” I said that we realized their difficulties and we did not propose to put any burden on them on this account at present. But it was desirable to settle this matter. I was not even sure as to what the net result of such a settlement would be. While the public debt had to be paid to India by Pakistan, there were other sums due to Pakistan from India.

20. The meeting then adjourned till the next day, 17th May, at 10.00 am.
0176. Minutes of the Talks between Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru and Pakistan Prime Minister Mohammad Ali and Interior Minister Iskander Mirza.

New Delhi, May 17, 1955.

The meeting took place at 10.15 am and lasted till 12.15 pm. The same persons were present.

Mr. Mohammad Ali said that as there was no agreement on any other basis, we had to go back to the old plebiscite idea and continue conversations that were broken off in 1953.

3. Some reference was made to the Governor General's proposals. A map was produced by Mr. Mohammad Ali, which had apparently been prepared by the UN people in Kashmir. This indicated what was supposed to be the Hindu and the Muslim areas in separate colours. The Hindu area in this, marked yellow, was just some districts round Jammu. The rest of the area from the ceasefire line on the left and below the northern ceasefire line was all green. Above the northern ceasefire line, there was no colouring; it was white.

4. Maulana Azad said that we had been aiming at a final settlement. We had stated clearly what we had to say and Jawaharlal Nehru had mentioned that this settlement should be on the basis of the ceasefire line more or less, but, in addition, he had suggested the transfer of the area of Poonch and a bit of Mirpur, which were on the Indian side of the ceasefire line. (I had not mentioned Mirpur in this connection to the Pakistan Ministers previously but I had mentioned it to Maulana Sahib and Pantji. But Maulana Sahib had perhaps thought that I had mentioned this to the others also). Maulana Sahib continued and said: was the Pakistan picture this, that all these areas demanded, in the Jammu province, should go to Pakistan and, in addition, there should be a plebiscite in Kashmir, etc. There was no clear answer.

5. JN said the position appeared to be that we should give up all these vast areas involving a complete upsetting of the populations there and everything else and still have a continuing dispute though this would be confined to a smaller area. What exactly did India gain by this? All the giving up was on India's side and the trouble still continued.

6. Mr. Iskander Mirza said that they could not go against the Governor General's directive under which they had been functioning. There had been a grave misapprehension in Pakistan over this issue as they had thought that India had broadly accepted the suggestion made by the Governor General. If this was not acceptable and the gap between the two positions was wide, then there was no alternative left but to go back to the negotiations of 1953 and see what progress could be made that way.

7. JN said that India has gone as far as she could. He mentioned that Maulana Azad had referred to a part of Mirpur also. This had not been previously referred to by UN but since Maulana Sahib had mentioned it, he would include that too with Poonch as the area which might be transferred to Pakistan. But it must be clearly understood that there could be no transfer of Poonch, etc., except on the basis of a final settlement.

8. The map was again examined in an attempt to find out what exactly Pakistan wanted. Reference was made to the Governor General’s proposals. Mr. Iskander Mirza said that for his part he did not think it either feasible to have a joint control of the Kashmir Valley or for a transfer of territories in the Jammu province to Pakistan, so as to prevent access from Jammu to the Valley. Therefore, the Ramban area should for the present be attached to the Valley. If the Valley goes to Pakistan later, Ramban would also go.

9. Mr. Iskander Mirza also referred to the fact that the Dogra ruling family came from Riasi and felt that the transfer of Riasi would thus give rise to much resentment. He said that his PM might put this aspect of the case to the Governor General.

10. Maulana Sahib said that there appeared to be a marked change in the approach to the problem today. On the previous two or three days, he had felt that there was a strong desire for a settlement. Now this was not so obvious.

11. JN said that they appeared to be millions of miles away in their respective approaches. In fact, they were apparently further away from each other than they had been at any time during the last seven or eight years. Mr. Iskander Mirza said that therefore it was better to continue the 1953 negotiations.

12. JN said that they could do so if they liked but he did not know where this would lead them.

13. JN further continued to say that so far as the Governor General’s proposals were concerned, they were such as could never be agreed to by any government in India.

14. Mr. Mohammad Ali referred back to the 1953 proposals and said that they had stopped at the appointment of a joint official committee which did not come to an agreement on the question of the quantum of forces and, later, of the US aid.

15. Maulana Sahib again referred to the change in the nature of the discussion after these three days. In regard to the Governor General’s proposals, the Pakistan representatives had themselves pointed out that in two important matters, they were not feasible, that is, joint control over the Valley and the transfer of certain areas. What was the good of going back to 1953?

16. Mr. Iskander Mirza said that he understood the difficulties from the Indian point of view about Riasi.

17. JN said that the terms put forward by the Governor General amounted to a surrender by India which might perhaps follow a complete defeat and a dictation of terms. Could any government agree to this? Mr. Iskander Mirza said that all they could do was to report to Karachi.

18. Mr. Mohammad Ali said ‘yes’ but the communiqué to be issued here should not be such as to create frustration in the minds of the people.

19. Mr. Iskander Mirza again said that the Governor General had a firm impression that his suggestions had been favourably considered on the side of India. He confessed, however, that he was not quite clear about these so-called negotiations, and he had known little about this matter then. Mr. Mohammad Ali said that the Governor General had kept him in touch to some extent.

20. It was decided that the communiqué to be issued should be a brief one, with a reference to full and friendly talks about Kashmir which would be continued later. In addition, the communiqué should include the agreements arrived at between the two Home Ministers in regard to various matters.

21. Maulana Azad referred to the question of the India Office Library and said that he was agreeable to what Mr. Mohammad Ali had said the day before, to the effect that there should be a division where necessary on the basis of seventeen and a half per cent going to Pakistan. Mr. Mohammad Ali said that it would be better to have a cultural division rather than a percentage division. What exactly was this, he was asked. Apparently, it meant that, broadly speaking, Arabic and Persian manuscripts should go to Pakistan.

22. Mr. Mohammad Ali said that he did not claim any manuscript of which there was only one copy but, if there was more than one copy either in the India Office Library or in some other government library in India, one of these copies from the India Office should be given to Pakistan.

23. Maulana Azad referred to government record, and he said that those relating to the areas which are in Pakistan now might be handed over to Pakistan. There were coins also. Where there were duplicates, they would be handed over.

24. It was decided that this matter of the India Office Library should be considered this afternoon at 3.30 pm by representatives of the two Governments on the general basis of our talks.
25. The Home Ministers were also to finalise their report in the course of the afternoon.

26. In the course of the talks, Mr. Iskander Mirza had referred to the Governor General’s proposal about hydroelectric works on the bend of the Chenab river. Such works, if and when they were started, should be under the joint control of India and Pakistan. This presumed, of course, that Pakistan was on the other side of the river at that place.

27. It was decided to meet the next morning at 10.00 am to finalise the communiqué.

0177. Joint Statement issued by the Indian Home Minister Govind Ballabh Pant and Pakistan Interior Minister Iskander Mirza at the end of their talks.

New Delhi, May 17, 1955.

Shri Govind Ballabh Pant and Major General Iskander Mirza discussed the prevention of border incidents and maintenance and preservation of shrines and holy places in the two countries. Complete agreement was reached on these issues.

On the question of border incidents, the Ministers agreed that demarcation of the boundary should be finalized as early as possible. Pending final demarcation, certain arrangements were also agreed upon with a view to avoiding possibilities of disputes and view to avoiding possibilities of disputes and danger of clashes between the armed forces on the two sides. The Ministers agreed that the demarcation of the land boundary between the two Punjabs should be given the highest priority and be completed within a period of three months. Agreement was also reached on the reduction in the number of the border forces on the two sides and the arms to be carried by them. The Ministers further agreed to the appointment of high powered officers by the Governments of India and Pakistan to co-ordinate the implementation of the Agreement.

As regards shrines and holy places, the Ministers agreed to appoint a joint committee of the representatives of the two Governments to work out details of implementation of the July-August 1953 Agreement on the subject. This Committee would in particular work out the arrangements for the preservation of holy places and examine the question of properties attached to them. They also agreed that free and liberal facilities should be granted to pilgrims from one country to visit shrines and holy places in the other country either individually or in parties.

0178. Joint Communiqué issued at the end of talks between the Prime Ministers of India and Pakistan.

New Delhi, May 18, 1955.

The Prime Ministers of Pakistan and the Minister of the Interior of Pakistan, General Iskander Mirza, have had a series of talks with the Prime Minister of India and the Minister of Education and Natural Resources, Maulana Abul Kalam Azad, and the Minister for Home Affairs, Shri Govind Ballabh Pant, from May 14th to May 18th. These talks were cordial and full and covered a wide variety of subjects of common concern. Both sides approached these subjects in friendly spirit and with the desire to explore every avenue to reach settlements of pending problems. In addition to those joint talks, there have also been separate discussions between the Minister of the Interior of Pakistan and the Minister of Home Affairs of India which resulted in certain agreements being reached.

In the course of the joint talks, the Kashmir problem was discussed fully in all its aspects. It was decided to continue these talks at a later stage after full consideration has been given by both governments to the various points that had been discussed in the course of these meetings.

❖ ❖ ❖ ❖ ❖

* On May 20, Prime Minister Nehru gave a resume of his talks with Pakistan Prime Minister to the Cabinet and said “besides Kashmir, the question of prevention of border incidents, and maintenance and preservation of shrines and holy places in the two countries was also discussed at a series of meetings between Shri Govind Ballabh Pant and General Iskander Mirza,” and complete agreement was reached.
Note Verbale From the Indian High Commission in Pakistan to the Pakistan Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Commonwealth Relations regarding anti-Indian propaganda in Pakistan.

High Commission for India in Pakistan
Karachi

No. 1(A)/IHC/53. July 7, 1955

The High Commission for India in Pakistan present their compliments to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Commonwealth Relations of the Government of Pakistan and invite reference to their Note No. I (I) 4/15/54, dated the 14th April, 1955, regarding anti-Indian propaganda in Pakistan on the issue of Canal Waters. The Government of India are glad to note that the convention adopted by the two Governments that no information regarding protests or communications from one Government to another would be communicated to the Press without prior consultation with or intimation to the other Government, would be observed in future. It may be added that what is objectionable is not so much the statement which might appear in the Press that a protest has been lodged by one Government with another but the practice of giving to the Press the contents of the protest notes. The Government of India have protested not against the former practice, but against the latter, which the Government of Pakistan will no doubt agree, leads to ill-feeling and tension. It is not the intention of the Government of India to suggest that the Press should not be given any news. It is, however, desirable in the interest of friendship and of avoiding tension that details of the protests should not be divulged to the Press without prior consultation.

2. The Government of India have also asked the High Commission to remove the misapprehension which appears to exist in the mind of the Government of Pakistan that there have been breaches of this convention on the part of the Government of India. The various instances of the alleged breaches quoted by the Government of Pakistan have been examined by the Government of India and are analyzed in the statement attached to this Note for the information of the Government of Pakistan.

3. The High Commission have further the honour to state that the construction put by the Government of Pakistan upon the decision of the Indo – Pakistan Information Consultative Committee in its meeting held on the 2nd August, 1949, is not only misconceived but also misleading. The comparative freedom allowed to either country in giving publicity to the point of view of its Government on matter of dispute between the two Governments was subject to the provision that “there was no mud – slinging and that good taste and decorum were observed.”

4. The High Commission have been instructed by the Government of India to express their regret that the Government of Pakistan should have sought to justify the offensive and abusive propaganda against India carried on in Pakistan by not only misconstruing the letter and spirit of the decision of the Indo–Pakistan Information Consultative Committee mentioned above but also by quoting a solitary instance in Partap of New Delhi in its issue of the 10th April, 1954, which appeared about three months before the vicious anti–Indian propaganda complained of by the High Commission in their Note No. 1 (A)/IHC/53 of the 27th August, 1954, was launched in Pakistan. While the Government of India deplore the writing in the Partap, which is, however, an unimportant newspaper and whose appeal lies only to a small section of the people, the attention of the Government of Pakistan is drawn to the fact that the anti–Indian propaganda on the issue of Canal Waters was indulged in both by the leading English and Urdu dailies and the responsible leaders of Pakistan with widespread influence in both East and West Pakistan.

5. The High Commission would, therefore, like to reaffirm that the anti–Indian propaganda in the Pakistan Press and by the responsible leaders of Pakistan, apart from contravening the Indo–Pakistan Agreement of December, 1948, and the Prime Ministers’ Agreement of April 1950, was also a violation of the decision of the Indo–Pakistan Information Consultative Committee in its meeting held on the 2nd August, 1949, and would earnestly request the Government of Pakistan to take suitable action against the offenders with a view to discouraging the recurrence of such mischievous and irresponsible propaganda against India in Pakistan.

The High Commission avail themselves of the opportunity to renew to the Government of Pakistan, Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Commonwealth Relations, the assurances of their highest consideration.

The Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Commonwealth Relations, Government of Pakistan, Karachi.
Letter from the High Commissioner C. C. Desai to Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru regarding the disappointment in Pakistan on the inability of President Rajendra Prasad to visit Pakistan.

Karachi, August 8, 1955

High Commissioner of India
Karachi

No. HC/55/22 August 8, 1955

My dear Prime Minister,

The inability of our President to visit Karachi on August 14, as invited by Ghulam Mohammed during his visit to Delhi on the Republic Day this year, has caused a certain amount of disappointment and a sense of feeling that we have failed to reciprocate in an appropriate way. A visit some other time has, of course, not the same significance as a visit on the Independence Day. We can hardly quarrel with the reasonableness of that view, if held by some people over here. At the same time I do not see any way of escaping that situation. I have a feeling, however, that the position could be mitigated to some extent by an alternative, which I venture to place before you for consideration.

2. Lately, the political situation has undergone a complete transformation. A new Governor-General has taken over, though in an acting capacity. The Prime Minister, Mohammed Ali, has resigned and the formation of the Government may be entrusted either to Choudhry Mohammad Ali, which is most probable, or to H.S. Suhrawardy. The Pakistan Day falls on August 14, less than a week from to-day, but of course the usual ceremonial will be repeated. I have a feeling that if India is represented at the Parade on the Pakistan Day by one of our Central Ministers, it would go a long way towards not only removing the sense of disappointment at the inability of our President to come but also it would add one more stone to the edifice, which we are all slowly and laboriously trying to build up in the name of Indo-Pakistan brotherhood. A visit by a Minister does not require much preparation and, therefore, I do not think that it is now too late to consider the matter, if it otherwise appeals to you. Personally, I would prefer that there should be a practice of each country being represented at the Independence Day of the other through a Minister of the Cabinet rank to emphasize that these two countries are twin brothers and that notwithstanding their differences they stand by such other at important ceremonials or on vital occasions. I have no doubt that such a convention would have a beneficial effect on the sentiments of the people in both countries. I would not propose such a convention; I would allow it to grow by practice. The presence of an Indian Cabinet Minister at the Parade on August 14 would have a good effect on the new set-up and particularly on Iskander Mirza, the Acting Governor General. The recent controversy as regards our attitude towards Kashmir has left a little wound, in the sense that we spoke so blatantly. That would require to be dressed and healed, and I feel that the visit proposed by me might well have that effect.

3. I am sorry that I am a little late in making this suggestion. It has been going on in my mind and I was weighing the pros and cons and decided ultimately this morning that I should make this submission personally to you for what it is worth. I was not sure that it would have been the same wholesome effect with the previous Prime Minister, Mohammed Ali, but that now that the set-up would be changed, a different context has been created in which this is worth considering.

With kindest regards.

Yours sincerely

Shri Jawaharlal Nehru,
Prime Minister of India,
New Delhi.
Letter from Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru to High Commissioner C. C. Desai regarding the proposal of the High Commissioner for the visit of a Central Minister to attend the Pakistan Day celebrations in Karaachi.

New Delhi, August 9, 1955.

My dear C.C.,

Your letter of August 8th.

I am a little surprised at all this fuss about the inability of our President to visit Karachi on August 14th. There was at no time any chance of our President being able to go there on that date. This had been made clear to Ghulam Mohammed himself when he was here. A convention has grown up here for the President to spend the Independence Day in South India. Accordingly, it had all been fixed up for him to go to the south for this purpose. He could not possibly upset these arrangements as well as this convention.

I have no objection to one of our Central Ministers going to Karachi but, obviously, if a person goes, he should be one of our senior Ministers. Also, there are some formalities which have to be observed before a senior Minister goes anywhere. It would not be proper for him to go to Karachi unless these formalities have been gone through. Just at the present moment, it would seem definitely odd for one of the Ministers suddenly to decide to go there, almost immediately after these changes in the Pakistan Government.

Apart from this, every senior Minister is terribly occupied in Parliament from day to day. I am afraid, therefore, that on this particular occasion, it will not be possible for any senior Minister to go to Karachi.

I do not know what the custom is in Pakistan, but normally it is not usual for persons to be invited from other countries on national days. They are invited on special occasions or without reference to a particular date just to pay a goodwill visit.

I think the best course is for the date of our President's visit to Karachi to be fixed after reference to all parties concerned.

Yours sincerely

Signed Jawaharlal Nehru

Shri C.C. Desai,
High Commissioner for India, Karachi.

No. I (III) – 4/34/54 September, 17th, 1955

My dear High Commissioner,

Will you kindly refer to your D.O. letter No. F. 18(26) 53 – Genl, dated the 6th September, 1955, regarding the periodical meetings of the Inspectors General of Police of bordering States and Provinces of India and Pakistan, and the participation of the District Magistrate of border districts therein?

2. The Government of Pakistan, after consultation with the Provincial Governments and States concerned, have come to the conclusion that frequent meetings between the Inspectors General of Police are decidedly helpful in preventing border incidents and in allaying suspicions and fears on both sides of the border. The Provincial Governments and the States concerned have, therefore, been requested to issue necessary instructions to ensure that these meetings are regularly held by the Inspector General of Police Punjab/Sind with his counterpart in India on the Western Indo–Pakistan borders and that the District Magistrates concerned are required to participate in such meetings whenever a border incident relating to the district concerned comes up for discussion between the two Inspector's General of Police.

3. The delay in replying, which I very much regret, was due to the fact that the Provincial and State Governments had to be consulted before arriving at a final decision.

With kind regards,

Yours sincerely

New Delhi, November 13, 1955.

High Commissioner for India
Karachi

D.O. NO. HC/55/28 November 13, 1955

My dear Prime Minister

I got a telephone call this morning from Ghulam Muhammad and he asked me if I could go and see him at his house. Accordingly I went there and saw him and was with him for nearly 45 minutes. His health has improved a little and he looked quite bright and cheerful. He did not disclose any of the mental weakness which was attributed to him just before he was called upon to retire. His vocal chords are no better or worse and I could follow him just about 25% as previously.

2. He told me that he wanted to go to Delhi for a day or two sometime in December just to see you and a few other friends. He has not fixed the dates but he indicated that he might like to visit about the 10th of December. I doubt if the visit has any political significance. He is as you know, very sentimental and he has been telling a few friends that he has got more friends in India than in Pakistan and that he would like to go there and see some of his old comrades and companions. He told me that he just wants to see you, gaze at your face and return. He has some other friends like Kauls, Berrys and Syed Mahmud, whom also he would like to see. From Delhi he might go to Bombay or return to Karachi. He is not going to Dewa Sharif this time, but hopes to go there some time in February.

3. I hope we would welcome his visit. I feel that he should stay either at Rashtrapathi Bhavan or preferably, if you have no objection, with you, as the main object of his coming there is to see you personally and socially and not to conduct any negotiations or have any political talks. If you agree, would you kindly let me know your programme in December, so that I could advise him as to the appropriate time when he should go to Delhi. He will be there just for two days and no more.

4. He was in a somewhat reminiscent mood. He told me that he saw you first in some central hall in Allahabad in 1916 soon after you returned from England. Then he talked of various meetings and places, but I am afraid I could not catch him correctly. He also talked of Jehangir Tata, Homi Mody and John Mathai in Bombay and said that he would very much like to meet them. He talked of Umar Subhani and said he was a very fine man and a very dear friend of his. Umar Subhani’s family including his two daughters, who are doctors, is living here and he is very friendly with the two girls.

5. I hope it would be possible for you to send me a reply by telegram so that I have the information ready in case he calls me back again.

With kindest regards,

Yours sincerely

0184.  Case of Josh Malihabadi

**********

A.  TOP SECRET

Letter from Commonwealth Secretary C. S. Jha to High Commissioner C. C. Desai regarding Josh Malihabadi.

New Delhi, November 25, 1955.

My Dear Desai,

I have had your letter in which you have asked me to let you know the latest position about Josh Malihabadi.

2.  Some 2 or 3 weeks ago Josh Malihabadi saw the Prime Minister and told him that he himself was well provided for in India. He had a job with All India Radio, which brings him Rs.1200/- or Rs.1300/- per month; he was worried about the future of his family including his sons and their children. When he had been in Pakistan, the Pakistan Government had requested him to come over to Pakistan and help them in the advancement of the Urdu language. Malihabadi was told that in India neither he nor his children had any future Urdu was a dying language and state patronage would not be extended to Urdu in future. Consequently Malihabadi and his children’s future lay with Pakistan and not with India. Pakistan would make it worth his while to come over to Karachi. They would grant him permits for cement import in the name of his son which would bring him several thousand rupees a month. He was also promised a perpetual lease of a cinema to be built by the Pakistan Government which would again bring him a net income of several thousand rupees. In all Malaihabadi would be sure of an income of Rs.20,000/-. Malihabadi told the Prime Minister that this was a very attractive offer, not from his own point of view but from that of his children and members of his family. He was thinking of migrating to Pakistan but he would leave the whole matter to the P.M. and would act according to his advice. The Prime Minister told Malihabad that this was a heavy responsibility for him. But he would think over the matter and have a further talk with him.

3.  The Prime Minister had a talk with Maulana Azad. Both of them thought that it would be undesirable from the political point of view for Malihabadi to migrate to Pakistan. It was clear that Pakistan’s main object was not so much the advancement of Urdu but a political stunt to show that even persons of Malihabadi’s learning and standing had no place for them in India and were compelled to migrate to Pakistan. It was felt that the decision naturally lay with Malihabadi but that he should be told of the views of the Government of India.

4. Malihabadi met the Prime Minister again. The Prime Minister told him that it was not for him to give Malihabadi advice; the latter himself must take a decision. But he disapproved of Malihabadi’s proposal. He also told Malihabadi that what he thought an alluring prospect would prove to be illusory. There was no stability in Pakistan. Besides, the Prime Minister told him his personal view, a man of Malihabadi’s ideas and approach to religion and religious matters—Melihabadi is almost an agnostic—would get into serious trouble with the Mullahs of Pakistan. Malihabadi agreed with the Prime Minister on this point and told him that his brother, who was in Pakistan, had told him that he would be killed by Mullahs.

5. The latest position seems to be that Malihabadi has decided not to go over to Pakistan. The Prime Minister told him that he was free to go to Pakistan occasionally if the Pakistan Government wished him to help them for the advancement of Urdu. The Government of India would have no objection to this. The Prime Minister has also spoken to Dr. Keskar, who has agreed to release him for certain periods to engage in work in Pakistan.

With Kind regards,

Yours sincerely

D.O. No.ISI/32(27)/55. December 3,1955

My dear Jha,

Please refer to your letter No.338-CS/55dated November 25, 1955. Even before I had completed perusal of your long letter my attention was invited to a news item appearing in the local papers, saying that Josh Malihabadi had arrived in Pakistan and that he had decided to embrace Pakistani nationality. A cutting is herewith enclosed. So, apparently when he told our Prime Minister that he had decided not to migrate to Pakistan but merely to go there to serve the cause of Urdu off and on, he was in all probability not speaking the truth. Secondly, the brother of Raja of Mahmudabad, who met one of our officers the other day, told him that Josh was telling people in Karachi that being a Muslim he was not treated properly in India and that was why he had to come to Pakistan. Of Course, I have not had the A.P.P. report verified, but, at the same time, I have not seen any contradiction of it by Malihabadi indicating that the report is exaggerated. The report has appeared in so many papers and in such bold letters as not to have escaped his attention. So that is that.

Yours sincerely

Special Article
Nai Roshni

Karachi, December, 6, 1955

Was Pakistan Created for its Opponents?

It is reported that Mr. Josh has arrived in Karachi and all sorts of honours have been showered on him. If this report in correct, the natural question that arises is, what has made him deserving of all these honours and favour? In our special Article dated December 1, under the caption “Look at the glory of God....” We raised this question and asked our Govt. to give reasons for showing this preference of Mr. Josh over other poets, artists and literature of Pakistan. This did not bring any reply from the Government. Now the Working Committee of the Karachi Muslim League has posed an almost similar question to the Prime Minister – Why should Josh, the staunch opponent of Pakistan, who still retains his Indian Nationality, be allotted lands and cinema and be given an advance of Rupees two lakhs and a permanent Dalmia Cement Agency while immigrant poets have nothing but miserable lot.

We do not dispute that Mr. Josh is a shining star on the literary firmament; but what can be expected of such literature which does not glorify Islam? The question is whether Pakistan was created for the spread of Islamic teachings or to mislead the masses into communism. Where is the need to create a front against Hafizs “Shahnama Islam” and Mahiral Aidri’s, poetry and patriotism of Rai’s Amrehi? Are we going to raise the slogans of “Joint elections” and “one nationality” in the field of poetry also? Shall we use “foreign” forces of poetry for the establishment of a secular state as against the establishment of an Islamic State. If the answer to all these questions is in the negative, we have a right to ask our Prime Minister why has Mr. Josh been called and in what way will he be of service to Pakistan! Who was instrumental in calling him? We have no personal grudge against Mr. Josh. But views held by him in respect of Pakistan and the way he has been opposing the creation of Pakistan and for which India Government had been kind to him present an issue of principle before the protagonists of Pakistan when these who suffered for Pakistan are living in misery, why should the opponents thrive at its cost. Was Pakistan created for them?

My Dear C.C.,

Please refer to your d. o. letter No. ISI-32 (27)/55 regarding Josh.

2. P.M. has seen your letter and desires that you should at your convenience send word to Josh that it is to not possible for him to retain dual nationality or two passports. If he applied for and obtained Pakistani nationality he must necessarily cease to be an Indian national and as it has been stated officially by the Pakistan Government that Josh has obtained Pakistani nationality, he should return his Indian passport to the Indian High Commissioner in Karachi. You may further inform Josh that this action is being taken at the instance of the Prime Minister.

3. You should also address the Pakistan Government and inquire from them whether Josh has accepted Pakistani nationality. It may be added that this inquiry is being made as Josh has thus far been an Indian national and we should like to know definitely if he has changed his nationality, as in that event he will not be entitled to his Indian passport.

D.

Letter from High Commissioner CC Desai to the Commonwealth Secretary M. J. Desai regarding Josh Malihabadi.

High Commissioner for India
Karachi

My Dear M.J.,

Please refer to your letter No.726-CS/55 dated 17th December 1955. One of my officers found out where Josh Malihabadi is staying and met him there yesterday morning. He has been given a nice big house with lot of accommodation, but so far poorly furnished. Josh told our man that he was still an Indian national, that he had come here with an Indian passport and a Pakistani visa valid till the end of February 1956, that he would return to India before the expiry of the visa, that he would again see the Prime Minister and tell him that he might continue as an Indian citizen spending 8 months in India and 4 months in Pakistan, that the people in Pakistan had raised a fund with which they were acquiring a property from the proceeds of which he could maintain himself and his family in Karachi, that he saw no future for the Muslims in India, that he could hardly understand the Hindi bulletins on the All India Radio, that the children in his family could not get reconciled to the disappearance of Urdu from educational institutions in India and that both Naqvi, the Chief Commissioner of Karachi, and Iskandar Mirza were willing to help him in comfortably settling down in Karachi. He confirmed that he had applied for Pakistani nationality, but he was evasive about the decision of the Pakistan Government to make him a national of Pakistan. He said that whatever might be the fate of his application for Pakistan nationality; he was still an Indian national and held an Indian passport. In the matter of the news item about his being given Pakistani nationality, his evasion indicated a guilty conscience and it is possible that he has now in his possession both an Indian passport, and a Pakistani passport, to be used according to convenience. He referred in his conversation to his interview with the Prime Minister and said that the Prime Minister did not give him a clear indication as to what he should do and what was best in the interest of himself and his family. With him was staying his brother, who was an Indian national and who was until recently getting his passport extended from time to time from this office. He told our officer that the Prime Minister had informed him that the Indian High Commissioner in Karachi had written a strong letter about him. He further told our man that he expected opposition from many elements in Pakistan, particularly because of his unorthodox writings and actions. The Urdu poets in Pakistan were also opposed to him on account of professional jealousy. Our officer returned with the impression that Josh was fully prepared to settle down in Pakistan, where he was being promised all kinds of monetary assistance by Naqvi and others and where he expected to be placed in charge of an Urdu Academy. The assistance was not directly from Government, but by way of a public fund, which could be invested and from the proceeds of which he and his family could be maintained not only during his life-time but even later. In other words, he would have the benefit of something like a jagir, which he could never expect to get if he stayed on in India. If any more information is gathered about him, it would be passed on to you from time to time.

With kindest regards,

Yours ever

E.

Letter from High Commissioner CC Desai to Commonwealth Secretary M. J. Desai regarding Josh Malihabad.

Karachi, January 9, 1956.

High Commissioner for India
Karachi

D.O. NO. ISI/32(27)/55

My dear M.J.,

Please refer to the correspondence about Josh Malihabadi resting with your letter No.765-CS/55 dated 31st December 1955.

2. I invited Josh to come and have a cup of tea with me and he turned up yesterday evening. He was with me for over an hour and a half.
3. Recently, his wife, son, son-in-law and nearly ten other members of the family arrived in Karachi by train via Lahore on the strength of migration certificates issued by Pakistan High Commissioner in Delhi. They have also brought all their kit including a Buick car. One of Josh’s friends has executed a bond in Delhi guaranteeing that these personal effects were being transferred to Pakistan and this bond is to be discharged on a certificate to be given by us over here. Josh’s son had come to our office for this certificate but I have held up; the issue of the certificate until I had an opportunity of meeting Josh and talking; with him. I have now released the certificate so that the family would be able to take charge of the goods and their friend in India would be discharged from his obligation. I agreed to issue the certificate because I knew the family had come on migration certificates and had thus cut off their connections with India.

4. Josh started by saying that life was a great tragedy, that wife and children were a terrible nuisance and that he has been, during the last six months, almost unhappy man. He said that he had come to Pakistan not with a view to settling down in this country, but to avail himself of the offer of some of his friends to set up an Endowment for his wife and children, who would be faced with starvation and unemployment if he had stayed on in India. He said that he was not actuated by religion and that in fact he was an atheist and had described himself as such in his passport mentioning against the column of religion that he believed in humanity and not in Islam. Apart from the family, the only other attraction for him in life was service to Urdu, for which again he did not see much scope in the India of today or in the India of Sampurnanand, K.M. Munshi, P.D. Tandon and even Pantji*. He saw bleak future for the Muslims in India in spite of the secular objective and transparent sincerity of the Prime Minister. He said that he had a Hindu driver, who was being asked by others why he was serving a Muslim master and whether he was having his meals with the Muslims. After the floods he had occasion to change his house and his new residence was in the midst of Hindus, where he was being treated as if a dog had come to live in their midst. His children came home from schools with Hindi words on their lips, which he could not understand and which he could not even pronounce. He said that those who knew Urdu and Persian well, especially in U.P., appeared now to be ashamed of Urdu and took delight in speaking Hindi, especially in the presence of Muslims. Although Urdu was one of the 13 languages in the Constitution, there was, he said, open hostility to it especially in North India, where previously it was the only language spoken, heard and written. All this transformation was, Josh said, too much for him and out of line with his upbringing, thinking and comprehension. Even so, he said he would not have decided upon the migration of the family, but one day early morning he was possessed with the feeling that after him, his wife, who, he said, was a particularly difficult woman, might have to suffer and his children, who were not particularly bright except in music, would be stranded in the streets of Delhi. As against this dismal specter, he was being offered attractive inducements in Pakistan through the good offices of Navi, ex-I.C.S., and at present the Chief Commissioner of Karachi, for whom he had nothing but highest praise. Josh was also taken to Iskander Mirza, who advised him that he must become either a Pakistani or remain an Indian but that it was not possible for him, as he once wanted, to remain an Indian and to work for eight months in India and to come to Pakistan and take up the work for promulgation (Promotion) of Urdu for the remaining four months in the year. His Pakistani friends offered to buy him a property, from the proceeds of which his wife and family could be maintained on a fairly decent standard even when he was no more, which, he said, might well happen in the near future. He said that these thoughts and discussions had troubled every member of the family and that they often cried and cursed each other and that even now, none of them is happy with what they have done. Josh said that he expected that the transfer of the property would be completed within a period of two months, after which his desire was to return to India and to resume his Indian nationality, which he had not yet given up and which he meant to preserve, although he would not like this fact to be known in the Pakistani circles. He felt that once the property was transferred to him, it was open to him to transfer it to his family and he would then be free to return to India, where he would spend most of his time, while the family would remain in Karachi and ultimately die and be buried here. From all this he inferred again and again that marriage was a bad institution and that children should not be the responsibility of the father but that of the State. He said that such a revolution was bound to come and the earlier it came the better for humanity. He admitted that he would never fit in into the Islamic concept of Pakistan. He knew that the Mullahs were dead against him and would make a determined bid to put him out of action and even to frustrate him in his desire to dedicate his life to the advancement of Urdu. He said that during Muharam his friends asked him not to take whisky but he refused and took whisky boldly and openly. His friends asked him to do Namaz even for the sake of appearance and again he refused and said that he did not believe in Islam or the Prophet. He related to me a story in which at a banquet given by the Nizam in Hyderabad, he ordered and took whisky to the horror of the Nizam’s Prime Minister Maharaj Sir Krishna Prasad, who asked him how he could dare do so in the presence of Sircar. Josh said that he replied “how could Sircar do Namaz in the presence of Josh”. A man of these views, antecedents and philosophy would be a total misfit in the Mullah-ridden atmosphere of Pakistan, which according to the draft constitution published today would bear the name of Islamic Republic of Pakistan. Neither his friend Naqvi nor his patron Iskander Mirza would be able to save him from the onslaughts of bearded Mullahs and Maulanas. He is also foolish in thinking that he would be able to transfer the property to his family and retire to India. He is, I am afraid, counting his chickens before they are hatched. A terrible disillusion awaits him, but perhaps he deserves all that, for a man of his logic and analytical powers should have realised that the reasons given by him can never justify the thinnest of patriotism implicit in such migration. He ought to have known that whatever the difficulties in one’s country, escape by way of migration can hardly be manly or correct. He said that Maulana had also passively acquiesced in his decision to migrate. He admitted that he had applied for Pakistani nationality, but he added he had not yet accepted the Pakistani nationality. The matter was still left open and his own desire was to return to India early in March and to remain there, while his family, which has already accepted Pakistani nationality, would continue in this country. He said that he would explain all the circumstances to the Prime Minister when he goes to Delhi and that in the meantime he should not be pressed to surrender his Indian nationality, as it is never his intention to give up Indian nationality for himself. I asked him whether he had done any writing since he came here and he said that the frame of his mind was such as not to enable him to write poetry or anything else. He said that he had prepared a note for the establishment of a Urdu Academy, which one of these days he would go and submit to Iskander Mirza, who is apparently taking some interest in this project. Poor Josh does not know that in this country Islamic ideologies would carry far greater weight than the urge to advance the study of Urdu. People here would not agree to learn even Urdu from a person who having been born a Muslim, denounces that religion openly, acts against the tenets of Islam with the least provocation and is not ashamed to call himself an atheist. I fear that his whole plan for advancement of Urdu will founder on the rock of religious obscurantism, which stalks the country today. However, that is his decision and that would be his funeral. I could see from the way he was talking that there was terrible mental conflict that was going on all the time and that he could not think clearly or act sensibly in these circumstances. His voice often quivered and his eyes glistened. I felt pity for the man as I could see a grim tragedy approaching him in the not too distant future. I argued with him that everyone has to take note of changed circumstances and to adjust to the new surroundings. I reminded him of my experience that many Muslims who have come over here are now desirous of returning to India and they would not be doing this if they were as sure of opportunities of employment and business as also of their own cultural life in accordance with their own religious beliefs. Even Josh, I told him, should adjust himself to the changes taking place in the language and should get reconciled to a Sanskritised Urdu in preference to the Persianised version which was in vogue before the partition. There is nothing fundamentally wrong in this and there is no need to feel that any such adjustment is directed against any Muslim as such. During the Muslim rule in India, I told him, Hindus adopted Muslim customs and spoke Persianised Urdu without entertaining the feeling that their religion was being tampered with or that they must leave the country and go somewhere else. Ultimately, I had no doubt myself, and I told him that I was speaking absolutely objectively that India offered better opportunities for employment and business to his family and certainly provided a cleaner atmosphere for Josh’s life and activities. I was not arguing to persuade him to stay in India, but I was discussing the subject purely on its merits and as man to man. Josh told me that he hardly ever went out of his house and that he kept to himself because the conditions in this country did not suit either his philosophy or his way of life.

5. In view of the above discussion with Josh I did not feel like insisting on his return of the Indian passport. Let him continue in his efforts to cheat the Pakistanis and let him come to India in March and then decide for himself as to where he would settle down and of which country he would retain the citizenship.

6. I have described my discussion with him in some detail, for which I beg to be excused. I must confess, however, that it was a very interesting discussion, the like of which I have not had with anyone here during the one year, which I have spent in this country. The discussion also contains a few features of which we must take notice in our country.

With kindest regards,

Yours ever

SECRET
Analysis in the Ministry of External Affairs on the visit of Madam Soong to Pakistan.

Foreign Secretary’s Note
I should like a collection of newspaper clippings from the Pakistan newspapers, The Dawn, The Pakistan Times, containing statements by Madame Soong during her present visit to Pakistan.

(S. Dutt)
28.1.1956

* * * * *

Note by Deputy Secretary (East) in the Ministry of External Affairs
Madame Soong’s seven day visit to Pakistan began on 25th January. The Chinese companions during the Pakistan visit were the same as those who visited India with her.

The reception to her at the Governmental level was about the same as that accorded to her in this country. But there were one or two minor differences. At Karachi no state banquet was given in her honour. At Lahore, neither the Governor nor the Chief Minister went to receive her. The West Pakistan Government dinner in her honour was held at the Government Home.

At the popular level, the reception she received in Pakistan was much less warm. Unlike India, there were no crowds lining the streets as at Calcutta and Bhopal. There were no banners of societies for friendship with China or peace committees. There was no shouting of “Bhai Bhai” by crowds. No one praised her rocklike strength during China’s travail and called her a “beacon light” as our Prime Minister did. No one called her “The widow of one revolution and the mother of another” as Karanjia did at Bombay.

But that did not make any difference to Madame Soong. In India where so much affection and admiration surrounded her, ...... widow of Sun Yat Sun, she made set, platitudinous and impersonal speeches. In Pakistan where reception did not have that warm personal quality, she made the same kind of speeches. During the speeches, Madame Soong made the following points:-

(1) Both China and Pakistan are young countries with an ancient culture. In her message broadcast from Radio Pakistan Madame Soong forced this comparison to the point of ascribing the ancient civilization of the Indus valley to Pakistan which has only a geographical and no cultural link with the culture of Pakistan.
(2) Both countries have to build up their economies on the basis of industrialization and can learn a lot from each other about the way the problem of reconstruction is being tackled.

(3) Both China and Pakistan desire peace. Madame Soon naturally ignored Pakistan's membership of military bloc directed against the Soviet Union.

(4) "Dear friends" she said in her broadcast on 30th January, "both your country and mine have contributed to the success of the Bandung conference. That is to say both our countries have taken a common stand against colonialism and war".

(5) Friendship:- "It is not only possible but very desirable that our (Sino-Pakistan) friendship should be promoted". And again "The growing friendship between China and Pakistan will enhance peace in Asia and the world".

It would thus be seen that during her visit Madame Soong kept up the pretence and illusion of Sino-Pakistani friendship despite the reality of discordant polities followed by the two countries.

The Sino-Pakistani relationship is an interesting relationship in the context of a different Pak-Soviet relationship. It is here that Soviet and China policies, in so much harmony with each other elsewhere, appear to diverge. If the two countries were not part of a well-knit bloc, this divergence could perhaps be explained on the following grounds:-

1) Pakistan's membership of the MEADO directly threatens the Soviet Union and not China.

2) The Sino-Indian relationship, despite its extreme friendliness at the moment has also an aspect of conflict. The two great countries physically meet over a long stretch of our northern frontier and Indian influence extends into the Tibetan region of China. There is no common frontier between China and Pakistan and the friendship between the two countries, other things being equal, could remain platonic for a long time.

But it is difficult to imagine that China policy towards Pakistan is governed by narrow national interest. The harmony with which the bloc as a whole functions leads us to suppose that it is in the interests of the Soviet bloc as a whole and is being pursued in understanding with the Soviet Union. While Soviet hostility towards Pakistan is calculated to act as a deterrent to Pakistan's pursuit of pro-U.S. policies, it is agreed, that other countries of the Soviet bloc should not cut off their relations with Pakistan and give the people of Pakistan the feeling that their entire group of countries had ranged itself with India against Pakistan. They are not prepared to write off Pakistan as they have written off Turkey because they, apparently, have still hopes in a popular movement in Pakistan acting as a brake on the policies of her Government.

Note by Director (East) in the Ministry of External Affairs:

I agree generally with DS(E)'s note, but should like to point out the following:—

1) The apparent difference in the attitude of the Soviet Government and the Chinese Government towards Pakistan does not, in my opinion, indicate any fundamental differences in approach between their policies. The Soviet Union and China are allies and are facing common dangers in the world today. Rightly or Wrongly China has thrown in her lot with the Soviet Union, on whom China is dependent and will remain so for a number of years for technical advice and equipment and supplies of arms and ammunition. The main concern of both China and the Soviet Union at the present moment is to safeguard their security. There does, however, appear to be a difference in emphasis in the attitude of the two Governments towards Asian countries. This is natural because China is more concerned with other countries in Asia than the Soviet Union. She has deliberately been harping on “Asian solidarity” in order to play on this sentiment in various Asian countries. The present Chinese leaders are, however not blind to the fact that Pakistan has aligned with the Western bloc, especially through the Manila Treaty and the Baghdad Pact. She may, however still hope that the popular opinion in Pakistan will produce a change in the policy of the Government. While the Baghdad Pact may not be a direct threat to China, the Manila Treaty certainly is. It would, therefore, not be correct to say that China is not as much perturbed by Pakistan’s alliance with the West as the Soviet Union is.

2) Madame Soong’s visit to Pakistan and the visit of the non-official Chinese Women Delegation to Pakistan before that may have been due to any one or more of the following reasons:—

(i) Pakistan’s anxiety to show to her people that she is not totally aligned with the West.

(ii) Pakistan’s desire to show to the West that she is not prepared to go whole hog with them unless she receives substantial benefits. As our High Commissioner in Karachi has pointed out in a recent letter, one of the ways to strengthen love is to arouse jealousy. I am, however disinclined to attach much importance to this motive.
China’s desire to befriend Pakistan in order to belittle the importance of India. The policy of the United States to equate India and Pakistan in the past is an indication of Great Powers not wishing to allow India to attain the status of a great power and China is no exception to this. As long as it will suit China to be friendly towards India she will remain so, but China will not look upon the emergence of India as a great power in Asia with equanimity.

It is possible that the Soviet Union may have indirectly asked China to make overtures to Pakistan in order not to antagonize her completely. This, however, appears to be rather far-fetched. Talks of Trade Agreement between Pakistan and USSR, however, should be noted.

Chinese maps still show parts of Indian territory in China. During our Tibet negotiations in Peking they were reluctant to agree to any mention of the trade route leading to Ladakh because they said that they did not wish to take sides in the Kashmir dispute. While the Soviet Union has definitely come out on the side of India regarding Kashmir, China’s silence is significant. It is possible that China is not sure about the future fate of Kashmir and may think of reviving her old claims to parts of Kashmir territory and in NEFA.

The above are merely conjectures and can only be confirmed or proved wrong by future events. Relations between China and Pakistan are an interesting study and should be carefully watched.

10.2.1956

As Prime Minister is aware, Madame Soong during her recent visit to Pakistan was cordially received and taken round the country with a great deal of enthusiasm. She was received at the airport on her arrival by the Pakistan Prime Minister and everywhere she went she received addresses of welcome etc. A summary has been prepared from the addresses given to Madame Soong in Pakistan and from the statements made by her. On the whole, I agree with Shri Kaul’s assessment of the policy behind the Chinese approach to Pakistan in this matter and the reasons for Pakistan’s cordial reception to a representative of the Chinese Republic. So far as Pakistan’s attitude is concerned, I think that there is considerable truth in what our High Commissioner has independently reported to us from Karachi. Pakistan wants to show to the Western Powers that she is not entirely committed to them; if they do not take her seriously and listen to her requests for aid, there are other countries to which she can turn. It will be recalled that following the Prime Minister’s visit to the United States some years ago, Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan promptly accepted an invitation from the Soviet Government for a visit to the U.S.S.R. Nothing was heard of this invitation as soon as the U.S.A. started showing a good deal of attention to Pakistan.
Other considerations may also have played their part in Pakistan’s attitude in this matter. It is likely that as an Asian power she feels that she should not entirely ignore the People’s Republic of China. In regard to Pakistan’s relations with the U.S.S.R., the recent statement by Mr. Bulganin in answer to the questions from a Pakistani press correspondent is significant. The U.S.S.R. has not given up Pakistan for lost. I agree with Shri Kaul that there is no evidence yet of any fundamental difference between the Soviet Government and the Government of the People’s Republic of China in their approach to Pakistan.

Extract from D.O. No. HC/56/S.114 dated February 1, 1956
from High Commissioner C.C. Desai to Commonwealth Secretary M.J. Desai regarding the visit of Madame Soong to Pakistan.

The Japanese Ambassador was anxious to know why Madame Soong had come to Pakistan and why the Pakistan Government had gone out of its way to show special welcome to her and to make so much fuss of her. Several theories had been advanced in this connection. Some thought that the welcome to Madame Soong was by way of a preparation for a similar cordial welcome which the Prime Minister of Pakistan would like to have when he visits China in April or May as already announced. Some thought that the welcome to Madame Soong was by way of a teaser to the members of the Anglo-American bloc, who are being constantly told that if they did not come out openly and unequivocally in favour of Pakistan’s stand on the Kashmir and Pakhtoonistan issues, the Government of Pakistan would have to undertake a reappraisal of her foreign policy. It is argued that flirtations with a rival is the most effective way of exciting the jealousy or reinforcing the affection of one’s own friend. Some thought that Pakistan’s welcome to Madame Soong was in a way an answer to India’s welcome of Soviet leaders, it being assumed that although these two countries are friends, yet they do not see eye to eye with each other in all international affairs. Yet another view is that Pakistan must realise that Asia is bound to play a leading role in the international context of tomorrow and that as China is the biggest country. These explanations are necessary because any welcome to Madame Soong or any flirtation with Communist China is bound to be misunderstood by the Americans and therefore Pakistan must have some good ground for doing a thing which may not be to the liking of their friend, philosopher, guide and patron, the United States of America. Personally, I do not know where the truth lies and my own inclination is in favour of the theory that flirtation with China is deliberate and a teaser posed for the Anglo-American powers. Perhaps there may be some truth in the various theories which have been put forward in this connection. If some light is thrown on the subject form our Embassy in China, we would like to be informed of it for the sake of intellectual exercise, if for nothing else.

4. The welcome to Madam Soong was not anything like the reception which this country has given to representatives of far smaller countries such as Jordan, Iraq, and Turkey. For instance, at the function held at Karachi Municipal Corporation to give the Freedom of the City to Madame Soong, no Minister of Government was present except the Chief Commissioner of Karachi and there was not a single Chinese national flag, although the place was bedecked with Pakistani national flags. In fact the Chinese national flag was nowhere to be seen except on the Chinese Embassy or on the car placed at the disposal of the Chinese Vice President. The Prime Minister was present both on her arrival and at the time of her departure at the airport. Papers came out with feature articles giving her life history and praising her for her pioneering work in new China.

5. I hope I have not bored you with this detailed account of the visit of Madame Soong in a letter, the main objection of which was to report my conversation with the Japanese Ambassador in Pakistan, after his return from the Tokyo conference.

With kindest regards,

D.O. No. 81- PS /55 29th February, 1956

My dear Director,

Please refer to your D.O. of 10th February about Madame Soong’s visit to Pakistan. You have sent me a copy of our High Commissioner’s letter on the subject and have asked for my comments.

2. ‘The High Commissioner’s letter gives an analysis of Pakistan’s possible motives in inviting Madame Soong. I was interested to read this analysis, but I think it is far more important to analyse China’s motives in cultivating closer relations with Pakistan.

3. During the last few months that I have been here, this matter has interested me greatly. If have not written anything on the subject, it is largely because I have not yet come to any final conclusions.

4. My tentative conclusions are embodied in a letter I sent to the Foreign Secretary some days ago about Mohamad Ali’s visit. I see no reason at present to modify these conclusions, though perhaps the idea of Pakistan functioning in the future some sort of counter-weight to India should not be exaggerated.

5. I think the main reason why China is cultivating Pakistan is that she hopes this will lead to a weakening of American influence in South Asia. I have no doubt that she would like to have a Panch Shila (five point) agreement with Pakistan, as also with Thailand and the Philippines.

6. As regards Madame Soong’s visit, I have been anxious to find out when exactly the invitation to visit Pakistan was extended to her. In November, Chang Han-fu told me that she would be visiting India and Burma. He did not say that she would be returning from Burma to China, nor did he say anything about the visit to Pakistan.

7. Perhaps this matter is not very important. It is possible that the invitation from Pakistan was received while Madame Soong was in India or Burma. The important thing is that China and Pakistan are cultivating closer relations with each other, though their motives differ.

8. Pakistan’s motives are, of course to weaken India’s influence and perhaps also to frighten the Americans into giving them more aid. Maybe they have other motives, e.g., to create some misunderstanding between India and China or to impress their own people. China’s present motive seems to be to weaken American influence by developing closer relations with other countries in South Asia.

9. I think Madame Soong’s visit fits in with this larger picture. The Pakistanis have issued special bulletins on Kashmir to which we have given a suitable reply. Not a word about Kashmir has, however, appeared in the Chinese press. Krushchev’s speeches in India were fully reported, but to the best of my knowledge, his reference to Kashmir was not reported.

10. Recently, there was a serious border dispute on the Indo-Pakistan frontier. Both the Pakistani and the Indian versions were reported side by side. A special article by Madame Li on her visit to Pakistan has appeared in People’s China. High praise has been accorded to the peace-loving qualities of the Pakistanis and their friendship with China etc.

11. All this shows the desire of China to keep aloof from Indo-Pakistani conflicts, and to cultivate closer relations with Pakistan. Relations with India are of course much closer, but there is a conscious desire to avoid hurting the susceptibilities of either country and to develop friendly relations with both.

12. I regret to say that we have not been able to meet Madame Soong since her return from India. She was coming to our party for Sihanouk, but dropped out at the last minute. I have not seen her in any public functions. The explanation that was given to us that she has not been keeping good health is perhaps correct and we have been informed that she will receive us when she starts functioning again.

Yours sincerely,

(R.K. Nehru)

0188. TOP SECRET

Extracts from the Note recorded by Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru on his conversations with US Secretary of State John Foster Dulles.

New Delhi, March 10, 1956.

I have sent separately a brief note about Viet Nam.

2. Our conversations lasted in all for over five and a half hours in the course of two days, March 9th and 10th. This was apart from our meeting in company and at meals. The conversations were held with no one else present.

3. These conversations covered a very large field and many subjects. Much of the talk tended to be rather theoretical, that is, the basic approach to world problems generally and, more especially, in relation to Communist countries. The two or three points I have specially in mind were: the recent SEATO Council Meeting in Karachi where a reference was made to Kashmir, the U.S. Military Aid to Pakistan, and the question of Goa with special reference to Mr. Dulles’s joint statement with the Portuguese Foreign Minister. I have little doubt that Mr. Dulles also had these matters in mind and knew how much importance we attach to them. Nevertheless, no reference was made to these problems till the end of the first day’s conversations. On the second day, they were dealt with more fully.

4. Mr. Dulles started by a reference to the Near East and to the Baghdad Pact and recent developments in Israel, Egypt, Jordan, etc. His main thesis was that the Communist countries were out to create trouble and, secondly, that the United Kingdom had made a very bad mess there. He assured me repeatedly that he did not like the idea of the Baghdad Pact at all and, in fact, had advised the U.K. Government against any such moves. It was true that the U.S.A. believed in regional pacts for defence against Soviet aggression and having several tiers of defence. But it had not been in favour of the particular lines of action that the U.K. Government had adopted in the Near East and which had landed them into a hopeless muddle. He drew a very dark picture of the difficulties facing the U.K. Government. The United Kingdom depended for its very life on the oil resources, foreign exchange and many other matters, of the Near East. If they were deprived of this, their whole structure would collapse and they would become a second or third rate power. The Prime Minister of the United Kingdom was, therefore, begging the U.S.A. to come to their help and support the Baghdad Pact fully and, thus, possibly retrieve this position somewhat. The U.S.A. Government was put in an embarrassing position but, in the final analysis, they could not allow the U.K. to go to pieces and, therefore, they would have to come to their help in some form or other.
13. I laid considerable stress on the harm done by regional pacts and pointed out that, to my knowledge, SEATO had done good to nobody and had not even strengthened the defences against Communism, if that was the aim. The real strength lay in the United States. That was not increased by these odd attachments and pacts. The only result was frightening the opposite party and encouraging it to create trouble. Anyhow, it had surprised us exceedingly how SEATO could extend itself to Kashmir or to Afghanistan. This was clearly ultra vires even of the declared purposes of SEATO.

14. Mr. Dulles said that Pakistan really should have no place in SEATO, geographically and otherwise. But other people wanted it there. So, he had agreed. In regard to Kashmir, he said that he did not bring this forward at the Karachi meeting. In fact, he was the last to speak, when others had supported it, and all he said was really to repeat the U.S. attitude in regard to Kashmir.

15. I dealt with the Kashmir question briefly and told him how difficult Pakistan had been. The law was on our side, and facts. Nevertheless, we had tried to settle this peacefully. Our attempts failed. Yet, we were continuing these attempts when the question of military aid to Pakistan came in. That changed the situation completely and encouraged Pakistan to become more and more aggressive and intransigent. Years had passed since the Kashmir trouble began. We could not hang on and do nothing. So, we had gone ahead with the election of the Constituent Assembly there which had framed the Constitution and enacted land laws and the like, and made tremendous improvements in Kashmir. On the other side, there was chaos and misery. We were bound up with Kashmir by Constitutional provisions which we could not set aside without the consent of the Kashmir Constituent Assembly.

16. At this stage came this open association of the SEATO Council with Pakistan. In other words, a military alliance now supported Pakistan. This had given us a great shock and we cannot possibly accept this position or submit to it.

17. In connection with U.S. military aid to Pakistan, I told Mr. Dulles that we had been put in a very difficult position. We had, in the past few years, tried to reduce our army and had done so to some extent. Our armour was old and not adequate and now the Pakistan army was being enlarged and provided with the latest type of armour in large quantities and plenty of new aircraft were coming. All this made tremendous difference in our relative strength. We had received full details of the supplies to Pakistan. In Mr. Dulles' opinion, this might not be much because America thought in terms of millions and billions. But, from our point of view, this was a very large addition to Pakistan's military strength.
18. In the context of the Kashmir Resolution of the SEATO Council, all this meant that a powerful military alliance was at the back of Pakistan in regard to Kashmir. This may not be the purpose of the SEATO nor of the U.S., but that was the obvious result. We were compelled to think in terms of adding to our defence strength. This was going to be a great burden on us. So far as our people were concerned, they had reacted very strongly to these developments.

19. Mr. Dulles assured me that the U.S. never thought of doing any harm to India and they had taken expressive guarantees from Pakistan. I replied that I did not doubt the motives of the U.S. Government or people, but I did not think that any guarantees would have the slightest effect on Pakistan. We had enough experience of their behaviour and we were constantly having incidents on the border. I mentioned the Nekowal incident.

20. I told Mr. Dulles also about the continuing migrations from East Bengal to India which not only indicated what policy the Pakistan Government and officers were pursuing, but cast a very great burden on us. This kind of thing was continuing and we might well have to accept additional millions from Pakistan. The Pakistan Government, apart from being very narrow minded and liable to be pushed about by bigoted elements, was very irresponsible. They could think only in military terms and hardly in terms of political and economic advance. We could not take risk of being unprepared for any aggressive action by Pakistan.

21. Mr. Dulles had little to say except to assure me that the U.S. would never permit any attack on India.

22. In this connection, I mentioned to Mr. Dulles that we had thought of purchasing aircraft 28IL from Russia. I gave him the background of this. I told him that this was a pure business transaction for us and involved no commitment or attention of Soviet technicians here. I could understand the security aspect of it and we would take care of it. Mr. Dulles replied that he could not prevent us from exercising our discretion in this matter. But undoubtedly any purchase by us of Soviet air-craft would create a strong and adverse reaction in the U.S.

26. This is rather a brief account of the long talks we had, of course much was said which I have not mentioned here.

✦✦✦✦✦
Extract from the Record of the meeting of the Indian Ambassador in Peking R. K. Nehru with the Chinese Premier Chou En-lai.

Peking, March 16, 1956.

Ambassador saw Premier Chou En-lai on the afternoon of Friday the 16th March 1956 at 4 p.m. and had a talk with him for about one hour 45 minutes. Vice-Foreign Minister Chang Han-fu was also present. Mr Shou-chang acted as interpreter.

4. (a) Karachi Communique and Indo-Pakistan relations:

Premier Chou felt that Prime Minister Nehru's apprising Dulles of the views of the Government of India was a good thing, although Premier Chou felt that U.S. policy would not change overnight. Still, in his opinion, if all peaceful countries have a chance to tell America what they feel about American policies it will have some influence on America and U.S. will have to reconsider its attitude. U.S. will know that their doctrinal policies are meeting with obstructions. For example, shortly after the Karachi communiqué Dulles had to explain it at every place. It would prove that the communiqué was incorrect.

5. Moreover, there does not seem to be a unanimous view about the communiqué. Pakistan has its own explanation of the Communiqué, Britain has its own and France too has an explanation of its own. This shows that the communiqué is unreliable. America wanted to intimidate the people of Afghanistan, but this did not work. It wanted to intimidate the people of India and it worked much less. It wanted to intimidate China, but we just ignored them. Through their communiqué, they wanted to strengthen their hold on Pakistan, but this also is not very reliable. At the most, they would incite conflict between India and Pakistan, but Premier Chou felt that as long as India insisted on its correct stand, there was no hope of it. (Premier Chou later on explained to Ambassador that by India's correct stand, he meant the stand of peaceful negotiations taken by India vis-à-vis Pakistan. Premier Chou added that this does not mean that India should still be peaceful even if Pakistan starts an offensive).

6. On the contrary, Premier Chou felt that India had now more reason to state that not only SEATO, but U.S. had no reason to intervene in the Kashmir question. Moreover, Kashmir people had already expressed their will.

7. Premier Chou added that when the Pakistan Premier comes to Peking, he will tell him directly that it was most unwise to include Kashmir question in the Karachi communiqué and that it was a method destined to be defeated.

8. Premier Chou added that Pakistan was soon celebrating her Republic Day and that the Chinese Government had received an invitation to participate in the function. They were, therefore, sending a delegation under the leadership of Vice-Premier Ho-lung. Premier Chou also mentioned that he understood that the Indian Government would also be sending a delegation to Pakistan and added that on these questions, China’s policy is the same as that of India, namely, we are friendly to Pakistan, but if the policy of Pakistan is wrong, then we would give good intentioned advice to show that we do not agree with her on those matters and this is necessary.

9. Premier Chou further went on to say that another effect of the Karachi communiqué was to show the weakness of the British Government. At first, they did not agree to the inclusion of the Kashmir question in the communiqué, but finally they followed the U.S. The purpose of the British Government in giving up its view regarding Kashmir was in order to have American support on the Baghdad Pact and also to seek American support on the action taken in Cyprus. But, Premier Chou declared this too failed. U.S. still did not join the Baghdad Pact and has in fact expressed her disapproval of the British action in Cyprus. The U.S. did this to show that U.S. was different from other colonial countries, but this is only to deceive others. U.S. really is a greater colonial power than either Britain or France. We can see the manifestation of such British policy in the Mid-east. Far East and South-East. Recently, a KMT fighter plane made a forced landing in Hong Kong after flying over Chinese mainland and the British Government in Hong Kong sent the plane and the pilot back to Taiwan.

10. Premier Chou derisively declared that the British Government was making concession not only to the U.S., but to KMT also and pointed to the Kashmir Princess as another example. On the question of Kashmir, Britain is worsening its relations with India and on the question of the Kashmir Princess with China, because Premier Chou felt that the British Government was making these concessions not so much to the KMT as to its masters—the U.S. Government.
0190. Letter from Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru to Minister for Rehabilitation Mehr Chand Khanna briefing him on certain points which he should discuss with Pakistan during his visit.

New Delhi, March 18, 1956.

My dear Mehr Chand,

You will be going to Pakistan as our special envoy on the occasion of their declaring a Republic*. We have just heard of another conflict at Husainiwala in Firozpur district, where the Pakistani forces attacked our forces. This conflict is apparently proceeding and is on a slightly bigger scale than the previous ones. There is nothing to be alarmed at about it but, obviously, conditions on the border are getting worse.

This evening, I received a message from the Prime Minister of Pakistan suggesting that both Pakistan and India should make a declaration to abstain from the use of force on our border areas and that the status quo before these recent incidents should be maintained. Further, that some kind of an effort should be made at ministerial level to settle the boundaries. We shall consider this matter and send a reply soon. This does not fit in with the aggressive tactics of Pakistan.

Before you go to Karachi, I think we should discuss these matters so that you may be posted up to date.

The Soviet Government is sending one of their leading and most important personalities to Karachi on this occasion. His name is Mikoyan. He is likely to come to Delhi from Karachi. I should like you to meet him and tell him that we are looking forward to his visit to India as our guest.

Yours sincerely

Jawaharlal Nehru

AIDE MEMOIRE

The Government of Pakistan are surprised to note that the Government of India have taken exception to the joint statement by the SEATO Council of Ministers which only affirmed the need for an early settlement of the Kashmir question while noting that the United Nations resolutions remained in force. As the Security Council is seized of this question, every member of the United Nations is entitled as a matter of right to uphold and affirm faith in the decisions of the United Nations. It is moreover not clear how reaffirmation of faith in the United Nations decisions and affirmation of the need for an early settlement by the SEATO Council can affect Indian Sovereignty. As the Kashmir question is still before the Security Council and the status of this territory is yet to be determined by a free and impartial plebiscite under United Nations auspices, there can be no question of Indian Sovereignty over the state of Jammu & Kashmir.

The Indian Government’s assumption that the Treaty will heighten tension in the region is unfounded as subsequent developments have shown that the Treaty has in fact had a stabilizing influence in the area and has contributed to the security of the member Nations.

It was the considered opinion of the members of SEATO that an early settlement of the Kashmir question was vital for the peace and security of the area. It was with this object in view that the SEATO Council had affirmed faith in the United Nations Security Council resolutions in regard to Kashmir which continue undoubtedly to remain in force.

As regards the designated areas, Article IV of the Treaty clearly states that “no action on the territory of any designated State shall be taken except at the invitation or with the consent of the Government concerned”. The terms of this Article fully recognize and respect the sovereignty of the designated areas and interference in the affairs of the countries which are not parties to the Treaty is not even implied in the Treaty.

Letter from the Government of Assam to the Ministry of External Affairs regarding renewal of visa of Pakistani Muslims engaged in Pro-Pakistani propaganda.

Shillong, June 19, 1956

Confidential Branch

No. C. 196/56/67/, Shillong, the 19th June 1956

From: Shri D. Das, I.A.S.,
Joint Secretary to the Government of Assam.

To: The Secretary to the Government of India,
Ministry of External Affairs, New Delhi.

Subject:- Non-renewal of visas of Pakistani Muslims engaged in Pro-Pakistani propaganda.

Sir,

I am directed to say that it has been reported by the Deputy Commissioner, Cachar that many Pak Muslims who originally belonged to Cachar district have been coming to Cachar with valid travel documents and carrying on pro-Pakistani propaganda. He has also sent a list of such persons and suggested that necessary action may be taken for non-renewal of visas of those undesirable persons. Many of these persons are Pak Government servants and are among those who instigated the formation of the “Azad Cachar Party”.

I am therefore to request that the Government of India would be kind enough to intimate their advice about the desirability of the action suggested and consider about issue of instructions to the Deputy High Commissioner for India in Pakistan, Dacca not to issue visa to such undesirable persons.

Yours faithfully
Joint Secretary to the Government of Assam

***************
We have received information that there is a concerted plan to get Pakistani Muslims declared as Indian Nationals in the Districts of Sibsagar, Lakhimpur and Nowgong. There has evidently been considerable infiltration with the help of Muslims in the border areas and the new arrivals have found ready employment in the tea gardens as contractor’s labour. It appears, in Jorhat Distt. alone in the second half of 1955, 400 persons filed affidavits declaring themselves to be Indian Nationals. The largest issue of passports to such persons, it is understood has occurred at Nowgong and Dibrugarh and this has apparently been done by merely stating that there is nothing against the applicants politically without verifying whether the applicants are really Indian citizens. Our information also reveals that dishonest practices on the part of the Passport Staff in the D.C.’s office at Shillong have made it possible for most of the passports to be issued without verification with the result that in Nowgong dis-trict alone during the period 1952 -- 15.3.54, over 2500 pass-port.s were issued without police verification. In addition, in some cases, it is said that names of Pakistani Muslims are shown as fictitious patta holders with the connivance of Muslim headmen of villages acting under the instruction of local Muslim loaders.

We further have information regarding the activities of one Abdul Jalil, proprietor of Ponnu Mea & Sons. In April last, a secret report was sent to the Assam Govt. informing them that Abdul Jalil has pro-Pakistani sympathies and was sending donations to Funds in that country. The parents of Abdul Jalil reside at Dacca and one of his brothers has an Arms & Ammunition shop in Sylhet. Abdul Jalil, however, professes to be a Congressite, but according to our information, he is selling ammunition to the Nagas in the black market by forging his books so that licence holders known to him appear to have taken more ammunition than they actually do. In spite of this information against Abdul Jalil, we understand that his arms licence has been renewed by the State Govt. and this renewal according to a “fairly reliable rumour” is attributed to a minister’s relative being silent partner in the firm.
3. We would be grateful if enquiries into these natters are instituted and the result of the enquiries communicated to us as early as possible.

Yours sincerely

My dear Saleh,

We have received information that one Abdul Jalil, proprietor of Poonu Mea & Sons has strong pro-Pakistan sympathies and also sends donations to Funds in Pakistan. His parents, according to our information, reside at Dacca and one of his brothers has an Arms & Ammunition shop in Sylhet. Abdul Jalil professes to be a Congressite. We also have information that he has been selling ammunition to the Nagas in the black market by forging his books. In spite of these activities, Abdul Jalil, we understand, got his licence as an arms dealers renewed by the State Govt.

2. We would be grateful for a detailed report on the activities, antecedents etc., of Abdul Jalil. We would also like to be informed whether, before his licence was renewed, the State Govt. had any information regarding his activities. If such information was available with the State Govt. of this man’s activities, we would like to know the reasons which influenced the State Government’s decision in renewing his licence.

Yours sincerely

CHIEF MINISTER ASSAM

D.No. CMS.318/56
Shillong, the 25th June, 1956.

My dear Chanda,

Kindly refer to your D.O. letter No. 393/DM/56 dated 10th April, 1956 about infiltration of Pakistani Muslims into Assam. I have collected necessary details after due enquiries. The whole position has been explained in my D.O. letter No. CMS 318/56 dated the 25th June’ 56 to Pantji a copy of which is enclosed here with for your information. It will be noticed that I have referred therein to the difficulties and problems with which we are faced and I would request your good offices in an early solution thereof.

There was some dispute this season between the nationals of the two countries over harvesting of Uthru at the border of Khasi and Jaintia Hills and Sylhet. The two Deputy Commissioners met at a conference and agreed to maintain the status quo pending final demarcation. There has been no tension or trouble since then.

I shall be grateful for a reply at an early date.

Yours sincerely
(B.R. Medhi)

TOP SECRET

Letter from Chief Minister of Assam to Home Minister

Shillong, the 25th June 1956.

My dear Pantji,

Kindly refer to your D.O. letter dated the 9th April 1966 forwarding a copy of a letter received by you from Shri N.C. Laskar M.P. and Shri S.C. Deb M.P. about apprehended dangers in the bordering areas of Cacher district. I have taken a little time to reply to your letter in order to collect full fact so as to give you a complete picture.
2. Reports of large scale influx of Pakistani Muslims into Assam through unauthorized routes in some parts of Cachar district were received in the beginning of 1956. Though the task of effective check and control over Pak infiltration in the district, through the extensive and far flung bordering areas with the existing meager check staff, is quite difficult, all border posts have been instructed to keep a careful watch and to apprehend persons who come across without valid travel documents. As a result of this, as many as 598 Pak Muslims were arrested during the period from 1st January to 31st March 1956.

3. Reports were also received of alleged entry into India of Pakistani Muslims by adopting Hindu names or on the strength of migration certificates but according to enquiries made no such case has as yet come to the notice of any authorities. In any case all border check posts and also the Railway authorities have been duly alerted against any possible attempt at entry into India of Pakistani Muslims by adopting this device.

4. It was further reported that some Pakistani Muslims succeeded in enrolling themselves as voters in the voters’ lists for legislatures either by swearing affidavits or by other. The matter is being investigated by the Chief Electoral Officer who has in the meantime duly cautioned all the Deputy Commissioners and the sub-divisional Officers. Some Pakistani Muslims are alleged to have enrolled themselves as Congress members with a view to get their names into the electoral rolls as voters for the legislatures. Steps have been taken to have such names removed from the voters’ list and the activities of such persons are being watched.

5. It is suspected that Muslims of Pakistan origin some time make it possible to secure Indian passports masquerading themselves as Indians by swearing affidavits in some cases. On the strength of those passports they go to Pakistan and come back to India thereby securing an opportunity to carry on activities or propaganda against India. There is no provision, so far as the Rules for issue of India-Pakistan passports go, for having a police verification before a passport can be granted. However, instructions have been issued to all district and sub-divisional authorities that no Indo-Pakistan passport should be issued unless the facts and circumstances in respect of the applicants are duly verified through the Police. It has also been enjoined on all concerned that applications for passport should be made only to the authorities of the district in which the applicants reside and in no ease should a passport be issued by any district authority to any applicant who is not resident in his district.

6. It has been reported that some of the persons who have come into the district of Cachar from Pakistan with or without valid travel documents are suspected to carry on pro-Pakistan propaganda. Secret reports also indicate that some East Pakistan officers who were originally men of Cachar district and who now occasionally visit Cachar on the strength of Pakistan passports have formed an organization known as “Azad Cachar Party” with its branches at Dacca, Sylhet, Jokigang and Atgram (Sylhet district) and some ex-Muslim Leaguers of Cachar are secretly keeping contact with this parity in East Pakistan. The visits of most of those East Pakistan officers appear to be utilized to establish new contacts and to develop the existing contacts for propaganda and secret work in the interest of annexation of Karimganj and Hailakandi subdivisions and Katigora P.S. of the Cachar district to Pakistan. It is reported that representatives of this organization had approached the Pakistan Foreign Minister Mr. Hamidul Haq Choudhury during his recent visit to Sylhet to press that certain portions of Cachar district should be included in East Pakistan.

7. It is also reported that pro-Pakistan propaganda was carried on by some Pakistani Maulonas under cover of religious meeting in Cachar particularly near the border and that funds are being collected for Azad-Cachar and Azad-Kashmir movements. Necessary steps have been taken to follow up cases of such anti-State activities and it is proposed to take up prosecution of some of the ring leaders under the P(revention of).D(etention). Act as and when necessary evidence for the same becomes available.

8. Some Jinnah caps are suspected to have been brought to Azimganj, Police station Patharkandi, for distribution among Pak Muslims. The matter is being enquired into and the whole situation is binger watch.

9. So far as Pakistani Muslims who are behind this Azad-Cachar organization are concerned, we propose not to renew the visas granted to them by the Indian High Commission at Dacca. The Government of India have clarified that there is no provision for canceling or terminating any visa during the period of its validity. On good and sufficient grounds visas may not be renewed and in doubtful cases reference has to be made to the Government of India. We shall no doubt instruct the proper authorities of the State Government who are competent to renew visas that they should not renew, on the expiry of the existing period of validity, the visas of such persons. We have also to request the Indian High Commission at Dacca not to grant renewal of visa in such cases, but as many of these persons are responsible officers of the East Pakistan Government, non-renewal in some cases may raise an embarrassing situation. I therefore bring this to your notice and would await your advice in the matter before we actually instruct our officers or address the Indian High Commission on this subject. In regard to the Indian Muslims supposed to be associated with collection of funds or propaganda for the Azad Cochar movement we propose to revoke the passports granted to those suspected to be associated with the Azad Cochar party. The India- Pakistan Passport Rules do not provide for cancellation of any passport granted by either the Government of India or the Government of Pakistan, but in the passports issued by the Government of India there is a provision that any time the issuing authority can revoke a passport issued to any person.

10. There are also some visas granted by the Indian High Commission in favour of Pakistan Muslims which though valid for one year authorize stay in India for a period up to two months only at a time. The District Officers are authorized to extend the period of stay for another period of two months and the orders of the State Government are necessary for any further extension. When Pakistan Muslims enter and stay in India on the strength of such temporary visas and where evidence is available about their undesirable activities in India, the District officers are being instructed not to grant any extension of the initial period of two months and the appropriate Department of this Government is also being instructed not to grant any renewal of such visas to any person.

11. In this connection I would like to draw your attention to certain difficulties which have been pointed out by the C.I.D. and the District authorities in the matter of working of the Passport Act and the Rules thereunder. One difficulty is that under Rule 8 of the Passport Rules, Pakistanis can be stopped and prosecuted only while they are found to be actually crossing the border without valid travel documents. But once they are in Indian territory even without any travel documents, it has been held by some High Courts that they cannot be prosecuted and convicted of any offence under the Passport Act. If this position is to continue to be valid then all Pakistanis who might enter any of our districts by avoiding the check-posts will be entitled to be released seven after being detained by the police for staying in India without any travel documents. In the same way it has also been held that for overstaying in India on the expiry of the authorized period, it is not possible to prosecute and convict any person under the existing provisions of the Indo-Pak Passport Rules. If this also is to continue to be valid, our difficulties will be further aggravated. We are examining the matter further but I shall be grateful if you will kindly look into this question.

12. Difficulties have also arisen in regard to the repatriation of those Pakistani nationals who are convicted and sentenced to imprisonment or fine or both by Indian courts. Under the Rules a person entering India without valid travel documents can be convicted up to a period of 3 months’ imprisonment or with fine or with both. The problem arises about their repatriation on the expiry of the sentence of the imprisonment or on their paying the fine imposed. The practice followed so far by our police has been that such convicted persons on the expiry of their sentence are shadowed to the border and are then conveniently sent off to Pakistan. This practice is not one authorized by law; even to follow it now certain practical difficulties have arisen in that the number of such convicted persona has enormously increased and a huge staff has become necessary to carry out this work even though it may not be strictly legal or permissible. The authorized procedure in such cases hitherto had been that when a Pakistani national is convicted, the Deputy Commissioner of the district concerned should send up his case to the Passport Department of the State Government with a copy of the Magistrate’s Judgement. The Passport Department would then make a reference to the Assistant High Commissioner for Pakistan at Shillong for repatriation arrangements. The Assistant High Commissioner in his turn would have enquiries made about the Pakistan national in East Pakistan and thereafter intimate to the State Government as to whether they accept that person as their national or not. If the person is accepted as Pakistan national, he would issue a repatriation certificate on the strength of which the person would be escorted to the border and then let off to go to Pakistan. But if the person is not accepted as a Pakistan national we are absolutely helpless. This procedure which had to be followed hitherto has also been made still cumbersome and we are not now authorized to make a direct reference to the Assistant High Commissioner for Pakistan in Shillong. On the report being received about such conviction with a copy of the Magistrate’s judgement from the Deputy Commissioner of the district concerned, we have now to refer the case to the Ministry of External Affairs who made a reference to the Pakistan High Commissioner in Delhi and the High Commissioner thereafter makes a reference to the East Pakistan Government to initiate necessary enquiries about the Person. The rest of the formalities as indicated above are then followed and if the person is not ultimately accepted as a Pakistan national we are again in a helpless position. Even under the old procedure, which was shorter and simpler, it was not possible in any cases to have a repatriation certificate during the period of the convicted persons detention in jail and in many cases the convicted persons had to be taken to the barrier and then let off to go to Pakistan though the course is not an authorized one. Under the new procedure which requires a reference through the External Affairs Ministry, repatriation certificate cannot in almost all cases be obtained within the period of 3 months which incidentally is the maximum period for which a Pakistani national can be sentenced to imprisonment under the Passport Act. This is another point which calls for your attention, since repercussions of these peculiar arrangements can easily be imagined. I hope you will appreciate that we have got to work under serious difficulties and handicaps due to such lacunae in the Indo-Pak Passport Rules and orders in the administration of matters mentioned above. You may therefore like to have the matters considered at a high level between the Government of India and Pakistan.

13. I am also to mention that the border incidents of February-March ’56 along the Surma-Kushiara referred to by Sarvashri Lakkar and Deb involving an exchange of fire were unfortunate and caused some panic. Reports about these were sent to the Ministry of External Affairs and protests also lodged with Dacca. As a result of the later, a district level conference was held between the Deputy Commissioners of Cacher (India) and Sylhet (Pakistan) and certain arrangements to maintain peace in the area were arrived at on 3rd March '56. Unfortunately, Pakistan dishonoured the arrangements by opening fire again on Mahishashan and Latu areas towards the end of May. We protested against these under intimation to the Ministry of External Affairs. These incidents have also been the subject of correspondence between Karachi and New Delhi and between Shillong and Dacca. A proposal for a joint enquiry at Commissioner's level is under consideration.

14. Under the joint survey of the Patharia area by the Surveys of India and Pakistan some valuable tea area is likely to fall in India. In view of this Pakistan are trying to wriggle out of this and holding up the survey. We have protested both against the deadlock created and alleged massing of forces by Pakistan under intimation to the Ministry of External Affairs.

I shall be grateful for a reply at your early convenience.

Yours sincerely,

(B. E. Medhi)

TOP SECRET

Intelligence Bureau
Ministry of Home Affairs
Government of India

No. 13/PV/55(1), New Delhi, the 7th July, 1956.

My dear Raj Kumar,

Please refer to your D.O. letter No.D-1906/56-T, dated The 19th June 1956, addressed to Shri Mullik. There has, undoubtedly, been a steady flow of Muslims from East Pakistan into Assam ever since the economic conditions deteriorated in East Pakistan towards the close of 1955. The bulk of these migrants constituted the labour class and the peasantry who entered Assam through various routes mostly without travel documents in a desperate bid to earn their livelihood and take shelter in the districts of Cacher, Nowgong Lakhimpur, Goalpara and Sibsagar. Influx of Muslims was by far the largest in the district of Nowgong. They got ready co-operation from their co-religionists in these areas. Instances have also been reported of Muslims coming from East Pakistan with ‘C’ category visas and later getting them converted into ‘F’ category to prolong their stay in India. Some of them surrendered their passports with a view to settling down in India permanently. To become Indian citizens, many filed affidavits in courts declaring that they were in India before partition. They were supported by interested local Muslims. Enquiries show that 218 affidavits in the year 1955 and 185 up to March this year were sworn in Jorhat court alone by the Pakistan Muslims.

2. The un-authorized Muslim migrants have been encouraged to stay on by interested political leaders for political purposes. They have got their names listed in the voters list obviously to inflate the numbers of Muslim majority in certain areas - a game which had started even before the partition. To crown all, some interested non-Muslim Congressmen taking advantage of the presence of these Muslims have enlisted them as Congressmen and got their names entered in the voters list, apparently to gain a temporary advantage in the next elections.

3. Political expediency arising out of the appointment of the States Re-organization Commission also brought about an alliance between the Assamese ruling class dominating the Congress and Muslims of any description to enable the former to retain full power. The Bengali Hindus and the Hill tribes are generally considered politically unreliable owing to their demand for secession from Assam. In the face of this alliance, which is being cemented day by day, there is a general tendency amongst the administrative under-lings to connive at this infiltration.

4. The S.I.B. at Shillong recommended to the Assam Govt. in December last the following preventive and precautionary measures for immediate enforcement:

(a) Rigid checking of Muslims coming into Assam at the border posts. Special checking by the Rly Police at intermediate stations near the border areas and surprise checking by squads of C.I.D. personnel.

(b) Directing the Deputy Commissioners to send monthly returns furnishing detailed particulars of the persons to whom passports have been issued.

(c) Requiring the passport issuing authorities to get applications verified by the police before issuing passports.

(d) Cautioning the authorities concerned against the danger of enlistment of Muslims on false representa-tions and having an investigation made by the Election Commission in Assam to check the volume of new Muslims registered during the second half of 1955, and

(e) Having the passport offices in the district frequently inspected by a senior officer from Shillong to find out if any mal-practices are going on in regard to the issue of Indian passports to Pakistani Muslims.

5. The S.I.B. Staff has been at work to spot out the migrants Muslims. One inspector and two Sub-Inspectors have been switched on to this job for the last few months. They unearthed quite a large number of Pakistani Muslims enlisted as voters and also Muslims who had migrated to Pakistan after partition but their names appeared in the voters list - a factor which is capable of being made fraudulent use of in the next general elections. Lists of such persons are being sent by the S.I.B. from time to time to D.I.G., C.I.D., Assam, Joint Secretary, Home Department and the Chief Electoral Officer, Assam. In Nowgong district, as many as 2540 passports had been issued without proper police verification since the introduction of Indo-Pakistan passport system in 1952 up to 15th March 1954. From the 1st January, 1956, to the 31st March, 1956, 1070 Pakistanis (Cachar 598, Garo Hills 179, Goalpara 53, Khasi and Jaintia Hills 10, Miza district 2, G.R.P. 238) were detected and prosecuted for entering India from Pakistan without travel documents. It may be mentioned that more often than not accused persons after conviction stay back in India after payment of fine and serving the sentence, as the case may be, and there is hardly any check to ensure that they are pushed back to Pakistan.

6. Assam has got nearly 700 miles of border with East Pakistan and the magnitude of work involved in scrutinizing the infiltrators is stupendous. The problem came to our notice and we immediately undertook a physical check by diverting a small staff for the purpose. The results have fully established our secret reports and the Assam Government were informed by our S.I.B. at Shillong in December and the result of our subsequent enquiries has been conveyed to them periodically. It would be impossible for this small staff to undertake the entire work of verification. Our simple check has proved the existence of the problem and the work must now be undertaken by a regular large staff. The problem is three-fold.

(a) To discover infiltrators and deal with them legally, remove their names from electoral rolls, cancel visas, etc.

(b) Ensure that they leave India.

(c) Check further infiltration.

The problem at (a) is stupendous but is capable of being handled by a good staff under a selected officer, with the co-operation of the local Govt. and district authorities. For item (b) we have no legal powers. Only executive action can be taken which will involve legal proceedings for writs etc. since there is a large Muslim population along the border who would be opposed and averse to such ejectment. With regard to (c) we will have to increase the number of border posts and have personnel in border thanas and district who would connive at infiltration.

7. The Morning News of Dacca and other papers have already taken up a cry against the action being taken in Assam. The paper dated the 19th of June, 1956, indicated that a thousand Muslims had been arrested in Karimganj and sentenced to several terms of imprisonment for allegedly entering India without proper travel documents. In this connection it was also stated that Maulana Abdul Jalil, a Congress M.L.A. from Karimganj, had been asked by Mr. S. Kalita, S.D.O., Karimgunj, to show cause why he should not be bound down in the sum of Rs. 5,000/- for good behaviour. It is learnt that the Maulana had protested against the mass arrest of Muslims in this fashion.

8. Enquiries in respect of para 2 of your D.O. under reference are still in progress and a further communication will follow.

Yours sincerely,

Sd/- Balbir Singh.

Deputy Secretary,
Home Ministry,

Subject: Non-renewal of visas of Pakistani Muslims engaged in pro-Pakistani propaganda.

No. 2208-NGO/56 New Delhi, 17th July 1956.

Sir,

I am directed to refer to your letter No.C. 196/56/67 dated the 19th June, 1956 on the subject noted above.
2. Denial of visa facilities to responsible officers of the East Pakistan Government on a suspicion that they visit Cachar District to carry on pro-Pakistani propaganda would be embarrassing, but we would consider the matter and take action if the Government of Assam will give us a list of such Pakistani officials. We could instruct our Deputy High Commissioner in Dacca not to give visa facilities in these cases without specific reference to us giving full details of the purpose of the visit, area to be visited, etc., so that we could minimize the propaganda damage done by these officials by granting visa only in cases where genuine official business has to be transact. It is requested that the Assam Government should while sending the list give reasons in brief in case of each name in the list in support of their suspicion of the activities of these officers. This will enable us to regulate and restrict movement without imposing a definite ban on grant of visas to East Pakistan officials desiring to visit Assam.

Yours faithfully.

Deputy Secretary to Government of India.

Ministry of External Affairs

Routine Noting in the Ministry:

Two separate issues are being dealt within this file.

i) The first is the specific case of M/s Poonu Mea & Sons, Arms & Ammunition Dealers in Tinsukia, Asses. The proprietor is reported to have strong pro-Pakistani sympathies, to send donations to funds in Pakistan, and to have a brother running a similar Arms and Ammunition shop in Sylhet (Pakistan). He is also reported, by means of various forgeries in his books to be selling arms to Nagas and in spite of these reports to have had his Arms Licence renewed as an Assam Government Minister has a relative as a silent partner in the firm. This particular case is being investigated by the Home Ministry who still await a reply from Assam. It will no doubt be dealt with satisfactorily.

ii) Even more serious, however, in my opinion in the general issue regarding the infiltration by Pakistani Muslim into Assam. This was brought to the notice of the Government of India by the Adviser at page 1-B of the file. It has new been checked by the Intelligence Bureau whose rather astonishing report is at pages 7 to 9-C of the linked Home Ministry file which JS (E) will no doubt wish to see and of which he may wish to take a copy. Not only do the Intelligence Bureau basically uphold the Adviser’s report, but have already discovered a number of individual cases. The most serious allegation, however, is one that the unauthorized immigration is not merely infiltration organized secretly by a foreign power but has the connivance of interested political leaders in Assam. Attempts to create Muslim majorities in certain areas are bad enough from a communal and indeed national security point of view, but even more criminal is the report that "interested non-Muslim Congressmen have enlisted them as Congressmen and get their name in the voters list apparently to gain a temporary advantage in the next elections." The Intelligence Bureau report goes on to say "political expediency arising out of the appointment of the S.R.C. also brought about an alliance between the Assamese ruling class dominating the Congress and Muslims of any description to enable the former to retain full power. The Bengali Hindus and the hill tribes are generally considered politically unreliable owing to their demand for secession from Assam. In the face of this alliance which is being cemented day by day, there is a general tendency among the administrative underlings to connive at this (Pakistani Muslim) infiltration". This brings us up against a problem which is not merely a short term internal one but a tendency which is likely, if allowed to continue, to endanger the whole security of the country's North-Eastern Frontier. I had some time ago purely as an individual and as an ax-Army Officer felt very chagrined at the trends in this area with Government seemingly always supporting or accepting reports from the exponents of local Assamese chauvinism, the intensity of which is not easily comprehensible to one who is not daily in contact with it. I am afraid that it will be no use much longer deluding ourselves and making scape-goats out of former British administrators or foreign missionaries for the separatist tendencies in the hills which form our North-Eastern line of defence. The demand for a Hill State "Admittedly within India" has much deeper roots and we cannot divorce it entirely from the present violent Naga activity which is only a more intransigent and violent manifestation of the same psychological urge. The worst aspect of the situation is that these hill tribes who during World war II formed the most loyal and cooperative elements in the Frontier battles witness General Slim's remarks about the Naga people's efforts in aid of the 14th Army and the outstanding achievements of the Lushais in V-force have now been turned by our own treatment of them since independence into people who are considered politically unreliable and to whom certain influential circles in Assam prefer Pakistani Muslims such as Poonu Mea as political allies.

iii) By procrastination or rather lack of realization of trends in Naga area, again possibly attributable in the main to doctored reports from Assam itself, we have always been months and sometime years behind actual developments in the Naga area and are hence now faced with approximately one ninth of our total infantry complement of the Army deployed against the Nagas in one district. These people may be beaten down but in the process of this beating down they cannot but arouse the sympathy of other hill tribes in Assam. I have already heard such sympathy expressed by both Lashais and Khasis, even educated and responsible individual who while deploring Naga stupidity in sticking to a demand for a sovereign independent State and while opposing their use of violence, equally condemn the present repressive measures in the Naga Hills District. We cannot forget that in the Army itself in the Assam Regiment as well as in the Assam Rifles, Naga soldiers rub shoulders daily with others such as Lushais and Garos and the burning of a village near Mokokchang or the death by starvation of a relative in the jungle is news which thereby spreads to Tura and Aijal. In 1951 there was some minor agitation in the Naga Hills regarding the grant of a mineral licence on the road between Dimapur and Kohima. Now in the year 1956 there have been demonstrations and police arrests on an issue regarding a colliery near Shillong.

iv) I have noted separately in giving my opinion on the Naga problem that the time is rapidly passing or has already passed when we can subordinate national interests to what was earlier considered the paramount need of maintaining the supremacy of the political party in power in Assam. I am genuinely afraid that though the Assam Government's policies in their own Hill Districts and though central reluctance to interfere, we are playing with fire on the strategic North-Eastern gateway into India through the hills.

v) Apart from these long-term external considerations there is also the problem of the increased adverse comment against India in the foreign press which this tribal restlessness is producing and the unfortunate fact that the Communist Party has now taken up the Naga cause, and even more unfortunately in their “New Age” dated 22nd July has come to a far better informed and more truthful appreciation of the situation than the Government itself. The local people without having any ideological sympathies either way will be quick to contrast this with the factually incorrect statement in Parliament that large numbers of the villages have been burnt by the hostiles - a trend which in my opinion will be unfortunate both for the country and for the people themselves.

Copy of D.O. No. C 342/58 dated 5th September 1956 from Shri S.K. Datta, ICS, Chief Secretary to the Government of Assam, Shillong, to Shri Raj Kumar, Deputy Secretary, Ministry of Home Affairs, New Delhi.

Please refer to your D.O. letter No.D.1906/56-T dated 19th June 1956 and reminder vide D.O. letter No. F. 15/7/56-T (Part IV) dated 14th August 1956. The matter has been duly enquired into. I am afraid, in most essential particulars, the information furnished to the Government of India do not appear to be based on actual facts.

2. The arms and ammunition shop in Tinsukia is in the name of Md. Jalil of M/s Poonomeah and Sons. His father is Haji Safiullah who had a fireworks licence as far back as 1922. He now lives in Calcutta not at Dacca. The family originally hailed from Ghazipar, U.P. and came to Assam about 60 years back. Md. Jalil was granted a licence to sell 50 lbs. gunpowder and any quantity of percussion caps by the district authorities in 1951 after due verification of his antecedents and character. Subsequently his two other brothers, Md. Ibrahim and Md. Khalil, were also made partners of the business with the permission of the district authorities. In 1952 the licence was changed to one under form X to deal in arms and ammunition.

3. In 1954, some anonymous allegations were received as regards pro-Pakistan sympathies of Md. Jalil and other Muslims of Tinsukia. The allegations were duly enquired into with great care and no evidence could be secured as regards his pro-Pakistan activities or as regards his contribution to any fund in Pakistan. On the contrary, it was established that he had been associated with the Indian National Congress from a long time and was most helpful towards the Congress and all beneficial public and social activities. In course of that enquiry it was reported that one of his brothers had a licence to deal in arms and ammunition at Sylhet in East Pakistan. But the brothers being separate, no suspicious connection could be traced between Md. Jalil and his brother who was reported to be in Sylhet. Later reports indicate that the Sylhet shop was closed down in 1954. Md. Jalia has been highly spoken of by very responsible and respectable persona of the Dibrugarh sub-division including M.L.As., Chairman of the Municipal and Local Boards who have known him and the family for many years. The State Government has all along been furnished with reliable and satisfactory reports about his loyalty to the State. He is a Government nominated member of the Tinsukia Municipal Beard. Pending verification of the allegations made anonymously, it was decided by the State Government tentatively to stop the renewal of his licence after 31st
December 1954. But when the complete reports of the enquiries about his activities were received, the State Government decided to allow his licence to be renewed for the year 1955. On every occasion, his activities were very thoroughly examined and his conduct as a licenced dealer in arms and ammunition duly taken into account. On the strength of the reports from the district authorities, the licence held by Md. Jalil was allowed to be renewed for the year 1956 as well.

4. A secret report in 1954, alleged that Md. Jalil and other Muslims of Tinsukia, in a secret meeting, had decided not to participate in the Independence Day celebrations as a mark of protest against the arrest of Sheik Md. Abdullah, Chief Minister of Kashmir. But in fact, it was found that Md. Jalil duly participated in the celebrations and on that account no suspicion could be reasonably harboured against him on the ground of his alleged pro-Pakistan or anti-Indian propensities.

5. The stock of firearms and ammunition and the various sales effected through the shop of Md. Jalil had been duly verified and a close secret watch was also maintained on his contacts and sale transactions for a reasonable period. The State Government had earlier received reports from secret sources indicating the possibility of sale of arms and ammunition by some arms dealers having their shops near the borders of the Naga Hills District to undesirable persons hailing from Naga Hills. The whole matter was kept under watch and enquired into. No such sale to any undesirable person hailing from the Naga Hills or from the adjoining Tuensang Frontier Division could be traced. Records showed that ammunition was sold from the firm of Md. Jalil to some persons hailing from the Tuensang Frontier Division in N.E.F.A. on the strength of permits issued in their favour by P.O. Tuensang F.D. No evidence could be secured as regards his unauthorized or irregular sale of arms and ammunition from the firms to any person of the Naga Hills District or the Tuensang F(D)ision.

6. The State Government are fully alive to their responsibilities in respect of arms licences and their decisions are based on fact in each case. In the absence of any specific or reliable evidence as regards any pro-Pak activities and in view of the consistently good reports about his character and sympathies, the State Government did not consider that there would be any justification to cancel his licence. The State Government also felt that he being a member of a minority community, any action against him, if not based on reliable and specific evidence, would lead to serious misinterpretation.

7. It may, however, be mentioned that the activities of many arms and ammunition dealers having their shops near-about the bordering regions of Naga Hills district have been kept under constant watch and the State Government would authorize prompt action against any dealers who might be reasonably suspected to be guilty of illegal dealings in arms and ammunition.

The file regarding Pakistani infiltration into Assam and the specific case of the arms and ammunition dealer at Tinsukia has already been submitted to J.S. (E).

2. Here is the detailed report from the D.I.G., C.I.D. Assam in which the latter has recommended to Chief Secretary the cancellation of the licence. The cancellation seems to be recommended mainly on technical grounds as no actual case of illegal sales has come to light.

3. In two cases sales were made to residents of Tuensang Frontier Division, but these are both well known and trusted Dobashis who obtained their rounds properly on permit and licences.

4. Investigation, however has confirmed that in many cases records are not maintained properly and that there may well, therefore, have been leakage.

5. The report mentions the rumours that the firm also has a shop in Pakistan stating that this could not be verified and that the sources which gave evidence had either a communal or commercial bias.

6. It would be interesting, in the light of the background information produced in the S.I.B. report regarding connivance at a high level in this matter, whether the D.I.G., C.I.D.’s recommendations for the cancellation of the licence are accepted by the Assam Govt.

Note by Director (East)

This reveals a serious state of affairs which should, in my opinion, be brought to the notice of both the Prime Minister and the Home Minister. They may perhaps like to take some action through the Congress Party organization to stop the influx of Pakistani Muslims into Assam, the alleged enlistment of such people as Congressmen and also their getting themselves registered as voters. This is a dangerous step which may boomerang against us in a crisis with Pakistan.

2. The question regarding the issue of arms licences to doubtful characters, who are suspected to be doling out arms to the Nagas and who have one leg in India and the other in Pakistan, should be dealt with administratively. The allegation made originally and confirmed by the Intelligence Bureau that some Assam Government Minister had a relative as a silent partner in the Firm Poonu Mea and Sons, needs to be investigated. Further, I suggest that the Home Ministry may be requested to inquire into this matter and take necessary action.

F.S.

Mr. Yusuf Ali’s note which is immediately below is rather rambling and has unnecessarily brought in the question of the Naga situation in general and how it should be dealt with. The questions under consideration in this file are simple although they have very serious implication. These are: (1) whether a large number of Muslims are being allowed to come into Assam from East Pakistan and get themselves enrolled as voters; and (2) whether the licensed firm of M/s. Poonu Mea & sons has pro-Pakistan sympathies and sells arms and ammunition to the Nagas. The Home Ministry have already asked the Assam Government and the D.I.B. for full information on these points. We suggest that both these authorities should be asked to submit their reports immediately so that necessary remedial action can be taken without delay.

Prime Minister’s Secretariat

I have seen these papers. I shall discuss this matter with the Chief Minister of Assam. The two questions referred to are important and, as far as I can see, no satisfactory explanation has come from the Assam Government in regard to them.

The note in the file of Shri R. Yusuf Ali, dated the 4th August 1956, is rather extraordinary. Instead of dealing with the points at issue, he has embarked on an essay on the situation in the Naga Hills. Part of what he has written is correct, though not relevant. Part of it is an expression of his views, which, evidently, he cannot suppress, whatever the subject, and which crops up like King Charles’s head everywhere. The fact that he has this obsession vitiates his opinions in regard to any connected matter. I have pointed out previously that some of our officers in the NEFA seem to consider themselves much wiser than the External Affairs Ministry or, indeed, the Government of India. This erroneous opinion has to be removed, if they are to serve with any satisfaction.

It is right that the views of our officers should be freely and frankly expressed to us and that we should take them into consideration in formulating our larger policies, which are based not only on their views and the facts they adduce, but on other facts and many other and wider considerations. If we merely and automatically acted up to the reports or views received by us from some of our officers, then the Government of India would just become an unthinking machine.

In regard to the Naga Hills affairs, I have previously drawn attention to this tendency, not only of our officers in the NEFA but, to some extent, even of our officers in the Ministry. I hope that they have profited by what I have said and will not indulge again in delivering homilies to us.

The question of Muslim immigration into Assam is at least 50 years old, if not more. I remember studying it about twenty years ago, when I visited Assam and wrote a rather long note about it. That was, of course, long before partition, and had nothing to do with the new issues that have arisen since partition. Nevertheless, the problem was there. I think that one of the census reports, probably of 1911, refers to this movement of Muslims from the Eastern Bengal areas into Assam as resembling a large army of ants on the march. The reason was obvious. Assam was thinly populated, while some of the Bengal border districts, notably Mymensingh I think, were teeming with an ever-growing population.

This basic fact has to be remembered because otherwise we shall overlook one of the principal causes of this migration. The other causes are, of course, due to partition and the economic conditions prevailing in Eastern Pakistan.
7. The Assam Government has throughout been much concerned about this migration of Muslims and has written to us innumerable letters on the subject. They have suggested various kinds of legislation to ban or to stop this. It is, therefore, not at all correct to say that, broadly speaking, the Assam Government favours this. They are frightened of it. What might well happen is that, when a number of these people have come and settled down, a political party might seek to win them over. Usually, this kind of thing happens in a local area and some local persons might well be involved in it.

I have noted above some background facts about this migration. Our Ministry, the NEFA Administration and our Intelligence Bureau seem to be unaware of them.

It is necessary, of course, to take effective steps to stop this migration. It is also necessary to deal more effectively with the firm mentioned in these pages.

0193. Extract from the Note of Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru proposing an Extradition Treaty with Pakistan.

New Delhi, August 4, 1956.

2. I do not think that the reasons given for the avoidance of an Extradition Treaty are valid, although they may come in the way of an agreement between India and Pakistan.

3. Thus, as regards the territory to be governed by the Treaty, obviously, the Treaty will be between the Republic of India and its territories and the Republic of Pakistan. I do not know that it is necessary in any such Treaty to specify States of either country. If Pakistan wants to exclude any State, such as Jammu & Kashmir or Hyderabad, of course, we will not agree and our negotiations will break down. We can state this in Parliament later, if necessity arises.

4. As for the spirit in which the Treaty is to be worked, this question arises in every arrangement with Pakistan. If Pakistan refuses to work the Treaty properly and in a bona fide manner, we shall have to renounce the Treaty. In any event, even now, Pakistan refuses to extradite criminals from India, and so it cannot make matters worse.

5. As for the suggestion that it might be used to victimize minority leaders and other political offenders, it is clear that the Treaty cannot apply to political offenders. But it may be that false criminal charges are trumped up against them. It should be possible for us to protect ourselves against this misuse. That is a matter for the drafting of the Treaty.

6. I really do not see any adequate reason for not proposing such a Treaty with Pakistan. It may be that, when we discuss the terms of the Treaty, no agreement is reached. There this matter will end for the time being at least. I think, therefore, that this matter should be reconsidered and a draft Extradition Treaty prepared, keeping various points in view. This draft Treaty should not refer to any specific part of India or of Pakistan. After that, we can ask Pakistan for talks about it or the draft can be sent to them for their consideration.

7. Meanwhile, this question* has to be answered. The answer should be:

“The matter is still under consideration”.

* The reference is to the draft answer and the note for supplementaries prepared in the MEA in connection with a question that H.V Kamath proposed to ask in the Lok Sabha about the steps taken for the conclusion of an extradition treaty or agreement with Pakistan.
0194. Aide Memoire of the Pakistan Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Commonwealth Relations addressed to the Ministry of External Affairs regarding mention of Kashmir in the Joint Communiqué issued by the Baghdad Pact Council of Minister at their meeting in Karachi.

AIDE MEMOIRE

The Government of Pakistan are surprised to find that the Government of India have in their Aide Memoire of the 27th April, 1956, taken exception to the joint statement by the Baghdad Pact Council of Ministers affirming the need for an early settlement of the Kashmir dispute. It is apparent that this dispute is a source of extreme tension in the region. Therefore all the countries interested in the maintenance of peace and tranquility in the region must necessarily demand its early settlement.

The Government of Pakistan emphatically reject the Government of India’s claim to sovereignty over the State of Jammu and Kashmir or that State of Jammu and Kashmir is an integral part of the Union of India. This claim is utterly immoral because the State was forcibly occupied by the Government of India and still continues to be so occupied, against the wishes of the people of the State, with the help of the Indian army under cover of a fraudulent transaction entered into with the Maharaja of Jammu and Kashmir. The claim is also contrary to India’s international commitments which she voluntarily assumed by accepting the two resolutions of the United Nations’ Commission for India and Pakistan, dated the 13th August 1948 and 5th January 1949, where under the Government of India agreed that the question of the accession of the State of Jammu and Kashmir to India or Pakistan through the democratic method of a free and impartial plebiscite.

As the Government of India are themselves aware, the plebiscite has not yet been held, and Plebiscite Administrator for the purpose has yet to conduct the plebiscite in order to ascertain the wishes of the people of the State, whether they wished to accede to India or Pakistan. Both India and Pakistan stand committed to such a plebiscite so long as it is not held and the question of the accession of the State is not decided in accordance with the verdict of the people of the State, the State will remain in dispute. The claim of the Government of India to sovereignty over this territory, and any attempt on their part to treat it as an integral part of the Union of India in disregard of all the resolutions of the Security Council on this subject, merits the strongest condemnation.

The Government of Pakistan, therefore totally reject the protest lodged by the Government of India.

0195. SECRET
Letter from the High Commissioner CC Desai to Commonwealth Secretary M. J. Desai regarding his call on the Pakistan Foreign Minister Malik Firoz Khan Noon.

Karachi, October 2, 1956.

High Commission Of India
Karachi

D.O. No. HC/56/S. 1437. October 2, 1956

My dear M. J.,

I am just returning from my first formal official courtesy call on the new Foreign Minister, Malik Feroze Khan Noon, the time allotted being just 10 to 15 minutes. I have of course known him since long and he used to come to us to our parties when he was in the wilderness after his dismissal from the post of Chief Minister of Punjab by Gurmani under instructions from the then Governor General, the late Ghulam Mohammad. Although we were not supposed to talk business or politics, we immediately got down to it as Noon started off by saying that our Prime Minister was a mad man, when it came to Kashmir. Perhaps I had better relate the conversation in the form in which it actually took place.

Noon: Your Prime Minister is a mad man, when it comes to Kashmir. He is all right in other respects. It is you who are driving us into Baghdad Pact and regional pacts, to which you now object.

Myself: I can hardly tell you the story of Kashmir in the 10 minutes, but as you have referred to the matter, let me explain to you that I see no injustice whatever in our position in Kashmir. Firstly, we are there by virtue of a valid deed of accession in accordance with the arrangements then made between the leaders of the Congress and the Muslim League. Secondly, we are there by the force of our arms as we fought the raiders and the Pakistani forces and beat them back. Thirdly, we have ascertained the wishes of the people in accordance with the undertaking we gave at the time of accession and the last Constituent Assembly was unanimously in favour of accession to India.

Noon: You have also agreed to take a plebiscite according to the United Nations resolution and you are not now giving effect to it.

Myself: We are not afraid of ascertaining the wishes of the people of Kashmir, but what we object to is that any such plebiscite must inevitably be preceded by communal agitation which would have repercussion in both the countries. Any assurance that this would not happen cannot be accepted judging from what has been happening all through the last 9 years and, even as recent as a few days ago when agitation was worked up on the stupid issue of the book ‘Religious Leaders’.

Noon: This is only an argument in the nature of harami, when you do not want to face the issue of plebiscite.

Myself: You may think so, but that is our genuine feeling and you must give us the credit for it.

Noon: Then how do you justify your position in Junagadh and Manavadar?

Myself: You probably have some case there because these 2 states had acceded to Pakistan and we did not have the consent of the Government of Pakistan to our entry into the two states particularly Junagadh. If you insist on the sanctity of accession in the case of Junagadh, you would equally have to respect the sanctity of accession of Jammu & Kashmir and any demand for restoration of Junagadh & Manavadar would have to be matched by readiness to evacuate and hand over to India that portion of Jammu & Kashmir which is currently occupied by Pakistan.

Noon: Let us talk of something else; but tell me how you are justified in Hyderabad?

Myself: We have a perfectly good case in Hyderabad, but I do not accept the interest of Pakistan in the Hyderabad issue. Pakistan has no locus standi in the matter. It is a matter between us and the Nizam of Hyderabad and the people of Hyderabad. Actually I can show to you the Instrument of Accession executed by the Nizam of Hyderabad which is the basis of our position in Hyderabad.

Noon: Oh! you got that accession only after use of force and the so-called police action!
Myself: Be it what it may, our present position in Hyderabad is based again on a valid Instrument of Accession and as I said before, this is a matter in which Pakistan has no concern.

Noon: We are interested in it because of the Muslim ruler and the fate of the Muslims there.

Myself: I am afraid I must object to your interest in the Indian Muslims the same way as China would object if you showed interest in the Chinese Muslims or Burma would object if you showed interest in the Burmese Muslims.

Noon: All right, I agree that we should show no interest in the Indian Muslims.

Noon: So it means that you would have no plebiscite, and in the circumstances we can never forget Kashmir. You must also remember the biblical saying that those who live by the sword will perish by the sword.

Myself: That is fair enough. I am prepared to perish by the sword but not give up my right to defend my territory including Kashmir. You are free to try the remedy of the sword and naturally we shall defend ourselves against any aggression from any quarter.

Myself: If your view is that until the Kashmir problem is settled, there can be no friendly relations between the 2 countries and that all the outstanding issues must remain unsolved, we would be sorry but there is nothing that we can do to help it.

Noon: No, I did not say exactly the same and I would be prepared to consider other issues and try to settle them as best as possible although there cannot be that true atmosphere of friendship without the settlement of the Kashmir problem.

Myself: After some time I shall certainly come up to you to discuss a few individual matters which deserve solution especially in the interest of the poor innocent people in both the countries, who are suffering for want of a settlement between the two Governments. Let us at least remove these hardships to which our people are unnecessarily subjected.

Noon: I agree and I would always be prepared to discuss individual matters and settle them as best as possible.

2. Even reading of this account would perhaps take more than 10 or 15 minutes and yet all this was talked and perhaps a little more and so you can imagine the speed and the tempo with which the discussion took place. At the same time, I must stress that there was no tension, acrimony or unpleasantness either on his part or on mine. We were both smiling and pressing each other’s hands while talking as if we were trying to convince each other in a spirit of good fellowship.
