armoured cars. Among other unlawful activities this force occupied Junagadh House at Rajkot, the headquarters of the Indian Regional Commissioner of the States Ministry, and hoisted the Congress flag over it. Pakistan lodged a strong protest to India in regard to these incidents and once again pointed out that unless the warlike activities were stopped no useful discussion could take place.

CLIMAX

In reply to this protest the Government of India merely reiterated their objection to the accession of Junagadh to Pakistan and instead of curbing the activities of the "provisional government" themselves proceeded to occupy Sardargarh and Bantwa. The climax was reached when Indian Dominion troops entered the small State of Manavadar, occupied the place, shot dead a palace guard, took the chief in custody and removed him to an unknown destination. No explanation of why a State which had acceded to Pakistan was occupied and taken under management has been forthcoming from the Government of India, in spite of protests. Indeed, shortly afterwards the possibility of a peaceful settlement, the Government of India sent troops to occupy Babariawad and Mangrol, in spite of the clear undertaking that this will not be done.

Not content with this, active support was given to the so-called "provisional government" in their depredations which became extensive about this time. They began seizing villages of Junagadh State and in the process shot dead several policemen of the State with the modern arms they possessed.

Evidence received from unimpeachable sources clearly proves that a majority of the armed members of the so-called "Azad Fauj" were soldiers of India's regular Armed Forces of which a whole brigade was stationed in Kathiawar with the sole object of breaking the resistance of the State.

This has now been achieved. According to reports, on November 7, a force of 20,000 of the so-called "Azad Fauj" equipped with tanks, armoured and other modern weapons, marched on to Junagadh and gave an ultimatum to the administration to surrender. The Dewan of Junagadh had no alternative before him in the matter against such odds and decided to hand over the administration to the Indian Union temporarily pending honourable settlement of issues involved.

The Government of India have readily accepted the "invitation" and have declared that they have done so "in order to avoid disorder and resulting chaos". They have invited Pakistan to attend a conference with Junagadh in order to discuss the question of referendum of plebiscite and allied matters affecting Junagadh.

It is quite clear that if the Government of India had really meant to assist the State, without any ulterior motive, they could have easily stopped the illegal activities of the so-called "provisional government" forces which were throughout using either Indian territory or territory of states having acceded to India for their operations against Junagadh.

The Government of India's activities throughout have been directed towards forcing the State to renounce its accession to Pakistan and all kinds of weapons have been used by them to achieve this end. Conditions were carefully and deliberately created in and around Junagadh State which made it impossible to run the administration.

Pakistan Advice

The Pakistan Government were fully aware of what was coming, but in their extreme anxiety to give no possible excuse to the Government of India for invasion, which they had obviously been looking for they advised the State authorities to act with the utmost caution and themselves refrained from sending a single soldier to Junagadh.

All that they did was to send seven thousand tons of food grains to feed the starving population of Junagadh and Manovadar despite the occupation of the latter by Indian Forces. It is regretted, however, that the restraint, with which the Pakistan and Junagadh State Governments have acted has not been appreciated.

Conference Meaningless

It has been made quite clear to the Government of India that the Pakistan Government have no intention of recognizing the military coup d'état performed by the Indian Dominion and cannot regard the occupation as anything but as unwarranted violation of Pakistan territory. Neither the Dewan nor, for that matter, the Ruler himself has to negotiate any settlement temporary or permanent with the Indian Dominion.

With regard to the Government of India's suggestion to hold a conference, the Pakistan Government consider that without an immediate withdrawal of Indian troops, reinstatement of Nawab's administration and restoration by India of normal conditions in and around the borders of Junagadh, including stoppage of activities of the so-called "Provisional government", the proposed conference would be meaningless.
2002. Press Note issued by the Government of India denying that Indian soldiers had entered Junagadh.

New Delhi, November 14, 1947.

It has been stated in a Press note issued by the Pakistan Government on November 11 that a force of 20,000 of the so-called "Azad Fauj" equipped with tanks and other modern weapons marched into Junagadh on November 7 and that the majority of armed members of the "Azad Fauj" were soldiers of India's regular armed forces. This statement is entirely false. Not a single soldier of the Indian Army entered Junagadh territory until the Government of India were asked by the Junagadh State Council on November 9 to take over the administration of the State and maintain law and order and only one battalion entered Junagadh on that day. That Government of India are in no way concerned with the so-called "Azad Fauj" and the allegations that its members were soldiers of the Indian Army and that they received arms and equipment from the Government of India are also untrue.

Karachi, November 22, 1947.

No. 922. 22nd November, 1947

From Prime Minister Pakistan, to Prime Minister India

Your telegram PRIMIN No. 350, dated Nov. 17th evades main issued which is that India Government deliberately created conditions which brought administration in Junagadh to verge of breakdown. Our instructions to Junagadh State were that on no account should they do anything which would lead to disorder or bloodshed. Similar instructions were given by His Highness the Nawab to Dewan. Junagadh administration followed those instructions strictly and non-Muslims in State were perfectly safe. Nevertheless India Government persisted in their activities directed against administration at Junagadh.

2. It is true to say Pakistan Government knew of activities of your Government and of Provisional Government directed against Junagadh administration and in fact protested against them several times but it is wholly incorrect to suggest as you do that it was as a result of consultations with Pakistan Government that Mr. Harvey-Jones, Senior Member of Junagadh Council negotiated with Mr. Samaladas Gandhi to hand over administration of State to Provisional Government. We had no knowledge that any such scheme was afoot or that any negotiations with Mr. Samaladas Gandhi were contemplated. We could not possibly recognize that Provisional Government had any locus standi in affairs of Junagadh. Incidentally Mr. Harvey-Jones never went to Lahore.

3. Telegram by Sir Shah Nawaz Bhutto addressed to Governor-General and Prime Minister Pakistan was received by us on November 9th after India Government had already occupied Junagadh by force. The insinuation that because of Nawab’s presence in Karachi action of Dewan of Junagadh had approval of Pakistan Government is wholly unfounded. We repeat that Pakistan Government only knew of occupation of Junagadh by Indian troops after the event. Sir Shah Nawaz Bhutto reached Karachi on 8th but did not call on Foreign Office until 10th.

4. We note that you insist upon keeping your troops in Junagadh and on continued occupation of State. If your troops withdraw and if you restore administration to rightful ruler as you should we see no reason why this should lead to anarchy and conflict. In fact reports are pouring in that you handled manner which has resulted in serious loss of Muslim lives.

5. The fact that you have not formally recognized Provisional Government does not alter basic position that it was formed and functioned on Indian territory and that but for your support and encouragement there would have been no such thing as a Provisional Government for Junagadh. We cannot possibly recognize either your occupation of Junagadh or Plebiscite which you appear to contemplate. A free and fair Plebiscite can only be held after your forces are withdrawn and administration of ruler restored and normal conditions prevail.

New Delhi, November 17, 1947.

No. PRIMIN-350.  17th November, 1947

From Prime Minister, India, for Prime Minister, Pakistan.

Your telegram No. 396-G, dated 11th November Junagadh.

At the outset we wish to make it clear that we dispute the statements and allegations contained in your telegram. The facts are these:

On the admission of Sir Shah Nawaz and his colleagues, which our own Regional Commissioner has since corroborated, administration in Junagadh had completely broken down. The Junagadh Council, therefore, considered only two alternatives, namely, whether to hand over Junagadh administration to the Provisional Government or to the Government of India. In the end, they decided upon the latter course. If the Government of India had not intervened, the whole of Junagadh State would have been left in utter chaos with consequent repercussions on the whole of Kathiawar. Further, it was certain that the Provisional Government would have taken charge of the state in the conditions of chaos that prevailed there; this would undoubtedly have involved bloodshed. In these circumstances, the Government of India had to make up their mind quickly and had no alternative but to acceded to the request of the Junagadh State Council and take over its administration. The Senior Member of the Junagadh Council was waiting in Rajkot to receive the decision of the Government of India and it was he who on the 9th took the Regional Commissioner as the Representative of the Government of India to Junagadh to hand over the administration. The Senior Member of the State Council also undertook to disarm all the Police and the Military before he handed over the administration. He fulfilled this undertaking. The Regional Commissioner took a detachment of force only as a precaution and the administration of Junagadh State (except portions occupied by Provisional Government) was taken over by us without any incident and without any dissentient voice. This shows we acted just in time and succeeded in forestalling disorder.

2. In our view it is not correct to say that Pakistan had no knowledge of what was happening in Junagadh. Before opening negotiations with Provisional government, the Senior Member of Junagadh Council went both to Karachi and Lahore. He must have held consultations with Nawab and you or/and your colleagues. On his return he negotiated with Mr. Samaldas Gandhi to hand over his administration to Provisional Government.
3. In his letter to the Regional Commissioner, Rajkot, dated 8th November, Sir Shah Nawaz Bhutto has stated that he had already telegraphed the Governor-General and Prime Minister Pakistan intimating the Junagadh Government’s decision to ask the Government of India to take over the administration of the State. The Nawab himself was in Karachi and Sir Shah Nawaz was acting under his order as Prime Minister of the State. Further Sir Shah Nawaz took this decision with the unanimous approval of the State Council and of leader of public opinion in Junagadh. He himself reached Karachi on the 8th and must have acquainted the Pakistan Government with the situation the same day. On the other hand the Regional Commissioner did not take over the administration till the evening of the 9th November.

3. You have asked that Indian troops and presumably Indian administration should be immediately withdrawn from the State. We regret we are unable to do so. This situation would at once leave the way open for the Provisional Government to take charge of the entire administration and if any attempts were made at this juncture to restore the Nawab it would inevitably lead to conflict and result in bloodshed and anarchy which neither you nor we can view with equanimity. In this connection it may be recalled that it was this very consideration which led the Nawab to instruct his Dewan to make over the administration to the Indian Government.

4. We have not recognized the Provisional Government. But the fact cannot be ignored that the Provisional Government consists of Junagadh subjects with very large stake in the State who command considerable public support and who have occupied a large portion of Junagadh territory of which they are now in administrative charge. The Government of India cannot be expected to promote a situation in which they would come into conflict with the people of the State, fighting for their elementary rights.

5. To stabilize the situation swiftly and promptly is, therefore, the essence of the Government of India’s policy and for this purpose we wish to settle the issue with the least possible delay by a plebiscite as already conveyed to you in my telegram Primin-324 of the 10th November. This seems to us the only way in which this issue can be settled satisfactorily.

Am informed Nawab Junagadh and Prime Minister Bhutto not allowed to go out of Karachi under instructions of Jinnah. His senior Begum and heir-apparent staying at Carlton Hotel and expressing desire to join Indian Union feeling that they are constitutionally in power as Nawab practically deposed or abdicated. Nawab himself living in private residence with junior Begum and son, Bhutto swears he advised Nawab to join India but Nawab’s Adviser Nabi Bakhsh misled him and created mischief. JINNAH thinks they have all badly let down PAKISTAN.

Had long talk with General Officer Commanding Major General Akbar Khan. Feels India Government pampering Sikhs. Complained batches of Sikh refugees been sent to Madras and other distant provinces where they create trouble resulting in Muslim migration. Akbar Khan greatly perturbed over predominance of Sikhs among officers of Indian Army and fears Kashmir troubles will continue for five years unless settlement made on basis of Hyderabad, Junagadh acceding India and Kashmir going to Pakistan.

Following from Sri Prakasa for Jawaharlal Nehru.

KHAN SIR GHULAM MOHIYUDIN KHAN, Chief Sardagarh, young man of 27, son-in-law—CUM - nephew (i.e., cousin sister’s son) of Nawab Junagadh called this morning and had hour and a half talk. Gave long account of how accession to Pakistan took place. Distrusted BHUTTO who he said was still favouring Pakistan at heart. Nabi Bakhsh, Constitutional Adviser and Counsel decided for Pakistan, Nawab unwilling and called Zafrullah Khan for final advice paying him one lakh twenty-five thousand rupees. Zafrullah Khan advised for Pakistan. Then Nawab yielded. GHULAM MOHIYUDIN told me that Zafrullah Khan had then said Bhopal can never go to India. Zafrullah Khan as Constitutional Adviser will compel him to go to Pakistan. Bhopal's going to India came as utter surprise to JUNAGARH when MANAVADAR also joined Pakistan. MOHIYUDIN still resited but being hopelessly SANDWICHED at last yielded. He fears you may depose him and establish his uncle late ZABAH DAST KHAN’s son on Gadi. Begs you realize his helplessness, pardon him and continue him as chief. He desirous of meeting VALLABHBHAI and yourself. Thinks he can secretly fly away under assumed name to Delhi despite strict watch and lay whole case before you. Only wishes he should be given human treatment and not be confined there. Talked nervously anxiously. Shall be grateful for your advice and guidance. Nawab Junagadh also anxious to meet me but does not know how he can come out of his residence and where he can meet me. I shall see to that on hearing from you.

Nawab desire to accede to India and declare fully democratic state on any model Vallabhbhai may draft. He desires that Sir Mirza Ismail may become his Dewan regardless of amount or salary. Suggested 10,000 rupees “more” if necessary.

Mohiyudin was very nervous about his own safety. Said he feared the smaller officials at Rajkot may be vindictive. He was most anxious for his Gadi should be secured to him and not given to his cousin. Begged me get your reactions earliest possible. Will meet me again Sunday 30th. Hope you will please send instructions earliest possible.

Your telegram No. 922, dated 22nd November, Junagadh. Our position was clearly indicated in our telegram of 17th November to which we have nothing to add and from which it will be quite clear that the Government of India have not only done nothing to undermine Junagadh administration but they have taken control of the situation to prevent the administration from collapsing.

2. With reference to paragraph 4 of your telegram I may mention that since administration of Junagadh was taken over by Government of India not a single Muslim has lost his life and that our Regional Commissioner has received a number of telegrams from local Muslims as well as from Muslims in Bombay thanking him for the effective manner in which the present administration has given protection to minorities.

Following for Sri Prakasa from Jawaharlal Nehru.

Your telegram No. 356, dated 29th November. I have consulted Sardar Patel. We dislike all this secrecy suggested by Ghulam Mohiyudin and think it would be embarrassing to encourage him in secret negotiations. We do not repeat not desire to see him under these conditions. I am quite sure that in any talks that you might have you will take care not in any way to commit the Government of India.

Personal for Jawaharlal Nehru from Sri Prakasa.

Reference my telegram Nos. 339 of November 24th and 356 of November 29th. Serial No. (123)] and your PRIMIN-410 of December 1st. I assure you I have taken greatest care not to commit Government of India in any of my talks with persons from Junagadh. Bhutto, Ghulam Mohiuddin have separately seen me again on behalf of Nawab of Junagadh making piteous appeals to me to restore them to Junagadh on promise of accession to India and full responsible Government to State people. As I must give them some reply for I cannot shake them off I shall be grateful for indication of your intentions regarding Junagadh. Is it not our intention to restore Nawab to Gadi and obtain accession of State to India. If not what is our objective. I do not know if Samaldas Gandhi’s Bombay speech reported in papers today saying that Nawab’s dynasty will never be permitted to return has the support of our government. I still suggest conference with Pakistan at high level and agreement to return of Nawab and his accession to India and full responsible government in State. It appears that Pakistan Government’s mind also working same way if Mandal can be trusted to be interpreting it properly. The question with them is who will take the initiative.

No. 1279. 31st December, 1947.

Since Indian Dominion’s forcible occupation of Junagadh, MANAVADAR, MANGROL, BANTVA, SARDARGARH etc. reports of eye-witness accounts have been received from ever-increasing number of refugees here indicating prevalence of virtual reign of terror throughout these areas. Massacre of innocent Moslems, molestation of Moslem women and wholesale looting of Moslem property has apparently become order of the day. In BANTVA alone Moslem property worth several crores is reported to have been looted and respectable and peaceful families deliberately dishonoured. All Muslim institutions are reported to have been closed down and a number of mosques and tombs desecrated.

Khan Sahib of MANAVADAR and Shiekh Sahib of MANGROL are both reported to have been placed under humiliating detention and their personal property has been looted. Most of Gazetted and Non-Gazetted Moslem Officers have been relieved of their duties or forced to retire.

You will appreciate that Pakistan Government cannot but regard these happenings with greatest concern. If we have not so far made detailed representation to you regarding these it is because Indian Government possesses no constitutional locus standi in these States. As TEMPO of atrocities shows no sign of decreasing we must request you to take immediate and effective steps to put an end to what looks like a determined effort to annihilate the Moslems of Kathiawar.

For Liaquat Ali Khan from Jawaharlal Nehru

Your telegram 1279, dated 31st December. We are constantly in touch with situation in Junagadh, Manavadar, Mangrol Bantwa, Sardargadh and other places and are in a position to affirm that accounts given to you about conditions there are wholly untrue. There were sporadic disturbances in Junagadh when it was under Nawab’s administration, but within 48 hours of our taking over at request of Nawab, our Regional Commissioner was able to restore peaceful conditions. Large quantities of hidden arms have been and are still being recovered from some of the Muslim population of Junagadh. There was one communal disturbance of December 17 when 26 people were admitted to hospital, most of them were Hindus. Some Muslims made a determined attack on a police station on December 26 and hacked to death five Hindu policemen and injured some other, but orders was quickly restored and there was no retaliation. Bad Characters are of course being rounded up in order to prevent repetition of such lawlessness. In Bantva nothing has happened to disturb peaceful conditions except a small incident by Meher who had been subjected to oppression by the previous administration, but this was brought under control in a few hours. There was no loss of Muslim life in this incident and damage to property was negligible. In fact Muslims of Bantva themselves have sent telegrams thanking Regional Commissioner for effective action and for protection afforded to them. It is true that alarmist reports were sent by persons interested in fomenting trouble. One of these reports said that Ismail Khokhar, a close relation of Nawab of Junagadh was killed, but he is still alive and he with six other Muslim leaders of Junagadh was given facilities to verify for themselves what actually happened. After satisfying themselves they have publicly stated that most of the allegations were wholly false and frivolous and that there were altogether only two murders, slight damage to property and no verifiable reports of rape or abduction. Investigation and punishment of offenders, whether Hindu or Muslim, have been prompt. There is absolutely no truth in the allegation that number of mosques and tombs have been damaged or desecrated. The Khan of Manavadar is in Jamnagar with His Highness Jam Sahib of Nawanagar and the Sheikh of Mangrol is with His Highness of Porbandar in Porbandar. They have gone there at our instance as their presence at present in Manavadar and Mangrol is likely to create difficulties in the way of reorganization. They are staying as guests and were being provided all comfort. and facilities. Their property has not been looted and is quite safe. There has been some reorganization of the administration with a view to removing corrupt, inefficient and unreliable staff of the previous regime.

2. Situation in Junagadh and rest of Kathiawar is quite peaceful and we regret that on the basis of false and irresponsible reports Pakistan Government should have brought such unfounded charges against this Government which has gone all out to protect Muslim life and property notwithstanding gravest provocation.

2012. Press Note issued by the Government of Pakistan after the accession of Junagadh to the Indian Dominion. (Date not Available)

In view of the latest developments in Junagadh culminating in the occupation of the state by armed forces of the Indian Dominion it is necessary to give an up-to-dated account of events.

2. Junagadh is a small state with an area of approximately 4017 square miles and a population of about 8 lakhs. It formerly acceded to Pakistan on 15th September, 1947. The Ruler of the State is a Muslim whose dynasty has ruled for over 300 years. The State, has a sea-broad with 16 ports of which at least 2 are ports of call for steamers. By sea route Junagadh is approximately 300 miles from Karachi.

3. As soon as it was known that Junagadh was acceding to Pakistan, the Indian Government raised objections on the ground that Junagadh was not physically contiguous to Pakistan and that its population was predominantly Hindu. They further alleged that the accession of Junagadh to Pakistan was calculated “to cause disruption in the integrity of India by extending influence and boundaries of Pakistan” and was “an encroachment on India’s sovereignty and territory and was inconsistent with friendly relations that should exist between the two Dominions”.

Simultaneously with these protests, — in reply to which Pakistan clearly restated its well known attitude, — the Government of India sent detachments of Indian troops to the borders of Junagadh and encouraged neighbouring Hindu States which had acceded to India to do likewise. At the same time, in an attempt to starve the Junagadh State into submission, a rigorous economic blockade involving the stoppage of all vital supplies including food, cloth and coal, into the State territory was imposed by the Indian Dominion, through whose territory the only Railway line leading to Junagadh passes. Lines of communications, including telegraph, which are still being held by the Dominion of India in accordance with the General Standstill Agreement between the two Dominions, were operated in such a manner that it became impossible for the State of the Muslim population of Junagadh to communicate with the outside world. Pakistan’s request to hand over the communications within the State to Pakistan were ignored. Side by side, a strong press campaign calculated to disrupt the morale of the State administration and to create panic among the population was launched both inside and outside the State.

4. On 18th September 1947, the Pakistan Government protested to the Government of India against sending troops to the borders of Junagadh and warned them that any encroachment on Junagadh territory would amount to hostile act against Pakistan. In reply, the Government of India assured the Government of Pakistan that information about large troops concentration around Junagadh was not correct. Though it was admitted that they had sent “a small force of troops” as a counter measure to “large scale military preparations of Junagadh supply of arms and ammunition to its Muslim subjects”. Needless to say that there was no truth whatsoever in these allegations as latter events have proved to the world.

Meanwhile, apparently in order to gain some semblance of justification for an otherwise completely untenable case, the Government of India persuaded certain feudatory chiefs and Jagirdars within the state of Junagadh to sign Instruments of Accession with the Dominion of India, in spite of the fact that they had not independent status to do so and their accession followed automatically that of Junagadh whose vessels they were. These comprised a number of mulgires and Jagirdars of Babariawad, who are Hindus, and the chief of Mangrol, who is a Muslim but who had some old standing grievance against the Nawab of Junagadh. In the first case accession was obtained by promises of future independence and in the later by both promises and threats. The fact that the Sheikh of Mangrol renounced his accession within an hour or two of his signature and before the instrument had been signed by the Governor-General of India in token of his acceptance, was totally ignored.

5. Another line of attack was adopted by setting up the so-called “Provisional Government” with headquarters first at Bombay and later at Rajkot, which claimed the right to liberate the so-called oppressed non-Muslim population of the Junagadh state. To Pakistan’s protests in this connection the Government of India at first gave most unsatisfactory and evasive replies and subsequently gave no reply at all.

6. In correspondence which passed between the two dominions in the last week of September 1947, the Government of India’s attitude remained un-helpful, though, for technical reasons, they expressed their view that the only solution to the dispute was holding a referendum or plebiscite of the population under the supervision of the Government of India and the Junagadh state. About this time at a meeting between the Prime Ministers of the two dominions suggestions were made that the whole affair might be settled by discussion. Although legally and constitutionally the accession of Junagadh to Pakistan was unexceptionable, in an endeavour to help find a peaceful solution, Pakistan Government readily expressed its willingness to take such a discussion and even offered to discuss conditions and circumstances in which a plebiscite or referendum should be held in any state or states. It was, however, pointed out that unless troops were withdrawn by Government of India and aggressive attitude abandoned, no useful purpose could be served by a discussion. This the Government of India never clearly agreed to do and in fact continued to bring in more troops.

7. Meanwhile the so-called ‘Provisisonal Government’ began operating extensively with a large trained body of men using automatic and modern weapons including armoured cars. Among other unlawful activities this force occupied Junagadh House at Rajkot, the headquarters of the Indian Regional Commissioner of the states Ministry, and hoisted the Congress flag over it. Pakistan lodged a strong protest to India in regard to these incidents and once again pointed that unless the warlike activities were stopped no useful discussion could take place. In reply to this protest the Government of India merely reiterated their objections to the accession of Junagadh of Pakistan and instead of curbing the activities of the ‘Provisional Government’ themselves proceeded to occupy Sardargarh and Bantve. The climax was reached when Indian dominion troops entered the small state and Manavadar, occupied the palace, shot dead a palace guard, took the Chief in custody and removed him to an unknown destination. No explanation of why a state which had acceded to Pakistan was occupied and taken under management has been forthcoming from the government of India, in spite of protests. Indeed, shortly afterwards and while negotiations were still going on regarding the possibility of a peaceful settlement, Government of India sent troops to occupy Babariawad and Mangrol, in spite of clear undertaking that this will not be done.

8. Not content with this, active support was given to the so-called ‘Provisisonal Government’ in their depredations which became extensive about this time. They began seizing villages of Junagadh state and in the process shot dead several policemen of the state with the modern arms they possessed. Evidence received from unimpeachable sources clearly proves that a majority of the armed members of the so-called ‘Azad Fauj’ were soldiers of India’s regular armed forces of which a whole brigade was stationed in Kathiawar with the sole object of breaking the resistance of the state.
9. This has now been achieved. According to reports, on the 7th November 1947, a force of 20,000 of the so-called ‘Azad Fauj’ equipped with tanks, armoured cars and other modern weapons, marched on to Junagadh and gave an ultimatum to the administration to surrender. The Dewan of Junagadh had no alternative before him in the matter against such odds and decided to hand over the administration to the Indian Union temporarily pending honourable settlement of issues involved. The Government of India have readily accepted the invitation and have declared that they have done so “in order to avoid disorder and resulting chaos”. They have invited Pakistan to attend a conference “with a representative of the Nawab of Junagadh in order to discuss the question of referendum or plebiscite and allied matters affecting Junagadh”.

10. It is quite clear that if the Government of India had really meant to assist the state without any ulterior motive, they could have easily stopped the illegal activities of the so-called ‘Provisional Government’ forces which were throughout using either Indian territory or territory of states having acceded to India for their operations against Junagadh. The Government of India’s throughout have been directed towards forcing the state to renounce its accession to Pakistan and all kinds of weapons have been used by them to achieve this end. Conditions were carefully and deliberately created in and around Junagadh state which made it impossible to run the administration. The Pakistan government were fully aware of what was coming, but in their extreme anxiety to give no possible excuse to the government of India for invasion, which they had obviously been looking for, they advised the state authorities to act with the utmost caution and themselves refrained from sending a single soldier to Junagadh. All that they did was to send seven thousand tons of food-grains to feed the starving population of Junagadh and Manavadar despite the occupation of the latter by Indian forces. It is regretted, however, that the restraint, with which the Pakistan and Junagadh state governments have acted has not been appreciated.

11. It has been made quite clear to the Government of India that the Pakistan Government have no intention of recognizing the military coup d’etat performed by the Indian dominion and cannot regard the occupation as anything but an unwarranted violation of Pakistan territory. Neither the Dewan nor, for that matter, the Ruler himself has any authority to negotiate any settlement, temporary or permanent, with the Indian dominion. With regard to Government of India’s suggestion to hold a conference, the Pakistan Government considers that without an immediate withdrawal of Indian troops, reinstatement of Nawab’s administration and restoration by India of normal conditions in and around borders of Junagadh including stoppage of activities of the so-called ‘Provisional Government’ the proposed conference would be meaningless.

For Gopalaswami Ayyangar (Leader of the Indian Delegation) from Jawaharlal Nehru.

Your telegram 58/S dated January 31st. Papers relating to paragraph 2 (b), item 4 of para 3 of document II and para 12 of document III are being forwarded to you separately.

2. Following are answers seriatim to points raised by you regarding Pakistan’s allegations*:-

(i) Our troops entered Junagadh and Mangrol. Mangrol has acceded to the Dominion of India and signed the Instrument of Accession. Pakistan may argue either that Mangrol being a feudatory of Junagadh had no right to accede separately or alternatively that the accession of Mangrol was secured by coercion. The reply to these arguments would be, first that Mangrol was always treated as a separate entity and never recognized the suzerainty of Junagadh. Secondly, whatever arrangement existed between Mangrol and Junagadh was entirely the product of Paramountcy and lapsed with the lapse of Paramountcy. The Sheikh of Mangrol himself came to Rajkot and voluntarily handed over his Instrument of Accession to the Secretary, Ministry of States. Entry of our troops into Junagadh was on an invitation by the Dewan, who had obtained Ruler’s consent, and by Executive Council of Junagadh State supported by representative public opinion. Troops were led into Junagadh by Harvey Jones, Senior Member of the State Council and Member-in-charge of the State forces. Junagadh was taken over without firing a shot. Our troops are still in Junagadh and Mangrol. Manavadar, Sardargarh (including Sultanabad) and Bantva were petty States attached to Junagadh under the attachment scheme of the late Political Department and on the laps of Paramountcy the Attachment Scheme also lapsed. This decision was announced on 13th August 1947 when India was still undivided. The administration of these States had however completely broken down and consequently management of the States was taken over by the Government of India. Our troops never entered these States.

(ii) It is not correct that Rulers of these states have been kept in detention. The Nawab of Junagadh and Chiefs of Bantva and Sardargarh left their States and have gone to other places of their free will. The Khan of Manavadar and the Sheikh of Mangrol are staying at Jamnagar and Porbandar respectively in State palaces and treated with all courtesy as guests of the Rulers of Jamnagar and Porbandar. Neither Ruler has expressed any dissatisfaction with the arrangements made for them. It is entirely untrue to suggest that these Rulers have been subjected to any pressure to wean them from Pakistan. On the other hand Pakistan tried to coerce Mangrol to renounce his accession to India, judging from statements made by him from time to time. The Nawab of Kurwai, the maternal uncle of the Sheikh of Mangrol, spent several days with him at Porbandar.

(iii) The present administration of Junagadh having been voluntarily and lawfully made over to the Government of India is being carried on by the Regional Commissioner assisted by an Administrator. The Nawab of Junagadh and his duly constituted Council after consulting public leaders handed over the administration of the state to the Government of India as they were unable to maintain law and order. Sir Shah Nawaz Bhutto’s letter of 8th November handing over the administration was delivered personally by Harvey Jones, Senior Member of the State Council to our Regional Commissioner. Dewan’s letter itself admits that the administration of the State at the time the letter was written had completely disintegrated. The Government of India entered Junagadh in response to importunities of the State administration and to put an end to lawlessness in Junagadh in the midst of territories of States which had acceded to India. The Nawab has not been deposed but removed himself to, and is staying of his own free will at Karachi. Technically and formally the Junagadh administration is carried on in the name and on behalf of the Nawab. It may be pointed out that the State administration with the full connivance and knowledge of Pakistan approached the Regional Commissioner for States of Rajkot (the Government of India) to take over complete charge of the administration. The action of the Government of India was thus not an act of aggression against Pakistan. [Moreover, the proviso to Section 7(1) of the Indian Independence Act continues, all existing agreements between inter alia Junagadh and the Government of India relating to customs, transit and communications, posts and telegraphs and other like matters, which shows that Junagadh was intimately bound up with India.]

(iv) Pakistan has been informed from the beginning of our intention to hold and abide by a plebiscite in Junagadh. The plebiscite is due to be held in the third week of February. A press communiqué in this respect was issued on the 15th January 1948. Date of plebiscite has not been specially notified to Pakistan.
Referendum is being held by a senior judicial officer, Mr. Nagarkar, who is neither a Hindu nor a Muslim. He is a Brahmo. It is quite unnecessary to hold the plebiscite under the authority of the United Nations but if the United Nations and Pakistan press for this and if the United Nations think it desirable it may straightaway send one or two observers to report on the arrangements made for the holding of and the actual conduct of the referendum. Under no repeat no circumstances should we agree to postponement of the plebiscite to enable United Nations Organisation and Pakistan to send their observers. Subject to this we may not repeat not raise any serious objection to such a proposal.

3. In all these areas the present situation regarding law and order is being maintained and complete protection is available to all sections and communities and life is normal. In a statement issued on 19th January 1948 Muslim leaders of Kathiawar had themselves expressed satisfaction with the administration.

No. 76-S. 7th February, 1948.
For Jawaharlal Nehru, from Gopalaswami Ayyangar.

Towards the end of our informal conference today February 6th Zafrullah Khan mentioned urgency of some action consistent in regard to Junagadh and suggested that I might communicate with my government and ask them to postpone taking of proposed plebiscite in Junagadh until a settlement has been arrived at on Pakistan's counter claims about that State. I said that I would do so and added that I personally saw no repeat no difficulty in Government of India's agreeing to this postponement. On return from conference I saw your telegram Primin-745, dated February 5th in which you say that under no circumstances should we agree to postponement of plebiscite. We think that postponement* should be agreed to as the matter is in effect sub-judice before Security Council.

* In reply Mr. Ayyangar was informed on February 10 that the announcement of the plebiscite had been made in January with full publicity and the plebiscite had in fact started with the process continuing for two or three weeks and hence it was “impossible to stop the process now”. Adding a caveat, the Prime Minister however informed him that: “If you consider this necessary, you can say that, should circumstances justify this, Government of India would be prepared to have another plebiscite under suitable auspices.” On 19th February V.P. Menon, Secretary, Ministry of Stats informed Mr. Ayyangar that Sardar Patel did not agree with the suggestion made by the Indian Delegation to the Ministry of External Affairs that the results of the plebiscite in Junagadh, (which had overwhelmingly in favour of the accession of the State to India), be withheld.

The results of the vote were:

Similarly on February 5, the Indian delegation had been informed: “The Nawab has not been deposed but removed himself to, and is staying of his own free will at Karachi. Technically and formally the Junagadh administration is carried on in the name and on behalf of the Nawab.” During the course of discussions at the United Nations between leader of Pakistani delegation Zafrullah Khan and the leader of the Indian delegation Vellodi the question of Junagadh came up for discussion on 23rd April 1948, and Zafrullah suggested Vellodi that in their proposed joint meeting with the President of the Security Council the next day they should apart from other matters, discuss conditions precedent to holding of a plebiscite in Junagadh and the question of restoration of the Nawab to his position back in the State. Vellodi therefore sought instructions from the Ministry of External Affairs on these points. The Ministry after consultations with the Ministry of States informed Vellodi that New Delhi had “agreed to a further plebiscite in Junagadh in spite of the fact that in the last plebiscite there was an overwhelming majority in favour of accession to the Indian Dominion”, and “as far the Nawab’s return to the State, you may point out that he fled from the State taking with him all the realizable assets of the State. We have no (repeat no) doubt that if he returns to the State now there will be a major communal flare-up in the State and he will not be tolerated for twenty-four hours.”

Mr. Vellodi was accordingly advised not to give in on the question of Nawab’s return to Junagadh. On the question of removal of Indian troops in Junagadh, which Zafrullah also had suggested, the Indian representative was told that India had only a small detachment of no more than a couple of companies there and their presence will not affect the plebiscite in the slightest degree. “On the contrary it is necessary to retain them somewhere in the State for purpose of law and order,” was New Delhi’s advice to Vellodi and therefore not to give in this point too.

On April 26, 1948 the Leader of the Indian delegation in a letter to the Security Council inter alia said the following on Junagadh:

2. I have stated before the Security Council that, in the view of the Government of India, the Security Council would be well advised in awaiting the reactions of the two governments to the resolution passed by the Council on the Jammu-Kashmir question before it proceeds further with the consideration of the question relating to Junagadh. The reasons for this are as follows: in the first place, in both cases the matter in dispute is the question of the accession. In both cases the Government of India have agreed that this question should be decided by the verdict of the people of the State as expressed in plebiscite. In the case of Kashmir, the plebiscite has yet to be held; in the case of Junagadh, a plebiscite has been held resulting in the large majority of the people voting for accession to India. India has however agreed that if the Security Council desires that a fresh plebiscite should be held this may be done at a suitable opportunity and under suitable auspices, international or otherwise. In regard to Kashmir the Security Council has, in its resolution of 19th April, made certain concrete proposals which have as their aim the holding, in due course, of a fair and impartial plebiscite in Kashmir, neither India nor Pakistan has yet accepted these proposals nor acquiesced in them. It is reasonable to expect that the plan that is finally approved for Kashmir will mutatis mutandis be applied to Junagadh. I therefore suggested what is indeed my government's view-that you should postpone the further consideration of the Junagadh question until the Security Council receive the reactions of the two governments to the proposals relating to Kashmir.

3. There is another aspect of this problem which is, if anything, more important. I feel sure you will agree that having made certain concrete proposals regarding Kashmir, the Security Council should do nothing that might impair their success. The situation is still very uncertain. Such reports as one has received so far from India do not fill one with great optimism regarding the fate of the resolution. I enclose copies of two newspaper reports one appearing in the New York Times of 25th April, and the other in the Manchester Guardian of 24th April, neither of which, you will observe, are encouraging. I need not emphasize that in the circumstances, the Security Council should exercise the utmost caution in taking any measures that might prejudice a successful solution of the Kashmir question.

4. From a purely practical point of view also it seems prudent to defer the consideration of the Junagadh question. Let us assume, for the sake of argument, that India expresses her inability to cooperate with the Security Council or with the Commission in implementing the terms of the Council's resolution on the Kashmir question. In that event is there any doubt that, even if in the meantime you had proceeded, formally or informally, to deal with Junagadh, you would immediately put aside this question and revert to the further consideration of the Kashmir question? What then is the practical advantage of undertaking immediately, formal or informal discussions regarding Junagadh?

5. Even on merits there is nothing that demands that an immediate or urgent consideration of Junagadh. The present situation in that State offers no threat to international peace or security. There is no fighting in the State. Even Pakistan has conceded that a fresh plebiscite when it is held will yield the same results as the last one.

6. It is for these reasons, and with a desire to facilitate, rather than to retard, the dispatch of business in the Security Council, and to avoid unnecessary and fruitless labour so far as you and members of the Council are concerned, that I suggested on Friday, and again on Saturday, that this question of Junagadh might very well wait until you have received the reactions of the Government of India and the Government of Pakistan to the resolution passed by the Council in respect of the Jammu and Kashmir question.
INDIA-PAKISTAN RELATIONS

SECTION - VI

KASHMIR
2015. Telegram, dated 4th September 1947, sent by Prime Minister, Kashmir, to Prime Minister, West Punjab, Lahore.

Nearly 400 armed Sattis Muslims residents mainly of Kahuta Tehsil, Rawalpindi District, reliably reported infiltrating fully armed into the State over river Jhelum eleven miles east of Kahuta. Ostensibly their purpose is to loot and attack minority communities in the State. His Highness' Government consider this encroachment highly detrimental to maintenance of peaceful relations unless prompt action is taken to force these people back and to prevent further encroachments of this nature. His Highness' Government think that these people are probably unaware of the equal treatment being accorded to all State subjects and of actual help, protection and guarantee of safe passage through the State being extended at the moment to countless Muslim refugees coming over from Shakargarh on their way to West Punjab. Grateful if the above is also brought home to the people of the tract to which intruders belong. Immediate action essential. Intimation of action taken may kindly be given*.

* The telegram was provoked by a report from Chief of Staff of J & K State Forces Major General Scott on September 4 that "a band of up to 400 armed Sattis-Muslim residents mainly in Kahuta tehsil of Rawalpindi District were infiltrating into the State over the river Jhelum from Pakistan in the area of Owen (map reference sheet 43/G/10-649508) eleven miles east of Kahuta. Their purpose is looting and attacking minority communities in the State. Could the Government of Pakistan be asked by urgent telegram to take action to force return of these raiders to the west bank Jhelum river and to prevent further incursions into the State from the Rawalpindi and Hazara Districts."

On September 6 the Deputy Commissioner of Rawalpindi in reply said that "I have personally visited Kahuta and have made enquiries from officials of Gujarkhan Tehsil. Your information completely wrong. No infiltration has been seen by any of my officers or village officials anywhere at various points. I do not expect any trouble of any kind. I shall be glad to take action if you are able to furnish anything specific at any time." But the Srinagar replied back the same day told the D.C. Rawalpindi that: "Hope you would agree infiltration is effected more by secret movement than openly and people concerned could only be detected in the territory in which they have infiltrated for operation by officers specially deputed to find them out. Information given to you was based on the observation of responsible military officers."

The Government of Jammu and Kashmir in a communiqué says that the report published in a section of the Press that Kashmir State had decided to join the Indian Union is "unauthentic".

The communiqué adds: The position conveyed in a Press Communiqué issued on August 12th that standstill agreements with both Dominions will be entered into holds good.

2017. Letter from Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru to Deputy Prime Minister Sardar Patel.

New Delhi, September 27, 1947.

I am writing to you about Kashmir. I met Mahajan (Mehr Chand Mahajan, Prime Minister of Jammu and Kashmir) before he went there and had a talk with him. I felt that his approach might not be wholly successful.

2. It is obvious to me from the many reports I have received that the situation there is a dangerous and deteriorating one. The Muslim League in the Punjab and the N.W.F.P. are making preparations to enter Kashmir in considerable numbers. The approach of winter is going to cut off Kashmir from the rest of India. The only normal route can hardly be used during winter and air traffic is also suspended. Therefore it is important that something should be done before these winter conditions set in, this means; practically by the end of October or, at the latest, the beginning of November, Indeed, air traffic will be difficult even before that.

3. I understand that the Pakistan strategy is to infiltrate into Kashmir now and to take some big action as soon as Kashmir is more or less isolated because of the coming winter.

4. Whether this strategy succeeds or not depends upon the forces opposed to it. I rather doubt if the Maharaja and his State forces can meet the situation by themselves and without some popular help. They will be isolated from the rest of India and if their own people go against them, it will be very difficult to meet the situation. Obviously the only major group that can side with them is the National Conference under Sheikh Abdullah’s leadership. If by any chance that is hostile or even passive, then the Maharaja and his Government become isolated and the Pakistani people will have a relatively free field.

5. It becomes important, therefore, that the Maharaja should make friends with the National Conference so that there might be this popular support against Pakistan. Indeed, it seems to me that there is no other course open to the Maharaja but this: to release Sheikh Abdullah and the National Conference Leaders, to make a friendly approach to them, seek their co-operation and make them feel that this is really meant and then to declare adhesion to the Indian Union. Once the State accedes to India, it will become very difficult for Pakistan to invade it officially or unofficially without coming into conflict with the Indian Union. If, however, there is delay in this accession, then Pakistan will go ahead without much fear of consequences, specially when the winter isolates Kashmir.

6. It seems to me urgently necessary, therefore, that the accession to the Indian Union should taken place early. It is equally clear to me that this can only take place with some measure of success after there is peace between the Maharaja and the National Conference and they co-operate together to meet the situation. This is not an easy task; but it can be done chiefly because Abdullah is very anxious to keep out of Pakistan and relies upon us a great deal for advice. At the same time, he cannot carry his people with him unless he has something definite to place before them. What this can be in the circumstances I cannot define precisely at the present moment. But the main thing is that the Maharaja should try to gain the goodwill and co-operation of Abdullah. This is the belief also of various minorities in Kashmir who have no other support to lean upon. I do not think it is possible for the Maharaja to function for long if no major section of the population supports him. It would be a tragedy if the National Conference remains passive owing to frustration and lack of opportunity.

7. Nobody can guarantee what will happen in this complicated situation. Sheikh Abdullah was sentenced in May 1946 to nine years imprisonment for having led the “Quit Kashmir” campaign against the Maharaja. He was released on 29 Sept. 1947. But the course I have suggested seems to me the wisest one and the most likely to produce results. But it is important that there should be no delay. The time element cannot be forgotten and delay itself may cut us off completely from Kashmir owing to the approach of winter.

8. I tried to explain much of this to Mahajan. But I fear he only partly appreciated what I said. I do not know what advice you gave to him. Your advice will naturally go a long way either to the Maharaja or to Mahajan.

9. At the present moment Sheikh Abdullah and his colleagues are still in prison. It seems to me very injurious to future developments. Unfortunately the Maharaja cannot make up his mind easily.

10. I hope you will be able to take some action in this matter to force the pace and to turn events in the right direction. We have definitely a great asset in the National Conference provided it is properly handled. It would be a pity to lose this. Sheikh Abdullah has repeatedly given assurances of wishing to co-operate and of being opposed to Pakistan; also to abide by my advice.

11. I would again add that time is of the essence of the business and things must be done in a way so as to bring about the accession of Kashmir to the Indian Union as rapidly as possible with the co-operation of Sheikh Abdullah.

Yours sincerely,
Jawahar Lal Nehru

2018. Telegram from Pakistan Ministry of Foreign Affairs to Prime Minister of Kashmir.
Karachi, October 2, 1947.

We are willing to do everything we can and are indeed taking steps to see that Kashmir is supplied with essential commodities of which it is in need. It must however be appreciated that certain difficulties stand in our way. Drivers of lorries are for instance, reluctant to carry supplies between Rawalpindi and Kohala and it is impossible for us to spare troops for this escort. The Government of Pakistan are seriously concerned about reports reaching them to the effect that armed Sikhs are infiltrating into Kashmir State. We would once again impress upon you the need for representatives of Governments of Pakistan and Kashmir to meet and consider the question of supplies, the infiltration of these armed Sikhs, and other outstanding questions, we leave it to you to suggest the venue of this meeting.

This was in reply to the State Government SOS to the Pakistan Government for urgent supplies since the main route to Srinagar was via Rawalpindi from where traditionally supplies had been made to the State until now. In reply sent on 3rd October the Kashmir government “emphatically” denied reports of Sikh infiltrators and repeated that it was the armed people from Rawalpindi, Jhelum and Sialkot who were raiding the State.

Instead of speeding supplies, the Pakistan government informed the State Government that it was sending one Major Shah, Joint Secretary from the Ministry of Foreign Affairs "to discuss the whole question with a view to arriving at satisfactory solution".

On the 8th October the State Government replied to Pakistan Government and said since it was "extremely busy in dealing with disturbances caused by armed people infiltrating unchecked from Pakistan Dominion portion of Hazara and Murree into Poonch" it would discuss matters with General Shah "when this trouble is controlled," and asking Pakistan to "keep your people in check if so desired. This Government will appreciate if this is done."

On the 7th October the Kashmir Government sent a telegram to the British Prime Minister wherein it described the State government as the "Government of Jammu and Kashmir (India)". It complained that the essential supplies had been held up by Pakistan Government causing great hardship to the people of the State. It said:

"As the requirements decreased, the virulence of the Pakistan controlled press and radio increased, not only giving to the world false and malicious news but even allowing threats of invasion from its own people with a view to coerce the State to decide in favour of joining the Pakistan Dominion." The telegram concluded: "As a result of obvious connivance of the Pakistan Government the whole of the border from Gurdaspur side up to Gilgit is threatened with invasion which has actually begun in Poonch. It is requested that the Dominion of Pakistan may be advised to deal fairly with Jammu and Kashmir State and adopt a course of conduct which may be consistent with the good name and prestige of the Commonwealth of which it claims to be a member. As message if sent from Srinagar not likely to reach through Pakistan it is being cabled from Delhi."

On October 19th the Pakistan Government in a telegram accused the Kashmir Government of putting "forward vague allegations of infiltrating people of Pakistan in Kashmir and have accused the border people of manufacturing bad relations."

"Emphatically and categorically denying the allegations and accusations" the Pakistan Government accused the Kashmir Government of "mounting evidence of ruthless suppression of Muslims in Kashmir State and of raids into Pakistani territory by armed Dogra gangs and non-Muslim refugees from Punjab. Accusing the State Government of wanting to obtain outside assistance presumably from India, it went on to suggest and threaten that "the only object of this intervention by an outside power secured by you would be to complete the process of suppressing the Muslims to enable you to join the Indian Dominion as coup d'etat against the declared and well-known will of the Mussalmans and others who from 85 percent of the population of your State. We must earnestly draw your attention to the fact that if this policy is not changed and the preparations and the measures that you are now taking in implementing this policy are not stopped the gravest consequences will follow for which you alone will be held responsible."

When the State government tried to appeal to the Pakistan Governor General Jinnah against the highhanded attitude of the Pakistan government Jinnah in his reply dated 20th October accused the Maharaja of trying to "seek an opportunity to join the Indian Dominion as a coup de' etat by securing the intervention and assistance of that Dominion. This policy is naturally creating deep resentment and grave apprehension among your subjects 85 percent of whom are Muslims. The proposal made by my Government for a meeting with your accredited representative is now an urgent necessity."

New Delhi, October 25, 1947.

A grave situation has developed in the State of Kashmir. Large numbers of Afridis and other tribesmen from the Frontiers have invaded State territory, occupied several towns and massacred large numbers of non-Muslims. According to our information, tribesmen have been equipped with motor transport and also with automatic weapons and have passed through Pakistan territory. Latest news is that the invaders are proceeding up the Jhelum valley road towards the valley of Kashmir.

2. We have received urgent appeal for assistance from the Kashmir Government. We would be disposed to give favourable consideration to such request from any friendly State. Kashmir's northern frontiers, as you are aware, run in common with those of three countries, Afghanistan, the U.S.S.R. and China. Security of Kashmir, which must depend upon its internal tranquility and existence of stable government, is vital to security of India, especially since part of southern boundary of Kashmir and that of India are common. Helping Kashmir, therefore, is an obligation of national interest to India. We are giving urgent consideration to the question as to what assistance we can give to the State to defend itself.

3. I should like to make it clear that question of aiding Kashmir in this emergency is not designed in any way to influence the State to accede to India. Our view which we have repeatedly made public is that the question of accession in any disputed territory of State must be decided in accordance with wishes of the people and we adhere to this view. It is quite clear, however, that no free expression of the will of the people of Kashmir is possible if external aggression succeeds in imperiling the integrity of its territory.

4. I have thought it desirable to inform you of the situation because of its threat of international complications.

New Delhi, October, 27, 1947.

It has been alleged that plans were made for sending Indian forces to Kashmir at some date before 22nd October, on which day the raid on that State from the direction of Abbottabad began.

2. The following is a true time-table of events, as regard decisions taken, plans made, orders given and movements started in this matter:

(1) On 24th October the C-in-C, Indian army, received information that tribesmen had seized Muzaffarabad. This was the first indication of the raid.

(2) Prior to this date, no plans of any sort for sending Indian forces into Kashmir had been formulated or even considered.

(3) On the morning of 25th October, we were directed to examine and prepare plans for sending troops to Kashmir by air and road, in case this should be necessary to stop tribal incursions. This was the first direction which we received on this subject. No steps had been taken, prior to the meeting, to examine or prepare such plans.

(4) On the afternoon of 25th October, we sent one staff officer of each, the Indian Army and the R.I.A.F., by air to Srinagar. There they saw officers of the Kashmir State forces. This was the first contact between officers of our Headquarters and officers of the Kashmir State forces on the subject of sending Indian troops to Kashmir.

(5) On the afternoon of the 25th October, we also issued orders to an infantry battalion to prepare itself to be flown at short notice to Srinagar, in the event of the Government of India deciding to accept the accession of Kashmir and send help.

(6) On the morning of 26th October the staff officers mentioned in Subparagraph (4) above, returned from Srinagar and reported on their meetings with officers of the Kashmir State forces.

(7) On the afternoon of 26th October we finalized our Plans for the dispatch by air troops to Kashmir.

(8) At the first light on the morning of 27th October, with Kashmir's Instrument of Accession signed, the movement by air of Indian forces to Kashmir began.

2. No plans were made for sending these forces, nor were such plans even considered, before 25th October, three days after the tribal incursions began.

2021. Message from the British Prime Minister C. R. Attlee to Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru.

I am most grateful to you for your message about the situation in Kashmir. We have received some reports but we have no confirmation of the scale and importance of any incursions which there may have been and I am conscious that in the recent past some rumours have proved to be much exaggerated.

2. The future relations of this State with Pakistan and India have obviously and from the first presented a problem of difficulty, the merits of which I do not think it is incumbent on me to discuss and I understand from your message that this problem is not at the moment uppermost in your mind. But I am clear as you say that the use of armed forces is not the right way to resolve these difficulties.

3. You must of course give serious consideration to an appeal from the ruler of the State but I do beg of you not to let your answer to this appeal the form of armed intervention by the forces of India.

4. I cannot conceive that at best this could result in anything but the most grave aggravation of communal discord not only in Kashmir but elsewhere. Further it seems unlikely that the Pakistan Government or indeed any Government could resist the temptation to intervene also with its own forces if you intervene with yours. This could lead only to open military conflict between the forces of the two Dominions resulting in incalculable tragedy. I am informing the Pakistan Prime Minister briefly of the purport of your message to me and of this reply and I am also begging his Government to do their utmost to prevent the incursion into Kashmir of armed persons from outside.

5. Restoration of order in Kashmir is of course important from every point of view and as you say it has an international aspect but I do not regard this aspect as so serious as to warrant taking such grave risks in the attempt to quiet immediately the present troubles.

6. I also suggest for your consideration as I am suggesting to Prime Minister of Pakistan that it might be most useful step towards settlement of difficult question of Kashmir's future if it would be discussed by you, Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan and Maharaja of Kashmir at a meeting* to be held as soon as possible at some suitable place.

* The next day on October 28 Nehru sent a cable to Liaquat Ali Khan saying: "I would welcome an early opportunity of meeting you and discussing various problems that have arisen, more specially developments in Kashmir about which I have informed you. I earnestly hope that there will be cooperation between Pakistan and India in stopping

I have received your telegrams including that of 28th October to which I reply. The position is that Sikh attacks on Muslims in East Punjab in August greatly inflamed feeling throughout Pakistan and it was only with greatest difficulty that Pathan tribes were pre-vented from entering West Punjab to take revenge on Hindus, and Sikhs. Muslims in Poonch were attacked and those in Jammu massacred by mobs led by Kashmir State Forces and when it was evident that there was to be a repetition in Kashmir of that in East Punjab it became impossible wholly to prevent tribes from entering that State without using troops which would have created a situation on frontier that might well have got out of control.

Your recent action of sending troops to Kashmir on pretext of accession has made things infinitely worse. The whole of the frontier is stirring and feeling of resentment among tribes is intense. The responsibility for what is happening is entirely yours. There was no trouble in Poonch or Jammu till State troops started killing Muslims. All along Kashmir Government has been in close touch with you. At the same time they ignored or refused our offers of friendly discussion. On 2nd October I suggested that both Pakistan and Kashmir should appoint representatives to discuss supplies to Kashmir and mutual allegations of border raids. The Prime Minister, Kashmir, replied that he was too busy. When in spite of this we sent Shah, Joint Secretary, Ministry of Foreign Affairs, and States to Kashmir the Prime Minister refused to discuss with him. On 15th October Prime Minister, Kashmir, threatened that unless we agreed to an raids and putting down disorder and then leaving choice about future to people of Kashmir. I am glad to learn that you are likely to visit Delhi for Joint Defence Council meeting soon."

In a separate telegram same day, Nehru gave details of the latest developments in Kashmir to Attlee and said that though it was initially considered not to send armed units to Kashmir but only make available arms to the State, later developments "made it clear that, unless we send troops immediately, complete disaster would overtake Kashmir with terrible consequences all over India." Nehru described Indian military intervention as only "defensive in aim and scope, in no way affecting any future decision about accession that might be taken by the people of Kashmir ultimately." Justifying Indian intervention he said meanwhile "we cannot desert the Ruler and people of friendly State who are in peril." He concluded by assuring the British Prime Minister that "We are always ready to discuss any issue in dispute with representatives of Pakistan. We have laid down the principle that accession of every State, whether Junagadh or Kashmir or Hyderabad, should depend on ascertained wishes of the people concerned." P.M expressed satisfaction that Attlee had also asked the Pakistan Government "to do their utmost to prevent the incursion into Kashmir of armed persons from outside", a task in which India was willing to cooperate.
impartial enquiry into what was happening he would ask for assistance to withstand aggression on his borders. We immediately agreed to an impartial enquiry since when no more has been heard from Kashmir of this proposal.

The Pathan raid on Kashmir did not start till 22nd October. It is quite clear therefore that Kashmiri’s plan of asking for Indian troops—and it could hardly have been unilateral—was formed quite independently of this raid and all evidence and action taken shows it was pre-arranged. It would seem rather to have been made after failure of their troops to suppress people of Poonch and in anticipation of reaction which they expected to their massacre of Moselems in Jammu.

I, in my turn appeal, appeal to you to stop the Jammu killings which continue. Yesterday West Punjab was again invaded by an armed mob who after a fight with villagers retreated leaving two Gurkha soldiers in uniform dead behind them. As long as this sort of thing continues passions are bound to become further inflamed.

2023. Press Communiqué issued by the Pakistan Army Headquarters denying deployment of Pakistan Army in Kashmir.

Rawalpindi, October 30, 1947.

“Rumours have been circulated that troops of the Pakistan Army are being deployed within the borders of Kashmir. These rumours are entirely untrue. No Pakistan troops have been used in Kashmir.”

Lahore, October 30, 1947.

The Secretary-General, Pakistan Government, in a statement to the press tonight, characterized as "entirely untrue" the statement of Mr. Mehrchand Mahajan, Prime Minister of Kashmir, that "an appeal was made to the Governor-General of Pakistan for intervention, but without success."

The Secretary-General said: "As far back as September, the Quaid-i-Azam had suggested to His Highness the Maharaja that he would like to go to Kashmir about the middle of September hoping that he might have a friendly talk with the Maharaja, but that was emphatically turned down on the ground that it was highly undesirable.

When certain allegations and complaints were made by the Kashmir Government to the Prime Minister of Pakistan on October 2, the Prime Minister of Pakistan suggested to the Prime Minister of Kashmir that the matter should be discussed by the representatives of the two Governments. The reply given by the Prime Minister of Kashmir was that at the moment he was too busy. Nevertheless the Pakistan Government sent a representative of their Ministry of Foreign Affairs and States to Srinagar to discuss these matters with the state authorities. The Prime Minister of Kashmir refused to hold discussions with him and he had to return.

The Secretary-General added: "On accession His Highness also mentioned the fact that although he had asked both Dominions to come to a Stand Still Agreement with his State, only Pakistan had done so". He alleged that Pakistan had not kept that agreement.

The Government of Pakistan cannot accept the version of the circumstances in which Kashmir acceded to the Indian Union. The Government of Pakistan have consistently and repeatedly tried to reach a better understanding with Kashmir to prevent friction between the two States. His Highness Government have ignored or rejected all these approaches. On October 2 the Prime Minister of Pakistan suggested to the Prime Minister of Kashmir that all questions outstanding between the two States, including that of supplies under the Stand Still agreement and mutual accusations of border raids, should be discussed by representatives of the two governments. The Prime Minister of Kashmir replied that at the moment he was too busy to discuss these matters. Nevertheless the Pakistan Government sent a representative of their Ministry of Foreign Affairs to Srinagar to discuss these matters with the State.

The Prime Minister, however, refused to hold discussions with him and he had to return. On October 15, the Prime Minister of Kashmir in a telegram to the Prime Minister of Pakistan threatened that unless Pakistan agreed to an impartial inquiry into matters in dispute between the two States in order to restore cordial relations, he would be compelled to ask for outside assistance to withstand the aggression and unfriendly acts of Pakistan people on his border. The Prime Minister of Pakistan at once accepted the proposal for an impartial inquiry, and asked the Prime Minister of Kashmir to nominate a representative for this purpose. The Government of Kashmir have since then made no further reference to this matter. On October 18, without waiting for a reply to his previous telegram the Prime Minister of Kashmir in a communication to the Governor General of Pakistan repeated his charges against Pakistan and concluded by saying that he wished to make it plain that the attitude of the Government of Pakistan could be tolerated no longer, and expressed the hope that the Governor-General would agree that he was justified in asking for “friendly assistance” to oppose trespass on the “fundamental rights of the State on October 20.”

The Governor General replied, calling attention to the repeated attempts of Pakistan to improve its relations with Kashmir and asking the Prime Minister of Kashmir to come to Karachi and talk things over with him. No reply has so far been sent to this request.

The Governor-General also pointed out that the threat to call outside help amounted almost to an ultimatum and showed that the real aim of the Kashmir Government’s policy was to seek an opportunity to join the India Union by means of a ‘coup d’état.’

“In the opinion of the Government of Pakistan, the course of these negotiations clearly show that the Kashmir Government had never any intention of maintaining relations with Pakistan and that at any rate as early as October 15, they had made up their mind to call in outside assistance, presumably after ascertaining the attitude of the Government of India by secret negotiations which had been going on for weeks”.

The correspondence between the two Governments closed with the Governor-General’s telegram of October 26, offering to discuss matters with the Prime Minister of Kashmir, and the Pathan raid into Kashmir occurred on October 22. The Government of Pakistan cannot, therefore, accept His Highness’ version that this raid was the reason for His Highness’ request for the help of Indian troops in return for his accession. The Government of Pakistan also note that India troops arrived in Kashmir at 9 A.M. on the day on which the Governor-General of India sent his letter accepting the State’s accession. In his telegram of October 2, the Prime Minister of Pakistan told the Kashmir Government that Pakistan wished to do everything in its power to implement the Stand Still agreement with Kashmir and explained that failure to send essential supplies to the state under that agreement was due to dislocation of communications because of the disturbances in the Punjab.

The Kashmir Government have ignored these explanations and have merely repeated their wanton charge that the Stand Still agreement had been broken by Pakistan, for which there is no justification whatsoever.

The Government of Pakistan consistently denied raiding into Kashmir territory by people from Pakistan. On the other hand there is conclusive evidence that Kashmir troops were used first to attack Muslims in Poonch and later to massacre Muslims in Jammu and even to attack Muslim villages in Pakistan near the border. Early in October, women and children from Poonch sought refuge in Pakistan and there are at present about one lakh Muslim refugees in the West Punjab from Jammu.

Villages both in Poonch and in Jammu have been burnt as evidenced by the smoke seen rising from them. Mortar and automatic weapons have been used to drive Muslims from their villages. Recently over 17,000 Muslim corpses were counted near a village in the West Punjab and raiders from Jammu into that province have left behind them, military vehicles and the dead bodies of soldiers in uniform.

The Muslims of Kashmir State did nothing to justify this oppression, which seems to have been ordered as a matter of state policy on the model of what happened in August and September in the East Punjab. It is only because of this action by the State that Kashmir is disturbed and this well-concerted action was purposely resorted to in order to create an excuse for calling in troops from India.

In these circumstances, it is clear to the Government of Pakistan that the Pathan raid was provoked by the use of Kashmir troops to attack and kill Muslims in Kashmir and Jammu, and for this the policy of the Kashmir Government was solely responsible.

The Kashmir Government must have been fully aware of the inevitability of the Pathans. Their deliberate refusal to consider every suggestion of the Pakistan Government for a meeting of representatives of both governments to handle the situation jointly and in friendly co-operation and at the same time, their conspiring with the Indian Government enabled them to use this raid as the occasion for the putting into effect of the pre-planned scheme for the accession of Kashmir as a coup d'etat, and for the occupation of Kashmir by Indian troops with the object of holding down the people of Kashmir who have been driven to rebellion by this well calculated and carefully planned oppression. In the opinion of the Government of Pakistan, the accession of Kashmir is based on fraud and violence and as such cannot be recognized.

The reference to a plebiscite for Kashmir is merely put forward to mislead, as it ostensibly seems attractive but as a practical proposition, it remains on paper. If the India Government are allowed to act freely unfettered as they please by virtue of having already occupied Kashmir and landed their troops there, then, this El Dorado of plebiscite will prove a mirage.

2025.  Message from the British Prime Minister C. R. Attlee to Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru sent through the British High Commissioner in India.

October 30, 1947

Text of message dated 30th October to Prime Minister of India from Prime Minister of the United Kingdom.

Begins.

"Your telegrams dated 28th October PRIMIN 229, 234, and 235. I am grateful to you for setting out so fully your reasons for deciding to send a force from the army of India into Kashmir and provisionally accepting the accession of Kashmir to the Dominion of India.

2. I do not think it would be helpful if I were to comment on the action which your Government has taken.

3. I was greatly heartened by the news which reached me last night through our Acting High Commissioner that you and the Governor-General were to meet the Prime Minister and Governor-General of Pakistan at Lahore today no doubt as a result of the appeal of the Prime Minister of Pakistan which you mentioned in one of your en clair telegrams.

4. I have learned with regret that this meeting has had to be postponed owing to your illness. I sincerely trust that your indisposition is not serious and wish you a speedy recovery."
5. I earnestly hope that an early conference will prove possible. I and my Government cannot help but being deeply concerned at the strain which these developments are placing on the relations between India and Pakistan. We are sincerely anxious lest Kashmir should prove to be the cause of a break between the two Dominion Governments and I confess there still seems to me to be considerable danger of this unless there are early talks at the higher level in order to concert plans both for the restoration of order in Kashmir and for the final solution of the problems of its ultimate relationship to Pakistan and India including the vexed question of how to ascertain the will of the people in a state like Kashmir.

6. In the meantime I venture to suggest that it is important that you should keep the Pakistan Government fully and completely informed of any measure you are taking to assist in the restoration of order in Kashmir and so far as possible in advance of any such action. I hope you may agree that as a matter of procedure this would be the right course and that it would be of advantage in promoting cooperation between your two Governments. I am sure that should also serve to prevent the spread of exaggerated rumours which have so often not only played a fatal part among the people but have also I fear sometimes influenced one or other of the two Governments and may easily do so again if constant contact is not maintained.

7. Many thanks for the permission given in your en clair telegram to make such public use as may be considered appropriate of the material contained in our correspondence. I am considering whether publication might be of advantage to us all and to the cause of good understanding. If so the question of my correspondence with the Prime Minister of Pakistan would plainly arise."

Ends.

2026. Telegram from Pakistan Prime Minister Liaquat Ali Khan to Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru.

Lahore, November 6, 1947.

Following for Pandit Nehru from Liaquat Ali Khan:

Your telegrams, dated October 31st, and November 4th, regarding Kashmir.

In broadcast I made on evening of November 4th I gave a review of Kashmir situation and of events leading up to it. It is hardly necessary for me to go over the whole ground again or reply to your allegations in detail. But I must say that you are singularly misinformed about position in Jammu and Kashmir. In particular, your account of border incidents in Jammu and of conditions in Jammu is so contrary to facts that I can only conclude that Jammu and Kashmir Government are sedulously keeping truth away from you. Let me repeat that it is the Muslims in Jammu who are being massacred by the thousand every day with active assistance of State Police and military, who are also organizing raids into West Punjab. When Kashmir Government made an offer of an impartial enquiry into these border incidents we accepted it at once. The Kashmir Government never broached the subject again. Your other allegations and insinuations are equally devoid of foundation and I emphatically repudiated them.

A day before your broadcast indicating policy of your Government a long discussion took place between Lord Mountbatten and the Qaid-e-Azam as a result of which the following proposals were put before Lord Mountbatten for communication to you and your Government:

1. To put an immediate stop to fighting; the Governors-General should be authorized and vested with full powers by both the Dominion Governments to issue a proclamation forthwith giving 48 hours notice to two opposing forces to cease fire. We have no control over forces of Provisional Government of Kashmir or tribesmen engaged in fighting but we will warn them in clearest terms that if they do not obey order to cease fire immediately the forces of both Dominions will make war on them.

2. Both the forces of Indian Dominion and tribesmen to withdraw simultaneously and with utmost expedition from Jammu and Kashmir State territory.

3. With sanction of two Dominion Governments the two Governors-General to be given full power to restore peace, undertake administration of Jammu and Kashmir State and arrange for plebiscite, without delay, under their joint control and supervision.
Lord Mountbatten promised to let me know your Government's reply to these proposals but we have heard no more about them. Your Government's policy is vague. I still ask your Government to let me have your reply to our definite proposals.

Cable from Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru to Pakistan Prime Minister Liaquat Ali Khan.

New Delhi, November 8, 1947.

1. Your telegram, dated the 6th November, about Kashmir was received today.

2. I regret that I have to disagree completely with your account of what has happened or is happening in Jammu and Kashmir State. We have received and are receiving full information from your own representatives in both Jammu and Srinagar and this convinces us that your information is wholly wrong.

3. I regret also the tone and the contents of your broadcast of the 4th November regarding Kashmir which indicated no desire to find a method for a settlement. It was merely an indictment which has no relation to the fact.

4. In the last paragraph of your telegram you say that Lord Mountbatten promised to let you know the views of the Indian Government to the proposals discussed between the two Governors-General but that you have heard no more about them. On this point there seems to have been a misunderstanding.

5. Lord Mountbatten on his return from Lahore gave me full account of his talk with Mr. Jinnah and in particular of the two important suggestions which had been discussed namely.

One: The withdrawal of Indian Dominion troops and tribesmen from Kashmir, and

Two: The holding of a plebiscite at the earliest possible date.

6. As regards the first proposal Lord Mountbatten told me that Mr. Jinnah desired that withdrawal of the Indian Dominion troops and tribesmen should be made simultaneously, but that he (Lord Mountbatten) had pointed out that it was clearly impossible for the Indian troops to withdraw from Kashmir valley until the raiders had left Kashmir soil and law and order had been restored in Kashmir. Lord Mountbatten had also made it quite clear to Mr. Jinnah that the Government of India had no desire to retain troops in Kashmir for a moment longer than was necessary.

7. As regards the second point, Lord Mountbatten reported that Mr. Jinnah had expressed the view that there was no hope of a fair plebiscite under the present Kashmir authorities. To meet this point Lord Mountbatten had suggested that it should be conducted under the auspices of the U.N.O. Mr. Jinnah had put forward a counter-proposal that two Governors-General should be given plenary powers to settle the matter. Lord Mountbatten had pointed out that it would be constitutionally improper for him to undertake this duty.

8. On the very day that I had this talk with Lord Mountbatten, I made a broadcast in which the views of the Government of India on both these proposals were stated plainly and I sincerely followed it up with telegram to you indicating that they might form the basis of discussion at our next talks.

9. It is thus clear beyond any shadow of doubt that we did in fact put forward definite proposals as a basis for discussion between us as soon as possible after Lord Mountbatten’s return from Lahore.

10. I would have been glad to explain to you personally, at the meeting, the reasons for our inability to accept the proposals made to Lord Mountbatten by Mr. Jinnah. But since unfortunately you are unable to come, I must let you have my views to uphold them. They are as follows.

11. As regards your proposals one and two: a number of well-armed raiders have entered Kashmir to accompaniment of massacre, arson and loot. Our troops have been sent there to drive out these raiders and protect Kashmir. So long as these raiders remain there, and law and order have not been established, our troops must discharge their duty. Afterwards they will be withdrawn, as I have already undertaken.

12. The raiders are either under your control or they are not. If they are under your control, you should withdraw them and, in any event, stop them coming through Pakistan territory into Kashmir. If they are not under your control and you can do nothing to stop them, then surely we are entitled to deal with them as we think best.

13. As regards proposal number three in your telegram of November 6th we entirely endorse Lord Mountbatten’s view (vide paragraph seven above). This stated that the two Governors-General be empowered to restore peace, undertake the administration of the State and arrange to hold a plebiscite under their joint control and supervision.

14. It will thus be seen that our proposals which we have repeatedly stated are (one) that Government of Pakistan should publicly undertake to do their utmost to compel the raiders to withdraw from Kashmir; (two) that Government of India should repeat their declaration that they will withdraw their troops from Kashmir soil as soon as raiders have withdrawn and law and order are restored; (three) that Governments of India and Pakistan should make a joint request to U.N.O. to undertake a plebiscite in Kashmir at the earliest possible date.

15. The above conclusions relate only to Kashmir, but it is essential, in order to restore good relations between the two Dominions, that there should be acceptance of principle that, where ruler of a State does not belong to community to which the majority of his subjects belong, and where the State has not acceded to that Dominion whose majority community is same as the State’s, the question whether the state has finally acceded to one or other Dominion should be ascertained by reference to the will of the people.

16. The Major-General commanding our forces in Jammu and Kashmir has been given the most explicit orders to do everything in his power to ensure that no victimization of any community is permitted.

2028. Message from British Prime Minister C. R. Attlee to Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru through the U.K. High Commissioner in India.

Office of the High Commissioner for the United Kingdom
New Delhi

22.11.1947

Dear Prime Minister,

I have been instructed to communicate to you the following message from Mr. Attlee:-

"It is difficult for me and my Government to judge whether by chance there is any way in which we could be of service in helping towards a solution of the intractable problems produced by the march of events in relation to Kashmir.

2. Although the approach of your Government and that of the Pakistan Government is different, there seems to be agreement on both sides that a reference to the people of Kashmir is the right way in which to obtain a decision on the question of final accession to Pakistan or India, although I assume that it is hardly practicable to take this step before the spring. You suggested in your broadcast of the 2nd November a reference under international auspices like the United Nations and Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan also suggested in his statement of the 16th November that the United nations might be asked to appoint representatives to assist in the settlement of the Kashmir problem.

3. I can see great advantages, if it proved practicable for the machinery for consulting the people of Kashmir to be devised and administered under the supervision of independent persons acting at the request of, and on behalf of the two Governments jointly. After full consideration, I am inclined to think that the speediest and most satisfactory way of putting this idea into practice would be to have recourse to one special organ of the United Nations, namely, the International Court of Justice.

* Replying to Attlee the next day (23-11-47) Mr. Nehru said that during his visit to Kashmir when he personally saw the atrocities and vandalism committed by the raiders on the civil population, he was convinced that until the State was rid of them, a task in which Indian troops were engaged, and a task in which Pakistan could help by refusing passage to them through Pakistan territory, free expression of people's will, will not be possible. He said once peaceful conditions returned to the State, "we shall be ready to let question of Kashmir's final accession be decided by the people of Kashmir by means of a plebiscite or referendum under international auspices such as those of United Nations." Nehru ruled out the auspices of the International Court of Justice for this purpose since it had "no executive authority under United Nations Charter nor trained administrative personnel at its disposal. The appropriate authority to provide the machinery would be the Security Council or Secretary-General of the United Nations."

4. Would you like me to take private soundings from the President of the International Court of Justice to discover whether he is of the opinion that it would be practicable and would be willing to try and get together a small team of international experts, not connected with India, Pakistan or the United Kingdom in the event of the joint request being preferred by the Governments of India and Pakistan for this to be done?

5. I should be delighted to take such a step if you and the Prime Minister of Pakistan think it would be helpful. I am sending an identical message to the Prime Minister of Pakistan.”

Yours sincerely

Sd/- Terence Shone

My dear Prakasa,

4. I saw Mountbatten this afternoon and he told me of his conversation with you, more specially of what you said about Kashmir. I realize perfectly the state of feeling in Pakistan about Kashmir. Anybody who sees Dawn daily can appreciate this. Other sources of information confirm that there is a state of hysteria and desperation. All this is bad and might lead to trouble. But I was amazed to learn from Mountbatten that you hinted at Kashmir being handed over to Pakistan for the sake of peace all round. If we did anything of the kind our Government would not last many days and there would be no peace at all anywhere in India. Probably it would lead to war with Pakistan because of public opinion here and of war-like elements coming in control of our policy. We cannot and we will not leave Kashmir to its fate.

5. The fact is that Kashmir is of the most vital significance to India as well as to Pakistan. There lies the rub. Apart from this we have already committed ourselves by sending there our armed forces and it is quite impossible for us to withdraw. We have to see this through to the end whatever the future developments might be. Those developments depend upon many factors, our military strength of course, our internal conditions, and the internal conditions and military strength of Pakistan. All of us realize that this Kashmir venture is no easy matter. We did not undertake it light heartedly and we are not pursuing it with any easy confidence. We know the difficulties perhaps more than you do. Nevertheless we are going to go through it and it is desirable that you should make this perfectly clear in your private talks whenever this question arises.

6. In Kashmir an internal revolution is taking place under Sheikh Abdullah's leadership. New forces are arising and a new set-up of Government is gradually taking shape. It is difficult to prophesy what will happen four or five months later. We are committed to a plebiscite and we stand by it. But developments during the next few months will naturally govern decisions later.

7. Kashmir is going to be a drain on our resources, but it is going to be a greater drain on Pakistan. In a military sense we are stronger. The position however is this that even if we were somewhat weaker than we are, we cannot desert the people of Kashmir to whom we have given our pledge. Kashmir gives us an example of communal unity and cooperation. This has had a healthy effect in India and any weakening in Kashmir by us would create a far more difficult communal situation in India.

Yours sincerely,

Jawaharlal Nehru

2030. Telegram from Pakistan Prime Minister Liaquat Ali Khan to UK Prime Minister Attlee repeated to Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru.

Lahore, November 25, 1947.

FROM: PUNSG, Lahore,

To : Secretary of State for Commonwealth Relations. London

(Repeated: Foreign Karachi, Pakistan High Commissioner New Delhi and Foreign New Delhi for Prime Minister India).

No. 420 C Dated (and received) 25th November 1947

MOST IMMEDIATE

From Foreign camp Lahore. From Prime Minister Pakistan for Prime Minister United Kingdom.

Many thanks for your telegram of November 22nd regarding Kashmir. Your suggestion of having recourse to International Court of Justice appears to be based on an inadequate appreciation of realities of situation in Kashmir. You have focused your attention solely on the last process in the solution of Kashmir question, namely the holding of a PLEBISCITE and have ignored the essential pre-requisites for a free and unfettered exercise of the will of people. These are firstly cessation of fighting and withdrawal of all outside forces Indian or tribesmen as well of large number of armed Sikhs and Rashtrya Seva Sangh who have entered the state since beginning of trouble. Secondly the establishment of an impartial interim administration which would put a stop to repression of Moslems and give a free and equal opportunity to all political parties in State. Without these two essential pre-requisites there is no chance of a free verdict of people of State on the question of accession.
2. The oft repeated promises of Indian Government and Pandit Nehru that they are willing to have a PLEBISCITE in Kashmir are intended to mislead world. There is no dispute that PLEBISCITE must be held as early as possible to ascertain free will of people of Kashmir. This is not the question in dispute; it is axiomatic. The real issue is how this is to be done. You say the question has become intractable. It has been made purposely so by India Government. If India Government is honestly and genuinely desirous of a fair and peaceful settlement of Kashmir question they should immediately agree that fighting must cease and not take shelter behind the SLOGAN that raiders must be driven out. It is not the raiders but the people of Kashmir who are fighting against heavy odds to end Dogra tyranny and to prevent Kashmir from falling into the hands of Indian Dominion. The AZAD Kashmir forces are almost wholly composed of the sons of the soil and even foreign observers have testified that wherever they have gone they have been welcomed as forces of liberation. We are ready to exercise all our influence on AZAD Kashmir forces to stop fighting and to see that any tribesmen with them are not only stopped from fighting but are made to leave Kashmir. These tribesmen it should be remembered are the KITH and KIN of those for whom they are fighting.

3. The India Government are also trying to mislead the world by stating that people of Kashmir asked them through Sheikh Abdullah to send their troops to Kashmir. Sheikh Abdullah has been a paid agent of Congress for the last two decades and with the exception of some GANGSTERS whom he has purchased with Congress money, he has no following amongst Moslem masses. It is astonishing that Pandit Nehru who knows these facts should proclaim this QUISLING to be the acknowledged leader of Moslems of Kashmir.

4. The India Government's insistence upon the retention of their troops in Kashmir until they have restored law and order to their own satisfaction can only mean that India troops will stay in the State until they have crushed by military force all opposition to their permanent occupation of Kashmir. The methods by which maintenance of law and order is used to consolidate an alien rule are well known. The Moslem population of the State has been feeling IMPACT of those methods in full force. The true leaders of Moslem and politically conscious among them are with their families the special targets of this repression. In spite of protestation of India Government the number of Moslem refugees into PAKISTAN swells day by day and is now over 200,000. All these refugees bring with them horrible tales of most inhuman atrocities. I repeat that what India Government is after its permanent occupation of Kashmir and they know that cannot achieve this object until they have changed composition of population by converting Moslem majority into a minority. Behind their high sounding phrases stands this hideous reality - the elimination and demoralization of whole population by violent means -- and any proposal which fails to tackle this basic fact offers no real solution.
5. The above analysis shows that firstly fighting must stop and all outside forces must withdraw and secondly which is no less essential that Kashmir administration must be taken over by an impartial and independent authority immediately. Not until these conditions are fulfilled is there any hope of getting a free PLEBISCITE which in our opinion need not wait till the spring.

6. I hope you now realize the actual position. If you would consider these basic facts you will I hope support our proposal that U.N.O should immediately send out a Commission to undertake the tasks outlined in para 5 above. This Commission should have under it an international police force to maintain law and order. The composition of this force can be left to decision of U.N.O. Commission. We on our part would be prepared to accept a force drawn solely from Commonwealth.

Prior to Nehru’s arrival, Mountbatten urged Liaquat Ali Khan not to annoy or antagonize Nehru. He pointed out that Pakistan was in a weak position since India had offered a plebiscite in Kashmir under the auspices of the United Nations thereby putting herself right in the eyes of the world.

Pandit Nehru said categorically that if the Dominion of India had not gone to the assistance of Kashmir when called upon, not only by the Ruler but by Sheikh Abdullah, the leader of the popular party, he had no doubt whatever that the present Government of India would have been overthrown and that it would have been replaced by an irresponsible and extremist government which, in his opinion, would certainly have declared war upon Pakistan.

Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan countered this by saying that the Government of Pakistan had their position greatly weakened by not taking strong action against India, and that he personally was being abused in the vernacular press for failing to support Muslim interests.

In the course of the meeting certain proposals were formulated: a plebiscite under U.N. auspices; minimum number of Indian troops at vital points; fair elections and, as far as possible, return of refugees to their homes or choice of stay in either Dominion,. Nehru agreed to consider these proposals.

Record of a Meeting Convened by Lord Mountbatten: Other present were: Jawaharlal Nehru, Baldev Singh (Defence Minister), Gopalaswami Ayyangar (Minister without Portfolio), Liaquat Ali Khan, Ghulam Mohammad (Pakistan Finance Minister).

New Delhi, December 8, 1947.

H.E. (Governor General) opened the discussion by emphasizing that the whole future welfare of India depended on an agreement over Kashmir being reached between the two Dominions. The effect that such an agreement would have on world opinion would also be very great. Unfortunately, since the last meeting between the two Prime Ministers on the subject at Delhi some ten days previously, events had occurred which had produced a setback in the outlook of both sides to the problem. He invited both Prime Ministers to give their opinion as to how matters now stood.

Pandit Nehru started by pointing out that, whatever might happen in the future, as the result of a plebiscite, Kashmir was at the present time part of the territory of India. Invaders had come into Kashmir through Pakistan territory. In his view, they had undoubtedly been assisted by persons in authority in Pakistan. There had been no attempt at an open disavowal by the Pakistan Government of this. Regular soldiers of the Pakistan army, and equipment supplied by that army, had been captured in Kashmir. There were concentrations of regular and irregular forces in Pakistan territory, close to the borders of Kashmir. This all really amounted to nothing less than an act of war-- and as such it had been treated by newspapers in Pakistan, which talked of the Indian troops as "the enemy". The present position was an impossible one; it must move either one way or the other.

Pandit Nehru said that he freely admitted that there had been atrocities on both sides. But during the last month there had been very few, if any, on the Indian side. In fact it was a physical impossibility that there could have been more than a very small number. On the side of the raiders, however, there had been, and continue to be, large-scale looting, destruction, massacre and abduction of women. It was the duty of India to fight the invasion until Kashmir was free of invaders. The first step, before there was talk of a plebiscite or anything else, must be the withdrawal of the raiders.

Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan said that he did not accept the view that the recent atrocities had been one sided. Many thousands of Muslims had been killed in Jammu -- some, while being evacuated from there. Many incidents had occurred since Kashmir had acceded to India. In particular, some women of good families had been abducted, taken back to Jammu, and there kept naked and raped.
Pandit Nehru said that the last attack on Muslims being evacuated from Jammu had taken place on November 5 over a month previously. This had happened before Indian forces had arrived in Jammu and restored the situation. Apart from this one incident, very few Muslims had been killed since the accession. Calculations made by subtracting the number of refugees who had arrived in Pakistan from the census population of Muslims did not hold water. There will still be a large number of Muslims in Jammu, including some in the local Home Guard. Every effort was being made, and would continue to be made, to recover abducted women. Any specific incidents on which information was provided would be energetically investigated.

Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan said that it was very difficult for the Government of Pakistan to provide such detailed information.

At H.E.’s suggestion, both Prime Ministers agreed that two teams, each consisting of a high-class representative of each Dominion, should be formed to tour both sides investigating the truth of the various reports that were received of atrocities and other incidents.

Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan then drew a parallel between events in Junagadh and those in Kashmir. He reminded Pandit Nehru of how India had recognized the “sanctity” of Junagadh territory. The "Provisional Government" of Junagadh had been set up in Indian territory: it had been provided with arms by India; and then invaded and captured territory belonging to Junagadh. The Head of the "Provisional Government" had made public statement saying that its success was due to the assistance which had been provided by the Deputy Prime Minister of India.

Pandit Nehru, while openly admitting that India had been in some ways in the wrong about Junagadh, claimed that the parallel with Kashmir was not tenable because of the vast difference in scale between the two.

Pandit Nehru pointed out that many of the raiders who had come into Kashmir were armed with modern weapons, including some which had been issued by Pakistan ordnance depots. He could produce proof that the N.W.F.P. Government had helped to arm the raiders, and given them every other sort of assistance.

His Excellency stated that General Messervy had categorically assured him that the Pakistan army had not issued arms to the raiders -- on the contrary, orders had been given that this was not to be done. General Messervy had also told him that there might be a few Pakistan soldiers on leave taking part in the Kashmir fighting.

Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan said that there were 3,00,000 armed people on the frontier.
This fact had been put on record by the ex-Supreme Commander. They had arm factories of their own, which produced first-class weapons. Some Pakistan army rifles might have been taken by soldiers on leave. Mr. Ghulam Mohammad said that the raiders also obtained arms from Afghanistan and Russia.

Pandit Nehru said that he considered that Pakistan territory was being used as a major base for operations against Kashmir. Mr. Ghulam Mohammad replied that many of the stories which were being circulated, and which might have led to this belief, were not true. But the feeling of the people of Pakistan with regard to Kashmir was very strong. They realized its strategic and economic importance to Pakistan. They felt that India’s action in Kashmir was planned to encircle and strangle Pakistan. Pandit Nehru said that this feeling was not, in his opinion, spontaneous. It had been whipped up by the whole administration of, and in particular by the Premier, of the N.W.F.P.

Pandit Nehru also claimed that Pakistan must be supplying petrol for the raiders' vehicles. This Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan denied. He said that the vehicles had been given to the tribes before partition by the British, and drew their petrol allowance in the normal way.

Mr. Gopalaswami Ayyangar said that he took it that the Pakistan Government was now ready to admit that raiders had passed through Pakistan territory. Did Pakistan recognize it as its duty, as a country having an international existence, to stop these raiders? Or did Pakistan disown all responsibility?

Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan replied that he could not stop them. Any effort to do so would mean going to war with the tribes, which he was not prepared to do. As it was, the Government of Pakistan was under continual attack by the people for the attitude they had taken in regard to Kashmir. However, the Government of Pakistan had not recognized the accession of Kashmir to India. The murder of the Muslims in Kashmir had been the cause of the tribesmen attacking. These had been started with incursions of Akali Sikhs and R.S.S. bands...

Pandit Nehru then gave a description of past history in Pakistan from his point of view. According to this, the Kashmir troubles had started with incursions from Pakistan.

Mr. Ghulam Mohammad then turned the conversation to the feelings of the people of Kashmir itself -- particularly the feelings of the Poonchis, who had rebelled against the Maharaja's Government. He appealed to Pandit Nehru, as an ex-rebel, to appreciate the point of view of these rebels.

The meeting next considered the basic policy of either Government with regard to Kashmir. The representatives of each Government were agreed that the ultimate aim must be to hold a fair plebiscite, whereby the will of people could be ascertained as to which Dominion the State should accede to. There was, however, a fundamental difference as to what should be the first step forward towards achieving this object. The Indian representatives claimed that it must be a declaration by the Pakistan Government that it would do its utmost to influence the raiders at present in Kashmir to withdraw, and to stop any further raiders going in. The Pakistan representatives claimed that an essential prerequisite to this action was a declaration by India that Indian troops would be withdrawn and that there would be an impartial administration in the period preceding the plebiscite.

Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan said that, once this assurance had been given, Pakistan would use the utmost force to ensure the withdrawal of the invaders.

Pandit Nehru said that it was out of the question that Indian troops should be altogether withdrawn. The Indian troops were disciplined, they would obey orders; Pakistan could not control the irregulars. If all the Indian troops were withdrawn Kashmir would be at the mercy of the armed men of Poonch. If they remained, he guaranteed that the Poonchis themselves would be free of harassment -- nothing was further from his mind than to send punitive parties against them.

His Excellency pointed out that the only Indian troops at present in the Poonch area were those engaged in protecting 45,000 non-Muslims in the city of Poonch itself.

Mr. Ghulam Mohammad said that the only practicable way of getting the raiders out was to have a change of administration. If this was done, Pakistan would do all in their power to withdraw the raiders.

Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan said that he had discussed the draft agreement with the Azad Kashmir Government, who had said that they could not accept it in view of what had happened under the present administration. In the Kashmir Valley, no Muslim could be a member of the Muslim Conference without being arrested or at the least victimized.

Pandit Nehru pointed out that, if these Muslim Conference members were aiding and abetting the raiders, as they were known to be, the only way of dealing with them was to lock them up. It was out of the question that the administration should be changed.

H.E. pointed out that there was provision in the draft agreement for all political prisoners to be released prior to the plebiscite. He also stressed the point that, if a U.N.O. delegation was in Kashmir preparing for the plebiscite, it would be approachable by all parties, who would be able to lay before it their various complaints.
Pandit Nehru then took the line that the Government of India had already gone far further than they need have done. They had gone out of their way to offer a plebiscite. There was no necessity for them to have done this. Now they were told that they must change the administration.

Mr. Gopalaswami Ayyangar backed this up by saying that he wondered whether it was realized how unpopular the Government of India had become, both in Kashmir and India, on account of their pledge that there would be a free and impartial plebiscite. How could they now order the administration to be changed? There was no precedent for such a suggestion.

Mr Liaquat Ali Khan brought up the change of Governors in the N.W.F.P. as an example of how an administration could be changed before a plebiscite. H.E. explained the full circumstances which had led to Sir Rob Lockhart taking over from Sir Olaf Caroe.

Mr. Ghulam Mohammad again said that the essential prerequisite was an immediate promise of an impartial plebiscite -- either a coalition, or someone from neither main political party.

Pandit Nehru pointed out that the plebiscite would take some time to prepare - especially if, as both sides agreed, it was to be conducted on adult franchise. During the intervening period of six months, or whatever it might be, there must be an administration of some sort. The present administration had done three great things -- it had stopped the fighting in the area which it controlled, it had knit the people together on non-communal lines and it was the first fully responsible government which had ever been set up in Kashmir overthrowing the Maharaja's autocratic rule -- (which, incidentally, had been supported at one stage by the Muslim Conference). It would be fatal to upset it. He could see that circumstances might arise in which a coalition would be possible. But that question did not arise at the present time. The right conditions must first be brought about. Anyway, it was not for the Government of India, but for the people of the State themselves, to decide upon the form of government.

Mr. Gopalaswami Ayyangar gave his view that, if a coalition was put in at the present time, there would be grave risks of communal trouble in both Kashmir and Jammu. The great merit of the present administration was that it had brought communities together.

Mr. Ghulam Mohammad said that he was sure that a coalition would not result in communal trouble. He also said that a "fully responsible government" presupposed an election or plebiscite. It could not come before.

Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan then gave his view that the people of Kashmir were bound to vote, in the plebiscite, in favour of whatever administration was then in power. The Kashmiris were an illiterate and oppressed people, and they would be bound to favour the authority in possession. If an Englishman went as administrator, they would vote to join the United Kingdom!

His Excellency suggested that the call of Islam would surely have a much greater influence upon the people of Kashmir. Religion was a factor of great importance among the illetrate. Also, the difficulties facing the present administration were so great that he would be amazed if it retained its hold on the people.

His Excellency then suggested that the two Governments might at least make a joint statement agreeing that all possible steps should be taken to stop the massacres in Kashmir and restore abducted women.

This suggestion met with no response from either side.

His Excellency suggested that the Government of India should put out a unilateral statement, on the lines of the draft agreement. The policy of India at least would then be clear to the world, and it might help Pakistan to induce the raiders to withdraw.

Pandit Nehru replied that he would not make such a unilateral statement. The question of a plebiscite in Kashmir did not arise until the raiders were thrown out. The first task must be to clear the State of outside elements. If necessary, he would throw up his Prime Ministership and take the sword himself, and lead the men of India against the invasion. Nothing else in India mattered—until Kashmir was cleared up though it might take five years or ten.

His Excellency suggested that U.N.O. should be asked to send out observers or advisers in some capacity to help the two Dominions solve the impasse which had been reached. The U.N.O. representatives could hold meetings with the two Prime Ministers. They could discuss the draft agreement, and ways and means of implementing it. They could set up a committee consisting of the principal contending parties in Kashmir. Would the two Governments agree to making a joint approach to U.N.O. or that one or other should make the approach?

Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan said that he would agree to U.N.O. advising on the impartiality of the administration before the plebiscite.

Pandit Nehru said that he would agree to U.N.O. advising on the impartiality of the administration before the plebiscite.

His Excellency's final suggestion was that a joint statement should be put out in which the Government of Pakistan would undertake to do their best to induce the raiders to withdraw and no further raiders to go in; and the Government of India would undertake to call in U.N.O. advisers straightaway.
Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan made it clear that it was fully within his power to agree to issuing a statement calling upon the tribes to withdraw straightaway. If he did so, however, without being able to make one concrete offer in return his appeal would be taken no notice of. Not only would it be a dishonest thing to do, and as such lead to further deterioration between the two Dominions, but it would also result in such a deterioration of the position of the Government of Pakistan vis-à-vis its own people that the very existence of that Government would be endangered.

His Excellency asked whether he could count on Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan’s full support to the proposal that UNO should be brought in, in whatever form this might be. This Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan undertook to do.

[The full meeting then reassembled, with the addition of Mr. Mohammed Ali (Pakistan) and Mr. H.M. Patel (India). The agreement which had been reached between the officials on the allocation of defence expenditure after August 15 was first taken and confirmed. A draft statement on the settlement of outstanding financial and economic issues was then considered. This was agreed, with minor changes, but considerable pressure had to be exerted by His Excellency on Pandit Nehru before he would agree that it should be published the following afternoon.]

His Excellency then described the talk which he had with Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan before the meeting. Nearly all the rest of the time was devoted to efforts to induce Pandit Nehru to accept a reference to U.N.O.

Pandit Nehru was extremely adamant. He went to the extremity of saying that he intended to clear Kashmir with the sword, whatever happened. He asked under what section of the Charter any reference to U.N.O. could be made. He asked how Pakistan came into the picture at all. He reiterated his insistence that the first step was to drive out the raiders.

His Excellency drew attention to the great benefits an approach to U.N.O. would have. It was the only way to solve the present impasse, and stop the fighting and to stop the fighting was the main thing at the moment.

Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan reiterated that he would not mind in what manner the approach to U.N.O. was made. He would even agree that it should be in the form of an accusation by India that Pakistan was assisting the raiders. He agreed with His Excellency that the first thing that the U.N.O. Commission would probably do would be to ask Pakistan to use their influence to withdraw the raiders and stop further influxes. In these circumstances, his own position would be so immensely strengthened that he would be able to issue the appeal with impunity.

The position, as finally left, was that Pandit Nehru should examine the U.N.O. Charter and see if there was any way in which he could agree to a reference being made.

Ghulam Mohammad Sadiq said, "Before the invasion, the National Conference deputed me to approach the Pakistan Government at the highest level to recognize democratic rights of the Kashmir people for self-determination and abide by the sovereign will of a free people on the question of free association with either of the Dominions. I met Pakistan's Prime Minister and other Ministers, but it was of no use. We see finally put into operation a programme of first enslaving and then securing 'yes' in their favour from an enslaved people".

 Asked what the immediate problems facing the Kashmir Administration were today, Mohammad Sadiq said: "Certainly not referendum but immediate relief to our people. In fact, we are carrying on with atomic speed the two-fold task of rehabilitation of unfortunate victims of Pakistan aggression and the procurement of food and cloth."

"Pakistan propagandists who pretend to show so much concern for their Muslim brethren in Kashmir against Dogra oppression have tried their best to starve them by blockade of all exports and imports for the past five months".

New Delhi, December 21, 1947.

I reached Government House at 10 p.m. to keep an appointment with Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan who had arrived earlier in the evening. I was taken to the Governor-General first as he was anxious to see me before I saw Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan. Although he intended speaking to me for a few minutes only, actually our conversation lasted for nearly an hour, while, presumably, Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan was waiting for me.

2. Lord Mountbatten told me that he had had an hour's talk already with Liaquat Ali Khan and had found him in a friendly mood, eager to come to some kind of a settlement. In fact he had never found him so chastened. He said that it would be a tragedy of we could not take advantage of these circumstances now and put an end to the fighting in Kashmir, of course on terms advantageous and honourable to India. A continuation of the conflict, whatever the result, would mean a very great deal of trouble to India and even more so to Pakistan and would stop progress for a long time. Lord Mountbatten was greatly worked up and made repeated appeals both on national and personal grounds. He said that he had never been so exercised about any matter as this one because he felt that so much was at stake. The next day would be vital in the history of India. We were very near a settlement and the highest statesmanship and the good of India demanded that we should take advantage of the present favourable circumstances to bring such a settlement. Favourable circumstances evidently referred to Liaquat Ali Khan's desire for a settlement. Lord Mountbatten referred to the great increase in the prestige of India all over the world if we could bring about a settlement and to our immediately applying ourselves to the various internal problems which demanded our attention. The settlement of course should essentially be on the lines we have repeatedly laid down, i.e., reference to the U.N.O. to stop the fighting and when this is done and peace and order restored a plebiscite under U.N.O. auspices.

3. Lord Mountbatten also said that Liaquat Ali Khan was greatly exercised at the possibility of the Government of India repudiating or going back on the financial settlements arrived at. These settlements according to Liaquat Ali Khan had taken place nearly a month ago and nothing had been done yet to implement them. Was the matter going back to the Arbitral Tribunal for decision?

4. I stated in reply that there was no question of our challenging or repudiating the financial agreements arrived at. The only question that arose was when to make the payments. We would stand by the agreements and the Arbitral Tribunal would not be concerned with them. Our difficulty was that if we made any payments now, when a kind of undeclared war was going on between us, that money would be used in carrying on that war against us. It would be foolish for us to make those payments until this Kashmir business had been settled.

5. Lord Mountbatten said that the money was really Pakistan's i.e., it was a joint fund and this part of it therefore belonged to them. He appreciated however our difficulty, but would suggest that we should not emphasize this fact of non-payment in our difficulty, but would suggest that this would raise further difficulties. We might make it clear that so far as the financial agreements were concerned we did not challenge them.

6. Regarding Kashmir I pointed out that the immediate issue was one of aggression directly or indirectly by Pakistan on India. No other issue arose till this was settled. We proposed to refer this particular matter to the Security Council of the U.N.O., charging Pakistan with aggression and asking U.N.O. to call upon Pakistan to refrain from doing so. Otherwise we would have to take action ourselves in such a manner as we thought fit to stop this aggression at the base.

7. Lord Mountbatten said he agreed with that reference, but could we not add to it that after law and order has been restored U.N.O. would supervise and carry out a plebiscite as we had previously declared? I said that we could not add this to our reference. It was entirely a separate matter and much would depend on developments. We were committed not only by our settlements but also by our general policy to allow the people of Kashmir to decide their future. Indeed it was not possible in the present context of things for us to hold Kashmir against the will of the people. But we were definitely of opinion that this could not be tied up to the present reference to U.N.O. In that reference there would no doubt be a historical narrative which would contain mention of the fact of our offering a plebiscite under U.N.O. auspices. Apart from that there would be no further mention of this. Our demand would be that aggression must cease and the raiders should withdraw. It was possible that as a consequence of U.N.O. taking action in this matter, whether by sending a commission or otherwise, other developments might take place. We would deal with them as they arose.

8. There was a great deal of talk roundabout this position. Lord Mountbatten was anxious that I should somehow talk on the plebiscite in some form or other so as to enable Liaquat Ali Khan to put it across his people who were greatly excited about Kashmir. I repeated what I had said before and informed him that our Cabinet had considered this matter and was quite clear that it should not bring in the question of plebiscite in this reference. That did not mean that we wanted to avoid a reference to the people. But how and when this should take place would depend on circumstances. We could not have a continuation of war and the idea of a plebiscite to go together. It was nearly three months ago that we had made this offer and it has not thus far been accepted and aggression had continued.

9. Lord Mountbatten mentioned also casually that Mr. Jinnah had been given a maximum of six months by his doctors and he was very ill.

10. At about 11 p.m. we went to Liaquat Ali Khan's room. The Governor-General accompanied me although probably it was not his previous intention to do so. No doubt he felt that his presence might be helpful in bringing about a more friendly approach.

11. We were with Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan for little more than an hour, till soon after midnight. I must say that I found him very much toned down and chastened, indeed almost, if I may say so, humble in his approach to the problem. Unlike previous occasions, there was hardly any argument or discussion.
12. Lord Mountbatten started off by saying that there was no intention on the part of the India Government to repudiate the financial agreements arrived at and that this matter would not go up before the Arbitral Tribunal. Further that we were thinking in terms of a reference to U.N.O. and that we stood by previous statement to the effect that the people of Kashmir would have to decide after peace and order were established about their future.

13. I then stated our position in regard to Kashmir. I said that nearly three months ago when we had intervened in Kashmir we had made a unilateral offer for a plebiscite under U.N.O. auspices after peace was established and all the raiders had departed or been pushed out. This offer had been repeated but there had been no response. Indeed the aggression had continued with every kind of violence and had been supported by the Pakistan Government. The invaders had been collected, transported, put in camps near the Kashmir border, armed and trained, all in Pakistan territory, and they had then been sent in batches inside Kashmir State. We considered that aggression of one state against another as a hostile act against India. Obviously we could not tolerate this, nor were we prepared to carry on this petty war in the way we have thus far done. We had sent relatively small forces into Kashmir in the hope that hostilities would cease and the raiders would be withdrawn. No such thing had happened and would necessarily have to take a more serious view of the matter and if no other development took place, we may have to strike at the base of operations and the lines of communications of the raiders. But as we were anxious to avoid far-reaching developments and being members of the U.N.O. we intended making a reference to U.N.O. charging Pakistan with acts of aggression and asking U.N.O. to call upon Pakistan to desist. In the alternative we would have to take such further action as we thought fit and proper.

14. Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan did not say much in reply to this except that he would welcome U.N.O.’s intervention as he was anxious that a third party should come into the picture. He complained of Sardar Patel’s speech at Jaipur in which he was alleged to have said that India was prepared for war with Pakistan if the latter desired it. Mr Liaquat Ali Khan said that we had decided at Lahore that no provocative speeches should be made and no responsible person in Pakistan had made any speech or statement of a provocative nature since then. Unfortunately Sardar Patel had done so and this did not help in producing the atmosphere we desired.

15. I said that I had not myself read Sardar Patel’s speech fully and I did not know what exactly he had said or what the context was. The speech had hardly anything to do with Kashmir and any reference could have been only casual and in some other context. I pointed out the way Pakistan newspapers were behaving and more specially the demand in a leading article of a Karachi Urdu daily calling upon the Muslims to kill Sardar Patel. Our High Commissioner in Karachi had written to Pakistan Government on this subject. Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan said that his attention had been drawn to this and he greatly regretted it. He was taking steps against that newspaper. He said further that newspaper in Pakistan and India were thoroughly irresponsible, more specially the Indian language ones, and he wished that something could be done to stop them. Lord Mountbatten expressed his own disapproval of the way many newspapers indulged in inflaming public opinion and had expressed his opinion that every newspaper should be licensed by Government, the licence being withdrawn in case of misbehaviour.

16. Lord Mountbatten said that as we were thinking of making a reference to U.N.O. it would be a good thing if the draft was shown to Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan before it was sent.

17. I said that we would naturally send a copy to Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan, but the reference being in the nature of a charge against Pakistan it could not possibly be a joint reference. It would be for Pakistan to reply to it and for the Security Council then to take action.

18. Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan said that he did not think it necessary to see our draft reference. What was necessary was that both parties should be eager to stop this fighting.

19. In the whole course of the conversation no mention was made about the internal administration of Kashmir or about the armed forces of the Indian Union that might be left in Kashmir later on. These were the two points on which a great deal of arguments had taken place on previous occasions.

20. Lord Mountbatten asked Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan if it would not be difficult for him to get the raiders out owing to the state of public opinion in Pakistan. He agreed that it was not going to be an easy matter.

21. There was some talk about raids on Pakistan territory by air and land.

22. I informed Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan that all the relatives of Ghulam Abbas, President of the Kashmir Muslim Conference, were alive and were in Pakistan except for one girl who was apparently in Amritsar and would be sent to Pakistan. The story about the murder and abduction of these people was thus not true.

23. Our talk then went on some other matters. I referred to Mehr Chand Khanna’s case. Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan said that he was meeting him the next day.

24. Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan asked me if I had seen the Muslim League resolution about having a minorities charter. I said that I had not read it carefully but I had glanced through it. I added that so far as we are concerned our Constituent Assembly had already carefully considered this matter and laid down provisions for the protection of minorities. Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan said that it would be a very good thing if both India and Pakistan would agree to similar provisions and would issue a joint statement to that effect which might be embodied in our constitutions. This would go a long way to lessen the feelings of fear and suspicion that exist. I agreed that it would be desirable to come to an agreement on these issues.

25. Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan then enquired about the order of Precedence in India as to where the Prime Minister and Ministers came into the picture.

The whole conversation with Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan, which lasted a little over an hour, was almost entirely free from argument which had previously accompanied such discussions. It seemed to me quite clear that for some reason or other Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan was eager and anxious for a settlement. He hardly raised any difficulties to what I said, though of course he did not agree to everything. He expressed a strong desire that India and Pakistan should have friendly relations and should put an end to conflict and misunderstanding.

New Delhi, December 22, 1947.

Pandit Nehru recalled that I had, at one of the earliest of the previous series of meetings held at Delhi between the Prime Ministers, read out a note expressing my Government’s policy that all the agreements should hang together. He said that he considered the present situation to be tantamount to undeclared war, in which, in the opinion of the Government of India, Pakistan was encouraging the aggressors. It was not the question to hand over large funds to Pakistan in these circumstances.

Liaquat Ali Khan pointed out that these funds did not in any way belong to India; they were Pakistan’s legal share of the cash balances. It was not a question of a loan or a gift being made. He considered that they should be handed over straightaway.

Mr. Mohammad Ali made the point that all the financial agreements had been made on their own merits. With this Mr. Gopalaswami Ayyangar agreed, but gave his view that the whole background in reaching these agreements had been the intention to reach an overall settlement.

I asked to what extent the action of making a reference to U.N.O. could be taken as a détente to stop the fighting and lead to a decision to implement the financial agreements.

Nehru did not answer this. Instead he said that the fighting was taking place on Indian Dominion territory, which had been attacked. He said (though this was on the spur of the moment and rather a hurried remark) that he admitted that the delay in implementing the financial agreements was a method of bringing pressure against the Pakistan Government. But this was not the main pressure that was being brought to bear. The military pressure, which was in reply to aggressive military pressure against Indian territory, was of greater import.

This gave Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan the opportunity to point out that he did not recognize Kashmir as Indian Dominion territory -- in exactly the same way as India did not recognize Junagadh as Pakistan territory. These remarks did not improve the atmosphere of the meeting.

I then emphasized that the agreement to make a reference on Kashmir to U.N.O. had been reached the previous evening before the question of the date of implementing the financial agreements arose. Therefore, there was no question of pressure having been applied to Pakistan in order to make them agree to this procedure.

Pandit Nehru reiterated that the reference which he intended to make to U.N.O. would be on the question of whether or not Pakistan had supported the aggression against Kashmir. All the evidence which was available to him showed that they had supported this to a most serious degree.

Pandit Nehru then handed to Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan the letter, which represented the first step in making a reference to U.N.O. Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan was in such a bitter mood that he first said that he did not wish to open or read this letter. But he subsequently repented, read it through, and undertook to send a reply as soon as possible -- after he had consulted his Government. I suggested that Pandit Nehru should draft the formal application to U.N.O. without waiting for Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan's reply, so that this could be dispatched with the least possible delay. Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan then returned to the question of the implementation of the financial agreements, concerning which he confessed that he was very bitter. He said that he regarded the delay in implementation as equal to, if not worse than, repudiation. He would indeed have preferred complete repudiation.

Mr. Mohammad Ali made further reference to the financial position of Pakistan.
The Rs. 20 crores which had been made available to them before August 15 were now nearing exhaustion. However, leaving aside all other possible sources of raising cash, there was no question at all of Pakistan running out of funds. Therefore, there was no question of pressure being applied in India's delay in making available Pakistan's share of the cash balances. He repeated his opinion that the attitude of the Government of India was not helping towards a settlement of the Kashmir issue, but rather the opposite. It was "putting up the backs" of the Pakistan Government.

To this Mr. Gopalaswami Ayyanagar replied that the assistance which Pakistan was giving to the raiders was "putting up the backs" of the Indian Ministers to a far greater extent.

Pandit Nehru then weighed in with the remarks which I had hoped that he would refrain from making. He said that the normal military action for India would be to hit out at the concentrations of raiders, their bases and supply lines (which were, of course, situated in Pakistan territory). However, the Government of India wished to avoid any action which was likely to lead to war, and was restraining itself. Nevertheless, it was an impossible position that a territory which should be friendly was being used as a base for operations. In his view the situation would now either improve rapidly, or deteriorate rapidly. He advocated that all concerned should now work for rapid improvement; the rest would follow.

I suggested that no publicity of any kind should be given either to the proposed reference to U.N.O. or to the question of the date of implementing the financial agreements. With this Pandit Nehru agreed. Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan agreed with the first point, but not with the second. He said that he wished to reserve his position with regard to publicity over the implementation of the financial agreements.
New Delhi, December 22, 1947.

Dear Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan,

On various occasions, I have drawn your attention to the aid which the raiders into Kashmir State are deriving from Pakistan. They have free transit through Pakistan territory. They are operating against Kashmir from bases in Pakistan. Their modern military equipment could only have been obtained from Pakistan sources; mortars, artillery and Mark V-mines are not normally the kind of armament which tribesmen possess. Motor transport, which the raiders have been using, and the petrol required for it, could also be obtained in Pakistan only. Food and other supplies are also secured from Pakistan; indeed, we have reliable reports that the raiders get their rations from military messes in Pakistan indeed, we have reliable reports that the raiders are receiving military training in Pakistan, which could only be under officers of the Pakistan Army.

2. The forms of aid, enumerated in the preceding paragraph, which the raiders are receiving, constitute an act of aggression against India because they are being used against a State which has acceded to the Indian Dominion. The Government of India, while protesting against the action of the Pakistan Government in furnishing or allowing such assistance to be furnished and urging that the Pakistan Government should stop such help and at least urge the raiders to withdraw, has so far taken no action itself which might involve entry by Indian forces into Pakistan territory. They have been hoping, all these weeks, though with diminishing hope, that the Pakistan Government themselves would put a stop to aid to the raiders which is of the nature of help to India's enemies. Since protests have failed to bear fruit, the Government of India now formally ask the Government of Pakistan to deny to the raiders:

(1) all access to and use of Pakistan territory for operations against Kashmir;

(2) all military and other supplies;

(3) all other kinds of aid that might tend to prolong the present struggle.

3. The Government of India have always desired and still earnestly desire to live on terms of friendship with Pakistan. They sincerely hope that the request which they have now formally made will be acceded to promptly and without reserve. Failing such response, they will be compelled to take such action, consistently with the provisions of the United Nations Charter, as they may consider necessary to protect their interests, and to discharge their obligations to the Government and people of Kashmir.

Yours Sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru

Hon'ble Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan
Prime Minister
Government of Pakistan
Karachi.

2037. Note of Chief of Staff of Governor General Lord Ismay on Meeting between Nehru and Liaquat Ali Khan.

New Delhi, December 28, 1947.

The Prime Ministers talked along for well over an hour and then invited me to join them. The following is a summary of the points which they raised in my presence on the subject of the Draft Kashmir Agreement which had been prepared by officials as a basis of discussion:-

(i) with regard to the question of small contingents of Indian troops being left at certain points in Kashmir, Pandit Nehru said that he understood that Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan was prepared to agree in principle to the retention of a small number of Indian troops in Kashmir after the withdrawal of the bulk of the Indian forces, but that he desired information in regard to the number and the class composition of these detachments and the points at which it was proposed to station them. Pandit Nehru had undertaken to consult his military advisers.

(ii) In the above connection Pandit Nehru thought that "certain points on the frontier" was not exactly what was intended. It would be better to say "at certain selected points."

(iii) Lord Ismay said that if there had been any hope of the Draft Agreement being announced today, he would have suggested that the concluding passage of paragraph 2 (a) of the Draft should read as follows: After "Kashmir territory" insert full stop and then the following sentence:-
"Both Governments recognize however that, following on the upheaval in Kashmir, the resources of Kashmir State are not at present adequate to maintain law and order. They further recognize that the maintenance of law and order in Kashmir during the period which will elapse between the withdrawal of the bulk of the Indian forces and the holding of the plebiscite is essential if the plebiscite is to be free and unfettered. Accordingly, both Governments have agreed that small detachments of Indian troops of minimum strength to deal with disturbances in Kashmir, whether from outside or inside the State, will be stationed at certain selected points. The strength and composition of these detachments and the points at which they are to be stationed will be the subject of discussion between the two Governments."

Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan asked that the above formula might be placed on record in case it should prove useful.

(iv) Lord Ismay also suggested that the following sentence might be inserted in line 9 of paragraph 2(a) after the words "as quickly as possible": "The Government of Pakistan have also undertaken to do their utmost to prevent any future incursions of tribesmen into Kashmir."

(v) Pandit Nehru said that he had agreed with Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan that Paragraph 2(b) should commence as follows:-

"On the cessation of hostilities an approach shall be made etc."

(vi) With regard to Paragraph c(i), both Prime Ministers had agreed that the word "free" should be substituted for the word "welcome".

(vii) Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan had suggested that the population of Kashmir should have proportionate representation in the army, police and levies of Kashmir State. Pandit Nehru had doubted whether this was practicable but said that he would think it over and perhaps mention it to the Maharaja.

(viii) Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan had said that he had stipulated that it would be very difficult, if not impossible, for him to call off the tribes unless he could promise them :-

(a) the withdrawal of all Indian troops,

(b) a fair and unfettered plebiscite, and

(c) an impartial administration during the period which would elapse between (a) and ((b).
Now it was proposed that there should be a qualified withdrawal of troops and that there should be a distinctly impartial administration during the interim period. Unless some more satisfactory arrangement could be made in regard to these points he did not see how he could induce the tribesmen to withdraw.

(ix) The two Prime Ministers have agreed that the legal position of Hunza, Nagar and Chitral should be examined. Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan explained that Hunza and Nagar had applied to accede to Pakistan, but their accession had not been accepted pending a clarification of the legal position. Meanwhile, he had heard that a telegram had been received from Hunza to the effect that if they were not allowed to accede to Pakistan they would accede to Russia.

(x) Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan gave a description of the position in Gilgit. The Dogra troops had been disarmed and had left the country: a provisional Government had been set up and the Gilgit Scouts were in charge and functioning. He suggested that the forcible occupation of Gilgit would be a task beyond the powers of the Indian armed forces.

2038. Telegram from the UK Prime Minister C. Attlee to Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru.

Many thanks for the message* dated 28th December which I have received through our High Commissioner in New Delhi on the subject of Kashmir. I am grateful to you for keeping me informed of developments and, believe me, I and my colleagues share your anxiety to the full.

2. I note that your appeal to the Security Council is being sent tomorrow. Much as I regret that the situation should have developed in such a way as to

* Nehru in his message informed Attlee that his meeting with Liaquat Ali Khan had been fruitless despite India giving him enough proof of Pakistan rendering all sort of help to the raiders. The intense pressure under which Indian forces had come from the invaders with the help of Pakistan had created a military situation compelling India to strike at their bases inside Pakistan. Nehru felt confident that "Such a step would be justifies in international law as we are entitled to take it in self-defence." Nehru informed Attlee that he was asking the UN to ask Pakistan to take immediate and effective action to deny to the raiders the use of its territory and military help but warned that this request was "without prejudice to the freedom of the Government of India to take, at any time, such military action as they may consider necessary in exercise of their right of self-defence."
cause you to submit an appeal of the kind. I agree that it now seems that it is only under the authority of the United Nations that a settlement can be achieved.

3. It is obviously important that there should be no delay in the handling of the matter by the Security Council and we will do our best through our representative that it achieves very early consideration. In the meantime I beg you, as a friend, that whatever the provocation and whatever the immediate difficulties you should do nothing which might lead to war, with all its incalculable consequences, between the two Dominions.

4. May I say, in all frankness, that I am gravely disturbed by your assumption that India would be within her rights in international law if she were to move forces into Pakistan in self-defence. I doubt whether this is in fact correct juridically and I am positive that it would be fatal from every other point of view. It would, in my opinion, place India definitely in the wrong in the eyes of the world; and I can assure you from our experience on international bodies that it would gravely prejudice India’s case before U.N.O., if, after having appealed to the Security Council, she were to take unilateral action of this kind.

5. From our experience here I think you are very optimistic in concluding that your proposed military action would bring about a speedy solution. On the contrary, all military history goes to show how difficult it is to deal with the tribes of the North West Frontier even when one is operating from secure bases.

6. If, however, a peaceful settlement is brought about through the agency of the Security Council it will redound greatly to the credit of India who laid the matter before that body and will enhance the reputation already achieved by her internationally.

7. The United Kingdom Government will naturally do their best on the Security Council to support any measures likely to achieve a peaceful settlement. If in the meantime, you think that there is anything helpful which we, as a sister member of the Commonwealth, could do assist in ameliorating the situation, you can of course count on us.

8. I have not so far heard anything recently from Liaquat and am, accordingly, not informing him of the terms of this message.

2039. Extracts of the Letter from Pakistan Prime Minister Liaquat Ali Khan to Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru.

Please refer to your demi-official letter, dated the 22nd December, in which you have brought formal charges against the Pakistan Government for aiding and abetting the so-called 'invaders' of Kashmir in their fight against the forces of the Maharaja and of the Indian Dominion.

2. Despite the ominous hint contained in paragraph three, I trust I am right in assuming that your letter is not an 'Ultimatum' but a forerunner of a formal reference of the matter to the UNO. If so, nothing could be more welcome, for, you will recollect, this is exactly what the Pakistan Government has been suggesting throughout as the most effective method of ironing out our mutual differences. I am therefore sincerely glad to find that you propose at last to adopt this particular line of approach to our problem.

3. I must, however, confess my disappointment that your proposal apparently restricts the reference to the single issue of Kashmir. The episode of Kashmir considered by itself would look like a sentence torn out of its context. It is but an act in the unparalleled tragedy which is being enacted before our eyes ever since the announcement of the scheme of partition. A reference to the UNO therefore in my opinion must cover much larger ground and embrace all the fundamentals of the differences between the two Dominions. As I see it, it is neither Kashmir alone nor Junagadh and Manavadar, nor even the terrible tragedy of wholesale massacres of Muslim men, women and children in extensive areas of the Indian Dominion, but a totality of these horrors and iniquities, indicating but one consistent, sinister pattern which should rightly form the subject matter of international investigation. If the root causes of the evil which is vitiating our relations are not determined and removed it is much to be feared that fresh incidents will continue to threaten the peace not only between the two Dominions, but in a much wider field.

4. The case of Kashmir is simple and our attitude has been explained frankly and repeatedly both in our communications to you and our official statements to the press. The Pakistan Government has not accepted and cannot accept the so-called 'accession' of the Jammu and Kashmir State to India. We have said it before and repeat that the 'accession' was fraudulent in as much as it was achieved by deliberately creating certain conditions, with the object of finding an excuse to stage the 'accession'. It was based on violence because it furthered the plan of the Kashmir Government to liquidate the Muslim population of the State. The accession was against the well known will of an overwhelming majority of the population and could not be justified on any grounds whether moral or constitutional, geographical or economic, cultural or religious.

5. The sole responsibility for the disturbances which occurred in the State must squarely lie on the Maharaja and his Government who, despite the advice tendered by the Pakistan Government, persisted in their policy of repression of Muslims. Repression was followed by resistance, particularly in the area of Poonch which is inhabited by a large number of ex-soldiers. The resistance in its turn was met with more repression till the Dogra savagery supported by the brutality of Sikh and Rashtriya Sewak Sangh bands created a reign of terror in the State. This state of affairs naturally aroused strong feelings of sympathy throughout Pakistan, particularly among the Muslims living in the contiguous areas who had numerous ties of relationship with the persecuted people of the State. Some of these people went across to assist their kinsmen in their struggle for freedom and indeed for existence itself. The stage was thus set for the pre-planned intervention by the forces of the Indian Dominion to quell this spontaneous popular rising against the culmination of the age long tyranny of the Dogra rule. The repeated warnings of the Pakistan Government went unheeded. This hasty and ill-advised action completely changed the picture and the Frontier tribesmen, a ferociously freedom-loving people, naturally took up the challenge in support of their Kashmiri co-religionists fighting for their survival and liberation. If the Government of India had extended to the Pakistan Government the courtesy of consulting it before embarking on its enterprise and suddenly landing troops in Kashmir, or even notifying Pakistan of its proposed action, thus providing an opportunity for discussion and consultation, it might have been possible to avert the tragedy of Kashmir. The action of the Government of India served to swell the torrent of popular resentment until it became impossible for the Pakistan Government to stem it without embarking on large-scale military operations.

6. As regards the charges of aid and assistance to the 'invaders' by the Pakistan Government we emphatically repudiate them. On the contrary, and solely with the object of maintaining friendly relations between the two Dominions, the Pakistan Government have continued to do all in their power to discourage the tribal movements by all means short of war. This has caused bitter resentment throughout the country, but despite a very serious risk of large-scale internal disturbances the Pakistan Government has not deviated from the policy.

7. In view of this background it would not be surprising if some nationals of Pakistan were taking part in the struggle for the liberation of Kashmir along with the forces of the Azad Kashmir Government. You must have already heard of an International Brigade composed of representatives of many nations in the world who are likewise fighting on the side of the Azad Kashmir Government. In regard to the modern military equipment that you allege to be in the possession of the Azad Kashmir forces, our information is that these forces are poorly equipped and such few modern weapons as they might possess have either been captured from the Dogra and Indian troops or have been in the possession of the ex-soldiers of Poonch since the days of the British. As you know there are large numbers of Poonchis in the Pakistan Army and if some of them while on leave in their homes rendered assistance to their kith and kin in defence of their hearths and homes, it is scarcely to be wondered at.

8. On the contrary, it is the Indian Government which must answer the charge of conspiracy with the Maharaja of Kashmir in repudiation of the very principles on which it had only one month before opposed Junagadh's accession to Pakistan. The plea that the accession is only temporary pending restoration of peaceful conditions is too flimsy to stand examination, particularly in the light of recent negotiations in the course of which a perfectly fair and workable plan of withdrawal of opposing forces followed by a referendum under impartial aegis, suggested by us, was turned down by your Government. But all this fits in with the general 'pattern' of the India Government's political attitude towards Pakistan ever since it became evident that Partition was the only possible solution of our constitutional problems.

In this connection it is of interest to note that the arguments advanced by India for refusing to accept the accession of Junagadh to Pakistan have been conveniently and completely ignored in connection with the accession of Kashmir to the Indian Dominion. This again is fully in keeping with the general political attitude of India towards Pakistan.

16. These are not the only examples of aggression against Pakistan territory. Numerous raids by armed bands, assisted by the police and military, have taken place across the border into Pakistan. The Royal Indian Air Force have made repeated attacks on Pakistan territory causing damage to life and property.

To sum up, our counter charges against the Dominion of India are as follows:

(i) That India has never wholeheartedly accepted the Partition scheme but her leaders paid lip service to it merely in order to get the British troops out of the country;

(ii) That India is out to destroy the State of Pakistan which her leaders persistently continue to regard as part of India itself;

(iii) That the systematic sabotage against the implementation of Partition, the stoppage of such essential requirements as coal and rail transport, the deliberate withholding of Pakistan's share of funds and arms and equipment, the wholesale massacres of Muslim population are all designed towards one aim, namely, the destruction of Pakistan;
(iv) That India's forcible occupation of Junagadh, Manavadar and other States in Kathiawar which had acceded to Pakistan, as well as the fraudulent procurement of the accession of Jammu and Kashmir State are acts of hostility against Pakistan whose destruction is India's immediate objective.

19. I however note with pleasure your assurance that the Government of India have always desired and still earnestly desire to live on terms of friendship with Pakistan. On behalf of the Pakistan Government I fully and sincerely reciprocate this desire. I am constrained, however, to observe that the Government of India have at no stage afforded any practical proof of their desire to live on terms of friendship with Pakistan, more particularly in the case of Junagadh and Kashmir. On my side I can assure you that the earnest desire of the Government of Pakistan to live on terms of friendship with India has in many instances restrained the Government of Pakistan from taking action which would not only have been legally justifiable, but was in several instances urgently called for, and yet was not adopted in the hope that the attitude of the Government of India might even during these later stages be more favourably affected towards Pakistan. I find it more and more difficult to persuade myself to continue to entertain that hope. The course of events, very briefly set out above, would normally have been treated as a chain of aggression justifying extreme action on the part of the aggrieved Government. Now that your letter of 22 December 1947 has indicated an intention on the part of the Government of India to invite the intervention of the United Nations, a course which the Pakistan Governments has so far ineffectively suggested to the Government of India for the resolving of their differences, I have taken this opportunity to invite your attention to the main heads of differences between the two governments that stand in the way of an amicable adjustment of our relations. It is my most earnest hope that these differences may be speedily composed and that our relations will thereafter ever continue to be on the most cordial, co-operative and friendly basis. I trust you will agree that the intervention of the United Nations, whatever from it is to take, should be invited in respect of all these matters, so that all pending differences may be speedily resolved.

Yours sincerely
Liaquat Ali Khan

Hon'ble Mr. Jawaharlal Nehru
Prime Minister,
Government of India
New Delhi.

Pandit Nehru asked me what I thought of the appeal to U.N.O. I congratulated him on this, and said I thought it was a masterly draft, but I regretted that it included the statement that India reserved the right to take direct action in Pakistan territory if this proved necessary. I pointed out that psychologically this could not help offending the members of the Security Council for they would be bound to feel that it was a form of threat: "If you don't jolly well hurry up, we will take the law into our own hands."

Pandit Nehru assured me that this was far from the impression they wished to convey, and that he was confident that U.N.O. would act quickly without this.

The Prime Minister told me how very upset he had been that in spite of immense precautions of secrecy to ensure that no news of the appeal to U.N.O. leaked to the press before U.N.O. itself released the information from New York, this had in fact appeared in full in all the papers that morning.

I told him that I thought that this was most unfortunate and I had been surprised to read it in the papers. He assured me that everyone in the Cabinet had realized the great need for secrecy, and that nobody outside the Cabinet Ministers, the Cabinet Secretariat and a few trusted officials had known about it except for the acting High Commissioner for the U.K. and his secretary whom he did not suspect.
Letter from the American Embassy to Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru.
New Delhi, January 2, 1948.

American Embassy
New Delhi, India

No. 2., January 2, 1948

Excellency,

I have the honour to transmit to your Excellency the following views of my Government regarding the Kashmir problem:

"The United States of America as a firm friend of both India and Pakistan regrets that they have been unable by direct negotiation to solve the Kashmir problem. It now appears that the United Nations Security Council will soon be seized of this issue. The Government of the United States of America will respond fully to its obligations as a member of the Security Council to assist in the attainment of an early and peaceful settlement. We are certain that such a settlement can be achieved only if during the critical period when this question is under the consideration of the Security Council the Government of India and the Government of Pakistan will not only refrain from taking any provocative action but will also restrain those irresponsible elements on both sides who are not alive to the grave consequences of their actions. We fear that precipitate action by either Government at this stage would seriously jeopardize the international goodwill and prestige which it now enjoys.

"For your information an identical message is being delivered to the Government of Pakistan."

In this connection, I should like to express to Your Excellency the appreciation of the Embassy for the courtesy of your Government in keeping the Embassy informed through the medium of Sir Girja Shankar Bajpai, the Secretary-General of the Ministry of External Affairs, of the policy of the Government of India regarding the situation in Kashmir, and the steps which the Government of India is taking for its settlement.

Accept, Excellency, the renewed assurance of my highest consideration.

Charge d'Affaires ad interim

His Excellency
Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru
Minister of External Affairs
And Commonwealth Relations
New Delhi.

Note from the Minister for External Affairs to the Embassy of the United States of America.

New Delhi, January 3, 1948.

1. The Minister for External Affairs and Commonwealth Relations presents his compliments to the Charge d’Affairs ad interim of the United States of America and has the honour to acknowledge the receipt of his note dated the 2nd January, 1948.

2. The Government of India appreciate the friendly interest of the Government of the United States of America in a pacific settlement of the Kashmir issue. In the note submitted by them to the Security Council, there is ample evidence of the efforts made by the Government of India to settle this matter by friendly negotiation with the Government of Pakistan and of the patience which they have shown in the face of acts of aggression against their forces and their territory. They feel that they would have been within their right in entering Pakistan territory in order to strike at bases, situated in that territory, from which the invaders of Jammu and Kashmir State have been and still are operating. That they have, instead, preferred to invoke the aid of the Security Council is proof of their devotion to peace and of their loyalty to the principles of the Charter of the United Nations. They are not aware that there are, in India, any ‘irresponsible elements’ who are likely to indulge in provocative action while the Kashmir question is being considered by the Security Council; they certainly have no intention of doing so themselves. All that they desire is that the people of Jammu and Kashmir should be free as quickly as possible from the horrors of invasion and thus enabled to determine their future by their freely declared will. They will be grateful if, through their representative on the Security Council, the Government of the United States of America will help in the speedy achievement of this object.

The Charge d’Affairs ad interim
Of the United States of America in India,
New Delhi.

My dear Krishna,

This letter is being taken by H.M. Patel who is going with General Bucher and Chanda to London. The main purpose of their visit is to enquire about military equipment, specially arms, and make arrangements for their purchase; also to find out, if possible, how far we can increase our petrol quota. Rather suddenly and without any adequate reason this quota has been very seriously reduced. We are inclined to think that this is due to political reasons, that is a desire to bring pressure upon us. There is no doubt that if our petrol quota is substantially reduced, we shall be gravely embarrassed. To some extent this might even affect our military operations. So it is very necessary to get it increased. Of course we do not propose to change any Important policy of ours because of such pressure.

2. We are also anxious to explore possibilities of adding to our petrol production in India. There has been some talk of this for some time with oil companies, American I think, but thus far they have not accepted our conditions which meant some kind of governmental control. Unfortunately this search for petrol requires very specialised knowledge and great resources. Probably only a few major concerns can take it up. Apart from the Russian oil concerns, the rest are tied up in big combines. The Russians are beyond our reach and we are thus forced to submit to the terms of these major combines. There seems to be no way out. Naturally we shall try to get the best terms possible. I am not sure that H.M. Patel and company will be able to do anything in regard to this matter. You will advise them.

3. As a long-term policy, we are trying to push ahead with the production of power alcohol and liquid fuel from coal.

4. Bucher was not originally going with this party. But Mountbatten thought that he should go, and we have agreed. Mountbatten was of the opinion that he might be helpful indirectly in explaining the Kashmir situation to some people there, specially General Scoon and others who accompanied Noel-Baker to

* Pt. Nehru lived here before moving to Teen Murti House.
Lake Success. Bucher or others are not supposed to talk on a political level with Noel-Baker or anyone else. We have made that clear to them and told them that such talks should take place through the High Commissioner. But they have been generally informed of the present position and our stand. Bucher has done good work here and I rather like him. Over the Kashmir issue he feels strongly that Pakistan has mis-behaved and is generally responsible for much that has happened. It might serve some little purpose if his independent view was placed forcibly before Noel-Baker, Scoon and others. Of course this must be done rather informally. It is not his business or H.M. Patel's to discuss the purely political aspects of the question.

5. A telegram has been sent to you today informing you of our present position in regard to Kashmir. It is not basically different from that taken up by Gopalaswami Ayyangar before the Security Council. There are one or two minor variations to which we may agree if they are suggested by others.

6. Two other points might subsequently arise. One is the possibility of Kashmir being considered more or less independent and guaranteed as which by India, Pakistan and possibly the U. N. The other is the possibility of some kind of partition either by previous agreement or as a result of the vote. I do not fancy either of these; but I do not wish to rule them out altogether. We are not going to put either of these forward unless circumstances more or less compel us.

7. The British attitude, to begin with, that is six months ago, was definitely in favour of Kashmir going to Pakistan. Subsequently they have talked of partition, meaning thereby that Jammu should come to India and Kashmir Valley and the rest should go to Pakistan. This is totally unacceptable to us. The real bone of contention is the Kashmir Valley. Even Mountbatten has at various times hinted at partition. Recent suggestions referred to the Poonch-Mirpur area being added on to Pakistan while Kashmir Valley, Jammu etc., might remain with India.

8. As I have said above, I dislike all this and we do not propose to say anything about it. If, however, such suggestions are put forward by others, we might consider them at a later stage.

9. Gordon Walker, the Under Secretary, saw me this evening. We talked about Kashmir and, as is usual with such people, he was very friendly and understanding. It is impossible for me to make out how far this outward agreement leads to. We have had rather bitter experience. Almost every Ambassador here has been assuring us of his understanding sympathy for our position in Kashmir and yet his Government goes against us in the Security Council.
10. Gordon Walker admitted that there could be no question of our withdrawing our troops; further that he did not say much about any change in the Government. I pointed out to him that if necessary Shaikh Abdullah might agree to take in one or two members of the Muslim Conference in Kashmir. That was the farthest we could go. Then Gordon Walker rather vaguely asked me if voting could not take place in such a way as to facilitate, if necessary later, a possible division. He emphasised that he was not suggesting a partition but merely wanted to think in terms of possible contingencies. Of course any voting by constituencies or zones can be used for this purpose.

11. If voting did take place in this way, it might result in a Pakistan majority in the Poonch-Mirpur area and Gilgit. Very probably the Kashmir Valley and the rest of Jhelum Province and Ladak etc would vote for India. If the worst comes to the worst, I am prepared to accept the Poonch and Gilgit area being partitioned off, though this would mean a serious blow to the State and would make Srinagar’s position insecure.

12. I am mentioning all this to you in confidence so as to keep you in touch with the working of our minds. But we are not going to put all this forward in any way before the Security Council. We shall adhere there to our previous position with, possibly later, the two variations that have been pointed out to you,

13. It is evident that the U.K. Government are rather apprehensive of developments. Gordon Walker has been talking to Senanayake of Ceylon asking him if, in case of necessity, he could accommodate British evacuees from India. Walker mentioned this apologetically to me adding that he did not think that there was any chance of such necessity arising. I told him that we could have no objection to their removing Britishers if and when they wanted to do so; if necessary we would help them in the process; but I did not think there was any chance of this being necessary.

14. On the whole the possibility of a formal conflict between India and Pakistan has receded into the background. This has been one of the results of our reference to the U.N. The announcement that a Commission might come over to inquire led Pakistan immediately to break up some of their large concentrations near the Kashmir border and spread out these people in other parts of the Province of West Punjab. Reports also indicate that the general war atmosphere of Lahore and West Punjab has toned down considerably. I do not think, therefore, that there is much chance of war. We seem to have passed that crisis.

15. The military situation is, on the whole, favourable to us and appears to be steadily but slowly improving. It is quite possible that we may make some advances in the Jammu region within the next few days. But Banihal Pass will open for traffic in another two weeks and this will enable us to send more troops to the Kashmir Valley. All this does not mean that we can push out raiders from the entire State territory. Poonch will be a hard nut to crack. It does mean that we shall be, on the whole, aggressive and will slowly advance.

16. A message was brought to me today from Attlee suggesting again that I might meet Liaquat Ali and try to come to a settlement. I do not know what Attlee means by going on repeating this. I suppose his main object is to get the U.K. out of the difficulty they are in. Gordon Walker also pressed this. I told him that we are always willing to meet Liaquat Ali and in fact we have met him many times. But in the present context there was not the least possibility of his agreeing to anything worth-while. The Security Council proceedings will not encourage him to come to terms with us. As a matter of fact we invited Liaquat Ali to a Joint Defence Council meeting next week. He has stated in reply that he cannot come here till the middle of March because of the Pakistan Constituent Assembly. So that is that.

17. Gordon Walker said that according to his information, Pakistan must be very worried about the Tribal people in West Punjab, and this might induce them to come to terms with us. I have no doubt that Pakistan is worried. But the rest does not follow. Indeed any attempt to settle the Kashmir issue with us might well lead to large numbers of additional Pathans swooping down on West Punjab.

18. I suppose you will see Noel-Baker. He is your old Professor and friend. I think he has behaved very badly in the Security Council and he ought to be made to realise how we feel about it all. It appears that most of his advisers were of the wrong sort. It is evident that the U.K. Delegation were pulling the strings at Lake Success. Some of the propositions made by the U.K. and U.S.A. were monstrous.

19. We are approaching the U.S.A. Ambassador here as well as other Ambassadors on the lines indicated in our telegram to you. We hope that these diplomatic approaches as well as the realization on the part of the UK and USA that we are not going to give up our position will make a difference. Legally and morally we are on strong grounds and I see no reason, whatever why we should surrender either to the gangster tactics of Pakistan and the raiders or to the attempts at bullying by UK and USA. Naturally we do not want to have to reject the final advice of the Security Council. But if this goes too far, then we have no alternative but to reject it and face the consequences.

20. Gopalaswamy will probably return about the end of this month or early in March. We would like him to pass through London and to see Attlee and others. Shaikh Abdullah will not go back. He is required in Kashmir. Probably within the next few days he will be made Prime Minister and will form his ministry there.

Yours affectionately,
(Jawaharlal Nehru)

2044. Speech of Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru on Kashmir.

Srinagar, May 11, 1948.

The Kashmir problem involves issues which affect not only India but the world. The Security Council in handling the Kashmir issue has discussed all sorts of irrelevant questions and arrived at a strange decision while ignoring the main issue. If the United Nations takes a wrong decision, it is likely to affect world peace.

India wanted the Kashmir question to be settled constitutionally but a barbarous invasion has ruined her plans. I regret the hardships the Kashmirs are suffering and hope they will be progressively lessened. As a Kashmiri I feel it very deeply, but I will not be influenced by personal sentiments. The Government of India took the decision they did, after carefully considering the pros and cons. If the method adopted by the invaders is justified, it will only mean that might is right.

Our position today is the same as in last October when Indian forces were sent to Kashmir. The raiders, who devastated towns and villages, massacred the people, abducted women and looted property, must be thrown out in the quickest possible time. We know what happened at Baramulla, Rajauri and other places and can imagine what would have happened if Srinagar had fallen.

Countries like the U.S. have shown that religion has nothing to do with citizenship. India’s freedom is based on equal rights, irrespective of creed, colour or religion, and I stand by the secular character of the Indian state.

The colonial government created communal divisions and encouraged the growth of religious parties. Partially we ourselves are also to blame. Mahatma Gandhi’s foremost ideal was to create communal harmony, but growth and development of communal parties eventually led to the partition of India, and the partition, based on the two-nation theory, led to bloodshed and misery. History will judge whether we were right in agreeing to the partition, though we agreed to it with good intentions.

Pakistan is creating a poisonous atmosphere. However, in Kashmir, under the leadership of Sheikh Abdullah, Muslims and Hindus regard Kashmir as their motherland. There is communal amity. This is a big achievement.

Many houses evacuated by the Muslims in Delhi are kept vacant although non-Muslim refugees coming from different parts of Pakistan need shelter. These houses are being given back to the Muslims returning to Delhi. Recently nearly 50,000 Muslims returned to Delhi while a number of Muslims are still fleeing Sind and other parts of Pakistan and coming into India. This has created formidable difficulties for resettlement, but whatever the difficulties, the Government will stick to what they consider a right decision. I have no doubt in my mind that India will become one of the greatest powers, because she believes in certain fundamental principles.

Pakistan is following a different course, although it claims that its citizens have equal right. The conditions, however, do not conform to these claims. But circumstances will make Pakistan change this course.

The Indian troops have discharged their responsibilities and helped the refugees, both Hindu and Muslim, in a praiseworthy manner. The real celebrations will be when there is peace throughout Kashmir. We must be united in pursuit of India’s high ideals, and I hope that the union between Kashmir and India will be everlasting.

5th October 1948

My dear Vijaya Lakshmi Ji,

I send herewith the latest issue of the New Times carrying a very significant article on Kashmir which gives what may be regarded as the official Soviet view on the Kashmir problem. It will be very important to you when the Kashmir question comes up for discussion. In so far as our dispute with Pakistan is concerned the, article I think is favourable. It is only in its assessment of the supposed influence of the Indian Government on the internal, affairs of Kashmir that the article goes wrong, and adopts a line which is now getting very familiar. Most significant of all is the last paragraph. The Soviets might well take the line in U.N.O. that while our case against Pakistan is proved, the Indian Army should also be withdrawn from Kashmir as early as possible leaving the people free to make their own choice. It might be that the Soviets hope that Kashmir would decide to join neither Dominion in which case “the warm feelings of friendship towards the Soviet Union in Kashmir” referred to in the penultimate paragraph will find, free and unfettered scope for their development. If, however, the choice were to lie between India and Pakistan, Soviet Russia would, despite her present disappointment with trends in India, prefer India as Pakistan is definitely considered to be a British stooge.

Yours sincerely,

Sd - R. Dayal

May 17, 1949.

Nano dear

I received your letter of the 10th May today. I have now been back just ten days from England and Switzerland and they have been, as you can well imagine, pretty busy days.

Today the Constituent Assembly ratified the London Agreement on India and the Commonwealth. After a dull two days’ debate, proceedings rather warmed up towards the end and my last speech apparently produced some effect. In the end there was only Hazrat Mohani’s lonely voice that protested. Probably if there had been voting, three persons might have voted against - Hazrat Mohani, Shibbanlal Saxena and K.T. Shah. This particular matter is for the time being closed, though it will be discussed in the A.I.C.C. at the end of this week at Dehra Dun.

My particular headaches of the present moment are: Kashmir, Refugee problem, food situation and the general economic situation. The latter two are rather inter-related. Generally speaking it might be said that both the food and the economic situation are static with just a slight indication towards improvement. It may be that the current harvest, which has been good all the world over, may improve the food situation and bring down the wheat price and it is the price of wheat that governs everything. In any event we hope to give concentrated attention to this food and economic problem after a few weeks. You will remember Boyd Orr who came here. He has given a slightly alarmist report.

Kashmir has been giving me a great deal of trouble in two ways. The Kashmir Commission has presented proposals which we do not like at all and which we are practically rejecting. I do not know what Pakistan will do. If Pakistan more or less accepts them, this may go rather against us in the Security Council later. But we have found from experience that acceptance of vague formulae which are capable of various interpretations, is a dangerous business. Pakistan is amazingly unscrupulous and sometimes it almost appears that unscrupulousness pays. Meanwhile Pakistan is going full steam ahead with military preparations. Indeed their last Budget devoted, I think, about 65 crores out of 70 crores of revenue to military purposes. I do not remember the exact figures, but this is a rough estimate. This is fantastic and it can only be done through current cash in hand. They got a large sum from us after partition and they have apparently squandered it completely on their military. It is difficult to understand how Pakistan can carry on in this way for more than a year or two. They are functioning as a military state hoping to make good by war or by threats of war. Their idea appears to be to settle their refugee problem also by sending them to Kashmir. This is based on the assumption that the Hindus and possibly a number of Muslims will run away from Kashmir with the threat of Pakistan coming there.

The other headache about Kashmir is due to the activities of the Maharaja and Shaikh Abdullah in contrary directions. On the whole Shaikh Abdullah has recently been more irresponsible of the two and has made some very foolish statements. We have just had long conferences with Abdullah, Bakshi and others, and the Maharaja and the Maharani are here also. As a result some kind of agreement is in sight. Of course new troubles are bound to come and we should not complain if they do come.

I am quite clear in my mind, as I have been for sometime past, that it was the right policy for us to continue in the Commonwealth on the terms and conditions we laid down and which were accepted. It would have been dangerous for us to isolate ourselves and risky for us to slope too much towards the U.S. in the present context. That would have made it more difficult for us at any time to play the role of a friendly neutral to any of the parties concerned. It must be remembered also that with all the expressions of goodwill that are showered upon us from America, the State Department has been far from friendly. The recent Military Mission that we sent had a friendly reception in England, in Switzerland and even in America except for the State Department. As the State Department was what mattered in the US, the result was that our Military Mission did not achieve anything substantial in the US. In the U.N. Kashmir Commission it is the U.S. member, who is definitely and constantly hostile to us. In Indonesia, the U.S. policy has been even lately to bring continuous pressure on the Indonesian Republic to agree to Dutch terms.

In regard to Kashmir, you will remember the kind of hint or threat that was held out by some official of the State Department, when B.R. Sen went to discuss the U.N. Commission’s proposals. That is a sort of thing which does not make us feel very friendly towards the U.S. I am afraid I cannot get over the feeling that the U.S. diplomacy is immature or it is too sure of its physical might to care for the niceties of diplomatic behaviour. They have had a very bad set-back in China and they have not succeeded in many other places. And yet they have not wholly learnt their lesson yet. We rely upon them inevitably for many things and we want to be friends with them. But there are some things we just cannot swallow.

The Kashmir issue is still in the clouds. That is to say, the commission is sitting on it. From such accounts as we have had, Pakistan has also not accepted the proposals.

SECRET & PERSONAL

Extract from the letter of Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru to the High Commissioner in London Krishna Menon.

New Delhi, June 15, 1949.

My dear Krishna,

I have just learnt that Kaul is going to London tomorrow on his way to Washington. I am taking advantage of this to give him a letter to you.

This month of June has been a very troublesome one, so far as I am concerned. So many things have gone wrong and continue to go wrong. However, I suppose we have struck a bad patch and that we will be out of it sometime or other. I am looking forward at least to early July when I go to Ladakh for a week.

The U.N. Kashmir Commission people, or some of them, are back here again wanting elucidations and explanations. In effect this is a continuous attempt to tone down what we have previously said. We shall answer them in the gentlest manner, but we are not going to change the position we have taken up. Practically there are three points at issue. One is the disarmament and disbandment of the Azad forces. This is agreed to in principle by the Commission, though the actual method of implementing it might be argued about. (2) The withdrawal of our forces. We have made it clear that our withdrawal will depend not only upon the complete withdrawal of Pakistan regulars and irregulars, but also on the disbandment of the Azad forces. At any given time, we are going to keep enough forces to meet any possible danger, external or internal. Thirdly, the northern areas, including generally Baltistan, Ladakh, etc. The greater part of Ladakh is in our possession. So no question arises except one or two strategic points. Our general contention was that all these areas should be put directly under the Kashmir Government. There has been no regular occupation of these areas by any government during the past year. Roving military bands have captured some places here and there. Subsequently we varied this position and said that we were prepared to discuss the civil administration aspect later, but that we must hold certain strategic points in these northern areas. We did not specify these points, as we waited for the acceptance of the principle we had enunciated.

Even this we are slightly varying now. That is to say, we propose to indicate certain points, not very far from our present line, which we must have anyhow. In regard to the other strategic points, we are prepared not to occupy them now, provided that all Pakistan regular and irregular forces retire completely from all those areas and there is no internal trouble. If there is any such trouble, probably instigated by Pakistan, or any other danger to these areas, then we reserve the right to occupy some of the other strategic points in these northern areas. These areas, I might remind you, are very sparsely populated and gradually verge into the high mountains.

This is our present intention. Probably we shall give this reply as a kind of addendum to our previous letter tomorrow. Shaikh Abdullah is here today and so are our Military folk for consultation. I might mention that we consider it absolutely essential to hold the Kishenganga river in the North, the Burzil pass, Marol towards Ladakh and one or two other places.

* * * * *

The general situation in Kashmir has on the whole improved by the firm line we have adopted. There has been a good deal of shouting and cursing in Pakistan and even talk of war. Personally I do not think there is going to be any war. But one can never be sure, because propaganda in Pakistan has brought up public expectations to fever heat and the Azad forces might misbehave at any time. So we have to be prepared.

Prime Minister next spoke about U.S. policy regarding Kashmir again to illustrate the importance of approach and understanding of the psychology of persons with whom one deals.

Mr. Acheason’s message on Kashmir, for example, was extraordinary. It was an attempt to bring pressure to bear on the Government of India by means of threats of dire consequences. The present Government of India consists of men who have been trained during the struggle against the British to refuse to submit to coercion in any shape or form. Any attempt to press them with threats causes immediate reaction, the consequences of which will be exactly the opposite to those intended. Mr. Henderson rather apologetically explained that the phrasing of Mr. Acheason’s message was unfortunate and was, possibly, due to the influence of persons in the State Department who deal with more procedural matters than with policy matters.

PERSONAL

Extract from the letter from High Commissioner in London V. K. Krishna Menon to Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru.

London, March 5, 1950.

London, W.C.-2

My dear prime minister,

Since the receipt of your recent letters about Kashmir and Bengal, I have had a number of informal talks with Lord Addison. I have also discussed the position with Gordon Walker. Lord Addison has conveyed the substance of these to Attlee, and expressed his own deep concern. I gather that he expressed himself strongly on Cadogan’s speech. I am to see Attlee on Tuesday. Addison is very sympathetic to our position and appears to understand it very well. He told me frankly that he was doing his best. During our last talk he asked what constructive steps he should suggest. I had to be careful not to be very precise, and therefore dealt with the matter on the general line of their not treating Pakistan and us in the same way with regard to Kashmir and for the need for their expressing themselves strongly to Pakistan on East Bengal. He appeared impressed. We are to continue these talks next week.

I have also seen various newspaper people individually, and this is continuing. To a considerable extent it is their correspondents in Pakistan and India that seek to weight the scales against us. There is a tendency to believe that we may be thinking in terms of an inevitable conflict and that there is general talk of war in India. I did not see any tendency to condone Pakistan, but as usual there was a tendency to think that we could be persuaded or pressed with greater effect than they.

I think there is great need for one or two contact men (English) who are suitable for the purpose. Our own newspaper people here, with the exception of Parthasarathi, Gopalswamy Ayyangar’s son, are a liability and an adverse factor to us. The British representatives on our papers, like Matters, do not do any harm, and perhaps a little good. This cannot be said of the others. Therefore the spreading of our views in general conversations with newspaper men must be achieved in other ways. As a country we do far less in this way than even some very small countries. Hence my previous letter.

That Noel-Baker was not going back to the C.R.O. (Commonwealth Relations Office) was made known to me two or three days before the appointments. Gordon Walker’s posting to the C.R.O. is also intended to create better relations. I have also been told that senior officers of the C.R.O. were called and spoken to by Lord Addison. I have to find out what results all this has had in Attlee’s mind. The governmental position and the general feeling of concern in the country over its own affairs make things rather different than previously.

Although I have not written to you since I returned, I have not been inactive as far as work here is concerned. Time and energy however appear to be inadequate. Of my staff, Haksar alone is of any use for these purposes. He has been falling in lately. But I do not propose to write to you about these matters.

There is increased activity on the part of Pakistan to secure arms, particularly tanks. Nothing can go out of this country - in fact there are not any to be had. But they are buying elsewhere or trying to do so. In one or two instances this has been delayed, and perhaps brought to nought. Some information was received last week that they are trying to obtain some from Far East sources, Philippines and Formosa, but I have not checked on this. I am trying to obtain some information through various sources. I think it has become necessary to pursue these matters a little.

Dear Vijayalakshmi ji,

Many thanks for your secret and personal letters dated the 27th May; I got the two of them yesterday.

Sir Owen Dixon was here for five days. He had two talks with the Prime Minister and twice that number with me. Although the Prime Minister, during the first interview when I was present, went into some detail of our case against Pakistan in Kashmir, his second and all my conversations with Dixon were relatively brief and confined to a discussion of procedure. Dixon’s view and this is in harmony with the terms of the resolution of the Security Council which is his mandate, is that he must first explore the possibility of holding a plebiscite and, therefore, must take up the question of demilitarization before anything else. I told him that we fully understood this and would be prepared to discuss with him, at his convenience, the connected questions of the withdrawal of our troops and the withdrawal of Pakistan forces and the disbandment of the Azad Kashmir forces. I have made it clear that our own withdrawal will depend upon what Pakistan does about its own forces and those of the Azad Kashmir. I have also left him in no doubt that we shall stand firm by our claim to control the Northern Areas. I discouraged his suggestion that I should meet Zafrullah in a preliminary conference; such a conference would be a repetition of many previous ones and carry us no farther towards a solution. Dixon has accepted this view and, when he left here, was planning to arrange for a meeting of the two Prime Ministers, after their return to this sub-continent, so that the differences can be discussed and, if possible, reconciled by the Heads of the two Governments. Whether he has in any way altered his plans, which were tentative, as a result of his stay in Karachi, I do not know. As I had anticipated, he has had a full dose of Zafrullah’s verbosity and, in spite of his long judicial experience, might well be in some mental confusion. From Karachi, he goes to Srinagar; perhaps a little respite there from both parties will help to restore him to his normal clarity of perception.

In a recent letter of yours to Bajpai, you mentioned a remark of some official in the State Department. He said to you about America being tough on the Kashmir issue. Well, it is all right for America to be tough on this issue as they have been. Their toughness can only take us away from any possible settlement, as it has done in the past. The U.K. and U.S.A. attitude has encouraged all the bellicose tendencies in Pakistan and, for the first time, I feel that there is real danger of a big scale conflict between India and Pakistan. That would be most unfortunate. But if it comes, it cannot be helped. We cannot run away from it. It may be our fault that we have not been able to explain our position adequately. The question of Kashmir is not that of a patch of territory. It is a basic question of our entire policy in regard to India. If Pakistan's communal approach and policy prevail in Kashmir, it would not only be a tragedy for Kashmir, but it would upset the whole scheme of things in India, and of course in Pakistan.
We would enter a phase of trying to exterminate each other. These are terrible thoughts which come to me, and I find the U.S.A. and U.K. people skating merrily on this very thin ice over the deep ocean, and accusing us of intransigence.

Dear Vijayalaskshmiji,

* * * *

I enclose, for your information, the record of a conversation that I had yesterday with Dr. Graham. I would, naturally, like you to keep its contents to yourself. As this letter is being dictated, Dr. Graham is with the Prime Minister. Probably he will take the same sort of line with him. ************
Summary Record of Conversation with Dr. Graham, 4.7.1951.

Dr. Graham called on me at 11. A.M. today at his own request. He said that, after our two meetings yesterday, he had felt that he could come and take me into his confidence. What he was telling me had not been mentioned to anyone before. As I would observe, it was also outside his terms of reference. He regarded the establishment of cordial and cooperative relations between India and Pakistan to be of world importance. Though he had been long in public life this was the most difficult political problem that had been entrusted to him for solution. His experience had been primarily in the field of Capital-Labour relations. There also, the parties had started with deep distrust of one another and, at times, relations had been extremely bitter. With goodwill and persistence, however, those disputed had been resolved. Cooperation and friendship between Pakistan and India could come only of their own volition and by their own efforts. He (Dr. Graham) was not a judge and was here only to help if he could. He had no illusions, however, that either he or any other outside agency could bring these two great nations close together. The question was how to bring about the desired consummation.

2. I said to Dr. Graham that I did not wish to take him over the whole of the history of Indo-Pak relations or of the Kashmir dispute. I would, however, speaking in no spirit of partisanship, like to draw his attention to certain fundamental points:

(i) Pakistan believed that India had not reconciled itself to its (Pakistan’s) existence, but desired to destroy it. Therefore, Pakistan was distrustful of and hostile to India, The belief was without foundation. A few extremists and cranks apart, no one in India was even interested in Pakistan. We had enough problems of our own to attend to and solve. Nevertheless, this fiction of India’s alleged distrust and hostility had become an article of faith with Pakistan,

(ii) Kashmir was a symptom, though an acute symptom, of a congestion mentioned in (i). Pakistan itself had made this symptom acute by persistent inflammatory propaganda, urging its people to war, telling the world that war alone could solve this dispute. Dr. Graham had only to compare the press of Pakistan and the press of India to satisfy himself of the difference between the mentality of Pakistan over the Kashmir dispute and the mentality of India. This hostile propaganda had created an atmosphere in which a solution, at once friendly and conciliatory, was most difficult to find.
Pakistan had alleged that India had obtained the accession of Jammu and Kashmir by force and fraud. Pakistan had even succeeded in persuading many people abroad to believe this utterly false charge. I had been with the Government of India ever since this trouble in Kashmir began and could assure him that, even on the 22nd or 23rd October, 1947 India had no thoughts of securing the accession of Kashmir. India had even declined to enter into a standstill agreement with Kashmir, which Pakistan had done; India wished to leave it to the Ruler of Kashmir and its people to make up their minds as to whom the State shall accede. It was only when Kashmir was invaded, and rape and rapine, murder and arson had been let loose, that at the request of the Maharaja and of Sheikh Abdullah, India had sent troops to save Kashmir. But the Maharaja and Sheikh Abdullah had asked India to accept Kashmir’s accession and India had to do it as a measure of humanity as well as a gesture of neighbourly obligation.

Pakistan had made a great deal of the oppression of Muslims of Jammu and Kashmir by the Maharaja. The oppression had undoubtedly been there, but one of the victims of the oppression had been Sheikh Abdullah himself. The same Sheikh Abdullah was now the Head of the Government of Kashmir. India stood for a secular, not a communal government in Kashmir, hence her support of Sheikh Abdullah. India’s action could not be regarded as being of a piece with that of the Maharaja.

Pakistan had repeatedly urged and even succeeded in persuading important members of the Security Council that India did not intend to abide by its obligations, but, instead, intended to deceive and defy the Security Council. Had that been India’s intention, there was no need for India to have referred the Kashmir dispute to the Security Council. But what India had complained of to the Security Council was Pakistan’s aggression. On that issue, the Security Council had never said one word. India did not ask for public condemnation of Pakistan or for punitive action against Pakistan. India had, however, insisted that Pakistan’s aggression should be taken into account in assessing the status of the two parties to the dispute and in finding a solution to the dispute. This remained India’s stand.

Pakistan had alleged that India was trying her utmost to avoid a free and impartial plebiscite. It was India who had, even after Kashmir’s accession, offered to let the people of the State determine their future freely. If a free and impartial plebiscite had not yet taken place, this was due to the non-fulfilment, through the attitude of Pakistan, of conditions in which alone such a plebiscite could be held. We had never said that our forces should be maintained in their present strength in Jammu and Kashmir during the plebiscite. All that we had maintained was that enough forces must be maintained there to safeguard the security of the State. But we had insisted that Pakistan, as aggressor, should withdraw its troops entirely from the State, and that the Azad Kashmir forces should be disbanded and disarmed before we could consider any substantial reduction in the strength of our forces.

Summing up, I told Dr. Graham that unless there was a psychological change in Pakistan and the propaganda in favour of Jehad stopped, I saw little prospect of bringing about that friendly and cooperative relationship between Pakistan and India which not only our well-wishers, but even more we ourselves desire.

3. Dr. Graham, after having listened to me intently, said that there were a number of outstanding disputes between India and Pakistan, e.g., Canal Waters. His idea was that an attempt should be made to settle all these disputes. He was not attempting to determine priorities, but any dispute settled was a step forward towards the establishment of friendly relations. If India and Pakistan could, by this process, settle their outstanding differences, and also because of the establishment of good relations, reduce their armaments, they could set an example to the world which was drifting towards another world war. Such a development would provide a “platform” from which some great leader from this sub-continent could appeal to and catch the imagination of the world. The enormous sums that were now being spent on armament could be diverted to productive activity that would add to the sum of human happiness; India and Pakistan would be able to devote more of their resources to the task of peace and the resources of the other free nations of the world could also be utilized in furthering this noble effort.

4. I told Dr. Graham that I would convey this to the Prime Minister. At the same time, I felt it necessary to draw his attention to the fact that Pakistan looked upon Kashmir as the first and major dispute between the two countries and its solution as a condition precedent, even a key, to the solution of other disputes. I asked Dr. Graham if his attention had been drawn to the correspondence between the Prime Minister and Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan on the subject of a “No War Declaration”. He said that he had not yet read the correspondence, but was going to do so. I told him that he would find a perusal of this document, revealing and, therefore, useful.

5. Taking leave of me, Dr. Graham repeated that he had been only thinking aloud to me in the utmost confidence, and he very much hoped that what he had said would not he made public in any way. I assured him that he could rely absolutely on our discretion and that his confidence would be strictly observed.
6. Clearly, Dr. Graham is groping his way towards some method of finding a solution and equally clearly his idealistic conception of the effect of a friendly solution between Pakistan and India on the international situation is something remote from fulfillment, if not unrealisable in a foreseeable future. But he is clearly sincere in his desire to attempt, if he can, a broader approach to the problem.

TOP SECRET

Extract from a letter from Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru to the Indian High Commissioner in London V. K. Krishna Menon.

New Delhi, July 22, 1951.

5. For some months past we had been worried not only at the feverish preparations in Pakistan for war but also at the hysterical demands for jehad there. Some five weeks ago we considered the situation. There were many factors which indicated that Pakistan might take aggressive action, probably beginning with Kashmir, as soon as Graham went back. As you know, I had made it quite clear on many occasions during the past year that any further attack in Kashmir would necessarily mean an all-out war between India and Pakistan. It would be impossible to limit it to Kashmir as previously. This declaration of mine has, I am sure, prevented Pakistan from attacking.

6. Meanwhile, the progress made in the Kashmir State, that is our part of it, has been very marked. The government machinery is running fairly well, supplies are good, transport, which is very important, is well organised. Generally there is an appearance of normality and tourists have poured in. In contrast, the Pakistan areas of Kashmir are in a bad way and there are many squabbles and internal conflicts. Because the internal position in our part of Kashmir was improving rapidly, Pakistan became afraid of our consolidating our position too much. Then came the announcement of the Constituent Assembly. To Pakistan this appeared as the final nail in their coffin, so far as Kashmir was concerned. Immediately there was a hullabaloo and they went to
The Security Council and the U.K. and U.S.A. representatives made very offensive anti-Indian speeches. However, we stood firm on that issue. Pakistan’s fear is that if the Constituent Assembly is held, her chances fade away. So she has tried her utmost to prevent this being held. Our information was that if she cannot stop this by foreign pressure, she would take offensive action and try to create trouble, sabotage, etc., with Kashmir also. Indeed we have caught people who had been sent from Pakistan for this purpose.

7. All this was disconcerting enough. Then came a number of raids across the cease-fire line, which appeared to be parts of an organised plan. They were far more important than the petty raids which had occurred previously.

8. We came to the conclusion that it was exceedingly dangerous for us not to take full precautions to meet any possible attack by Pakistan. Conditions in Pakistan were such that even if the Government there was somewhat reluctant, events might force their hands. We decided therefore to be fully prepared and took steps accordingly.

9. Last year we had reduced our army by 52,000 and it was our programme to reduce it by an additional 100,000 this year. But owing to these developments, we hesitated to make any further reduction. We had decided to transfer our Armoured Division from Meerut to Jhansi, which is much further away, but which has better quarters and training grounds. We stopped this transfer.

10. A little later, we decided to send this Armoured Division to the Punjab. In order to go there it has to cross two major rivers. That is a long process and it takes several weeks. If by any chance the bridges were destroyed, then it is hardly possible to send it across. Pakistan’s plan appeared to be to attack us suddenly in Kashmir to begin with, to achieve some results quickly and then perhaps to stop if the U.N. jumped in and called for a cease-fire. This plan was largely based on our un-preparedness to meet a sudden assault on a big scale in Kashmir and our inability to do anything in the Punjab at least for some time. We had thus to be prepared for any such sudden action. The only way we could do so was to send our Armoured Division across the two major rivers of the Punjab and make some other troop dispositions. We ordered this and the Armoured Division is on its way. It has not fully got there yet. Probably it will take another two weeks or more to be in position.

11. In Kashmir, our undertaking to the U.N. is not to add to the number of troops which existed at the time of the cease-fire. After the cease-fire we withdrew a considerable number. Recently we decided to send some additional troops to Kashmir. This was well within the old limit and therefore we were entitled to do it in terms of the cease-fire arrangement. I think that the U.N. Observers in Kashmir were informed of it.

12. We have also made some arrangements on the borders of Eastern Pakistan. Eastern Pakistan has been during the last many months prepared for war purposes. Troops have been sent from the West and many other steps have been taken.

13. One must remember that the normal disposition of troops in Pakistan is more or less along the Indian borders. They had added to this and it was very easy for them to push across into India if they so chose. It is no longer easy for them to do this because we are there or will be there soon.

14. This is what has happened and I am quite sure that we would have been completely wrong in not taking these steps to protect ourselves in case of an attack. In fact, these steps have probably put an end to the fear of war because Pakistan cannot take us by surprise anywhere now. If unhappily war still comes, we shall be more or less ready for it in so far as one can be ready.

15. As a matter of fact, Pakistan has taken many other steps too, which we have not, such as calling up their reserves, cancelling leave, A(ir).R(aid).P(recautions) precautions, and recruiting new divisions. In spite of our army's persistent demand for additional recruitment, we have not agreed. Nor are we taking any other unusual steps. Any person who goes to Lahore and Delhi can notice the difference. In Lahore there is talk and preparation for war. In Delhi no change has occurred. It is true that this recent crisis has been referred to in the newspapers here, but this is nothing compared to what the newspapers in Pakistan are saying.

16. Some things may be taken for certain:

(i) We are going to have the Constituent Assembly in Kashmir, whatever other people may say or do. No amount of pressure or threats from Pakistan or the U.K., or the U.S.A., or the U.N., will stop us from having Constituent Assembly elections in Kashmir, probably in September.

(ii) We are not going to remove our troops from the Pakistan border till we are satisfied that there is no further danger of attack or invasion.

(iii) If Pakistan attacks or invades our territory anywhere, including Kashmir, this will inevitably result in an all-out war.

(iv) We are on no account going to attack Pakistan or take any aggressive action. We shall only take action if and when we are attacked. Therefore there will be no war, unless Pakistan starts it.

17. These facts must be fully understood. I do not think there is adequate realisation of them in the U.K. or U.S.A. and perhaps they still imagine that by some kind of pressure tactics they can force us to give in. That is impossible. You mention that Gordon-Walker said that the Americans were putting considerable pressure on the British to be tough with India and that they are using Kashmir for this purpose. Some Americans have told me that it is the British who take the lead in this matter and that this is definitely Attlee’s policy. Whatever Attlee’s good intentions might be in regard to India as a whole, and I believe he has good intentions, about Kashmir his mind is completely closed and he thinks he has seen the light once and that is enough. I am sorry for this because he has hopelessly mistaken as are the Americans. They have got used to dealing with soft countries who are afraid of losing their goodwill or their money. Kashmir is a question on which we will not give in, whatever the consequences, and this should be made perfectly clear to everybody. I am quite convinced that it is the policy of the U.K. and the U.S.A., which has made the Kashmir situation as bad as it is. If war occurs therefore, the responsibility will be theirs. For their own reasons, they have chosen to back Pakistan in this and other matters. I cannot help that. But I am sure that sometime or other they will realise their grievous mistake. Personally I consider (I am sorry to say it) the leaders of Pakistan to be completely crooked in their ways.

18. I made a reference in my speech at Bangalore to British Officers and ex-officers in Pakistan adding to the tension. I was referring then to the large number of Britishers serving in Pakistan. I was also referring to Gracey and Auchinleck, who have been visiting various military centres in West and East Pakistan in the hottest weather. Nobody comes here in search of health during this time of the year. You have yourself reminded Gordon-Walker of Gracey’s advice to the Pakistan Government to send the Pakistan army to Kashmir. He is bitterly anti-Indian, as is almost every Englishman in Pakistan. Many of these Britishers in Pakistan employ used to be in the Indian Service and were pushed out by us. They have no love for us and they find that anti-Indian atmosphere in Pakistan completely congenial. Indeed they play a leading role in it.

19. The military conspiracy in Pakistan was chiefly due to resentment by Pakistan officers at the role of the British both in the Pakistan Army and in civil activities. That conspiracy was basically anti-British. The story that all kinds of concessions and bases were being given to the U.K. and U.S.A., had gone round and excited these military folk.

20. In Karachi, the British High Commissioner is also very anti-Indian. The U.N. observers in Kashmir are completely anti-Indian and say so in private. I might mention that these U.N. observers have said in private that a war is coming in Kashmir this autumn or at the latest in the spring. Presumably they got this from the Pakistan army people.

21. Graham is due here soon from Karachi. He has behaved very circumspectly and chiefly listened. On the whole, he seems to be somewhat of an improvement on Dixon. Dixon was the pure lawyer. Graham has not mentioned to us anything about the Security Council Resolution. He has talked about the general background etc. I do not know what he is going to do. But he is hardly likely to stay here very long.

22. I might inform you that Nye was told about Gracey’s and Auchinleck’s tours in Pakistan. Nye said that he could not believe that about Auchinleek, but about Gracey he could not say.

23. In connection with this war scare, it is a major point that we are preparing hard for our general elections which are going to be on a stupendous scale. Is it likely that we would do this and think of war?

24. One other factor might be kept in mind. During the last few weeks there has again been a big exodus of Hindus from East Bengal to West Bengal. A surplus of 40,000 has come over and they continue to come. This may be due to many causes, because conditions of Hindus continue to be bad in East Bengal. But I think that principally it is due to the war scare.

25. We talk about Kashmir as being the root of all troubles between India and Pakistan, I do not think this is true, The root lies deeper and Kashmir is only a major symptom.

27. We are greatly criticised in our own country and outside. And yet we have some considerable achievements to our credit. I need not write all this. But it is as well to remember what we have done. In Pakistan, there has been practically nothing constructive done during these four years. They have not even started properly with their constitution making and they carry on with the relics of the old British Constitution. Provincial autonomy there is nominal. All that they have done is to concentrate on the growth of their defence forces and to instill hatred and the spirit of violence into their people. They hope to hold together because of this anti-Indian feeling and the appeal to Islam. How long this will carry them, I do not know, A war scare of course helps the Government very much to consolidate its position in Pakistan.

28. The situation on the Pakistan-Afghanistan border continues to be very troubled and the relations of the two countries are definitely bad. Pakistan has decided to send back its troops to some of the border areas, from which they had withdrawn them previously.

July 22, 1951.
Letter from Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru to UN Representative Dr. Frank Graham.

New Delhi, September 11, 1951.

Prime Minister
New Delhi, India

No.3255 - PM. 11th September, 1951.

Excellency

I have the honour to reply to your Excellency’s letter of the 7th September 1951, which you handed to me personally that day.

2. As Your Excellency is aware, we were glad to meet you and your associates as we are eager to find a way to a peaceful settlement of the Kashmir question. We made it clear, however, to Your Excellency, at the very outset of our discussions, which were informal, that, for the reasons explained by our Permanent Representative, Shri B.N.Rau, to the Security Council, we have found ourselves unable to accept the Council’s resolution dated the 30th March, 1951, and that our discussions were without prejudice to this stand of the Government of India. The views that my Government are submitting now on your proposals are similarly without prejudice to that stand.

3. We are in complete agreement with paragraph 1 of your proposals; it represents a policy that we ourselves have been urging upon the Government of Pakistan for a long time. We would also add that India has not committed aggression against Pakistan or made war on that country and has no intention of doing so.

4. As regards paragraph 4, the Government of India not only reaffirm their acceptance of the principle that the question of the continuing accession of the State of Jammu and Kashmir to India shall be decided through the democratic method of a free and impartial plebiscite under the auspices of the United Nations but are anxious that the conditions necessary for such a plebiscite should be created as quickly as possible. It is with this object and this object alone, in view that they have examined your proposals.

5. It is clear to the Government of India that the security of the State of Jammu and Kashmir from invasion or large scale infiltration of hostile elements will not be effectively ensured until the spirit and temper of war that now prevail on the other side of the cease-fire line and in Pakistan have been demonstrably replaced by a firm will to settle the Kashmir question peacefully. Nor will it be possible to make any headway with arrangements for holding a plebiscite until this condition is satisfied. The Government of India greatly doubt whether this will be practicable within the period of 90 days mentioned in paragraph 6 of the proposals or such other period as may be agreed upon in terms of paragraph 6 and paragraph 9. The Government of India are willing to carry out the withdrawal of the bulk of the Indian forces in the State by the end of this period provided that the operations described in 7.A.(i), (ii) and (iii) of the proposals are progressively completed by the end of that period.

6. In the opinion of the Government of India, para. 7, B.(ii) should be omitted. They feel that the further withdrawals or reductions referred to in this part of the proposals cannot be related to the period to be fixed in terms of paragraphs 6 and 9; these can be realised only progressively thereafter as the fear of incursions into the State or renewal of aggression diminishes and completed when the fear completely disappears. Both the period during which these further withdrawals or reductions are to be made, and their phasing and quantum cannot be determined realistically at present. I would point out that the withdrawal of their forces which the Government of India are prepared to make under paragraph 7, B.(i) of the proposals, and which is specified in paragraph 8 of this letter, will be considerably in excess of “the bulk of the Indian forces”. It would leave in the State the very minimum force necessary to prevent infiltration. Any further reduction could only take place at some risk. The Government of India will be glad, however, to consider this problem with the U.N. Representative from time to time and to give effect to the measures that may be agreed upon between them to make further withdrawals or reductions. They wish me to give you the assurance that it is their policy to reduce their forces in the State to the minimum necessary to safeguard its security; the greater the measure of security that the State enjoys from threats of incursion or aggression, the smaller will be this minimum.

7. As regards the Civil Armed Forces to be maintained on the Pakistan side of the cease-fire line at the end of the period agreed upon in terms of paragraph 6 and paragraph 9, the Government of India would agree to a force of 4,000, organised, equipped and composed as recommended to UNCIP in C of the memorandum transmitted to Dr. Lozano under cover of letter No. 248-PASG/49 dated 13 April 1949, by their Secretary-General in the Ministry of External Affairs.

8. In pursuance of what has been stated in paragraph 5 of this letter, the Government of India will retain on their side of the cease-fire line in Jammu and Kashmir, One Line of Communication Area Headquarters and One Infantry Division (normal) but of four brigades of four battalions each, at the end of the period agreed upon in terms of paragraphs 6 and 9 of the proposals, provided that the operations described in paragraph 7.A.(i), (ii) and (iii) of the proposals have been completed by the end of that period. Thus much more than “the bulk of Indian forces in the State” will have been withdrawn and I wish to emphasise that the forces left behind will be wholly inadequate to resist any large-scale aggression. Effective measures to prevent such aggression will, it is presumed, be taken by Pakistan.

9. About paragraph 10 of the proposals the Government of India agree that the Plebiscite Administrator should be appointed as soon as conditions in the State, on both sides of the cease-fire line, permit of a start being made with the arrangements for carrying out the plebiscite. To appoint the Plebiscite Administrator before he can function effectively would be premature. The Government of India would therefore prefer such a proposal to be omitted from that present document; it would be more appropriately included in proposals that deal specifically and in detail with the holding of the plebiscite and connected matters.

10. The Government of India have no other comments or suggestions to make on the proposals.

Accept, Excellency, the assurance of my highest consideration.

Signed.
Jawaharlal Nehru Prime Minister and Minister of External Affairs.

His Excellency Dr. Frank P. Graham,
United Nations Representative for India and Pakistan.

No. 361-SG/51 the 12th September, 1951

My dear B.N.

As promised in my letter of the 8th September, (No.356-SG/51), Which I asked Mrs. Pandit to deliver to you, I enclose, for your information, a copy of our reply to Dr. Graham's proposals which he delivered to the Prime Minister on the 7th of this month. Dr. Graham had left behind, in Delhi, his legal Adviser, Dr. Marin, and, after I had handed over our reply personally to Dr. Marin, I made the following comments:

(a) The reduction in the strength of our forces in Jammu and Kashmir that we proposed to make under para. 7.B.(i) actually included much that we should have done under para. 7.B.(ii). The remnant left would, in effect, mean that we should have one brigade each in the valley, Poonch and Jammu and one in reserve. Considering the area of the State under the control of the Government of Jammu and Kashmir and the long frontier that we had to protect, this force was, if anything, below the minimum that our Military Advisers considered necessary even to protect the State against infiltration of disruptive elements that might seek to dribble in through the various passes from Azad Kashmir or from Pakistan, not for the purpose of staging an invasion but for disturbing peace and tranquility and for interfering with the freedom of the plebiscite. As for any large scale aggression, whether from tribesmen or any other source, this force of 4 brigades plus one line of Communication Area Headquarters, would be utterly inadequate to stop it.

While on the subject, I also informed Dr. Marin that the infiltration on the Ladakh side of the State of Kazaks and other elements from China was now presenting a real problem to us. We did not, however, wish to confuse the Kashmir issue with this new development. Such measures as might become necessary to deal with this problem could and would be discussed separately.

(b) As regards the appointment of a Plebiscite Administrator, I reminded him how the premature appointment of Admiral Nimitz had caused embarrassment all round. We were not opposed to the appointment of a Plebiscite Administrator. Indeed, since we were anxious to have a plebiscite as quickly as the necessary conditions could be created, we would be glad to see him appointed as soon as the situation had improved sufficiently to justify the hope that arrangements for holding a plebiscite could usefully be started. In the light of past experience, we were naturally reluctant to fix dates or time-limits within which the necessary improvement in conditions might not be achieved.

2. Dr. Marin promised to convey to Dr. Graham what I had told him orally in explanation of our written reply. Speaking quite personally, he also said that Dr. Graham’s endeavour would be to prevent a debate on the merits of the Kashmir dispute in the Security Council in the near future. He thought that Dr. Graham’s report would leave the door open for further negotiations if the replies of the two Governments did not offer a basis for an immediate settlement and that, in all probability, Dr. Graham will recommend that the Council authorize him to continue his efforts. However, I expect that we shall get more precise information about the procedure and plans of the Council after Dr. Graham submits his report.

Bhai dear

* * * * *

This morning Gladwyan Jebb handed me a copy of the draft resolution which it is intended to move in the Security Council tomorrow. This has already been telegraphed to you and I need not reproduce it. Jebb made a great point of saying that the resolution was being handed to me first and would be given to Zafrulla later. I pointed out that difference of a few minutes hardly needed emphasis. After explaining that Her Majesty’s Government had spent much anguished thought over the drafting of the resolution, he went on to say that he felt it was his duty to inform me that in case action could not be taken in terms of the resolution within 30 days, the U.K. and the U.S.A. would feel “compelled” to take the question of Kashmir to the General Assembly. At this point, he turned to his Adviser and asked whether the Russians could veto such a procedure and was told that since it was a procedural matter, no veto applied. He then re-emphasized what he had said, namely, “I think you should know that if a solution is not arrived at within 30 days, we shall feel compelled to take the matter to the General Assembly”. I told him that I had no comment and would forward the resolution as also his very kind warning to my Government.

It seems to me that there is a regular plan in the way items have been arranged. The Race Conflict* issue comes up in Committee on Monday. Kashmir will already have been taken up by the Security Council and the present draft resolution will have been moved. I am certain that the idea will be put across by the U.K. that the matter will have to go up before the General Assembly. This will prejudice U.N. opinion against our stand on the Racial Issue, and I am sure it is international. The argument that will be branded about in the U.N. will be to the effect that India is herself being brought before the bar of world opinion in the General Assembly on Kashmir. So why should she point a finger at South Africa?

With love

Extract from the letter from Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru to Mrs. Vijaya Lakshmi Pandit.

Prime Minister
New Delhi, India

Nano dear,

Your letter of the 5th November has just come. It has taken longer than usual.

I confess to a feeling of amazement at your description of Gladwyn Jebb’s behavior when he handed to you his draft resolution on Kashmir. Have the English learnt nothing at all during the last few years? I am not thinking so much of their draft resolution, although that is bad enough, but rather of the way they think they can bully us. If there is one thing that all the powers in the world cannot do, it is to bully us. I have already sent you full directions about the Kashmir resolution. Privately, you can inform Eden that I am exceedingly sorry at the attitude of the U.K. Government in this matter and I do not consider it either a fair one or a friendly one. You should further mention to him the implied threat of Gladwyn Jebb which, as was natural,
I do not know why there is such a fuss about the discussion of the Kashmir issue. We are always prepared to discuss every issue. In fact in my last letter to the Pakistan Prime Minister, I told him that I was prepared to discuss every issue with him, though I did not particularly mention Kashmir.

2. It is clear, however, that nothing substantial can come out of a discussion of the Kashmir issue on official level. The only possibility is noting down various lines of approach without commitment. As a matter of fact, even I cannot fully discuss the Kashmir issue with Khwaja Nazimuddin, because a third and very important party is the Kashmir Government.

3. However, we can certainly inform the Pakistan Government that our officials who will participate in the conference are prepared to discuss every issue including the Kashmir issue. But it should be further pointed out that it is obvious that the discussion of the Kashmir issue on official level can hardly yield any substantial result.

* In his letter of 15 March 1953 to Nazimuddin, Nehru had expressed his “earnest desire” and readiness “to consider all these questions in all friendliness.”

4. As for my meeting Khwaja Nazimuddin, it is exceedingly difficult for me to find time during this month or the next which is heavily booked up. Apart from this, I should like to wait for the result of the officials' conference before I consider fixing any definite meeting.

5. I propose to write to Khwaja Nazimuddin tonight.

SECRET

Record of Informal Discussions between the Official Committees of India and Pakistan on Kashmir from December 21 to December 29, 1953.

Record of Discussions on December 21, 1953.

Mr. Desai welcomed the members of the Pakistani official committee and stated that this meeting was being held in pursuance of the agreement reached between the Prime Ministers of India and Pakistan during their talks in Delhi in August 1953. As the joint communique had put it, it was the firm opinion of the two Prime Ministers that the Kashmir dispute should be settled in accordance with the wishes of the people of that state with a view to promoting their well-being and causing the least disturbance to life of the people of that State. The most feasible method of ascertaining the wishes of the people was by fair and impartial plebiscite. Such plebiscite has been proposed and agreed to some years ago. Progress, however, could not be made because of lack of agreement in regard to certain preliminary issues. The two Prime ministers have agreed that these preliminary issues should be considered by them directly in order to arrive at agreements in regard to them. These agreements would have to be given effect to and the next step would be the appointment of the Plebiscite administrator. In order to advise the Prime Ministers in regard to these preliminary issues, in was agreed that committees of military and other experts should be appointed to discuss them.

2. Mr. Desai then stated that the official committees would have to take into consideration that the context of events under which previous discussions were held had undergone certain changes and referred in this connection to the correspondence between the two Prime Ministers on certain basic issues, as for example, the appointment of the Plebiscite Administrator and the negotiations between the Governments of Pakistan and the U.S.A regarding military aid. The decisions taken by the Prime Minister on these questions would, therefore, be the general framework within which the official committees could tender advice to their respective Prime Ministers on the basis of their discussions at these meetings.

3. Mr. Desai went on to say that in his view it would have been more convenient for the official teams to meet after these major policy decisions have been taken by the two Prime Ministers who were in correspondence, but in view of the arrangements already made and announced, it was not advisable to postpone these meetings. He added that, as officials, they did not make policy but only advised their Prime Ministers. They need not therefore be worried unduly by the limitations imposed by recent developments but should carry on their discussions in the spirit of friendly and co-operative approach, so that they could be of assistance to their Prime Ministers in dealing with these complicated and intricate issues.

4. On the question of items of discussion, Mr. Desai suggested that the best arrangement would perhaps be to have no fixed agenda but to indicate informally various issues which could fruitfully be discussed and dealt with in a frank and informal manner.

5. Mr. Aziz Ahmad, in reply, thanked the Government of India for their welcome and hospitality and expressed the hope that they would soon have the opportunity of reciprocating it in Karachi.

6. In regard to the changes mentioned by Mr. Desai in the context of current events, Mr. Aziz Ahmad stated as far as they were concerned, there was change either in their approach or in their objective which was the maintenance of friendly relations between the two countries. The position, therefore, was as was left at the end of the talks by the two Prime Minister in August subject, of course, to subsequent developments, as shown in their correspondence. In regard to the specific issues mentioned by Mr. Desai, he stated that his Prime Minister had already sent a telegram to the Prime Minister of India regarding the Plebiscite Administrator repeating the position which he had explained in detail in a previous letter. On the question of the US – Pakistan Pact, the position had already been explained by his Prime Minister to the Prime Minister of India which was to reassure him that the conversations now taking place between the two countries would have no bearing on their desire to settle pending disputes between their countries and on their anxiety for healthy Indo- Pakistan relations. He agreed, however, that these two issues could be left to be discussed and agreed upon by the two Prime Ministers.
7. On the question of the Agenda Mr. Aziz Ahmed drew the attention of the Indian committee to the broad idea given on the subject in the letter dated the 1st December 1953 from his Prime Minister to the Prime Minister of India and suggested that, if the Indian team had no objection, these could form the list of issues, which they would discuss in their meetings. He agreed that the discussions in the committees should be informal and entirely off the record.

8. The first item mentioned in the letter from the Pakistan Prime Minister was "the demilitarization of the State of Jammu & Kashmir and in that context some discussion then ensued regarding the effect of the current discussions between the US and Pakistan on military aid. It was stated on the India side that in the past discussions between the representatives of the two countries, certain suggestions were made and the areas of agreement and disagreement defined in connection with the quantum of forces to be kept in the State. These suggestions were obviously made in the context of the military position then prevailing. If, however, that position were altered, it would be necessary to do some fresh thinking on the subject and to that extent it was obvious that the US -- Pakistan negotiations had considerable bearing on the issues before them. The Pakistan representatives replied that the forces outside the State should have no bearing on the issue of demilitarisation in the State. Pakistan had held that the recent increase in the Indian army had no bearing on the Kashmir issue and it was suggested that India should also take the same attitude. Moreover, if questions of relative strength of India and Pakistan were brought into these discussions, it would widen their scope considerably. Further, it was not the correct approach to look into the motives of the two countries and to argue that on the basis of any addition of strength on either side there would be a possibility of military action in Kashmir. If the motives of the two countries were in doubt it would become extremely difficult to carry on these discussions which as the two Prime Ministers desired should be held in a friendly and co-operative spirit.

9. The Indian representatives pointed out that there was a marked difference between (a) re-organisation and re-equipment of forces from local resources as had taken place in India, and (b) military aid from one of the largest military powers in the world, like the U.S.A The former had very little effect on the total military strength of a country while the latter altered the military picture entirely. Then there was the question of public opinion in the two countries and it was not possible for them to divorce themselves from the reactions which the military negotiations between the US and Pakistan would have on the public in India. It was not therefore a question of doubting the motives of a country. Moreover, India had to consider the whole picture which would emerge as a result of a military understanding between the US and Pakistan. Such a military understanding would, undoubtedly, bring this region into the cold war area and the quantum of forces to be retained in the State would therefore also have to be considered from that angle.

10. The Pakistan representatives appreciated that India would like to keep these consideration in mind in these discussions. They however pointed that there were certain other considerations which were equally weighty which they would want also to be borne in mind at the same time. When the discussions about the quantum of forces were held in the past, the general atmosphere between India and Pakistan was bad. This had however changed since Mr. Mohammad Ali took over as the Prime Minister of Pakistan. In the past the Indian representatives had to take into account the security aspect of India vis-à-vis Pakistan in offering suggestions on the quantum of forces. The position now was completely changed and in view of the ardent desire of the Prime Minister of Pakistan to have friendship with India it was hoped that in offering fresh suggestions on this issue Indian representatives would bear in mind that the old security considerations did no longer apply and that smaller forces would serve the purpose.

11. There was then some discussion on the agenda to be followed by the official committees. It was agreed that the suggestions made by the Pakistan Prime Minister should form the Heads of discussion.

It was suggested on the Indian side that the preliminary issues mentioned by the Pakistan Prime Minister would include

1. concrete steps to be taken for the creation of peaceful atmosphere in the State as well as in India and Pakistan; and,
2. the question of the withdrawal of Pakistan nationals and tribesmen and the mechanics of verifying such withdrawal.

The Pakistani representatives stated that in their opinion there was considerable improvement in the public atmosphere in India and Pakistan since Mr. Mohammad Ali took over but that they had no objection to discussing this item. In regard to the tribesmen and Pakistan nationals they state categorically that these had already been withdrawn from the State but that the question of the verification of such withdrawal could be discussed, They added that they would also suggest the discussion of the question of safeguarding of peace and of fundamental rights in the State as recommended by Dr. Graham.

12. The following items of discussion were then agreed upon:

1. Creation of peaceful atmosphere.
2. withdrawal of tribesmen and Pakistan nationals.
3. Character and quantum of forces.
(4) Local authorities.
(5) Safeguarding of peace and fundamental rights in the State.
(6) Any other points which might occur to the sides.
13. It was agreed that the question of implementation of agreed decisions on each item should be discussed along with the item itself.
14. The attached Press Note was jointly agreed upon.
15. The committees would meet tomorrow at 10 A.M.

Record of Discussions on December 22, 1953.

The first item of discussion agreed upon at the meeting of the two committees at yesterday’s meeting, namely, creation of peaceful atmosphere, was taken up for discussion.

2. The Indian representatives stated that when this issue was raised in the past it was generally considered in its wider context. It was felt however that for the time being the discussion at these meeting in regard to that issue may be restricted to the problem of Kashmir. If satisfactory arrangements were reached in this regard, they would lead also to the solution of the wider issue.

3. Several attempts had been made in the past by a series of agreements and formal and informal consultations at all levels between the two Governments with the objective of creating peaceful atmosphere between the two countries. Action in consequence of these agreements and consultations was however really effective only for a short time and the various agencies established under them gradually fell into disuse. Very often the Press on both sides got worked up and even responsible leaders sometimes violated these agreements. It was therefore emphasized that the question of the creation of peaceful atmosphere was an extremely important one, firstly for the success of the talks and secondly, for the implementation of the agreement reached between them. They had therefore to devise a satisfactory formula which would not only create but also maintain peaceful atmosphere between the two countries in regard to Kashmir in particular and in regard to the two countries in general.

4. Reference was invited in this connection to Dr. Graham’s following proposals:

“The Governments of India and Pakistan

(1) reaffirm their determination not to resort to force and to adhere to peaceful procedures and specifically pledge themselves that they will not commit aggression or make war - one against the other - with regard to the question of the State of Jammu & Kashmir…………

(2) agree that each Government on its part will instruct its official spokesmen and will urge all its citizens, organizations, publications and radio stations not to make warlike statements or statements calculated to incite the people of either nation to make war against the other with regard to the question of the State of Jammu & Kashmir.”

5. The question before the committees now was to what extent any special and extensive instructions, public as well as official, has to be made in this regard and to what extent Dr Graham’s formula should be amplified so as to cover all aspects of the problem connected with the creation and maintenance of peaceful atmosphere.

6. The Pakistani representatives stated that it was their firm conviction that if the atmosphere between the two countries was to remain friendly, it was essential to tackle the causes which had created the rift between them. They agreed that it was necessary to deal with the problem of the creation of peaceful atmosphere in the manner suggested by the Indian committee, but in their view the main problem was to settle Indo-Pakistan disputes like Kashmir, Canal Waters, Evacuee Property, etc. Both these processes could, of course, go on simultaneously. They added that the atmosphere in Pakistan had recently undergone a considerable revolution not only because of the policies of their new Prime Minister who believed that India and Pakistan should live as peaceful neighbours like the U.S and Canada, but because the public in Pakistan had visible evidence of the fact that serious attempts were being made by the leaders of India and Pakistan to settle their outstanding disputes.

7. It was agreed that on a long term view relations between the two countries would be established firmly on peaceful and neighbourly basis when the disputes between them had settled satisfactorily. It was however essential that even in order to settle these disputes and to remove the causes of conflict between the two countries, the creation and maintenance of peaceful atmosphere was the first requisite.

8. Discussion then ensued on the issue raised by the Indian committee regarding amplification of Dr. Graham’s formula in this regard. It was suggested that the phrase “warlike statements” was fairly narrow and that what was necessary was to tackle all matters that were likely to embitter relations between the two countries. The appeal issued by the two Prime Minister after their recent talks could form the basis of the new formula in the context of Kashmir as well. It was agreed that the Indian side should prepare the necessary draft for the purpose which could be discussed at tomorrow’s meeting.

9. The official committees then discussed the problem of creation and maintenance of peaceful atmosphere in its various aspects. It was agreed that the matter should be examined in the following broad headings:

(1) Official agencies including officials, radio, official or officially inspired publications, official films, etc,

(2) Political parties both inside and outside the parliaments and local legislatures.

(3) Press and non-official publications.
Religious organisations.

10. (1) Official agencies: The Indian representatives stated that as far as Government servants were concerned the problem was a simple one, as breaches of instructions given to them could be effectively dealt with. It was desirable however for the two Governments to draft a common set of instructions to be given to the Government officials in this regard. This would apply to radios, official publications and official documentaries.

11. In regard to the State of Jammu & Kashmir, it could also be ensured that the Kashmir Government as well as the Azad authorities could issue identical instructions to their official agencies. Attention in this connection was invited to the Azad Kashmir Radio which was indulging in scurrilous propaganda.

12. The Pakistan representatives agreed to the suggested procedure.

In regard to Kashmir they also stated that the Srinagar Radio was an equal offender in this regard.

13. It was agreed that the Indian side would prepare a draft of these instructions and forward it to the Pakistani committee so that both sides may be able to finalise the instructions at their next meeting. It was also agreed that as far as remedial action was concerned, the matter was simple as the remedy lay in the hands of the Governments themselves. Further, it would create a better psychological atmosphere in the two countries if some announcement were made when necessary, of action taken, as for example, the withdrawal of an offensive official publication or documentary.

14. Apart from Government servants this problem also affected government leaders like the Ministers of the Central and Provincial or State Governments. It was felt that the best way to tackle this problem would be for the two Prime Ministers to impress on their colleagues and Ministers of Provincial and State Government the need for the maintenance of peaceful atmosphere and avoidance of official and private statements which might provoke public opinion in the other country. It was realized that very often statements made by the Government leaders were mis-reported in the press. For that purpose it would be desirable for countries to give to the High Commissioner of the other country authorized versions of important statements made by them.

15. (2) Political Parties: It was agreed that as far as the ruling parties in the two countries were concerned, compliance with the proposed code was not difficult as the two Prime Ministers were presidents of their respective party organisations and had the necessary prestige and the influence to control them. They could therefore issue suitable directives to their parties and if necessary, establish a machinery, as for example, entrusting one of the secretaries of the organization concerned, to ensure compliance with the code.

16. The difficulty was however in regard to the Opposition, particularly as in both countries the Opposition had a tendency of becoming irresponsible in view of the fact they had no chance in the foreseeable future of coming to power. It was suggested in this regard that as far as the Members of the Opposition in the parliament were concerned, the Government could take them into confidence and hold periodic meetings in order to impress upon them the need for co-operation in the interest of the country as a whole. As far as the leaders of the opposition outside the Parliament were concerned the only way was to issue a general appeal if possible by holding a conference for the purpose.

17. It was agreed in this connection that neither Government need take undue notice of statements of unimportant people who did not have large following in the country.

18. (3) Press and Publications: The Indian representatives stated that the Indo-Pakistan Information Consultative Committee had not been entirely ineffective during its functioning. It had not however met for some time in view of the breaking up of the editorial organization in Pakistan. Moreover, even while it was functioning, at one of its later meetings, the Pakistan representatives had suggested that the agreement reached by them on Press matters should not apply to Kashmir and that their Press should be free to say what it liked on that subject.

19. After some discussion, it was agreed that it was necessary to revive an organization of this kind in order to ensure that the Press in the two countries co-operated with their Governments in the endeavour to create and maintain peaceful atmosphere. It was tentatively suggested therefore that the Governments of India and Pakistan create two bodies for the purpose:

(1) a large body like the Indo-Pakistan Information Consultative Committee which would be the general body meeting, say, every three months; and,

(2) a smaller body composed mainly of officials of the Information Ministry and representative editors. This body should meet more often and deal with the problem of compliance with the code laid down by them.

20. The Pakistani representatives agreed to this suggestion in principle but stated that there were certain difficulties in Pakistan at the moment regarding their important newspapers, like the DAWN, the C & M GAZETTE, the ZAMINDAR, etc. which were not seeing eye to eye with the Government and were not thus amenable to official pressure. They would therefore consider this matter further on their return to Karachi in consultation with representatives of their Ministry of Information and Broadcasting.

21. As a general principle, both sides recognized that there were considerable legal and other difficulties in exercising control over the Press. They however agreed that it was essential that the Press in the two countries must observe the code if peaceful atmosphere had to be created and maintained.

22. As far as non-official publications were concerned, if they violated the laws they could be dealt with in accordance with these laws. It was realized however that these laws were not very effective. In such cases it could at least be ensured that official patronage should be withdrawn from such publications.

22. As it was suggested that the Principal Press Information officer of the Government of India should prepare a working paper on this subject so that the matter could be discussed further by the two official Committees.

23. (4) Religious Organisations: The Pakistan representatives stated that they had not noticed any recent violation of the code by religious organisations in their country. Moreover, the public opinion in Pakistan was increasingly un-attentive to appeals made on religious grounds. For example, the DAWN had been quoting a large number of religious leaders in its campaign against the Government. The public however did not take any notice of them.

24. The question of religious incitement by mullahs at prayer meetings, etc., was then discussed and the Pakistani representatives stated that apart from the fact that it was impossible to control this, it was not a serious matter.

25. It was agreed that religious propaganda calculated to arouse passions in the public of the two countries should be avoided.

26. The Pakistani representatives than raised the question of disabilities imposed in Kashmir on the bona fide expression of opinion by the public regarding the accession of the State. They cited the example of a person in Azad Kashmir who made public statements suggesting the desirability of the accession of the State of India and added that no penal action was taken against him. That was not however the position in Srinagar. The Indian representative stated that this and other allied matters could be discussed while they were considering item (5) of the tentative agenda worked out by them at the last meeting, namely, “Safeguarding of Peace and Fundamental Rights in the State”.

ITEM II- Withdrawal of tribesmen and Pakistan nationals.

27. The Pakistani representatives stated that they had removed the tribesmen and Pakistani nationals from the State of Kashmir. In reply to a query they added that there were no tribesmen in the northern area at any stage.
28. Some discussion then ensued in regard to the verification of such withdrawal in accordance with their previous agreements. In this connection, the Pakistani representatives stated that the procedure would be as under:-

In the first instance the Government of Pakistan would satisfy themselves that there were no tribesmen in Kashmir. They would then notify this fact to the United Nations Representative who would make necessary enquiries through his observers and finally notify India of it. The U.N. Representative may increase the number of the observers for this purpose.

29. In reply to another query of the Indian representatives about the question of satisfying India on this score namely that the tribesmen and Pakistan nationals had been withdrawn and that their re-entry into the State would be prevented, the Pakistani representatives stated that the matter had been gone into in greater detail in their discussions. It was then suggested that the matter could be left entirely to the U.N. Representative and his observers or that it could be entrusted to joint teams comprising U.N., Indian and Pakistan representatives who would verify this on both sides of the cease-fire line. It was agreed that as this issue would raise several wider questions, the problem could be dealt with when the Indian and Pakistani military experts were discussing the question of the implementation of demilitarization.

30. Summarising their position, the Pakistan representatives stated that as far as they were concerned this problem need not create any difficulties. When the Pakistan army entered the conflict in May 1948 they placed all these volunteers and tribals on army rations and organised them into certain formations. At the moment, no tribesmen or Pakistani nationals were on army rations. Secondly, all these organisations were disbanded and the volunteers were physically removed in Pakistan army transport. The tribesmen were removed by the 15th February 1949 and the other volunteers in a month or so thereafter. Thirdly, as far as verification of the fact that these tribesmen and volunteers have not re-entered was concerned, this would be checked up by their army authorities as well as by the civil officials. It was easier for the Government of Pakistan to ensure prevention of re-entry of these people as the main points of entry were only three or four which could be plugged effectively.

Next Meeting.

The committees will meet tomorrow at 10 A.M.

Record of Discussions on December 23, 1953.

Item III - Character and Quantum of Forces.

In opening the discussion on this item, Mr. Dasai stated that it appeared to him that the principal stumbling block in arriving at an agreement on this subject had been the differences in the concept of the respective responsibilities of India and Pakistan in that regard. In order to clarify the background so that discussion could proceed with a full understanding of these responsibilities, he stated that it might be necessary to refer to the conditions as existed in 1947-48 and to the initial documents, viz., India’s complaint to Security Council and Pakistan’s answer to it, which was that the Government of Pakistan had nothing to do with the fighting in Kashmir. The Government of Pakistan stated subsequently that their army came into the conflict at a later stage.

2. In the context of this background, it would no doubt, be agreed that in order to implement the Prime Ministers’ agreement of ascertaining the popular will by a free and impartial plebiscite, the endeavour of the official committees should be to work out a settlement which would restore normal conditions prevailing before the events mentioned by him. The only difference would now be that for practical purposes, law and order on the west and north of the cease-fire line would be under the control of local authorities, though the J. & K. State would have legal sovereignty over this area as well.

3. The two main points in this regard therefore are:

(1) the sovereignty of the State of Jammu & Kashmir over the entire State; and,

(2) the responsibility of the Government of India for the defence of the entire State in view of its accession to India.

As practical people we have, while discussing this item to reconcile the legal sovereignty of the J. & K. State over the entire area with the practical needs of the situation as regards the law and order responsibilities of local authorities in the area to the west and north of the cease-fire line. India’s responsibility for the defence of the entire J. & K. State mentioned above should also be recognized consistently with the needs of the situation for the holding of a free and impartial plebiscite. These concepts of sovereignty and responsibility were not important only vis-à-vis Pakistan, but also regards other bordering countries as well and no question arose of distrust of Pakistan’s intentions, military or otherwise, in the matter.

4. Mr. Desai then went on to say that the Proposed US- Pakistan Aid pact would have an important bearing on this subject and drew the attention of the Pakistan committee to the remarks made by him in this regard at their first meeting on Monday, the 21st December.

5. Mr. Desai added that before the discussion of the quantum of forces on the two sides could proceed, he wished to make a general observation. During past discussions the figures suggested by India were the absolute minimum. In spite of the altered situation referred to in para 4 above, we will provisionally proceed on the basis of these minimum figures. In view of this, the functions of the plebiscite administrator, in regard to these forces would, no doubt, be only regulatory and those of their disposition. The Plebiscite Administrator cannot suggest any reduction of these forces.

6. Mr. Aziz Ahmad expressed his distress that the general observation made by the Indian side indicated a fundamental difference of approach between the two sides. In his view, they also indicated a variation from the approach agreed to by the two Prime Ministers. The view of the Pakistani committee was that what had happened in the past and the discussions which were held in Geneva and elsewhere were no longer really relevant in the current context of the fresh approach suggested by the two Prime Ministers. Otherwise, the two teams would get involved in past wrangles and interminable arguments, thereby being unable to fulfill the object with which they were meeting.

7. Mr. Desai replied that there was a slight misunderstanding. He had not mentioned the general background of the problem in a legalistic or theoretical way. All that he wanted to convey to the Pakistani team was the general background which would explain the attitude to taken by the Indian team in suggesting the figures of forces and other allied matters. There was no difference about the objectives of the two countries as far as this item was concerned viz.,

(1) ascertaining the popular will by a free and impartial plebiscite; and,
(2) maintenance of Indian forces in the State to the barest minimum.

All that he had intended to convey was that the Government of India’s proposals regarding the quantum of forces were bound to reflect the position adopted by them in regard to the main issues of sovereignty and responsibility.

8. The two committees then took up the question of assessment of the factors and considerations governing this problem. On the Indian side the following were mentioned as the factors which had to be borne in mind in suggesting the quantum and character of forces:

(1) Indian’s international responsibility in maintaining the security of the State against the international background.
(2) Geography, means of communication, possibility of incursion from northern areas and allied problems.

(3) Internal security.

(4) The character of the populations on two sides of the cease-fire line in the sense that the people inhabiting the Azad side were trained for war and were turbulent; and

(5) The need to prevent breach of the cease-fire line.

9. On the basis of these factors, the Indian side stated that the barest minimum necessary for them would be 21,000 Indian troops without armour and artillery plus the State militia which was understood to be consisting of 5,500 men. On the other side, i.e., on the west and the north of the ceasefire line, they were prepared to agree to the retention of 4,000 men as civil forces, half of them armed and half disarmed. As agreed to by them earlier, however, if either after the assessment of the situation by the U.N. representative or even at the present stage, the Pakistani committee felt that there was need, for some increase in the figure of the civil forces on the Azad side or a need for the alteration of the ratio between the armed and unarmed men, or the need for better weapons for them, the Indian team were prepared to discuss the matter.

10. In this connection the Indian side re-emphasised what they had stated at an earlier meeting, viz., that any agreement on the quantum of forces that might be arrived at, would be only provisional subject to the final picture that emerged after the full details of the US-Pakistan military aid arrangement and its effect on the Pakistan military potential were made known to India.

11. In reply to a query from the Indian side regarding 50,000 (or so) men in Azad Kashmir who were disarmed by the Pakistan army, the Pakistani committee stated that all the arms of these people had been taken away and that there was not any likelihood of large caches of arms lying hidden in that area.

12. The Pakistani team stated that in their view the Indian approach was not the correct approach. People in both the countries had expected considerable advance on previous discussions as a result of the new approach initiated by the two Prime Ministers. They therefore failed to see in what way the Prime Minister of Pakistan would, for example, be able to take the public into his confidence on this matter when all that would happen would be an increase in the figures of forces suggested earlier rather than a decrease. Mr. Desai replied that the questions of the quantum and character of forces etc., were really subsidiary processes of the main issue, viz. induction into office of the plebiscite administer and the conduct of affair and impartial plebiscite. It is the achievement of that major issue which the public in the two countries would see and not these minor details in achieving the main objective.

13. The Pakistani representatives felt however that the public in Pakistan would no doubt look into these details as well. In consonance with their Prime Minister’s general approach to that problem, therefore, they would suggest firstly that there should be no armed forces on either side at the end of the demilitarization period. Only police forces armed as well as unarmed need be kept for the maintenance of internal security as well as the cease-fire line. The only thing to consider in this connection therefore would be the number of the policemen required on either side.

14. If this suggestion were not acceptable, the Pakistani view was that the following factors had to be taken into account on their side:

(1) Defence at the international borders of China, USSR, and Afghanistan as far as the area under Azad Kashmir’s control were concerned.

(2) Observance of the cease-fire line.

(3) Internal security, particularly in view of the fact that the population on the Azad side was turbulent as stated by the Indian side; and

(4) Checking the main points of entry on the border with Pakistan.

On this basis, their minimum requirements would be 10,000 Azad Kashmir troops without armour and artillery plus 3,500 Gilgit and northern scouts.

15. The Indian team stated that, as agreed to by them earlier, they were prepared to discuss the question of an increase in the number of the civil force suggested by them. They could not however agree to these forces being regular Azad Kashmir troops nor to the factors mentioned by the Pakistani team which led them to arrive at the figure of 10,000 troops and 3,500 scouts. The question of “sovereignty” was mentioned by them in the initial stage of the discussion on this item and the responsibility for the maintenance of international security as far as the State is concerned, devolved on the Government of India. As far as the question of prevention of breaches in the cease-fire line is concerned, this would be attended to by the Indian troops. Finally, the prevention of re-entry by volunteers would be the responsibility of the Pakistan army in the territory of Pakistan and no troops would be necessary in the Azad areas for purpose.

The Pakistan team did not agree to this point of view. It was agreed that the committees would re-assemble tomorrow at 10 A.M. and continue discussion on this item.
Record of Discussions on December 25, 1953.

The Committees resumed discussion of this item.

2. Mr. Ahmad reverted to the first suggestion he had made in this regard, namely that there should be no armed forces on either side and that only some police force might be retained on both sides of the cease-fire line. He was convinced that this was the correct approach, and was in accordance with the way of thinking of the two Prime Ministers. Since the last meeting, however, he had met the Indian Prime Minister and Mr. Desai and he realized that a proposition like the one he had made at the previous meeting could be considered impracticable and unrealistic. He would therefore like to amplify it.

3. What he would now propose was as under:

The whole State should be completely demilitarized. The functions of security and the maintenance of the ceasefire line should be entrusted to a police force of suitable strength and equipment on both sides. In order to meet local emergencies which such police forces could not deal with, a small striking force could be maintained in the State on either side as reserve force. This would be, say, a couple of battalions on the Azad side and a similarly small force on the India side. In addition, separate arrangements could be worked out in consultation with the Plebiscite Administrator for calling upon the two sides to supply additional forces in the event of grave emergencies.

4. Mr. Ahmad stated that this proposal not only was more effective but was also in accordance with the new approach of the two Prime Ministers. Its merits were as under:

(1) The psychological drawback that India and Pakistan were still thinking in the terms of Dr. Graham’s atmosphere would disappear.

(2) There would be no hindrance in the holding of a free and impartial plebiscite, which could otherwise result from the presence of large armed forces in the State.

(3) It dealt with all foreseeable emergencies which even the proposal of having 21,000 troops on one side and 10,000 on the other, did not do.
He added that this was only a rough idea and could be improved upon.

5. Mr. Desai thanked Mr. Ahmad for re-emphasising the proposal made by him at the last meeting. Even with the elaboration now given, however, it did not meet the objections raised by him at that meeting. He had emphasized the concepts of the sovereignty of the Jammu and Kashmir government over the entire State and of the responsibility of the Government of India for the defence of the State, against the background of which, this issue had to be considered. The proposal made by Mr. Ahmad not only ignored these concepts but aimed at establishing some sort of equation of authority and interest between India and Pakistan vis-à-vis Kashmir. It was therefore clearly unacceptable on the basis of this fundamental difference of approach between the two sides. Secondly, it was also not practicable. Any large scale withdrawal of forces from the State would create a problem of mass psychology which might lead to serious administrative difficulties, apart from other practical defects which were apparent in the proposal, e.g. the need for retention of troops in Ladakh, etc. Thirdly, from a realistic point of view, this proposal, with its police forces, striking forces in the State and emergency provisions for calling up of outside forces, in actual effect was not much different from the straightforward proposal considered by them earlier, namely 21,000 Indian troops plus militia on the one side and 4,000 armed and unarmed men on the other side. As far as the conduct of a free and impartial plebiscite was concerned, all assurances could be given that the presence of the Indian army would not hamper it in any way and the Plebiscite Administrator could look into it very carefully. What was necessary was (a) secrecy of the ballot and (b) security of the ballot-boxes.

6. It was therefore agreed that this problem of the character and quantum of forces could be discussed on the basis of the alternative proposal set forth by the two sides at their last meeting.

7. Mr. Desai pointed out that this problem should be dealt with in two stages. The first stage should be that of the “character” of these forces and second one that of the “quantum”. The first one was obviously the more important one, as the second one was mainly of working out of numerical details.

8. On the question of the “character” of these forces, he would refer again to the concepts of ‘sovereignty’ and ‘responsibility’ mentioned by him earlier. It was obvious that on the Azad side, there could only be civil forces and not military troops.

9. There was considerable discussion on this issue, during which the Pakistani side pointed out that as the concepts mentioned by Mr. Desai were important to India, the concept of the Government of Azad Kashmir and its army being the symbols of the people’s revolution and struggle for liberation, was equally important to Pakistan; and the Indian side replied that this kind of approach was entirely contrary to the two Prime Ministers Agreement to settle the Kashmir dispute peacefully and by a free and impartial plebiscite forgetting rebellions, disorders, ideas of taking the law into one’s own hand, etc. The Pakistani side eventually suggested and it was agreed that this issue be held over for the time being, so that if some kind of agreement were reached on the question of the ‘quantum’ of forces, it could be re-examined and if necessary, referred to the two Prime Ministers.

10. Mr. Ahmad then suggested that both the sides should make an effort to reduce the figures given by them, as further discussion could proceed only on that basis and that as a start, the figure of 21,000 given by the Indian side needed to be reduced so as to get away from what he called “Dr. Graham atmosphere”. This could be a gesture of confidence and in keeping with the Prime Ministers’ approach.

Mr. Desai pointed out that their proposals indicated the barest minimum requirements for the various functions to be performed by the Indian army. In reaching those figures they had fully taken into account the fact that there was no question of aggression from Pakistan. Under these circumstances, (apart, of course from what he had said about the provisional nature of these proposals pending a clarification of the situation which might result from the proposed U.S. – Pakistan pact), it was not possible for the Indian side to quote any reduced figures. If the Pakistan side, however, gave any counter-proposals, the Indian Committee would no doubt examine them and if necessary submit them to their Prime Minister.

11. At this stage, the Pakistani Committee recessed for consultations among themselves. On the resumption of the meeting, Mr. Ahmad put forth the following proposals:

1. Either the position should be as it is now, namely that
   (a) there should be 21,000 troops on the Indian side and 10,000 men on the Azad side (the question of designation -- Civil Armed forces – of these ‘men’ not being agreed to at the moment);
   (b) both sides should have the same weapons;
   (c) there should be in addition the militia on the Jammu & Kashmir side and the scouts on the Azad side; and
   (d) the powers of plebiscite Administrator to reduce the forces on either side should be unfettered as obviously his hands could not be tied down in regard to what he might consider as conditions for a free plebiscite.

2. Alternatively, in the same spirit in which he had made his earlier proposal of complete demilitarization and in the spirit of the two Prime Ministers, the following would be his proposal regarding the quantum of forces;

(a) The position of the scouts and the militia should be same as in the first alternative, that is, they would be in addition to the minimum number of forces to be agreed upon.

(b) The weapons would also be the same.

(c) The forces on the two sides should be reduced in the first instance to Indian side ... 19,000 and then by Azad side ... 8,000 3 months before the plebiscite, they should be reduced still further to Indian side ... 11,000 Azad side ... 4,000

(d) If the forces were reduced to this size, the Plebiscite Administrator would have no discretion to reduce them further.

12. In reply to queries for elucidation, Mr. Ahmad explained that as far as the control over the forces on the Azad side was concerned, this would be in the hands of local authorities under U.N. surveillance. In regard to weapons, apart from anti-tank weapons, the forces on both sides should have normal infantry weapons, namely, pistols, rifles, sten guns, L.M.Gs and 3" mortars.

13. Mr. Ahmad also stated that realizing that the figures suggested by him were fairly low, arrangements could be made with the Plebiscite Administrator to empower him to call up additional forces from both sides to meet grave emergencies.

14. Mr. Desai stated that he had already clarified the Indian position. The Indian team would however study the new Pakistan proposals further so that the matter could be discussed at their next meeting. He said that the position about the ‘quantum’ of forces now emerging from the new proposal was that

(a) There was no disagreement between the two sides on the question of the powers of the Plebiscite Administrator in regard to the forces, which could be only dispositional and regulatory, when the numbers on both sides were agreed to be “rock bottom”. (It was realized of course that there was disagreement about what ‘number’ should be considered as rock bottom); and

(b) There was no disagreement regarding control over the force on the Azad side vesting in the local authorities under U.N. surveillance.

The only questions which were controversial were those of

(i) “weapons” (in regard to which the Indian team’s reactions were that they should be in accordance with the duties to be performed and in accordance with the complexion of the forces on the two sides, e. g. mortars being uncalled for in a civil force);

(ii) the difference in status between, or the equation of, the Kashmir militia and the Gilgit Scouts; and

(iii) the actual numbers on both sides which were to be considered as “rock bottom”.

15. The Committee will reassemble at 10.30 A. M. on the 26th December 1953.

Record of Discussions on December 26, 1953. Morning Session

In resuming the discussion on this item Mr. Desai expressed his disappointment that the proposals made by Mr. Ahmad at the last meeting regarding the quantum of forces indicated to him that the Pakistan approach was not constructive and did not take the two committees any forward. We reiterated the background against which the Indian side was viewing this problem, namely, the concepts of “sovereignty and responsibilities. Further, the discussion, which they were holding at present, were informal, businesslike and on a provisional basis, so that the issues may be discussed frankly and the two sides could inform their Prime Ministers how the minds of the officials were working. If, therefore, the two sides did not approach this problem in a constructive manner; instead of fulfilling the functions as advisers, they would be creating more difficulties for their Prime Ministers.

2. Mr. Desai cited in this connection the attitude taken by the Pakistani side on various problems that had arisen before them in discussing this them. Firstly, on the question of the character of the forces to be kept on the west and the north of the cease-fire line, viz., that of their designation being “civil armed forces”, the concepts mentioned by him had not so far been taken into account at all by the Pakistan side. Secondly, on the question of the equipment of the forces, the Pakistani side had tried to maintain a parity and a status of equality between the Indian army and the civil armed forces ignoring the fact that weapons to be borne by these forces should be in accordance with the functions and responsibilities of the two sides. Thirdly, it appeared to him that, in making their suggestions regarding numbers, the Pakistani side had all the time kept before them the question of a co-relation between the Indian side and the Pakistani side saying that if the Indian army had so many numbers, the Azad side will have so many numbers and that if on the other hand the Indian side was reduced by so many, then the other side will be reduced again by so many men.

3. As far as the Indian proposals were concerned, however, they were based entirely on a realistic and practical consideration of the problem. They had gone into this question very carefully with their military advisers and consonant with the duties to be performed and responsibilities to be borne by the Indian army, the figure of 21,000 suggested by them was definitely the rock bottom figure. They had also considered the concrete points made by the Pakistani team in assessing the requirements on the west and the north of the cease-fire line, and with a view to making a sincere effort to bridge the gulf between the two sides. They were prepared to advise their Prime Minister that one of the contentions of the Pakistani side had to be considered sympathetically, namely, that of the retention of the Gilgit and Baltistan scouts in the northern areas. Mr. Desai added that the question of control of these scouts would, of course, have to be gone into and would necessarily have to be the same as that of the civil armed force. Secondly, the Indian side was also prepared to advise their Prime Minister that, in view of the considerations mentioned by the Pakistani side, the question of increasing the number of civil armed forces from 4,000 to 6,000 might also be considered sympathetically. Questions of the equipment for these forces on the basis of their needs as well as of the ratio of armed and unarmed men could, he was sure, be discussed by the two sides to their mutual satisfaction. There was, however, one proviso to be attached to the question of the number of the civil armed force and that was that this force should be composed of people inhabiting the west of the cease fire line but half of them should be from the elements now comprising the Azad Kashmir force which would have to be disbanded and the other half from other elements.

4. Mr. Ahmad replied that from his point of view and from the point of view of the approach which, according to him, was the approach of the two Prime Ministers, the comments of the Indian side were disappointing. He added that since his arrival in Delhi, he was now convinced – which he was not on the first day the meeting started – that the Indian committee wished to settle this problem and that the meetings were not held simply because a date had previously been agreed to. Still, however, he had received two shocks since his arrival, one of which was the statement made by the Indian side that whatever was discussed was provisional which meant that nothing was settled and, secondly, the position adopted by India that the proposals for U.S. military aid to Pakistan had a bearing on the demilitarization of Kashmir. On the latter issue, he stated that the U.S aid proposals might have bearings on Indo – Pakistan relations on a wider plane, but they could have no connection as far as the question of demilitarization in Kashmir and the quantum of forces to be kept there was concerned.

5. Mr. Desai expressed his surprise that these two issues should have been deemed as giving any shock at this stage. The Indian position had been clarified on the first day they had met. Actually, their discussions were double provisional. Firstly, in accordance with the joint press communiqué of the 20th August, 1953, the two Prime Ministers had agreed that these preliminary issues would be considered by them directly in order to arrive at agreements in regard to them and that the committees were to be appointed only to advise them. Apart from the fact, therefore, that officials could not bind the hands of their Prime Ministers, the terms of reference of the committees precluded them from any functions other than advisory. Secondly, their discussions were provisional also because of the proposed US--Pakistan Pact. The two Prime Ministers were considering this particular aspect. The Prime Ministers would also be considering, when they discuss Kashmir, the items discussed by the two committees as well as a large number of other items and the decisions that they would take would be based on a sum total of their appreciation of the entire field. This position was also clarified by him at the first meeting.

6. Considerable discussion then ensued on the general background of the proposals made by the Pakistan during which Mr. Ahmad reiterated the points made by him at previous meetings regarding the spirit of the Pakistani approach, considerations of the actual holding of the plebiscite and of its freedom and impartiality, etc. He also stated that the Pakistani attitude to proposals on this and other items should not be considered as aggressive or put forth in the spirit of thus far and no further, as they could not afford to be aggressive from the practical consideration that disagreement with India would mean the status quo resulting in the continuance of Indian control of Kashmir. They had, however, to take into account the question of public opinion, so that it would be better not to have an agreement on Kashmir rather than have an agreement by giving certain concessions and making certain mistakes which the public might interpret as leading to the loss of Kashmir to Pakistan. The Indian side pointed out that they cannot agree to the subjective views of the Pakistan public being the governing factor in judging the adequacy of the arrangements leading to the plebiscite. What arrangements will secure a free and impartial plebiscite must be assessed objectively and not with an eye to leading the dice one way or the other. On some discussion taking place on this particular statement, Mr. Ahmad stated that by this he did not mean that the consideration of satisfying future public opinion in Pakistan would condition their proposals in regard to Kashmir. What he meant was that if the officials themselves were convinced that a particular thing agreed to might result in affecting the freedom and impartiality of the plebiscite, they could not support it merely for the sake of reaching an understanding with India, which they otherwise might do, were it not for the need to respect public opinion which generally consider Kashmir as the only issue determining the future of Indo-Pakistan relationship.

7. Mr Ahmad stated that, as far as he was concerned, he understood the point of view of the Indian committee on the proposals made by him; even though he did not agree with their approach. In his view, this matter could be discussed on the following proposals in the order of priority:

1. Complete demilitarization with the safeguards elaborated by him at the last meeting;

2. Demilitarization in two stages leaving at the time of the plebiscite 11,000 troops on the Indian side and 4,000 men on the Azad side with the proviso of the Plebiscite Administrator calling armed assistance from India and Pakistan in the case of emergencies; and,

3. 21,000 troops on the Indian side and 10,000 men the Azad side.

The first two proposals, in their order of priority, were in consonance with the Prime Ministers’ approach while the third was not and could be resorted to only if there was no agreement on the former.

8. Mr. Desai replied that the first two proposals made by Mr. Amad had already been examined very carefully and the Indian reactions had been communicated to the Pakistani team. To reiterate: The first difficulty was the danger involved in keeping the forces in the State so low that the Plebiscite Administrator would have to call additional forces from outside with all its administrative and psychological drawbacks. Secondly, if these proposals were examined in detail regarding the needs of the striking force, their location from the point of view of terrain, geography, etc., the increase in police forces, the retention of the scouts and militia, etc., it would be found that there was really no qualitative difference between them and the straightforward proposal given by the Indian side of 21,000 troops on the one side and 6,000 of the civil armed force on the other. Apart from these proposals being impracticable, they also had another basic drawback, namely, that they involved provisions for calling up of outside forces from India and Pakistan. It was on these considerations that the Indian side were unable to accept these proposals. On the third proposal given by the Pakistani side, however they had examined the matter carefully and given a counterproposal which was reasonable and meat considerable concessions to Pakistan. These concessions were:

1. The acceptance of the Pakistan point of view about the security of the northern areas and consequent need for retention of the scouts; and,

(2) Substantial increase in the number of the civil armed forces on the Azad side with a readiness to come to a satisfactory solution about the ratio between armed and unarmed men as well as the type of equipment necessary on the basis of the functions to be performed by the force. On this question, therefore, the Indian side had made an appreciable advance over the attitude taken during the last five years or so. The only point on which they had retained their earlier position was that the civil armed force on the Pakistan side should consist of half Azad and half non-Azad elements from the local population in those areas.

9. Some discussion then ensued during which Gen. Chaudhuri and Gen. Sheikh participated regarding the security aspect of this problem. Gen. Chaudhuri pointed out that there were four distinct areas to be taken into account, namely,

(1) The Northern areas.
(2) Ladakh.
(3) The Kashmir Valley, and
(4) Jammu.

10. The question of calling up of outside forces was therefore an impracticable proposition, as the main problem for the military authorities was how soon they could get the requisite forces when they needed them at a particular point in an emergency. On the basis of those considerations, the figure of 21,000 by the Indian side was the lowest possible, consonant with their requirements. He also pointed out that there would be a large number of men within this figure of 21,000 which would be engaged in logistic support. There were several duties to be performed by these people, as for example, supply, headquarters, medical cover, etc. This was particularly important on the Indian side where, in view of the terrain and the differences, in the various regions, the number of troops required for such logistic support would be much higher than was ordinarily the case or would be the case on the Azad side. In reply to a statement made by Gen. Sheikh he also stated that in assessing the requirements of the Indian armed forces, no stress had been laid on the question of security vis-à-vis Pakistan. Gen. Sheikh stated that, apart from his belief that unnecessary stress had been laid on this aspect of the problem, as far as the Azad side was concerned, the length of the cease-fire line was the same and in suggesting their figure of 10,000, they had taken into account that the duties to be performed by both sides as far as the cease-fire line was concerned, would be identical.
Even then, of course, the number of men kept on the Azad side of the line would have to be less than those on the Indian side in view of the fact that the Pakistan side had suggested a very low total figure. When the Indian side pointed out that the maintenance of the ceasefire line was the responsibility of the Indian army, the Pakistani side replied that psychologically it would be better if violations of the cease-fire line were dealt with by the forces of the area to which the violators belonged. Otherwise, small incidents might have serious repercussions.

11. Mr. Ahmad stated that he appreciated that, from the Indian point of view, the concessions made were not to be considered as insignificant. To him, however, they were not so important as the main objectives were, firstly, the actual holding of the plebiscite and, secondly, the conduct of the plebiscite in a fair and impartial manner. To that extent the main issue was the reduction of forces. If, however, the Indian side was not prepared to consider his first two proposals, the only proposal to consider was that of 21,000 men on the one side and 10,000 on the other. The alternative given by the Indian side, namely, of having 6,000 men on the Azad side, was clearly inadequate, as the approach in that case would be to have forces suitable to meet all foreseeable emergencies.

12. The committee adjourned till 3 P.M. in the afternoon.

Record of Discussions on December 26, 1953.
Afternoon Session

Item III – Character and quantum of forces (continued).

At the resumption of discussion on this item, Mr. Desai stated that in his view there had been a considerable advance on this very difficult problem from the position which obtained during their last discussions with Dr. Graham. Firstly, the Indian side had agreed to the Pakistani assessment of practical difficulties in the northern areas and were prepared to recommend the retention to the Gilgit and Baltistan scouts. Secondly, the Indian side had also agreed to recommend an increase of the civil armed force to 6,000 men, without being difficult about the ratio of armed and unarmed men. This was an advance from 2,000 armed and 2,000 unarmed men, which were the figures so far accepted by India. In regard to complexion of these forces, the Indian side were prepared to agree to their recruitment from the area on the west of the cease-fire line, with the only proviso that half of them should be from the elements now comprising the Azad forces and the other half from other elements. On practically every issue on this item, therefore, the Indian side had made concessions.
2. The differences on the two sides had now mainly narrowed down only to one point and that was that in the view of the Pakistani committee, the Azad side needed 10,000 men while in the view of the Indian committee 6,000 men were quite adequate.

3. He hoped the Pakistani side could appreciate these concessions and narrow the gulf further, but even if there was no meeting of minds on that issue, he would still not be disappointed if these discussions led to the two sides appreciating each other’s point of view and each other’s difficulties.

4. Mr. Ahmad stated that even though he understood the Indian point of view and agreed that India had made some concessions, the fact remained that there was no agreement on the main issue of the quantum of forces. He added that their suggestion for 10,000 men was quite reasonable taking into consideration the facts that the length of cease-fire line on both sides was equal, the terrain on their side was more difficult and population on their side even though less, was more turbulent. Even the area was the same. This was however queried by the Indian side as the northern areas were separately provided for and the Azad area minus the northern areas was much smaller than under the authority of the J. & K. State.

5. It was agreed that accordance with the procedure adopted by the committees, this matter might be held over for the time being, and other points relating to this item should be discussed.

Equipment of the Civil Armed Force.

6. Gen. Chaudhuri stated that the functions of this force were twofold: (1) Maintenance of law and order, and (2) Prevention of minor violations of the cease-fire line, the question of large scale aggression being out of question. Further, it would be dealing with an unarmed population.

7. The duties of the force were therefore police duties and it should be equipped with police type of weapons, namely, pistols, stenguns, rifles and L.M.Gs on a reduced rate. On the Indian side, even though in general the duties were more or less the same for most of the J. & K. State area, the position was that it was regular army units which were kept in the State and it was not possible to break up the organisation of the army. There could therefore be no question of the Azad side seeking any equality even with forces like the Assam Rifles, whose functions were different in that they dealt with tribals and were also engaged on border protection work. Weapons for civil armed force should therefore be determined on the basis of its role and not on the basis of any theoretical conception of equality with the Indian army.
8. The Pakistani side pointed out that when they had asked for 2" and 3" mortars and a full complement of L.M.G.s, they were not motivated by any theoretical ideas of equality with the Indian army. Their stand had been based only on practical considerations. Firstly, the roles of the forces on the two sides were identical and they should have the same weapons. In reply to a query by the Indian side, they stated that taking into account the character of the population on the Azad side and the smallness of the force, sufficient number of L.M.Gs as well as the usual infantry complement of 2" and 3" mortars were essential. Their civil armed force in East Pakistan had mortars. Secondly, the Azad Kashmir force today was trained and organised on the same basis as the Pakistani army and in accordance with their present conception, it would eventually be assimilated in the regular Pakistani army. On the Indian side it was pointed out that the second point was entirely irrelevant to the issue.

9. The committees adjourned at this stage. The next meeting will be held at 10 A.M. on Sunday, 27th December 1953.

Record of Discussions on December 27, 1953. 10 AM

There was further discussion on the question of the equipment necessary for the civil armed force, during which the Indian side re-emphasised that problem should be viewed not on the basis of ideas of parity with the Indian army but on the basis of the role to be performed by civil armed force. Brig. Manekshaw explained that a civil armed force could never have, or need, a 3" mortar. That was the position in India except for the Assam Rifles, whose duties were different, in view of the fact that they had to deal with tribals and border security. He added that a 3" mortar was a very destructive weapon, having a range of anything from 1, 600 to 3, 400 yards, pouring down an immense amount of shells, round after round, in quick succession. A 2" mortar had a shorter range, that is, about 400 to 450 yards, but here again apart from its functions of indication of targets and putting up of flares, it was also destructive weapon of considerable magnitude. On the other hand, the Indian side was being practical and did not insist that the Gilgit Scouts should be deprived to their normal equipment of an infantry battalion.

The Pakistani side did not agree that the force on the Azad side would not require mortars or that they would not require the same weight of L.M.Gs i.e., one per section. They again added that their assessment of the requirements was not based on ideas of parity but on needs.
2. As the two sides could not agree on this issue, it was agreed that the committees should proceed to the consideration of the next problem concerning this item – the composition and character of the force west of the cease-fire line.

Composition and Character of the Civil Armed Force.

3. Mr. Desai invited the attention of the Pakistan team to what he had said in this regard earlier, namely, that the Indian side would recommend an increase of the civil armed force to 6,000 men without being difficult about the ratio of armed and unarmed men. In regard to the complexion of this force, they were also prepared to recommend that these men be recruited from the area on the west of the cease-fire line, with the only proviso that half of them should be from the elements now comprising the Azad forces, which would be disbanded and disarmed, and the other half from other elements in that area. They had taken a very reasonable attitude on this question, as they were not now insisting that the non-Azad elements in the force should be supplied by the J & K State, or that they should be composed of men from the area now under the control of the State authorities.

4. Mr. Ahmad stated that the Pakistani side had agreed earlier that the question of the nomenclature of the force on the Azad side would be submitted by them to their Prime Minister for discussion and settlement at the Prime Ministers’ level. On the question of the composition, however, they were not in a position to accept the Indian proposition, in view of several insuperable administrative and practical difficulties, keeping in mind the need for the maintenance of law and order in the Azad area. For example, if and when the present Azad Kashmir army was being disbanded, there would be confusion and the law and order position would be completely unattended to. Secondly, there was the difficulty of training and the problem of discipline in the new force under the Indian proposition. Even when an ex-army man was being taken in a police force, he needed the usual training ranging anywhere up to one year. Thus, while the old force would be destroyed, the new force would take about a year to come into being. On the other hand, the entire process of demilitarization had to be accomplished within a period of three months. The Pakistan side therefore, could not afford to take these risks.

5. Mr. Desai stated that it was not the intention of the Indian side that the Azad Kashmir forces should be disbanded overnight. The question of their disbandment and disarmament would be a gradual process to be accomplished in stages and to be staggered to meet the practical objections raised by Mr. Ahmed. Moreover, it must not be forgotten that, while all this is being done, the Pakistani army would also be on the Azad side and it could be so arranged that the withdrawal of the Pakistani army, the disbandment of the Azad Kashmir army and the creation of a new and re-organised force not present any real difficulties. They had met this problem in India in Part B States when the old State forces were disbanded and re-organised to meet the new conditions. Mr. Shankar pointed out the instance of the organisation of the U.P. Armed Constabulary in 1947, which was accomplished in one month’s time. The position on the Azad side was not so difficult, particularly as most of the men to be recruited in the new force would be ex-servicemen, and three months were, therefore, not an insufficient time to implement the Indian proposal. It was realized that there would be difficulties on both sides. Those on the Indian side were of considerable magnitude, involving as they did the evacuation of a very large number of men of the Indian army and their supplies, In the interest of a fair plebiscite, however, both sides would have to overcome these difficulties, which, as explained by the Indian side, were not insuperable.

6. The Pakistan side did not agree. Their proposal in this regard was as follows:

The Azad Kashmir army and the Pakistan army were now working as one unit, having the same servicing and logistic elements. What they would do, therefore, would be to create a new self-contained force re-organising the existing battalions reducing their number and constituting necessary headquarters, logistics and other servicing units. The new force would be organised on army lines, that means, in battalions and not in wings. Actually, their civil armed force in East Bengal was also organised on the battalion basis. Even though, therefore, it was possible that some units in the existing Azad Kashmir forces would not be affected by this re-organisation, in actual effect, the present Azad Kashmir army would generally have to be re-organised for the purposes of the reduction of its strength and of its re-constitution as self-contained force. They could not, however, agree to a general or partial disarmament and disbandment of the Azad Kashmir army.

7. The Indian side stated that the Pakistan proposal in this regard in effect meant only reduction of the existing battalions of the Azad Kashmir army and addition of certain servicing units for the purpose of making the new force into a self-contained force. It was recognised that many, or even most, of the old battalions of the Azad Kashmir army would be affected by this reorganisation; but on an overall view, it would only mean a reduced Azad Kashmir army.

8. In view of the considerable difference in the approach of the two sides to this question, it was decided that this matter be held over.

Control of the Force.
9. It was agreed on both sides that, as the control over the civil armed force and the Gilgit and Baltistan Scouts would vest in local authorities under U.N. surveillance that aspect of the problem could be taken up while discussing the next item on the unofficial agenda, namely, Item IV—Local Authorities, as local authorities and surveillance by U.N. representative must be spelled out fully before the nature of control of these forces can be known.

ITEM IV—Local Authorities.

10. The Pakistani side explained what were the authorities functioning at present in areas outside the control of the J&K State Government.

As far as the northern areas were concerned, there were two Political Agents, who were officers of the Pakistan Government in charge respectively of the Gilgit and Baltistan zones. This was necessary as the Gilgit and Baltistan areas were inaccessible, firstly, from the Azad Kashmir side and, secondly, from each other. The staff of these Political Agents was old staff and consisted of local elements. These areas constituted a separate administration with a separate budget and Pakistan had to make a contribution to the budget as the local revenues were insufficient. The coordination between the Political Agents was effected by the Pakistan Government.

As far as the rest of the area was concerned, it was administered by the Azad Kashmir Government with a Cabinet and a civil secretarial at Muzaffarabad in the same manner as a provincial government. There were three districts under a Commissioner. These three districts of Muzaffarabad, Poonch and Mirpur were under Deputy Commissioners and there was the usual district and tehsil administration. There were the district police as well as the Central Police reserve and the usual paraphernalia of officers of a provincial administration, like the I.G. of Police, Chief Conservator of Forests, etc. Liaison between the Government of Pakistan and the Azad Kashmir Government was maintained by the Ministry of Kashmir Affairs. As far as the officers of the Azad Kashmir Government were concerned, there were only a few Pakistani officers serving there on deputation in posts where suitable Kashmiris were not available.

11. The Pakistani side then proceeded to give the historical background of the problem of local authorities in order to explain their proposals for the future set up of the areas, and stated that the two main principles adopted by the Commission in this regard were: (1) That the Azad Kashmir Government could not be recognized as the government of the areas now under its control and, (2) that the United Nations would not undertake administration of these areas. It was in view of this background that the term “local authorities” was used. The point which the Government of Pakistan had considered was that, if the Indian Government could not function there, neither could the Government of Pakistan, and if, at the same time, the Azad Kashmir Government was not recognized, it was necessary that some authorities must remain to carry on the administration. Dixon’s proposals in this regard were not acceptable to either side and there was only a brief discussion on the subject with Dr. Graham, who said that surveillance meant appointment of civil observers of the U.N. Then came the memorandum from India of February 1953, and there the matter rested.

12. The Indian representatives stated that as far as this aspect of the problem was concerned, the matter had been elucidated by Dr. Graham, and invited the attention of the Pakistani committee to Annexure I of Dr. Graham’s fifth Report, where, in Section C, the question of local authorities and sovereignty had been discussed. Dr. Graham mentioned the following position taken by India:

“That, paragraph A, 3 of Part II of the resolution should not be interpreted, or applied in practice, so as

“(a) To bring into question the sovereignty of the Jammu & Kashmir Government over the portion of their territory evacuated by Pakistan troops:

“(b) To afford any recognition of the so-called Azad Kashmir Government; or

“(c) To enable this territory to be consolidated in any way during the period of truce to the disadvantage of the State.”

Dr. Graham had also quoted the following statement from the letter of the Indian Prime Minister:

“If I understood you correctly, A.3 of Part II of the resolution does not envisage the creation on any of the conditions to which we have objected in paragraph 3(1) of this letter. In fact, you made it clear that the Commission was not competent to recognise the sovereignty of any authority over the evacuated areas other than that of Jammu and Kashmir Government”.

Dr Graham further gave the reply of the Chairman of the Commission, conveying its view that the interpretation of the resolution, as expressed above, coincided with its own interpretation.

It was clear from this that these were the assurances, clarifications and elucidations given by the U.N.C.I.P. and that Dr. Graham had summarized them as such. It was obviously in consonance with these assurances, namely:
Recognition of the sovereignty of the Jammu & Kashmir Government over the portion of their territory evacuated by Pakistan troops;

Non-recognition of the so-called Azad Kashmir Government; and

Not enabling this territory to be consolidated to the advantage of the State; that the official committees had to work out an agreed definition of “local authorities”.

13. The Pakistan side attempted to demur at this assessment of the position, pointing out that certain assurances were also given to the Government of Pakistan by the Commission, namely, that the U.N. surveillance will not extend to the northern areas and that there will be no interference in the existing administration of the Azad areas by the Azad Kashmir Government. They admitted that these assurances were not published, but were incorporated in their minutes of discussion with the Commission. The Indian side stated that as far as the assurances were concerned, the only assurances recognised by Dr. Graham were those which he summarised in Annexure I of his report. Further it was clear from para 38 of Dr. Graham’s Fifth Report that the terms of reference of the discussion which took place in Geneva in February 1953, between the representatives of the two Governments at ministerial level under the auspices of the United Nations Representative, were to continue negotiations on the basis of UNCIP’s resolutions of 13th August 1948 and 5th January 1949, bearing in mind the assurances, clarifications and elucidations given to the Governments of India and Pakistan by the UNCIP. It was Annexure - I which summarised these elucidations and assurances.

14. After a short recess for consultation among themselves, the Pakistani side then proceeded to give their idea of what should constitute local authorities in the area not under the control of the State administration. They stated that taking into account the points made by the Indian Government, as summarised by Dr. Graham in Annexure - I, the position of the Pakistan Government was as follows:

The Pakistan Government did not accept the Indian concept of the sovereignty of the Jammu & Kashmir Government over the Azad areas. However, out of respect for the feeling which the Government of India had in that regard, they were not insisting on the de jure recognition of the Azad Kashmir Government. Subject to that understanding, the view of the Pakistan Government was that existing authorities on the Azad side would continue to function. They agreed that Pakistan officials should be withdrawn. It should be realised, however, that there might be certain difficulties about technical men, like the P & T staff as well as engineers and health personnel. As far as the P. & T. staff were concerned, the committee had no idea of the size of the problem, but in regard to others, it was not expected that there would be more than 4 or 5 Pakistani personnel required to continue in the State. The Pakistani committee also agreed that there should be no connection between the Azad Kashmir authorities and the Pakistan Government and that there should be the surveillance of U.N. Representative over the local authorities.

These comments applied only to the Azad areas minus the northern areas, which presented a peculiar problem, in view of (a) inaccessibility from the Kashmir side; (b) the requirements of the defence of the international frontiers and (c) the presence in that area of other States, like Hunza, Nagar and half a dozen other small principalities, which had direct connection with the Government of Pakistan. In view of practical difficulties in the northern areas, therefore, the present administrative set up should continue unhampered.

14. Mr. Desai expressed his disappointment that the Pakistani team had not made an effort to meet not only the Indian point of view but the clear assurances given by the UNICIP as recognized by Dr. Graham. Actually, the Pakistani proposals were directly contrary to these assurances. In effect, what the Pakistani proposals amounted to was that the Government of Pakistan would continue to control the northern areas and that the Government of Azad Kashmir would continue to control the Azad areas. Such definition and explanation of the term “local authorities” were, therefore, totally unacceptable to the Indian side.

15. The committees adjourned till 10.30 on Monday, the 28th December 1953.

Record of Discussions on December 28, 1953. 10.30 A.M.

Mr. Desai reiterated the comments of the Indian side on the proposals put forward by Pakistan side in regard to “local authorities” and stated that they were totally unacceptable to the Indian side, being entirely contrary to the Indian conception not only on this particular item but on the entire Kashmir problem as a whole. They were also contrary to the assurances and elucidations given by the Commission to the Government of India, as summarised by Dr. Graham. The Pakistani proposals only brought “into the question the sovereignty of the Jammu & Kashmir Government over the portion of their territory evacuated by Pakistan troops,” but also directly militated against it. Further, the fact that the Government of Pakistan would continue to run the northern areas directly and the Azad areas indirectly, in view of the close connection subsisting between them and the Azad Kashmir Government, the Pakistani proposals also offended against another specific assurance given to the Government of India, namely, that this territory should not be consolidated in any way during the period of truce to the disadvantage of the State. Mr. Desai added that, as far as he could see, the Pakistani proposals appreciated only two minor points advanced by the Government of India. The Pakistani team had stated that they would withdraw all Pakistani personnel from the Azad Kashmir area except the P & T staff and technicians and that there would be no connection between the Government of Pakistan and the Azad Kashmir Government. On the main issue, however, their proposals, in effect, amounted to a de facto recognition of the Azad Kashmir Government which was specifically precluded by the UNCIP.

2. Mr. Ahmad stated that it was not the intention of the Pakistani team to ask for an indirect de facto recognition of the Azad Kashmir Government. Their proposals were, however, based on the administrative requirements of area concerned. They appreciated that India attached considerable important to the question of the sovereignty of the J. & K. State which Pakistan did not accept. Notwithstanding this, their proposals in regard to local authorities had been based not on concepts of sovereignty or recognition of Azad Kashmir Government, but merely from the point of view of administrative practicabilities.

3. The question of assurances given by the UNCIP had been gone into by the two committees at the previous meeting. Unfortunately the UNCIP had given assurances to the two sides, which appeared to him to be contradictory.

4. Some discussion then ensued in regard to these assurances, during which the Indian side repeated what they had stated at the previous meeting, namely, that the assurances given to the Indian side were given by the Commission as a whole and formed Annexure - I of Dr. Graham’s Fifth Report. The Pakistani side, however, pointed out that assurances given to them formed a part of the minutes of discussion prepared by the Commission themselves, even though these minutes might not have been supplied to India. One of the assurances was that the Azad Kashmir movement was not ignored by the Commission. The Indian side replied that it had been decided that statements made by individual members of the Commission did not constitute an assurance given by the Commission as a whole and pointed out that even at a meeting held on the 2nd September 1948, between the representatives of the Government of Pakistan and the Commission, Mr. Korbel had stated that by “local authorities”, the Commission meant “the Azad Kashmir people, though they could not grant recognition to the Azad Kashmir Government.”

5. Mr. Ahmad stated that, apart from the question of these assurances which to him appeared contradictory, the important criterion was the administrative requirements of the areas and it was on that basis that they had put forth their proposals in regard to local authorities. The Government of Pakistan had also to look at the problem from the point of view of political considerations.

Firstly, in regard to Gilgit, Pakistan must remain responsible for the defence of the northern border. Apart from this, the acceptance of the Indian point of view would also mean break up of relationship between Pakistan and other States and principalities, like Hunza, Nagar, etc, which were in direct relationship with the Government of Pakistan. Further, it should be borne in mind that the arrangements contemplated by them were not only for the duration of the plebiscite, that is, about three months or so, but for nearly a year. It was not possible for the Government of Pakistan to take the risk of leaving northern areas in isolation and it was necessary that stable administrative arrangements should continue in that region. Even the Indian Prime Minister, in explaining India's point of view regarding sovereignty, etc., had stated that Gilgit should be an exception.

In regard to the Azad Kashmir areas, they were unable to understand how in a democratic Government, a popular Ministry could dissolve itself. In any case, Pakistan had no constitutional authority over the Azad Kashmir Government and whatever was done there could be done only with their consent. The first question that arose in this regard, therefore, was whether the Azad Kashmir Government would agree to sign away its existence voluntarily. For the sake of argument, even if the Government of Pakistan agreed to the proposal of the dissolution of the Azad Kashmir Government, in the event of the solution of the entire Kashmir problem hinging on that particular issue, it was not possible for them to force the Azad Kashmir Government to accept the proposed Harakiri. Secondly, even if the Azad Kashmir Government were willing to dissolve themselves, there had to be a central authority to administer the areas after the withdrawal of the Pakistan army. This central authority also had to be a democratic authority. Mr. Ahmad thought that even if the Present Government was followed by another democratic set up, there would not be very much difference in its complexion except that there was danger of internal fighting and deterioration of the law and order situation. That was a risk they could not take.

6. Mr. Ahmad added that, bearing in mind the requirements of practical administrative and political difficulties and the repugnance of a democratic government to force the dissolution of a popular Ministry, if the India team could suggest any alternative proposals, they would be considered sympathetically by the Pakistani team.

7. The Indian side pointed out that the statement made by their Prime Minister regarding Gilgit was misunderstood by the Pakistan side. In his letter dated the 20th August 1948, to the Chairman of the Commission, the Prime Minister had stated that the authority of the Government of Jammu & Kashmir over this region as a whole had not been challenged or disturbed except by roving bands of hostiles or in some places like Skardu which had been occupied by irregulars of Pakistan troops. He had added that after these troops and irregulars had withdrawn from the territory, the responsibility for the administration of the evacuated areas should revert to the Government of Jammu & Kashmir and that for defence to India. It was here that the Prime Minister had stated that the only exception that he would be prepared to accept would be Gilgit. The exception was in regard to the administration by the Government of Jammu & Kashmir and to the responsibility for defence of the Government of India. It did not mean that the administration and the defence should be conducted by the Government of Pakistan. The view of the Indian team in regard to the administration of the Gilgit area, therefore was that the status quo before the entry of Pakistan in that zone should be restored. That could be the only meaning of “local authorities”.

In regard to the Azad Kashmir area, it was quite clear that even on the basis of assurances given to the Government of Pakistan by the member of the Commission, the position was that the statement of the Commission that the existence of the Azad Kashmir movement had not been ignored by them, meant the recognition of the Azad Kashmir people and not of the Azad Kashmir Government. Further, the Pakistani side had talked about the democratic set up in that area. It appeared to them that there had been five or six changes in the ministerial set up in Azad Kashmir. All those changes were made without any reference to the wishes of the people and the people in that area had had no opportunity of registering either their approval or disapproval of the various governments which came into being there. The Pakistan side replied that as far as this aspect of the problem was concerned there were two ways of having a democratic set up of government. Either the people elected their rulers, or that leaders came up in front and the people accepted them subsequently. As far as the Azad Kashmir areas were concerned, their main difficulty, however, was that pending a final decision about the accession of the State, they did not believe that elections should be held or that assemblies should be formed.

8. Mr. Desai stated that from what he could gather of the Pakistani point of view in this regard, the problem was political in character, the Pakistan contention being not based so much on tangibles which could be resolved by officials on the two sides, but on concepts like the extent of the authority which the Pakistan Government could exercise on the Present Azad Kashmir Government and the extent to which their decisions could be implemented by the existing authorities or alternative authorities in that area. That being so the problem entirely fell within the sphere of direct discussion between the two Prime Ministers, in which the official teams could not presume to interfere.
According to the Pakistani reading of the problem, therefore, the matter should be referred to the two Prime Ministers.

9. It was agreed that this matter be held over.

10. Before proceeding to the next item it was agreed that the question of surveillance of local authorities by the U.N. Representative should be left to the Representative who would submit his plan in that regard to the two sides. He would have to produce a plan which would satisfy any fears that might exist on the freedom of the plebiscite being affected by the local authorities. This matter would therefore need to be gone into at a later stage.

ITEM V – Safeguarding of Peace and Fundamental Rights in the State.

11. The Indian side explained the position in regard to this problem as it obtained as a result of the Resolutions of the Commission dated the 13th August 1948 and the 5th January 1949.

Part II of the Resolution of the 13th August 1948 referred to the truce agreement. Under this Resolution, both Governments are to accept certain principles as a basis for the truce agreement. One of these principles was that the Government of India “will undertake to ensure that the Government of the State of Jammu & Kashmir will take all measures within their power to make it publicly know that peace, law and order will be safeguarded and that all human and political rights will be guaranteed”. Under this Resolution, the details of the agreement were to be worked out in discussion between the representatives of the Governments concerned and the Commission. The Government of India accepted this Resolution, though the Government of Pakistan maintained that this acceptance was a conditional acceptance. In any case, the Government of Pakistan had not accepted that Resolution conditionally or otherwise.

The August Resolution, therefore, merely stipulated for making it publicly know by the Jammu & Kashmir Government that certain things would be done: that and no more. The matter was taken further in the Commission’s Resolution of the 5th January 1949, paragraph 7 of which stated that “all authorities within the State of Jammu & Kashmir will undertake to ensure in collaboration with the Plebiscite Administrator that” certain things were done. What had to be done had been given in detail as for example, that there should be no threat, coercion, intimidation, etc,

The scheme emerging out of these Resolutions, therefore, indicated three stages of fulfillment: (1) The issue of a declaration by the Jammu & Kashmir Government; (2) Consultation with the Plebiscite Administrator about the details regarding the guaranteeing of human and political rights, as elaborated in paragraph 7 of the January 1949 Resolution: and (3) Implementation by the Government of Jammu & Kashmir.

12. The Pakistani side agreed with this interpretation. They added that it was their understanding that the discussion of details regarding these “rights” would not be subject to limitations, if any, imposed either by the Indian Constitution or by the proposed Kashmir constitution and that the discussions would be based on fundamental rights embodied in the U.N. Charter. The Indian side agreed that these discussions would not be circumscribed by any limitations but that they would naturally be based on local conditions and local requirements.

13. As there were no further item for discussion, the committees concluded their discussion on the agenda.

14. In summarising his impressions of the conference, Mr. Ahmad stated that he was not very happy with the sum total of the achievement registered by the committees. Undoubtedly, something had been done especially in the direction of understanding each other’s points of view but in his view they had not materially eased their Prime Minister burden on important issues like demilitarization. There were, no doubt, other difficult problems to settle, but it appeared to him that unless the issue of demilitarization was satisfactorily settled, there was not much likelihood of any meeting of minds on those issues. They had also to bear in mind that there was a tight time table and the various issues had to be settled before the induction of the Plebiscite Administrator in April 1954. It was that aspect that made him unhappy.

15. Mr. Desai stated that his impression of their deliberations were different. When they had met on the first day, he emphasised that the context of events, under which the two Prime Ministers had met in August 1953 and discussed Kashmir among other issues, had undergone certain changes, as illustrated in the correspondence between the two Prime Ministers, on the proposed US-Pakistan Aid pact and the appointment of a Plebiscite Administrator. The informal discussions by the two committees, therefore, were provisional subject to a clarification of the atmosphere which would emerge from the new context. As a matter of fact, as he had then stated, their discussions were doubly provisional as, in accordance with the communique of the 20th August 1953, issued by the two Prime Ministers and their terms of reference, the two official teams were functioning only in an advisory capacity. The two Prime Ministers had agreed that would consider the “preliminary issues” directly in order to arrive at agreements in regard to them.

As he saw it the function of the two committees was to understand each other’s point of view on these preliminary issues and be in a position to advise their Prime Ministers, with a view to helping them in their direct discussion. To the extent that there was a frank and informal exchange of views between the two sides and to the extent that they had understood each other’s points of view, they had undoubtedly lightened the burden of their Prime Ministers.

In addition, they had also made some progress in the details concerning various issues, principally, in regard to the question of demilitarization which, according to the Pakistan team, was the most important. As pointed out by him earlier, the Indian side had made all efforts to meet the Pakistani point of view and as compared to the position which existed before meeting and which had continued for at least five years, considerable concessions had been made. For example, the Pakistani position regarding the northern areas had been accepted more or less completely. In regard to the Azad areas, they had now agreed to 6,000 men in the civil armed force, all armed if necessary as against 2,000 unarmed men. Further, on the question of the complexion of this force, they were not insisting that the non-Azad elements in the force should be supplied by the J & K. Government, or be composed of men from the areas controlled by that Government. These were significant advances.

16. It was agreed that the committees would meet again on Tuesday, the 19th December at 2.30 P.M. when the points of view of the two sides would be summarised, so as to remove any ambiguity or misunderstanding that might exist. A joint Press Note would also be drafted at that session which would be the final session of the committees.

Record of Discussions on December 29, 1953. 2.30 P.M.

Summary of Discussions.

The committees went over the ground covered by them during their discussions at previous sessions, so as to summarise in a general way the position of the two sides.

2. Mr. Desai reiterated the general background of the Indian position both in regard to the terms of reference of the committees as given in the joint communique issued by the two Prime Ministers and the various questions in direct correspondence between the two Prime Ministers, e.g., selection of Plebiscite Administrator, which indicated that their functions were advisory and discussions provisional and the change in the context of events as a result of US – Pakistan military aid negotiations which made their discussions doubly provisional.
3. Mr. Ahmad then proceeded to give his idea of the stand taken by the two sides on the various issues discussed by them.

There were no differences on the factual aspect of the summary. On two points regarding the character and quantum of forces, however, the Pakistani side made the following clarifications:

1. Mr. Ahmad stated that, in accordance with their proposal, every unit of the Azad Kashmir army would be affected when it had to be re-organised into a force of smaller numbers (10,000) and a force which was self-sufficient (that is, with all supporting units for logistics, headquarters, etc.).

2. In regard to weapons, Mr. Ahmad stated that they were not asking for parity with those of the Indian army. The Indian army, which would have the normal infantry weapons (minus artillery and armour), would have light machine guns. On the other hand the Azad force would not have light machine guns, though they would have mortars and LMGs on the battalion scale.

Mr. Ahmad gave to the Indian team a copy of the summary prepared by him. Mr. Desai stated that, in summarising the Pakistani position, even though the document handed over by Mr. Ahmad did not misinterpret India’s position factually, its presentation was based on the point of view of the Pakistani team, particularly, as on many of the issues discussed by them, arguments and reasons were given on the Pakistani side, without giving a corresponding weightage to Indian arguments and reasons. In any case, as it had been agreed that the discussions of the two committees would be informal and provisional and that there would be no minutes of these discussions, the Indian side would not take any notice of this summary either formally or informally and leave it to the two official teams to report in the manner they saw fit to their respective Prime Ministers.

Drafts contemplated during discussions on Item I- Creation of Peaceful Atmosphere.

4. A draft prepared by the Indian side elaborating Dr. Graham’s formula in regard to the creation of a peaceful atmosphere (paragraph 8 of the minutes of the second informal meeting) was agreed to by the two sides (Appendix I).

5. A draft prepared by the Indian team of Instructions to Official Agencies in regard to the creation of a peaceful atmosphere (Appendix II) was handed over to the Pakistani committee, who promised to consider it, as proposed at second meeting (paragraph 13 of the minutes).

Press Note.

6. The two committees agreed to issue a Joint Press Note (Appendix III).
Appendix – I

DRAFT

In the past the Governments of India and Pakistan have agreed to reaffirm their determination not to resort to force and to adhere to peaceful procedures in resolving the Kashmir dispute and to take suitable action to prevent warlike statements or propaganda on this issue. In the same spirit the two Prime Ministers emphasised last August the need for maintaining and cooperation between the two countries and active encouragement to the promotion of this atmosphere. They attached “great importance to this friendly approach and to the avoidance of words and actions which promote discord between the two countries”.

The Committees of the experts of India and Pakistan constituted to advise the two Prime Ministers have approached the question of Kashmir in the light of these pronouncements inspired by a desire to create a peaceful atmosphere. The Committees consider that while progress towards the solution of the Kashmir and other disputes will by itself improve the atmosphere, suitable action should also be taken in pursuance of the policy of the Prime Ministers on the following lines:

a. Instructions should issue to official spokesmen, Managers official publications, official organs of publicity such as radio, film to eschew statements likely to promote warlike propaganda, embitter relations between the two countries and provoke or inflame public opinion on this issue.

b. The two Prime Ministers may appeal on similar lines to their ministerial colleagues and Chief Ministers and Ministers of State Governments to observe in their Public statements and private discussions the same restraint and forbearance as indicated in (a) above.

c. Measures should be taken in consultation with political parties, the Press and other public organisations to secure in their respective spheres their full cooperation in the maintenance of peaceful atmosphere over this issue.

d. Machinery should be set up in the Information Ministry of each Government to ensure implementation of the instructions with a view to:

i. prevent breaches of these instructions or principles,

ii. deal with breaches as they occur,

iii. hold periodic meetings to review the position and suggest remedial action,

iv. review continuously the activities of the press, public leaders, official spokesmen, etc. to ensure that instances of transgression are promptly brought to light and dealt with adequately.

Appendix – II

DRAFT

In this note the Committees of Experts give details of suitable action which they recommend for the creation and maintenance of a peaceful atmosphere in India and Pakistan in regard to Kashmir and the machinery which they consider necessary for the implementation of their proposals.

2. The authorities and agencies whose continuous co-operation is needed are:

(i) Civil servants including official spokesmen, managers of official publications and official organs of publicity such as radio and film,

(ii) Government leaders, i.e., Ministers, Central, Provincial or State, and Parliamentary Secretaries,

(iii) Political parties, both inside and outside Parliaments and state or provincial legislatures,

(iv) Non-official organisations, and

(v) The Press.

3. The support and cooperation of these authorities should be mobilized in the following manner:

(i) Official Agencies: The Committees find no justification for breaches of agreements or failure to deal with them by official agencies which should be strictly instructed to eschew statements likely to promote war-like propaganda, embitter relations between the two countries and provoke or inflame public opinion on the Kashmir issue. This object will be achieved better if the two Governments draft and issue a common set of instructions to Heads of official organs of publicity. The Indian Committee should prepare a draft and forward it to the Pakistan Committee to enable the draft being discussed and finalised later. The instructions should also cover the following points:

(a) To improve the atmosphere in the two countries, official action, when necessary, should be announced, e.g., the withdrawal of an offensive official publication or documentary;

(b) Direction to Information Officers to scrutinize official statements by their own Governments to avoid, from the external point of view, references likely to inflame public opinion on the other side of the border.
The Government of Jammu and Kashmir and the Azad authorities should be persuaded to issue similar instructions to their employees and agencies. While the Committees recognise there should be complete freedom in expressing opinion on the issue of accession or on other aspects of the Kashmir dispute, they consider it essential that attacks on personalities, and attempts to incite opinion on the other side of the cease fire line and scurrility should be avoided in the broadcasts including news bulletins, talks and programmes.

(ii) Government leaders: The two Prime Ministers may impress upon their colleagues and Ministers of State and provincial Governments the need for the maintenance of a peaceful atmosphere and avoidance of official and private statements likely to provoke public opinion in the other country. To correct the harmful effects of mischievous reporting of leaders’ speeches and statements, there should be a continuous and prompt exchange through High Commissioners of authentic versions if necessary, for release to the Press in the country in which the statements and speeches have been misrepresented.

(iii) Political Parties: Compliance with the proposed code should not be difficult so far as political parties in power are concerned, particularly when it is remembered that the two Prime Ministers are presidents of their respective party organisations. The two Prime Ministers may therefore issue suitable recommendations to their parties and if necessary, entrust the task of ensuring compliance with the code to one of the Secretaries of the party machine. Each Government should take the Opposition into confidence and hold periodic meetings with its leaders to impress upon them the need for co-operation in the interests of the country as a whole. To leaders of opposition outside Parliament, a general appeal might be issued, if possible, at a conference held specially for the purpose.

(iv) Non-official Organisations: Neither Government should extend official patronage to non-official organisations which attempt to poison relations between the two countries on the subject of Kashmir for example they could refuse to buy copies of objectionable publications.

(v) The Press: Willing cooperation of the Press is essential to the two Governments’ Objective which is difficult to achieve by a mere resort to legal measures against recalcitrant newspapers. After common instructions have been issued by the two Governments to their own officials and agencies and after these instructions have begun to be carried out, a meeting of the Indo-Pakistan Information Consultative Committee on which newspapers of both the countries are represented should be called and the advice and cooperation of newspapers sought in the matter. This is necessary because as a general principle, the Committees recognise that there are considerable legal and other difficulties in exercising control over the Press.

4. Machinery: Machinery should be set up in the Information and Broadcasting Ministry of each Government to ensure implementation of the instructions with a view to:

i. prevent breaches of these instructions or principles,

   ii. Deal with breaches as they occur,

   iii. Hold periodic meetings to review the position and suggest remedial action, and

   iv. Review continuously the activities of the press, public leaders, official spokesmen, etc. to ensure that instances of transgression are promptly brought to light and dealt with adequately.

Two committees should therefore be set up for the purpose:

(a) A large body like the Indo-Pakistan Consultative Committee, meeting, say every three or six months or so to review the progress and problems in a general way, and

(b) A small compact body composed entirely of officials, holding frequent meetings to tackle problems with speed and vigour.

APPENDIX III.

Joint Press Note

(To be released for publication on the morning of 30th December, 1953.)

The Indian and Pakistan committees of official experts set up under the Prime Ministers Agreement to advise them on preliminary issues relative to the Kashmir dispute concluded their talks this afternoon. The first meeting of these committees was held on 21st December, 1953. The committees have held nine sessions and examined these issues in considerable details. The discussions were throughout conducted in a very friendly and informal atmosphere.

2. The items that came up for discussion by the two committees were:

1) creation and maintenance of a peaceful atmosphere, particularly with reference to the Kashmir dispute;
2) mechanics for certifying that tribesmen and Pakistani nationals have been withdrawn from the State in terms of the UNCIP resolution of 13th August, 1948;

3) quantum and character of the armed forces to be maintained in the State;

4) local authorities to be in charge of the administration in areas west and north of the cease fire line; and

5) safeguarding of fundamental right in the State as required under UNCIP resolution of 13th August, 1948.

3. Satisfactory progress has been made in the examination of these issues. The committees will now report to their respective Ministers.

New Delhi, August 23, 1954.

9. The second point that you deal with in your letter is the question of military aid from the United States of America to Pakistan and its effect on the Kashmir issue. We have discussed this question repeatedly and I do not feel that I need add anything to what I have already written. I do not and cannot challenge your right to accept that military aid or to come to any arrangement with any country. But I ventured to point out to you the consequences of that step on certain important questions which concern us. You refer to the threat to your security. It is not clear to me from what source that threat comes, or how your security is endangered. If you think that threat comes from India, I think you are completely mistaken because that is not only entirely opposed to our policy but, in the circumstances of today, outside the range of possibilities. But, whether it is possible or not, if that aid is in relation to India, then naturally it affects us and we are concerned. If this bears direct relation to the Kashmir issue, then the whole context of that question changes and we have to consider it afresh from a new point of view.

10. In discussing certain preliminary steps to be taken in regard to Kashmir, we had repeatedly considered the quantum of forces to be kept there. We had not come to an agreement, but there was the possibility of an agreement on the facts as they then were. We were agreeable to withdrawing a very considerable part of our armed forces from Kashmir State, provided Pakistan took certain steps including the withdrawal of her forces from the Kashmir State territory occupied by her. This position changes completely when the military resources of Pakistan increase greatly because of the aid received from the United States. We do not know how much aid Pakistan has received or is likely to receive. But, in any event, it is a natural presumption that it will be considerable. In addition, Pakistan will have the powerful military backing of a great power. In these circumstances we have now to take into consideration this additional military strength of Pakistan. The basis of our previous discussions, in regard to quantum of forces, ceases to have relevance and entirely new considerations emerge and must apply.

11. It was on this preliminary question that we could not come to an agreement and because the preliminaries were not settled, we could not go further ahead. The present development renders the basis of our discussions on this subject unreal.

12. It is also evident that our approach to these problems differs widely. You have ruled out a no-war declaration, which I have repeatedly suggested, and you have accepted and rely more on foreign military aid. A no-war declaration brings more security than military preparation and creates a better atmosphere for the solution of problems. I agree that those problems have to be solved as soon as possible. But to oppose a no-war declaration till those problems are solved, neither brings security nor helps in the solution of these problems.

13. You are no doubt aware that some time ago my Government and the Government of the People’s Republic of China issued a joint declaration in which we mentioned five principles which should govern our relations. These included mutual respect for each other’s independence and territorial integrity; non-aggression, and non-interference with each other. Such a declaration gives far greater assurance of security and friendly relations than military pacts or military preparations. To agree to any such declaration does not mean that we should not try to solve our problems. It means that we should solve them in a better and more friendly atmosphere, having ruled out the possibility of a recourse to war, which should be your desire as it is mine.

14. I have in the past drawn your attention to the violent propaganda in Pakistan in favour of war with India. Many instances of this have occurred in recent months. You will appreciate that this is not a background for friendly talks. So far as I am concerned, I am anxious and eager for a settlement about Kashmir and other issues. In regard to the canal waters issue, we agreed to the World Bank’s proposals even though they threw a very heavy burden on us. No one can accuse the World Bank of partiality to India in this matter. They went deeply into this question and considered it, in consultation with your engineers and ours, for two and a half years. In regard to the evacuee property matter, my last letter to you, written more than three months ago, has elicited no reply.

15. During the last few months a great and welcome development has taken place in international affairs owing to the conclusion of the Geneva Agreements on Indo-China. The long drawn-out and disastrous war has been ended and for the first time after many years, there is no war between nations in any part of the world. That is a development for which all of us should be devoutly thankful. Grave perils and dangers still confront us in the world, but a new turn has been taken—away from war and towards peace. That can be strengthened by each country resolving to maintain peace and avoid war and not by preparing for war and having military talks and alliances which can only be meant against some other country. I would wish that Pakistan and India took advantage of this new situation that has been created and approached each other in a more friendly and cooperative way.

Yours sincerely

Jawaharlal Nehru

Hon'ble Mr. Mohammad Ali,
Prime Minister of Pakistan
Karachi

2062. Letter of Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru to the Indian High Commissioner in Pakistan C. C. Desai.

New Delhi, February 27, 1955.

My Dear C.C.

I enclose a letter addressed by me to the Governor General of Pakistan. This is in a sealed cover. Please have this delivered immediately by safe hand.

A copy of this letter is enclosed for your information.

I might inform you that the drafting of this letter has given me a good deal of trouble. I recognize and feel that Ghulam Mohammed is anxious to have a settlement and is prepared to go some distance for it. That is a welcome approach. But to suggest that a plebiscite should be held in Jammu and Kashmir state in the autumn of this year is manifestly not possible. The other suggestion which he made about my representing Pakistan’s interest and Chaudhuri Mohammad Ali, Finance Minister, representing India's interests is also rather odd. I realize both his desire for a settlement and his own difficulties.

At the same time there are obvious difficulties on our side. Personally I really see no way out except a recognition by both parties of the status quo, subject to minor modifications. Also of course, if there is an agreement, many mutual privileges might follow. At the same time, I am very reluctant naturally to say that we will not have a plebiscite. That might appear as a breach of faith and I do not want to be guilty of that.

As a matter of fact, impartial observers like the London Times correspondent in Srinagar have come to the same conclusion. About the beginning of February there appeared an article in the London Times from their correspondent in Srinagar. In this, after analyzing the situation fully, he came to the conclusion that the only satisfactory settlement possible now was on the basis of the status quo.

There is the question of the present Jammu and Kashmir Government agreeing to any step that we take. We cannot ignore them and we cannot just go ahead without their consent. So far as they are concerned, they have said very forcibly and rather aggressively that they will have no plebiscite and the problem is settled so far as they are concerned.

Then there is the international situation which has a direct bearing on the Kashmir issue. I am afraid that this situation is deteriorating very fast indeed in the Far East. In fact, for the first time I have to think of the possibility of war breaking out. Obviously, if such a contingency occurs we cannot think of anything that would upset Kashmir. Also there is not only the possibility, but something much more, of American bases in Azad Kashmir. Possibly Gilgit has already been chosen.

I am pointing out to you the various considerations that have been influencing me. The matter is so important that I have fully consulted some of my colleagues here, more especially Maulana Azad and Pandit Govind Ballabh Pant. I do not want you to speak to Ghulam Mohamed about all that I have written above. But I want you to know how our mind is working.

Yours sincerely,
Jawaharlal Nehru
Letter from Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru to Pakistan Governor General Ghulam Mohammad.

New Delhi, February 27, 1955.

My dear Governor General,

As you were leaving Palam airfield in Delhi on the morning of the 28th January, you handed me an envelope which contained a small piece of paper. This paper contained four points relating to the plebiscite in the Jammu and Kashmir state and like matters. Within an hour after you left Delhi, I left also on my long journey to London for the Commonwealth Prime Ministers’ Conference there. In London, I heard that you had gone to Switzerland for medical treatment. When I was on my way back to India, you were still, I believe, in Switzerland.

2. I wanted to write to you about the paper you had given me but, owing to your movements and mine, this was somewhat delayed. Since my return here I have been rather overwhelmed with arrears of work.

3. I need not tell you, because you know it, that I am at least as eager as you are for a full settlement of all matters in dispute between Pakistan and India. It has always seemed to me unnatural and improper for these two countries to be wrapped up with suspicion and ill will against each other. For both, this was harmful and it affected, to some extent, both our internal and external policies. I have been happy to note, more especially during the last few months, that, so far as our peoples are concerned, there is very little ill will. Indeed, there appears to have been some reaction against these past years of lack of goodwill, and recent instances of friendliness between our respective peoples have been remarkable and most cheering. Thus, an atmosphere has been created which is all to the good.

4. Yet, the problems remain. Those problems have already lasted for these seven years and more, and during this period much has happened to add to their complexity. They are obviously difficult problems or else we would have solved them long ago. It is not for lack of goodwill on either side that they have remained unsolved thus far. We made repeated attempts in the past and came up against solid difficulties which we were unable to surmount at the time. We have, therefore, to examine these difficulties and obstacles, and find out how we can proceed about this matter. Mere goodwill, which is obviously necessary and is undoubtedly present on both sides, is not enough. And we have to take particular care that, in attempting to solve one problem we do not create new and more difficult ones.

5. The Kashmir problem is undoubtedly the most difficult of all. That is no reason why we should bypass it. But we have often suggested that we might go ahead meanwhile with the other problems which have embittered our relations. Any success in regard to them is not only good in itself but would also take us a long step forward towards the solution of any remaining problem. Unfortunately, very little progress has been made even in regard to these other problems.

6. Among these other problems, the most important are those relating to canal waters and evacuee property. There are a large number of others also. So far as the canal waters question is concerned, we have gone a long way with the cooperation of the World Bank, and I see no reason why we should not come to a final agreement on that basis before long. In regard to evacuee property, we are where we were or rather we have gone further away from any settlement.

7. Some of our officers have gone to Karachi to consider some of the relatively minor problems. I wish them success. But I rather doubt if much progress can be made by them at this stage.

8. The major problem that of Kashmir remains. When I read the paper you gave me on the eve of your departure from Delhi, I had mixed reactions. I liked your approach to this question in the sense that you wanted to leave out outside interference in this problem, casting the burden of solution on ourselves. I liked the approach of mutual trust. All this is to be welcomed. At the same time, the four points that your paper contained seemed to me not to be very helpful as they were and appeared removed from present facts. They did not bear much relation to what had happened thus far and the suggestions made in them did not seem to be feasible.

9. You will remember that, after numerous talks and consultations, we had arrived at a certain stage. That stage itself merely meant getting over the initial hurdle. Many other difficult hurdles remained. But even that first step was checked by certain developments. I need not go into these developments except to say that they did, in fact, create new problems for us. I have not, at any time, and cannot now presume to challenge Pakistan’s right to adopt any policy but, inevitably, we have to consider the consequences of that policy on us as well as on the Kashmir problem.

10. Unfortunately, subsequent happenings in the region of foreign policy have taken Pakistan and India further away from each other. Normally, this would not matter much but, in this world of great power blocs and when we stand in near danger of world war because of the conflicts in the Far East of Asia, this does make a vital difference. All of us stand on the edge of a precipice, and we have to think carefully and with all the wisdom that we possess about these world developments and how they affect us now and might affect us in the future.
11. I mention this because it is the context in which we move and frame our policies. We cannot get out of it. Any false step taken at this stage might have far-reaching and most unfortunate consequences. Anything that brings about an upset might well be dangerous to both our two countries.

12. I do not propose to repeat here the past history of seven and a half years in regard to Kashmir. But that history conditions the present, and cannot be set aside. You and I have different approaches to this problem. You have a grievance against India and consider the accession of the Jammu and Kashmir state to India as improper. I have a grievance against Pakistan for committing aggression on the Jammu and Kashmir state. According to us, Pakistan’s armies are in illegal and improper possession of a good part of the territory of the state.

13. So far as the state itself is concerned, it functions, as you know, under its own government and assembly. The state is not only autonomous but somewhat more autonomous than any of our other states. By reason of our formal agreement with the state and according to our Constitution, we cannot ignore the views of the state in any matter relating to it. This is not merely a legal or constitutional position. It is something more and, in effect, we cannot override it. We can advise, of course.

14. But, apart from all this, what exactly are we to do which will bring a peaceful and happy end to this dispute and this problem? You suggest, in your four points, that the plebiscite should be held by the middle of October at the latest. That appears to me to be wholly impractical. Previously, we got stuck up completely in regard to prerequisites for such a plebiscite, and there we are still. The position has indeed considerably worsened by developments in the foreign field.

15. But, apart from the timing and other like matters, we have to consider what we have to do now to help in solving this problem. Obviously, we should rule out any intervention by armed forces to decide the future of the state. That can only bring disaster to the state as well as to Pakistan and India as a whole. Any other course which increases tension and ill will also be bad. While I fully appreciate your new approach, I am unable to see how far our attempt to act up to your suggestions will be helpful at this stage. It is likely to raise great excitement and passion, and the atmosphere of conflict will dominate us. Whatever the result, there is likely to be trouble on a much bigger scale than we have to face now. This upset in the Jammu and Kashmir state will have its reactions in India as well as in Pakistan. Instead, therefore, of the settlement and friendly relations that we so ardently desire, both our countries and our peoples will be in a much worse position. Apart from conflicts, there might be large-scale migrations and the like, spreading poison in both countries.
16. Fortunately, there is peace in the state at present. I know this is so in our part of the state, where much progress has been made and economic conditions have improved considerably. To upset this is to invite trouble and possibly disaster.

17. I have written to you frankly and explained my difficulties to you because I am anxious that this problem should be tackled in a friendly and realistic way. Your friendly approach and what you have often said in this matter moves me and leads me to think that, whatever the difficulties, we shall be able to find some way out. I earnestly trust that if we consider these matters and differences in this spirit of mutual confidence, there should be no reason why we may not ultimately reach an agreed solution. But the approach we make should be realistic and in accordance with the facts of the situation. It is no longer any good for us merely to talk to each other in terms of slogans. Mohammad Ali will be coming here at the end of March. I very much wish that we should then be in a position to deal with this problem more concretely. It will serve little purpose if we do not understand the present position with all its limitations and consequences.

I hope that your stay in Switzerland benefited your health.

Yours sincerely

Jawaharlal Nehru

The Union Home Minister, Pandit Govind Ballabh Pant, today virtually ruled out the possibility of a plebiscite in Kashmir*, because he did not see any prospect of Pakistan agreeing to reasonable conditions on the issue.

Pakistan, he told a press conference here this morning, “has failed to agree to any reasonable conditions for the last eight years.”

All that was left now was to allow the people living in Pakistan-held territory of the State “to make their choice and express their own views, and opportunity of which, perhaps, has never been given to them, and now conditions are reported to be not very satisfactory,” the Home Minister added.

Asked how he reconciled Mr. Nehru’s commitment to hold a plebiscite in Kashmir and his own declaration that Kashmir’s decision through its Constituent Assembly to accede to India would be honoured by the latter, Pandit Pant said that the fact that India did make such a declaration could not be denied, but then, circumstances had changed and the time factor was the most important. Many things had happened since then.

Kashmir, he continued, had been following certain policies for its advancement and many development schemes were in progress. Pakistan had entered into a military alliance with the United States. The Kashmir Constituent Assembly, which was elected on adult suffrage, had taken definite decisions. The National Conference had passed resolutions on the eve of the Constituent Assembly elections and Sheikh Abdullah, in his inaugural address to the Assembly in November, 1951, made it abundantly clear that the body had been constituted for the primary purpose of determining and deciding this vital issue.

The Home Minister further said: “While I am not oblivious of the initial declaration by India, I cannot ignore the important series of facts to which I have referred. In these circumstances, I personally feel that the tide cannot be turned now.”

* This was for the first time that a senior Minister of the Government of India made a public and categorical declaration on the non-feasibility of a plebiscite in J & K.

Murree, July 11, 1955.

The Pakistan Minister for the Interior Major-General Iskander Mirza, said that the Pakistan Government would have “no option but to take stock of our position, if Indian leaders resiled out of their international commitments on Kashmir”.

Interviewed by the APP regarding the statement of India’s Home Minister Pandit Pant, the General said that friendly relations between Pakistan and India could only be possible if both sides desired them and nothing in this direction could be achieved without a just settlement of the Kashmir dispute.

He said: “I find it very difficult to believe that a leader of the caliber and integrity of Pandit Pant could have made the statement attributed to him by the Press. This statement if true is tantamount to a repudiation of international commitment made by India regarding plebiscite in Kashmir.

The Interior Minister added, “The Pakistan Government have amply demonstrated their desire for friendly relations with India and a settlement of the Kashmir dispute by negotiations are only possible, if both the parties desire them. If however, India leaders resile from the word of honour, given by their Government, then we have no option but to take stock of our position.”

“No amount of resolutions by the Kashmir Constituent Assembly, which came into being after India made her international commitments, can alter or affect those commitments”.

“As far as we are concerned, we stand by an honourable and just settlement of the Kashmir and we will never deviate from this position. It is no use saying that the so-called Constituent Assembly of Kashmir has decided the question of the accession of Kashmir to India and that is the end of the matter,” he said.

He stated: “I am very unhappy about the statement of Pandit Pant. I am one of those who believe in close and friendly relations between India and Pakistan. This is in the interest of the masses of both India and Pakistan.”

“I cannot help thinking that but for this unfortunate Kashmir issue, our peoples on both sides of the border would have been much happier and our contribution towards the solution of world problems much more solid. But it would be doing no service to the ultimate improvement of relations between our respective countries if I did not say categorically that nothing can be achieved without a satisfactory and honourable settlement of the Kashmir dispute”, he concluded.
New Delhi, July 21, 1955.

My dear Prime Minister,

On the 14th July your High Commissioner in Delhi communicated a message from you to me. This message related to certain statements made by our Home Minister, Shri Govind Ballabh Pant, in Srinagar early in July. I have seen the newspaper reports to which you have drawn my attention and have also consulted our Home Minister about them. Those reports are not textually accurate in some places, but generally speaking they represent what he said, more especially, at the press conference held in Srinagar.

2. I do not think you will find in the Home Minister's statements any repudiation of the assurances given or commitments made on behalf of the Government of India in regard to Kashmir. What he has said is that those assurances and commitments could not be given effect to because of the attitude of the Pakistan Government during these past years. Further that during the past seven or eight years many developments have taken place and conditions have also changed considerably. Because of these developments and changed conditions, he has stated that "the tide cannot be turned". This is his estimate of the situation. He has further referred to the present constitutional relationship between India and the state of Jammu and Kashmir.

3. There is thus no question of any repudiation of an undertaking made on behalf of India, whether it was unilateral or international. As for the statement in your letter to the effect that failure to arrive at a settlement was not the fault of Pakistan and that India was responsible for it, this is a subject on which, it is obvious, we differ from you entirely. The history of these long drawn out negotiations during the past seven years is recorded in many volumes. During this period there have been numerous arguments between India and Pakistan on this subject and we have differed completely. You will not expect me to enter into this long argument here about what has happened in these past years. The fact is that the two respective viewpoints in regard to Kashmir have been opposed to each other and it is our opinion that the attitude taken up by Pakistan in the past has come in the way of a settlement which we were so anxious to reach.

4. In addition to your letter addressed to me, our Ministry of External Affairs have received a communication from your High Commission in India dated the 15th July. This communication repeats much that is said in your letter. It goes on to say that “At no stage in the subsequent negotiations over the Kashmir dispute, including direct negotiations between the Prime Ministers of India and Pakistan, has a view such as that expressed by the Hon’ble Home Minister been ever put forward by the Government of India.”

5. You are aware of the repeated difficulties that have arisen in the course of our negotiations. Indeed, you refer to some of them in your letter. But, quite apart from this, you will no doubt remember our last conversations on this subject in Delhi when both you and General Iskander Mirza were present. On India’s side Maulana Abul Kalam Azad, Shri Govind Ballabh Pant and I were present. On that occasion we spoke fully and frankly to each other. I stated clearly that while we fully adhered to our assurances and commitments, it was manifest that great changes had taken place in the State during this period and that they could not be ignored. Among other things, I pointed out the constitutional position as it existed insofar as we were concerned. I read out then the provision of the Constitution of India as contained in a proviso to Article 253 of the Constitution. This ran as follows:

We are naturally bound by this provision of our own Constitution. This does not amount to a repudiation of any of the assurances given by us in the past, but it is an important element in the consideration of the problem today.

As I stated in the course of our talks then, the Jammu and Kashmir State was an autonomous State in the Union of India. Nearly all of our States are autonomous and have large powers with which the Central Government cannot interfere. The Jammu and Kashmir State, however, has been given a rather special position with even larger powers.

6. Apart from this constitutional position, I pointed out to you and General Iskander Mirza that any attempt to solve this problem had to take into consideration all the developments that had taken place during the past seven or eight years. We were dealing with a human problem and we could take no step which might result, instead of a settlement, in upsets and upheavals which should be harmful not only to the people of the State but to Pakistan and India. I need not repeat all that was said on that occasion between us as you will no doubt have it in mind.

7. Because of this situation that we have to face, there were two courses open to us. One was that we should pursue the old line of discussion again which had thus far led to no satisfactory result, and indeed pursue it when further difficulties and complications had arisen. Obviously, this was not a hopeful prospect.

8. The other course was to try to discover some other line of approach which might yield better results. It was because of this that we did discuss other lines of approach. You told us then that you were not in a position to commit yourself at that stage to the suggestions I had put forward. I was not prepared to accept some of the suggestions that you had put forward. But the point I should like to make is that both you and I put forward suggestions and proposals which were not in line with our previous approach to this question.

9. Because we could not agree at that time, we decided to consider this matter further and consult our respective Governments before we met again.

10. That was the position when we parted in Delhi and that is the position today. Nothing that our Home Minister has said has affected that position. I would repeat that there is no question of our repudiating any commitment made by us. But if we want a peaceful settlement of this problem, a settlement which is in accordance with the wishes of the people of Kashmir, and a settlement which does not create upsets, then we have to take a realistic view of what has happened during these years and what the position is today. Otherwise it would be no settlement at all. As a matter of fact, ever since we met in Delhi, other developments have taken place at the instance of Pakistan which add to our difficulties.

Yours sincerely,

Jawaharlal Nehru

2067. Note recorded by Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru for Commonwealth Secretary in the Ministry of External Affairs regarding Kashmir.

New Delhi, September 7, 1955.

I have discussed this matter with Bakshi Ghulam Mohammad, Prime Minister, Jammu & Kashmir State, who, I understand, has also discussed it with our Home Minister.

2. I am clearly of opinion that there should be no publicity about this at our end*. Any such publicity would rather play into the hands of Pakistan.

3. So far as action in the diplomatic field is concerned, I think that we should indicate to the Prime Minister of Pakistan through our High Commissioner in Karachi, that we view these statements about satyagraha (non-cooperation) in Kashmir with some concern. This might well develop into a breach of the ceasefire line to which both countries are committed and possibly lead to some undesirable incident. I do not think it is necessary to raise this question with any other Mission or Government.

4. As regards the UN Observers, I think that the J & K Government should write to our Corps Commander in J & K State drawing his attention to these developments and pointing out that these might lead to undesirable incidents as well as a breach of the ceasefire line. The Corps Commander should forward that letter with his own covering letter to the Chief of the UN Observers. No request should be made to them to intervene or to help.

5. Obviously a ceasefire agreement does not and cannot contain any reference to the entry of large numbers of civilians in the name of satyagraha. The fact remains, however, that these people cannot cross the border without the connivance of the Pakistan Army which holds the other side of the border, and their crossing the border in such numbers would create a difficult and possibly dangerous situation. In theory, an odd individual or a few of them may not make much difference, but a crowd does. Then again, the use of satyagraha in this connection is a misnomer. For all we know, the people may have concealed arms, and they may come just to create trouble. They may, for instance, surround and overwhelm our military picket near the border. Anyhow, there is so much uncertainty about this matter that we can certainly say that there is a possibility of a breach of the ceasefire line and, therefore, of the ceasefire agreement.

6. As regard internal preparations, of course, we should be on the alert. We should try to have as full and as rapid information as possible of developments. We can keep the U. P. Armed Police ready to move at short notice. But I would much rather prefer that they were not sent or utilised, unless circumstances compelled us.

7. I do not think that Army should come into the picture, but the Army should be prepared to deal with any unfavourable development.

8. The general approach should be to make this so-called satyagraha invasion appear rather ridiculous to the public, both in Kashmir and outside. Therefore, any violence, including shooting and beating, should be avoided if possible. Probably the best course would be to allow these persons to come in within a mile or two of the border and then hold them there. They should not be allowed to go further forward. But the way for them to return across the border should be left open to them. They should not be provided with any refreshments. This should create a situation which probably would induce them themselves to go back after some hours or so.

9. It is difficult to lay down any precise directions when the exact form of entry and numbers is not known. Much will have to be left to the discretion of the local authorities within the larger range of directions given by us. It would be desirable, however, for some responsible person to be roundabout there to deal with the situation as it arises.

Resolution passed by the All Party Conference presided over by Pakistan Prime Minister Mohammad Ali on Jammu and Kashmir.

Part A

Whereas self-determination is an inalienable right of the people of Jammu and Kashmir, and

Whereas the Government of Pakistan and the Government of India have entered into an International Agreement by accepting Resolutions of the United Nations Commissions for India and Pakistan dated Aug 13, 1948, and January 5, 1949, which were endorsed by the Security Council, undertaking to decide the question of accession of the State of Jammu and Kashmir to India or Pakistan by the democratic method of a free and impartial plebiscite, and

Whereas during the last seven years that solemn undertaking has not been honoured because of the intransigence of the Government of India which has persistently rejected every one of the proposals of the Security Council and its several Representatives, as also those of the Commonwealth Prime Ministers, for creating conditions essential to the holding of a free and impartial plebiscite in the State, and

Whereas the continued occupation of the state of Jammu and Kashmir by India is devoid of all legal and moral basis; And

Whereas, the people of Indian-occupied Kashmir and subjected to all kinds of repression, and are denied freedom of expression and other human rights, and leaders and members of the Plebiscite Front and of other political organisations, are being arrested wholesale and being detained in prison without trial because of their demand for the plebiscite, and

Whereas, the inordinate delay and continuous hindrances in holding the plebiscite are causing deep indignation and resentment among the people of Kashmir and Pakistan and are doing irreparable damage to the relations between India and Pakistan, and a situation has arisen which threatens peace not only in Asia but of the entire world;

* The resolution was adopted after three days of deliberations. The resolution was drafted by the three-man committee consisting of Mr. Mohammad Ali, H. S. Suhrawardy and Sheikh Din Mohammad. It was moved by Suhrawardy and seconded by Mumtaz Daultana.
Now, therefore, this All-Parties Conference on Kashmir unanimously—

Strongly condemns the intransigent attitude adopted by India during the last seven year with a views to depriving the people of the State of the right to self-determination, acknowledged by the Security Council Resolutions mentioned above,

Expresses its profound disappointment at the failure of the Security Council to enforce its decisions regarding the plebiscite and deprecates the weak policy adopted by it in acquiescing in the evasive tactics adopted by India to wriggle out of her international commitments in that behalf,

Pays homage to those martyrs who have lost their lives in the struggle for the liberation of their homeland and deeply sympathises with all those who have suffered and are suffering in this great cause,

Wholeheartedly lends its unstinted support to the Kashmir Liberation Movement, being convinced that the Kashmir question is a truly national one to which all other considerations must be subordinated, and for the solution of which the nation will consider no sacrifice too great;

Resolves that all efforts which are being made to secure for the people of the State the right to self-determination should be intensified and integrated on a national basis,

Re-affirms the irrevocable determination of the people of Pakistan to secure for the people of Jammu and Kashmir the right of self-determination at all costs, and calls upon the Government of Pakistan urgently to take, in the light of the discussions that have taken place in this Conference, all possible steps that are necessary to give effect to the national determination and empowers the President of the Conference to set up a Committee to advise the Government of Pakistan in this behalf;

Urges the Government of Pakistan to disseminate in all countries abroad correct information concerning the issues involved in the Kashmir dispute and the happenings inside Indian-occupied Kashmir in order to arouse the conscience of the world against the grave injustice that is being done to the people of Jammu and Kashmir in depriving them of their right to self-determination.

Finally while appreciating the action of the Prime Minister of Pakistan for convening this Conference and giving an opportunity to leaders of all communities, important political parties and institutions to consider this momentous national issue, resolves that similar conferences be called from time to time to take stock of the situation in regard to its solution.

The All-Parties Conference, further, unanimously Recommends that the Constituent Assembly of Pakistan make a provision in the Constitution that when the people of the State of Jammu and Kashmir have decided to accede to Pakistan the relationship between Pakistan and the State of Jammu and Kashmir shall be determined in accordance with the wishes of the people of the State.

Peking, March 16, 1956.

Ambassador saw Premier Chou En-lai on the afternoon of Friday the 16th March 1956 at 4 p.m. and had a talk with him for about one hour 45 minutes. Vice-Foreign Minister Chang Han-fu was also present. Mr Pu Shou-chang acted as interpreter.

4. (a) Karachi Communiqué and Indo-Pakistan relations:

Premier Chou felt that Prime Minister Nehru’s apprising Dulles of the views of the Government of India was a good thing, although Premier Chou felt that U.S. policy would not change over-night. Still, in his opinion, if all peaceful countries have a chance to tell America what they feel about American policies it will have some influence on America and U.S. will have to reconsider its attitude. U.S. will know that their dictatorial policies are meeting with obstructions. For example, shortly after the Karachi communiqué, Dulles had to explain it at every place. It would prove that the communiqué was incorrect.

5. Moreover, there does not seem to be a unanimous view about the communiqué. Pakistan has its own explanation of the communiqué, Britain has its own and France too has an explanation of its own. This shows that the communiqué is unreliable. America wanted to intimidate the people of Afghanistan, but this did not work. It wanted to intimidate the people of India and it worked much less. It wanted to intimidate China, but we just ignored them. Through their communiqué, they wanted to strengthen their hold on Pakistan, but this also is not very reliable. At the most, they would incite conflict between India and Pakistan, but Premier Chou felt that as long as India insisted on its correct stand, there was no hope of it. (Premier Chou later on explained to Ambassador that by India’s correct stand, he meant the stand of peaceful negotiations taken by India vis-a-vis Pakistan. Premier Chou added that this does not mean that India should still be peaceful even if Pakistan starts an offensive.

6. On the contrary, Premier Chou felt that India had now more reason to state that not only SEATO, but U.S. had no reason to intervene in the Kashmir question. Moreover, Kashmir people had already expressed their will.

7. Premier Chou added that when the Pakistan Premier comes to Peking, he will tell him directly that it was most unwise to include Kashmir question in the Karachi communiqué and that it was a method destined to be defeated.

8. Premier Chou added that Pakistan was soon celebrating her Republic Day and that the Chinese Government had received an invitation to participate in the function. They were, therefore, sending a delegation under the leadership of Vice-Premier Ho-lung. Premier Chou also mentioned that he understood that the Indian Government would also be sending a delegation to Pakistan and added that on these questions, China’s policy is the same as that of India, namely, we are friendly to Pakistan, but if the policy of Pakistan is wrong, then we would give good intentioned advice to show that we do not agree with her on those matters and this is necessary.

9. Premier Chou further went on to say that another effect of the Karachi communiqué was to show the weakness of the British Government. At first, they did not agree to the inclusion of the Kashmir question in the communiqué, but finally they followed the U.S. The purpose of the British Government in giving up its view regarding Kashmir was in order to have American support on the Baghdad Pact and also to seek American support on the action taken in Cyprus. But, Premier Chou declared this too failed, U.S. still did not join the Baghdad Pact and has in fact expressed her disapproval of the British action in Cyprus. The U.S. did this to show that U.S. was different from other colonial countries, but this is only to deceive others. U.S. really is a greater colonial power than either Britain or France.

We can see the manifestation of such British policy in the Mid-east, Far East and South-East. Recently, a KMT fighter plane made a forced-landing in Hong Kong after flying over Chinese mainland and the British Government in Hong Kong sent the plane and the pilot back to Taiwan.

10. Premier Chou derisively declared that the British Government was making concession not only to the U.S., but to KMT also and pointed to the Kashmir Princess as another example. On the question of Kashmir, Britain is worsening its relations with India and on the question of the Kashmir Princess with China, because Premier Chou felt that the British Government was making these concessions not so much to the KMT as to its masters—the U.S. Government.

2070. Speech of Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru in the Lok Sabha replying to the Debate.

New Delhi, March 29, 1956.

In respect of the Kashmir issue, there is a tendency, not in this House, but generally, of forgetting certain basic facts. I am surprised at the ignorance often shown by eminent foreign observers and by the foreign Press. Whether it is assumed ignorance or not, I do not know, but there it is.

Therefore, I should like to repeat a few salient facts. The story is too long, the story of invasion of the Jammu and Kashmir State through Pakistan and by Pakistan, her persistent denial and the eventual admission—when the U.N. Commission was here—of having committed aggression. This initial fact of aggression which governs the whole Kashmir affair must be remembered, because everything subsequent flowed from it.

With this background we may go back to the U.N. Commission’s resolution of August 13, 1948. In that resolution the Commission proposed:

“As the presence of troops in the territory of the State of Jammu and Kashmir constitutes a material change in the situation since it was represented by the Government of Pakistan before the Security Council, the Government of Pakistan agrees to withdraw its troops from the State.”

The point to remember is that because of this admission of aggression, the first thing the Commission required was that Pakistan should withdraw its armed forces from the area of the State occupied by it. We were asked to withdraw the bulk of our forces later, that is, on Pakistan withdrawing from that area. We were asked, to relieve tension, to withdraw the bulk of our forces, but retain our Army in the State in order to give it protection. The right of our Army to be there was recognized, but it was stated that since Pakistan was withdrawing completely from the Jammu and Kashmir State, India also could reduce her forces as that would tend to bring about a better atmosphere. Today, eight and a half years after that, those armed forces of Pakistan are still there. Therefore, all this talk of plebiscite and other things is completely beside the point. Those questions would arise only when Pakistan had taken a certain step, that is, withdrawal of its armed forces. And Pakistan is out of court till it performs its primary duty by getting out of that part of the State on which it has committed aggression. This is a major fact to be remembered. There were many other prerequisites for a plebiscite. Well, many attempts were made. They did not yield results.

Another important fact to remember is that the Government of India and the Government of the Jammu and Kashmir State could not remain continually in a state of suspended animation in regard to Kashmir; something had to be done. Certain steps were taken by the Jammu and Kashmir Government, with the concurrence of the Government of India, to elect and convene a Constituent Assembly. That was done. We stated even then that actually the Constituent Assembly was free to decide any constitution it liked but we made it clear that we continued to be bound by our international commitments.

More years passed and while on the one hand Pakistan continued to occupy a part of the State on which it had committed aggression, the Constituent Assembly proceeded to draw up the Constitution of the State and it passed very important measures of land reform. Great development works were undertaken and the people of the State, except those under the forcible occupation of Pakistan, made progress. The people of Jammu and Kashmir experienced more prosperity under their own government than they had at any time previously in living memory or before. A very simple test of this is the number of visitors who went to Kashmir last year—fifty thousand, an unprecedented number.

It is not for me to say what the state of people on the other side of the ceasefire line is. But I notice that there is a continuous attempt by people on that side to come over to this side and share in the prosperity.

We were discussing various ways of settling the question with the Prime Minister of Pakistan when a new development took place. This was the promise of military aid from the U.S.A. to Pakistan—a promise which was subsequently fulfilled. This created not only a new military situation but a new political situation; and the procedure thus far followed by us became out of date and had to be viewed afresh. That situation has become progressively worse because of the flow of this military aid to Pakistan and the conclusion of SEATO and the Baghdad Pact. Apart from the legal and constitutional issues, we have this practical aspect to remember in discussing the question of Kashmir with Pakistan representatives and others. We want to promote the happiness and freedom of the people of Kashmir and we want to avoid any step being taken which would be disruptive, which would upset things that have settled down and which might lead to migration of people this way or that way and which, further, would again lead to conflict with Pakistan. There is no settlement of the Kashmir problem if the manner of settling it leads to fresh conflict with Pakistan. As things settle down, any step which might have been logical some years ago becomes more and more difficult; it means uprooting of things that have become fixed legally, constitutionally and practically.

We pointed this out the last time the Prime Minister of Pakistan came here. All our previous discussions had to be abandoned because the basis of discussion had changed. I told him that facts had to be recognized as they were. It was no good proceeding on the basis of old things, ignoring the existing facts which include new factors which have come into the picture.

Meanwhile, another thing has been happening. Developments have taken place both in our Constitution and that of the Jammu and Kashmir State. As hon. Members will perhaps remember, we have laid down in our Constitution that we could not agree to any change in regard to the Jammu and Kashmir State without the concurrence of the Jammu and Kashmir Constituent Assembly. That is the constitutional position. I pointed this out to the distinguished representatives from Pakistan who came here.

The creation of one Unit in West Pakistan also concerns the people of Kashmir indirectly. Now, as a consequence of all these factors, I made it clear to the Pakistan representatives that while I was prepared to discuss any aspect of this question, if they wanted to be realistic they must take into consideration all that had happened during these seven or eight years and not talk in terms of eight or nine years ago. They did not quite accept that position and there the matter ended.

The only alternative, I said, was a continuance of the deadlock in our talks. I had offered some time ago a ‘No-war Declaration’ to the Pakistan Government to the effect that under no circumstances would India and Pakistan go to war for the settlement of any dispute. There was considerable correspondence and, the House will remember, Nawabzada Liaquat Ali Khan, who was the Prime Minister then, did not agree to that.

The present Prime Minister of Pakistan has again mentioned this matter and I gladly welcome his proposal. But it is clear that we must not tie ourselves in a ‘No-war Declaration’ with all kinds of conditions.

I want to be quite frank with this House and with the Pakistan Government. Having had nine years’ experience of this Kashmir affair in all its changing phases—a problem that is affecting the people of the Jammu and Kashmir State, affecting India in a variety of ways, affecting our Constitution and our sovereignty and affecting our vital interests—am I to be expected to agree to some outside authority becoming an arbitrator in this matter? No country can agree to this kind of disposal of vital issues. I do think that if both Pakistan and we are agreed that on no account should we go to war with each other but should settle our problems peacefully, they may not be settled for some time, but it is better to have a problem pending than to go to war for it. Therefore, it would be very desirable and helpful to have a “No-war Declaration”.

One thing more. The Pakistan President said with great force that in all these border incidents, in every one of them, India was guilty. Well, any number of incidents have occurred. I cannot discuss each one of them. But at least in regard to ten incidents on the Jammu border the United Nations Observers have stated that Pakistan was the aggressor. I take their word for it. But I shall repeat what I said here the other day in my statement on the Nekowal incident. The Nekowal incident stands out in a stark manner not because twelve persons were killed, but in the way it has been dealt with by the Pakistan Government. The present President of the Pakistan Republic was in Delhi when we received the report of the U.N. Observers in regard to this incident. It was handed over to him and to the then Prime Minister. They assured us, and in fact the Prime Minister stated it in public, that they would deal with and punish those who were found guilty by the U.N. Observers. What Pakistan had to deal with was not our opinion, but the opinion of the U.N. Observers, arrived at after an enquiry. Pakistan itself said that the guilty would be punished. I am astonished that a year or more has passed and nothing has been done. I am still more astonished that statements should be made to the effect that we are the aggressors in all these incidents.

I hope that the Government and the people of Pakistan will consider these basic facts and realize that we mean no ill to them. We want to be friends with them. We want to settle all our problems in a friendly way and I am sure we can settle them if their approach is a friend’s approach.

Addressed Hicomind Karachi repeated Foreign New Delhi

Our Prime Minister’s statement on Kashmir has led to one of periodical storms of protest in Pakistan. Press and Politicians are whipping up public frenzy on what is being attacked as India’s final repudiation of plebiscite pledge and are urging effective action. President Mirza and Foreign Minister Choudhury now visiting Lahore have issued statements saying Pakistan would continue her efforts to secure implementation by India of International commitments even though this may take some time.

Yesterday morning speaking at a function Mirza said “Come what may we are determined to find solution to Kashmir problem based on justice”.

Last night at a dinner I met both Foreign Minister and President. Former said “I was hoping for improvement in our relations. That hope has now been dashed. We must start all over again to undo damage done”. His proposal for immediate relaxation of tension on Kashmir is to take up forthwith final demarcation of border to prevent further incidents. He was going to put up for Cabinet ratification Khanna - Mirza Agreement on relaxation of visa system but that would have to be put off for a time in view of present temper of people. His approach would be to first concentrate on less controversial issues and later, when these are out of way, proceed to major problems “which can only be solved by peaceful means, any other course being too terrible to people”.

Mirza said “people have been most upset and shocked by Pandit Nehru’s statement and are clamouring for action. While we shall not allow them to stampede us we must take notice of strong feelings aroused. I have been personally working for better relations for last eighteen months and am even prepared for common defence and foreign policies if Kashmir issue is solved. All my work has been undone by this latest statement and now there is no way out except to take matter back to Security Council immediately”. When I asked him what all this excitement was about, as what our Prime Minister said was only reiteration of our previous stand, Mirza replied “I was present at last talk between the two Prime Ministers. Pandit Nehru never raised the question of our evacuating Azad Kashmir area. Even now we are prepared for any military arrangement which the U.N. might suggest for holding plebiscite.”

Later I met Dr. Khan Sahib also. He too said he was perturbed by Prime Minister’s statement “which should not have been made. I must however withhold further comment till I know what led him to say all that.” There is no doubt that strong public feelings are being worked up and even balanced people like Munir Chief Justice Supreme Court and a few others confessed to me anxiousness felt by them and asked if our Prime Minister would not say something in clarification* to relieve present tension. While irresponsible sections are demanding stern action including resort to force, indication is Prime Minister Pakistan will now go to Security Council, ground for which has already been prepared during visit of Turkish Prime Minister to Karachi. This was disclosed to me by Sir Mirza Ismail of Bangalore who after attending inauguration of Republic at the request of President Mirza to whom he is related, is now visiting Lahore. He said his impression after talking to Ministers, Officials and other is that Pakistan’s eventual intentions over Kashmir are definitely warlike but every possible attempt will be first made to settle dispute peacefully through U.N., of which further support will be obtained at background meeting of Baghdad pact. According to Ismail, Turkey, Iraq and Iran have already promised strong support. He also said that President Mirza and others, despite insistence of plebiscite would in a final bid at compromise be prepared for a “neutral Kashmir” with equal access to India and Pakistan for trade and travel and with her integrity jointly guaranteed, as in case of Monaco in France.

* As for as India is concerned there was no going back on what the Prime Minister had said in the Lok Sabha on March 29. He expressed his happiness at his press conference on April 2 in New Delhi and said ‘I am glad I did so because of the enormous amount of confusion about facts. One can understand differences in interpretation or approach to this question, but surely certain basic facts should be recognized and I repeated them on that occasion and I am prepared to repeat them now’.
Mohammad Ali, Prime Minister of Pakistan, came to see me this morning and stayed nearly two hours. No one else was present during our talks. The interview had been fixed two or three days earlier at the request of Mohammad Ali who telephoned to me.

2. We discussed the proceedings of the Prime Ministers’ Conference for some little time and, more particularly, the importance of bringing China into the UN. Unless this was done, the situation in the Far East would not improve.

3. He then referred to Kashmir and we talked about this subject at some length. His approach to this and other subjects was quiet and almost ingratiating. He did not refer to past history much, but said that he was very anxious that India and Pakistan should solve all their problems and cooperate together. Much that had happened, including Pakistan’s differences in regard to foreign policy and defence, was largely due to these conflicts with India. If these conflicts were removed, friendly cooperation would inevitably result in all fields. He pointed out that his own position in Pakistan was obviously not one which would enable him to impose any decision. My position was much more stronger and if I decided to do something, I could put it through.

While there were other problems, Kashmir was the crux and if this was settled, there would be no difficulty in solving others.

He said something about the American military aid and made out that this had nothing to do with any aggressive intent on India. It was true that they did not expect any direct attack on Pakistan from the Soviet Union, but there was a possibility, in case of war, of Soviet forces entering Afghanistan and then Pakistan. They wanted to be prepared to meet any such contingency.

Even with the help that they had got or were likely to get from the United States, India would remain considerably stronger than Pakistan both in a military sense and even more so economically and otherwise. No sane person in Pakistan could think of war with India. It was true, however, that early in 1951 (this was just before the Liaquat Ali-Nehru Pact) people in Pakistan had grown very apprehensive about a possible attack by India. At that time Indian forces had been concentrated on the Pakistan borders, apparently because it was thought in India that Pakistan was strengthening her forces on the borders of Kashmir. This was entirely untrue. What had happened was partly replacements on the Kashmir border and partly sending some fresh troops there to meet trouble in Azad Kashmir. There was no thought whatever of renewing hostilities with India. Nevertheless, the situation became a very serious one and was only eased by the Liaquat Ali-Nehru Agreement.

7. I told Mohammad Ali that, quite apart from the merits or demerits of the Kashmir question, and we hold strong opinions on the subject, what we always had in mind was the effect of any step that we might take on the Muslims of India and the Hindus of Pakistan. Kashmir had been a symbol to us of Hindus and Muslims living together. If we once did anything, or if any kind of a decision was made on the basis of Muslims going on one side and Hindus on the other, this would have very far-reaching and disastrous consequences in India and in Pakistan. In fact this would not be a solution of the problem and tension between India and Pakistan would become much worse. Further, I pointed out that there was strong feeling in India in regard to Kashmir and no leader, however important, could ignore or bypass it.

8. I referred to the difficulties we had experienced during the last seven or eight years in solving even some of the preliminary questions. If we had failed during these years, it was not likely that we would succeed now in solving these questions; and then there were other important questions. There had been constitutional developments and no step could be taken by us without the consent of the Kashmir Government which was more autonomous than the other State Governments of India.

9. Mohammad Ali said that all that he suggested was that we should go back to the Agreement made in 1953 to hold a plebiscite (he referred to the joint statement issued after the visit of his predecessor, Mohammad Ali, to Delhi on 28-8-1953). There should be no difficulty in solving the preliminary questions. The question of quantum of forces was not difficult, nor would other difficulties arise. If a plebiscite was held, the result of it would be accepted by both sides without any great difficulty, even though one side might dislike it. He however hinted at the plebiscite being by regions. This would prevent any large migration of people, to the possibility of which I had referred. He pointed out that the 1953 Agreement was made after the constitutional changes in India relating to Kashmir. He said that the sole reason for the deadlock after that 1953 Agreement was American military aid to Pakistan. That should not come in the way after he had explained the position.

10. I explained our position to him and how it seemed to me very difficult and dangerous to unsettle conditions in Kashmir by any step that we might take. This could only have disastrous consequences. Further, I pointed out that there was a sense of grievance as to the way this subject had been dealt with in the past. The real points at issue had never been considered and therefore misunderstandings had arisen in the minds of the people. If we had to proceed with this matter any further in this way, we must go back to first things which largely governed the Kashmir issue. I said something about Pakistan’s denial of the presence of their troops in Kashmir, the later statement of General Gracey, etc. We talked for some further time more or less repeating our arguments and without any kind of agreement.

11. We discussed for a while the canal waters issue. He said that he met Iliff of the World Bank in London. Pakistan had agreed to carry on as suggested by the World Bank. The main issue now appeared to be financial. The cost of the link canals and the reservoirs was likely to be much greater than anticipated and would be a very large sum.

12. We referred to the exodus of Hindus from Eastern Pakistan and to the evacuee property matters. Mohammad Ali repeated that all this could easily be solved when the Kashmir question was over. If no settlement could be reached on the Kashmir issue, then we might inevitably have to go to the Security Council.

13. This is just a brief account of my talks with Mohammad Ali for record.

2073. CONFIDENTIAL

Note of the meeting of Mr. Eric S. Tucker with Pakistan Prime Minister Mohammad Ali.

We had hoped that Lady Cripps, Horace Alexander and Eric Tucker could see Mohammed Ali together but the appointment originally made for 10 o’clock in the morning of July 5th was postponed at the request of the Prime Minister until 6 o’clock in the evening with the result that Lady Cripps, who had already deferred her arranged departure from London in order to be available in the morning, was not free to be present in the evening. However, in view of the fact that the postponement was caused by a meeting of Mohammed Ali with Mr. Nehru, there was some advantage in our meeting the Prime Minister of Pakistan after that conversation had taken place.

Having arrived at Claridges Hotel punctually for our appointment, it was somewhat disappointing to be informed that Mohammed Ali had not returned from the afternoon session of the Commonwealth Prime Ministers’ Conference, and as time dragged on-and with the knowledge that Mohammed Ali had a dinner engagement at 7 o’clock - Horace Alexander and I had largely resigned ourselves to an opportunity of passing hasty pleasantries at the very most. Mohammed Ali eventually arrived at Claridges at 6-45, had one previous visitor to interview, and we were not shown into his room until 6-50. Nevertheless we were not only cordially received but the Prime Minister appeared to be relaxed and in the best of spirits and in no desperate hurry to terminate our meeting. He was himself responsible for launching into the major subject of our discussion and, though courtesy obviously made it impossible for us to extend our visit for more than ten minutes, a good deal of ground was covered in that time.

After expressing the apologies of Lady Cripps for her absence and saying that she would be back in London early next week if the Prime Minister would care to see her, Horace Alexander said how glad we were to learn that the Prime Minister had met with Mr. Nehru during the morning. Mohammed Ali commented immediately by saying that he had had a friendly two-hour talk with Mr. Nehru and that it had been primarily concerned with the Kashmir issue, which dominates all other issues of Indo-Pakistan relations.

He said that the Pakistan Government takes the view that the decision as to the future of Kashmir must be taken by the Kashmiris themselves. Mr. Nehru appeared to fear the consequence to the Muslim population in India of a plebiscite in Kashmir which might show that the people wished to align themselves with Pakistan, and Mohammed Ali said that he could not understand this fear for which he could find no grounds of support. But nevertheless if there is a fear of increased communal tension, it might be met by prohibiting anyone from entering the area from Pakistan or India during the plebiscite His Government wished to see a free plebiscite conducted under a neutral authority, which in practice meant the United Nations Organization. This was a reasonable request and if the Kashmir problem could be thus satisfactorily solved other existing problems between Pakistan and India would present no major difficulties.

Horace Alexander said that we associated ourselves with the view that the Kashmiris must decide their own future and that this is a basic principle which we felt sure was accepted by Mr. Nehru. This being so, was it not reasonable to hope that the present difficulties were negotiable matters and even though at this first meeting Mr. Nehru and Mohammed Ali had not reached agreement, they at least had reached a point of understanding from which they could start their discussions at a further meeting? Mohammed Ali appeared to doubt whether a further meeting would achieve more progress but Horace Alexander pressed this point suggesting that a meeting of the Prime Ministers in two or three months time, preceded by some preliminary work at a lower level, might produce results.
Mr. Nehru is a man, said Horace Alexander, who will turn over conversations in his mind and will sometimes have second thoughts. Although Mohammed Ali was clearly not prepared to commit himself to such a meeting, he left us with the impression that his mind was not completely closed to the possibility.

The Prime Minister of Pakistan said that he had expressed to Mr. Nehru his willingness for the three areas of Kashmir to vote independently of one another, and Horace Alexander suggested that a general election in Kashmir, provided it was held in conditions of complete political freedom, would achieve the same result as a plebiscite and might be easier to arrange.

Finally Horace Alexander drew the Prime Minister's attention to the report of a statement made by Mr. Rajagopalachari urging India to respond to any re-armament on the side of Pakistan by disarmament, and to oppose hatred with love. After reading the extract handed to him, Mohammed Ali commented: “Rajagopalachari is a wise old man”!

We were left with the impression that the Prime Minister of Pakistan is a very able administrator and negotiator. There was no sign of any personal bitterness toward Mr. Nehru on his part. It is still as clear as ever that the Kashmir problem will not be solved without a great deal of labour and negotiation with some giving of ground being necessary by both sides - (not an allusion to Vinoba Bhave’s influence!) - but we feel we may legitimately hope that a new attempt has been initiated to improve Indo-Pakistan relations.

Office Memorandum

Subject:—Term to describe area of Jammu and Kashmir under occupation of Pakistan.

The undersigned is directed to say that in official notes and correspondence the expression ‘Azad Kashmir’ is sometimes used to describe our territory in Jammu and Kashmir State, which is under the occupation of Pakistan. This description is inappropriate since the area in question is legally part of Jammu and Kashmir State and does not constitute a separate political entity. It is therefore requested that whenever this territory is to be referred to, it may in future be described as ‘Pakistan occupied Kashmir’.

Letter from Indian High Commissioner in Pakistan to the Commonwealth Secretary M. J. Desai.

Karachi, October 4, 1956.

High Commission of India
Karachi

My dear. M. J.,

Ratan Nehru informs me that sometime in March* just before he left for India he had a long talk with Premier Chou-en-lai who spoke to him, among other things, about China’s attitude to the Kashmir question and to the Indo-Pakistan relations in general. The record of the talk was sent to Delhi and Ratan tells me that P.M. had it circulated to members of the Foreign Affairs Committee. We have not received an extract from the letter and I was wondering whether you could ask the Director of the Eastern Division to take out the extract and to send it to us.

2. In the same letter Ratan goes on to say that he has often spoken to Premier Chou En-lai about the Pakistan Prime Minister’s visit and that on the last occasion towards the end of August Chou En-lai merely shook his head expressing agreement with what Ratan had said about lack of stability in Pakistan. At that time Chou En-lai was wondering whether Chaudhri Mohammad Ali would be going there or not. The idea of Prime Minister of Pakistan paying a visit to China has again been revived and apparently Surawardy does not propose to allow grass to grow under his feet. News is being put out that Suhrawardy might fly out to Peking direct from Dacca even before the end of the session of the National Assembly which meets there on October 8 and which is expected to remain in session for nearly two weeks. The provisional date for Suhrawardy’s departure is 16th or 17th of October from Dacca. Members of the Chinese Mission here are looking forward to this visit in view of a slight change in the foreign policy of Pakistan discernible over the Suez and in view of the possibility of detaching howsoever slightly may be, Pakistan from the Western powers because of the attitude of Bhashani, the leader of the Awami League. The Soviet Embassy in Karachi does not see possibility of any real or radical change in the foreign policy of Pakistan, particularly after the recent statement by Noon that Pakistan was solid as a rock behind Baghdad pact. Suhrawardy has also said on more than one occasion that there must be

* Please See Document No.2069
consistency in the foreign policy of the country and that previous agreements cannot be scrapped or abandoned. This was intended to be a reference to the
Pact as also with the American-Pakistan Military Aid Agreement. However, the fact cannot be disputed that with Suhrawardy the possibility of influence by Soviet Union and China is greater than in the case of Chaudhri Mohammad Ali and, no doubt, these two countries would not let the opportunity slip until they find that they have come up against a solid front backed up by U.S.A. and United Kingdom.

With kindest regards,

Yours Ever

Members of Parliament Delegation was received by Chairman MAO Tse-Tung from midnight to 1.30 this morning. In course of talk with Delegation MAO TSE-TUNG referred to his meeting with Suhrawardy a few hours earlier.

2. MAO TSE-Tung said he had asked Suhrawardy why Pakistan had created tension with her neighbours by joining SEATO and Baghdad Pact? Was Pakistan afraid of aggression from China and Soviet Russia? Shurawady had replied “No but we are afraid of aggression from India”.

3. MAO TSE-Tung Said that Suhrawardy had told him that dispute with India could only be settled by arbitration or under U.N. auspices. MAO Tse-Tung’s reply was that he disagrees with him and that dispute should be settled by direct talk with assistance of some friendly countries if necessary.

4. MAO-TSE-Tung told Delegation that General Chou En-lai would have further talk with Suhrawardy and same advice would be given to Suhrawardy again. Finally, MAO Tse-Tung said there is nothing in our talks with Pakistan Delegation which cannot be made public.

2077. Aide Memoire handed over by the Pakistan High Commissioner in New Delhi to Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru at their meeting.

New Delhi, November 22, 1956.
Office of the High Commissioner for Pakistan in India
New Delhi

November 22, 1956

The Government of Pakistan has learnt from Press reports that a “Constitution” for the State of Jammu and Kashmir has been framed and passed with the concurrence and blessings of the Government of India and Kashmir is now going to be “integrated” with India.

2. The Government of Pakistan would like to point out that according to the U.N. resolutions of August, 1948 and January, 1949, both India and Pakistan stand committed to the democratic method of a free and impartial plebiscite under U.N. auspices to decide the question of accession of Jammu and Kashmir to India or Pakistan. The so-called “Constituent Assembly” at Srinagar is not competent to decide the question of accession and this was made clear by the Indian representative himself in the Security Council. The representative, Sir Benegal Rao, had stated that the opinion of the Srinagar “Constituent Assembly” would not bind the Government of India or prejudice the position of the Security Council. This was also affirmed by the Security Council in its resolution of March 30, 1951 which stated that “convening of a Constituent Assembly in Kashmir and any action which such an Assembly might attempt to take to determine the future of the entire State or any part thereof would not constitute a disposition of the State in accordance with the previously accepted principle of a free and impartial plebiscite.”

3. The Government of Pakistan is of the opinion that any action taken by the Government of India to 'integrate' Jammu and Kashmir State with India, or to acquiesce in the decisions of the so-called “Constituent Assembly” at Srinagar will constitute a clear violation of the U.N. resolutions and a repudiation of international agreements to which India is a party. The Government of Pakistan would like to know whether the Government of India now propose to violate the U.N. resolutions and to repudiate their commitments under these resolutions by accepting the decisions of the so-called “Constituent Assembly” and going about an “integration” of the State of Jammu and Kashmir with India.

SECRET

Note recorded By Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru on the above Pakistani Note while passing it on to the Ministry of External Affairs.

Prime Minister’s Secretariat

The Pakistan High Commissioner has just seen me and he gave me the attached Aide Memoire. I said that we would answer it formally in due time. He wanted to know, however, my immediate reactions.

2. I told him that when this Constituent Assembly of the J & K State came into existence we had welcomed it. What we had stated in the United Nations and elsewhere about it was that it was perfectly competent to decide anything it chose in regard to the State, but its decisions need not bind us unless we accept them. We had said then that we stood by our commitments.

3. Since then much had happened and many developments had taken place.
The situation had changed markedly, and indeed many months ago I spoke in Parliament here and pointed out that the relations of the J & K State to India must be considered as final.

4. I had met the Prime Minister of Pakistan on more than one occasion during the last two or three years and had drawn his attention to these various developments as also to a clause in our Constitution that we could not make any change in our relationship with the J & K State without the agreement of the Constituent Assembly or Legislature of that State. That did not bind us to accept everything that the Constituent Assembly might decide, but we considered them fully competent to decide anything except in so far as certain matters referred to in our Constitution were concerned which were common matters and could only be decided by consent.
5. In fact, the process of Constitution making in Kashmir had begun nearly six years ago. The first change was about the Head of the State and some other changes also came soon after. Many important laws were passed changing the economic structure. The Zamindari system was abolished. Thus these changes both in the political and social structure had been continuous during the last five or six years. The recent passage of the Constitution was only the last step in this process.

6. That step appeared to us to be a logical one and a correct one. This did not involve us in any contradiction with what we said in the UN Assembly or elsewhere some years ago. It was a development that was necessitated by changing circumstances and a succession of events, which we had pointed out from time to time.

7. This is more or less what I said to him. I promised to send a formal reply later.

New Delhi, November 23, 1956.

The Soviet Ambassador came to see me yesterday morning. He did not talk to me about the present crisis in the world, in Egypt or Hungary as I expected but about another matter. It was I who later referred to the question of Hungary and asked him to convey my message to Premier Bulganin.

He spoke to me about the talk which the Soviet Ambassador (S.I. Fadeyevich) in Karachi had had with Mr. Feroz Khan Noon and Mr. Baig at the beginning of October last. It was rather odd that this old story should be repeated to me six or seven weeks later. I remember seeing a report from our High Commissioner in Karachi about this conversation which the Soviet Ambassador had had with Mr. Noon.

Mr. Menshikov gave the following account of this conversation. This tallied largely with the account we had received from our High Commissioner last month.
Mr. Feroz Khan Noon said that the friction between India and Pakistan was due to the fact that India had seized Kashmir. India was a continuing threat to Pakistan and because of this Pakistan had been compelled to join the SEATO and Baghdad Pact. The Soviet support of India on Kashmir was one of the reasons for Pakistan joining the Baghdad Pact. This Pact was not directly against the USSR but was of purely defensive character.

Pakistan was ready to leave the Baghdad Pact provided the Soviet Union gave assurances to support Pakistan in the United Nations on the Kashmir issue and further assurances to give military aid to Pakistan, if attacked by India.

The Soviet Ambassador replied that India was a peace-loving country and there was no reason that she would attack Pakistan. The Soviet stand in regard to Kashmir had been clearly defined by Khrushchev and others. They were in favour of Pakistan and India having peaceful settlement of all their problems.

Mr. Menshikov being directed to tell me this old story at this late stage rather intrigues me. It may be that we were gently reminded of the Soviet Governments friendly attitude towards India and the help they had given us.

Karachi, December 5, 1956.
High Commission of India
Karachi
D.O.No.HC/56/S-1919.
December 5, 1956.
My Dear M. J.
Please refer to the correspondence resting with my letter No.HC/56/S-1822 dated November 24, 1956 on the subject of the talks which H.S. Suhrawardy had with Chou En-lai and the Chinese authorities during the visit of the Pakistan Prime Minister to China last month. I met the Soviet Ambassador, Ivan F. Shpedko, yesterday and he gave me a fuller account of what transpired between the Pakistan and the Chinese teams. Here is a summary of what he said. This information was volunteered by him and it was not necessary for me to raise the subject with him.
2. Suhrawardy talked most about the Kashmir dispute between Pakistan and India and to some extent, about the American attitude in international relations. Speaking about India, Suhrawardy told Chou En-lai that Pakistan’s adherence to SEATO and Baghdad Pact and entry into the American Military Aid Agreement was not motivated by hostility either to China or to Soviet Union and, although he did not specifically name India, he made it quite clear that his country was pushed into these alliances by the hostile and intransigent attitudes of India, especially in the Kashmir dispute. He then tried to draw a parallel between the Chinese feeling in regard to Kashmir and asked the Chinese leaders to mediate with India on behalf of Pakistan so as to persuade the Indian Government to hold a plebiscite in Kashmir. Chou En-lai pointed out that there was no parallel between Taiwan and Kashmir, that Taiwan belonged to China from time immemorial while Kashmir was a legacy of the British and further Kashmir had lawfully acceded to India and her people had in the Legislative Assembly confirmed that accession to India. Furthermore, Chou En-lai told Suhrawardy that China was not in need of Pakistan’s support for the settlement of the Taiwan dispute, that there could be no question of mediation by China except at the instance of India and that, in any case, Pakistan was not in a position to offer any effective mediation for the settlement of the Taiwan question. As regards the Military Pacts, the Chinese leaders disputed the Pakistan’s proposition that they were defensive pacts and that they were not directed against China or Soviet Union. All the information, they said, was to the contrary and that the sponsor of the pacts had left no doubt that the pacts were intended against the communist countries. When Suhrawardy met Mao Tsetung, most of the talking was done by Suhrawardy who was defending the regional pacts and the American policy. The Soviet Ambassador told me that Mao Tsetung was so angry that he did not wish to see him anymore, but that further meetings were arranged solely at the instance of Suhrawardy. No talks took place on the question of trade or cultural exchanges as Suhrawardy was talking all along about political matters and showed no interest or took no initiative in regard to other matters. The Chinese leaders decided that matters relating to trade and economic affairs should be persuaded through normal diplomatic channels and that they should not become a subject of discussion with the Pakistan Prime Minister in the absence of any indication of such a desire on the part of the Pakistan Prime Minister. Suhrawardy’s defence of the American policy in relation to China carried no conviction. Suhrawardy was trying to point out that America wanted peace and that America had no animus against China or her communist regime. The Chinese leaders were left with the impression that Suhrawardy was a stooge of the Western powers and that nothing could be expected from him in the direction of Asian-African cooperation against Western domination or Western colonialism. The Chinese leaders told Suhrawardy that they would forward a complete record of this discussion to the Indian Prime Minister for his information.
3. The Soviet Ambassador also told me that the Chinese Embassy here is having difficulties with the Pakistan Foreign Office over the detailed programme of Chou En-lai’s visit to Pakistan. I was told that the entire programme was crowded up with receptions and visits to industrial concerns leaving very little time for discussion and that no provision had been made for broadcast by Chou En-lai on Radio Pakistan or the issue of a communiqué at the end of the visit. Pakistan Government wants Chou En-lai to visit Peshawar and the Khyber Pass, but the Chinese are not in favour of it and are hoping to wriggle out of the suggestion. They consider that part of the Frontier is in dispute between Pakistan and Afghanistan and that it would not be right on their part to visit the disputed territory. Moreover, they are not interested in just going to the Khyber Pass and seeing the bare hills or the military Cantonments on the way.

4. This report supplements the information given in my previous letter dated November 24, 1956.

My dear Prime Minister,

I have been requested by my Prime Minister to convey to you the following personal message from him:

“I am deeply distressed by the unfortunate situation developing between your country and Pakistan regarding Kashmir. It is with the utmost friendship that I appeal to you to strive for a peaceful settlement of this matter in the interest of Asian African solidarity and of world peace, and in the spirit of cooperation that marked the Colombo and Bandung Conferences. I have sent a similar appeal to the Prime Minister of Pakistan. I am also taking the liberty of addressing the other Colombo and Bandung Powers to use their good offices in this matter.”

Letter from Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru to the Prime Minister of Tunisa.

New Delhi, February 9, 1957.

My Dear Prime Minister,

Our High Commissioner in London has informed me that your Ambassador Mr. Taieb Slim called on her (Ambassador Vijaya Lakshmi Pandit) and gave a message for me on your behalf. This message expressed the distress of the Tunisian Government at India’s disregard of the U.N. resolution on Kashmir and emphasized that in their view I had fallen from my high moral position and this was a blow to Asia and Africa. I understand you have also issued a statement to the press on those lines.

This unusual message would have been a surprise to me if any other Government had sent it. Coming from you and your Government with whom we have been on terms of close friendship before and after attainment of Tunisian independence it was an even greater surprise and distressed me. You will appreciate that it is not a friendly message to a friendly country.

I am not aware of the justification for this message but presumably you satisfied yourself before coming to this decision. I shall be glad to know on what grounds you came to this decision. I am not aware of India having disregarded any U.N. resolution on Kashmir. It is of course not for me to judge my moral position either before or now. For over nine years now India has been victim of Pakistani aggression in Kashmir and that aggression has continued in spite of U.N. resolutions asking Pakistan to withdraw her forces from Kashmir. I should have thought any person conversant with the facts would have come to the conclusion that India had not only acted correctly but over generously during these nine years.

I shall be grateful to you if you will kindly let me have any early answer as we do not wish our friendly relations to be interfered with by any misunderstanding.

Yours sincerely,

Jawaharlal Nehru.

My dear Prime Minister,

I have received today through your High Commissioner in Delhi a message from you relating to Kashmir. I thank you for this message and appreciate your friendly approach.

I need not tell you that it has been our desire throughout these troubled years to seek a peaceful solution of this difficult question. We shall continue to strive to this end.

It was more than nine years ago that this dispute arose. The origin of this trouble, as you will remember, was an invasion of the territory of Jammu & Kashmir State by armed forces from Pakistan which came without warning and committed arson, rapine and murder. The Jammu & Kashmir State thereupon acceded to India through normal legal and constitutional processes. At that time Lord Mountbatten was the Governor-General of India, and as the Head of the State, he was also naturally associated with these processes. It became our legal duty, as it was our moral obligation, to protect the State from this invasion. It was with the greatest reluctance that we undertook this very difficult task. This developed into military operations between India and Pakistan in the territory of Jammu & Kashmir State.

It would have been legitimate for us to carry these operations into Pakistan territory as Pakistan was the aggressor State and was using its territory as a base for these operations. We refrained from doing so because we did not want to spread the area of conflict. We made various appeals to the Pakistan Government to withdraw their forces, but these were rejected. In order to avoid any large scale war, we then went to the Security Council requesting them to ask Pakistan to withdraw her forces. Later, the Security Council sent a Commission here.

In August 1948, the United Nations Commission for India and Pakistan passed a resolution which we accepted, but Pakistan did not. Early in January 1949, a further resolution was passed by the Commission reaffirming and supplementing its earlier resolution. This resolution was accepted by us and later by Pakistan. In the August resolution it was stated clearly that a new situation had arisen as Pakistan had sent her forces in side Jammu & Kashmir State territory. The first step laid down by the resolution was for the withdrawal of Pakistani forces... from the State territory. India was asked to withdraw the bulk of her forces from the territory as the aggression of Pakistan had been vacated. It was recognised, however, by the UN Commission and the Security Council that India had the constitutional right to help in preserving the integrity of the State and, therefore, to keep some of its forces there. Several other steps were enumerated. The first one, of course, was the cease-fire, then a truce, and then, after several stages, a plebiscite.

I might mention that the offer of plebiscite was made by us in the earlier stages and rejected by Pakistan. Later, we agreed to this plebiscite, but subject to a number of conditions among which was not only the withdrawal of the Pakistan forces, but also the recognition of the sovereignty of Jammu & Kashmir State and its special relation to India.

None of the steps indicated by the resolution of the Commission was taken by the Pakistan Government. In fact, the very first step, that is, the withdrawal of Pakistan forces, was not taken and these forces still continue in Kashmir territory.

These nine years have naturally seen numerous developments in the State. One third of the State is still under unlawful occupation of Pakistan forces. We have, at no time, agreed to this occupation, although we have stated that we will take no military measures against it.

Throughout this period, all kinds of wild charges have been brought against India by Pakistan and we have been accused of fraud, aggression, suppression, etc. As a matter of fact, the Jammu and Kashmir State has very full autonomy and some three or four years ago they had an election for a Constituent Assembly which also functioned as a Legislative Assembly and has brought about far reaching land/other reforms. The Constitution was framed gradually during these three or four years and given effect to in parts. The final Constitution was passed in November last. Contrary to statements made in various places, nothing was done by us on the 26th of January last.

There can be no doubt about the legal and constitutional position. In spite of this, we have repeatedly discussed this matter with Pakistan to find some way out. We were and are naturally anxious that no steps should be taken which might lead to upheavals not only in the Jammu & Kashmir State, but also in India and Pakistan, That such upheavals can happen is clear from the fact that there has been in past years a continuous stream of refugees coming from East Pakistan to India. Altogether, nearly four million refugees have come over from East Pakistan (this is in addition to those millions who came from West Pakistan). These refugees are a tremendous burden upon us and they continue to come daily. It would be a terrible thing if any further step were to lead to vast migrations from one country to the other. This is the practical aspect.

The Jammu & Kashmir State has made very great progress during the last few years and its people have not been so well off at any time in historic memory. We are anxious naturally that all this progress should not be nullified and the people of the State brought to the verge of ruin.

It is not possible for me, of course, to give you all the facts of this long story in a letter. I shall send you, however, the full reports of the speeches of our representative in the Security Council on this issue as they give most of these facts in some detail.

We are always willing to discuss this matter with the Pakistan Government, but we cannot be a party to accepting anything which directly or indirectly casts a slur on our honour and ignores the fact that we have been the victims of aggression. Further, we do not want anything to be done which leads to upheavals and misery all round.

In Pakistan there has been—and this still continues — constant cries for jehad and holy war against India, and all kinds of preparations are made for these. Very large scale supplies of the latest type of arms and aircraft have been obtained by them from abroad, and it is largely because of this that they have taken up an aggressive and threatening attitude. You will appreciate that it is very difficult for us to ignore the real facts of the situation and to surrender to these threats and calumny. No Government in India would exist for a day if it did so. In fact, our Government has been studiously moderate and has tried to restrain public opinion.

I shall be sending you soon the material referred to above.

Yours sincerely,

Sd/- Jawaharlal Nehru

The Honourable Mr. S. W. R. D. Bandaranaike, Prime Minister of Ceylon, Colombo
Letter from Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru to Tunisian Prime Minister Habib Bourguiba.

New Delhi, February 12, 1957.

My dear Prime Minister,

I am grateful to you for your letter* of the 12th February which was given through your Ambassador in London to our High Commissioner there and has only just reached me.

You refer to the Resolution of the Security Council passed on the 24th January 1957. Presumably you are under the misapprehension that some step has been taken by India subsequent to that Resolution. No such step has been taken here. Our case is and has been throughout these nine years that the Jammu and Kashmir State acceded to India legally and constitutionally in October 1947. Subsequently a Constituent Assembly, elected in the State under adult suffrage, drew up a Constitution and gave effect to parts of it in the course of the last four or five years. This was finalized some months ago. No other step has been taken since then except that the Constituent Assembly dissolved itself. Therefore, the question of our not acting up to the Resolution passed by the Security Council, which you had mentioned in your previous message and to which apparently you refer again, does not arise. I have been pained at any such assertion being made without due enquiry of the facts. Kashmir State is at present governed by an autonomous Government responsible to an elected Legislature.

* In his letter Prime Minister Bourguiba referred to the Kashmir question and the Security Council Resolution of 24 January 1957. He stated that as the conflict about Kashmir could not be solved by direct negotiations between India and Pakistan for the last nine years, a plebiscite under the auspices of the UN remained the best alternative.

 The five-power Resolution, sponsored by Australia, Colombia, Cuba, UK and USA, reminded the Governments of India and Pakistan of the principles embodied in the earlier UN and UNCIP resolutions, and that the final disposition of the State of Jammu and Kashmir would be made in accordance with the will of the people expressed through the democratic method of a free and impartial plebiscite, conducted under the auspices of the United Nations. It reaffirmed the Resolution of 30 March 1951 which declared that the convening of the Constituent Assembly and any action taken by it would not constitute disposition of the State in accordance of the above principle. It also stated that further consideration of the dispute would follow. Bourguiba also deplored that, “India, listless to the Security Council recommendation, declared Kashmir as already part of India.” Though he admired Nehru as a champion of liberty and democracy, whose high moral position had helped in solving some of the most controversial problems threatening world peace, this attitude on Kashmir was likely to create a precedent for opposing the colonial people’s right to self-determination.
Perhaps you are not fully acquainted with the course of events in regard to Kashmir during these nine years. The whole trouble began by a sudden and unprovoked aggression by Pakistan. It would be a sad day if aggression is tolerated and approved by the United Nations or by any country. We have asked the Security Council to deal with these essential matters and they have thus far not done so. The Pakistan army occupies illegally one third of the State of Jammu and Kashmir in spite of the United Nations Resolution asking them to withdraw. We have not made a single international commitment which we have not honoured and it naturally distresses me that you should make a public statement accusing India when in fact India is a victim of aggression and deserve support.

We would be happy to send you all particulars of the Kashmir affair should you so wish to have them. I would have hoped that no statement would be made without full consideration of this intricate problem.

You have been good enough to refer to the moral aspect of this question. It is with this very moral aspect that we are concerned and we are distressed that it should be ignored. The peace of the world has not been threatened by us but by Pakistan’s aggression and by its continued threats of war.

With my regards and good wishes,

Sincerely yours,

Jawaharlal Nehru

2084. Note of Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru after his meeting with the Soviet Ambassador.

New Delhi, March 1, 1957.

The Soviet Ambassador came to see me at midday today. He read out to me a letter dated the 11th February 1957, which the Prime Minister of Pakistan had sent through his Ambassador (Akhar Husain) to Mr. Bulganin (Soviet Prime Minister). This was delivered on the 13th February. He also read out Mr. Bulganin’s reply to the Pakistan Prime Minister, dated the 27th February.

2. The Pakistan Prime Minister in his letter expressed his satisfaction at the neutral stand taken by the representative of the USSR in the Security Council on the 24th January regarding Kashmir. He further said that the Pakistan Government had gone as far as possible to secure a just settlement. Their wish was to allow the people of Kashmir to decide for themselves by a free and impartial plebiscite. India had agreed to this at an earlier stage but insist now on withdrawal of Pakistan forces from “Azad Kashmir”. No such condition had been laid down previously. But Pakistan was ready to withdraw her forces provided security was guaranteed by UN force or otherwise. If India objects to the UN force being sent to India-occupied Kashmir, then the UN force should remain in “Azad” territory only, provided there was demilitarization on the part of India on the other side. Alternatively, local forces could be recruited by the Plebiscite Administrator on the spot.

3. Pakistan was also not anxious to have foreign troops. Out of respect for the feelings of the USSR Government, they would agree to the foreign troops coming from neutral countries. The Pakistan Prime Minister hoped that the USSR would continue her impartial role in this matter.

4. Mr. Bulganin’s reply dated the 27th February was as follows:

As Pakistan Ambassador had already informed the Pakistan PM, there had been several talks on this subject in the course of which the Soviet Government had explained their views on the Kashmir issue clearly. This was a matter for the Kashmir people themselves to decide, and they had already expressed their views on it and decided that Kashmir should be an integral part of India.

5. The Soviet Union consider that disputes must be solved by peaceful means and negotiations, without outside interference. The Soviet Union could not agree to mediate in this matter as there were no grounds for this, in view of the total disagreement of India and Pakistan on this issue.

6. The recent discussions in the Security Council had further convinced the Soviet Union that outside interference would not only produce no good results, but would be harmful. It would only be to the advantage of certain countries associated with military blocs and colonialism. On the pretext of giving support to Pakistan, these countries were attempting to gain a hold in Kashmir and have some kind of an international administration there.

7. No outside interference could lead to any positive result. The Soviet Union will hold to its objection on such interference in regard to the Kashmir issue. As pointed out by the Pakistan Prime Minister, the Kashmir issue did not directly infringe on any interest of the USSR, but this does not mean that the Soviet Union will remain indifferent to any attempts to provoke tension in areas immediately adjoining the USSR by use of arms or the threat of the use of arms.
8. I thanked the Soviet Ambassador for this message. He said that the Pakistan Ambassador in Moscow had been particularly active during the past few weeks.

9. Copies of this note should be sent to President, Vice-President and members of the Foreign Affairs Committee.

New Delhi, April 12, 1957.

I had an hour talk with the Australian High Commissioner. I told him that I was much distressed at the attitude of the Australian Government and their representative in the Security Council in regard to Kashmir discussions. It seemed to me that the statements made on behalf of Australia in the Security Council and outside were more hostile to India than the statements of any other member of the Security Council. For any country to say that would have distressed us, but for a Commonwealth country to do so was even more distressing and it produced unfortunate consequences in India.

2. I went over the broad features of this Kashmir affair and how unfairly we had been treated by many members of the Security Council in recent debates who ignored the basic points. I referred, in particular to the proposal to send UN forces in Kashmir, a proposal which was persisted in, in spite of many stating categorically that on no account would we permit such forces to come here. This was mentioned in the Security Council Resolution, although every member of the Security Council knew what our attitude was and the fact this was contrary to the provisions of Chapter VI of the Charter. Now, I found Mr. Casey again suggesting that Australia would be prepared to send forces if the parties agreed. He knew very well that India not only did not agree but entirely objects to it. Why then was he going on saying these things which angered our people?

3. I spoke to High Commissioner about the background of the Muslim League politics, two-nation theory etc., and the fact that the leaders of Pakistan were people who had opposed our struggle for freedom in the past and chiefly consisted of big landlords and had no constructive or economic policy. They could only think of keeping their people’s mind occupied with hatred of India. This was probably the main reason for keeping alive the Kashmir issue as this was and the manner of their propaganda and their appeals to religion and jehad.

4. The High Commissioner told me that he had reported to his Government that, in his opinion, a plebiscite would be unfortunate as this would let loose dangerous forces.

5. I referred to Shri Krishna Menon quoting in one of his speeches in the Security Council from a document containing the gist of some talks which I had with some Prime Ministers in London. I suggested to him to meet Shri Krishna Menon to discuss the Kashmir matter and also find out the facts about this document.

No.337-PMO/57 New Delhi, 23rd April, 1957

My dear Prime Minister,

I write to acknowledge your latter of the 1st April which was handed to our High Commissioner in London by your Ambassador there and has been forwarded to me.

I am glad to note that Your Excellency understands and welcomes my explanation of our lawful position in Kashmir and that you agree that it is not open to challenge. I am surprised however, that Your Excellency still continues to approach this question as though Pakistan and India were two contestants with equal or similar and valid claims and as though the sovereignty of the Union of India over her entire territories was in doubt. Your Excellency will no doubt appreciate that this affects the integrity of India.

Let me make the present position in regard to Kashmir clear once again. The entire territory of the former Princely State of Jammu & Kashmir is a constituent part of the Union of India which is a Federation. Half of Jammu & Kashmir, as a result of invasion first by irregulars and afterwards by the Pakistan Army, is unlawfully and forcibly occupied by Pakistan. Here, may I say that Pakistan denied the fact of this invasion and concealed it from the Security Council until the Commission was about to discover the facts itself.
We did not go to the Security Council to decide our title or the issue of sovereignty in regard to the former Princely State of Jammu & Kashmir which acceded to the Union of India not only in accordance with law but in full conformity with arrangements which both Pakistan and India accepted with the British Government. It is the same procedure as was followed both by Pakistan and ourselves in regard to the other Princely States. We went to the Security Council because we were invaded and we wanted to obtain the termination of this invasion by the good offices and machinery of conciliation of the United Nations rather than by waging war and invading Pakistan territory.

I hope, Your Excellency will appreciate that, in our anxiety to avoid bloodshed and conflict with our neighbour, we refrained from invasion of Pakistan in 1947, though this would, in the circumstances, undoubtedly have been legitimate action on our part. At all times, we have maintained that the soil of our territory must be cleared of the invader. Pakistan has no rights whatsoever in Jammu & Kashmir and her presence there is the result of invasion and is illegal occupation.

Perhaps, to Tunisia as an Arab country, our position in Kashmir will strike with a greater sense of reality if I mentioned that Kashmir was invaded in the same way as Egypt was invaded by the Anglo-French-Israeli forces. In the latter case we all demanded vacation of the aggression, we do the same in regard to Kashmir, and I fail to understand how Tunisia, of all countries, can have two views on this question.

In regard to Your Excellency’s own country, we have, both before our own independence and after, firstly and without reservation supported the demand for the integrity of an independent Tunisia, the removal of foreign occupation and the restoration of Tunisian sovereignty to her people. We cannot be expected to feel or do less in regard to our own country.

Your Excellency referred in your previous letter to your pride in your friendship with Pakistan and India and to your earnest wish for a peaceful solution of the conflicts between our two countries. If any country is more anxious than India, and no one is more anxious than I am that conflicts between nations should be solved peacefully. This is also known to Pakistan and we have made many attempts and many sacrifices to this end. We have some achievements too to our common credit.

In view, however, of Your Excellency’s friendship with Pakistan, to which you have referred, I would regard it reasonable for us to expect that your country will use her influence with Pakistan in asking her to bring her actions in conformity with the Charter of the United Nations, with international law and neighbourly relations and in furtherance of the promotion of Asian unity and strength. I hope here-after we can look to Your Excellency’s good offices being used in that direction, as any other, particularly the approach that you are now making, is a challenge to our sovereignty and a condonation of invasion. It causes us no little surprise that an appeal should be made to us on the basis that the invader is to reap the fruits of his aggression and that the active invasion gives him legal and even moral rights on our sovereign territory, and that he canvas a result of his occupation of the neighbouring country, thereafter claim from other nations the right to be regarded as having an equal position in regard to the sovereign territory of India.

I earnestly hope that a clear statement not merely of our position but of the factual situation and the moral issues involved will induce Your Excellency to make an approach to this problem far different from what you have done.

Yours sincerely.

Sd/- Jawaharlal Nehru

His Excellency Mr. Habib Bourguiba, Prime Minister of Tunisia, Tunis.

2087. Note of the Embassy of the United States in New Delhi.

New Delhi, May 15, 1957.

No.551

The Embassy of the United States of America presents its compliments to the Ministry of External Affairs and has the honor to refer to the Ministry's note dated April 16, 1957 concerning remarks on Kashmir made by Secretary Dulles during hearings of the subcommittee of the Committee of Appropriations of the United States House of Representatives on January 29, 1957.

The Ministry will recall that the questioning of the Secretary of State by a member of the subcommittee came at the time when the Security Council was considering the Kashmir issue. The Council had just adopted a resolution recalling the principle embodied in previous resolutions that “final disposition of the state of Jammu and Kashmir will be made in accordance with the will of the people expressed through the democratic method of a free and impartial plebiscite conducted under United Nations auspices.” The resolution also reiterated that any action by the Kashmir Constituent Assembly to determine the future shape and affiliation of the state or any part thereof would not constitute disposition of the state in accordance with this principle. The reply of Secretary Dulles to the Congressman’s question therefore clearly referred to the adoption of the resolution by the Security Council of January 24, 1957. Obviously the Secretary had no intention, during a hearing on appropriations, of going into the question of the legal status of Kashmir.

The Embassy has noted the renewed expression by the Ministry of the views of the Government of India on various aspects of the Kashmir dispute. The United States Government will, of course, take these views into account in determining its own position in connection with future consideration of the dispute by the Security Council. As the Ministry is aware, the United States Government further believes that the United Nations has a continuing responsibility to assist both parties in reaching a mutually satisfactory settlement.

The embassy takes this opportunity to renew the assurances of its highest consideration.

Karachi, September 3, 1957.

Referring to the recent News Agency report of an alleged statement by State Department officials that United States was neutral in the Kashmir dispute, the Foreign Minister Malik Firoz Noon said today that it was clear that not only the United States but all other Members of the Security Council were and have always been neutral and their attitude has been determined by a desire to see the dispute settled in accordance with the principles of self-determination and justice. The only exception from strict impartiality has been that of Russia who by exercising the veto has added to the difficulties of the problem. It is hoped, however, that Russia will now realise that a peaceful solution cannot be found unless a United Nations Force is allowed to guard the cease-fire line and enable both sides to withdraw their troops after which a free and fair plebiscite could be held under the auspices of the United Nations.

2089. Note of Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru on his meeting with the High Commissioner of the United Kingdom Malcolm MacDonald.

New Delhi, September 15, 1957.

The UK High Commissioner came to see me this afternoon and gave me the attached message from the Prime Minister of the U.K. (Not available here). This deals with Kashmir. Earlier I had received another message through him from Mr. Macmillan dealing with the situation in the Middle East.

2. I spoke to him first about Kashmir. I told him that, during the past many years, we had given enough evidence of our patience and our desire not to humiliate Pakistan in any way. We had not asked at any time for a specific condemnation of Pakistan as an aggressor, although we had repeatedly made it clear in the UN and elsewhere that Pakistan had committed aggression. We followed this policy because of our anxiety not only to settle the Kashmir issue, but so as not to embitter our relations with Pakistan insofar as we could help it. We looked to the future when we hoped to live in friendly cooperation.

3. The result of this policy has been to make Pakistan more and more aggressive and to cloud the basic issues. Unfortunately, Pakistan has been encouraged in this attitude by other Powers. We saw what took place in the UN last year, where, to our amazement, we were treated as if we were in the wrong and in the dock in spite of the fact that Pakistan had been the aggressor and it continued its aggression. We came to the conclusion then that the only way of dealing with this Kashmir issue was to keep the basic facts before us in the UN all the time, that is, the original and continuing aggression of Pakistan and the accession of Kashmir to the Indian Union. If those facts were admitted, as they must be, then one could discuss the matter on a secure foundation. Otherwise, we would have the same deadlocks that we have had during the past few years and India would have to face the extraordinary situation of being almost put in the dock.

4. Not only has this aggression continued throughout this period, but, lately, another and a different type of aggression was now being indulged in by Pakistan. This was the campaign of sabotage which was openly admitted by some of Pakistani leaders. Therefore, we cannot discuss this issue except on the basis of the facts of the situation. It has never been our desire to humiliate Pakistan or to make things more difficult. Difficulties have arisen from Pakistan’s attitude and its support by some of the Great Powers, which has encouraged Pakistan in its intransigence. Even now, it is not India that has asked for a meeting of the Security Council to consider this matter. It is Pakistan which has done.
5. It is, to some extent, true that the attitude we have adopted now is a clearer and stronger one than sometimes in the past, although throughout these past discussions, we have always based our case on Pakistan’s aggression. We have been compelled to adopt this attitude because of Pakistan’s activities and threats and the support Pakistan has got from other countries. It is not possible to proceed with this matter any further except on a basis of facts and reality.

6. Some reference was made by the UK High Commissioner to the Jarring Report. I pointed out that the Jarring Report itself recognized the many changes which have occurred. Towards the end of it, there was a reference to some kind of an arbitration to decide whether Pakistan had carried out its obligations under Part I of the UN Resolution. I did not understand how this matter was suitable for arbitration. Nobody doubted the fact that Pakistan was in illegal possession of a larger part of the territory of the Jammu and Kashmir State. If that was so, as it was, then the Security Council had to determine whether Pakistan had committed a violation of that resolution or not or if it had failed to implement it. As a matter of fact, some of the UN Representatives had expressed their views on this subject previously already. In addition to this was the new aggression and violation taking place now.

7. The UK High Commissioner said that there was no question now of having any arbitration, but perhaps someone on behalf of the UN could report on this present position. I said that was a matter for the Security Council to consider, but I did not see what additional facts, which were not known, were required for a decision on this primary issue.

8. The High Commissioner reminded me that Mr. Macmillan was anxious to keep this Kashmir issue “ticking on” so that the other major issue, namely, the Canal Waters, could be proceeded with. Any success in the latter would create a favourable atmosphere. I said I would welcome any progress made in that respect.

9. I am sending you a separate note on the talk I had with the High Commissioner about Syria and the Middle East.

10. I shall be sending a telegram to Shri Krishna Menon about these two notes I have received from Mr. Macmillan. I shall also have to answer these two notes. I propose to send an answer about Syria first, as this appears to be a more urgent matter.

11. I suggest that copies of both the messages from the UK Prime Minister as well as a copy of my notes on my interview with the UK High Commissioner might be sent by air mail to Shri Krishna Menon, so that he might have the full text of these papers.

2090. Message of Prime Minister Jawaher Lal Nehru to British Prime Minister Harold Macmilan

Thank you for your personal message on Kashmir. I am glad you read the memorandum which I gave you in July. That memorandum was rather a general one and not prepared especially for you. Should you so desire it, we can have a more precise memorandum prepared.

2. You know our broad position about Kashmir. We have felt very deeply the aggression by Pakistan in Kashmir, accompanied as it was by loot and massacre of large numbers of innocent people. In spite of this, when we went to the Security Council, we did not specifically ask for condemnation of Pakistan as an aggressor, and all that we asked for was that the Security Council should ask Pakistan to prevent Pakistan personnel and nationals from participating or assisting in the invasion. We chose Article 35 of the UN Charter, which is meant for conciliation. Even then, in spite of our strong feelings, we were anxious not to humiliate Pakistan in any way and to keep a way open for a friendly settlement. We had in view our future relations with Pakistan. In spite of this, Pakistan not only did not stop its nationals from participating and assisting in this invasion but sent its regular army into Kashmir. Pakistan's attitude then and ever since has been aggressive and violent and based on prevarications and false propaganda.

3. Our basic position has always been that Pakistan committed aggression and, in fact, was continuing it. This was accepted by the UN Commission when it said that a new situation had been created by Pakistan armies occupying the Jammu and Kashmir State territory and calling upon them to withdraw. We had accepted the UN Resolutions of August 1948 and January 1949 on the explicit assurances given to us by the Commission, which were published.

4. In the course of the past many years, we sought earnestly for a peaceful settlement and entered into long discussions which proved fruitless. We became convinced that no notifications, which ignored the basic facts of the situation, that is, Pakistan's aggression in Kashmir, and Kashmir's accession to India, could succeed.

5. Pakistan's aggression has continued and has been further consolidated and, now, another type of aggression has been started. This is well organized campaign of sabotage through Pakistani agents. I hope you will appreciate our position and the difficulties we have encountered in our attempts to find out a peaceful settlement. These difficulties have been largely due to Pakistan not carrying out the basic provisions of the UNCIP Resolutions. I regret to say that Pakistan has been encouraged in this intransigent policy by great countries. We have no desire to condemn Pakistan. Indeed, it is not we who have asked for the coming meeting of the Security Council. But, we cannot accept any position which is not based on the essential facts of the situation. Nor can we go back to the interminable arguments and discussions which have taken place during the past years and which have led nowhere.

6. Apart from the basic facts to which I have referred, I must confess that it is very difficult for us to deal with a country and its leaders who continually indulge in violent abuse and untruths, and deliberately aim at propagating hatred and ill will and adding to the tensions that so unfortunately exist between our two countries. Feeling in our own country is very strong, and our Parliament has often expressed it. We have, however always tried to restrain this and to give expression to our views in moderate language, always expressing our goodwill to Pakistan and her people.

7. You refer to the importance of giving effect to Parts I and II of the UNCIP Resolution of August 1948. Nine years have passed since this Resolution, and the facts are patent that Pakistan has not carried out her obligations even as regards Part I. It is for the Security Council to accept this position, which does not require any detailed enquiry. The documents and admitted facts in the case are enough to establish this. We are, however, always ready to give careful consideration to any suggestions for constructive approach which are consistent with the stability and integrity of our country and which might help in the reduction of tension and conflict.

In a message dated 15 September 1957, Harold Macmillan referred to India’s concern about the principle regarding aggression. He interpreted that India now wanted that Pakistan should give effect to Section A of Part II of the August 1948 Resolution. He realized the difficulties about demilitarization in Kashmir and about the prolonged controversy as to the precise meaning and effect of the UNCIP Resolutions. Although he wanted to see a settlement of the Kashmir dispute acceptable to both countries, he was equally anxious that public controversy and acrimonious debate should be avoided which could only harm the common cause. He wrote that “controversies about events in 1947 and the revival of disagreements in 1948 will be sterile.”

2091. Letter from the Indian Ambassador in Washington to the U. S. Assistant Secretary of State regarding depiction of Jammu and Kashmir in the map contained in the State Department’s publication: “The Middle East: Flexibility of Delineation”.

Embassy of India
Washington.

May 7, 1959/ Vaisakha 17,1881(Saka)

My dear Assistant Secretary,

I am writing to you on a matter which has caused considerable surprise to my Government especially as my Government is convinced of the friendship and cordiality which your Government has always evinced towards us. It concerns Kashmir.

2. in the State Department Bulletin Vol. XL, No. 1030, dated 23rd March 1959, Page 409 there is a map entitled “The Middle East: Flexibility of Delineation” in which the State of Jammu and Kashmir is marked “Jammu and Kashmir (In Dispute)”. It is difficult to understand how the State Department could possibly take the view that the sovereignty of Kashmir and Jammu is in dispute. There cannot be the slightest doubt that in international law the State of Jammu and Kashmir is part of India and India has sovereignty over that State. This is not only my view about the international law but this is the view which was accepted as far back as 4th February 1948 by the Leader of the U.S. Delegation in the Security Council. This is what Mr. Austin stated:-

“The external sovereignty of Jammu and Kashmir is no longer under the control of the Maharaja…. This is an affair between Nations, and with the accession of Jammu and Kashmir to India, this foreign sovereignty went over to India and is exercised by India, and that is how India happens to be here as a petitioner”.

3. Sir Owen Dixon who went to Kashmir on behalf of the Security Council made a statement which is also pertinent:

“I was prepared to adopt the view that when the frontier of the State of Jammu and Kashmir was crossed, on, I believe October 20, 1947, by hostile elements, it was contrary to international law, and that when in May 1948, as I believe, units of the regular Pakistan forces moved into the territory of State that too was inconsistent with international law”.

4. What is in dispute and what has not yet been finally decided and what is pending before the Security Council is India’s complaint against Pakistan of her aggression. If you wish to refer to this matter at all, the proper way to refer to it in the map would be “(matter Before Security Council)” but as it stands the map suggests as if India’s sovereignty over Jammu and Kashmir was in question.

5. I hope you will take the necessary action to have the matter corrected so as to enable me to report to my Government that the State Department used the expression “In Dispute” through inadvertence.

With kindest regards,

Yours sincerely

The Hon’ble
William M. Rountree,
Assistant Secretary of State, Department of State, Washington DC.

2092. Letter of the U. S. Assistant Secretary of State William M. Rountree addressed to the Indian Ambassador M. C. Chagla regarding depiction of Kashmir in the State Department publication.

I am writing in answer to your letter of May 7, 1959, concerning a map which appeared in the issue of the Department of State Bulletin, dated March 23, 1959, on which the status of the State of Jammu and Kashmir was described as being ‘in dispute’.

This description is that which has customarily been used by the United States Government on maps on which the state of Jammu and Kashmir appears. The phrase ‘in dispute’ reflects the fact that the future status of the State continues to be the subject of consideration by the United Nations. The Security Council is still seized of this matter and, until such time as the issue is satisfactorily resolved, the terminology in question appears to the United States Government to be reasonable.
The United States Government, in using this terminology, does not thereby imply its support of the position adopted by either the Government of India or the Government of Pakistan concerning the present or future status of the State of Jammu and Kashmir. I know, moreover, that I need not assure you that the Government of the United States continues to have only the most friendly and cordial feelings toward the Government and people of India. It remains the earnest hope of the United States that the Kashmir question may be settled to the satisfaction of, and with justice to, all parties concerned.

2. Position here is that State Department anxious to avoid a debate on Kashmir as among other things it will further worsen Indo-American relations, damage to which they are anxious to repair. Understand that RUSK sent for AZIZ AHMED on January 3 and discouraged him from going to Security Council suggesting that negotiations on Kashmir should be kept on a bilateral level. He is also reported to have said that India could obviously not enter into any meaningful discussions on the eve of a general election. Consequently this was no time to bring up the issue. Understand also that British have discouraged and not encouraged Pakistan’s going to the Security Council.

3. Reported that Kennedy received two letters from Ayub today. First letter said that if India wanted adjournment of Security Council discussion because of her elections, Pakistan would consider such an adjournment and second letter reflected sentiments expressed in Ayub’s Larkana speech.
4. The general situation here is that while the Administration which was never too emotionally upset at Goa is rapidly returning to normal and wishes to restore Indo-American relations to the status quo ante, feeling in general public and in Congress is still most acute. We are certainly going to be strongly criticized when Congress reassembles on Wednesday. If Kashmir is brought before Security Council in next few weeks, the combined effect on the image of India will be exceedingly bad. This I am anxious to avoid not only because I happen to be Ambassador here, but in our wider interests. My recommendation would, therefore, be that as proposed by you, we start the motions of negotiation immediately and prolong them as much as possible. Talbot in conversation with Chatterjee this afternoon attached great importance to Akhtar Husain’s visit and called it “decisive”. Grateful to be informed of your decision so that I can use it with State (Department).

5. Galbraith arrived yesterday and has been referring to some proposals he made to Prime Minister and AYUB which he will discuss with State Department. Grateful to know what these are and what your reaction to them is.

2094. SECRET

Letter from Foreign Secretary M. J. Desai to High Commissioner in Pakistan Rajeshwar Dayal (presently on vacation in India).

New Delhi, December 31, 1961.

My dear Dayal,

You will remember the correspondence between you and Gundevia in August/September, which I also handled at one stage on the subject of approaches by the Pakistan authorities to improve the climate between our two countries and to take the discussions on Kashmir a little further beyond the September 1960 stage. You suggested a visit by General Burki, Health Minister to India, as in your view, General Burki was a person with a constructive approach and liberal views, on whose advice President Ayub placed a lot of reliance. In the letter I wrote and also other letters sent by Gundevia we expressed our doubts regarding the sincerity of Pakistan and their motives in making these sweet noises, but we told you that General Burki will be welcome whenever he chooses to visit India. Subsequent developments have been rather patchy, some showing a rather friendly trend, others reiterating and developing further the hate India campaign.

2. You must have seen various reports about Pakistan going to the Security Council or/and the General Assembly on Kashmir. Our information from New York about 6 weeks back confirmed that Pakistan had decided to revive the Kashmir question in the Security Council as Zafarullah had done this lobbying and was ready. Since then Pakistan, having seen the unfavourable reaction in the Western press on Goa, seems to have firmly decided that this was the best opportunity of squeezing India on Kashmir in the Security Council or/and the General Assembly.

3. Galbraith saw PM a couple of days back and also saw me later in the evening. He told us that a debate in the Security Council on Kashmir between Zafarullah and Krishna Menon would not do any good either to India, Pakistan or the USA. They will all be damned in various ways. He gave it as his view that Ayub did not want this debate, but he was being pressed by his colleagues. Galbraith’s appraisal was that Ayub would prefer resumption of direct talks between India and Pakistan on this subject. The object of taking the matter to the Security Council can only be agitational and not political as the Security Council cannot settle this matter. Galbraith then suggested that we should take some initiative for the resumption of the talks between India and Pakistan on Kashmir. PM told Galbraith that we were always prepared to talk and discuss Kashmir or any other matter. We did not, however, see any prospect of settlement unless Pakistan accepted the basic position that nothing should be done to upset the present position and the discussions should only deal with minor adjustments to make the present military line an international frontier. PM also said that he will have no time during the next 2/3 months because of the elections. Galbraith said that a beginning could be made by one of the Pakistani leaders of the second level visiting India and having a general talk and this could be followed up after the elections by a meeting between PM and Ayub. When Galbraith talked to me, I told him that the suggestion regarding General Burki visiting India was made by you in August/September and that we had agreed to Burki’s visit. We would accept this visit if General Burki desires to come to India for a goodwill visit and see our medical, public health establishments and institutions. He can also call on the Prime Minister. I mentioned, however, that while prepared to talk and discuss, I could not see how the Kashmir question can be taken further unless the Pakistanis accepted broadly settlement along the present cease fire line with minor adjustments. Galbraith said that both he and the State Department were extremely anxious that Kashmir should not come to the Security Council at this stage as it will do no good to anybody and will unnecessarily embarrass the U.S. administration. He said that a visit by General Burki sometime in January might help considerably in avoiding awkwardness and embarrassment for all concerned. I told him that I will put this matter to you and request you to reactivate the old idea of General Burki’s visit. However, if Pakistanis thought that they would exploit the present Western hostility against India over Goa by taking the Kashmir question to the Security Council, they are hardly likely to let this opportunity go. I also added that as far as we are concerned, we have lived with these agitational approaches for nearly 14 years and we are not worried about Pakistan taking the Kashmir question to the Security Council.

4. PM desired that I should convey these developments to you and suggest that you might take up the question of Burki’s visit to India if you felt the atmosphere was receptive.

5. I find that you are not due to return to Pakistan till the third week of January. Is it possible for you to curtail your leave and return to Karachi sometime in the first week of January? PM is away on tour, but will be in Delhi from 9th till the 15th and then again from 19th till the end of January. If Burki is coming, his visit will have to be so timed that he is in Delhi during the period PM is not on tour.

6. I must tell you that Galbraith is very anxious about this matter. I can well appreciate his anxiety as a debate in the Security Council on Kashmir is bound to embarrass the US administration considerably.

7. I am sending a copy of this letter for information to Mehta and will be grateful if you would let me know whether you can curtail your holiday plans and return to Karachi 10 or 12 days earlier than your former schedule.

With kind regards,

Yours sincerely

Letter from Foreign Secretary M. J. Desai to Ambassador in the United States B. K. Nehru.

Ministry of External Affairs
New Delhi

My dear B.K.,

Please see copy of my letter to Rajeshwar Dayal No. FS-842/61 dated 31st December, 1961, which is self-explanatory.

2. Galbraith left last Friday for a week in Switzerland and another week at Washington for consultations. Before he left he told me that the U.S. authorities are extremely anxious to keep Kashmir out of the Security Council. He said that agreement by India to initiate preliminary talks of some sort—the Burki line mentioned in the letter—will also help him considerably in convincing the doubting Thomases in the United States that India’s policy continues to be one of settlement by peaceful negotiations and that Goa, for various reasons, was the one exception.

3. I do not know how far this is Galbraith’s personal line and to what extent the State Department and the people in Washington who matter are keen on the suggestion made by Galbraith. As you know, there is little chance of making any advance towards the settlement of the Kashmir question unless Pakistan shows a reasonable and practical attitude and broadly accepts the status quo. We are, however, prepared to go through the motions of negotiations at a second level before the elections and at the top level after the elections if this does help in reassuring American public opinion that India’s basic policy continues to be that of settlement by peaceful negotiations. I might add that Pakistan’s move to take the matter to the Security Council instigated perhaps by the U.K. does not cause us any concern and, while we will be prepared to go through the motion of negotiations to assist in restoration of normalcy in American public opinion, we would not like to do this as a gesture to Pakistan to persuade the Pakistan authorities not to rush to the Security Council.

4. I will be grateful if you give us an assessment from your knowledge of the local situation whether Galbraith’s suggestion to us in this matter is based on the current thinking of the State Department and the people who matter in Washington. A brief telegram saying that Galbraith’s views are shared or are not shared by people who matter in Washington would be adequate.

With kind regards,

Yours sincerely,

(M.J. Desai)

Pakistan High Commissioner was with me for over an hour this morning. He is leaving tonight for Karachi for consultation.

2. We talked Kashmir and the statements by Indian and Pakistani leaders commencing with Prime Minister’s statement on Kashmir in the press conference on 28th and ending with Ayub Khan’s statement at Larkana which appeared in this morning’s press.
3. Pakistan High Commissioner took great pains to make out that India was against discussions and negotiations on Kashmir as seen from Defence Minister’s and Congress President’s recent statements. I contradicted this position and stressed Prime Minister’s statement of 28th December and our reaffirmation of the policy of settlement of this and other international questions by peaceful negotiations.

4. Pakistan Education Minister Akhtar Husain who is also Ministers for Kashmir Affairs is coming here on 9th to attend the Commonwealth Educational Conference. Pakistan High Commissioner asked for an appointment for Akhtar Husain to see Prime Minister. This is being arranged.

5. It appeared from today’s talks with Pakistan High Commissioner that Pakistanis have decided to go through the motions of a preliminary approach on Kashmir at Ministerial level through Akhtar Husain to placate the Americans but have taken a firm decision to go to the Security Council with a view to exploiting fully to India’s disadvantage Western hostility to India following the Goa incident and to create a split among Afro Asians. That Pakistan has decided to make this agitational approach is clear from President Ayub Khan’s wild statement at Larkana Sind about India’s intention to grab the territories of its neighbours Pakistan, Ceylon Burma and Nepal etc.

My telegram 241312 of 9th.

2. Galbraith’s proposals were chiefly aimed at getting any discussion in the Security Council on Kashmir postponed for 2 or 3 months or better still not to have such a discussion at all. He therefore wanted direct talks at second level to begin with.

3. In regard to the content of the talks Galbraith’s idea was that we should get away from the territorial approach and avoid any attempt at major changes in the border including the cease fire line but discuss other facilities that we may be able to give to Pakistanis in Kashmir like the facility of entry, business, economic exchanges etc. Though it was not clear what Galbraith had in mind, Prime Minister told Galbraith that we can settle down to normal life and people from Pakistan can have no difficulty in coming to Kashmir once the tension between the two countries over Kashmir is removed. Till that happens however it is not possible for us to relax the present restrictions as this would lead to a flood of people, some of whom might well be mischief makers bent on creating trouble, coming into Kashmir.

4. General Burki has sent a message that he is not coming. Minister Akhtar Husain who came for the Commonwealth Educating Meeting has however seen Prime Minister this morning.

5. No specific mention of Kashmir was made during this meeting. Prime Minister told the Pakistan Minister that despite temporary political differences our long term policy objective continues to be development of friendly and cooperative relations with Pakistan. Prime Minister referred to the 1960 September talks with the Pakistan President and the subsequent deterioration in the atmosphere between the two countries. He said that he had invited Pakistan President to come to India and that invitation still holds. Only it will be desirable to have an improved atmosphere between the two countries to make the visit fruitful. Prime Minister also mentioned that the past bitterness of partition between the common people on both sides has died down and that political differences between the two countries should be solved by discussion and negotiation. Akhtar Husain mentioned that the irresponsible outbursts in the Dawn have nothing to do with the policy of the Pakistan Government who cannot control Altaf Husain (editor) who is a law unto himself. He then referred to some Army concentrations near the West Pakistan border and himself suggested that this may be due to certain Army manoeuvres on the Pakistan side. Prime Minister told him that this seasonal movement of Army grouping for exercises and manoeuvres are decided on by the Army people and have no policy significance. Prime Minister added that India will not use force or attack Pakistan any time unless we were compelled to defend ourselves.

There are only three aspects of the Kashmir question, namely: (i) the State’s accession to India, (ii) Pakistan’s aggression and (iii) the issue of plebiscite.

ACCESSION

1. The former princely State of Jammu & Kashmir acceded to India in October 1947 when the ruler of the State executed an Instrument of Accession under the Government of India Act of 1935 as adapted under the Indian Independence Act of 1947. This Instrument of Accession was accepted on behalf of the Government of India by Lord Mountbatten. A similar document was signed by more than 500 princely States who acceded to India after Indian Independence.
The State’s accession to India was legal, completely constitutional and totally unconditional.

The act of the State’s accession to India was performed by the ruler with the concurrence and support of the largest political party in the State, the National Conference. This act of accession was further reinforced by a freely elected Constituent Assembly of the State of Jammu & Kashmir which held its first meeting in October, 1951. It was reaffirmed in the State’s Constitution adopted on November 17, 1956. The relevant portion of this Constitution is as follows:

“We, the people of the State of Kashmir, having solemnly resolved, in pursuance of the accession of the State to India which took place on the twenty-sixth day of October 1947, to further defend the existing relationship of the State with the Union of India as an integral part thereof, and to secure to ourselves justice, social, economic and political; liberty of thought, expression, belief, faith and worship; equality of status and of opportunity; and to promote among us all sovereignty assuring the dignity of the individual and the unity of the Nation:

“In our Constituent Assembly this seventeenth day of November, 1956, do hereby adopt, enact, and give to ourselves this Constitution.

The Instrument of Accession has been superseded by the Constitution of India and the relations between the State of Jammu & Kashmir with India are now regulated by Article 370 of the Indian Constitution.

Hence, Kashmir became as expressly desired by its people, a constituent State of the Indian Union and therefore, part of Indian territory.

2. The State’s accession to India, it is worth noting, has never to date been challenged on the legal plane. The United States’ representative, speaking at a meeting of the U.N. Security Council on February 4, 1948 acknowledged the legality of the accession. “The external sovereignty of Jammu & Kashmir is no longer under the control of the Maharaja...with the accession of Jammu & Kashmir to India, this foreign sovereignty went over to India and is exercised by India, and that is how India happens to be here as a petitioner.”

The Government of the United Kingdom also never questioned and indeed could not have questioned this act of accession which was made directly under the enactments of the British parliament.

The Legal Adviser to the United Nations Commission came to the conclusion that the State’s accession to India was legal and could not be questioned. This fact was further recognized by the U.N. Commission in its report submitted to the United Nations and defined in its Resolutions of August 13, 1948 and January 5, 1949. Both these Resolutions, be it noted, were accepted by India and Pakistan.

3. Pakistan, too, is not unaware of the legality of the accession and has therefore been unable to challenge it before an international court of law. It is interesting to note that in 1957 when the TIMES of London had made a suggestion that the issue of accession be referred to the World Court, the suggestion was opposed by Mr. Firoz Khan Noon, then Foreign Minister, and Mr. Chundrigar, then Prime Minister of Pakistan.

India's sovereignty in Kashmir stems from the act of accession which was complete, total and unconditional — an act of accession fully ratified by the freely expressed will of its people.

AGGRESSION

The act of Pakistan's aggression in the State of Jammu & Kashmir has also not been disproved until this day. President Ayub Khan of Pakistan has himself admitted this act of aggression in the following words uttered by him at a public meeting held in Djakarta (Indonesia) on December 7, 1960: “..Thus began the problem of Kashmir where the Moslems were fighting for freedom. Naturally, we in Pakistan, went to their aid.”

2. The late Mohammed Ali Jinnah, Founder of Pakistan, told Lord Mountbatten towards the end of 1947, that if Indian troops were withdrawn from Kashmir “I'll call the whole thing off”— meaning thereby that he would withdraw Pakistan forces from Kashmir (vide Alan Campbell Johnson's book —"Mission with Mountbatten").

3. Mr. Zafrulla Khan (formerly Pakistan Foreign Minister and principal delegate of his country in the United Nations who had earlier denied, during U.N. debates, Pakistan's incursion into Kashmir territory) admitted before the United Nations Commission in July 1948 that three Pakistani brigades were fighting in Kashmir. Commenting on this admission, the U.N. Commission observed:

> “According to the Security Council's resolution of 17 January, the Government of Pakistan was requested to inform the Security Council immediately of any material change in the situation. In a letter addressed to the Security Council, the Pakistan Government agreed to comply with this request. The Government of Pakistan had, however, not informed the Security Council about the presence of Pakistani troops in the State of Jammu and Kashmir.”

4. Sir Owen Dixon, eminent Australian jurist and U.N. Representative for India and Pakistan, expressed the view that the entry of hostile elements into the territory of Jammu and Kashmir in October, 1947 was “contrary to international law” and the entry of regular Pakistan forces in May, 1948, too was “inconsistent with international law.”

5. Khan Abdul Qayum Khan (then Premier of the North-West Frontier Province of Pakistan) and Nawab of Mamdot, in a judicial enquiry made in some other connection in Lahore, admitted that Pakistan was behind the invasion of Kashmir by the tribesmen.

6. On October 22, 1947 Pakistan sent thousands of tribesman into Kashmir. These tribesmen were aided, abetted, financed and allowed to pass through Pakistan territory. They were supplied with automatic weapons and transport and reinforcements. The raiders used Pakistan Army signals and military hospitals. The Pakistan Radio related the exploits of the tribesmen and described India as the “enemy.”

The fact of Pakistan’s invasion of Kashmir has been amply corroborated by the testimony of numerous independent observers. Here is what Mr. Robert Trumbull, Correspondent of the NEW YORK TIMES, says in his book, “AS I SEE INDIA”:

“...The Pakistan government has steadfastly denied any official encouragement to the tribes in the invasion of Kashmir...

But there was never any doubt that Pakistani provincial authorities, perhaps unofficially but certainly not without the knowledge of Karachi, supplied the bloodthirsty tribal lashkars (war parties) with truck transport. And ‘Pakistani Army officers, alleged to be on “leave”, led the contingents... The Indians arrived just in time to stop the raiders five miles from the capital...”

Another independent observer, Vincent Shean in his book, “Nehru - Ten Years of Power”, states:

“By early September of that year (1947) the Pathan tribesmen had been converging on the borders of the Jammu Kashmir state and the western part of Jammu (the Poonch area) was soon in their hands. In mid-October they began the infiltration of Kashmir proper, armed with modern equipment which could only have come from the Pakistan Army... The Maharajah’s accession to India (October 24th, made final on the 26th) and the dispatch of the first Indian troops (October 27th) were not only next in order, but were the direct, inevitable consequences of this invasion. So far as the dates and facts are concerned there can be no dispute.”
It is worth noting that while in United Nations' debates on Kashmir in 1947 Pakistan, denied that it gave any support to the tribesmen, in 1960 the fact was taken for granted even by Pakistani newspapers. THE PAKISTAN TIMES of Lahore dated, October 12, 1960 in an editorial observed as follows: "When Pakistan volunteers and troops went into Kashmir to aid the armed struggle of its long oppressed people ...even the so-called deed of accession on which India’s whole case on Kashmir rests, had not yet been signed."

PLEBISCITE

1. Pakistani propagandists are never tired of repeating that India has not honoured her commitments to the U.N. on Kashmir. It was about time that Pakistan was reminded of her own solemn commitments on this very subject to the United Nations.

Both Pakistan and India had accepted the Resolution adopted on August 13, 1948 by the United Nations Commission for India and Pakistan (UNCIP). The first part of that Resolution imposed a ceasefire which, incidentally, Pakistan has repeatedly violated and continues to violate even today in the form of organizing raids and sabotage in Kashmir. The second part of this Resolution directed Pakistan to withdraw all its regular and irregular forces from the territory of the state of Jammu and Kashmir. The third part (which was to be implemented when the conditions laid down in parts one and two were fulfilled) envisioned a method whereby the free will of the people of the State could be ascertained in a peaceful manner.

It is important to note that neither part one, i.e., ceasefire, nor part two which mainly concerns Pakistan, i.e., withdrawal of its regular and irregular forces from the State, has until this day been carried out by the Pakistan Government. In these circumstances, is it not the height of logical absurdity to expect India, to implement unilaterally part three of this Resolution? If parts one and two were, ignored and part-three implemented, it would be like putting the cart before the horse! It will also not be in keeping with the spirit of the Resolution of the UNCIP to which both Pakistan and India are parties. Hence, it is Pakistan and not India which should be blamed for not honouring her commitments to the United Nations.

The responsibility of making a plebiscite at all possible lay not with India but with Pakistan. Pakistan deliberately dragged her feet in carrying out the obligation to withdraw her troops from Kashmir, Not sure of winning a plebiscite, Pakistan tried to gain time to consolidate her unlawful position in Occupied Kashmir. Hence the long drawn out negotiations with the U.N. Commission, Sir Owen Dixon (1950) and Dr. Graham (1951-1953) in which she tried to get the UNCIP terms on withdrawal of her troops modified to suit her purpose,
Dr. Jarring’s reference to “the changing political, economic and strategic factors surrounding the whole of the Kashmir question, together with the changing pattern of power relations in West and South Asia” and Dr. Graham's conclusion that the U. N. Representative could, not reconstitute the status quo required under the UNCIP resolutions show that a settlement of the Kashmir situation along the lines of the UNCIP resolutions is not a practical proposition in the conditions of today.

The discussion of the problem between the Prime Minister of India and President Ayub in September 1960 did not lead to any precise results. After the talks at a Press Conference at Lahore, the Prime Minister observed that if an attempt to solve a problem led to creation of more difficult problems, then that was no solution. However, in conformity with India’s policy of settling all issues by discussion and negotiation, the Prime Minister made an offer to President Ayub at his Press Conference held in Delhi on December 28, 1961, that negotiations could be started on the basis of things as they are and a settlement reached which avoids upsets. President Ayub has rejected this offer.

2. Pakistan has made much play of an assurance given by Prime Minister Nehru to the people of Kashmir, after India had accepted the State’s accession. The assurance, was that after Pakistan’s invasion had been liquidated and the entire territory of the State cleared of Pakistani hordes and tribesmen, India would again ascertain, if necessary, the will of the people of the State of Jammu & Kashmir.

This assurance, be it remembered, was made only to the people of Kashmir. The assurance was not that India would hold a plebiscite to determine whether Kashmir should join India or Pakistan. Where does Pakistan come in? What right has Pakistan in Kashmir? By what right is she sitting on more than one-third part of the territory of the State of Jammu & Kashmir? By what right does she demand a plebiscite when she has turned her own back on a democratic way of life? How can an aggressor be entitled to share in the property of aggressed?

So far as India’s assurance to the people of Kashmir is concerned, it has been more than fulfilled already. By refusing to vacate the aggression, Pakistan attempted to prevent the people of Kashmir from exercising their right of self-determination.

Determined not to be held to ransom by an aggressor, the people of Kashmir, except those held in subjection by Pakistan, convened a Constituent Assembly of elected members, framed a democratic constitution, reaffirmed their constitutional relationship with India, and drew up a programme of social reforms and economic development which is changing the face of this Indian State.
Article 3 of the State’s Constitution, which is irrevocable has made the State an integral part of the territory of the Indian Union.

Plebiscite, like general elections, is one of the recognised forms of democratic processes. It is to be noted, however, that there has not been a single general election in Pakistan since it was created in August, 1947. Meanwhile general elections, based on universal Adult suffrage, have been held twice during this period in Kashmir on the Indian side and a third general election is due to be held in February this year. As for as parliamentary democracy and democratic values are concerned, It is hardly necessary to comment on what prevails today in Pakistan; or in Pakistan-occupied Kashmir.

It is widely recognised that any upsets in Jammu & Kashmir will result in serious consequences to the people of the State and will also have grave repercussions in the rest of India and Pakistan. Stability, peace and progress have been brought about in Kashmir, in the teeth of opposition from the aggressor and by democratic methods — a tribute to the freedom-loving people of Kashmir and the community of the Indian people of which they form an integral part.

The virus of religious frenzy and hatred fanned by Muslim League leaders who advocated a theocratic State of Pakistan led to the hideous events which followed the partition. Pakistan is welcome to follow any policies it likes, but India cannot allow her dearly gained stability and independence to be undermined by permitting Pakistan to apply archaic theocratic principles to disrupt her territorial integrity.

India is prepared to be patient and tolerant and not resort to force to remove Pakistan aggression. It is obvious, however, that there is a limit to this patience and tolerance. India cannot permit Pakistan to use her continuing aggression on Indian territory as a jumping off ground for further territorial aggressions.

2. President KENNEDY has sent a message to Prime Minister welcoming the News that conversations on Indo-Pakistan relations are to take place between responsible Indian officials and Mr. AKHTAR HUSSAIN Pakistan Minister of Education. TIMMONS to whom I had given the gist of the talks between AKHTAR HUSSAIN and Prime Minister yesterday told me that his message about this talk has crossed the message received from the President.

3. TIMMONS personally presented the message to Prime Minister and enquired whether something more could be done to promote these talks. Prime Minister gave an account of his talks with AKHTAR HUSSAIN and said that he cannot see what more he can do. He said that he is leaving on tour again tomorrow morning but Foreign Secretary will be here.

4. TIMMONS asked me later whether something more could be done. I said that the ball is now in the Pakistan court and in any case HILALY Pakistan High Commissioner who saw me last Saturday had promised to see me again on his return from Karachi, I told TIMMONS that if HILALY or any other official wants to talk about this matter I am always available.

5. From the wording of the President’s message to Prime Minister it appears that ROWNTREE has given the State Department false hopes about these discussions though Pakistani authorities seem to have definitely decided to agitate the matter in the Security Council.

M. J. DESAI From B. K. NEHRU, Kashmir.

I saw Chester Bowles on January 9 and Galbraith on January 10. These meetings had not been arranged for Kashmir. Chatterjee saw Talbot and Galbraith yesterday and conveyed to them in the light of your 24313 of January 10 and 24316 of January 11. Thereafter these latter went to the White House to report.

2. Most productive meeting was with Bowles. He said that Pakistani objective in bringing the case to the Security Council was not to get a settlement which obviously could not be obtained through the Council but (a) to take advantage of our present unpopularity to get more sympathy and (b) to worsen Indo-American relations. As long as they got the last objective, they would be satisfied. He had been attempting to persuade the Administration to tell the Pakistanis that United States would not take Pakistan’s side if they brought up the dispute now. He had not so far succeeded but no commitment had been made to the Paks who did not yet know what view United States would take if they persisted in following this course against American advice. The danger was that the Americans would support Pakistan and the Russians would support India. The consequences of this, with the reactions and counter-actions of the press in both countries, would, coming on top of Goa, have the result of setting back Indo-American relations so badly as to require years, not months, of patient effort to put them right again. A subsidiary danger was that the debate might generate into a slanging match between Zafrullah Khan and Krishna Menon and the hard things said against the United States, especially through an unpopular spokesman, would not easily be forgotten. It was imperative in his view to do all that one possibly could to delay the debate till the effect of Goa had worn off. The Congress President’s and Defence Minister’s references to the necessity of vacating Pakistani aggression had already been reinforced the image of Indian bellicosity which Goa had given.

3. We talked at length about how this postponement could be achieved. He came up with the idea that the Prime Minister should make a dignified statement deprecating aggressive attitudes and stating that India was always ready to negotiate with Pakistan. It was not necessary in this statement to spell out clearly the basis on which negotiations would take place. The whole problem at this moment was not substantive but one of public relations. The effect of statement of this kind would be to cut the ground to a certain extent from under Pakistani feet. People could also take the view at the Security Council that if India was prepared to negotiate, that offer should be accepted before the matter was again raised in the Security Council. If negotiations did start as a result of such a statement, they could commence at the tertiary level so that they did not creep to the Summit through the secondary level in less than six months. He felt that Prime Minister might turn down this suggestion as having in it an element of dishonesty, but he (Bowles) saw nothing dishonest in making statements that we were prepared for negotiations, as in fact we were.

4. Galbraith’s main point was that if the matter did come up to the Security Council, we should ensure that it did not result in vituperation. If the debate was prolonged and offensive words were used, there would, of course, be no difference in the end result, but great harm would be done to our image. I said it was a bit difficult considering the emotions involved and the deliberate objective of Pakistan to provoke us to ensure that the debate could be held at a calm non-vituperative level.

I agree with Chester Bowles’ analysis and recommendations. The question is not one of substance for it is obvious that no substantive change in position will result from the debate. It is one purely of public relations, and I fear greatly that a Kashmir debate coming on top of Goa will have an effect on Indo-American relations which will be extraordinarily difficult to repair. It is not only the Americans who have fish to fry with us; the fish we have to fry with them are fairly important and the frying pan should be kept in good condition.

2. While we agree that a debate on Kashmir in the Security Council cannot settle anything and will merely cause embarrassment all round, we cannot see why our friends should go on pressing us to make various gestures when the Pakistanis are being deliberately cussed and mischievous and have categorically refused to listen to American advice in this matter.

3. Copy of text of a letter which JHA has been asked to send to the President of the Security Council has been repeated to you. It is now for the American delegate in the Security Council to persuade Council members to decide against the Pakistani request for an early meeting and to take up the matter if message at a later date in the light of developments in connection with direct negotiations.

4. Your telegram has been seen by Prime Minister who is on tour. It is possible that he may in the course of his speech later this evening refer to the Kashmir question in some form or other.

5. I now come to the attitude of the Americans here. In an attempt to ascertain what advice the Americans had given to the Pakistanis Ashoke Chib and I made an earnest effort to get our American friends to talk. With a view to draw them out we mentioned the suggestion of Mr. Galbraith to the Foreign Secretary about talks on Kashmir on the second level with the purpose of avoiding a showdown in the Security Council, and gave a background of our invitation given before the High Commissioner went on leave to General Burki to discuss Indo-Pakistan relations with the Prime Minister. I also passed on Shafquat’s remark to me at a meeting the other day that General Burki did not consider the time opportune for a visit to India. In this context I referred to the last minute request for Mr. Akhtar Hussain to see the Prime Minister and enquired if this was not a downgrading of the mission originally contemplated. American reactions did not come as a surprise knowing the fascination Ayub exercises over Ambassador Rountree and the latter’s own conviction that not only can Ayub Khan alone get this country back on its feet but that there is no one who can take his place. But what did surprise us was the rather naive attempt on the part of these senior officers, with whom we have had close personal relations, to convince us that talks at second level desired by their Ambassador in New Delhi and which we had foreseen by our invitation to General Burki was adequately met by the last minute shifting of the responsibility to Akhtar Hussain. They firmly contested our view that the inescapable conclusion was that Pakistan had made up its mind to go to the Security Council and their move was meant to impress the Americans.

6. We pointed out that as the American Embassy in Delhi was in close touch with our Government, we would like to assess correctly what was conveyed to the American Embassy here by the Pakistan Government in response to their approach for talks at second level with India. While our concern was appreciated they regretted at not being able to add to what they had already told us. I might add that both the Counsellor and the First Secretary were rather embarrassed at having to take this line. It is not difficult to see the hand of Rountree in the issue of this whip. This attitude contrasts sharply with the close and friendly contact maintained at Delhi to avoid an unpleasant situation affecting both countries. I would even go further and say that while we are sincerely responding to American efforts, it is doubtful if an adequate presentation of American concern over this matter is being conveyed here to the Pakistanis. It is inconceivable that this country, tied as it is to American apron strings, would not show some response if it had been so approached. One cannot help feeling that once again India is expected to pull American chestnuts out of the fires lit by its allies.

President's letter to Prime Minister was given to me by TALBOT last night. GALBRAITH lunched with me today and I discussed it with him. I was visiting Mrs. KENNEDY this afternoon. President walked in and we had fifteen minutes talk inter alia about Kashmir.

2. Parentage of proposal is not fully known but much of it is apparently President's own. He is most anxious to avoid any debate in Security Council for same reasons as given by CHESTER BOWLES. He is at same time anxious not to annoy AYUB too much in this matter in view of pressure he is exercising on him in regard to Afghanistan. Also apparently his commitment to AYUB in regard to doing something about Kashmir was a little stronger than was given out to us at time of Prime Minister's visit and AYUB keeps reminding him of it. He feels that it will be difficult for United States to vote against debate in Security Council without being able to say that some move for settlement of question was afoot. Furthermore, he believes that good offices of an impartial and universally respected man like BLACK can only help end not hinder.

3. I told President that I was talking wholly without instructions. Apart from the substance of the proposal I did not think the timing was too good. He said the timing was because he wanted some assurance that something was going to happen before Security Council debate so that the United States could honestly ask for postponement. I said it was exactly for this reason that I thought the timing was wrong. The Kashmir issue was a long standing one and aroused violent emotions. To remove it from one channel and put it into another was a major decision which no Government could be expected to take on the eve of a general election and certainly not with a time limit. (To Galbraith I had used the womut effect the Indian example might have elsewhere. The presence of Defence Minister in New York immediately after the Goan military operations had further aggravated popular feeling. Criticism of India often came from people who had supported his action in Cuba and wanted him to take further action. They should be ignored. There also was certain amount of jubilation that India which was always preaching love and peace at the United Nations had been caught out.

9. I explained to him that Defence Minister had not been sent here as any symbol of victory; he had come in the normal course because he handled all important questions at the UN and STEVENSON had said on the night of Goa debate that he reserved the right to ask for another meeting. Although he did not mention it I am told he is still sore, that Prime Minister did not specifically mention Goa to him.

I talked to TIMMONS this morning and told him that the suggestion made in President KENNEEDY’S letter on Kashmir to Prime Minister is being considered with the care and attention that the importance of the subject and our regard and esteem for President’s views and interest in our affairs demand.

2. I have also mentioned to TIMMONS briefly the points staged in para 3 of my telegram to JHA No.24335 of yesterday repeated to you and told him, that intervention of a third party whether he is called a good officer or mediator is liable to complicate matters considerably both because of the publicity involved and the prestige issue which will vitiate effective negotiations. Direct talks between the parties avoid these prestige and publicity issues. The interest taken by the U.S. Government has been of help in the past in settling our boundary dispute on the Eastern and Western borders and in arriving at the Canal Waters settlement. Our objections and misgivings refer to the method suggested and not to US interest in this matter. We welcome the continuance of genuine interest US influence being unobtrusively but effectively used to promote a settlement.

3. I told TIMMONS that most of the Ministers are out touring because of the coming elections. This is one cause for delay as Prime Minister must consult his colleagues before replying to Presidents letter. We would also like to get full background from Ambassador GALBRAITH on his return.

It will not therefore be possible for Prime Minister to send a reply to President’s letter till some time towards the end of next week. TIMMONS said that he will communicate the gist of our conversation to his Government for their interim information.

4. Can you find out how President AYUB KHAN has reacted to President KENNEDY’s message? TIMMONS did not have any information on this point.

The Black proposal is now public and I presume we will have to reply fairly soon. It is not certain whether Pakistan has as yet sent a formal reply, but I learn from Pakistan Embassy source that President has been told that the proposal is acceptable and Pakistan will not press for meeting of Security Council pending Indian reply.

2. If we do not want to accept the proposal, as I assume we do not, and as a rejection would cause embarrassment not only with KENNEDY, but with Black, both of whom and particularly the latter are super-sensitive. I would repeat my advice that we send non-committal stalling letter saying we will reply definitively after new Government is formed. Letter should at some length describe our esteem for the President and our respect for Mr. Black, stress need for consultation in federal democracy and particularly with new Government of Jammu and Kashmir. It would probably be desirable not to give copy of reply to American Embassy before delivery to President in order to avoid premature communication of its contents.

3. In the time so gained, I suggest I be authorized to operate on Black and KENNEDY with objective of whittling down their proposal on grounds that I will have to manufacture as I go along. Withdrawal of the proposal will not obviously be possible for reason of prestige, but it might just be possible to get it so altered or weakened as to save us the embarrassment of an absolute rejection. If this is accepted grateful for guidance as to direction which you would like proposal altered.

Foreign Secretary From JHA

At a luncheon Partrick Dean (UK Representative at the UN) told me today that Zafrulla Khan was sending him another letter insisting on a meeting and that he may call a Council meeting on Wednesday. He felt that it would be awkward if Pakistan’s request addressed to him was not taken up during his period of Council President-ship but that he would of course consult Council members. To my question what the purpose of the Council meeting would be he said he could not say.

2. The reasons for this change and attempt to invest with urgency the matter that has remained quiescent for three weeks may be surmised as (1) green signal for meeting by United States after rejection by us of the Kennedy offer of Black’s good offices (2) decision by UK government not to let down Pakistan during Patrick Dean’s President-ship (3) reluctance of United States to call meeting during Stevenson’s President-ship in February: hence arrangement with Dean to call meeting on last day of this month.

3. Plimpton told me briefly of disappointment at our turning down their President’s offer. (Incidentally this seems known here though B.K. Nehru tells me that he would be handing over our reply tomorrow). I spoke with ZORIN LOUTFT and QUAIISON SACKEY of Ghana who were also present at same luncheon. They had not yet been consulted by DEAN. ZORIN said he fully appreciated our point of view and did not see need for a meeting now. He also did not see why Congo debate due to start on Tuesday should be shelved and interrupted by Kashmir debate.

4. Above is for present information. Shall telegraph again tomorrow after meeting PLIMPTON and some other member of Council

LETTER FROM THE PRIME MINISTER OF INDIA

New Delhi
27th January 1962

Dear Mr. President

Thank you for your letter of 16th January. I hope you will forgive me for the delay in answering it.

2. Both my colleagues in the Government and I have been heavily occupied with our election campaign. You will no doubt appreciate the burdens that these campaigns bring upon us. We have to tour about this large country and this is likely to continue during February. The Subject on which you wrote to me was of considerable importance to us and I did not wish to send an answer to you before I had consulted my colleagues as well as the Government of Jammu and Kashmir State and considered your suggestion fully in all its aspects.

3. I can well understand your deep concern over relations between India and Pakistan and I share that concern. Indeed, I may say that there are few questions which affect India more. We have lived with this problem for over 14 years always hoping that our differences would be solved and result in happier and more co-operative relations between India and Pakistan. Fortunately there is very little ill-will now existing between the peoples of the two countries. But on the Government level the friction continues.

4. We had earnestly hoped when we agreed to partition and creation of Pakistan as an independent sovereign state that this would result in friendly relations between the two countries. Because of our geography, history and common culture as well as many other interests which we have in common, it seemed natural that we should co-operate. We in India were absorbed in our national development and in securing higher standards for our people. We did not want to divert our energy and our resources to a conflict with Pakistan.

5. It was, therefore, our constant endeavour to eliminate causes of friction and misunderstanding between India and Pakistan and, despite occasional setbacks, we have pursued this objective consistently throughout these past 14 years. I must confess to you that we have been grievously disappointed at the attitude of Pakistan which has throughout been negative and agitational and have come to the conclusion that it is a basic policy of that country’s Government to hate India and to keep up the tensions that exist between our two countries. This I suppose, is a conscious continuation of the religious complex of the two-nation theory which we all hoped would disappear with the creation of Pakistan. We in India have refused to accept that theory as a basis of political activity because to do so would mean a denial of the nationalism for which we stood. Even now, after the partition, there are 50 million Muslims living in India and we cannot entertain any obscurantist political theory of religion as the basis of the state.

6. Kashmir is supposed to be the principal problem between us. I think that Kashmir is rather the resultant of that ill-will than the cause of it. However, we have tried to solve the Kashmir problem to the best of our ability but without success thus far. It seemed to me on more than one occasion that we came fairly near some approach to a solution, but then, the approaches we made, even at the risk of having to face strong resentment of our people, did not meet with adequate response. We have had the feeling that a certain measure of support that Pakistan got from other countries made it much more rigid in this matter.
7. The history of the conflict over Kashmir is a long and complicated one. But there are certain basic factors that have to be kept in view before we deal with this question. The United Nations and the Commission it appointed on Kashmir both proceeded on the basis that the sovereignty of the entire State vests with India; further that, as the Commission indicated, there had been aggression by Pakistan on Indian territory. The principle (principal) resolutions passed by the United Nations Commission proceeded on the basis of vacation of Pakistan aggression and this was to be followed by a political settlement. Pakistan aggression, however, continues and what is worse there is continuous trouble on the cease-fire line and hardly a few days pass without attempts on behalf of Pakistan to commit acts of sabotage in Kashmir. These are the basic facts.

8. During these past years the Jammu and Kashmir State has become an autonomous State of the Union of India. According to our Constitution the State has a large measure of autonomy with which we cannot interfere. Indeed it is stated in our constitution that no change in the Jammu and Kashmir State can take place without the approval of the elected Assembly of the State. The State has had two general elections since then under adult franchise and third election will take place soon in common with the rest of India.

9. We have been anxious to settle this question and have made repeated attempts to do so keeping in view our Constitution and basic position. We went to the Security Council of the United Nations with a request to resolve the situation created by Pakistan aggression. Since then various eminent people have been appointed by the Security Council to find a way out of the difficulties that faced us. They failed in this endeavour and we became convinced that third parties would not be able to give any effective help in resolving our differences. The only way to solve them was by direct talks between the two countries. This may not be an easy matter but it seemed to us the only possible way.

10. I therefore, entirely agree with you that patient discussions and negotiations and the continuing search for a possibility of accommodation are the only effective ways of reaching an amicable settlement. We are as anxious as you are Mr. President to avoid public debate and recrimination and exploitation of controversy for its own sake. We have exercised and will continue to exercise moderation and restraint in our utterances so as not to prejudice the atmosphere for direct negotiations. We hope that Pakistan will do likewise.

11. We have considered the suggestion made by you with the care and attention that the importance of the subject and the esteem and regard which we have for your views, require. We have the highest regard for Mr. Black's personal qualities and we are grateful to him for his keen interest in our development plans and the substantial contribution he made in resolving the Canal Waters question. There is no lack of confidence in Mr. Black, but we have certain doubts and misgivings about your proposal.

12. Ever since this proposal became public through some leakage in Karachi or Washington it has been severely criticized in India and even those who do not agree with our Government's policy on many things have not approved of it. Indeed it can be said without any doubt that the public reaction to this proposal in India has been overwhelmingly adverse. The idea of a third party’s intervention is strongly objected to and it is thought that such intervention will not be helpful. Indeed it might make matters worse. In view of the Past history of this case and the admitted aggression that took place on the part of Pakistan we feel that putting both parties on the same footing would be wrong. Even though Mr. Black’s good offices may be entirely informal this would be regarded as some kind of mediation or arbitration. Any such idea of mediation or arbitration would be strongly resented in India as past history has shown. I am convinced that the only effective way of arriving at a mutually satisfactory solution is to follow the method of direct negotiations and discussions. This method has produced results in the past and it is not too much to hope that it may be equally effective in regard to Kashmir.

13. A year and a half ago I invited President Ayub Khan to Delhi. I have again renewed that invitation. I hope he will be able to accept it. Any meeting or any other step will have to wait till the elections are over and a new Government has been formed in India. Ambassador Galbraith is in touch with us and we will gladly discuss with him any development that may arise and any avenue of fruitful negotiations that may offer itself.

14. I would like to thank you again Mr. President for your deep personal interest in matters that affect us so vitally. We are happy to have your understanding and sympathy.

With kind regards,

Yours sincerely,

Jawaharlal Nehru

Your 24341 was received Saturday afternoon. Substance of it was known to State Department before I received the telegram and was immediately communicated to the American Delegation to the United Nations and presumably to the President at Palm Beach. President came back this evening and I am delivering letter to him tomorrow. In the meantime the newspapers contain the substance of the letter datelined New Delhi and say that it was handed over to American Charge Affairs this morning. American practice is not to handover letters to Ambassadors here till they have been received by the addressee. Could we not also follow it to save this kind of embarrassment?

2. I spent two hours with Black last night and am reasonably certain that he will not take our rejection as rebuff to him. Had long session with TALBOTT today. His reaction is that if this method is unacceptable, some other capable of producing solution should be found. In the meantime he sees no possibility of avoiding Security Council debate; he thinks it would be better to have it out now than postpone it to a time nearer the foreign aid debate in Congress.

Foreign Secretary from Jha

My telegram No. 55 January 28th Kashmir. My talks virtually with PLIMPTON and YOST this morning confirm the suspicion that Americans have now decided that consequent on rejection of the KENNEDY offer there should be a meeting of Council as requested by Pakistan. PLIMPTON also spoke of a possible meeting on Wednesday. Pakistan’s letter to Security Council President was handed in at 4 p.m. with request for urgent meeting. Letter whose text separately telegraphed by INDUNIFO repeats SANJEEVA REDDY’s and Defence Minister’s statements and among other things alleges threat by India. Patrick Dean has not informed me but has fixed 1030 a.m. on Wednesday 31st January for the meeting.

2. PLIMPTON expressed “deepest regret” at our rejection of Kennedy offer adding that acceptance of Black’s good offices (not mediation or arbitration) would have done no harm and would have enabled avoidance of a Council meeting. I told him that Prime Minister’s reply had nothing to do with personality of Black who was highly respected, but we felt that direct talks had best chance of success without any kind of external presence or pressure. Our Prime Minister had already invited President Ayub Khan for talks in Delhi after the elections and that it was essential that these take place in a calm atmosphere. I impressed on PLIMPTON that if Security Council meeting was held in response to what appeared to us to be groundless request of Pakistan just to please them with possible non participation by India, the Security Council may be permanently prejudicing its role in the solution of this question. I further impressed on Yost that if Security Council chose to hold a … (More to Follow)

Kashmir

I delivered Prime Minister’s letter to President at usual most cordial and friendly and his pro-Indian bias apparent throughout.

2. He (along with roughly 30 officers of State Department) had already seen summary of letter telegraphed by American Embassy in Delhi. I began by saying that I had been asked particularly to assure him that we welcomed his continuing interest in this question; it was a matter of regret that we had not been able to accept this specific proposal that he had made. He said that he did not have the idea of proposing mediation or arbitration of this dispute. People were forever offering mediation or arbitration between the United States and Cuba or the United States and China; he could very well understand our objection to such proposals. What he had in mind was that a mere visit by Mr. Black would serve to reduce the temperature which had risen to fever pitch. He could have come back and reported to him that no solution was feasible. A few months would have passed and things would have cooled down.
3. I said I did not understand his reference to the temperature being at fever pitch. Nothing new had arisen in the Kashmir situation, so what was there to cool down? He said the Pakistani brought him a totally different story and were very excited about the situation. They had brought him a number of quotations from statements made by responsible Indians including the Congress President and the Defence Minister which they interpreted to mean that, heady with its victory in Goa, India was now ready to use force against Pakistan. They had also pointed out the heavy concentration of India troops along the Pakistan border. I said I was frankly not aware that this was in his mind at all. It was true that both the Congress President and the Defence Minister had made certain speeches, but this was election time and he could judge better than I what kind of speeches were made in a campaign. What was important was not the speeches but the resolution adopted by the Congress party and that made no mention of any use of force. Any suggestion that we intended to attack Pakistan or even to attack the Pakistan-held portion of Kashmir was pure rubbish.

4. He said he felt the Pakistanis really believed what they said. One immediate effect was that they wanted more arms. Ayub had recently written him two letters asking for more armament. The competitive armament of the two countries was being financed by the American tax-payer in one case directly and in the other indirectly. This was an incredible waste of resources and led to great difficulty in getting aid appropriations. I said I appreciated this position, but while I felt there was no practical possibility of getting an immediate settlement on Kashmir, I did not see why this waste of resources could not be eliminated irrespective of whether Kashmir was settled or not. Quite apart from our general non-aggressiveness and peacefulness—something which he had momentarily doubted—it was obvious that in Kashmir it was we who were in possession of the Valley which was the main cause of dispute. The Prime Minister had indicated to him that it would be possible to settle on the basis of the status quo. This being the situation what possible advantage was there for us to attack anybody to alter the status quo? It was only Pakistan who apparently wanted a change in the status quo badly enough to be willing to use force to achieve it. Its object in getting arms aid, as the President knew full well, was not to fight communism any more, than any body else was willing to fight communism, but to strengthen itself to be able to attack India in Kashmir. If he wanted the arms race to be stopped, all he had to do was to stop supplying arms to Pakistan.

5. He said that if BLACK had gone there he could perhaps have come back with a declaration that neither side was willing to settle this dispute by force. I said it was hardly necessary for BLACK to pay a visit for this purpose. Our policy was clear in this respect; we would not use force unless attacked. He asked whether we would be willing to say so either a letter to him or publicly. I said I thought so.

6. He wanted to know why I had said the solution of Kashmir was impossible. I said because apart from the legalities and moralities of the situation, it was now after 14 years emotionally and politically unthinkable for us to lose the Valley. I then gave him a lecture on the theory of the Secular State and the importance of the Valley to the maintenance of such a State.

7. He asked why Black’s visit, though it might have been fruitless, would have been harmful. I said because it would have produced unsettlement in a situation which we regard as settled. He asked whether the Prime Minister had formally renewed his invitation to Ayub or whether this was merely through the press. I said I did not know. He said that the Pakistanis alleged that no invitation had been received.

8. He left sorry the letter seemed to lock and bolt the door. Could we not have agreed to send him a reply saying that this proposal could not be considered till after the elections, that it was for the new Government to decide on what to do and a final reply would be sent after the elections. Did I think there was any possibility of this being done now? Would I revert to my Government with this proposal? I said I would confide in him and tell him that I had already made such a proposal. I had received an answer that the matter had been fully considered by Cabinet and by the Government of Jammu and Kashmir. He asked why my proposal had not been accepted. I said I was not told why; I could only guess that the Prime Minister, having known that this proposal would not be accepted even later on, felt he would have been lacking in candour if he had given any contrary impression. I did not think there was any point in my going back once again at this stage.

9. He said “where do we go from here”. He was concerned with the effect on Indo-American relations which the rejection by India of this proposal and its acceptance by Pakistan would necessarily involve. BLACK had a unique position in this country and the rejection of the proposal could be interpreted as a slur on him. He did not want the letter to be published at this stage though with thirty people having seen the summary of it, he doubted if it could be kept out of the press. The public had to be given a positive and not a negative image of India. What he suggested was that the Government of India should issue a statement in Delhi saying that it had been conveyed to President Kennedy that:

(a) We appreciated the initiative of the American President;

(b) We had full confidence in Mr. Black and appreciated the services rendered by him to India.
(c) We felt direct negotiations would be more conducive to results;
(d) an invitation had been issued to President Ayub to resume negotiations after the elections; and
(e) we would not use force to alter the status quo in Kashmir.

10. He asked whether I thought India would be willing to issue such a statement. I said I saw no reason why not. We agreed that I should say nothing to the press as I went out except that I had delivered a letter and we had discussed various matters at length. At his press conference tomorrow, he would try to hedge but he hoped that we could get out statement out in time for him to be able to quote it at the conference.

11. In conclusion, he remarked humorously that KEN the great friend of India and I the great friend of the United States would go down in history as having ruined Indo-American relations. It was unbelievable that Indo-American relations should be worse now with an Administration so completely sympathetic to India than they had been during the EISENHOWER – DULLES regime. I said the only thing that had really so far affected them was Goa; if Adlai Stevenson had not gone off the deep end as he did and given the cue to the American Press, Goa need not have had, the effect it did. Kashmir was now coming up and the effect on Indo-American relations would depend entirely on how the matter was handled vis-à-vis the public. He nodded in agreement and said that was why he was anxious for the kind of statement he had suggested;

12. I would earnestly recommend that a statement on the lines suggested in para 9 (with considerable embroidery of course) be immediately issued. (a) to (d) are contained in Prime Minister’s letter. (e) can be assumed to have been conveyed through me (Use of phrase “present intention” should be avoided). If Ayub has not been invited directly, could the invitation be “concretized” e.g. through Pak High Commissioner.

Continuation my immediately preceding telegram. Following are four quotations handed over by Pakistan Ambassador to President:

(1) REDDY: The head of India’s ruling Congress party pledged to “liberate” all of Kashmir from Pakistan. He said, India cannot accept the present cease fire line in Kashmir. “We hope that within a short time the (Indian) government will take steps to liberate that part of Kashmir (occupied by Pakistan)” (January 5, 1962)

(2) Menon: “For the time being there is no question of changing the agreed boundary between India and Pakistan” (January 2, 1962)

(3) Indian Government’s booklet ‘Kashmir and the United Nations’ says that India “cannot permit Pakistan to use her continuing aggression on Indian territory as ‘a jumping–off ground’ for further territorial claims or further territorial aggressions… India is prepared to be patient and tolerant and not resort to force to remove Pakistan aggression, but it is obvious that there is a limit to patience and tolerance.” (Note Similar statement by NEHRU prior to attack on Goa; “India’s patience has been exhausted” by what he called “provocations” by the Portuguese (December 12 1961)

(4) Nehru said his government “firmly intends to get Pakistani-Chinese – aggressions eliminated from Indian soil.” (January 22, 1962)

Foreign Secretary from Jha.

As a result of our strong protests against ex parte discussion of Kashmir question many members seem to have had second thoughts. Late last night meeting was not finally set for tomorrow. It will be held later this week probably Thursday afternoon.

At initiative of Ghana and UAR who have consulted President it has been suggested that after adoption of Agenda President would adjourn meeting to a future date convenient to both parties with following expression of consensus of members. “The Council having noted the apprehensions expressed in the communications from Governments of Pakistan and India appeals to both parties not to have recourse to any but peaceful means for the settlement of the dispute”. Neither Pakistan nor India would participate in meeting.

The suggestion was put to Zafrulla Khan and myself. I said I would refer it to you making clear to DEAN, QUAISON SACKEY and LOUTFI that this was without any kind of commitment whatsoever. I have impressed on DEAN that our opposition to Council meeting remained unchanged. I understand ZAFRULLA is also referring to his Government.
Council meeting seems unavoidable and I am told ZAFRULLA KHAN is determined to exploit opportunity for propaganda purposes. Therefore unless full participation is possible this week, postponement on agreed basis may be a good way out for the time being as that will at least prevent Pakistan from utilizing Security Council for anti Indian propaganda, and may be regarded as a slight setback for Pakistan.

Grateful for most immediate instructions. If you have any alternative suggestion kindly let me know.

Ambassador from Prime Minister.

Your telegram No.56 January 29 and 64 of January 30. Latter arrived this afternoon. I saw it in evening after my return from Jammu.

2. It is not clear to me how I could possibly have made a statement as suggested in your telegram before President’s Press Conference yesterday.

3. As for a statement now, it would be undignified for me to make a special statement on the eve of Security Council meeting. In fact, I have said all this before on various occasions. I can repeat much of it during my election speeches. I am going tomorrow morning on tour again to U.P., Andhra, Madras and Kerala returning 8th afternoon. I cannot very well say much about this to peasant audiences in U.P., but later I might have an opportunity.
4. This afternoon I spoke in Jammu and specially referred to our not using any force against Pakistan except in defence. I reminded audiences that many years ago and repeatedly thereafter I had suggested a “no war” declaration to Pakistan which they had refused. I had then stated that anyhow we shall not take any military steps against Pakistan unless we were attacked. We stand by that declaration.

5. Pakistan making much of some odd statements made by Ministers here and laying stress on concentrations of our forces on border is just bullying tactics to get more arms aid from U.S. In fact Pakistan has been deliberately encouraging sabotage in Kashmir and we have a number of statements by persons captured to this effect. However we will not use force to alter the statue quo in Kashmir.

6. As for concentration of troops on border the facts are that on the eve of Goa operation there were large scale manoeuvres by Pakistan forces near our border. We did not expect any attack by Pakistan but there was a risk especially because of relations between Pakistan and Portugal. We decided therefore to send some troops to the Punjab. These were not sent to the border itself but about 30-miles away. Since then we have ordered their withdrawal and most of them have already been withdrawn.

7. As for invitation to President Ayub Khan I repeated this to Pakistan Minister Akhtar Husain when he came here about two or three weeks ago and asked him to convey it to President Ayub Khan. We have also asked our High Commission in Karachi to do so. I have not written to President Ayub Khan about this or any other matter.

8. You can state quite clearly if necessity arises that we shall not use military forces against Pakistan except in case we are attacked. That is our definite policy repeatedly proclaimed.

9. We did not send copy of my letter to President KENNEDY to American Embassy here till two days after we had sent it to you. Information which President KENEDY had got about it previously was apparently from PTI (Press Trust of India) message which was largely based on intelligent conjecture.

10. There is absolutely no reason to imagine that temperature between India and Pakistan had risen to fever pitch. It is manifest that apart from other reasons, we are much too busy with our elections to think of getting entangled elsewhere. This is obvious Pakistan following its usual tactics and trying to get something out of the Security Council or American aid. Probably they are facing internal difficulties, especially in East Pakistan, which have resulted in arrest of Suhrawardy.

11. It is difficult for me to keep in touch with developments owing to election tours. Unfortunately Foreign Secretary is unwell.

2. Since 1959 the Chinese incursions in the north have complicated matters. If we go on announcing as we used to vis-à-vis Pakistan aggression in Kashmir that we will not use force to recover our territory and settle on the basis of the status quo the Chinese would claim the same treatment. It is for this reason that you find references to elimination of all aggression on our territory while at the same time emphasizing peaceful settlement consistent with India's basic policy and methods.

3. While Pakistan can flirt with China we have to deal with both and therefore announcement of our policy in terms which cannot be exploited by either.

Our replies to the four quotations are:

Sub paras (1) and (2) The important point is not what the individual leaders said but the resolution which the National Congress adopted on its foreign policy. This resolution states:

“The Congress considers that consistent with India’s basic policy and methods, the Government should seek all avenues of peaceful settlement and approves of the policy of the Government aimed at vacation of all aggression”.

(3) The quoted sentence which belongs to the last paragraph of the latest edition of “Kashmir and The United Nations” copies of which were sent to you by our X.P. Division sometime ago has been torn out of context. The “limit to patience etc.” refer to the sentence:

(4) The government policy of settling Indo-Pakistan disputes by discussions and negotiations and not by resort to force except when attacked has been repeatedly stated not only in Parliament and on floor of the Security Council by our representatives but also by our Prime Minister in almost every one of his public speeches. It is the policy of Government to secure the vacation of Pakistani-Chinese aggression on the Indian soil but by peaceful methods.

2. I regret I do not seem to have made clear what President suggested and I recommended. There is no question of any statement by Prime Minister or indeed any fresh Statement at all. The position is that President has written to Prime Minister and Prime Minister has replied, but neither side has formally and officially stated the results of this correspondence. Some statement on this has to be made. According to news here “official Spokesmen” have been making various statements about the correspondence, but nothing formal has been said. President at last week’s news conference –did make his proposal formally public. The question now is how the reply is to be made formally public.

3. TALBOT had drafted a short press release saying in effect that India had rejected the proposal. I toned it down, but President rejected even amended version on ground that it still would have very bad public relations effect. He suggested that publicity should come from Delhi and the statement issued should stress the points made in paragraph 9 of my No.64 dated January 30. This statement or press release or communiqué would merely say what the Prime Minister had said in reply to President and that was all. The President could here then confirm that he had received such a reply and that would end the matter.

4. At his press conference yesterday President was in fact asked a question on what the Prime Minister’s letter contained but he brushed it aside in the hope that a formal release on the lines suggested would be coming from India.

5. The whole point is not that we are being asked to do or even to say anything new. The President has merely suggested a form of publicity which he feels will cause the least possible harm to Indo-American relations. In order to make quite clear what I am recommending, I am sending a draft of a press-release in my immediately succeeding telegram.

6. I would earnestly request that prime Minister’s orders be obtained and the release made as soon as possible.

The President of the United States of America wrote a letter on ..... ..... to the Prime Minister enquiring whether he would be willing to agree to Mr. Black, President of the International Bank for Reconstruction & Development to explore with him and President Ayub the outlines and prospects for negotiations and discussions which might lead to a final resolution of the problem of Kashmir.

The Prime Minister replied to the President in a communication delivered by the Indian Ambassador to the United States on the 30th January. The Prime Minister, in his reply, made clear that he appreciated greatly the friendly interest of the President in seeking a solution for this problem. India had the greatest respect for and the fullest confidence in Mr. Black and was grateful to him for his keen interest in Indian development and the substantial contribution he had made in resolving the Indus Water dispute. The Government of India feels, however, that direct negotiations with Pakistan would, at this moment, be more conducive to results and the Prime Minister has, therefore, renewed his invitation to President Ayub Khan to discuss the subject of Kashmir after the Indian elections and the formation of a new Government. The Prime Minister has taken this opportunity to assure the President that India has no intention whatever of attempting to use force to alter the status quo in Kashmir.

Thank you for your 24351* dated February 3. Very long Indinfo enclair telegram just received.

2. Prime Minister’s speech does cover all the points and we will extract them and give them publicity. However this is not altogether the kind of statement I have been suggesting.

* Referred to in footnote to Document No. 2118
3. There has been certain correspondence between the President and the Prime Minister. No official release has been made by either Government in regard to its contents except for a brief reference by the President. It is desirable that such a formal official communiqué should be issued in order that (a) the minds of press and public which are now confused as a result of a number of “spokesmen” statements and election speeches should be cleared, (b) more importantly President should have an official document which he can use to quieten Congressional criticism. Furthermore the President has made a definite request that this should be done in order to help him to handle the situation here. Unless we can adduce very strong reasons to him why we are not willing to put out a communiqué of this kind, he is naturally liable to be further piqued at the rejection of a wholly innocuous procedural request.

4. As it is clear from the Prime Minister’s speech that he has no objection in substance to the issue of such a communiqué I would once again request you to issue it straightaway. Delay that has occurred so far does not matter, but further delay may very well complicate matters.

5. As far as the situation here is concerned, no further reference in Minister’s speeches to the Kennedy-Black episode will be necessary after the issue of the communiqué. In fact silence on it would be preferable in order to help whole matter to die down.

These are official summaries which you can handover to the State Department or to President KENNEDY as you may consider appropriate.

4. While we appreciate your anxiety to do whatever is possible to mend the fences of Indo-US relations I hope you will appreciate that we cannot go further than what has been mentioned in P.M’s speeches. We have our public opinion here too and there is the postponed debate in the Security Council. We cannot afford to compromise our position on the principles involved namely our sovereignty in Kashmir and Pakistan aggression and violation of that sovereignty.

5. Pakistanis know what they are doing and their main aim is blackmail U.S. and get more arms and also damage India in U.S. eyes so that the present anti-Indian atmosphere is fully exploited and results in diminution if not stoppage of aid to India. U.S. were not able to prevent the Pakistanis from taking up the Kashmir issue to the Security Council nor have they been able to prevent Pakistan from having a Security Council meeting though the debate has been postponed to March.
6. You will remember the EISENHOWER proposal in 1958 and the reply we gave at that time. No complications occurred then. Mischief occurred this time because of the deliberate lead by Karachi and Washington. We have played as far as we could go to prevent this damage. Also as P.M. told you in his telegram it is hardly dignified for us to be over-anxious and defensive in this matter when Pakistan has been so cussed and aggressive throughout and U.S. have not been able to restrain or curb them.

2121. SECRET

Record of the meeting between Commonwealth Secretary Y. D. Gundevia and the U. S. Ambassador.

New Delhi, March 7, 1962.

Ministry of External Affairs

The US Ambassador came over, on March 7, at my request, and we discussed Pakistan and the situation in Indo-China.

2. I began by telling Ambassador Galbraith that we had been informed by our Permanent Representative in New York that Pakistan was pressing for a discussion of the Kashmir issue before the Security Council, and this month's President had asked us when it would be convenient for us to have the discussion. I told Mr. Galbraith, briefly, what we had replied, namely that there was no threat to peace in this area, but if, despite this, the Security Council needs must discuss Kashmir, we would like the matter postponed to the last week of April.

3. Mr. Galbraith said that this was unfortunate. The United States did not want an acrimonious discussion in the Security Council. They had done their best to dissuade Pakistan, but they had not succeeded. Mr. Galbraith, it seemed to me, knew that Pakistan had turned down their suggestion that the matter should not be raised before the Security Council.
4. I told the Ambassador that if the matter was to go to the Security Council, we, naturally, must prepare for it and the first thing would be for us to know how our friends were likely to vote. There was still a chance that if the U.S. genuinely did not want a Security Council discussion, they could make it known that they would stay out and not vote on any resolution. This, in turn, would materially affect other votes; and if Pakistan knew that they were unlikely to get a majority for any substantial resolution, they would probably drop the idea. Mr. Galbraith said that the U.S. position would be that they stood by the previous resolutions of the Security Council on Kashmir. In other words, the U.S. was not prepared to abstain. This meant, I told the Ambassador, that there would be most probably, a majority vote on one side and a Soviet Veto on the other, just the situation which we are given to understand Washington is anxious to avoid. The Ambassador repeatedly assured me that they really were anxious to avoid all this coming about, but there was, according to him, a point beyond which they just could not “pressure” Pakistan. I told Mr. Galbraith that this meant that a discussion before the Security Council was as good as certain; we would still try, but we were not sure of a majority vote, because the Western permanent members might side with Pakistan; and if the majority went against us, in any sense, we might see the Soviet veto exercised on the Kashmir issue, which was avoided in the last discussion in February. I did not go beyond this, and refrained from discussing anything as to the type or kind of resolution that we might be prepared to accept before the Security Council.

5. For the rest, we talked about the Cease-Fire Line, with some modifications, as the possible solution— the only solution that we were seriously prepared to discuss with Pakistan, I repeatedly stressed. Mr. Galbraith said that there were some suggestions that the Chenab should be taken into account. I said, frankly, that I did not know what this suggestion really amounted to — and in any case, we could not entertain anything that savoured of a reopening of the Indus Wasters Treaty. The Ambassador asked me, and I told him briefly, about our High Commissioner having renewed the invitation to Ayub and Shri Rajeshwar Dayal’s talk with, both, the President and Manzur Qadir. I told the Ambassador that the invitation had neither been turned down by Ayub, nor had he laid down any conditions. Manzur Qadir had as good as admitted that the invitation had made matters awkward for them, when the issue was pending before the Security Council; but even so, the Foreign Minister had not turned down the proposition.

6. The Ambassador’s statement that the U.S. would stand by the previous resolutions of the Security Council on Kashmir, if the matter comes up for discussion in the Council, shows quite clearly that the State Department is not prepared to adopt a rational, realistic line. It is significant that F.S. told the American Ambassador on December 14, 1961, that the basis of UNCIP resolutions was completely outdated, and Mr. Galbraith appears to have gone back on what he told himself to P.M. recorded this in his minute dated January 9, 1962.

7. We finally turned to Indo-China—but on this I am recording a separate note.

2122. SECRET

Note recorded by Commonwealth Secretary Y. D. Gundevia on his meeting with U.S. Ambassador Galbraith and Ambassador B. K. Nehru on Kashmir.
New Delhi, March 8, 1962.
Ministry of External Affairs
I place below a note I have recorded on my talk with Ambassador Galbraith on March 7. On March 8, the next day, I have had a detailed discussion with Shri
B. K. Nehru, who is here on consultations.

2. There was some vague expectation that because Pakistan knew that her "allies" were not keen on Kashmir being agitated in the Security Council, particularly since there was a definite cooling off on the resentment over India’s action in Goa, Pakistan might not press for an early meeting of the Security Council. Our High Commissioner’s last letters on the subject suggest that our renewing the invitation to President Ayub, formally and officially, to visit India may have made matters just a little awkward for Pakistan. But judging by our Permanent Representative’s telegram No.104 dated March 5, Mr. Zafrullah Khan has already approached the month’s President of the Security Council for a renewal of the discussion of Kashmir. We have authorised our Permanent Representative to say that there is no threat to peace, but if, despite this, the Security Council must discuss Kashmir, we would like the matter postponed to the last week of April.
3. The Americans, Mr. Galbraith assured me, have done their best, but have failed, and Pakistan is bent on having Kashmir discussed by the Security Council. Ambassador Nehru definitely endorses the view that the Administration in Washington is unhappy that Kashmir should come up before the Security Council at a time when foreign aid — and aid to India, in the main — is to be discussed. They know that any acrimonious discussion in the Security Council, probably followed by a Soviet Veto in favour of India, will handicap them in their foreign aid programme. The Americans are, therefore, anxious that the discussions in the Security Council should generate as little heat as may be possible; and the end result should be something that everyone could accept, making the Soviet Veto unnecessary.

4. If the discussion in the Security Council cannot be avoided, I feel that we should do our best to give the discussion a fruitful direction. We have asked our P.R. in New York to inform the President that there is no threat to peace and to reiterate our desire to resolve the dispute by direct discussions. If the Security Council, after a brief discussion, did not go substantially beyond this, and the resolution more or less, only expressed a desire that India and Pakistan should attempt to resolve the dispute by mutual discussions, we need not object, as far as I can see. Shri B. K. Nehru is of the opinion that the United States might not be averse to some such line; and if they (USA) agree, we might even be able to get a unanimous resolution. Neither President Ayub nor Manzur Qadir have turned down our invitation. A resolution on the lines suggested above might save Pakistan's FACE. Pakistan could console itself with the idea that Kashmir was, once again, raised before the bar of the Security Council and they could tell the world that bilateral discussions with India were the result of Pakistan's anxiety to conform to the directives of the august UN body.

5. The Foreign Secretary, who has handled Kashmir till now, is leaving for Geneva for the Disarmament Conference on Monday, March 12. I would suggest that we - Shri B.K. Nehru, M.J. Desai and myself — might be permitted to discuss this question with the Prime Minister before the Foreign Secretary leaves for Geneva.

Extract from the Note recorded by Foreign Secretary M. J. Desai on his meeting on March 8, 1962 with U. S. Ambassador Galbraith and U. S. Ambassador in Nepal Stebbins at his residence.

New Delhi, March 8, 1962.

Ambassador Galbraith and the U. S. Ambassador in Nepal, Mr. Stebbins, were with me at my house from 7.30 PM till 9 PM on the evening of the 8th. Shri B. K. Nehru was also present. We talked about Nepal, Indo-China and Kashmir.

3. On Kashmir I asked Galbraith why the USA should not keep off completely as they had failed to persuade Pakistan not to re-agitate the question in the Security Council. I said that the logical attitude for the USA should be to tell Pakistan that they would abstain in the Security Council from any agitational move. Galbraith said that this was not easy in view of the past commitments and repeated what he had told C. S. about reiterating U. S. support to the old resolutions. I asked him which these resolutions were. He mentioned the two UNCIP resolutions accepted by India and Pakistan. I said that reiterating support to these resolutions was superfluous as both India and Pakistan had accepted these resolutions. The relevant point was that these resolutions cannot be implemented because Pakistan aggression still continues and status quo ante cannot be restored. I told him that the only rational thing is for the U. S. to take the attitude that in view of the last fourteen years history the only constructive step would be to ask the parties concerned to resolve the situation by direct negotiations. He said that he was not very familiar with the background of the Kashmir discussions during the last fourteen years and that the men who mattered in this case were Stevenson, the U. S. Permanent Representative, Plimpton his Deputy and perhaps Talbot, the Assistant Secretary of State. He said that our Permanent Representative, Jha’s relations with Stevenson were not quite cordial and suggested that we should arrange for direct talks in this question with Stevenson and Plimpton and press our point of view. He suggested that B. K. Nehru should do this. I told B. K. Nehru, after the American Ambassadors had left, that he could take up this matter with Stevenson and Plimpton and also with Talbot. He would not be interfering with Jha’s sphere of activity as he will be talking to the officials of the American administration.

4. The talks made it clear that Galbraith was not able to make any impact on the U. S. Administration as regards Kashmir. Ambassador B. K. Nehru will have to take this matter up and press our point of view at all levels of the American Administration. We will also have to ask our representatives in countries which are members of the Security Council to press on the Governments concerned the view that the only constructive step the Security Council can take is to sponsor a resolution requesting India and Pakistan to resolve the situation by direct negotiations.

From Commonwealth Secretary.

Kashmir

Our High Commissioner in Karachi has formally renewed our standing invitation to President Ayub Khan to visit India and discuss Kashmir and other problems. Matter was pressed further by High Commissioner with Pakistan Foreign Minister Manzur Qadir. Neither President nor Foreign Minister have turned down the invitation. And yet Pakistan has pressed President of Security Council for a meeting.
2. Our Permanent Representative has been authorised to inform the President that there is no threat to peace whatever either in Kashmir or anywhere else on border between India and Pakistan. We have been preoccupied with elections which have only just concluded. Our next immediate task is formation of new Government which we hope will be in office by the middle of April. We maintain that Kashmir issue can be resolved only by direct discussion between India and Pakistan. If despite this Security Council decides to discuss matter our Permanent Representative has been asked to press that meeting may not be held till last week of April.

3. We understand that USA is anxious to avoid any acrimonious discussion in Security Council which may come in way of their foreign aid programme and they would prefer direct India-Pakistan talks. It is admitted however that they are unable to pressure Pakistan and are therefore reconciled to a Security Council meeting. Some members of the Security Council though prepared to place the Kashmir question on the agenda would like to avoid a discussion on the substance of the item. Chile and USA take this view. Majority of the members would probably favour direct talks between Pakistan and India for a practical reasonable solution.

4. If the Council meets and eventually adopts a resolution calling upon India and Pakistan to attempt a solution by bilateral negotiations in a friendly atmosphere we would be prepared to accept not agree to any time limit in direct negotiations because Pakistan would then aim only at bringing about a failure of talks and rush the issue back to the Security Council. What is wanted is genuine desire for settlement and patient negotiations.

5. We would like you to discuss and explain our case on Kashmir fully to the foreign Office and try to secure USA/USSR/ France/Ireland/Chile/Venezuela/ UAR/Rumania/UK/Ghana's support for a solution on lines of Para 4 above. It should be emphasised that we maintain that our case is legally and morally strong and we are not afraid of a full and detailed discussion in the Security Council. We would however like to avoid this only because we know that Security Council cannot resolve the issue today if it has not been able to do this in 14 years past. An acrimonious discussion would only spoil the atmosphere and delay amicable solution by bilateral negotiations. You may make it clear, if asked, even at this stage that we are not prepared to consider plebiscite any longer as a possible solution for reasons given in Prime Minister's speech in Srinagar in July 1961. We have repeatedly stated that any major upset in the present conditions in the Jammu & Kashmir State would have far reaching and possibly disastrous consequences on both countries. Even apart from the possibility of a major conflict this would mean heightened tension and would make the position of the minorities in both countries very difficult. We have about 50 million Muslims in India. Also this would have a very serious effect on our Five Year Plans which would be completely upset, retarding our development schemes. It would have the same effect on Pakistan except that they have no major plans for development.

Reference your circular telegram 24653. In talks with American officials here and with U.K. High Commissioner we have the distinct impression that they are averse to a return to Security Council and would strongly favour bilateral talks on Kashmir. American correspondents from New York confirm this impression.

2. In my talk with Qadir I pointed the dichotomy between simultaneous Council approach and bilateral talks and I am meeting Qadir again tomorrow to continue the discussion. Please refer to paras 6 and 7 of my report of March 3 on the subject, CHESTER BOWLES and the U.S. Embassy here have also been advising the Pakistanis against a return to the Council (reference my report of March 5 on my talk with BOWLES).

3. While matters are still at delicate negotiating stage and influential members are themselves averse to a Council meeting, is it not premature to instruct our Missions on the lines of your para 4? We have not had a final reply from the Pakistanis yet and Council meeting during next few weeks seems most unlikely. Should we therefore not continue pressing for bilateral talks, with the assistance of U.S. and others and against Council meeting? Otherwise we should be subscribing to Pakistani position that “a reference to the Council does not preclude bilateral talks”.

4. Furthermore if Council were to meet, the initiative would pass from our hands and considerations of power politics would prevail and it would possibly be difficult to avoid an acrimonious debate. The resulting resolution could go far beyond what may be acceptable to us. It may lay down strict time limits and a system of periodical reporting back to the Council with consequential repeated debates on the points at issue. We should perhaps consider, in case a direct bilateral approach fails, whether it is more advantageous to have bilateral talks under the purview of the Security Council as envisaged in your para 4, or with the assistance of a single individual acting strictly as good officer and catalyst and sit not repeat not as mediation or arbitrator.

5. I would request that we await result of my talk with Qadir to ascertain Pak’s rock bottom position. Even then we should continue diplomatic efforts for strictly bilateral talks and only when and if Council meeting becomes inevitable, should we adopt the line envisaged in para 4.

6. Reference third sentence of your para 3 - The Kashmir question has been on the agenda since India submitted its complaint to the Security Council, and there is no question now of placing it on the agenda.

IMPORTANT

Commonwealth Secretary from Ambassador.

Your telegram No. 24653 dated 13th March, Kashmir. In the absence of Foreign Minister in Geneva saw Deputy Foreign Minister who because of earlier talks is familiar with our views, I stated reasons mentioned by you and he agreed to issue instructions to U.A.R. Representative in New York to

(a) support our request that Security Council meeting may not be held till last week of April

(b) while we are not afraid of full and detailed discussions an acrimonious debate on merits should be avoided

(c) to support a resolution for direct negotiations between India and Pakistan but without any time limit

(d) that all manoeuvres to drag in question of plebiscite should be opposed because plebiscite unacceptable to us under any circumstances.

2. Deputy Foreign Minister said that earlier instructions were broadly on the above lines except that (d) above was a new point. In this connection I reiterated position regarding repercussions on minorities in India and Pakistan and he agreed with our views adding before they agree to a plebiscite, they would wish to know if supporters of Pakistan would agree to a plebiscite in Palestine on basis of Arab majority and Jewish-minority in 1948. He added partition was British manoeuvre and conditions could not be restored to 1947 otherwise there would be no end to changes if we are to go back on history. His understanding was that people of Kashmir had already expressed their views more than once. He repeated that they saw support to Pakistan’s move as a part of Western policy to pressurise non-aligned countries as had been done in Ghana, U.A.R. Ceylon, Yugoslavia, etc. in order to weaken their position to pursue policy of non-alignment.

SECRET

Letter from the Commonwealth Secretary Y. D. Gundevia to all the Heads of Mission abroad.

New Delhi, March 24, 1962.

No. F.8(2)/61-KU.
New Delhi, the 24th March, 1962.

Government of India,
Ministry of External Affairs

My dear Ambassador/High Commissioner/Charge d’Affaires etc.,

Please refer to Sharma’s circular letter No.F.8/2/61-KU dated January 16, 1962, forwarding the Pakistan Governments letter dated January 11, addressed to the President of the Security Council, and our reply dated January 16. You doubtless know that the only result of the Security Council debate on February 1, 1962, was that “further consideration of the matter” was deferred until sometime after March 1. No date for a meeting has been fixed yet.

2. The Venezuelan President, this month, of the Security Council has been approached by the Pakistan’s Zafarullah Khan to fix a date for resumption of the Kashmir debate. It was, however, suggested that Pakistan was in no immediate hurry for the debate. Our Permanent Representative has been asked to inform the President that, as we stated in our reply to the Pakistan Government’s letter of January 11, there is no threat to peace, whatever, either in Kashmir or anywhere else on the border between India and Pakistan. We have been pre-occupied with elections which have only just concluded. Our next immediate task is the formation of a new Government, which we hope will be in office by the second week of April. We maintain that the Kashmir issue can be resolved only by direct discussions between India and Pakistan. If, despite all this, the Security Council decides to discuss Kashmir, our Permanent Representative has been asked to press, that a meeting may not be held till the last week of April by which time our new Government will have been installed in office...
3. There is some Pakistan inspired suggestion floating around that if they fail to get what they want in the Security Council, they will take the matter to the General Assembly. In view of the growing feeling among the member countries against an acrimonious debate in the Security Council, we doubt if Pakistan will be able to secure a majority vote in the Council for any move to transfer the item to the General Assembly under the Uniting for Peace resolution. Even otherwise, after Goa, Pakistan has lost some general support in Asian and African countries and we doubt whether they would like to test the Asian-African vote, in any sense in the General Assembly, on the Kashmir issue.

4. It is by now amply appreciated by even Pakistan’s friends, not excluding her Western Great Power “allies”, that Pakistan’s sole purpose in moving the Security Council in January, 1962, was to take what advantage she could of Western resentment against India’s action in Goa, Daman and Diu. However illegitimate the criticism, there certainly was a very strong feeling against India at the time in several Western countries, and Pakistan, could not resist the temptation to take advantage of this and raise the Kashmir issue before an international forum, in the expectation that on the crest of the wave of resentment against India she could pressure the Security Council into a resolution that would, at least, reiterate the old stand in the UNCIP resolutions of 1948/49 which envisaged a plebiscite as one of the methods of determining the wishes of the people - which Pakistan propaganda now calls “self-determination”.

5. Just at the wrong time we were also hampered by President Kennedy’s unfortunate suggestion that India and Pakistan might take the assistance of Mr. Eugene Black in resolving the issue. We have no doubts, whatever, in regard to the U.S. President’s bona fides, but we could not possibly accept the suggestion because we are opposed to mediation or arbitration, on principle. Such a proposal means acceptance of a third party sitting in judgement over the issue of our sovereignty, which can only complicate matters instead of assisting in a solution. It may be added that one of the reasons which led to this suggestion from the United States was the hope that this would keep the issue clear of a Security Council debate.

6. Pakistan propaganda is not confined to the Security Council countries. We have reliable information that they are conducting intensive anti-Indian propaganda in the Arab countries, in particular, and they are likely to intensify their propaganda in Asia-African countries also to say nothing of Western Europe and the Americas, where they have many friends and sympathisers. We are anxious, therefore, that you should now publicise our case on Kashmir as forcibly and systematically as possible, as near as possible on the lines of all that is stated in this letter.

7. We would like you to present to the Foreign Office the Aide Memoire, copy of which was sent to you by Sharma with his Secret letter No. F.8/2/61-KU dated January 15, 1962, and take vigorous steps to explain our case to the local Press. We would also like you not to let any inaccurate or objectionable statement in newspapers go unchallenged.

8. It should be emphasised that we maintain that our case is legally and morally strong and we are not afraid of a full and detailed discussion, whether in the Security Council or in the General Assembly. We would, however, like to avoid this only because we know that neither the Security Council nor the General Assembly can resolve the issue which has defied a solution during the past 14 years. An acrimonious discussion would only spoil the atmosphere and delay an amicable solution by bilateral negotiations, and no encouragement should therefore, be given by our friends to Pakistan’s agitational approach before the Security Council.

9. The Prime Minister’s offer of acceptance of things as they are in Kashmir, with minor modification by negotiation, which he made at his Press Conference on December 28, last, is the only practicable and reasonable solution of the problem. In explaining this in our publicity and propaganda, we should put stress on the following points:

(a) We have gone very far out to find a solution for this trouble, when our legal claim to the whole of Kashmir is fully justified. This is also a tribute to our genuine desire for creating friendly and peaceful relations between India and Pakistan.

(b) In view of the well-known experience over Berubari, it is not going to be easy for Government to persuade the country and the Parliament to accept the Cease-Fire Line as an international boundary between India and West Pakistan; Public opinion in India is very sensitive on Kashmir and opposition parties like the P.S.P. and Jan Sangh would strongly oppose such a proposal.

(c) The National Conference which is the largest political party in the State and which holds the reins of office, has adopted a number of resolutions calling upon the Government of India to bring about the vacation of Pakistan aggression and recover the territory unlawfully occupied by Pakistan.

(d) Plebiscite is no longer a possible solution for reasons given in Prime Minister’s speech in Srinagar on July 19, 1961, copies of which, were supplied to you by our X.P. Division.

(e) Pakistan knows full well that the responsibility for bringing about a plebiscite rested wholly with Pakistan and not with India. A plebiscite was possible only after her troops had been withdrawn from Jammu & Kashmir; and her patent failure in this regard for 14 long years convicts Pakistan for having permanently defeated the chance of settling the problem in the manner contemplated by the Security Council in 1948-49. The realisation of this is obviously reflected even in some of the statements made by the President and Foreign Minister of Pakistan, although this may not be explicitly admitted by them.

President Ayub told a special correspondent of New York Herald Tribune: “If we are shown any other sensible suggestion (other than plebiscite) we are ready to look at it”.

(Pakistan Times, March 31, 1960)

Talking to newsmen at Dacca, President Ayub said: “If there were any other solution which could reasonably satisfy the three contestants - ourselves, India and Kashmir - we would be prepared to listen”.

(Morning News, Dacca, March 23, 1961)

In an interview with the correspondent of the Hindustan Times in Rawalpindi, the Pakistan Foreign Minister, Mr. Manzur Qadir, said that the onus of suggesting an alternative solution lay with India”.

(Hindustan Times, New Delhi, August 31, 1961)

“In this context Dr. Raghuvira added, the Pakistan President categorically told him that Pakistan did not now insist on plebiscite in Jammu and Kashmir to settle the Kashmir dispute. President Ayub felt that any alternative solution could be found by mutual negotiations. He was ready for any settlement or any device which would save the faces of both the parties to the dispute”.

(Dr. Raghuvira giving his impressions of two-day talks with President Ayub, Indian Express, July 1, 1960)

Both Jarring and Graham admitted the changed circumstances and the impossibility of restoring status quo ante which obtained before raiders from Pakistan and the Pakistan army committed aggression in Kashmir, and without a status quo ante there can be no going back to the UNCIP resolutions. Thus Jarring in 1967 said:

“On exploring this question of a plebiscite I was aware of the grave problems that might arise in connection with and as a result of a plebiscite”.

“In dealing with the problem under discussion as extensively as I have during the period just ended, I could not fail to take note of the concern expressed in connection with the changing political, economic and strategic factors surrounding the whole of the Kashmir question, together with the changing pattern of power relations in West and South Asia. The Council will, furthermore, be aware of the fact that the implementation of international agreements of an ad hoc character, which has not been achieved fairly speedily, may become progressively more difficult because the situation with which they were to cope has tended to change."

Graham also said in his report dated March 28, 1558:

“Whether the United Nations Representative would be able to reconstitute the status quo which had obtained some ten years ago, would seem to be doubtful”,

(g) We have repeatedly stated that any major upset in the present conditions in the Jammu & Kashmir State would have far reaching and possibly disastrous consequences for both countries. It would be madness to revive post partition days. Even apart from the possibility of a major conflict, this would mean heightened tension and would make the position of minorities in both countries very difficult. We have about 50 million Muslims in India. Any upheaval of this nature would have a very serious effect on our Five Year Plans which would be completely upset, retarding all economic development in the country. It would have the same effect on Pakistan except that they have no major plans for development.

(h) Pakistan admitted having committed aggression against Kashmir, agreed to vacate it, has refused to do so for 14 years, and still poses as the aggrieved party!

10. We have already sent you enough material to back our case. Copies of the revised version of “Salient Aspects of the Kashmir Situation” which is really the Aide Memoire, are also being sent to you by the External Publicity Division so that you can project our point of view effectively in the local Press and other media of information.

Yours Sincerely

My Dear B.K.

Will you please refer to Chatterjee’s letter No.488 dated March 21, on his talk with Talbot? If Talbot is pro-Pakistan and tries to sell Aziz Ahmed’s ideas about two trusted and level-headed negotiators, etc., there is, of course, a double danger. Aziz Ahmed appears to have made himself remarkably obnoxious to our Embassy in Washington. Can people like Talbot seriously look on him and his type as “level-headed negotiators”, really? The 1953 negotiations on our talks between Aziz Ahmed and M.J. Desai had led to nothing. The reference to 1953 is dangerous in itself, because it is obviously intended to take us back to the complications of demilitarization in Kashmir, which today can be nothing but a web of a strife discussion on the character and quantum of forces in Kashmir and an eventual “plebiscite”, etc. I look upon Talbot’s reference to 1953 only as further proof that the State Department is still seriously thinking in terms of negotiations leading to a “plebiscite”, which is, typically, Pakistan’s point of view. Galbraith has also told us, as you know, that they would like to stand by the UNCIP Resolution. We want bilateral talks, certainly, but we also want the Americans to accept gradually if not immediately – that the discussions must eventually lead to a settlement along the present ceasefire line, with necessary modifications. We will have to keep preaching this to the Administrations, consistently and patiently.

2. I am showing Chatterjee’s letter to the Foreign Secretary, since the last paragraph talks about China.

Yours sincerely,

KASHMIR

Had lengthy discussion with TALBOT yesterday in regard to U.S. attitude in Security Council. He was non-committal saying that U.S. had not yet made up this mind, but was bound by the record of the UNCIP resolutions. They did not yet know what Pakistan wanted, but ultimately he presumed that U.S. would support a resolution either asking for the bringing up to date of the GHAHAM report or perhaps asking the parties to negotiate directly in terms of the resolutions and report back to the Security Council say in three months.

2. I said that I should like to analyse the situation as I saw it in non-governmental non-diplomatic real politik terms. It was a fundamental basis of our policy that no resolution would be acceptable to us if it led to a possibility or the loss of the Valley or which might give rise to a feeling that this might ultimately result. I did not wish for the moment argue about the legalities and moralities of this position (though I ultimately did in regard to the latter) but suggested that it would be wise to formulate U.S. policies in the light of this central and unalterable fact.

3. The second factor in the situation was that though we had not specifically consulted the Soviets on the issue we had reason to believe from the past history of the case and Soviet policy in regard to this matter that any resolution unacceptable to us would be vetoed by them. We might then have a repetition of Goa with the Soviets as our friends and the United States as our enemies. Furthermore, it was not even certain from the soundings we had made that a resolution unacceptable to us would even get the requisite seven votes.
4. In the light of our basic political attitude, resolutions of the kind he had suggested would not be acceptable to us. The first would involve a reopening of the question, and lead to unsettlement; the second would mean a periodic public ventilation of the case and would only acerbate the dispute. It was certain that the Security Council could not find a solution for this problem and there was therefore no point in continuing repeatedly to discuss it. If a solution was at all possible (which I personally doubted as long as both Pakistan's and our minimum terms were the possession of the Valley) it could only be through bilateral talks. The only resolution we could, therefore accept would be to ask the parties to talk bilaterally but without any time-limit and without any reporting to the Security Council. The resolution could, if necessary contain some reference to the previous resolutions on the subject.

5. TALBOT said he did not quite agree that the Soviets would veto just any resolution unacceptable to us. The history of the Arab – Israeli dispute in which they were firmly committed to the Arabs did not bear out this contention. Our offer of talks at the summit not really meaningful because no agreement would really be reached unless there had been a great deal of preparation. Our view could be either that the problem was obsolescent and therefore if we did nothing about it, it would become obsolete, in which case clearly we would attempt to do nothing about it. Or alternatively we could take the view (as the United States did) that it would not be forgotten for a very long time and if so we might be prepared to pay a price for a settlement. I said I did not understand where the question of price came in. If the Pakistani's were prepared to settle on the basis of our possession of the Valley that was that and no further question would arise. He said that it might well be that Pakistani would be prepared to forego the Valley but Ayub would have to show some appreciable territorial and other gains which he could set off against such a major loss. The Prime minister had spoken of minor adjustments of the cease fire line; what was minor and major was a question of viewpoint. He felt that Pakistan would be willing to let us keep the Valley provided that we gave them (a) the whole of Poonch and made certain other territorial adjustments, (b) assurances about the non-diversion of the waters of the Chenab and (c) access to the Valley. I asked him on what basis he made this statement. He said he had several Indications including BARBARA WARD's talk with MANZUR QADIR (which I mentioned to the Prime Minister in Delhi)

6. If we were prepared to accept a settlement on the general lines he had outlined, he felt that direct talks between the parties would be meaningful. It was obvious that neither the Pakistanis nor ourselves would go into the talks on the basis that they would give up the valley and we would make other concessions but this position could soon develop.

7. I did not specifically ask him what this had to do with the Security Council resolution — we have agreed to meet again — but it seems obvious that if we can assure the Americans that we are willing to open negotiations within these terms of reference, they would be easier in their consciences in supporting a resolution directing the parties to negotiate bilaterally.

8. I would be grateful for your reactions. Personally I would feel that if the Pakistanis are willing to talk, bilaterally on this basis (about which I have grave doubts) we, should indicate to the Americans that we would also be so willing without of course any commitment at all about the concessions we might be prepared to make.

9. Please also refer to Chatterjee’s letter No.488 dated 21st March.

Your telegram No.202 dated April 6 regarding Kashmir.

As the Pakistanis have insisted on debate in the Security Council there can be no question at this stage of bilateral talks between India and Pakistan on the lines on which these talks can be started. In the Council if there is any debate on the merits of the case, we will insist on the position of aggression on the basis of Indian sovereignty over Kashmir flowing from accession. You might make this clear to TALBOT.

We will not undertake Ministerial talks with Pakistan either at the behest of the Security Council or on American recommendation. The only recommendation of the Security Council acceptable to us would be a final decision by the Council to leave the matter to the two parties for direct settlement without any condition as to reporting back to Security Council etc. We would like to settle this question by direct negotiation but the timing and method will be of our own choice. There is no need to discuss this matter with Americans or others. It is the interest taken by third parties that has made settlement difficult all these years.

Letter from the Commonwealth Secretary Y. D. Gundevia to Ambassador in the US B. K. Nehru.

New Delhi, April 11, 1962.

Ministry of External Affairs
New Delhi.

No.T231-CS/62 April 11, 1962

My dear B.K.

Galbraith called on us, later in the day, on April 9. The Foreign Secretary and I, both, talked to him together on Kashmir. He could not, of course, improve on anything that you had reported in your telegram No.202 of April 6, which we had received over the weekend — which had distressed us considerably — distressed me, I will say, because I was still hoping against hope that you and Galbraith might be able to persuade the State Department to be more helpful.

2. Galbraith talked very little about Kashmir. He said that they stood by the UNCIP Resolutions. We told him that this was quite unhelpful, because as we had told him before, there could now be no settlement except on the cease-fire line, with minor modifications, here and there. I kept stressing that it was a pity that the Americans did not realize that this was the only solution. We could not possibly go back to the UNCIP 1948 stories, because, among other things, there could be no restoration of the status quo ante. Any talks with Pakistan on the old resolutions would be a repetition of the 1953 discussions between Aziz Ahmed and M.J. Desai, which had led to nothing. We put it in parenthesis that Aziz Ahmed, the present Ambassador of Pakistan in the United States was not a party we would like to deal with. We did not refer to your talk with Talbot, since Galbraith did not mention anything about this, though he must have been informed.

3. Your discussions with Talbot—your telegram of April 6—is disappointing in several ways. We were very anxious to press on with bilateral talks earlier in March, and that was why we had instructed Rajeshwar Dayal to renew the invitation to Ayub and see if, as a preliminary, they wanted talks at some “lower level”, Ministerial or official level, before the so-called ‘summit’. Then came Pakistan’s demand in New York for the meeting of the Security Council. You were here when the matter was discussed with the Prime Minister, and I sent out, the next day, my circular telegram No. 24653 dated March 13. We have since then all along felt that if there is to be a discussion, soon, before the Security Council, there can be no bilateral talks. Secondly, it is basic that, whenever there are bilateral talks, we will not barter anything substantial and we will accept only, minor modifications of the present cease fire line. As the Prime Minister has stressed, even this is not going to be easy for us. I find it difficult to understand why you should have, at this stage, when a debate in the Security Council is as good as certain, entered into detailed arguments with Talbot who you know to be pro-Pakistani in every respect. If Talbot or any important American is prepared to sell the cease-fire line to the Pakistanis, I would very much welcome talking to him. If that is not to be, then the Americans cannot help us and anything that they do would only hinder us. Does Talbot really think that we can think in terms of (a), (b) and (c) in para 5 of your telegram of April 6 as against the Prime Minister’s offer of minor adjustments of the Cease-fire Line. I told Galbraith in the course of this talk on April 9 that our friends must understand that Pakistan invaded Kashmir; We went in to defend Kashmir, after Kashmir had acceded to India, with complete legitimacy; and we had beaten the Pakistan armies back to nearly the Pakistan borders; and if the President of Pakistan, today, is an Army General, he ought to understand the meaning of this better than anyone else. We are prepared to step back (and step forward also) a mile or two, here and there. It is the Cease-fire Line or nothing. And, as we have told Galbraith more than once, this offer is not going to be open for ever with China perhaps wanting to talk. I cannot help feeling that unless we take a very firm line with Mr. Talbot and his friends, we will get nowhere on Kashmir with the Administration.

4. In the next meeting of the Security Council we want the Great Powers to keep their hands off Kashmir, as far as possible. I am sorry that your telegram referred to above has given the impression here that America is not going to be very helpful. The matter has been discussed, again, over the weekend with the Prime Minister who, as you know, was somewhat unwell, earlier in the week, and the Prime Minister has decided that the Defence Minister will go for the Security Council meetings. We do not want an acrimonious debate, but we have told Galbraith that the tone of the debate will depend upon what Pakistan’s Zaffarullah Khan has to say, to begin with, at least.

With kind regards.

Yours Sincerely,

Commonwealth Secretary from Rasgotra.

I met CHAUNCEY PARKER, STEVENSON’s Principal Adviser on Kashmir, yesterday morning at his request. He said AZIZ AHMED and ZAFRULLA KHAN were seeing DEAN RUSK later that day. Pakistan, he said, was pressing for public enunciation of view United States will take in Security Council of Kashmir issue. I have requested Minister, Indembassy, Washington, to get whatever information can be had covering this demarche. He had been asked to find out our views on kind of resolution that Council should adopt. I said resolution stage was yet far, that matter could profitably be discussed only after our delegation’s arrival, and that I could not give any firm indication far less make any commitment in Ambassador JHA’s absence. He seemed to want to talk about Kashmir, and I let him do most of the talking. I did not want him to misconstrue complete reticence as acquiescence in his line of reasoning, and added my personal comments here and there.

2. He mentioned STEVENSON’s anxiety to avoid acrimonious debate that could only, lead to a freezing of positions of India and Pakistan, and his view that Council is, in fact, “a complicating factor”. United States delegation felt, he said, that early introduction of resolution agreeable to both sides would help smooth discussion. I pointed out that Pakistan’s contention in reviving issue in Council in January was her “apprehension” of imminent threat from India, which time had belied, that there was then and there is now no threat to Pakistan, and that Council could simply take note of that and of our proclaimed desire for direct settlement through bilateral negotiations.

3. Plebiscite, PARKER agreed, was out of the question and Council would do well to steer clear of that. I said the best Council can do is to leave matter to the two parties for direct settlement. He felt eventually, settlement would have to be reached by parties between themselves.

4. He emphasized, however, that Pakistan wanted either “updating” of GRAHAM Report or introduction of some, other third element into negotiations. I suggested that revival of GRAHAM’s proposals could serve no purpose except provide opportunities for periodic reporting followed by agitation in Council, and that conclusion of GRAHAM’s last report itself was that parties should talk between themselves. He agreed, but specifically suggested that Council should urge (a) bilateral negotiations—possibly without time limit and (b) agreement of parties “there and then (meaning in the Council) to a third person like EUGENE BLACK who will help lay down framework of talks”. He did not respond to question whether this is what United States intends to propose, but expressed his delegation’s anxiety, to find a basis for talks: framework suggested by Prime Minister— “ceasefire line with minor adjustments here and there” (his words) not being acceptable to Pakistan.

5. I said framework for talks could also appropriately be a matter for direct talks. I made clear our opposition to time limit or any other conditions concerning talks and added that (b) Would amount to arbitration or mediation — both not acceptable to India. Besides, I pointed to undesirability of seeking Council’s approval of a proposal which had earlier failed to find our acceptance for reasons which were made clear and had received some

6. To convey (b), I think was central purpose of PARKER’s visit, and I feel Americana might attempt push third party “like BLACK” into picture though PARKER acknowledged futility of pressing a resolution unacceptable to either side. On the other hand, PARKER referred to a developing optimism and conviction in State Department concerning usefulness of a third party role in difficult situations of this character. He had in mind, he said, the analogy of current Dutch-Indonesian negotiations with which Secretary General was also associated though as somewhat distant but interested observer.

7. Referring to negative contribution of McNAUGHTON, DIXON and GRAHAM, I said our experience with Pakistan did not give rise to any optimism as to a third party role. The whole of Kashmir question revolved round two central facts Pakistan’s aggression and India’s unquestioned sovereignty over whole of Kashmir State. Third parties usually, shied away from open recognition and statement of first, and they were not competent to throw about suggestions prejudicing Indians sovereign rights. Insistence on introduction of third element might prejudice prospects of talks if Pakistan could be brought about to talk at all. PARKER said it was difficult for United States to ignore Pakistan’s wishes or point of view altogether.

8. He then commented on political inadvisability of India “relying or being made to rely” on Soviet veto. I said whether a resolution was vetoed or not was not, perhaps, the most relevant consideration — not at this stage at any rate: the principal facts to be borne in mind were that resolutions transgressing India’s just position and unacceptable to her had remained ineffective; and secondly, inclination to give Pakistan a sense of some ‘victory’ in Council to carry home did not appear conducive to promoting sense of realism which alone could lead to direct settlement.

9. PARKAR concluded his delegation wanted to understand what in our view the “limitations of the case” were. I repeated matter should be discussed more profitably at proper level in a few days time. I made no commitment, but trust I gave him a clear idea of “limitations” in a rather informal way Content of para 4 seems significant indication of American thinking, and thought I should report to you immediately.

Possibility of purchasing suitable planes for the IAF to meet minimum defence requirement in the context of China’s aggressiveness, and Pakistani hostility is being explored with several countries including the USSR.
2. We want to buy planes most suitable for our defence needs and at lowest cost and want quick deliveries and adequate spares at reasonable prices. We also want this purchase arrangement to be coupled with arrangements for local manufacture in India to reduce our dependency on foreign supplies as we have had and are still having a lot of trouble in securing spare parts and necessary equipments for our earlier purchases e.g. Canberras.

3. Exploratory enquiries with various countries are going on. No decision has however yet been taken about type of planes and the country from which they are to be purchased.

4. We have always maintained that we will buy our defence requirements wherever we can secure the type of equipment we want on the most favourable terms. We have so far been buying the bulk of our defence requirements from Western countries. This however has not made slightest difference to our policy of strict non alignment. Nor will purchase from the Eastern countries, should this be necessary purely on the basis of getting the best value, make any difference to our policy of strict non-alignment.

Aeroplanes.

Thanks your 24403 May 7. One question being raised here is why if we want best equipment at lowest cost with quick deliveries and adequate spares linked with manufacturing arrangements we have not explored possibility of these terms being available in the United States. I presume there is some policy decision against such purchases here. Grateful to know if this is so and reasons therefore with indication of what I can say publicly in regard to the noticeable exclusion of the United States from our exploratory activities.

2. As you are aware, purchase of MIGs from Soviet Union is capable of having far reaching reaction here. It is desirable, therefore, that we should be able to give some satisfactory explanation for omission of United States.

3. As you are also aware meeting of Consortium to finance second year of Third Five Year plan will take place on May 29. This is going to be difficult in view of European intransigence as well as present situation in United States Congress which is reflected in success of SYMINGTON’s move. It would not help if an announcement were made regarding MIG purchases before the Consortium meeting. If we are in fact buying these planes, announcement of deal should be held up till well after 29th May.

Your telegram No.287 May 14th about aircraft.

The Ministry of Defence has been considering purchase and manufacture of aircraft for some months past. They consider that such purchase is essential to avoid a big gap and in view of position both on Pakistan - India border and India - China border. They went into Lockheed offer in great detail. Also other possibilities. Ultimately they came to the conclusion that the only three possibilities to be considered were Lockheed French Mirage and Soviet MIG latest type.

2. These three were than considered from various points of view. From the point of view of performance they were considered about equals. But from other points of view MIG was found more suitable by our Air Force engineers. Lockheed was a very sophisticated and complicated plane whose manufacture in India is exceedingly difficult because our technicians are not used to such complicated processes. Mirage also was rather complicated. MIG was simple in design and relatively easy to manufacture. It can be used on ordinary air fields, while others require special type of air strip.

3. Also availability of MIG is greater. We can get it much sooner together with adequate supply of spare parts. Price of MIG is about one third of Lockheed and it can be paid for according to agreement with Soviets in rupees. There are other aspects too which favour MIG and make it a much easy proposition for us.

4. There is no policy or other decision against purchase in United States. In fact purchases are being often made there. But after full enquiry and consideration by our engineers and experts their report is in favour of MIGs.

5. However no decision has been taken in regard to this matter. Further consideration has been postponed until after Prime Minister returns from his visit to Kashmir where he is going tomorrow morning for about 12 days. Probably matter will be considered sometime in June.

SECRET
Record of the meeting between Foreign Secretary and U.S.
Ambassador.
New Delhi, May 18, 1962.
The US Ambassador saw me yesterday at lunch time,
2. He said that he had been called to Washington for consultations. This was mainly in connection with the assistance required by the Administration in dealing with the Indian Aid Bill in the Senate Foreign Relations’ Committee. He said that the Administration were doing their best to reverse the previous snap vote and he will lend a hand in getting a majority for the Aid Bill as proposed by the Administration.
3. The Ambassador mentioned incidentally that he hoped that the proposed purchase of MIGs by India will not be announced during the period he was in Washington as that would make a lot of trouble for him and the Administration with the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. I told the Ambassador that this matter is being considered purely on the basis of the price factor, early availability, adequate spare parts and starting of manufacture in India. I also said that it did not appear to us to be a bad idea to purchase MIGs for defence needs to meet possible danger from China in case the Chinese precipitated a clash. The Ambassador said that the top level of the Administration including the President agreed with him that purchase of MIGs will not have the slightest effect on India’s foreign policy just as the earlier purchase of Canberras did not create any pro-British bias in India’s policy. The bulk of the uninformed public opinion in the USA, however, would not appreciate this point and the opposition members of the Senate would exploit this to the disadvantage of the Administration and of India. I told the Ambassador that no decision had been taken in this matter and as Prime Minister had gone for 10 days or so to Kashmir for rest, the matter will be considered sometime in June. There was, therefore, no possibility of announcement of the decision in this matter being made within the next 2-3 weeks in any case.
4. * * * * * * * * *
(there was some discussion on Vietnam)
5. The Ambassador said that the reports in the Indian press that the United.
States had yielded to Pakistan pressure and were responsible for the Pakistan move to reagitate the Kashmir question in the Security Council were factually correct. He said that they are taking no initiative in this matter. They do not want a meeting of the Security Council themselves. If Pakistan and others want a meeting, it is difficult for them to resist. He said that Pakistan was misbehaving and flirting with the opposition in America to embarrass the Administrator. Pakistan will soon find out that this policy is wrong and will create a further strain in Pakistan - American relations. I told him in this connection that we do not see what a meeting of the Security Council can do now as the whole question of Kashmir has been debated fully. We would like the Americans to oppose a meeting of the Security Council. The Ambassador said that they could not oppose such a move if the others want it, but they themselves do not want a meeting. I told the Ambassador that they could at least say that there is no need for an early meeting and support the position being taken by India with all members of the Security Council that if there has to be a meeting it should not be earlier than the end of June. The Ambassador said that he will tell his people to support this move and will give his personal support to this proposal when he reaches Washington in a few days.

Extracts from the Note of the Foreign Secretary on his meeting with the U. S. Ambassador on 18 May 1962.

New Delhi, May 18, 1962.

Ministry of External Affairs

Ambassador Galbraith saw me at my house yesterday evening at 8 p.m. He left for Washington by the midnight plane yesterday.

2.  This related to developments in Southeast Asia.

3.  The Ambassador asked what he could do while in Washington about Kashmir and the Security Council. I repeated what I had told him two days back, i.e., our position that there is no need for a Security Council meeting as the question had been debated fully and that, in any case, if there; has to be a meeting, it should be in the last week of June as we cannot make arrangements for adequate representation at the Security Council meeting before the last week of June in view of the Budget session, of Parliament which does not end till 3rd week of June. The Ambassador said that he will press this point in Washington.

4.  The Ambassador then asked what our attitude would be to some sort of a resolution by the Security Council. He added that several drafts of resolutions were floating round though the American Administration had neither initiated any of these nor promised support to any of these. He said that he was quite clear that any sort of mediation was not acceptable to India. He asked whether some resolution instructing the Secretary General of the UN to make appropriate arrangements for direct discussions of the Kashmir question between India and Pakistan would be acceptable to us. I told the Ambassador that we see no need for any Security Council resolution as there is a categorical statement from India that the avenue of direct discussions between India and Pakistan was still open. Any sort of good offices by a third party, whether it is the Secretary General of the UN or anybody else will be exploited by Pakistan for propaganda purposes and we would categorically oppose any such move. I told him that we were fed up with this constant pressure on us to satisfy the Pakistan’s propaganda moves. We had not only renewed our invitation to Pakistan but reiterated this invitation in clear terms in our letter to the Security Council in January. Pakistan still wanted the propaganda debate and had the satisfaction of getting this debate. The Americans should realize now what Pakistani objectives are and clearly tell the Pakistan Government that they will not support any propagandist resolution in the Security Council. The Ambassador said that he entirely agreed that Pakistan had misbehaved and was working not only against India but against the American Administration. He however felt that some sort of resolution may have to be put up to wind up the Security Council debate on Kashmir. I said that any resolution which referred to good offices of a third party, Secretary-General of the UN or any other, or which said something about reporting back to the Security Council will be categorically opposed by India.

5. During the last six months, the situation had changed materially. Pakistan and China had combined to put pressure on India by threatening aggressive moves of various kinds. Not only was there this agreement about negotiating a boundary agreement but the announcement of this agreement on 3rd May, the threat in Zafrullah’s statement of 28th April and in China’s note of 30th April showed how combined pressure and aggressive moves against India were carefully synchronized by Pakistan and China during the week when Security Council was discussing Kashmir. It was impossible for us to show any kind of accommodation now as the two aggressors had already combined. I said that we might as a last resort acquiesce in though not accept some resolution which merely says that the matter should be discussed and settled direct between the parties in accordance with the UN Charter. There should, however, be no provision of any kind for a third party’s good offices or for reporting back to the Security Council. In brief, the only resolution with which we might acquiesce in will be something which in effect says that the matter should be settled by parties in direct discussions and the Security Council shows no further interest in the matter

On receipt of instructions contained in your 24692 dated, April 9, reinforced by your letter T.231-CS/62* dated April 11 countermaning my earlier instructions I naturally ceased to discuss this matter with the Americans or others. I believe that my latter instructions were a mistake.

2. In the light of your 24747-Circular of May 16 I saw TALBOT and (had) made forcefully every argument to press that no further meeting of the Security Council was necessary; and that if one was to be held it should be at the end of June.

3. The contrary argument urged by TALBOT was that the Security Council having been seized of the issue had to take some decision on it. The debate had been adjourned in order to allow the members of the Security Council to digest the statements of the parties and to consult among themselves. This was clearly stated by PLIMPTON as well as DEAN. Adequate time had now elapsed and the Council had to come to a decision. As to the exact date of the next meeting this was a matter for the members of the Security Council to decide. Whatever they settled on in New York would be acceptable to Washington.

4. From your telegrams it appears that the proposal for another meeting has come to you as a surprise. The thinking here and as far as I could gather in New York has always been that the adjournment on May 4 was purely temporary and that a further meeting would be held to enable members of the Security Council to express their views and to propose or not to propose resolutions.
that we have not entered into any Kind of serious negotiation in regard to prices, currencies manufacturing arrangements, etc. With exceptions of purchase of C130s only negotiations through us were for sidewinders and these were abruptly stopped. Grateful to be kept in touch with developments.

2. Full details about latest position in respect of our exploratory enquiries for purchase of suitable aircraft for the IAF were given, in PRIMIN-21083 of May 15 which makes clear that early availability, adequate spares, possibilities of manufacture in India and the price are the only factors which will govern our decision. There is no question of any political decision in favour of purchase from one country or the other.

3. So far as supplies of military hardware of any kind from United States are concerned there are several hurdles under the security law regarding supply of military equipments which is classified.

4. You have also referred in your telegram to our attitude on Kashmir. I do not see how this is relevant. In any case you know fully the efforts we made to prevent Pakistan from adopting an agitational approach and going to the Security Council. Surely we could not have done more.
5. GALBRAITH puts the difficulties of the United States Government to us. You in turn must be stressing our problems to the United States authorities.

6. I am sending separately by bag copy of my notes of discussions with GALBRAITH on all these matters.

Ministry of External Affairs

 Ambassador Galbraith saw me this morning. After talking about Assam and Sikkim which he had visited recently, he asked me about the developments on the India-China border and the latest Chinese note of 30th April, on which PM had made some comments in Parliament yesterday. I explained the latest developments to him on the lines of PMs statement in Parliament and told him that while we will maintain our posts on this border regardless of the Chinese threat, we did not want to precipitate any crisis, or clash. If the Chinese, however, did attack any of our posts or patrols in the area, our men will naturally defend themselves. I told him about the timing of the Chinese note of 30th and the new threat and how it synchronized with the announcement regarding Chinese negotiations with Pakistan for that part of the China-Kashmir border which was under Pakistan control and the threat of Pakistan attack on Kashmir made by Zafrullah Khan in the Security Council debate on Kashmir. The Ambassador said that they had also noticed this peculiar feature of the Pakistan and Chinese move.

2. The Ambassador then showed me an extract from a press report that his Embassy had given him where there was some reference to likelihood of India buying Russian jets. He said that he had no instructions from his Governments in this matter but he would like to mention on a personal level how allergic US opinion was to purchase of Russian MIGs and added that the US authorities would be prepared to consider sale of the appropriate types, of planes to India. If the India-China border situation demanded such action. He added that so far as Pakistan is concerned, their military aid is being reduced and the U.S. Administration had no intention of promoting an armaments race in this part of the world. They would, however, be prepared to consider sale of planes to India should the developments in the border situation between India and China necessitate strengthening of the Indian Air Force.

3. I told the Ambassador that so far as the story in the press report about purchase of Russian jets by India is concerned, this appeared to be kite flying by some interested party. We have been buying some transport planes from the U.S.S.R. because they are eminently suitable for air drops at great heights in the border region. He said, however, that he wanted to mention this matter on a personal level as there had been a vague news report on the subject of likelihood of purchase of Russian jets by India and also mention the readiness of the U.S. authorities to sell suitable planes to India in case the border situation in the North necessitated strengthening of the Indian Air Force to meet the situation.

PM must have seen telegram 24403 which I sent yesterday to B. K. Nehru after discussing the matter with Defence Minister.

2. As Ambassador Galbraith had approached me for information on this matter earlier and as I did not have the exact information at that time, I sent for him today and talked to him on the lines of my telegram to B. K. Nehru.

3. The Ambassador said that there were two points he would like to bring to Government of India’s notice in this connection. The US Administration will be hamstrung in its efforts to get the requisite aid funds for India through the Congress and the Senate if the opposition leaders like Symington argued that the Soviets were supplying the military hardware to India while United States was asking the Congress and the Senate to sanction aid funds for civilian requirements. He said that it will be impossible for him or the President to meet this opposition as even if this is normal commercial purchase, it has to be accepted that sale of military hardware of this type, whether by the USA or the USSR, is closely linked with government policies. The other point he mentioned was that opportunity should be given to the USA to supply on reasonable terms the military hardware that India may require. If USA could not supply on reasonable terms and India had to buy from the Soviet Union, that would be a different matter.

4. The Ambassador told me in this connection that the Lockheed people had been negotiating with the Indian Ministry of Defence the question of sale and also manufacture with both of the C130 transport planes and of the F104 fighter bombers this winter. Manufacture of C130 transport planes in India was not a practical proposition and was therefore given up, but the manufacture of the fighter bomber F104 was a practical proposition and the Lockheed people were prepared to negotiate the technical aspects in detail. The Ambassador said that neither he nor State Department had actively encouraged the Lockheed people in this matter nor did they object to the exploratory negotiations. The US policy in this connection was that they did not want to offer military hardware and intensify the armament race anywhere in the world. That is why the Lockheed negotiations with the Ministry of Defence had not gone too far. On the other hand the US Government realised that India may want special military hardware of this type because of the difficulties on the northern border and the US Administration were prepared both to sell and to encourage the project regarding the manufacture in India so far as F104 fighter bombers were concerned. This, they would only do naturally if Government of India were interested in this project.
5. I told the Ambassador that I will mention these matters to PM and also bring them to the notice of the Ministry of Defence. I asked him, however, for clarification on two points. One was the question of scarce foreign exchange. I asked whether US authorities would be prepared to consider rupee purchase. The other question was about the various types of equipment that go with the F104 and whether US security laws and the fact that some of the equipment is classified would come in the way of supplies of this equipment to India. The Ambassador said that it should be possible to get round both these difficulties but he has to get necessary technical information before he can give a reply to me on both these points.

6. He asked whether he could tell the State Department categorically that no decision has been taken by the Government of India about the type of planes and the country from which they are to be purchased. I said that this is exactly the present position. The Ambassador then went on to say that the complication will be less serious if the United States were given an opportunity to meet the needs of the Government of India both regarding the purchase and the manufacture of the planes required and also the requisite equipment. If US authorities could not meet the needs on reasonable terms, and India contracted with the Soviet authorities, that would be quite a different situation.

Your 24777-8 dated May 30, Kashmir.

I saw TALBOT today and explained to him our objections to the language and substance of the draft. He said Five Powers were still meeting in New York to discuss drafts.

2. I stressed that if any results were to be expected on Kashmir, it must be taken out of its present framework i.e., UNCIP resolutions, Dr. GRAHAM, Security Council etc and transferred to new framework, i.e. bilateral negotiations without interference of third party. He said this was difficult for the United States because (a) the rejection of present framework was unilateral; if both parties agreed to bilateral negotiations, United States would have no objection to ousting the Security Council, and (b) the principle of mediation had been so important and so useful in the settlement of international disputes and had in other disputes been supported by India itself that United States would find it impossible to exclude reference to third party.

3. Discussion proceeded on usual lines and concluded by his promising that the United States would study our objections most carefully before coming to a final decision.

Last night Senator HUMPHREY dined with me. HUMPHREY is personally known to you, has always been unquestioning friend of India and is well known liberal progressive. He is now Chief Whip and Assistant Majority Leader in Senate.

2. HUMPHREY said that while he saw no reason at all why India should not buy MIGs, such a deal would greatly complicate foreign aid legislation. The House was completely out of hand as MCCORMACK was unable to control it. If the deal was announced before the aid legislation was through the House, it would affect not only Indian aid but might well jeopardise the entire economic aid programme of the United States. On my questioning why the MIG deal was creating so much excitement when purchase of Soviet transport planes and helicopters had gone almost unnoticed, he said that there was an unbelievable amount of emotion attached to the MIG name. Too many American boys had been killed by it in Korea.

3. HUMPHREY asked me earnestly to request you to hold up the announcement of the deal till the legislation had passed both Houses of Congress. I am accordingly doing so.

No.417 14th June 1962.

Prime Minister from B.K. Nehru. Personal.

I was at White House last night on a social visit. President said he was very worried about the proposed MIG deal. I had seen what had happened in Congress in regard to aid to Yugoslavia and Poland, the mess that had been made on payments due to Philippines and the difficulty with which he had been able to get the SYMINGTON cut on Indian aid reversed. With the present uncontrollable mood of Congress, he was fairly certain that if the MIG deal went through not only would American aid be cut but a great deal of abuse would be heaped on the Government of India. The natural reaction of this would be to make India anti-American, the cutting of aid would badly affect the Indian economy and the eventual result of these processes would be that India would lean more and more to the Soviet side and eventually go into the Soviet camp. Action and reaction could easily snowball and drive us where we did not want to go. Could I tell the Prime Minister what the reaction in this country would be to the deal? But the message should not be as from him, as the Prime Minister would think he was trying to exert pressure which was the last thing he intended to do.

2. I said I thought his fears of our going into the Soviet camp were greatly exaggerated. I had given some indication to Delhi of likely reactions here and presumed that Galbraith had given a fuller version. I was not very well informed but my impression was that the MIG deal had gone too far along the road to be reversed. (I explained to him the advantages from our point of view of the MIG proposal). Our turning back now would be interpreted in the country, even though counter offers from the West might be more attractive, as yielding to pressure of Western powers. This impression no respectable Government could afford to give and certainly not the Government of India.

3. I asked how it would affect the psychological situation here if the deal was not announced before Congress rose. I did not know whether this would at all be possible considering the urgent nature of our demands but would it help him in dealing with Congress? He said that it certainly would help greatly if the deal did have to go through if it could possibly be postponed till September.

4. He then asked me what my personal judgement was as to the possibility of Russian technicians who would have to be imported for this purpose subverting and indoctrinating our forces. I said this fear was completely unfounded. We had had Western equipment and many Western technicians for years, if they had not been able to subvert us, why should we fear that the Russian would. He said this was his own personal view also but GALBRAITH seemed to think differently.

5. I then said it was all very well for people to say that we should not purchase the MIGs. We needed equipment and needed it to be manufactured in India. What was the alternative? He said that they had talked to the British and they would much prefer that we bought the LIGHTNINGS, manufacturing arrangements for which could also be made. The British wanted the Americans to bear the whole cost of this offer (which would be $40 million) and he did not know whether he would have to go back to Congress for an appropriation for this purpose. He had considered the possibility of offering American planes, but this would get him into immediate trouble with Pakistan who would ask for more.

6. I said this last I could not at all understand. One had assumed that the US-Pakistan alliance was an anti-Communist alliance; it was now being interpreted by President AYUB as an anti-Indian alliance aid the United State’s seemed to be accepting this interpretation. He said he had no sympathy left with Pakistan. He wished he had not given the 104s to AYUB but he had only fulfilled the commitment of the previous Administration. But the plain fact of the matter was that the Pentagon insisted that the base at PESHAWAR was essential for the security of the United States. (It is used as you are aware for electronic espionage over the Soviet Union). AYUB consequently had the whip hand over him; he could not afford at this point to let AYUB get out of CENTO and SEATO.

7. He asked whether if we did have to buy MIGs we could not at the same time buy some Western planes. This would reduce the adverse psychological impact here. I said I could not say but one difficulty would obviously be financial. He said he would contact me again in a couple of days.

8. This morning DEAN RUSK rang me up and put me three questions:

1) Did I interpret the Prime Minister’s statement yesterday to mean that the MIG deal had been finally closed and there was nothing to be done about it? I said I did not so interpret it, but from the little I knew, I certainly had the impression that negotiations had gone so far that it would be difficult to reverse them, particularly as any reversal now would appear to be the result of Western pressure.

2) Did I think the Government of India knew the reaction to the deal here? I said I had given them some indication and I presumed that Galbraith had given them more. He said he had talked to several congressional leaders who had always been friends of India and they had told him that the MIG deal would damage the Indian aid programme almost beyond repair. The United States did not have a Parliamentary system and therefore the Executive could not convert this into a question of confidence. The attitude of the Executive towards India would remain unchanged but there was no possibility of controlling Congress. I said I thought India was aware of this situation.

3) Would we be prepared to consider alternatives? I said, we were not wedded to MIGs because they were Russian but because they offered us certain advantages. I did not know whether it was now too late for alternatives to be considered but in any case the Government of India was hardly likely to act without waiting to hear what DUNCAN SANDYS had to say.

B. K. Nehru from Prime Minister Personal.

Your telegram 417 June 14. We have not come to any understanding with the Soviet about MIG deal. In fact no proposal has been made by us to them or by them to us. When some of our Air Force technicians went to Russia some months ago for some engines they examined MIGs from every aspect approved of them greatly. They have experience of similar foreign planes and I believe have even flown British Lightnings. They were strongly of opinion that MIGs were more suited for us.

2. Since then nothing more has transpired except the great deal of noise in American and British papers about MIG transaction. Naturally this has reached Russia and they must be interested in it though they have not said anything. It is our intention some-time later to send some of our Air Force people to look into the MIGs further and report about possible terms. Only then will question arise for us to decide finally.

3. In Parliament during discussion on Defence estimate there was widespread approval of our buying MIGs. We have obviously considered this matter purely as a commercial one and no other question would have arisen but for the reactions in America and, to some extent, Britain, which have made any decision on our part against purchase and manufacture of MIGs very difficult. In any event we would not like to receive aircraft from Britain or America as a gift.

4. I understand that Lightnings are gradually being given up by British Air Force and Australia has not approved of them.

5. I am seeing DUNCAN SANDYS tomorrow.

 Extract from the speech of Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru while replying to the debate in the Rajya Sabha on foreign affairs.

New Delhi, June 23, 1962.

Since I spoke this morning, news has come to us about the fate of the discussion about Kashmir in the Security Council. It appears that a resolution was introduced in the name of Ireland; the Irish delegate introduced it. It was supported by the permanent delegates, that is, the United States, the United Kingdom, France and Formosan China and two of the South American States, Venezuela and Chile, and it was opposed by two neutrals, Ghana and U.A.R., and opposed also by the Soviet Union and Rumania.

Now the opposition by the Soviet Union that has voted against is called loosely a veto. What the Charter of the United Nations desires is that the five permanent members of the Security Council should vote together in a resolution. If one votes against, it is called a veto - it is non-voting or voting against. Any how the Soviet Union voted against it. As a result, as it was called, it was a veto by the Soviet Union, and it is supposed to be the 100th veto that the Soviet Union has exercised in the last fifteen years. A long, long discussion has taken place about this matter in the Security Council, and our representative, our Defence Minister, spoke at some length expressing his deep sorrow that this Resolution should have been brought forward and, more especially, that Ireland should have brought it forward. And others also spoke. Now the Resolution is over and the proceedings are over. But it is a matter for deep regret to me that repeatedly, when matters concerning subjects which we feel rather passionately almost, subjects like Goa and Kashmir, it should be our misfortune that two great powers, the United States and the United Kingdom, should almost invariably be against us.

In a matter like Goa every Member of this House knows how strongly we felt about it and how, in spite of our feeling, we delayed any action till it was almost thrust upon us by circumstances. Yet, this was made an occasion for reading to us homilies and lecturing to us as to how we should behave properly in international matters. In regard to Kashmir also, I suppose, in the course of the last fourteen or fifteen years, the facts relating to Kashmir have been so often stated that they must be known, at any rate, to responsible people who speak in the Security Council, and yet, the patent fact that it was India that brought this matter before the Security Council and brought it complaining of aggression by or through Pakistan has not yet received the full-blooded attention of the Security Council. Always India and Pakistan have been placed, notably by those two powers, on the same level. “It is a dispute”, they say, “between two quarrelling people, and they should sit down and settle it." We are prepared to sit down at any time with anybody, even with people who have done wrong. But this approach has been extraordinary.

The United Nations’ Commissions have come here, individuals have come here; we have got about ten fat printed volumes connected with Kashmir. In spite of this, these patent facts have not been realized by them in the Security Council as one would have hoped for. So the only other conclusion one could come to is that having realized them they do not like them because they have made up their minds to go in a certain way, to decide something in a particular way, and facts are not important - the fact of aggression, the fact of accession, the constitutional aspect, the legal aspect about which I said something. But, quite apart from all these aspects, there is also the fact of the consequences of any action that they suggest.

Now we are reminded of the Resolutions passed in 1945 (?) 1948) and 1949 by the United Nations Security Council and the Commission they sent, which we accepted. The very first thing in that Resolution was that Pakistan should vacate. Then other questions arose. Now it does not strike the distinguished representative of the United States or the distinguished representative of the United Kingdom to lay stress on the fact that Pakistan has not vacated and has not carried out the Security Council resolution for these fourteen years, and they always go on saying that India has refused to have a plebiscite. We agreed to a plebiscite, and I have no doubt we would have had the plebiscite then and there if Pakistan had withdrawn its forces, and in the normal course steps would have been taken. But they never withdrew their forces - that was an essential part. Now I am not going into the Kashmir issue here, but I express my deep sorrow that this should be so. As an Hon. Member just said, the United States, in addition to this fact, or, may be as a consequence of it - I do not know which - gives military aid to Pakistan, which leads to all kinds of consequences. It leads to an aggressive attitude on the part of Pakistan, constantly speaking in terms of war. Almost every day or every other day in the Pakistan newspapers there is something about some kind of aggression on India being thought of, if not by regular armies, by tribal hordes which, consequently, produce reaction on Indian opinion for India feels so strongly over this issue.

Well, any person would realize that giving this armed (arms) aid to Pakistan is likely to hurt India, not only to hurt us mentally but physically hurt us and drive us into spending more and more. We are getting aid for civil works and we are very grateful for that aid. But at the same time other steps are taken, like the military aid to Pakistan which compels us, out of our slender resources, to spend more money on defence. All this is very illogical and I really do not understand how these great statesmen of the United States and the United Kingdom fit in all this in their thinking. They are democratic societies and they are pushed hither and thither by the pressure of public opinion or by lobbies or by their Parliament as we are. I wish they would realize that there is such a thing as public opinion in India, there is such a thing that no Government in India can ignore. It is only to some extent that it can press the public to go this way or that way. Things are done in regard to matters to which we are passionately devoted which hurt and injure that public opinion very much so - and which, unfortunately, create a result which we do not want. This creates doubt in our minds about the goodwill of those countries towards India and unfortunately the work done for years, the work of creating that goodwill which we value so much is washed out by a stroke of pen or a vote given, or by a speech given.

The speech given on the occasion in the Security Council by the distinguished representative of the United States about Goa hurt us, annoyed us, irritated us, angered us. It had nothing to do with the facts. It was based simply on certain assumptions and, I regret to say, probably, to the dislike of India and all that India stands for. And now the same distinguished representative tells us what to do about Kashmir not realizing that Kashmir is flesh and bone of our bone, and all that we know about the facts and about the law are in our favour. However, there it is. Unfortunately, much of the good that we have done in regard to relations with countries - I would not say it is washed out because good work always remains and brings its own result - the immediate effect of it is lessened. And I have no doubt that we shall now have a plethora of good advice from newspapers in America as to how we are not behaving properly in Kashmir and how the Soviet Union has misbehaved by voting against the matter.

Prime Minister from B.K. Nehru

TALBOT sent for me this morning and referred me to story in BALTIMOR SUN that Indian newspapers were announcing that we had taken decision to buy MIGs and that these stories had been confirmed by individual Cabinet Ministers. He wanted to know whether I had any information. I said I had none.

2. He recalled that during last two weeks the President had weighed in very heavily to get the foreign aid bill through and to ensure that there was no cut on Indian aid. This had not been easy (TALBOT’s assessment is correct, the President having gone very much out of his way both to ensure that there was no cut and to see that no debate on India took place). He said that it did not seem a gracious or courteous thing to do to repay the President’s efforts by announcing immediately afterwards that we were going to buy the MIGs. The relations between India and the United States were bad enough. It was desirable to prevent doing anything which might aggravate them.

3. I said that the issue involved in the MIG purchases was a very simple one and that was what price we were prepared to pay for economic aid. We had been told that if we bought the MIGs we would get no economic aid. He interrupted to say that the Administration had never said that nor had it questioned our sovereign right to buy planes wherever we wanted to. I said this was technically true; what we had been told was that while the Administration admitted this right and while it would continue its efforts to get us economic aid, Congress was uncontrollable and the effect of MIG purchases on Congress’ attitude to aid would be disastrous. As a foreign country we could not distinguish between the Administration and the Congress. For us the Government of United States was one indivisible whole. We had made it abundantly clear that we were not prepared to pay any political price for aid. The MIG purchase was a test case and it was better to have the issue settled once for all. Having been threatened with the stoppage of aid if we bought the MIGs, there seemed to be no alternative for us but to buy them if only to make patent our independence of action. We could not refrain from doing a perfectly sensible thing if we regarded it in our national interest because certain Congressmen objected to it.

4. I did not underrate the effect on Congress nor the very far reaching consequences of a cut in aid. The Government of India too was well aware of the consequences. But there seemed to be no alternative. He asked whether it was certain that buying any kind of interceptors was in our national interest. I said this matter was for Government to consider. If Government decided that interceptors were necessary, my advice to them would have been to buy MIGs irrespective of the consequences. If we did not buy them we might be asked tomorrow not to buy steel plants or power houses from Russia and the day-after-tomorrow not to vote with the Soviet Union in the United Nations.

5. He said he did not accept the necessity of our flaunting our independence when no one had questioned it. But in any case why the timing? The Consortium was to meet on Monday and the Foreign Aid appropriations would still take another six weeks. If it had been our objective deliberately to sabotage all aid effort, we could not have chosen a better time to leak this information. I repeated that I did not even know that a decision had been taken and could not therefore give reasons for its timing.

6. I would respectfully submit that if we have not taken a decision we should announce that we have not done so. If we have, it does appear to me ungracious and discourteous towards the President to announce it immediately after he has battled valiantly for us for a couple of weeks. He has been increasingly feeling that India shows no sign of appreciation of the efforts he has consistently been making towards better Indo-American relations. An announcement before Monday may also very well have immediate repercussions on the Consortium meeting.

2. About three months ago we intended sending a technical team to Soviet Union to evaluate MIGs more especially from the point of view of rapid manufacture in India. The advice given to us by our defence experts was that it was essential to take steps for this manufacture and necessary to get a few complete planes in view of the situation vis-à-vis Pakistan and the constant threats that are made there against India and also the grave situation on our frontier with China. Our experts were strongly of opinion that we must take steps to meet any contingency that might arise.

3. Because of the protests made in US and UK we decided to delay sending this team. We further decided to evaluate the British Lightenings before we came to a decision. Thereupon we sent a technical team to England for this purpose. The idea being that immediately afterwards we would send a team to the Soviet Union for the same purpose. Our team which went to England on return gave an adverse report about the Lightenings and said that however suitable the Lightenings may be in England, their manufacture and use in India would not at all be suitable for us. Thereafter we decided to send the team to Moscow to evaluate the MIGs and report to us about the conditions of manufacture etc. That team will be going soon. We shall await their report before coming to a final decision. That is the position now.

4. The developments on our Tibetan frontier though they may not lead to an immediate, and grave, crisis are a continuing threat and may at any time in future lead to such crisis. We cannot therefore delay much decision on this subject.
5. We considered the question of delaying sending out the team till the aid question was over. But we felt that this would not be quite fair to those who are giving us aid and notably the U. S. To have sent the team immediately after the decision of the aid question would have looked like playing a trick. We decided therefore to send the team await their report and then take a decision.

6. We are grateful for the steps taken by President KENNEDY and the US Government in connection with aid to India and we did not want to do anything to make him feel that we did not appreciate fully his efforts to this end. At the same time we do not wish to act in a way which appear to others as if we were playing a trick. That would not be fair to him.

7. The team we sent to England and which we are sending to Moscow consists of officers who are normally much more inclined to deal with western countries as they have done in the past. But event they felt that British Lightenings would not only be much more expensive but very difficult to manufacture in India and would take a very long time.

Letter from Ambassador B. K. Nehru to Foreign Secretary M. J. Desai.

New Delhi, August 17, 1962.

My dear MJ

The rumour that Ayub was coming to Washington after the Commonwealth Prime Ministers Conference in London has been confirmed. The story as I heard is that he was in any case going to Canada after that conference and wanted to come to Washington on the way back home. It is not clear why he wants to come. I shall keep you informed of further developments*.

Yours sincerely
(B.K.Nehru)

Shri M.J. Desai
Foreign Secretary
Ministry of External Affairs, New Delhi

* Next day in another letter dated the 18th August Mr. B. K. Nehru informed he Foreign Secretary that “Ayub is arriving here on Sunday the 23rd and will be thrown out of Blair House, if he elects to stay there, by lunch time on the 24th as it is needed for other purposes A meeting with the President has been tentatively fixed for 11.a.m. on Monday. The visit is very much at his instance and has not been particularly welcomed here. We do not know what subjects he propose to discuss, but would anticipate that naturally they will mainly be Kashmir and increased military assistance.”
I had requested the American Ambassador, Mr. Galbraith, to see me, today, to talk to him about President Ayub’s visit to the States.

2. I asked the Ambassador whether he had any definite information on what Ayub was likely to discuss. The Ambassador said that Ayub was likely to get very little time with President Kennedy, perhaps little more than an hour over lunch and he was not likely to make very much head way. I said that there was wishful thinking on the part of Mr. Galbraith:

3. I told him that our information was that Pakistan was likely to behave itself till a little while after the Commonwealth Prime Ministers’ Conference and till Ayub’s intended visit to the States was over. By then Zafrulla’s election to the UN General Assembly would also be out of the way. We reckon after this they mean to make trouble on the Kashmir front. I said that we had information that arms were being distributed in some border areas and I gave him a short note on the subject, a copy of which is placed below. I said that the idea seemed to be that if there were a series of major incidents on the Kashmir border they could raise Kashmir with more seeming legitimacy before the General Assembly. The Security Council had done ample damage and, I said, if there was now any long drawn out agitation in the General Assembly in this session, the Indo-Pakistan clocks would be put many years back.

4. I repeated to the Ambassador what I had told him before, that we had seriously suggested to Pakistan through our Ambassador and through Hilaly also, that we should revert to the 1959 Sheikh-Swaran Singh Minister level meetings. Kashmir could not be settled over night, but if India and Pakistan sat down to attempt to settle everything else, border disputes, even flood control, passport regulations, etc., an atmosphere could certainly be created, which would be beneficial to both the countries. The Ambassador said that after his last talk with me on 30.8.1962, he had cabled this to the State Department and their Ambassador in Karachi had spoken to Rajeshwar Dayal; and Rajeshwar had confirmed what I had told the Ambassador. He asked me whether Rajeshwar Dayal had been able to speak to Ayub or Mohammad Ali. I said this had not been possible. He asked me whether our High Commissioner was likely to press this on Ayub before coming away, finally, from Pakistan. I said
I presumed he would see Ayub before leaving Pakistan and would speak to him on these lines. The Ambassador said that he proposed to telegraph the State Department and suggest that if President Kennedy could get the chance he should press Ayub to agree to talk to India, starting with a Minister-level meeting on the lines we had suggested.

5. I told Mr. Galbraith that the purpose of my request to him to come to me today, was to tell him that we feared the contrary and that while Pakistan seemed to be on its best behavior today their intentions were pretty foul on the cease-fire line, weeks hence.

Note given by Commonwealth Secretary to the American Ambassador on the distribution of arms by Pakistan in the border areas.

Reports of distribution of arms to people in Pakistan – invaded Kashmir have been received in recent weeks.

2. According to these reports 4,000 rifles, 200 LMGs and a large amount of ammunition have been stored with the Inspector General of Police in the so-called “Azad Kashmir”. The weapons are known to be intended for distribution to irregular forces, who are to be encouraged to make trouble along the Cease-fire line. There are reports which suggest that Pakistan army personnel are being prepared for use as irregulars.

3. It is also learned that leave of personnel belonging to the so-called Azad Kashmir forces has been curtailed. Recruitment of villagers, particularly ex-servicemen, is reported from several districts of Azad Kashmir – Muzaffarabad, Pallandari and Poonch. In Muzaffarabad district alone 2, 500 persons have been recruited.

4. It is suspected that steps have been taken to organize further breaches of the Cease-fire Agreement and the Cease-fire Line by so-called armed civilians, most of whom in fact would be members of the Pakistan Army and “Azad Kashmir” forces. Statements by Ghulam Abbas and recently even by Mohammad Ali, Pakistan Foreign Minister, would appear to lend support to such a suspicion.

2. US Ambassador in Karachi has told Rajeshwar that Ayub's one day visit to President Kennedy is without Agenda and informal talks likely to be only of general nature. Ayub will also spend one day and night at Washington for official talks and meet Defence Secretary MCNAMARA and Air Chief HAMILTON. Ayub said to be anxious to get financial assistance for huge Turbela project on Indus and for alarming salinity problem. Former involves almost doubling Consortium aid and salinity problem would involve expenditure of over 600 (600) crores. Rajeshwar surmises that Ayub cannot therefore demand more military hardware and war planes. He will NO doubt also try to seek support on Kashmir but Americans may question him on his China policy and press for restoration of relations with Afghanistan.

3. Galbraith NOT apprehensive of Ayub's visit and has reaffirmed earlier that change of American policy on arms aid bound to affect Ayub's Pakistan.

4. I have yesterday warned Galbraith that we fear Pakistan will be on best behavior only while Ayub is out on tour. With Zafrulla's election now out of the way we apprehend serious provocations on cease fire line in Kashmir in weeks that follow. Series of serious incidents might be created by Pakistan to give some seeming justification to Kashmir being raised in UN General Assembly.

I am enclosing herewith Rajeshwar’s letter dated the 15th of September, which discusses some of the matters which Ayub might raise with friends in Washington. I am also enclosing a copy of a note I have recorded after my talk with Galbraith yesterday on the same subject. Our reports suggest that Pakistan is making all sorts of preparations for trouble on the border. How reliable this information is, we do not know, but we felt it would be best to warn Galbraith and event frighten him somewhat.

SECRET

Copy of letter No. HC/153/62 dated September 15, 1962, from Shri Rajeshwar Dayal, High Commissioner for India, Karachi, to Shri Y.D. Gundevia, Commonwealth Secretary, Ministry of External Affairs, New Delhi.

I called on U.S. Ambassador McConaughty on the 13th September. McConaughty began by expressing regret at the news of my departure from Pakistan in view of the friendly contacts established between us and the efforts which I had been making during my entire tenure of office for the improvement of Indo-Pakistan relations. I told McConaughty that I had tried to do my best to implement my instruction on the basis of our consistent policy towards Pakistan but during the last two years there had been little response to a positive and constructive approaches. Better relations were in Pakistan’s own interest as the period of Ayub’s greatest popularity synchronized with an improvement in our relations. The question of procedures and modalities was vital in dealing with international problems but Pakistan apparently felt that it could bring pressure to bear on India by pursuing policies which damaged India’s interests on matters which had no direct bearing on Indo-Pakistan relations. Such a course was bound to lead to a sense of frustration. The pursuit of wrong methods could lead only to wrong results.

2. McConaughy said that he thought the President did not take an emotional view of Indo-Pakistan relations but he agreed that there was no policy making apparatus which could follow up matters in a consistent way. McConaughy has no great opinion of Dehlavi or the Foreign Office set-up while he is fully aware that Bogra has been too busy in rounding up political support, to be able to find time to run his Foreign Office.

3. I asked McConaughy about Ayub Khan’s Washington programme. He said that the day’s visit to President Kennedy at Newport had deliberately been made informal and no agenda had been fixed as it was intended to keep the talks at a very general level. But in Washington, President Ayub Khan was spending a day and a night and would meet Defence Secretary Macnamara and AID Director Hamilton. McConaughy said that Ayub Khan was extremely anxious to get aid for the construction of the Tarbela Dam to impound the waters of the Indus. He considered this gigantic work, whose engineering feasibility had not yet been established, as part of the replacement works although it had a considerable element of development in it. The question, of course, was where the balance of the 1.8 billion dollars - the Consortium having promised about one billion dollars - could come from. It was very doubtful if the United States would find the additional money, while the position of the other members of the Consortium was not known. Then there was the important problem of water logging and salinity on which the President had set his heart. There has been some delay in the completion of the report of the American experts on the subject which has now been submitted to the U.S. President’s Scientific Adviser, Dr. Jerome Wiesner. At this stage, I mentioned that the East Pakistanis had been complaining that while these vast funds had been asked for West Pakistan, the question of flood control in the east wing had received no attention whatsoever. McConaughy was aware of this.

4. From what McConaughy said it appears that while Kennedy’s wish may well be to avoid having detailed discussions on Pakistan’s problems or to be drawn into making any commitments, Ayub Khan will try to unburden himself of all his grievances and request. It can be taken for granted that Ayub Khan will make requests for military hardware and war-planes and he is likely to point to the gaps and weaknesses in Pakistan’s military set-up and possibly to India’s intention to develop its air force in support of his demands. It remains to be seen to what extent the U.S. Administration will be firm in meeting Ayub Khan’s extravagant claims and the relative emphasis which they will place upon economic and military aid.
5. We have heard from reliable sources that the Americans are concerned regarding Pakistan's approaches to China. We have been asked by the U.S. Embassy here for a second set of our white Paper. Washington may well question Ayub about his policy towards China and caution him against going too far. The Americans are also concerned about the continued rupture of Pakistan-Afghanistan relations, for with the lapse of time, the Soviet position in Afghanistan is being strengthened at the expense of the American. Talks between Bogra and his Afghan and Iranian counterparts are to take place in New York during the U.N. General Assembly session. Thereafter-unless some hitch develops-there will be a subsequent meeting between the three at Tehran. The Americans are naturally anxious to see that some progress is made in easing this difficult situation.

6. McConaughy said, as I was leaving, that it was a pity that Galbraith was wrongly regarded in Pakistan as being anti-Pakistan and he had been surprised to learn (presumably from Hilaly who saw him the previous day) that Galbraith and Hilaly were hardly on speaking terms with each other. McConaughy asked whether Galbraith had decided to continue in Delhi after March 1963 when his period of absence on leave from his University concluded. I replied that I had no information. McConaughy is going on the 17th September to Washington for Ayub Khan's visit and will be away for a fortnight.

2. Confirmed-

i) No specific agenda for AYUB-KENDDY talks which will be a tour d’horizon;

ii) AYUB will meet McNAMARA (which, according to Pentagon is the main purpose of his visit, meeting with Kennedy being Protocol) and AID Chief HAMILON;

iii) Administration examining Turbela Project and will give AYUB a copy of draft of report prepared by WEISNER and Study Team on salinity and, water logging problems - we may hope to get a copy when report is finalized;

iv) Pakistan-China border issue will be raised by USA as they feel concerned over the situation on the whole borders

v) Afghan issue will also be raised as US aid programme is being hampered by the closing of route through Pakistan.

3. State Department expects AYUB will raise the question of speeding up of military hardware deliveries which have, they say, lagged behind schedule and may now be affected by overall cut in aid funds. Kashmir issue is not expected to be raised but Department cagey about what they will say if asked for support for activization in General Assembly.
4. Pakistan has asked for one more squadron of F-104 (they have ten of ‘A’ and two of ‘B’) but Pentagon sources indicate that they do not intend to give it. They also feel Pakistan cannot use another squadron.

5. Pakistan Air Chief, Asghar Khan is here seeking replacement for attrition aircraft of their F-86 strength. No spare F-86s, we are told. MacDonnell F-110’s may not also be supplied. Sources add ‘we have made no bones about it, but one never Knows what AYUB will get away with once he has seen McNAMARA’.

6. Have stressed-
   i) Our view on supply of sophisticated weapons to Pakistan;
   ii) The futility of taking Kashmir to the General Assembly and our apprehensions of deliberate provocations in Kashmir; and
   iii) The undesirable consequences of Pakistan-China border deal, and raised doubts if AYUB realises consequences on his other borders.

7. State Department say they would not like Ayub to come to such settlement with China as would Jeopardize the interests of other ‘friendly nations’.

Letter from Ambassador B. K. Nehru to Commonwealth Secretary Y. D. Gundevia regarding Pakistan.

No. 569. September 26, 1962.

My dear Gundevia,

Thank you for your letter No.818/CS/62, dated the 19th September, about Ayub’s visit to Washington, just received,

2. I do not know to what extent you succeeded in warning or frightening Galbraith, but the fact is that when the Finance Minister saw the President last Thursday, the latter said that Galbraith had reported that there was a possibility of India creating trouble on the ceasefire line because there were interested parties anxious to divert public attention from China to Pakistan.

3. He repeated this twice so as to leave no doubt in our minds that the report had come from Galbraith. The Minister and I told him this was absurd; what was true was the contrary because trouble on the cease-fire line was the easiest way for Pakistan to re-agitate the Kashmir issue before the United Nations. The President promised that he would speak to Ayub and dissuade him as much as he could from creating such trouble, if this indeed was his intention.

4. The President during the course of this conversation reiterated that the United States was not taking sides on the Kashmir issue. They had voted on the resolution in the United Nations because it seemed to them innocuous and in line with the past line taken in the United Nations. This did not mean that they wished the issue to be settled in any particular way.

Yours sincerely,

Ayub’s Visit

Gather reliably that main subject of discussion was Pak-Afghan relations. Meeting was held last night in New York between Foreign Ministers of Iran, Afghanistan and Pakistan. Result as yet unknown.

2. Financing of Turbela dam was not raised at all. It is presumed this was because World Bank had advised that there were no chances of raising funds for it.

3. Kashmir was mentioned en passant, but not concretely or vigorously. No impression was given that it would be raised in General Assembly. AYUB is reported to have said that if Indians did not like plebiscite, he was prepared to discuss other arrangements.

4. Arms aid. Not clear whether further squadron of F-104s was asked for and refused. But in any case he is not getting any. On aircraft replacement of Attrition has been agreed to. For the rest no supply of any out of the ordinary weapons or equipment seems to have been discussed.

Letter from Commonwealth Secretary Y. D. Gundevia to Ambassador B. K. Nehru on his talks with Galbraith.

New Delhi, October 12, 1962.

No.888-CS/62 October 12, 1962.

My Dear B.K.

Thanks for your letter No.569 dated 26th September, 1962. Frankly, I have still not quite understood why Galbraith should have reported that there was a possibility of India creating trouble on the cease-fire line, when the whole purpose of my talking to him was to convince him of the contrary, that Pakistan was likely to make trouble. I will thrash this out with Galbraith one day but this will have to wait, because I am off to Ceylon today for 10 or 12 days.

With the Kind Regards,

Yours Sincerely,

(Y.D.Gundevia)
2159. The following statement was issued on August 2, 1963 by American Ambassador in Pakistan Walter P. McConaughy:

“The press of Pakistan has given undue attention to a recent press conference statement by American Ambassador to India Chester Bowles, given in New Delhi. A transcript of his comments includes the following:

Certainly we don’t think that Pakistan is going to attack India or India is going to attack Pakistan. If either one was attacked by the other, we will certainly move through the United Nations in order to do everything we could to ‘see’ it stopped. If it is not very clear, we have said it over and over again.’

Though not incorrect so far as it goes, Ambassador Bowles’ statement does not cover, nor was it intended to cover, the full extent of the United States Commitments to Pakistan in case of external aggression.

“I recall to your attention the clear record in this matter.

“On November 19, -1962, I declared to a press conference in Karachi: ‘The United States in turn has assured the Pakistan Government officially that if this assistance to India should be misused and misdirected against another country in aggression, the United States would undertake immediately in accordance with constitutional authority appropriate action both within and without the United Nations to thwart such aggression by India’.

“My statement was in full accord with a public statement by the Department of State the previous day which said:

‘The United States Government has similarly assured the Government of Pakistan that if our assistance to India should be misused and directed against another in aggressions the US would undertake immediately in accordance with constitutional authority appropriate action both within and without the United Nations to thwart such aggression. Needless to say, in giving these assurances that United States is confident that neither of these countries which it is aiding, harbors aggressive designs.

President John F. Kennedy, in his press conference of November 20, 1962, declared:

‘In providing military assistance to India, we are mindful of our alliance with Pakistan. All of our aid to India is for the purpose of defeating Chinese Communists subversion. Chinese incursions into the subcontinent are a threat to Pakistan as well as India, and both have a common interest in opposing it. We have urged this point on both governments. Our help to India in no way diminishes or qualifies our commitment to Pakistan and we have made this clear to both Governments as well.’

My dear Gundevia,

Thank you for preparing and circulating to us the Report on the Conference of the Heads of Missions in South East Asia. It is a document which I have read with much interest and profit.

2. On page 27 of this booklet is the statement that the United States “did not bother about the rights or wrongs of the case in regard to Kashmir, nor did they believe that Pakistan had a good case on Kashmir; they only support Pakistan as an ally”.

3. It is my duty to point out, as I have done before, that this Embassy does not accept this assessment of the American view on Kashmir as correct. The Americans do believe that Pakistan has a good case on Kashmir — though the Administration is very careful not to say so and, the sympathy with Pakistan is not only because Pakistan is an ally but because it is regarded as the wronged party.

Yours sincerely,

Gundevia from B.K.Nehru

I lunched with GRANT yesterday and the following emerged:-

(a) The U.S. has had many indications that Pakistan is looking for trouble with India,

(b) Pakistan had delivered another aide-memoire to the United States complaining about us; but the US had refused to take any action,

(c) It would be helpful in these circumstances if we would exercise the maximum possible restraint so that if trouble started we could be able clearly to prove that we did not start it. In particular we might:

(i) not alter status-quo of CHAKNOT and
(ii) renew our offer to talk on the Assam influx troubles.

(d) TAYLORS visit had been cancelled not because of any protest by Pakistan but because he was genuinely occupied. He would not go even to the Cento meeting at Ankara as:

(i) CABOT LODGE was coming back from Viet Nam to report and
(ii) the military, budget; for the Fiscal 65 had to be prepared.

(e) He would however, come to India about 10th December via the Pacific and then go on to Pakistan. He would thus be able to speak more convincingly to the Pakistanis about the minimal nature of the American arms aid to India and it falling short of our requirements to meet the Chinese threat.

(f) General ADAMS, Commander-in-chief, Strike Command, Florida (who... accompanied AVERELL HARRIMAN) in whose command we now lay would visit India at the time of the Air Exercises. Presumably this has been cleared with you.

(g) The US consider that we needed no more than 12 divisions to face the Chinese and no more than 4 divisions to face the Pakistanis and for other duties. They would be loath so to strengthen us that we could have a 21 division army even if technically the rest of the army equipment was financed by us. They did not consider that the Chinese were in any position to attack us in strength specially as the Soviets had cut off the supply of spare parts to China and the Chinese Air Force was obsolescent.

(h) We would not at least now get the supersonic aircraft we wanted even though American military experts thought we needed them because—

(i) with the finance available other higher priority equipment had to be supplied and

(ii) of Pakistani objections,

(i) Pakistani F-86 aircraft was getting obsolescent. Spare parts were no longer available and could only be supplied through a world-wide cannibalisation programme. These would have to be replaced by more modern aircraft. There was no intention however of giving Pakistan additional arms simply because India got arms aid.

(j) BALL had told AYUB and BHUTTO had been told here quite clearly that it was the unalterable policy of the United States to give India arms aid to the extent that they judged we needed it to meet the Chinese threat.

(k) That the Paks had also been told that the Americans did not consider that there was any danger of any attack from India. They did however recognise that the Palk had such a fear.

2. The lunch lasted two and a half hours and the above cited is the essence of what GRANT said in my and not in his language. It does not also contain the arguments and counter arguments that went on. The general effect left on me was that the Americans were getting slowly more fed up than before at Pakistani antics. There was through out the conversation no mention of Kashmir.

Gundevia from B.K. Nehru

In accordance with the instruction in paragraph 9 of your 24716 dated 7th November, I saw the Secretary of State this evening. There were present ambassador BOWLES and Assistant Secretary TALBOT.

2. As soon as I mentioned the F-104s, BOWLES interrupted to say that it was very strange that the Indian Government did not trust the word of the American Ambassador and wanted their Ambassador to verify it from the Secretary of State. He said that before his departure he had given quite categorical assurances separately to you to M.J. DESAI and to the Prime Minister that the Americans had no present intention of giving any F-104s to the Pakistanis. I had to confess, that, I have not been informed of this and I had come because my last Information was that he would check from Washington and then let us know. I am afraid that by this failure of communication we have (a) given the impression to the American Ambassador that his word is Inadequate and (b) shown up the lack of competence of our own administration.

3. Any way the assurance was repeated to me. There is no present intention of giving any 104s to Pakistan, but the problem of replacement of F-86s remains and will have to be considered.

4. RUSK said that we wished to take the opportunity of asking me what my Government’s views or, in the absence of Government instructions, my views were in regard to the military balance between India and Pakistan. I said I had no specific Government instructions, but I did not understand how It was any function of the United Stated to maintain such a balance. The magic formula at the time of Partition was 17½ to 82½ (TALBOT Interrupted to say that the division of military assets was in the ratio of 3 to 1), this reflected the relative areas, populations, etc. of the two countries, we were more industrialized than Pakistan and we had more competent men. Consequently it was obvious that whatever the ratio of armaments, it would be abundantly in India's favour. The Pakistanis would have to learn to live with the facts of geography and it would not be in the interests of either India or Pakistan or the United States for the least to try and work on the theory of balances. As far as we were concerned, we wanted to re-equip ourselves only to meet the Chinese threat. If the United States really thought that Pakistan was under the threat of attack from China or the Soviet Union, they could similarly strengthen the Pakistani armed forces to meet that threat. The strength of the Indian forces was irrelevant for this purpose. But did the United States really think that Pakistan was under threat of attack?

5. RUSK said that his concern was not with maintaining any balance. But it was obvious that the strengthening of the armed forces of one side had effects on the other. Here we were concerned with the possibility of the Pakistanis getting F-104s; similarly they were concerned every time we got any military aid.

6. I said as far as their fears were concerned, we would be most happy to do anything that the Americans could suggest to allay them. I had asked AVERELL HARRIMMAN quite seriously to tell us what the Americans thought we could do and I made the same offer to the Secretary of State. Furthermore, we would have no objection whatever to the Americans making a public statement that they would defend the Pakistanis in case we attacked them. This should take away all their fears and stop this waste of resources on armaments.

7. RUSK said statements like this would not take away all their fears. The Americans had told us many times that they would not permit American arms in Pakistan to be used against us, but had not believed them. As far as the fear of an attack on Pakistan by Soviet Union or China was concerned, he agreed with me that today, in November 1963, there was none. But international situations went on changing, the global strategy of the United States could not be altered from day to day nor could arms aid be turned off or on like a tap. What they did with Pakistan was and would be related to their view of global strategy from time to time. It had nothing to do with keeping a balance between India and Pakistan.

8. For the rest of the time, we discussed internal American politics and sartorial history.

Your telegram No. 1205 12th December.

2. When Ambassador BOWLES saw me on 12th evening, I spoke to him about the news item that US Government has decided to extend the operational area of the Seventh Sleet to Indian Ocean. The Ambassador said that General TAYLOR would talk to us about this. When I questioned him further he said he had no instructions on the subject, but personally, he favoured the idea because the Seventh Fleet had always been a very effective deterrent to China and her presence in the waters would deter China all the more and also give Asian and African countries a definite feeling of security. I said that this would give an excellent handle to China for propaganda. Since we were certain to be asked in press circles, our official spokesman had been authorised to say that we had no information and we had not been consulted in the matter by the USA. Ambassador BOWLES suggested that we could say that the ocean was open to anybody, after all I said that we would not repeat not say this. For your information our official spokesman has only said that we had no information and we had not been consulted. Any other comments in Indian newspapers are only internal conjectures. Times of India of 13th December has strongly criticised the move.

3. The rest was on MAXWELL TAYLOR’S visit. BOWLES referred to press report that Pakistan had approached French Government for supply of two submarines. He said he was concerned because DE GAULLE’s reactions were always somewhat unpredictable. If India did not restrict purchases of armaments from her own resources, Pakistan might do likewise and there would be an arms race which would eventually affect India’s economic and industrial development.
4. Ambassador BOWLES then said that he had received conflicting advice as to the planned strength of the Indian Army though he knew that the total we wanted to work up to was about 8.6 or 8.7 lakhs. General TAYLOR would like to know more precisely about the number of divisions etc., that we planned and progress made to equip them.

5. I told BOWLES that my impression was that the delivery of equipment under the Nassau Plan had slowed down. The Ambassador did not deny this and said that altogether they were asking to get as detailed a picture as possible about our plans and hoped TAYLOR would be given this. He then said that continuing arms aid to India on a long term basis could really only be forthcoming if US was able to secure some informal understanding that in case of trouble in the region, meaning the whole of Asia, India would help U.S.A. to reduce effectiveness with which China could operate in various sectors. Referring to Indo-China, he said if there was trouble therein we might be willing to take reasonable measures to make the Chinese less effective in Indo-China. BOWLES was, obviously, deliberately vague, but he used the phrase “a second front”.

6. I said that we had never participated in joint defence in any region nor had we planned to assume such responsibilities. Our plan to re-equip Indian forces was directly limited to the extent which we considered absolutely necessary for defending Indians borders. BOWLES repeated the continuance of long term arms aid would depend on what responsibilities India was prepared to assume to assist USA in keeping the Chinese back in the various theatres in the region.

7. There have always been hints from HARRIMAN, GALBRAITH and others that USA would like us to assume more active responsibilities in Asia, but we would welcome your comments on whether MAXWELL TAYLOR expects to discuss with us any precise commitments.

B. K. Nehru from Gundevia

Following is summary of Maxwell Taylor’s discussions with the Prime Minister this morning.

2. Taylor began by saying that they did not have a very clear picture of the plan or programme for the expansion of Indian Army and the Air Force and his visit was intended to understand our programme to enable them to plan their assistance and long term aid. Prime Minister said that we had a phased programme but not a very long term plan. Generally speaking we were aiming at an army of sixteen divisions plus five, which would not be full divisions, with a total of 8.66 lakhs which was much less than MOUNTBATTEN’s estimate.

3. TAYLOR said that he was “impressed” at the rate of expansion. After Korea their biggest problem had been how to keep up the morale of troops and they had got the army to work in Korean villages assisting in village development. BOWLES added that in South Vietnam also they were practicing this and the south Vietnam army itself now was assisting in social activities. Prime Minister pointed out that our troops in India were mostly stationed in scarcely populated mountain areas.

4. BOWLES asked if there had been any developments on the Colombo proposals and Taylor asked whether Sino-Soviet rift had in any way manner complicated our problem. Prime Minister said that the rift was there but it was leading if anything to Chinese isolation.

5. TAYLOR admitted that they had to think more and more about China which may one day be a nuclear power. Prime Minister admitted that this might have psychological effect on us. TAYLOR said that missile development and nuclear bombs in Chinese hands for quite some time would really only have a symbolic effect. BOWLES said that they might explode bomb in 1964 or two or three years later.

6. Bowles last night had told me at dinner that they might not raise Seventh Fleet issue at all but TAYLOR mentioned the Seventh Fleet and said that judging by newspaper speculation newspapers claimed to have all information before the Government. He said that they had been “considering” the advisability of a carrier plus some other naval vessels cruising in these areas,..........................................................

SECOND AND LAST PART TO FOLLOW

SECOND AND LAST PART  (Received 18th December)

.....but whether this would be approved by the U.S. Government or not they did not know. It was not the entire Seventh Fleet which was to cruise the Indian Ocean. U.S. had commitments in certain other countries and they were thinking in terms of a carrier task force of four or five naval vessels. BOWLES added that they might call for instance at some of the African ports and this would give the American Navy some experience of the region. BOWLESS pointed out that one or two American Naval vessels had called at Indian ports in 1953 and they had played football etc. Prime Minister did not comment on all this. Later however when newspapers asked Prime Minister whether Seventh Fleet had been discussed he said that one or two ships might call at Indian ports, he meant by way of a courtesy visit.

7. In brief reference to Pakistan TAYLOR said Pakistan was not very happy with them. Pakistan could not look upon the problem in this region as a common problem involving everybody. Prime Minister said that we were distressed at Pakistan’s very friendly contacts with China while we were engaged in this conflict. TAYLOR said that he did not imagine that this meant any fundamental change in Pakistan’s policy. Prime minister explained how we had repeatedly offered a No-War declaration which Pakistan had not accepted. TAYLOR stressed that AYUB as soldier should be able to appreciate the indivisibility of the problem.

8. TAYLOR then spoke about the possible effect of the expansion of the Army on India’s economic development. He said that although he was a soldier he had learnt to realise that the demands of the army had to be balanced in the context of the economy in any and every country. The USA had really taken ten years for their army to be effective and some long term planning was always necessary. This appears to be TAYLOR’S main thesis and he has spoken on these lines to the Finance Minister, the Defence Minister and others also. In a meeting with the Cabinet Secretary where BHOOTHALINGAM, RAO and I were present he ended by saying that he was getting a clearer picture as a result of these discussions.

Your telegram 1229, December 19.

We are extremely surprised at the line GEORGE BALL has taken with you in this discussion, particularly in regard to our purchasing Soviet arms and equipment. This question has been discussed threadbare in the past in GALBRAITH’s time after the Chinese attack and we legitimately worked on the assumption that the U.S. accepted the position not only that we have to repeat have to take Soviet aid but it would be in our interest for the Soviet Union to come to India’s assistance against China.

3. The security aspect has also been discussed threadbare in the past and a U.S. Service Team visited India in April to go into this matter carefully and went back completely satisfied that there was no danger whatever of American equipment secrets finding their way to the U.S.S.R. through India. As you know, the MIG factories are being located in Korupet and Nasik, far removed from areas where any American equipment is or can be in use.
4. L.K.JHA has pointed out that in regard to our purchase of defence equipment against our own foreign exchange, you may bear in mind three, factors: (a.) Some of our equipment, including aircraft, being of French origin, spares have necessarily to be obtained from France where no aid is available; (b) so far Britain has refused to agree in principle to financing any defence production equipment under its defence aid funds or even to offer extended credits for them; and (c) for certain types of equipment to which we attach the highest importance, e.g. fighter aircraft and ground-to-air missiles, the U.S.S.R. has so far been the only country willing to help us.

5. Apart from my talk with BOWLES on 12th December (my telegram No.24596 dated 14th December) in which there was…………………………

SECOND AND LAST PART TO FOLLOW

SECOND and LAST PART (ALSO RECEIVED ON DECEMBER 20TH)

………….hint that TAYLOR might expect us to agree to commitments in Asia to contain China in the practical military field, (as it were this matter has not been raised) again. In TAYLOR's various discussions there was not the slightest suggestion that the US expected anything like this from us. In fact, I am surprised that TAYLOR was completely silent on this in spite of BOWLES' fairly clear warning to me to expect this.

6. You must speak to DEAN RUSK and ALEXIS JOHNSON very clearly on this and say that it will be completely against our policy, well known to our American friends to seriously consider the condition that they are now attempting to impose on us that we should not purchase Soviet arms and equipments today, or in the future. There should be no doubt whatever left in American minds on our unequivocal stand that we must be free to exercise our right to purchase arms wherever we consider this necessary particularly such arms and equipment as are not likely to be made available by our western friends.

7. I have a feeling that all this may be a prelude to a decision to supply more F-104 aircraft to Pakistan and deny them to us on grounds of security, accompanied by the suggestion that we are after all going in for Soviet MIG planes. There was some rumour yesterday that TAYLOR had been told that the MIG Project had been abandoned. We have unequivocally denied this and have said that the MIG project is progressing satisfactorily.

8. On who is right and wrong between India and Pakistan, since October 1962 at least you have ample material. With the departure of General MAXWELL TAYLOR, Pakistan has agreed to a cease-fire in Lobacherra yesterday, having de facto ceased fire in Dumabari three days ago.

FIRST OF FOUR PARTS

B.K.NEHRU from GUNDEVIA.

Summary of record of Finance Minister’s discussion with General MAXWELL TAYLOR:

General MAXWELL TAYLOR called on the Finance Minister at 1050 AM on 17th December 1963. The discussion (with the Minister) lasted for about 80 minutes. General TAYLOR was accompanied by Ambassador CHESTER BOWLES, Mr. C.TYLER WOOD, Lieutenant General STRICKLAND Major General KELLY Major General GOODPASTOR and Colonel JORDON. Shri S. BHOTHALINGAM Secretary Coordination Shri L.K.JHA Secretary Economic Affairs Shri S. SOUNDRARAJAN from the Ministry of Defence and Shri S.GUHAN were also present.

2. General TAYLOR began by saying that he had come to India for his own personal education and for an exchange of views. President JOHNSON was greatly interested in the Defence of the sub continent and since his preoccupations would not allow him to come he had requested General TAYLOR to visit the area. His special interest was in the field of the combined operations of the army, Air Force and Navy and he wished to understand how this was tackled in India. The US Military Aid Programme to India has also to be dovetailed with the overall global strategy of the US Administration. He would be grateful for Minister’s views on this aspect of the matter.

3. The Finance Minister said that with the onset of the emergency, defence expenditure had to be stepped up from 2 to 5% of the national income. In absolute terms, this was not too high a level in comparison with other countries of the world, but the increase from the previous level was appreciable. The choice that faced us in the case of army was either to have a somewhat large force or a relatively smaller one with greater mobility and the holding of larger stocks of equipment and ammunition at different places. Although immediately after the emergency we had withdrawn almost all our forces from the Punjab on the Pakistan front, we cannot obviously leave this frontier unguarded. It is in this context that we have to determine the force strength of the army. Lord MOUNTBATTEN when he had been in India, had been of the view that the force strength we need might be of the order of 17 divisions but in total numbers he had mentioned a figure of over a million. But the 21 division force which we now envisage would consist of only 850,000 men or so. In the case of the Air Force, the most..................

SECOND OF FOUR PARTS (Also received on December 21)

most important need was for a fast fighter plane. The recent joint air exercise had underlined this need. In the case of the navy, we were almost in a position of 'starting from the scratch'. The rupee cost in the next year’s budget for defence may not be higher than the outlay this year, but the foreign exchange requirement for capital investment in production machinery, for raw materials and for equipment that would have to be imported would be heavy. We now have a picture of our total requirements and also of our own production capabilities.

4. General TAYLOR then enquired as to the order of the foreign exchange resources which the Government of India would be able to spare in future years for defence. Secretary (Coordination) pointed out that prior to the emergency the allocations of foreign exchange for defence had been of the order of dollars 80 (80) million and this might have to go up to dollars 200(200) million in the current year. The real expenditure of foreign exchange was in fact higher than this since part of it had been found by diversion from civilian consumption. The Finance Minister said that it would not be possible to sustain an allotment of dollars 200 or 250 million in the future years. The minimum requirements for the maintenance of the civilian economy had to be met. On a long term basis, it would be difficult to spare more than a 100 million dollars or so per year for Defence.

5. General TAYLOR wanted to know whether the U.K. had given us any assistance so far in regard to aircraft. The Finance Minister replying to him, dwelt on the factors that inhibited the U.K. from giving any significant assistance to India. Firstly, their own economic situation and balance of payment position were not particularly comfortable. Secondly, the U.K. had vital interests in Hong Kong and were interested to expand their trade with China. Thirdly, the affiliation between the U.K. and Muslim World, generally, and with Pakistan, in particular, had a certain historical basis. The coming year would be an election year in Britain and therefore a difficult year for aid. Even if a change in the Government came about, it may not be wise for India to expect any significant assistance from the U.K. in the absence of a crisis. This was the background to the Minister’s request to President KENNEDY not to insist on a matching basis from the U.K. and the Commonwealth for extending U.S. military aid to India.

6. Finance Minister said, in continuation, that he for one was not inclined to underrated the threat from China. General TAYLOR agreed wholeheartedly that the threat was of a long term character and was bound to remain for quite sometime. The actual military threat at any point of time in this period is however a matter conditioned by logistic and other problems.

7. The Finance Minister……………………………………………………………

THIRD OF FOUR PARTS (also received on December 21)

7. The Finance Minister then referred to the possibilities of Chinese attack. The hill-tribes in Assam and affiliations with their brethren in Burma, the neck leading to Assam was strategically very vulnerable. The oil fields in Assam which had a potentiality of over 6 million tons were a great temptation to the Chinese. There was evidence of a number of strong Chinese concentrations at various points on the border. The danger of infiltration was very real. The need therefore of adequate vigilance over a long border necessitated the maintenance of a large force and the size of the force was not capable of reduction without substantially larger facilities for transportation by air rail and road. We were taking steps to improve the transportation facilities. The sanctioning of a new broad gauge railway line in Assam and of a long lateral road were of some of the steps that had been taken.

8. One other factor was the grave economic situation in East Pakistan. The infiltration of Pakistani nationals into Assam, Tripura and West Bengal had introduced a rather volatile population in these areas. Self-Government would eventually resolve the Naga problem, but this would take time. As a result of all these factors the situation on the eastern sector was one of great concern.

9. Mr. CHESTER BOWLES wished to know what effect a possible Chinese invasion of Burma would have on India. The Finance Minister replied that if it took place we would be seriously affected. In this connection he mentioned that his information was that the Stillwell road was still usable. To a question from General TAYLOR, the Minister said that probably about 45000 Chinese ‘farmers’ had infiltrated into Burma and there was some information that another 20,000 had come in recently. General TAYLOR wanted to know if the Government of India had had any discussions with the Burmese Government on the matter of infiltration by Chinese elements. The Minister replied that there was perhaps not much point in taking this up with the Burmese Government as it was doubtful to what extent the present Government at Rangoon had control over the entire country.

10. MR CHESTER BOWLES then enquired what India’s attitude would be to Chinese aggression elsewhere in Asia, for example, Thailand. The Finance Minister said that if Indian forces had by then been sufficiently strengthened, such an occasion might provide an opportunity for India to regain loss of the territory. But India would be unable and could not contemplate any supporting action outside Indian territory.

11. To a question …………………………………………………

FOURTH AND LAST PART (also received on December 21)

11. To a question from General KELLY, the Finance Minister outlined our plans in respect of the MIG-21 and HF-24. On the Air Force side, there was an urgent requirement for supersonic fighters and this had been fully brought out by the recent joint air exercises. The Chief of Air Staff had, at one stage, put down a requirement for 64 Squadrons but Government had not taken a firm decision in the matter as the demand was far in excess of the resources in sight in this field.

12. General TAYLOR, by way of summing up, wished to know if it would be correct to say that our immediate programme was for the modernisation and equipment of 16 divisions by the end of next year with the rupee defence expenditure at about the same level as in the current year and by foreign exchange allocation of about $125 million. These assumptions would reveal the gap that will have to be filled by aid. Secretary (Coordination) clarified that the figure of about $125 million was what we could at the most afford for the entire defence reeds and was no indication at all of what was necessary. Priority had to be given for defence production as this would in the long run minimise the need for external assistance. He mentioned that an investment of $200 million in defence production for munitions would represent a more or less realistic need. The Finance Minister underlined this and pointed out that the import of ammunition for one year came to roughly the foreign exchange cost of the plant for manufacturing it. In the matter of tanks, we were in need of a light tank suitable for the terrain in the Eastern and Western sectors. There will also have to be investment in electronics and perhaps in another type of supersonic aircraft in addition to the MIG-21 and the HF-24.

13. General TAYLOR then referred to the possibility of China being able to produce a nuclear weapon and enquired what repercussion it would have on India. The Finance Minister replied that it would not be possible for India to meet a large scale and intensive threat unaided. If for instance our cities are bombed, it is crucial that we should have some capability to repulse the attack at least to a limited extent. General TAYLOR intervened to say that he was personally sure that if any of the Indian cities were bombed the U.S. Administration would come to our aid.

14. The Finance Minister then referred to the fluid position in many of the countries in the South East Asia area and in particular to the anti-Indian attitude of the Government and the press in Pakistan, in contrast with the friendly feelings for each other at the level of the common people in both Pakistan and India. The possibility of China and Pakistan collaborating to attack India could not be dismissed and so long as it remained, adequate mobilisation on the part of India was inevitable. General TAYLOR in conclusion said that he appreciated these factors and would only point out that the involvement of the U.S. in this area should prove a deterrent to the kind of threat referred to by the Minister.

(FIRST, SECOND, THIRD OF SIX PARTS)

B.K.NEHRU from GUNDEVIA.

Gen. TAYLOR paid a call on the Secretary General and the Foreign Secretary at 5.15 P.M. on the December 17th. He was accompanied by Mr. CHESTER BOWLES, U.S. Ambassador, Mr. GREENE Minister-Counsellor of the U.S. Embassy and General ANDREW GOODPASTER, Aide to General MAXWELL TAYLOR. Shri M.G.KAUL JS(EA) and Shri S. SOUANDRARAJAN Deputy Secretary, Ministry of Defence were also present.

2. General TAYLOR mentioned that he had come to India to acquaint himself at first had with condition here and with our policies and programmes in the context of the Chinese threat. He was particularly desirous to know of the plans prepared on the short-term as well as the long-term basis.

3. The Secretary General said that General TAYLOR had doubtless been informed by the various experts whom he had met earlier in the day about the details of these plans. He himself was only a lay man: as a lay man, however, he had certain clear ideas regarding the priorities by which we should be governed in framing these plans. He felt sure that the battle against China would be won or lost on the economic front. Ultimately it was a question of preserving our way of life and our political institutions, thereby demonstrating their superiority over the Chinese system. Therefore, it was absolutely necessary to continue with our plans of economic development, and to divert for the military buildup only the minimum resources essential for this purpose.

4. Various assessments, he said, had been made of the strength of Chinese forces in Tibet. Some people thought that these numbered about 175 thousand and the others put the figure at 125 thousand. He himself felt that the exact number of these troops was really not a matter of crucial importance. What was important was that the Chinese pressure will continue, extent and size of the physical pressure being limited only by topography and logistic difficulties. What we had to build up was adequate manpower to be able to resist this pressure both in the short term and for the future. In this context the quality of the men and the mobility which could be achieved in their deployment was of the greatest importance. General TAYLOR said that he was in full agreement with this view. The Secretary General went on to say that an adequate network of roads on the border which would ensure the mobility of our troops was essential. It was also absolutely necessary that our troops should be properly armed and equipped. To ensure this it was essential to have an adequate defence production base in this country. These were therefore our highest priorities.

5. It was also necessary and this we have been working towards, to have a coordinated administration all along the border area’s as also a rapid development programme, so that the border people should feel that they have something of value to protect. There had to be an administration where bureaucratic red tape was eliminated, grievances were quickly redressed, and the hill people of these areas felt free from any danger of exploitation by people from the plains. All this had to be coordinated by the Government of India.

6. General Taylor then enquired what had led China to attack India in October 1962. The Secretary General explained that the reason for this attack was not merely the acquisition of more territory. In fact, the Chinese had already been in possession of, before the attack, of almost the entire territory which they wanted in Ladakh. From our side all that they were facing were small armed pickets in the form of a few additional Check posts, who were disputing Chinese possession of about 2500 square miles of territory to the East of Karakoram range. The attack was primarily due to other reasons. One factor was their desire to demonstrate to countries in this region that India was a weak country which could easily be pushed about, while China militarily was a power to reckon with. Another objective was to throw India off her posture of non-alignment. The Chinese in their quarrel with Soviet Russia had always maintained that there were no non-aligned countries and they had kept pressing Russia for this reason not to give assistance to India. Russia had also held this view till 1952, and America had held it till about 1957. Thus one of the objectives of the Chinese attack was to drive India into the arms of the Western camp and thereby force Russia to change this policy and, support only China economically and financially and not India or any other non-aligned country. China had also anticipated that as a result of their attack there would be a violent emotional reaction in India which would force the Government to divert its resources on a military buildup with consequent breakdown in economic development programmes. In both these calculations they had been mistaken. Very soon after the attack the Prime Minister had come out with a very clear statement to the effect that India would continue her policy of non-alignment and would continue to pursue her plans of economic development while undertaking additional sacrifices to build up the minimum defence potential required to meet the Chinese threat along the borders.

7. General TAYLOR then enquired the reasons for the Sino-Soviet rift, and its effect on the Chinese attitude towards India. The Secretary General said that a clash between the Soviet Union and China was to some extent inherent. China was over populated and had a very long border with Russia, which was comparatively an under populated country. This by itself was a danger to Russia and the integrity of her borders. China by virtue of its population of 700 million people was determined to make a bid for leadership of the communist world, and to extend its influence over South East Asia and the newly emerging countries in Africa and South America. This again was against Russia’s interests. Russia as a matter of policy had therefore befriended non-aligned countries. China’s attack on India was to an extent also directed against Russia to force her to change this policy.
8. General TAYLOR stated that within a year or two it was possible that China would explode a nuclear device. He added that it was a long way between exploding nuclear device and having an effective nuclear weapons system. Even the exploding of a nuclear device was bound however to have some effect and he wanted to know what the effect would be on India. The Secretary General said that the effect would be greater on the countries of SEA than on India because Indians knew that they possessed the nuclear know-how even if, as a matter of policy, India did not manufacture nuclear weapons. The capacity was there and that was a reassuring factor. Foreign Secretary said that such an explosion by China would undoubtedly lead to a demand within the country for India also to develop and manufacture nuclear weapons. The Secretary General agreed that this was so and that is why Government of India particularly welcomed the Partial Test Ban Treaty and the world wide support it had received.

9. General TAYLOR then enquired whether we were concerned about the reported infiltration of Chinese nationals into Northern Burma. The Foreign Secretary said we were certainly concerned about this. An imminent difficulty here was that the Burmese Government's writ did not run in North Burma, and the States in Northern Burma were hostile to the Government at Rangoon.

FOURTH OF SIX PARTS (also received on December 21)

Between the areas of Northern Burma and the adjoining areas of China there had always been a certain amount of traffic. The Secretary General recalled that a few months ago a contingent of 300 Chinese troops had come across Northern Burma towards the borders of the Tirap Division of N(orth E(ast) Frontier Agency). The Burmese Government had heard about this and had lodged a strong protest with the Chinese Government. The Chinese government had agreed to the withdrawal of these troops rather reluctantly but they had taken their own time as long as two or three months — to effect this withdrawal. This was a clear indication of the weakness of the Burmese Government in its administration of the Northern Burma, of which the Chinese could and would take advantage. The Secretary General added that the developments during the last six weeks in Burma were rather reassuring. NE WIN has given up negotiations with these leftist tribal groups and is firmer in his handling of them. It is to be seen whether the tougher policy can and will be effectively enforced.

10. The discussion then went on to the Nagas. The Secretary General explained in some detail the history of the Nagas, culminating in the formation of the present Nagaland State. General TAYLOR enquired whether there was any link up between the Nagas and the Chinese, to which Secretary General replied that there was no particular link up with the Chinese but arms from U.K. were reaching the hostiles through East Pakistan with Pakistan assistance. General TAYLOR enquired of the number of such hostiles. Secretary General informed him that this was about 2,500 out of a total population of 350,000. The ranks of the hostiles were, however, replenished by occasional kidnapping. Foreign Secretary mentioned that while in the old days these Nagas had been armed with spears, today they had modern weapons. Some of these weapons were those which were left behind by the Japanese, but now they were also being supplied with modern arms and ammunition from East Pakistan. This seemed to surprise General TAYLOR.

11. General TAYLOR then enquired of the position regarding NEFA. He was told this was administered directly by the Governor of Assam on behalf of the Government of India. He also wanted to know about defence arrangements relating to Nepal, Sikkim and Bhutan. Secretary General said that Sikkim’s defence, foreign affairs and communications were our responsibility and we had our own troops there. Bhutan was an independent country but we had a defence understanding with them and were assisting them with training and equipment; Nepal was fully independent. General TAYLOR remarked that all this made the problem of border defence very complicated. Secretary General said.

FIFTH OF SIX PARTS (also received on December 21)

…… said that this was certainly so. It made the Chinese task of subversion and infiltration in the border areas “easier. This further underlined the importance of having a coordinated administration all along the border to deal with the security development and communications of this region.

12. General TAYLOR then mentioned that Defence Secretary Macnamara had introduced a five-year programme for the US armed forces; he felt that such a system or plan could be useful for us also. The Secretary General said that we had already prepared a three year plan for defence. The financial load for this was certainly very heavy; if we were to maintain our pace of development a considerable amount of assistance in the military sphere from friendly countries like the US would be necessary. General TAYLOR said, again that the build-up like the one we planned should be carefully phased. If everything was sought to be done at the same time not only this would mean very heavy expenditure which might dislocate our economic plans, but it would create complications later. As an instance, if a very large number of officers were recruited at the same time this would result in a degree of imbalance in the armed forces. The buildup should be effected gradually over a period of time.
In the same context he wanted to assure us that against China India did not stand alone. The US was with her and India could always rely on US for assistance and support.

13. The discussion then turned to the best manner in which, to deal with China. Secretary General said that the U.S had paid a great deal of attention to providing military assistance to countries bordering China, like South Vietnam, Laos etc. This however was not enough, all these countries till very recently, and even now, were ruled by oligarchies. In the social structure in these countries there was no strong middle class which would provide the nationalist urge necessary to put up real resistance to China and Chinese ideology. It was necessary, therefore, through adequate development measures and other administrative reforms to set about creating a responsible and stable middle class in these countries. General TAYLOR agreed with this view but said that this would take a good 20 years or so, and, in the meantime, it was necessary to buy time.

14. In regard to China itself, the Secretary General said that the western nations must ‘develop a coordinated policy after deciding on which lines they wanted China to develop. One alternative was to boycott her completely. If this was done China would be forced to toe the Russian lines. This is what the USSR wanted.

The……………………………………………………

SIXTH AND LAST PART (also received on December 21)

The other alternative was to support China and build her up at a counter-weight to Russia. The result of such a policy would be that China would become the cat among the pigeons; a country not likely to conform to the cannons of civilised behaviour and a power which no other nation or group of nations would be able to control adequately. Another, and better alternative was to continue to trade with China, develop contacts and keep her going, but not to build her up industrially. If China wanted food for her people, this should be sold. If she wanted fertilizer for better food production, this could be sold. If she wanted oil with which to keep her economy running, this might also be sold. But she should not be assisted in setting up plants and industries which would enable her to become self-sufficient industrially. The Western countries were now providing China with Petro-Chemical plants, fertilizer plants etc. this was dangerous move, and it was this kind of Industrial build-up that must be avoided, if any control on China was to be maintained. This was admittedly a difficult thing for the different Governments of Western nations to agree upon, and coordinate. It could be achieved by an understanding among the captains of Industry of Western countries, and this understanding was an objective which should consequently be worked towards.
15. In conclusion, Foreign Secretary said he had been very happy to see that General TAYLOR, though a soldier, was laying so much stress on economic development, which we had always regarded as of the highest importance. If India was to pursue its plans of economic development, and yet maintain its security, it was quite clear that considerable assistance both on the economic and the military fronts, was necessary from friendly countries, particularly the U.S.

16. The meeting ended with the usual expressions of mutual goodwill.

TAYLOR’S Visit

Very many thanks for your telegrams 24311 dated December 20 and 24312 and 24313 of December 21.

2. I met RUSK at 11.00a.m. on the 20th which was before your telegrams had arrived. I nevertheless raised with him the point about not purchasing equipment from the Soviet Union, expressed my surprise at what BALL had told me, enquired why there had been this change in American policy, as we had so far understood it and pointed out that this would involve changing our policy of non-alignment which he well knew we would not do.

3. He seemed somewhat surprised that BALL should have said what he did and said that not having seen the papers, he would not like to express himself on the subject. He would, however, try to arrange that before I left somebody should see me to explain the position clearly. Such a meeting has been set for tomorrow with TALBOT.

4. Pending what TALBOT tells me, the situation seems to me to be this:

(a) The Americans have decided to give us long-term military aid;

(b) The quantum and quality of this aid will be dependent upon the global strategy of the United States of which the defence of India against China is a part;

(c) There is a difference of opinion within the American Administration as to the price to be extracted for this aid. Possible prices are:

   (i) An Indian undertaking to help the United States psychologically and militarily in South East Asia;

   (ii) an Indian rapprochement with Pakistan to be arrived at through an alteration of our stand in Kashmir;

   (iii) an abandonment of non-alignment or a modification of it to such an extent as to make it meaningless.

5. These prices are not to be extracted all at once, but this is the direction in which American policies over the years will move. Pressures will be brought on us, requests will be made, sometimes bluntly and harshly, sometimes gently and diplomatically, sometimes with one individual contradicting another, but all working in the same direction. It is for us to settle on our responses.

6. I might make it clear that there is no present demand that we should abandon our Soviet and other purchases. This demand will be made, if at all, when we start talking about placing long-term aid on an organised basis, instead of the present ad hoc basis.

7. In regard to F-104s, there is a rumour that the U.S has already bought fifty of these planes for eventual delivery both to India and Pakistan. On the other hand, there is also a rumour that TAYLOR offered a new plane, FA .5, which has been specially designed for MAP countries, to Pakistan as a replacement for their obsolescent F-86s. All this is, however, unverified.

Your telegram 1237 December 22, to Gundevia on Taylor’s visit.

2. When you meet TALBOT you should, if an opportunity arises in the talks, give the following reactions to the three points mentioned in (c) of para 4 of your telegram:

   1. While we will be always willing and glad to exchange views with the United States on the problems in South East Asia in the context of the Chinese threat, there can be no question of India undertaking any military commitments. The strength of the Indian defence position vis-à-vis China should by itself be an important stabilising factor in South East Asia.

   2. There can be no question of any alteration of our stand on Kashmir vis-à-vis Pakistan to placate the United States. We cannot similarly alter our stand vis-à-vis China to placate USSR or any other country.

   3. Non alignment and promotion of peace and settlement of differences by peaceful means will continue to be a basic principle of our foreign policy. Similarly planned economic development on the basis of maintenance of parliamentary democratic institutions will continue to be our policy at home consistently with the objective laid down in the Preamble in our Constitution.

3. Prime Minister is on tour but you could give the above as your firm clear reactions so that the U.S. authorities understand clearly that pressures whether open or camouflaged will not make any impact on these basic positions.

4. Gundevia is sending you two separate telegrams on the Seventh Fleet, which subject also you should discuss on lines suggested.

1. I saw TALBOT this evening at his request. The State Department had expressed inability to arrange an interview for me with the President before I left and I was designedly curt. (I shall take this matter up separately with you as it has some serious implications).

2. He asked me what new I had discovered about American policy towards India as a result of my visits with various people. I said I had hung round Washington so long that it was wholly unnecessary for me to visit people to discover what the Americans were thinking. However, I had discovered something new in that Mr. BALL had said that the United States did not favour our getting Russian equipment for our defence forces. Had I understood Mr. BALL correctly?

3. He said the American attitude on Soviet arms for India would depend on a variety of factors, e.g., co-mingling, security compatibility and the number of Soviet technicians they got with them. There would also of course be reactions of Congress to consider. I said this was somewhat different from the impression I had got from Mr. BALL. These objections had been made known to us earlier and there was nothing new in them. He said that was so, but they would appreciate it if we continued to keep them informed of what we were getting from the Russians.

4. It seems to me that GEORGE BALL either went somewhat beyond his brief or that having been instructed to try this one on the Department had retreated on getting our reactions. (I got the impression I had got from that WILLIAM BUNDY at least was unaware of my conversations with BALL).

In my conversations today with DAVID BELL BUNDY and TALBOT, all three raised the point of our “enormous expenditure” of foreign exchange from free resources on defence. TAYLOR’s report seems to have been that we have spent 250 million dollars on this account.

2. My information derives from paragraph 4 of your 24312 dated December 21 and is not very clear. I would be grateful if you could let me know the foreign exchange (a) allocation; (b) commitment and (c) disbursement over the last five years and our estimates for 1963/64.

2. I am sorry I seem to have given you the impression that the Americans were actually asking us to do the things mentioned in paragraph 4(c). WHAT I said in paragraphs 4 and 5 of my telegram was my own assessment of the long term aims of American policy. Nobody has raised this matter with me nor is ever likely to raise it in the terms that I have used. I did not therefore raise these issues specifically with Talbot this evening.

3. I have today seen DAVID BELL, WILLIAM BUNDY and JAMES ROOSEVELT in addition to Talbot and am sending separately reports on these conversations.

B. K. Nehru from Gundevia.

You must have seen Morsecasts and press reports on continuous argument in Parliament on the Seventh Fleet on December 13, 17, 19 and 21st and day to day newspapers speculation and comments on the subject from the first obviously inspired leak from Washington in Times of India of December 12. Morsecasts have conveyed to you Prime Minister’s statement in Lok Sabha on December 13, Rajya Sabha on December 17, Lok Sabha on December 19 and Rajya Sabha on December 21. Latter was more detailed because BHUPESH GUPTA had raised the question of Government of India’s policy on the issue. I am telegraphing separately some abstracts from the Hansard of what the Prime Minister has had to say in reply in these discussions in Parliament.

2. It is quite impossible for us to understand why this important issue should have been so badly handled by the State Department. When BOWLES spoke to me on December 12 after the first leak from Washington in Times of India that morning all he said was that he had no instructions on the subject and MAXWELL TAYLOR would talk to us about this. I had said that our official spokesman would not say that the Ocean was after all open to any body. But you will see that the Prime Minister had to say this in Parliament consistently with the fact that we did not consider it necessary to “protest” to the United States for this move.

3. Had we been asked, informed or consulted about this by the State Department, as in courtesy at least they should have done, we would have advised against the move, because we could have easily anticipated that this would not be welcomed by any of the non-aligned nations in Asia and Africa, and America does respect non-aligned opinion in this region. All this crude newspaper diplomacy has given China ample material in her attempt to try and persuade Asian-African opinion that India is no longer seriously non-aligned. Absurd as this may be, providing any material to China for our relatively more naive African friends harms us undoubtedly and has done us damage. Timing of the leak, whatever the explanation, was also most unfortunate, in that it just proceeded MAXWELL TAYLOR’s visit and our Parliament was in session which was certain to discuss the issue.

4. We would like you to discuss all this with GEORGE BALL, at least, and others and tell them that although we have not said anything openly against the preposition, since no firm decision has apparently yet been taken by the State Department on the question of extension of the operational area of the Seventh Fleet to the Indian Ocean, we consider it necessary to press our view that this will serve no useful purpose whatever and it will damage Western reputation in this region, particularly among the non-aligned Asian-African countries.

4. On December 19, in Lok Sabha, when pressed Prime Minister said that there was no question of the U.S. Government “referring the matter to us. It depends on what they are going to do…. It is just possible (that they are trying) to impress the countries roundabout that they are there some justification, there may be. But they are not coming to India”.

5. He also said “I do not think any particular concern need be caused to the countries here. If the Hon’ble member takes the countries one by one, most of the countries in South East Asia are more or less allied to the U.S. Government......I do not say all, but most of them are, and some of them are not. It is possible that some people may feel a little nervous about it”. Asked if all this might not be an invitation to the other powers, particularly antagonistic to us, to do the same and jeopardize our security, the Prime Minister said:” I doubt very much if that would be such an invitation. I doubt very much if there is any other power which is capable of sending a considerable number of ships roundabout here.”

Your 24320 dated 23rd December. Seventh Fleet

2. Your telegram arrived this morning. The Christmas Season has already started and many people are not available. If one sees any body but the area Assistant Secretary, a brief has to be prepared for the officer concerned and an interview is, therefore, not possible at short notice. In any case, BALL would not be the proper person to see on this one; I therefore saw TALBOT.
3. I explained to him whatever you have said, reading out in fact certain passages from paragraphs 3 and 4 of your telegram. TALBOT was somewhat mystified as the impression hitherto had been here from the Prime Minister’s statements that we did not object to TAYLOR’S proposal. As for the leakage TALBOT said that our annoyance was nothing compared to that of the State Department.

4. A decision on whether or not a unit would to the Indian Ocean was waiting for a report from General TAYLOR and this was the last missing piece in the project. TAYLOR had met the President yesterday, but TALBOT did not know whether a final decision had been taken or not. TAYLOR was going to meet the State Department day after tomorrow and our views would before then have been reported to the highest level.

5. As seen from here, Ceylon has objected on the ground that this would introduce nuclear weapons as well as the cold war in the Indian Ocean, Indonesia has vigorously objected in public though ALEXIS JOHNSON told me that in private conversation with Admiral RICKETTS, SUBANDRIO had looked upon the proposal with favour, Pakistan has adopted a ‘wait and see’ attitude and Malaysia has no objection. TALBOT said that from their point of view they had thought that this move would be helpful to India and in no case harmful.

2176. Record of the talks between Sheikh Abdullah and Indian Officials on Kashmir at the Prime Minister’s House.

New Delhi, May 8, 1964.

We the Foreign Secretary (Mr. Gundevia), the Indian High Commissioner in Pakistan, (Mr. Parthasarathi), and the Vice-Chancellor, Aligarh Muslim University (Mr. Tyabji) had a long conversation with Sheikh Abdullah this morning at the Prime Minister’s House.

2. The main points which emerged were: (a) the Sheikh’s reiterated desire to solve the Kashmir issue in a way which would promote Indo-Pakistan friendship and cooperation; (b) the Sheikh’s equal insistence on the solution being such that it did not, in any way, weaken the secular ideal of the Indian Constitution or the policy of its Government; (c) the third and again equal requirement that the solution should be one which would not weaken the position of the minorities in either India or in Pakistan, but brought about a greater sense of security and welfare to them.
3. The Sheikh said that he did not wish, for the present at any rate, to take upon himself active responsibility for the Kashmir Administration as he wished to concentrate on this larger issue unhampered by administrative responsibilities. He would support the Sadiq Government provided that they worked for the good of the Kashmir people and kept the Administration clean. He had no desire to take “revenge” against members of the previous Government, and thought that any action which had to be taken against Bakshi Ghulam Mohammad for his misdeeds was a matter for the present Kashmir Government or the Government of India.

4. The image of his, painted over the past decade by the Bakshi Government as pro-Pakistani an agitator for a plebiscite and anti-Indian, had sunk deep in the consciousness of the people of the Valley, particularly of the younger generation which had not known him, personally, of old. As a result, all the anti-Indian elements which, according to him, were now in a majority in the Valley had rallied to him, and he had gradually to win them over on the basis of an ideology which appealed to their self-respect and did not go contrary to his own which he described as “Gandhian”. He had, therefore, to be cautious in his references to India as the image of India had been so tarnished by the Bakshi regime. It would take time to bring this change about and he needed help and sympathy in his effort to do so.

5. He was opposed to a mid-term election in Kashmir because he was not sure whether he could win over the pro-Pakistani element to his side so quickly. It would be too dangerous a risk to take, because there were also certain strong elements which would come out openly in favour of accession to Pakistan.

6. He wished for this purpose to be furnished with some formula for the solution of the Kashmir question which, while resting on the three fundamentals referred to in paragraph 1 above, should yet be one which would be acceptable to Pakistan, or at least which they could not turn out of hand without damning themselves in the eyes of world public opinion. At the time when he was arrested in 1953, various alternatives for the solution of the Kashmir problem had been evolved by a Special Committee which he had set up, and which Included Bakshi Ghulam Mohammad and Ghulam Mohammad Sadiq. Actually, it was Bakahi Ghulam Mohammad himself who had suggested giving the Valley of Kashmir an independent status, guaranteed by India, Pakistan, USSR and China while ‘Azad Kashmir’ went to Pakistan, and the Jammu area to India.

7. The Sheikh emphasised that he was not wedded to any particular solution, but would like to have one or two alternative solutions which should be such as would reasonably satisfy Pakistan. He would then go over to Pakistan and discuss them with Pakistan leaders, and if he was able to make any progress there, the matter could be further progressed by the Prime Minister of India.
and the President of Pakistan. Acharya Vinoba Bhave had suggested a Confederation between India, Pakistan and Kashmir, while Rajaji thought that this idea was too ambitious for present implementation and, therefore, we should think of a Condominium over Kashmir by India and Pakistan, Defence and External Affairs being the joint responsibility of the two Governments.

8. We pointed out to the Sheikh that the Condominium idea would not work with the radical divergence in the foreign policies of the two Governments, and their defence needs in relation to China. So far as the Confederation idea was concerned, this might be worth pursuing, if Pakistan had any interest in it, and they did not think that it was merely a trap for reviving the conception of Akhand Bharat. In any event, we impressed on him the need for considering the Kashmir question as one essentially bound up with the question of the welfare of the minorities in both India and Pakistan. This question of minorities concerned the whole sub-continent and both the major communities and was, at present, most acute between East Pakistan and West Bengal. Therefore, any rapprochement between India and Pakistan on the Kashmir issue could only be on the basis of arrangements made in all the major areas of the sub-continent where the minority question impinged most. If Pakistan showed any eagerness to settle the Kashmir question in this context, immediate ad hoc measures could be taken to deal with them, and then step by step they could be given legal and constitutional form. Joint bodies could be set up in various areas for dealing with the entry, exit, resettlement, etc. of families and communities divided owing to partition; the passport and visa system could be liberalised, and other measures taken with the above object of bringing areas and people politically divided, closer to each other. (Mr. Tyabji had sent, the Sheikh a note on this previously, a copy of which is attached).

9. The Sheikh said that he would like to have some definite proposals to this effect as early as possible so that when he went back to Kashmir he could sell the idea to his people there, and later on to Pakistan.

10. The four alternatives, referred to in paragraph 6 above, according to Sheikh Abdullah, as reported in the STATESMAN of April 23, were:

1. An overall plebiscite in the whole of Jammu & Kashmir, including “Azad” Kashmir to determine whether the people wanted to join India or Pakistan or remain Independent;

2. outright independence of Jammu and Kashmir guaranteed by India, Pakistan, the UN and China;

3. a condominium between India and Pakistan; and

4. a modified version of the Dixon Plan — namely that Ladakh and Jammu should be merged with India while “Azad” Kashmir should be merged with Pakistan and a plebiscite held in the Kashmir Valley to decide whether the Valley wished to join India or Pakistan or remain independent.

NOTE OF SHRI B. F. H. B. TYABJI GIVEN TO SHEIKH ABDULLAH

In the welter of blood, passion mad sorrow which the sub-continent has witnessed in the last few months, sadly reminiscent of 1947, one or two things clearly stand out. They could be turned to advantage, if their significance was realised and we took the opportunity that they offer, for breaking through the stalemate that has bedeviled the relations between various parts of the Sub-continent over the past seventeen years. I deliberately say, between ‘various parts of the Subcontinent’, rather than between India and Pakistan, as I wish to emphasise that the over-all political partition between the latter, is only one aspect of the problem - the most momentous, and perhaps the governing factor, but still only one of several.

More than ever before, I think, it is apparent that:

(A) The people of this Sub-continent are emotionally, culturally and socially so bound up with each other that no political boundaries can sever them. Obviously, religion, caste, creed and social habits play a predominantly role in determining this alignment. In any event, there is ample evidence to show that by and large the Hindus of India are more concerned with the fate of their co-religionists across the frontiers, who are in fact Pakistanis, than with what happens to Indian Muslims, though they are Indian nationals. This feeling is perhaps strongest in West Bengal regarding the Hindus in East Pakistan, but it is certainly not exclusive to it. Similarly, Pakistani Muslims are far more, if not only, concerned about the welfare of Indian Muslims than they are in that of their own Non-Muslim nationals.

These are facts which have to be faced as however much one may preach the desirability, from the national point of view, of people thinking otherwise, they still continue to do so, 17 years after their political Partition. And there is not the slightest indication that they will not continue to feel the same hereafter or that in moments of stress, this feeling will not find expression in actions, as deplorable as those we have just been witnessing. Let us not forget either, that these feelings were brought under control recently only by drastic punitive action taken by authority, and not by any upsurge of public opinion.

(B) The threat to the security of the Sub-continent not only through Internal rivalries and a struggle for power between the various people inhabiting it, or between India and Pakistan, but by extra-territorial forces; e.g. the Chinese. This has made most sensible people realise that the security of the Sub-continent is a joint responsibility, for all those in authority here, and that nothing is more dangerous for it than their mutual internal rivalries, as that will only pave the way, as they have in the past, for foreign domination.

To me, it seems that a realistic recognition now of these fundamental facts offers an opportunity for a drastic re-thinking of the whole relationship between India and Pakistan. The whole mistaken conception that the majority and minority in each country can live in splendid isolation from each other and their counter-parts in the other country must go. The Kashmir problem is an acute symptom of this malaise. Pakistan considers it the most crucial cause; India does not accept this, but both recognise its seriousness.

I have always held that the Kashmir problem is not one which affects only the people of Kashmir, or only one of the several constituent States of the Indian Union, but is one which affects the whole Sub-continent and all its people. It should, therefore, be dealt with in that context. And if, as Sheikh Abdullah rightly stresses, the settlement of the Kashmir problem should be one that would bring India and Pakistan closer to each other, then it must be dealt with along with similar problems which affect various other parts of the Sub-continent in the light of what has been urged in (A) above. Looked at in this light, we find that a similar problem arising out of partition exists in an acute form in three main areas:

(i) In Kashmir which is divided into two halves. Pakistan is more concerned about it than about any other area, because Kashmir has a majority of Muslim inhabitants! and the bulk of the Pakistanis are Muslims. It is a striking illustration of the point made in (A) above.

(ii) In West Bengal and East Pakistan-as a result of the partition of Bengal. Here too, what has been said in (A) above is clearly demonstrated by the reaction of the two major communities, whether living in Pakistan or in India, in regard to their splinters in the other.

(iii) In East and West Punjab-carved out of the old Punjab. Here, in one way, due to the induced exodus of practically all Hindus and Sikhs from West Punjab into India, and of Muslims from East Punjab into Pakistan, an uneasy equilibrium has been established, but the fire still simmer close under the surface. The majority of the Sikh Holy shrines are in West Punjab, and the call of language and blood between the Punjab peasantry forcibly suppressed still echoes across the frontier. It is not likely to die out in any conceivable future. At any moment of stress, a call to the Sikhs to fight a crusade to regain their Holy Places could drench the Punjab in blood again.
The above is the main issue between the two countries. The need for joint defence arises out of it. One can only join in defence when something that both parties cherish above all else is threatened, and that need overrides the urge to extract something from the other. If the latter feeling is predominant, as at present, then external danger is exploited in order to gain a strategic vantage point over the other, even at the risk of endangering oneself.

Therefore, the first point has to be tackled first; the second will follow almost automatically after the first has been resolved.

As the implementation of the decision to partition itself has abundantly shown, haste in such matters is full of pitfalls. One must hasten, but slowly. A moratorium must first be imposed on all Indo-Pakistan issues, and work begun on solving the main issue — symbolised by Kashmir for Pakistan, and the minorities problem for India - both of which mean the same thing, if the thesis enunciated at (A) above is accepted. And how can anyone fail to accept it, not only in the face of present day facts, but of the past? After all partition itself was only an attempt to solve it; and that it has not solved it is exactly what both India and Pakistan have been shouting at each other day in and day out for the past 17 years. And as Sheikh Abdullah says, this can only be solved now by bringing India and Pakistan closer to each other.

How is this to be done without impairing their sovereignty, their National dignity or their territorial integrity? Only by contributing to the common good - not by having to surrender to each other, but by voluntarily contributing to the benefit of the people of the whole Sub-continent. The solution has to be one which benefits all the people, and all the effected areas - not any one part of it or one community alone, or even different communities in different areas individually, but all communities all over the Sub-continent equally.

For this purpose, I would suggest

1. A moratorium of five years to begin with on all Inter-Government disputes between the two countries.

2. The setting up of India-Pakistan Regional Councils to deal with the common problems of the three partitioned former areas of Kashmir, the Punjab and Bengal. These Councils should deal with questions of citizenship, travel, migration, resettlement, property, economic links between the divided halves of the former territories etc. They should start functioning with the minimum powers necessary to get them going with the avowed object of bringing the separated halves as close to each other as possible without affecting their respective sovereignties. A Central Indo-Pakistan Council should be empowered to watch their functioning, and to propose the enlargement, and if necessary, amendment of their functions and powers, at six-monthly intervals after a regular review of their work,

(3) The Central Council should immediately review the Indo-Pakistan passport and visa system is an effort to bring it in line, first with current international practice, and then to a form which would take into account the axiom accepted at (A) above.

(4) After the period of the moratorium is over the whole subject should be reviewed in the light of the prevailing sentiment in both the countries.

I would earnestly request Sheikh Abdullah to take the lead in the matter of bringing a realisation of the importance of carrying through such a programme of reconciliation and cooperation between India and Pakistan in both countries. It would be a task worthy of his stature.

(i) An overall plebiscite in the whole of Jammu and Kashmir, including “Azad” Kashmir to determine whether the people wanted to join India or Pakistan or remain independent; (2) outright independence of Jammu and Kashmir guaranteed by India, Pakistan, the UN and China; (3) a condominium between India and Pakistan; and (4) a modified version of the Dixon Plan — namely that Ladakh and Jammu should be merged with India while “Azad” Kashmir should be merged with Pakistan and a plebiscite held in the Kashmir Valley to decide whether the Valley wished to join India or Pakistan or remain independent.
Letter from Foreign Secretary to V. K. T. Chari on the question of Federation and its implications.

New Delhi, May 13, 1964.

Dear Shri Chari,

G. Parthasarthi, (presently Indian High Commissioner in Pakistan) your brother-in-law (and my very good friend and colleague) has asked me to write this letter to you. He has gone back to Karachi this afternoon.

As you know, there has, recently, been a lot of talk about a Confederation between India and Pakistan with Kashmir, in the legal scheme of things, being a possible solution of our present troubles. The Prime Minister has asked G. Parthasarathi to go into this question and examine the general concept of the legal implications of such a Confederation. We do not want to entrust this study, at the present stage, to any official agency because we do not want to give any publicity to the fact that the general idea in regard to a Confederation is being examined. That is why Parthasarthi has been entrusted to go into this matter on a, more or less, private and personal basis.

G.P. says that he is a little out of touch with the subject and he has no easy access to a good library. He has asked me to, accordingly, request you to kindly study the issues and give him a note.

The general idea of a Confederation is to be studied in the context of the present position of India, Pakistan and Kashmir. Kashmir has admittedly acceded to the Indian Union but its position as a State within the Indian Union is somewhat qualified by the provisions of Article 370 of the Constitution. Pakistan has no Constitution and Pakistan has no constitutional or known legal connections, as such, with Azad Kashmir. More than this I need not say on this aspect of the problem.

If there is to be a Confederation and there can be a Confederation, we need not do anything which would look like an annulment of the partition of India. Pakistan and India must remain separate Sovereign States and Kashmir must be brought into the Confederation. The question is: Must Kashmir be by itself a separate sovereign entity? The Confederation, ordinarily, would, probably, involve the Sovereign States of India and Pakistan, having uniform laws and policies on certain subjects, e.g. Defence, External Affairs and Communications, at least. The question is: What other subjects can be brought into this? These might be — control and movement of population and passport and visas; a customs union with common trade policies; some attempt at financial integration might also be necessary and worthwhile. Protection of minorities would be a very important issue.

All this is by way of loose thinking on my part. GP and I have discussed this, but we have not got very far. I would be so very grateful if you could urgently examine this and try and give us a note on the subject by, say, 18/19th May. GP is coming back to Delhi, most probably, on 19th May, and I would request you to address your note to me and I will hand this over to him. He intends writing to you from Karachi himself also.

[Editors’s Note: After this letter, no paper was available to suggest the fate of the proposal.]

Yours sincerely,

( Y. D. Gundevia )

2178. Unofficial translation of a letter from Soviet Prime Minister Alex Kosygin to Prime Minister Lal Bahadur Shastri.

Moscow, August 20, 1965

Esteemed Mr. Prime Minister,

We have a real feeling of anxiety over the latest developments in the region of Kashmir and we are grateful for the friendly information given for the Soviet Government by your representatives in Delhi and Moscow. In the end of June, 1965, when India and Pakistan have signed the cease-fire agreement in the Rann of Kutch, one could think that tension in Indo-Pakistan relations would lessen and mutual understanding and co-operation, without which it is difficult for the neighbouring countries to live, would return gradually to normal.

But events have broken out which already now received a significant international repercussions. One can easily understand that the Soviet Government, like the Government of India, being concerned about the dangerous developments in Vietnam, which are caused by imperialists’ interference, is interested that already unfavourable situation in this area of the world, would not be aggravated by a conflict between the two neighbouring countries as India and Pakistan are.

It is often that behind such disputes, and the situation in the world provides in this regard a lot of instances, in the end there stand outer forces, which, in their own aim, are striving to oppose nations, which freed themselves from the colonial enslavement, to each other, to destroy solidarity among them, to make international situation white-hot and, thus to create favourable conditions for suppression of the national-liberation movement of the peoples.

We are confident that India and Pakistan can avoid complications in their relations that they are able to solve the disputes and unsolved questions which exist between them exclusively by peaceful means, mutually taking into account the interests of each other, without resorting to the force of arms. The agreement on the Rann of Kutch, which has been reached recently, confirms this conviction.

We believe that the Government of India and you personally, Mr. Prime Minister, with state wisdom and restraint characteristic of you will take new efforts, which will promote the normalization of the situation.

We say all this as good friends of both the countries, of both the peoples. As far as India is concerned, we have repeatedly stated also to you personally, Mr. Prime Minister, during your recent visit to the Soviet Union, that we highly appreciate the general course of the foreign policy of India, its line for peaceful co-existence of states, its courageous struggle against colonialism, the struggle, in which the Soviet Union, India and many other states are marching together, hand in hand.

That is why we are welcoming the strengthening of foreign political positions of India as a big power, which is enjoying universally recognized estimation, because these successes are for the benefit of our common struggle for peace, for progress.

Expressing its considerations, the Soviet Government proceeds from the only aspiration to prevent the possibility of further aggravation of relations between Pakistan and India, to promote the achievement of the relaxation of international tension.

Simultaneously, I am sending a corresponding letter to President Ayub Khan. We have expressed to him with the full definition our concern over the events, which are going on, have called the Pakistani side to solve all the questions, that have arisen, by peaceful means, through negotiations, to maintain good neighbourhood with India.
I would like to wish you, Mr. Prime Minister, and the Government of friendly India every success and to convey heartfelt greetings and best wishes on behalf of my colleagues in the Government.

With sincere respect.

A. Kosygin

2179. Letter from Prime Minister Lal Bahadur Shastri to the Soviet Premier A. Kosygin.

New Delhi, August 29, 1965.

I thank you for your letter of August 20, which was handed to me by your Charge d’Affairs in New Delhi.

2. I greatly appreciate the feelings of solicitude and friendliness for India which have prompted you to write. I well understand your anxiety at the recent developments in our State of Jammu & Kashmir brought about by well-planned and massive infiltrations of Pakistani armed personnel across the cease-fire line. Ever since the commencement of such infiltrations we have kept you and your Government fully informed of the developments through our Ambassador in Moscow and also through your Charge d’Affairs here. A few days ago, I had the great pleasure of receiving as our guest in New Delhi Mr. Mazurov, the First Deputy Chairman of the Council of Ministers of the USSR. During his visit, we had the opportunity of exchanging views on the Kashmir situation. I have every hope that from all the information received by your Government you are convinced that the root cause of the dangerous situation that has been created – a situation which has all the potentialities of a serious armed conflict between India and Pakistan – is to be traced to the illegal and massive infiltrations of armed men across the international frontier between Jammu and West Pakistan and the cease-fire line, which Pakistan has planned and organized in contravention of the Cease-fire Agreement and all canons of international law and international behaviour. I trust that you are further convinced about the falsity of the Pakistani propaganda line that there is an internal revolt in Kashmir and that Pakistan has nothing to do with the situation created in Jammu & Kashmir.
3. The Pakistani action is, in fact, nothing but a thinly disguised invasion. An estimated number of 5000 armed men, well-trained and organized in companies and battalions, have been sent by Pakistan into Jammu and Kashmir across the cease-fire line to commit arson and sabotage, to strike at our security forces and to incite the local people to rise against the Government. In this last design they have failed miserably.

4. If it were a question of merely dealing with a few thousands of armed infiltrators, the problem would have been relatively simple. The cease-fire line, as you know, however, is 470 miles long and lies along hilly and wooded terrain. It is impossible to seal off such a long and irregular line from infiltration by armed groups from Pakistan-occupied Kashmir, directed and organized by the Pakistan Government and backed by the military forces by Pakistan. During the operations of the last 3 weeks or more Pakistan forces have heavily shelled areas on our side of the cease-fire line to facilitate infiltrations and to cover up the infiltrators. The position is that Pakistani armed infiltrators are still coming in substantial numbers, despite the losses inflicted on those who came earlier. In the circumstances, I hope you will appreciate, Mr. Chairman, the difficult position in which we are placed. It is not possible for us to be at the receiving end all the time. We have been forced into a position in which we have to take preventive action not merely with a view to combing out the raiders but also to stop fresh infiltrations.

5. You will recall that in April and May last Pakistan committed patent aggression in our territory in the Rann of Kutch and attacked our posts there with its regular armed forces backed by tanks, artillery, etc. The provocation to us caused by Pakistan’s reckless attack was such that we had every reason to strike back militarily at Pakistan. We still showed great forbearance and persevered in the pursuit of finding a peaceful solution to the problem that had arisen. Eventually, an agreement relating to the Gujarat-West Pakistan border was reached between Pakistan and India and signed on the 30th June, 1965. However, even before the ink was dry over this agreement, Pakistan mounted its thinly disguised but large-scale infiltration into our territory by its armed forces dressed as civilians. Worse still, abundant evidence has come to light that even at the time when Pakistan put its signature of the agreement of June 30, it was perfecting its plans for its aggressive actions in Jammu & Kashmir. According to the evidence of the captured infiltrators, their training had started on the 26th May, 1965, at Murree under the Commander of Pakistan’s 12th Infantry Division.

6. The entire Pakistan press and all the media of propaganda in Pakistan are geared to the support of the infiltrators and are preaching the most virulent hatred of India, while, at the same time, the Pakistan Government disclaims any responsibility for the infiltrators and falsely claims that the trouble in Kashmir is entirely due to popular revolt.
7. I deeply appreciate, Mr. Chairman, your fervent plea for peaceful relations between India and Pakistan. I can assure you that I fully reciprocate your sentiments. We are not interested in military conflict. In fact, we have made repeated offers to Pakistan for a joint no-war declaration. Pakistan, however, has always refused to join in any undertaking that she will not resort to arms for the settlement of Indo-Pakistan disputes.

8. I have written at some length to explain to you the nature and gravity of the problem we are facing because of Pakistan’s aggressive action in sending armed men across the cease-fire line into Jammu & Kashmir. In the predicament in which we have been placed we have no option but to take all measures in self-defence to protect our sovereignty and territorial integrity.

9. By its actions Pakistan has ruined the atmosphere for any talks. A dialogue with Pakistan can be meaningful and have a chance of success only if and when Pakistan behaves in a friendly manner and gives evidence of sincere desire to have peaceful relations with India.

With warm personal regards,

2180. Reply from Pakistan President Ayub Khan to Secretary General of the United Nations in reply to his message of September 1, 1965.

Excellency:

I have received your message and appreciate the expression of your deep concern at the grave turn that developments have taken in Jammu and Kashmir. Since September 1, the armed forces of India and the Azad Kashmir forces backed by units of the Pakistan Army are locked in battle in the Bhimber sector, and the Air Forces of India and Pakistan have also engaged in combat.

2. It is not necessary for me, therefore, to stress the gravity of the situation, the devastating consequences of which are self-evident.

3. In your message, you seem to consider August 5 – when the so-called ‘infiltration’ is alleged to have taken place – as the date when the cease-fire agreement of 1949 between India and Pakistan began to be so widely disregarded by unprecedented acts of violence along or in the vicinity of the cease-fire line as to have reduced that agreement to little consequence. If the cease-fire in Jammu and Kashmir was reduced to a nullity, this process has taken place over a long period of time as a result of Indian designs and provocations. The more recent and grave instance occurred in May last when the Indian army crossed the cease-fire line in the Kargil sector and occupied three posts on the Pakistan side of the line.

4. Thus, the origin and sources of the conflict which is now taking place in Jammu and Kashmir cannot be traced to August 5. The Kashmir dispute must be viewed in the context of the tragic history of the Kashmir dispute – of the denial since 1949 of the right of self-determination to the people of the State, and the annexation of their homeland by India through the so-called ‘integration’ measures, in the teeth of their bitter protest and opposition. The cease-fire line, it needs to be recalled and emphasized here, was brought about by the UN Resolution of August 13, 1948 and January 5, 1949. These Resolutions which were negotiated by the United Nations, constituted an international agreement between India and Pakistan to implement the pledge of a plebiscite to the people of Jammu and Kashmir to decide their future. The cease-fire line agreement followed from the obligations accepted by both parties under those resolutions. Since the cease-fire in the state was affected to 1949, India at first stalled on their implementation and subsequently repudiated them.

5. From 1949 to May 1965, India spurned every offer and every suggestion and barred all avenues for a peaceful settlement of the dispute. She ruled out recourse to the International Court of Justice. She rejected mediation, conciliation or good offices of any third party including that of Your Excellency. If in the past India has made some show of willingness to enter into bilateral negotiations with Pakistan, events have shown that her motive was not to reach a settlement but to forestall effective international action or to tide over some crisis in her internal and foreign relations. The Government of India’s real attitude towards bilateral negotiations was made clear by the Indian Home Minister when, on July, 1965, he stated, “Kashmir is an integral part of India. It is a settled fact which cannot be the subject of debate or negotiations. The talk of self-determination is devoid of meaning or relevance.”

6. India has made it quite clear that she will not permit the wishes of the people of Jammu and Kashmir to be ascertained and that her objective is to make permanent the partition of the state of Jammu and Kashmir between India and Pakistan along the cease-fire line in total violation of her obligation to implement the right of self-determination.

7. In pursuit of this objective, the Government of India, have embarked on the unlawful and provocative course of annexing the occupied portions of the State. In the process a reign of terror and oppression has been let loose on the people. Thousands of Kashmiris have been goaled without trial for the crime of demanding that India should honour her pledge to hold a plebiscite. Sheikh Abdullah, along with the lieutenant Mirza Afzal Beg, has for the third time been put in prison where they have already spent 11 years of their lives and where they are now apparently condemned to end their days.

8. The situation in India-occupied Kashmir today is that after 17 years of patient but vain expectation and hope, the people of Kashmir, finding all avenues of peaceful realization for their right of self-determination barred to them, have taken to arms against Indian tyranny. Who can blame them? The freedom-fighters who have challenged the might of the Indian army are not ‘raiders’ but sons of the soil of Jammu and Kashmir ready to make the supreme sacrifice for their case.

9. The people of Azad Kashmir have been engaged for years over India’s brutal repression of the freedom movement in Kashmir. If more than six divisions of the Indian Army deployed along the nearly 500-mile long cease-fire line have been unable to prevent them from moving across the line to aid the armed uprising of their compatriots in occupied Kashmir, how can it be expected that the much fewer troops of the Pakistan Army would be able to seal the line against them? It is but natural that India should seek to blame outsiders for the uprising in occupied Kashmir since she would have the world believe that people of the state are happy with their lot under Indian occupation.

10. I am constrained to express my surprise and regret that, though the United Nations Military Observers Group has admitted that in most cases the actual identity of those engaging in the armed attacks on the Indian side of the line and the actual crossing of it could not be verified by direct observation evidence, yet the group should have thought it fit to conclude that the uprising in Jammu and Kashmir resulted from the crossing of the cease-fire line from the Pakistan side by armed men, for the purpose of armed action on the Indian side. Failing to suppress the freedom-fighters in the occupied territory of Jammu and Kashmir, India has embarked on a course of unlimited aggression across the cease-fire line. On August 15 Indian Forces again crossed the cease-fire line to take over three unoccupied posts near Kargil, which they had earlier been made to vacate upon Your Excellency’s intervention. Significantly, this was done within hours of a public threat by the Indian Prime Minister which was tantamount to that of invading Azad Kashmir. Later, the Indian Defence Minister proudly announced in the Indian Lok Sabha that ‘India has crossed the cease-fire line in the past and would do so again.’ On 23 August, Indian forces shelled Awan Sharif, a village in West Pakistan – killing 25 persons and causing injuries to others and much damage to property. On 24 August, Indian troops crossed the cease-fire line and occupied two posts in the Tithwal sector on the Pakistan side of the cease-fire line. Again on the same day, Indian Forces crossed the cease-fire line in the Uri-Poonch sector and seized some Pakistani posts and on 1st September took Haji Pir Pass.
11. Simultaneously, with these acts of war, India intensified her acts of repression of Kashmiris, which in their scope and nature threaten to assume the proportion of genocide. On 14th August, the entire Batamalu suburb of Srinagar inhabited by Muslims, was set on fire and razed to the ground and the people burnt alive to punish the residents for the support and help they were extending to the freedom-fighters. This has been repeated in several other places in occupied Kashmir and has become the pattern of reprisals. Miss Mirdula Sarabhai, the well-known Indian social worker has testified that in the guise of taking action against the so-called ‘infiltrators,’ the Indian army has turned upon the entire Muslim population of the occupied territory and perpetrated atrocities upon them. The Foreign Press has also commented on the incendiary role of the Indian Army.

12. These acts of aggression and grave violations of the Cease-Fire Agreement have created a situation in which the human rights of the people of Kashmir as well as the security of Pakistan are equally threatened. Seventy five Indian battalions are poised to launch aggression on Azad Kasmir and Pakistan.

13. In response to this grave situation created by the Indian Armed Forces and to forestall further aggression by them, the Azad Kashmir Force backed by Pakistan Army, were forced in the exercise of the inherent right of self-defence to cross the cease-fire line in the Bhimber sector for the first time since the cease-fire agreement was reached 17 years ago, and after repeated Indian armed attacks and occupation of Azad Kashmir territories by the Indian army. This crossing took place on the 1st of this month. India escalated this conflict by mounting air attacks against Pakistan Force, on the same day, compelling the Pakistan Air Force to intervene. Until then, Pakistan had refrained from air action even though our isolated and thinly manned posts in the Uri - Poonch sector could not have been occupied if we had given them air support. On September 4, India carried the escalation of the conflict a stage further. The Indian Air Force twice violated Pakistan territory in strength escorted by MIG-21 aircraft and now my Government has good reason to believe that India has begun to again deploy and mass her armed forces against West and East Pakistan. Weeks earlier India moved a brigade from Aksai Chin and a mountain division from the NEFA (North East Frontier Agency now Arunachal Pradesh) area, armed and equipped by the United States and some Commonwealth countries for use against China, to reinforce the six divisions of the Indian Army which have been suppressing the people of Jammu and Kashmir. It is, therefore, clear from these repeated strikes across the Cease-Fire Line and step-by-step escalation of the fighting in Jammu and Kashmir that India has embarked on a premeditated course of aggression and war to seize the whole of Azad Kashmir territory and in that process not to flinch from even a sub-continental war.

It will be recalled, immediately following the reverse suffered by the Indian Army in the Rann of Kutch some months earlier, Indian Government leaders publicly threatened that India would attack Pakistan at a time and place of her own choosing. In the circumstances Pakistan must take every step necessary to discharge its responsibilities and duties for the defense of her legitimate interests and territorial integrity. From the foregoing, it is evident that India has embarked upon a course of terror, oppression and aggression in Kashmir. It has plainly manifested every intention of aggression against Pakistan. The responsibility for the current grave situation in that state, therefore, rests entirely on her.

14. Let me now turn to the other points that you have raised in your message, that the Kashmir dispute can be resolved peacefully and not by military action and have also drawn my attention to the obligations of member-states of the United Nations not to have recourse to the use of force in the settlement of international disputes, but to seek pacific methods of settlement. Let me assure Your Excellency that Pakistan remains dedicated to the Charter of the United Nations and the obligations of membership of the organization including the peaceful procedure of settlement. You are aware, that during the last 17 years, despite all the provocations and acts of repression by India in Jammu and Kashmir, despite India’s open repudiation of the UNCIP and Security Council’s resolutions pledging self-determination to the people of Kashmir and despite India’s sinister pattern of annexing the state in the face of the bitter opposition and in total disregard of the relevant resolutions of the Security Council, Pakistan did not abandon her faith that reason would one day dawn on India and turn her to the path of peace. It was with this faith that the Pakistan Government turned repeatedly to the Security Council, when direct negotiations with India in 1953, 1955, 1962 and 1963 failed to produce a just and equitable solution. To my infinite regret, our experience seeking redress in the forum of the Security Council has time and gain turned out to be disheartening. You will recall that in 1964, the members of the Security Council would not even agree to recommend direct negotiations between India and Pakistan with the assistance, as my be mutually acceptable, of a third party, or even the Secretary-General. To our deep sorrow and regret, the end of the debate in that forum did not end in a consensus, much less a resolution. This is not to say that Pakistan has lost all faith in the efficacy of the United Nations as an instrument of peace. We reaffirm our confidence in the solution of international disputes by peaceful means. This confidence extends to settlement of the Kashmir dispute.

15. I trust that, in view of what I have stated in the foregoing part of this reply to your message, the action which the Pakistan Army has taken in Jammu and Kashmir in support of the Azad Kashmir Forces to defend Azad Kashmir and Pakistan territory against India trying to solve the Azad Kashmir dispute by force of arms. This is a purely defensive measure forced on Pakistan.
16. You have expressed your conviction that a peaceful settlement of the Kashmir dispute can be found and have appealed to me to indicate immediately our intention to respect the cease-fire agreement and return to the status quo ante. You have also assured me of the fullest possible assistance by you in the restoration of peace in Kashmir and the solution of the dispute. A number of chiefs of State and Governments of friendly countries have associated themselves with your appeal and some have offered their good offices for mediation. I am grateful to you and to them for these assurances and offers, which I find heartening. At the same time, I cannot but be candid and express to you our misgivings. Your appeal seeks nothing more than a return to the status quo ante without any assurance that you and the Security Council will strive to implement the U.N. Resolutions pertaining to the right of self-determination of the people of Jammu and Kashmir. You say that the quiet which would result from mutual observance of the cease-fire would afford the most favorable climate in which to seek a resolution of political differences. I would like to recall that the cease-fire agreement was observed from 1949 to 1965, when India chose to reduce it to a scrap of paper. Yet, during these 17 years, tranquility along the cease-fire line did not lead to that result. The Security Council faced with India's bad faith, intransigence and growing power chose practically to wash its hands off the responsibility for a peaceful and honourable settlement. I fear that your present appeal will only serve to perpetrate that injustice by leaving the people of occupied Kashmir to the mercy of India. What is to become of the brave people of Kashmir who are fighting for their freedom? I cannot believe that it would be the intention of the United Nations to permit India to liquidate them and to consolidate its stranglehold over occupied Kashmir. This leads me again to repeat what I have stated earlier—that if a peaceful settlement of the Kashmir dispute is to result from the intervention of the United Nations, it is necessary for the World Organization to go to the heart of the tragic problem and not merely to deal with its periphery. It must turn its attention to the issue of self-determination and not only with the ceasefire line. The concern of the United Nations must extend to the implementation of the UNCIP Resolutions as well as to observance of the cease-fire agreement. The cease-fire was only the first part of an inter-related and integral whole. Therefore, insistence on a cease-fire can only be meaningful if there is a self-implementing agreement to follow it.

17. I should not be misunderstood as implying that I under-estimate the importance of your assistance in the restoration of peace in Kashmir and the solution of its problems. On the contrary, I welcome your assurance in this regard as a step forward by itself. However, there is no evidence yet that your assistance would be equally welcome to India much less that India is prepared to reverse the dangerous ill-conceived course of her policies in Kashmir. If this armed struggle for freedom is to be halted and calm is to be restored in the state of Jammu and Kashmir, if indeed peace in this region is to be preserved, then the right course for the United Nations, India and Pakistan is to proceed immediately to fulfil the pledge they gave to the people of Jammu and Kashmir 18 years ago. It is they who must be permitted freely to decide the question of accession of the state of Jammu and Kashmir to India or Pakistan as stated in that pledge.

Accept, Excellency, the assurances of my highest consideration and warm personal regards.

Mohammad Ayub Khan
President of Pakistan

2181. Message of the Soviet Premier Alex Kosygin to Prime Minister Lal Bahadur Shastri and Pakistan President Ayub Khan.

Moscow, September 4, 1965.

Esteemed Mr. Prime Minister,

The seriousness of the situation, which has taken shape in recent days in Kashmir, impels me to approach you once again on a question on which the Soviet Government had expressed its opinion in the letter of August 20 this year.

Unfortunately, tension in the Kashmir area, far from easing, is growing, threatening to develop into a military conflict on a bigger scale. The agreement on a cease-fire in Kashmir, signed in 1949, and the established cease-fire line have, in fact, been violated. Both Pakistani and Indian regular military units have been involved in military operations, and tanks and aircrafts are being used. The number of casualties is increasing from day to day. Not only soldiers but civilians too are dying. Two major Asian states – India and Pakistan, the sponsors of the Bandung Conference-have essentially taken the roads of military operations.

The tendency to further expand the armed conflict aggravates the already tense situation in South and South-East Asia, created by the aggression of the American imperialism. Such developments, of course, play only into the hands of those external forces that seek to disunite and set at loggerheads states which had cast off the colonial yoke that are interested in weakening the unity of the Afro-Asian countries. These forces are not averse to instigating India and Pakistan to extend the bloodshed to suit their own ends which have nothing in common with the interests of the Indian and Pakistani people.

We would not have been frank had we not said that the military conflict in Kashmir arouses the concern of the Soviet Government also because it flared up in a region immediately adjacent to the frontiers of the Soviet Union.

I think that you, Mr. Prime Minister, will agree that in the present situation it would hardly be right to give prominence to the question of what caused the conflict and to find out who is right and who is wrong. The main efforts should be concentrated on immediately halting military operations, stopping the tanks and silencing the guns.

The settlement of the dispute between the two neighbouring countries is, above all, a matter for these countries and their governments. However, the Soviet Government, guided by the interests of strengthening peace and international security, seeking to promote normalization of relations between India and Pakistan, would like to set out some considerations concerning the settlement of the conflict. In our opinion, the first step after the immediate cessation of hostilities could be reciprocal withdrawal of troops beyond the cease-fire line established by title Agreement between India and Pakistan in July 1949.

Acting in the spirit of the UN Charter and the principles of Bandung, the sides should enter into negotiations for a peaceful settlement of the differences that have arisen between them. As for the Soviet Union, both sides can count on its good cooperation or, as it is said, good offices in this matter. We are ready for this, if both sides consider this useful.

We are deeply convinced, and historical experience bears this out, that any disputes, including questions connected with Kashmir, can best be settled by peaceful means only. The military way cannot lead to their solution. Intensification of military operations by one side inevitably leads to a greater military effort by the other, and the result is extension of the conflict and, who knows, may be also war.

India has more than once demonstrated its devotion to the policy of peace and peaceful coexistence. This gives us reason to hope that in this case too, over Kashmir, wise and prudent statesmanship will be displayed.

Life shows that the flames of war are best extinguished at the very beginning. Restraint and goodwill will unquestionably make it possible to prevent the developments from taking a dangerous turn and to find a peaceful solution to the conflict that has broken out in the Kashmir area.
The Soviet Government also found it necessary to address a corresponding letter to the President of Pakistan, Mr. Ayub Khan.

Respectfully,
A. Kosygin

Note:
An identical letter was addressed to President Ayub Khan of Pakistan, with a significant difference that para in italics was replaced in this case by the following para:

“That the Government of Pakistan has sought, especially of late, to direct its efforts to the maintenance of world peace gives us reason to hope, Mr. President, that the Government of Pakistan, will in connection with the latest events in Kashmir, take all measures within its power to end the hostilities in the area and settle the conflict by peaceful means.”

2182. Telegram dated 6 September 1965 from the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Pakistan to the President of the Security Council.

Rawalpindi, September 6, 1965.

At 0300 hours last night the Indian Army unleashed a tremendous armed attack on Pakistan along the borders of West Pakistan and launched a war of unprovoked and naked aggression against our peaceful country. In announcing this news to the Lok Sabha the Defence Minister of India stated that the attack was being made with the object of forestalling an attack on India by Pakistan. To India’s record of series of aggressions against Junagadh, Hyderabad and Jammu and Kashmir has now been added the most grave and criminal war of aggression against Pakistan. We have warned the United Nations on several previous occasions that India would take to this course against us at an appropriate opportunity.

Since 1958, and more especially since 1962, the military build-up of the Indian Army has unmistakably pointed to the pattern of preparation for a war of aggression against Pakistan. The causes of the current conflict in Jammu and Kashmir are known to all Members of the United Nations. India has held the people of that State in bondage for eighteen years, broken all pledges to implement the right of self-determination of the Kashmiri people, has annexed the State, has tried to break the spirit of the Kashmiris by ruthless suppression and the lifetime imprisonment of their leaders and has embarked on a series of aggressions across the cease-fire line, commencing from the middle of May when it occupied Pakistan posts in the Kargil sector on the Pakistan side of the cease-fire line. After vacating them for a time on the Secretary-General’s intervention, India again crossed the cease-fire line on 15 August and reoccupied them on 23 August. Indian forces shelled Awan Sharif, a village in West Pakistan, causing death and destruction to its peaceful inhabitants. On 24 August the Indian troops crossed the cease-fire line again and occupied two posts in the Tithwal sector on the Pakistan side of the line. Again on the same day Indian forces crossed the cease-fire line in the Uri - Poonch sector and seized some Pakistan posts, and on 1 September took the Haji Pir Pass. Simultaneously the Indian Army of Occupation has intensified its acts of repression of the people – acts which in their scope and nature threaten to assume the proportions of genocide. These acts of aggression and grave violations of the cease-fire agreement have created a situation in which the human rights of the people of Jammu and Kashmir as well as the security of Pakistan are equally threatened. In response to this grave situation created by the Indian armed forces the Azad Kashmir forces backed by the Pakistan Army were forced to cross the cease-fire line in the Bhimber sector in exercise of the right of self-defence for the first time since the cease-fire agreement was reached seventeen years ago and after repeated Indian armed attacks and occupation of Azad Kashmir territory by the Indian Army. This crossing took place on 1 September. India decided to escalate the conflict by mounting air attacks against Pakistan forces on the same day, compelling the Pakistan Air Force to intervene. On 4 September India carried the escalation a stage further. The Indian Air Force twice violated Pakistan territory in strength, escorted by MIG aircraft, and now, last night India mounted a treacherous armed attack, this time against West Pakistan. This war forced by India on Pakistan is not of Pakistan’s seeking. It is a war of aggression by India against Pakistan and as such constitutes the gravest possible violation of the Charter of the United Nations.

I have the honour to inform your Excellency that Pakistan will exercise her inherent right of individual and collective self-defence recognized in Article 51 of the Charter of the United Nations until the Security Council has taken effective measures to restore international peace and security by vacating Indian aggression against Pakistan and Jammu and Kashmir which India has forcibly and illegally occupied in violation of United Nations resolutions. The aggression unleashed by India against our country poses for the United Nations one of the most serious challenges to its very basis. The situation calls for action immediately by the Security Council, including enforcement action to put an end to the Indian aggression and to restore international peace and security on the above-stated basis, which is the only way to secure a lasting peace in the region.

Minister for Foreign Affairs of Pakistan

From High Commissioner in Rawalpindi

American Ambassador McConaughy had sixty-minute interview here with President Ayub this morning 6 September.

2. Following are most important points which emerged:

(a) President delivered formal written request to United States for assistance against Indian aggression as promised in 1959 Pakistan/United States agreement and other documents;

(b) Pakistan is appealing for help from ‘all her friends’ but has not (repeat not) requested help from Russia or China. Answering McConaughy, President said there had been no (repeat no) consultation with Russia or China about latest developments. President had no (repeat no) evidence of prospect of any [Chinese] diversionary attack, though he could not predict what Chinese might do.

(c) Ayub was not (repeat not) prepared to return to position based on Kashmir cease-fire line as it had existed previously. Consequently he would not (repeat not) give affirmative reply to Secretary-General’s appeal in its present form, though he would consider an arrangement whereby all Indian and Pakistani forces were withdrawn from whole of Jammu and Kashmir State. They could perhaps be replaced be a United Nations peace-keeping force.

3. Fuller report follows.

My telegram No. WL 126.

Following is fuller report of McConaughy’s interview with President Ayub on 6 September. Bhutto was also present.

2. McConaughy’s instructions (which he has received during night of 5/6 September before Indian forces had crossed Punjab border) had been to warn Pakistanis that:

(a) United States Government expected to be pressed in fairly near future to declare that no (repeat no) further military aid would be supplied to either side and they would give such an assurance;
(b) to speak severely about Pakistan’s complicity in infiltration;
(c) regarding Consortium, to say United States still expected visit by Ayub as prerequisite to any pledge at Consortium meeting.

3. As the meeting took place a few hours after Indians had crossed Punjab border it was naturally held on a basis different from that which had been expected when Washington drafted these instructions. Atmosphere had been friendly and President Ayub had been ready to admit Pakistan had made various mistakes over relations with United States.

4. President Ayub had said that Pakistan was now engaged in all out war with India. He appreciated Indians would try to get behind Pakistan forces advancing on Akhnur but Pakistanis were prepared for this. He was neither optimistic nor pessimistic about outcome and did not know how long conflict would last though he was confident that Pakistanis would give a good account of themselves. Pakistan was ‘calling on all her friends for help’. President handed over formal written request for help against Indian aggression in accordance with American undertakings under 1959 United States/Pakistan agreement and American memorandum of November 1962. He asked for an early favourable reply and said he would be available to see McConaughy at any time. On relations with Russia and China see my telegram under reference. In discussion President had admitted a certain amount of provocation of India but reiterated that India stood condemned by her record of aggression over the years culminating in Rann of Kutch and seizure of Kargil. He did not admit Pakistan was guilty of aggression.

5. McConaughy had said that until night of 5/6 September Pakistan’s share of responsibility for present tension through help for infiltrators and crossings of cease-fire line had been greater than Indians, but he added, speaking personally, that in fresh circumstances now prevailing Pakistan had opportunity to correct this position and Ambassador therefore urged President to reply affirmatively to Secretary-General’s request on the lines that, in his words, ‘immediately India’s hand was removed from Pakistan’s throat, Pakistan would comply with Secretary-General’s request’. President had more or less accepted criticisms of Pakistan’s earlier responsibility but insisted that Pakistan needed some assurance that a settlement would not be followed by a further eighteen years of Indian evasiveness and provocation. For this reason Pakistan’s position on Secretary-General’s request was as stated in my telegram under reference.

6. Regarding Consortium meeting due for 23 September, McConaughy said that:
(a) If Indian attack had not occurred President Johnson was hoping for a personal meeting and still hoped Ayub would take up the postponed invitation if hostilities with India ended in a few days;
if serious fighting between India and Pakistan continued United States Government thought general view of all donor powers would be that it was inappropriate to hold Consortium meeting on 23 September; for it was no use considering ‘business as usual’ when sub-continent was gripped by war. Ayub had originally demurred, arguing that Pakistan should not be penalized as result of Indian aggression but was on the contrary entitled to a show of support from Consortium powers, but eventually Ayub seemed somewhat readier to consider idea of postponing Consortium meeting. ‘Ayub also made it clear that because of effect on Asian opinion he could not (repeat not) appear to go to Washington as a beggar’ i.e. he could not visit North America until after the American pledge, though if conditions improved with India he might go subsequently (and rather sooner than we had previously understood).

2185. Record of the meeting between British Minister of State for Foreign Affairs and Pakistan High Commissioner in London Agha Hilaly.

REF: DO 196/384

Also present : Mr. V.C. Martin

Mr. C.C.W. Adams

Mr. Hilaly opened by saying that the Pakistan Government had always feared that the Kashmir situation would lead to war between Pakistan and India, and he blamed the Americans for increasing this risk by supplying arms to India. He then made a series of allegations against recent Indian aggression. He blamed India for the Rann of Kutch, for recent violations of the cease-fire line with troops and aircraft, and for the sovereign crime of invading the international boundary and bombing Lahore.

The present state of play in the fighting was then discussed. Mr. Hilaly said that at 1 p.m. today the B.B.C. had carried Indian reports that Lahore had been taken, whereas he had private information that at 2.15 p.m. Lahore was still under Pakistan Control and the Indians meeting heavy resistance at the border. He said he had complained to the B.B.C. for carrying such misleading statements.
The Minister of State said that the British Government regarded the fighting as a major tragedy, particularly since it was a struggle between two Commonwealth countries. This development was not only a disaster for the subcontinent, but one which could lead to a serious escalation of war outside it. He then handed Mr. Hilaly a copy of the Prime Minister’s statement which had been released at 3 p.m.

The Minister of State asked whether the Pakistan Government would be prepared to accept U Thant’s appeal for a cease-fire. Mr. Hilaly said that India had of course already rejected it. Although he had not received briefing from his Government, he said he thought they would consider a mere cease-fire insufficient, since the problem would remain unsolved and fighting could only recur, and that the only reasonable basis for a cessation of hostilities would be the re-opening of the whole Kashmir question. The latter could best take the form of establishing an internationally devised procedure which would promise to take Kashmir to a settlement under an international guarantee. (Perhaps Kashmir could be evacuated and placed under a United Nations Mandate or similar international form of control). Without this condition Pakistan, though conscious of its inability to resist a country with military and economic resources four times greater than those of their own, would have to fight it out.

Mr. Martin said it was of course extremely difficult to work towards any negotiated settlement while fighting was still in progress.

Mr. Hilaly said he was very disappointed by the statement of the United Kingdom’s Representative at the United Nations on 4 September, in which selected passages from Gen. Nimmo’s report, which were clearly detrimental to Pakistan, were quoted at length.

Mr. Hilaly then asked whether he might see the Prime Minister in the near future. The Minister of State pointed out that the Prime Minister was very busy but we would pass on his request.

At my interview with President Ayub at 0600 hours G.M.T. tomorrow 7 September he may well take opportunity to call for British assistance in repelling Indian aggression. He may quote CENTO and SEATO, and claim that as military ally of Pakistan we are committed to support her. This would be in line with request which President put to American Ambassador here today 6 September.

2. My reply should I suggest be to say that I would at once refer this to you. But I would continue by pointing out on a personal basis that both sides must bear their share of responsibility for present appalling situation. Pakistan’s thrust towards Akhnur had been launched despite British appeal for restraint. Moreover despite my subsequent plea that at least Pakistanis should make clear limited character of their objective, Pakistanis had allowed Indians to assume that it was Pakistan’s intention to sever Indian lifelines at Jammu to Indian troops in Kashmir and Ladakh. What other conclusion could Indians have drawn from the facts? I was not (repeat not) seeking in any way to excuse Indian action, but it had to be seen against whole background of previous events including what Indians claim to have been deliberate organization by Pakistan of armed infiltrators across cease-fire line in early August.

3. I would then appeal very strongly to Ayub to declare his readiness to stop the fighting as soon as India did likewise.

Following Pickard’s helpful telephone call to Killick this morning I was able to see Mr. Rusk to obtain his account of the American general position.

2. He emphasized that the main thrust of American policy would be through the United Nations, neither the Indian or Pakistani Governments had consulted the United States at any stage of the crisis and the Administration felt no particular responsibility towards either. Neither he nor the President thought that intervention with either India or Pakistan by the United States would be profitable at the present time. As regards Ayub’s request invoking the 1959 American Assurance, the United States Government did not accept Pakistani denials of infiltration across the cease-fire line and indeed had plenty of evidence both from UNMOGIP and American intelligence sources that infiltration had taken place. The clear implication in Mr. Rusk’s remarks was that there was no basis for Pakistan to invoke the 1959 Assurance.

3. The President was taking up no strong personal position in public because it seemed to him that at present neither side was willing to listen. Within these limits the Americans were, however, taking up a very strong position on the government to government level and Mr. Rusk had telephoned personally to both Bhutto and Swaran Singh urging them to accept unconditionally the United Nations resolution. Beyond that little was being said to either Government. No American military equipment was being dispatched and an ammunition ship on its way to Pakistan through Suez was being diverted. Mr. Rusk stressed that this was very confidential.

4. As regards further developments, the question was whether either side, politically speaking, could face a return to the cease-fire line. Although objectives were no doubt limited at the outset, events seemed now to be taking over. Much would now depend on how the fighting went and in particular on the Indian forces' performance. Both sides would quickly be faced with serious supply problems, which would no doubt hit Pakistan harder than India, although Pakistan's initial advantage in equipment was greater. Ayub might be gambling on major internal disintegration in India, but Mr. Rusk was sceptical of this and thought that in the long run India's superiority of numbers would tell.

5. There were also external considerations. The State Department were watching Chinese moves very closely and there seemed to be no major development so far. If there were any secret agreement between Pakistan and China, the Indian move against Lahore should bring it into the open. Ayub must have been getting some very bad advice, and if there were Chinese-Pakistan collusion, the Chinese were taking big risks. The Russians seemed so far to be adopting much the same attitude as the United States although Mr.
Rusk had seen a report that they had given a private assurance to Shastri over Kashmir. Pakistan's demand for a C.E.N.T.O. meeting might lead the Shah to feel that he should give token assistance though Turkey with her other preoccupations seemed unlikely to do anything. There might in any event be some Chinese probing in Ladakh or even on the North-East Frontier, though it would be unlikely to go far; in this event how might the Russians react?

6. The State Department were concerned not to appear to be challenging Peking by using language in a Security Council resolution calling upon outsiders ‘not to exacerbate the situation'; they preferred positive language calling for support of United States resolutions.

7. As regards American nationals there are 3,000 in Lahore who are to be moved to Rawalpindi and evacuated by air. Small numbers of Americans in the Eastern Punjab are being moved back to New Delhi.

8. Since drafting the foregoing I have had further conversation with Pickard and have informed Mr. Rusk of actions taken by Ministers.

MESSAGE

From: Oliver Wright
To: Mc Geogre Bundy

September 6, 1965

Message Begins

The Prime Minister has asked me to let you know, for the President’s information, the state of our current thinking on Kashmir.

Briefly, we consider the present war between India and Pakistan to be of the utmost gravity and full of very considerable dangers, if not disasters, for the whole of the Indian sub-continent. The danger of communal strife on an appalling scale and of Chinese fishing in troubled waters are obviously two considerations over and above that of the course of the war itself.

In these circumstances, we consider that the main weight of peace-making should be on the Security-Council and the Secretary-General, and we do not propose at this stage to launch any Commonwealth initiatives which might cut across United Nations efforts. The Prime Minister has therefore:

1. Sent instructions to Lord Caradon to give full support to Security Council efforts to bring fighting to an end.
2. Sent further strong personal messages to Ayub and Shastri urging them to heed the Secretary-General’s pleas.
3. Issued a pretty tough (on India) statement from No.10 Downing Street.
4. Sent a personal message to all Commonwealth Prime Ministers urging them individually to send messages to Ayub and Shastri appealing for restraint and urging them to throw their weight behind current United Nations efforts.

We fully expect India to react strongly to these actions.

We have, in addition, various other ideas, such as a Commonwealth peace initiative, perhaps in support of Pearson’s proposal, or a collective Commonwealth appeal to India and Pakistan. We are also studying the position which will arise if the Security Council finds that a situation has arisen under Chapter 7 of the United Nations Charter. So, while the Prime Minister is ready to back a Commonwealth initiative at the right moment, he thinks it best to give the United Nations a clear run, at least until we see whether they will succeed or not.

Record of the meeting taken by the British Prime Minister with the Officials of the Foreign Office on Kashmir.

Kashmir: Pakistan's request to Invoke Cento and Seato to be resisted

REF: DO 196/384

Kashmir

The Prime Minister had a meeting at No. 10 Downing Street at 12 noon this morning (7th September). The Foreign Secretary, the Commonwealth Secretary, the Minister of State for Commonwealth Relations and officials were present.

The meeting had before them the attached situation report at September 7 and briefs for the Prime Minister for his talk with the Indian and Pakistan High Commissioners.

The Commonwealth Secretary said that since he had returned to London he had gone over the whole position. He quite agreed with what had been done, although the statement put out from No.10 Downing Street the previous day had perhaps been a little hard on India. He agreed that the right course now was to let U Thant make the running while keeping ourselves in reserve for quiet diplomacy. At the right time it might be valuable if he himself were invited to go to visit India and Pakistan perhaps on behalf of the Commonwealth in view of his personal knowledge of Indian and Pakistani leaders.

On the question of arms shipments, investigation had shown that there were two ships on the way to India with a certain amount of arms and they were due to arrive on September 20 and 25. They were in Indian ships but India had probably not yet formally taken possession of them. The question that Ministers may have to decide was whether it was worth having a public row with the Indians by taking drastic action to divert the shipments. Meanwhile, the movement of supplies forward within this country to India and Pakistan had been halted.

On the question of Pakistan invoking the CENTO and SEATO, although no formal request for assistance from Pakistan had been received, it was likely that one was on the way. When it came it would be firmly resisted on the grounds that it had been repeatedly made clear to Pakistan that neither Alliance could be invoked against a full member of the Commonwealth.

Summing up the discussion, the Prime Minister said that our line for the present should be:

1) no new initiatives and
2) no new announcements

On the CENTO and SEATO Alliance our line to the Press should be that no formal request had yet been received for any assistance but that it was well understood that nothing that was said in the Treaties could be held to permit aiding one Commonwealth country against another. It was agreed that the Prime Minister should see both the Pakistan and Indian High Commissioners. Subsequently the Pakistan High Commissioner was summoned to No.10 Downing Street at 4.00 p.m. and the Indian High Commissioner at 5.30 p.m.

Record of a meeting between the British Minister of State and the Indian High Commissioner Jivraj Mehta.

REF: DO 196/384

Also present: Mr. Haksar, Mr. V.C. Martin

Indian Deputy High Commissioner Mr. C.C.W. Adams

The Minister of State opened by deploring the escalation in the fighting between India and Pakistan and handed Dr. Mehta the Prime Minister’s statement. Dr. Mehta commented very angrily at the reference in the statement to India crossing the international boundary and the absence of any mention to Pakistan’s many illegal acts. Why, he asked, had the statement not mentioned earlier Pakistan infiltrations into Kashmir and their armed attack across the cease-fire line?

The Minister of State explained that the Prime Minister’s statement referred to the new situation which had developed today as a result of Indian action, and he pointed out that on 4 September the United Kingdom Representative at the United Nations had drawn attention to certain passages in General Nimmo’s report which stated the Indian case very favourably. Dr. Mehta countered this with the legalistic argument that Pakistan had been the first to cross the international boundary in her drive towards Jammu and Akhnur. (Note: He appeared to be referring to the boundary between Pakistan and Kashmir). Mr. Martin said we would take note of this claim. Dr. Mehta protested strongly that the British Prime Minister should have pilloried India without a mention of Pakistan’s similar violation. This statement would be read by the world and the Indian Parliament would receive it in anger. Mr. Martin said that nonetheless the Indian attack towards Lahore could only be considered as a much more serious development than all Pakistan’s previous actions.

The Minister of State, turning to U Thant’s appeal for a cease-fire, asked whether India could give a favourable response. Dr. Mehta said that his Government had already replied to U Thant’s appeal. There must be some condemnation of Pakistan acts against India and Kashmir before the Indian Government would agree to a cease-fire. He then claimed that he and his Government had consistently drawn our attention be recent Pakistan violations, only to be ignored or fobbed off.

REF: DO 196/384 4.15 P.M. On Tuesday, September 7, 1965

Present: Prime Minister;
Pakistan High Commissioner;
Mr. Cledwyn Hughes
Mr. Hilaly
Mr. J.O. Wright

The High Commissioner said that he had received no instructions to raise with the Prime Minister the question of aid and cooperation under the CENTO Pact. If any such request were made, it might well be put through the British High Commissioner in Rawalpindi. Nevertheless, the Prime Minister would have seen the Pakistan Foreign Minister’s statement to the effect that Pakistan felt that she was entitled to aid under CENTO and SEATO.

The High Commissioner went on to say that India’s attack across the international border on the previous day had shaken Pakistan. The first intimation of the attack had been when the bombs had fallen. Nevertheless, the spirit of the people of Lahore had been magnificent and they were inspiring on going about their normal lives. This would suppose that the Indians had been halted at least ten miles away. Nevertheless, India had bombed a number of open cities, notably in East Pakistan; but Pakistan had perhaps by now retaliated, but she had not been the first to bomb.

The High Commissioner said that U Thant had asked for a seat on Pakistan Airlines to Karachi. He thought that the Pakistan Government would not be willing to accelerate an appeal from U Thant for a cease fire until the United Nations took on the responsibility of finding a solution to the problem of Kashmir. They would insist that the problem of Kashmir had to be settled; otherwise they would prefer to carry on fighting.

Mr. Hilaly said that the Pakistan Government had been very grateful for the first paragraph of the statement which had been issued from No. 10 Downing Street on the previous day. Britain had been the only western power to have said anything condemning India. The Prime Minister would have noted that the Chinese had come out putting the blame squarely on India and this Chinese statement was likely to have great repercussions throughout Asia and the world.

Mr. Hilaly went on to say that he had been asked to approach the British government and to say that his Government felt that they were entitled to the assistance and sympathy of their friends as well as moral and material help. They were resisting an army, navy and air force four times the size of their own. In the past, the danger and fear of annoying India had appeared to inhibit the free expression of the British conscience. He hoped that this would not allow Indian tactics to prevail once more.

The Prime Minister said that he hoped that the Pakistan Government would be under no illusion but that the sole object of the Chinese was to fish in the troubled waters. Whatever else came out of the unhappy business of Kashmir, he hoped that no-one would allow China to profit by it. It would be a very grave affair if the Kashmir problem became a happy hunting ground for other countries. Secondly, as regards CENTO and SEATO, the successive British Governments had always made it clear that they did not regard it as appropriate to activate these treaty obligations against another Commonwealth country. He could furnish documentary proof of this to the High Commissioner if necessary.

Thirdly, the Prime Minister said that he had issued his statement on the previous day, because he had been deeply concerned by the actions of the previous day. If he had condemned the Indian action of the previous day because they had crossed the international frontier that did not mean that the British Government condoned previous actions of the Pakistan Government. Moreover, although Pakistan and Britain were allies in CENTO, Pakistan had not thought fit to consult Britain before they had taken their successive actions, including their infiltration across the cease fire line followed by their military attack across the cease fire line towards Jammu. And yet it was this attack across the cease fire line which had been directly responsible for India's attack across the international frontier. None the less, Britain regarded yesterday's attack by India across the international boundary as different in kind and degree from attacks across the cease fire line. We took a very grave view of attacks across the cease fire line, but we took a still graver view of attacks across the international frontier.

The Prime Minister went on to say that the British Government's position in all this was quite clear. We gave full support to the United Nations initiative. We had considered whether there was any scope for a purely British or perhaps a Commonwealth initiative but we had decided that we did not wish to cross wires with the U Thant Mission and that the United Nations was the right forum to handle this problem.
As for Pakistan wishing to lay down conditions before they would agree to stop fighting, if Pakistan were to take their objections to a cease fire further, many people would be killed, the conflict would escalate to a wider war and there might well be communal troubles. It would be a tragedy if the refusal to stop fighting led to more innocent victims being killed. We therefore strongly backed the Security Council's initiative and we had urged the Commonwealth to give U Thant one hundred per cent support. It was essential, to start with, that both sides should stop fighting.

The Prime Minister went on to say that, as he saw it, the problem might be approached in four stages:

1. Both sides should stop fighting.
2. Both sides should agree to get back to the status quo.
3. There might be measures taken to neutralize and quieten down the situation within Kashmir itself.
4. The future settlement of the whole problem of Kashmir. It would be putting the cart before the horse to insist on settlement of the Kashmir problem before the fighting stopped.

The High Commissioner intervened to explain that Pakistan did not ask for a settlement of the Kashmir problem before the cease fire; they merely asked that they should have a firm assurance that the problem of Kashmir would be taken up as an international responsibility. Otherwise, once the fighting had stopped, India would revert to her usual immobile position.

The Prime Minister said that he was speaking not only for the Cabinet but for everyone in Britain when he said that he hoped that the Pakistan Government would give the fullest facilities to U Thant in his mission of bringing the fighting to an end. U Thant was the representative of the Security Council and of the whole world. Britain was certainly against the suggestion that there could be any conditions for stopping the fighting. He hoped that High Commissioner would tell President Ayub that this was the very strong view of the British Government which was being put to both India and Pakistan.

The High Commissioner said that if Pakistan agreed to stages 1 and 2, they would merely be back where they were in January 1948 when, as everyone knew, the next stages never came about. He did not think that the Pakistan Government would agree to a reversion to the status quo unless the future of Kashmir was taken up as an international responsibility. Otherwise, they would prefer to fight and they would not be deterred by the Indian blackmail of the fifty million Muslims living in India. The High Commissioner said that of course Pakistan was ready to stop the fighting. Pakistan did not wish for a single inch of Indian territory. They would not insist on everything they wanted in Kashmir. All they insisted on was, that the situation in Kashmir should not be allowed to continue as it had for the past eighteen years.

The Prime Minister said that it was of course for us in Britain to be cool and detached about these affairs. Although he could understand, emotionally, how Pakistan felt about the Indian attitude, and in particular, how they felt that they could not stop fighting unless there was a prospect of a Kashmir settlement, he would have to say that he was in total disagreement. He thought it was totally wrong for the fighting to continue. He hoped therefore that the Pakistan Government would give all possible assistance to U Thant. He hoped that nothing that Pakistan did would make the position of Pakistan’s friends more difficult.

The High Commissioner thought that the U Thant mission was bound to end in failure. He thought that afterwards there might be scope for a Commonwealth initiative.

Mr. Cledwyn Hughes said, personally, he felt sure that after events of the past few weeks, pressures would be bound to develop for a settlement of the Kashmir problem but if conditions were laid down in advance the fighting was bound to go on.

The Prime Minister brought the conversation to an end by saying that if conditions were laid down, he felt that the solution that was finally found would bear no relationship to what was right or wrong but simply to who was the stronger.

2193. Record of the Conversation between the British Prime Minister and the Indian High Commissioner Jivraj Mehta regarding the proposal for an unconditional ceasefire.

REF: DO 196/384 5.30 P.M. on Tuesday, September 7, 1965

Present:
Prime Minister Indian High Commissioner
Mr Cledwyn Hughes His Excellency Dr. Jivraj N.Mehta
Mr. J.O. Wright The Deputy Indian High Commissioner
Mr. P.N. Haker

The Prime Minister said that he had asked the High Commissioner to call on a very grave matter indeed. The British Government were very concerned about the fighting which was at present taking place between Pakistan and India. The problem of Kashmir had been a dangerous one for the past 18 years. When, quite recently, Pakistani infiltrations across the cease-fire line had taken place, the British representative at the United Nations had condemned them in very severe terms. Nevertheless, when on the previous day, India had crossed the international frontier between India and Pakistan the situation had been transformed both in kind and degree.

The United Kingdom’s position was that we had appealed both to the Prime Minister of India and the President of Pakistan through our High Commissioners in Delhi and Rawalpindi to bring the fighting to an end. We had considered whether there was any useful British initiative we could take or whether the Commonwealth could be brought into the picture. Nevertheless, we had come to the conclusion that any British or Commonwealth initiative at this stage might cut across the work of the Secretary-General of the United Nations. Our hope was, therefore, that the Government of India would take heed of the Security Council resolution of September 6 and co-operate to the fullest extent with U Thant. We had been in touch with all Commonwealth Heads of Government and asked them to support this policy.

The High Commissioner said that he regretted the emphasis placed in the Prime Minister’s statement of the previous day on the fact that India had crossed the international frontier. In fact, Pakistan had been the first to cross the international frontier in their drive towards Jammu, but no one had expressed any concern about that fact.

The Prime Minister said that we had no firm evidence that Pakistan had in fact crossed the international line. After a brief pause, for the consultation of maps, etc., the Prime Minister went on to say that there would doubtless be a lot of argument about where the responsibility lay. He had, however, two questions to put to the High Commissioner. The first concerned the arms which the United Kingdom had supplied specifically for use against China. The High Commissioner said that of course these conditions would be observed. The Prime Minister then asked what justification there was for Indian bombing of open cities. The Deputy High Commissioner replied that they had no information on this from India; they only knew what they read in the newspaper.

The Prime Minister said that he hoped that the High Commissioner would convey to Mr. Shastri the very deep concern of the British Government about the present situation. He hoped that whatever the rights and wrongs to the situation were the Indian Government would give their fullest co-operation to U Thant. As he saw it, the situation might develop in four stages; first, both parties should agree to stop the fighting. Secondly, both parties should agree to withdraw to the status quo. Thirdly, measures should be taken to try to neutralize the situation within Kashmir and finally an attempt should be made to try to settle the whole problem of Kashmir itself. The first essential, however, was to stop the fighting without conditions.

The Deputy High Commissioner referred to a report in The Times that the British delegate to the United Nations had been instructed to condemn India. The Prime Minister said that the United Kingdom delegate had been instructed to speak on the lines of the statement issued from Number 10, Downing Street. Mr. Cledwyn Hughes added that he felt certain that when the High Commissioner saw the speech made by Lord Caradon in the Security Council he would find it perfectly exceptional. He thought it would be helpful to both sides.

2194. Tass statement issued on 7 September 1965, Moscow.

As reported earlier in the Soviet Press, an armed conflict recently flared up between the two neighbouring states of India and Pakistan in the Kashmir area. Tension is not only not easing, but, according to the latest report, military operations are assuming an ever broader scope and the region of these operations has transcended the boundaries of Kashmir. The ceasefire line in Kashmir, established by the Indian-Pakistani agreement of 1949, has in effect, been violated at several places. Large military units are involved in the military operations from both sides, tanks and aircraft are being used.

Pakistani troops, as foreign news agencies report, have advanced several dozen kilometers into the depth of Indian territory. At the same time, as Reuter reported on September 6, India’s Defence Minister Chavan stated in Parliament that ‘Indian troops had crossed the state frontier in Punjab near Lahore.’ The Indian air force is making combat flights in the region of Western Pakistan. India’s Prime Minister, according to news agencies, described the situation in Kashmir as a veritable war between India and Pakistan. Pakistan’s President Ayub Khan, in a broadcast on September 6 said that Pakistan ‘was in a state of War’ … ‘a state of emergency had been proclaimed in the country.’ The number of casualties is increasing from day to day. Not only soldiers but also civilians are dying. Such is the serious situation obtaining in that part of Asia.

There is no doubt that the armed conflict in the Kashmir area cannot benefit either of the sides – India or Pakistan. Present developments in that region play into the hands only of those outside forces that seek to disunite and set at loggerheads the states that cast off the colonial yoke. In the past, too, these forces have more than once tried to exploit the Kashmir issue to prevent the establishment of good neighbourly relations between India and Pakistan, seeking to set them at loggerheads. They are undoubtely, now, too, instigating India and Pakistan, to extend the bloodshed for the sake of their ends which run counter to the national interests of the Indian and Pakistani people who are vitally interested in the strengthening of peace. It is needed by the peoples of India and Pakistan to solve the many intricate and important problems of development of their states.

The tendency towards a further expansion of the armed conflict between India and Pakistan – two big Asian states – aggravates still further the tense situation in South and South-East Asia created by the United States aggression against the Vietnamese people.

The armed conflict between India and Pakistan evokes serious concern in the Soviet Union which always holds close to heart the cause of preserving peace. This concern is increasing because the conflict is passing in an area neighbouring on the frontiers of the Soviet Union.
The USSR is coming out for the solution of disputes between sovereign states by way of talks, by peaceful means. Realising the entire complexity of the situation in the Indian-Pakistani conflict, Soviet people believe that there is a possibility to find a peaceful solution of the disputes between India and Pakistan, given that the statesmen of both countries display realism, restraint and an understanding of the grave consequences of a development of the armed conflict.

Tass has been authorized to state that the Soviet Government has urged both sides—India, whose policy of non-alignment earned broad international recognition, and Pakistan—to immediately stop military operations and to effect a mutual withdrawal of troops beyond the ceasefire line established by the agreement between India and Pakistan in 1949, to remove the troops to the territories on which they were before the outbreak of military operations.

The Soviet Union expects that India and Pakistan, acting in the spirit of the United Nations Charter and the Bandung principles, enter into talks on a peaceful settlement of the conflict. The Soviet Government stated that both sides could rely on kind cooperation on the part of the Soviet Union, or, as one says, on the good offices, if both sides deemed this useful.

The settlement of the present conflict between India and Pakistan is an urgent matter. An understanding of this has been reflected in particular in the unanimously adopted resolutions of the Security Council on September 4 and 6.

The restraint and goodwill of both sides will undoubtedly create an opportunity to prevent the dangerous development of events and to find a peaceful solution of the conflict. Hope is expressed in the Soviet Union that the leaders of India and Pakistan will heed the voice of friends of the Indian and Pakistani peoples. The Soviet Government also hopes that the wisdom of the statesmen in India and Pakistan in the understanding and appraisal of the situation will triumph and that peace between the two neighbouring countries will be restored.

2195. Letter from the British High Commissioner in New Delhi to the British Commonwealth Relations Office.

New Delhi, September 7, 1965.

REF: DO 196/384 7 September, 1965

The Rt. Hon. Arthur Bottomley, OBE, MP.,
Secretary of State for Commonwealth Relations
London, S.W.1

Dear Arthur,

On the evening of 5 September I was asked to pay a private social visit to the house of L.K. Jha the head of the Prime Minister’s Secretariat. He is a fairly intimate friend but I had not in fact seen him except in purely formal circumstances for some weeks. I arrived at about 9.50 p.m. and talked with him alone till about 12.20 a.m. Naturally, the conversation turned on the subject of Kashmir and it seems to me of sufficient interest to be worth reporting to you fully. I should add that at that time I had no knowledge that Indian troops were going to move across the International frontier in a few hours time. I am still in some doubt whether Jha knew about it or not. It seems likely that he did and that some of his observations which have been overtaken by events, or are incongruous in the light of events, were deliberately fudged in the interests of security. But there are some indications that he may not at that stage have been aware of the timing of the military operation. In that case what appear now to be inconsistencies in his story were valid at the time he talked. Either way I am sure he spoke as frankly as it is possible for a very senior official to speak to a diplomat; and I have decided to report his observations in the form in which he made them, not trying to rationalize them by hindsight, even though some of them are now out of date in detail. I believe you will agree they are an important insight on top-level Indian thinking.

2. We first spoke about Mr. Shastri. Harking back to our common experiences in the Kutch negotiations, Jha told me that Shastri is now totally in control. He has the whole Cabinet behind him; India’s present tough line is his line and he is playing the situation his own way.

3. Jha went on to say that Shastri saw the following points as the minimum prerequisite of any limitation of India’s freedom of military action:

(a) Recognition that the present crisis had arisen because armed infiltrators under control of the Government of Pakistan carried out an unprovoked invasion of Indian Kashmir.
(b) Complete withdrawal of infiltrators before any question arose of the withdrawal of Indian troops from across the cease-fire line.

(c) If any future settlement of the present crisis were based on a cease-fire line, the line must be either tactically defensible, or in some way guaranteed, against further intrusions.

N.B. There was conspicuous vagueness about the practicalities of (b) and (c) above. Jha thought that the Indian Government might not quibble about whether the last single infiltrator had been withdrawn, if Pakistan acknowledged responsibility and manifestly withdrew all the infiltrators she could control. He believed that in the long run (c) might prove the more difficult point.

4. In the light of this the Secretary-General’s message was not held to be particularly helpful, though Indians recognized his difficulties and good intentions. Our Prime Minister’s message to Mr. Shastri of 2 September was considered unhelpful and was badly received by Shastri. This, it is said, was because it was not based on a recognition of the circumstances which had led up to the present situation and did not consider in practical terms how they might be dealt with. The message, I am told, was not seriously considered and, insofar as it was considered at all, it aroused the resentment of a section of the Cabinet whose spokesman, unexpectedly, was T.T.K. (TT Krishnamachari). Further representations from us, I was told, would be unhelpful if they were addressed in identical terms of both India and Pakistan and if they were not based on a full recognition of the contents of the Nimmo report. Jha illustrated the point to me by hypothesizing that the Prime Minister had written a really personal letter to Mr. Shastri. He might have said: “We recognize how gravely you have been wronged: the important thing now is to use extreme patience and care in redressing the situation etc. etc.” And he might have written another letter to President Ayub saying: ‘We understand your political grievance about Kashmir, but force of arms is an inadmissible method of putting it right.’ In Jha’s view what he called ‘non-neutral but still non-aligned’ individual approaches might have been more successful. The Americans and Russians provoked slightly less irritation than we did because it is alleged that they both indicated a recognition of Pakistan’s responsibility. But nothing worthwhile had come from these approaches either, and Jha was particularly scornful of the American Ambassador’s interview with Mr. Shastri on 4 September which was confined, he alleged, to pious exhortations to be nice to everyone.

5. Jha believed that there was very little chance of avoiding war. Though he recognizes better than anyone the appalling cost, even he seemed to be reconciled to its inevitability. He claimed that the Indian Cabinet appreciated the consequences at least in theory, but believed they would prevent a decisive Pakistan victory until attrition had neutralized the tanks and aircraft, when India would win an infantry war. They knew that all military aid would be cut off from both sides and they were aware of the possibility of economic sanctions. They were most reluctant to spread the war outside Kashmir, but would feel compelled to do so if Akhnur or Jammu were seriously threatened. In that case the supply line to Kashmir would be imperiled and the Indian army in Ladakh, to say nothing of the divisions in Kashmir proper, would be cut off and at the mercy of the Pakistanis and the Chinese jointly or severally. This was a major strategic disaster which India had to avoid at absolutely all costs. Jha left me in no doubt that if the counter-offensive started it would be against West Pakistan. He recognized that the Pakistanis might deliberately induce communal trouble in the east, but he thought they might have their own reasons for not doing this. The communal situation in East Bengal had considerably improved in recent months. In general the Indian government appreciation is that communal trouble can be contained; they were very worried about the Sikhs, but were hopeful that Mr. Nanda’s (Home Minister) statement due to be made the following day, 6 September, would take the heat out of this situation.

6. As far as Jha knew, the closing of the southern end of the Uri salient was the last tactical objective General Chaudhuri (Chief of Staff of the Indian Army) had set himself in Kashmir, though of course he remained free to respond to Pakistan, if Pakistani moves dictated further tactical requirements. The occupation of Muzaffarabad was not as yet part of the plan.

7. Jha said that Mr. Shastri had for some time envisaged his own solution of the Kashmir problem. It amounted to a rationalization of the cease-fire line. It would give India a little more room in the north e.g. round Kargil; it would straighten the line from Uri to Poonch; it would contemplate equivalent concessions of tactical convenience for Pakistan and the cession to Pakistan of a ‘respectable area of territory’ towards the southern end of the cease-fire line. The details of this last Jha did not specify. However, no discussions of any ‘solution’ of the Kashmir problem could be contemplated in the foreseeable future.

8. The implementation of Article 356 and 357 of the Constitution to Kashmir was seen by Mr. Shastri at the time as an internal matter to improve the Government of Kashmir; it was not related in his mind to his dialogue with President Ayub. Jha admitted that it probably was so related in Mr. Nanda’s mind. When it was conveyed to Shastri during the Kutch negotiations that this provocative action had seemed to Ayub the last straw, he sent, according to Jha, a secret personal message to Ayub through a trusted intermediary. Its essence was that Shastri was still ready to negotiate on Kashmir after he had faced his elections, and incidentally after the retirement of Aziz Ahmed, which would make the atmosphere easier. The Constitutional provisions would not be allowed to stand in the way of anything they agreed. Any cession to Pakistan of territory in Kashmir would in any case involve a major political crisis in India, and Shastri was prepared to face this in the context of a Constitutional amendment, as would be the case with other frontier adjustments. This message was conveyed on or about 27 June, 1965.

9. Shastri's present tough attitude was, in Jha's opinion, based on a number of factors including the following:

(a) He has observed other powers, including Pakistan, at work in the international field and has come to the conclusion that he is more likely to make an impression by toughness than by good behaviour.

(b) The neutral attitude taken by India's friends on the Kashmir question, including lately even the Russians, has persuaded Shastri that they have no advice to offer which could conceivably lead to a solution satisfactory to India. Moreover they ignored the opportunity to halt the present escalation at the beginning, when India reported the invasion of the infiltrators.

(c) Ayub's alleged deception during the Kutch negotiations. Mr. Shastri believed in the early stages that the negotiations were in good faith, partly because the incident was so trivial and irrelevant, and partly because he had trustworthy intelligence information that Ayub had been misled by Bhutto as to the circumstances in which the Kutch affair started. He believed that as these became clear the Pakistanis would prove reasonable. His suspicions were aroused by the Vigokot patrol claim, which the Indians believed to be totally and deliberately untrue. Now it had become apparent that, while Ayub was actually negotiating to reduce tension, and persuading us to help him to that objective, the Pakistanis were in process of planning the infiltration of Kashmir. Mr. Shastri thus had no further trust at all in Pakistan good faith. Jha added that an invasion of West Pakistan, which was originally intended as a fairly small-scale, retaliatory operation was ready to be launched if the Kutch agreement had not been signed when it was. 'D' day for the operation was 3 July. In other words, Shastri gave the Pakistanis one week after agreement was reached in London to sign the document.

11. I have not extended this already overlong letter by reporting my part in the conversation. In fact, being unaware that major hostilities were just about to break out, I deployed to Jha all the arguments I had used to Mr. Shastri in delivering Mr. Wilson's message, in some cases with considerably more frankness. Most of Jha's views quoted above were elicited in answer to either questions or observations from me.
12. I hope I am right in believing that they are worth reporting even though the circumstances have considerably changed. I propose to make one comment only, and that concerning the role that we can now play. As you are aware, I believe that generalized messages from us to the GOI are at this stage useless in influencing Indian attitudes. (See paragraph 4 above.) I fully recognize that they may, none the less, be necessary for the sake of establishing publicly and incontrovertibly our own position. Thus our Prime Minister’s two messages of 6 September were appropriate in that context; but the principal one, appealing to both sides to stop fighting, will not have made any significant impact on Mr. Shastri. I believe that communications containing some element of threat or sanction (e.g., the second of the messages of 6 September, calling on the Indians to account for British aided arms) may have some effect in the long run – even though their political side-effects may be damaging. Similarly, I believe that injunctions from the Security Council, the General Assembly or the Commonwealth as a whole cannot easily be ignored even in the present reckless mood of the Indian Cabinet. I should like you to be in no doubt, however, that I am not recommending an attitude of complacency or acquiescence, but merely that we should save our shot until we have a clear target. There may come a moment when some real opportunity arises for a friendly power to step in and point the practical way to an honourable solution. If that happened, we should still be better placed than any other power to take the initiative. I am anxious that we should not dissipate our influence by spending it too prodigally too early.

13. I have addressed this letter to you personally, since it has been necessary to raise a query about ministerial instructions. I enclose a copy for the office, a copy which could perhaps be passed to Morrice James (with whom we have no bag contact at present) and an extra copy for Number 10, if you think the Prime Minister would wish to see it.

Yours ever,

(John Freeman)

SECRET
Record of a meeting between the British Foreign Secretary and U. S. Under Secretary of State George Ball at the British Foreign Office on Kashmir.

AND ADVISERS.

INDIA-PAKISTAN

Mr. Hughes said we had been hoping that India was pursuing limited objectives and that the attack in the Punjab had been necessary to relieve the pressure in Kashmir. But the latest news of Indian bombing of Pakistan cities and of the opening by India of a new front in Rajasthan indicated that the Indians had wider objectives. We were inclined to interpret the latest moves as an indication that Mr. Chavan and the military, rather than Mr. Shastri, were dictating policy. We could be sure that President Ayub was a very worried man. It might be possible to persuade him to adopt a reasonable attitude if Indian actions were limited in scope; but the extension of hostilities by India strengthened Mr. Bhutto's hand and limit the chances of other advice getting through to President Ayub. Present Indian policy in fact made U Thant's chances of achieving a cease-fire less than when his departure for the sub-continent was decided on. Mr. Hughes said that Her Majesty's Government had decided to send no more military aid to India. As regards a Commonwealth initiative, we were holding our hand and giving U Thant full support. We would have to see in the light of the outcome of his efforts what scope there might be for Commonwealth action.

2. Mr. Ball said that the United States had stopped shipment of arms to the two sides. It had been made clear to President Ayub that it was difficult for the United States to continue military and if Pakistan took aggressive action, and a general indication on the same lines had been given to India. There had been no public announcement about this but Mr. Rusk might make one that afternoon.
As far as economic aids was concerned Mr. Ball said that the United States had made no firm commitments to either country for the next financial year and had full freedom of decision. They were prepared to use the influence this gave them in support of U Thant when the time came. But the situation could be complicated by possible Congressional initiatives which it might be difficult to control.

3. Mr. Ball asked whether Mr. Stewart thought the Russians could play a useful role. Mr. Stewart said that Sir Geoffrey Harrison would be making an introductory call on Mr. Kosygin in the next few days and we were considering his making a tentative sounding of the Soviet attitude. Mr. Ball said this would certainly be useful. The Soviet Union had an interest in preventing the situation from getting out of hand and possibly being exploited by the Chinese.

4. Mr. Hughes pointed out that the stopping of United States military supplies to Pakistan could not fail to make a powerful impact. The Pakistanis had supplies for only three weeks’ fighting. The Indians had ordnance factories and could go on longer. If the war continued for three weeks for Indians would presumably win. But if the Pakistanis won a big battle now on the plain of Punjab, this could change the situation and lead the Indians to agree to a cease-fire. Mr. Ball said that the United States would have to watch the situation more or less day by day. Their dilemma was that they could, either by action or inaction, help one side against the other.

5. Mr. Hughes said that Pakistan had made no official approach to us about our obligations in CENTO or SEATO. Mr. Bhutto had said they would but President Ayub had said nothing to Sir Morrice James at their last meeting. Mr.
Stewart said that we had always held that the CENTO treaty did not apply to Commonwealth countries. Mr. Ball said that the United States had also made it clear that they had no commitment to interfere between India and Pakistan.

6. Mr. Stewart said U Thant had told him that morning that he was planning to suggest a time and date for a cease-fire. He had not thought about what would follow if he failed to get agreement.

7. Mr. Ball asked whether we expected communal fighting. Mr. Hughes said that it depended on developments in the military situation. The key was East Pakistan. If there was much bombing there or the Indians attacked communal trouble might well break out.

8. Mr. Ball asked whether there would be a Commonwealth initiative if U Thant had no success. Mr. Hughes said that the Prime Minister had suggested a joint Commonwealth appeal to India and Pakistan. This was meeting with general approval and we were drafting an appropriate message. Individual Commonwealth Governments were of course sending messages. Mr. Pearson, who had offered to mediate, was giving full support to U Thant. We had suggested to Sir Abubakar, who was keen on a Commonwealth initiative, that he too should hold his hand. We would now wait to see how things developed. Mr. Stewart pointed out that if U Thant failed, we would have to consider what line to take in the United Nations. We were considering the possibility of a resolution to bring the problem within the scope of Chapter VII of the Charter. A decision partly depended on what we learned about the Soviet attitude.

2197. Telegram from the British Foreign Office to the British Ambassador in Moscow to sound the Soviet authorities regarding their attitude on the possible Chinese intervention in Kashmir.

No. 2833 8 September, 1965

IMMEDIATE

Addressed: to Moscow

I discussed Kashmir with Mr. Ball the American Under Secretary this morning. He agreed with my suggestion that it would be useful for you to exchange views with the Russians. I should like you to do this with Mr. Kosygin when you make your introductory call. If however you have still not seen Mr. Kosygin by the beginning of next week please ask of see Mr. Gromyko not later than 14 September.

2. Unless you see objection I should like you to speak on the following lines:
The Soviet attitude in the Security Council and their public statements suggest that we have a strong common interest in this matter and indeed look at the dangers in very much the same way. For the moment Her Majesty’s Government think the right thing to do is to give full support to the Secretary General in his present mission to seek a cease-fire. If unhappily he should fail we have it very much in mind to attempt some Commonwealth initiative and the Prime Minister is in constant contact with the Commonwealth leaders. Have the Russians any action in view and are there ways in which we can work together to avert what we both recognize as a great danger?

3. If the atmosphere is right you should go on to say that in the event of no response by the combatants to the Security Council resolutions further discussion will have to take place in the Council. What do the Russians think ought to be done? It would seem to you personally speaking hard to avoid the conclusion that in that case a Chapter VII situation had arisen. If on the other hand the Secretary General is successful in securing a cease-fire have the Russians any ideas on how a long-term solution should be sought?

4. If the Russians raise the question of the supply of arms you should say that they will have seen that the Americans have made an announcement and we ourselves are stopping supplies, although the quantities going from this country are small. You should attempt to probe the Russian attitude on their supplies.

5. I do not expect the Soviet leaders will be ready to say anything about China, but you should do your best to find out what they think of Chinese intentions.

6. Her Majesty’s Embassy Washington please inform State Department.

Telegram from the British High Commissioner in Rawalpindi to the Commonwealth Relations Office.

Rawalpindi, September 8, 1965.

Sir M. James

No. WL 134 7 September, 1965

IMMEDIATE

Addressed to: C.R.O.

From: High Commissioner in Rawalpindi.

President Ayub received me at 0500 hours G.M.T. today, 7 September, Mr. Bhutto was also present. I handed over Mr. Wilson's message. He expressed gratitude and promised an early reply.

2. President then reiterated Pakistan's position. He admitted Pakistanis 'had not been angels.' But for years they had suffered Indian oppression and excesses. Now they were victims of Indian aggression (which was being accompanied by many inhuman acts). This aggression had been undertaken by India in blatant violation of her solemn pledges. Moreover it had been made possible, and encouraged by Anglo/American supply of arms to India. Outcome was what Pakistanis had always feared. There had already been large-scale Indian attacks by land and air and more were threatened. In these circumstances it was not possible for Pakistan to do anything which increased the hazards to her territory. He repeated several times that Pakistan wanted a cease-fire. But it must be 'a purposeful cease-fire'. Such an agreement could cover withdrawal of all Indian and Pakistani troops from whole of Kashmir, followed by establishment of an international force in that State, this would create conditions for a settlement of Kashmir dispute devised by some third party. Unless there was 'a purposeful cease-fire' the result would merely by yet more years of talking. American Government had it in their power to stop Indian actions, and were committed to help defend Pakistan against aggression. Pakistan had asked them to do this in accordance with their bilateral obligations to Pakistan.

3. I then recalled to President Ayub his own decisive contribution to settlement on Rann of Kutch dispute when on 30 April he had unilaterally ordered his troops to refrain from taking any action which would aggravate situation further. This had been followed by similar action on Mr. Shastri's part. Subsequently two-month-long discussions had been possible in a temperature reduced by absence of actual shooting. In this way Indian and Pakistani conditions which had originally been quite incompatible were finally brought together in an agreed document. This had only been possible because restraint on both sides had created the opportunity for negotiations.

4. Bhutto interrupted to say that situation then was quite different from situation now. President concurred. Now (he added) Pakistan territory had been violated, and national honour was to stake. No nation could allow its territory to be violated with impunity. If only India showed ‘some decency’ and ‘some sense’ present futile conflict could be ended. He had never wanted an all-out war with India and confirmed (in reply to a specific question from me) that he still did not want one.

5. I then appealed again for a positive reply to paragraph 4 of Mr. Wilson’s message. Speaking personally and as an old friend of Pakistan’s I then made point that Pakistan had her own share of responsibility to bear for the present situation, and spoke as in paragraph 2 of my WL 128. President took this in without showing any resentment, and made no (repeat no) serious attempt to rebut points I made. He then repeated his intention to reply promptly to Prime Minister. Bhutto said Pakistan position was that they could only agree to stop fighting if ‘the heart of the matter were broached’. I replied by reading paragraph of Lord Caradon’s speech beginning with the words ‘We have always believed that the Kashmir problem…..’ I underlined the point that force would not solve the Kashmir dispute; only peaceful negotiations could do that.

6. At no (repeat no) point did President request British assistance under terms of CENTO or SEATO.

7. We then had brief discussion on movement away from threatened area of British civilians (see my immediately following telegram).

No.WL160 September 10, 1965

IMMEDIATE

My telegram No. WL 154, Paragraph 5: American/Pakistan Relations.

McConaughy told me today, 10 September, of his talk yesterday with Mr. Bhutto. Following are main points:

(i) Bhutto took United States decision to suspend arms’ shipments to both countries very badly indeed. He said this would be only a pin-prick to Indians; but fatal blow (indeed a stab in back) to Pakistanis;

(ii) Bhutto added that Americans were mistaken if they thought they would be strengthening hands of United Nations by doing this, it would only drive Pakistanis to take more desperate risks. They would fight with their hands if necessary;

(iii) Bhutto begged Americans to reconsider decision, or at least sell arms to Pakistan. If it were only a matter of Congress appropriation there should be no objection to commercial sale. McConaughy answered this by saying it was not so much a question of money as that United States Government were determined not to add fuel to fire;

(iv) Bhutto appealed to McConaughy to get United States Government to redress balance by stopping economic aid and PL. 480 to India;

(v) McConaughy put it to Bhutto that Pakistan could not lose by accepting United Nations proposals. If Indians also accepted, well and good. If Indians did not accept, a new situation would be created; Bhutto should not assume that would be end of United States measures against India. To this Bhutto replied that even if India did accept United Nations proposals Pakistan could not accept them as they stood. How could Pakistan Government tell their people, after all their sacrifices in Kashmir that they were to go back to where they were? McConaughy answered that it was politically inconceivable for any Indian Government to accept Pakistan proposals. If both sides accepted United Nations proposals it would not just be a return to old situation; Pakistan would have to take it on faith that there would be new impetus towards negotiated settlement;
(vi) Bhutto conceded some Pakistan encouragement for Kashmir – Mujahid operation but sought to justify it has basically ethnic Kashmiri revolt against Indian attempt at brutal obliteration of separate Kashmir identity.

EMERGENCY

From: High Commissioner in Rawalpindi.

Indo-Pakistan Relations

Today, 11 September, I asked Bhutto to see me and have just had long talk with him.

2. Bhutto said:

(a) Pakistanis had fully explained their position to U Thant (on lines already known to you from President Ayub’s message in my telegram WL 141). Security Council Resolutions of 4 and 6 September favoured India since requiring return to status quo ante 5 August without providing for any subsequent settlement of Kashmir dispute. Ineffectiveness of United Nations for this purpose had repeatedly been demonstrated over last 18 years, and never more so than at last year’s Security Council discussion on Kashmir. U Thant, himself, had put matter in nutshell by saying that so far as United Nations was concerned Kashmir issued had been ‘almost dead’:

(b) On situation generally, Bhutto said that Pakistan would decide her future relations with all countries by how they behaved in her present hour of need. United States Government had not only failed to honour their treaty obligations, but by cutting off arms aid to both countries had dealt a heavy blow at Pakistan’s capacity to resist Indian aggression. They had done this regardless of Pakistani loyalty to the American alliance over the years, and of Pakistan’s continued membership in CENTO and SEATO despite the penalties which this entailed for her. Under American alliance all arms procurement had been geared to United States sources. Whereas India had access to supplies from many countries, and was in any case a much larger producer of arms;
(c) Under United Nations Charter, Pakistan had inherent right to defend herself against aggression, and would now be appealing for support to all peace-loving nations.

3. I said that:

(a) America’s intentions, like those of Britain and other Security Council Members, were to do everything in our power to get both India and Pakistan to stop fighting. I recalled McConaughy’s statements to Bhutto (see my telegram WL 154) that American bilateral responsibilities to Pakistan went beyond appeal to United Nations, if that should not work, and that subsequent American actions would depend in first instance on response of both countries to United Nations efforts (Bhutto conceded that both these points had been made).

(b) Pakistani terms for a cease-fire would certainly be unacceptable to India, and there could be no question of India being compelled to accept them by force, which if persisted in would only bring about general disaster. First and crucial need was to get from the battlefield to the conference table, or in the other words, to get a negotiation started. But no negotiation could begin if Pakistan insisted in advance that it must conclude by meeting every one of Pakistan’s own objectives. There had to be give and take.

4. Bhutto said reasonableness or otherwise of Pakistan’s terms for a cease-fire would doubtless be judged differently according to developments in the fighting. If Pakistanis scored military success their terms would at once be regarded everywhere as more reasonable. The converse was also true.

5. I said the Indo-Pakistan war so far was developing as I had expected, namely, towards rapid exhaustion on both sides of military supplies with economic and social disaster, great communal bitterness, the only certain outcome, and no hope of victory in any real sense for either party. Unless the fighting stopped there would soon be no chance left of a tolerable outcome for either.

6. Bhutto then said that he would like to discuss whole matter with [gap. omitted— Ayub?] again soon, possibly this evening. As we parted he said some warm personal words about high value which Pakistanis place on my presence here, and on contribution being made by this mission which Bhutto said he rated above any other.

7. Foregoing conversation in my view shows that paragraph 4 of Mr. Wilson’s message of 6 September; his talk with Hilaly on 7, and my own representations to Ayub (see my telegram WL 134) are producing some effect here. I am pretty sure Pakistanis are looking to us again to assume mediatory role between them and India, this time over Kashmir and indeed it may be that they have had precisely this at the back of their minds for some time. This would account for their not having sought to embarrass us by involving British assistance under CENTO and SEATO. Another pointer is that so far Pakistanis have allowed me to maintain my one vital teleprinter link from here to Peshawar which it is within their power to sever at any time. McConaughy’s similar link from here to Karachi has been cut.

8. Am sending foregoing Emergency in hope that it will arrive in time for Cabinet consultations which I understand are being held over week-end.

2202. Brief prepared by the British Commonwealth Relations Office for the Secretary of State for the Cabinet meeting on Kashmir.

Ref. Do 196/388

September 12, 1965.

Brief for Secretary of State Cabinet Meeting on Sunday, 12 September

The Secretary of State may like to make the following points on the hostilities between India and Pakistan.

(a) Origins of Fighting

The Kashmir dispute has continued unabated since 1947. In 1962-1963 there was some hope of progress in the direct talks between India and Pakistan after the Chinese attack on India. These were frustrated largely by Pakistan’s own actions in trying to use China as a means of putting pressure on India.

The situation improved again with Sheikh Abdullah’s release in early 1964.

After Nehru’s death, the Pakistanis were prepared to give Mr. Shastri some breathing space, but they soon became convinced that Mr. Shastri was not in a position to have any useful negotiations with them. During the last year the position on both sides was therefore hardened. The Pakistanis became convinced the only way of getting the Indians to negotiate was to put all means of pressure on them. For this reason, they have objected violently to arms aid to India on the grounds that if the Indians were militarily strong they would never negotiate on Kashmir.
Earlier this year the Pakistanis took reckless military action in the Rann of Kutch and the peace was kept with great difficulty. In August, they put into effect a plan for infiltrating armed men across the cease fire line.

At first we hoped that the Indians would deal with the infiltrators and that the situation would not deteriorate. At this stage we were preoccupied more with Pakistan/America relations following Pakistan’s reaction to the postponement of the aid consortium.

In fact, however, the Indians crossed the cease fire line in order to cut off the access route of the infiltrators. This led to a Pakistan action across the cease fire line in a far more sensitive strategic area. The Indians were unable to halt the thrust which threatened Indian communications. The Indians therefore attacked towards Lahore.

(b) Objectives of Both Sides.

The Indians will claim that their objective is to remove the military threat to Kashmir. They have made it plain, however, that they will not agree to a cease fire without a return to the previous cease fire line and frontiers and without a guarantee from Pakistan that it will not use military force against the cease fire line. This would mean in effect an acceptance by Pakistan that the cease fire line is permanent and unchangeable; they will be giving up their claim for a settlement of the Kashmir problem. The Pakistanis said that they will not stop fighting unless it is agreed that there are negotiations for a final settlement of the Kashmir problem. The line taken by both sides will, of course, depend very much on military developments.

(c) British Position

We have always tried to find a settlement of the differences between India and Pakistan. Any contribution we could make has always been dependent on our retaining some influence with both sides. There is no need to go into the long history of our attitude towards the Kashmir problem, but we have never been able to accept the Indian case that the future of Kashmir was irrevocably settled by the accession of the Maharajah, and that the United Nations resolutions of 1948 are no longer applicable. The Indians have regarded our attitude as hostile to their case. The Pakistanis have also been dissatisfied that we have been unable to give stronger support to their claim for an early plebiscite, and they have also regarded our arms aid to India as hostile to their interests.

Our aim since the infiltration over the cease fire line in early August is to persuade both sides to show restraint and co-operate with the United Nations Observer Force and the United Nations. On 6 September the Prime Minister sent a strong message to both Mr. Shastri and President Ayub to support the United Nations resolution of 4th September, and deploring the resumption of fighting as a result of the Indian attack across the Punjab frontier. Our view has been that this attack created a new situation which was full of danger to the subcontinent, and the Indians resented a specific reference to this attack in the public statement which we made. Our statement has been balanced by a statement of 4 September by our representative in the United Nations showing our disapproval of the infiltrations across the cease fire line from Pakistan.

We have suspended all shipments of military aid and all military stores under our control from the United Kingdom. Our military aid goes to India and not to Pakistan, but military purchases are probably of more importance to Pakistan than to India. The United States has taken similar action which bites far more on Pakistan than it does on India, and the Canadians have also suspended their military shipments.

(d) Military Developments

The military situation remains obscure; there is no clear indication of advantage to either side, but it would seem that Indian thrusts have made little progress. On the other hand our expectation must be that India in a very short time will begin to hamper the Pakistanis and obtain the upper hand as a result of their greater numbers and military resources. There is a possibility that in time the fighting will deteriorate into a generalized slogging match which will involve the civilian population. If this happens casualties will be on a vast scale.

It is possible that failure to achieve any immediate military advantages might in due course make both sides more agreeable to a cease fire.

(e) U Thant’s Mission

U Thant is in India and Pakistan for a few days to investigate the possibilities of arranging a cease fire. He intends to return to New York to report to the Security Council next week. The chances of a cease fire being agreed in such a short period seem remote, but there may just be a possibility, however, if sufficient pressure can be put on both sides, to their agreeing that the fighting should stop.

We are analyzing carefully what pressures are possible. Certain economic sanctions would be effective, but over a long period. If concerted international pressure on the combatants could be arranged the fighting could be brought to a halt in the long run. However, we have to weigh very carefully the danger all this will do to our future relations with both countries as against the damage which will inevitably be done by a continuance of the fighting.

(f) Commonwealth Action
The Prime Minister has been in touch with his Commonwealth colleagues some of whom (Sir Abubakar, President Nkrumah and President Kaunda) are suggesting that the Commonwealth Peace Mission of Vietnam should intervene in India and Pakistan. The Prime Minister has made it plain that we must at this stage put all our weight behind U Thant’s mission. He is, however, consulting with his colleagues to see whether the idea of using the Commonwealth Peace Mission if U Thant’s fails commends itself generally. The Prime Minister has let it be known that he would not wish his own position to be a material factor in the composition of any mission which goes to India and Pakistan.

2203. Letter from Foreign Minister of Pakistan Z.A. Bhutto to African Foreign Minister(s).
Rawalpindi, September 13, 1965.

Your Excellency,

On the 6th September, India launched a naked and unprovoked and treacherous aggression against Pakistan; on that day the Indian military machines which India had built up with massive military assistance from the U.S. and certain other countries by shamelessly contra-banding the non-existent Chinese threat was unleashed and the Indian armed forces suddenly invaded Pakistan territory - the three pronged attack against Lahore the second largest city in Pakistan and our country’s nerve centre. India has sought to explain away her criminal and perfidious act by blaming Pakistan for the revolt in Indian occupied Kashmir. The fact is that the people of Kashmir have suffered Indian suppression and oppression for 18 long years. For 18 years India resorted first to evasive tactics and more recently to blank refusal to honour her own solemn international commitments to the people of Kashmir; Pakistan and the world movements permitted to the people of the State of Jammu & Kashmir to exercise their rights of self determination. India failed to implement the U.N. resolutions which she had accepted to hold a plebiscite in the State. As the Kashmiri people grew restless India increased the violence of her tyranny and in desperation in August on the 12th anniversary of the first incarceration of their leader Sheikh Mohammad Abdullah the Kashmiri people raised the banner of freedom and rebelled against Indian colonialism. The Indian allegation that the freedom fighters in Kashmir were infiltrators was nothing more than a contemptible cloak to delude the world. It was an insult to the brave people of Kashmir. We have already declared that the freedom fighters are the sons of the soil of Kashmir. Freedom loving people all over the world have extended their sympathies to the freedom fighters. The people of Pakistan naturally supported their Muslim brethren in Kashmir who are fighting for their emancipation from imperialist yoke. The revolt in Kashmir was used by India as a pretext to implement her declared scheme to occupy also the liberated part of the State known as Azad Kashmir. India had in fact started unfolding her schemes before the revolt began in Indian occupied Kashmir; as far back as 15th May, long before the so-called Pakistani infiltration. India crossed the cease-fire line and occupied three Pakistani posts in the Kargil sector on the Pakistan side on the line; compelled to vacate these posts under U.N. pressure but this time the Indians again crossed the cease-fire line on August 15 and reoccupied these posts. This was done within hours of a public threat by the Indian Prime Minister that India would carry the fight to Azad Kashmir. The Indian Defence Minister also stated in the Indian Lok Sabha that India had crossed the ceasefire line in the past and would do so again. On August 23, a village – Awan Sharir – one mile inside Pakistan territory was shelled by Indian forces. On August 24, Indian forces again crossed the ceasefire line in the Tithwal sector and seized two Azad Kashmir posts; a few days later they struck across the line in the Uri-Poonch sector and by the end of August seized a number of Pakistan posts there. That the Pakistani posts had been seized in order to seal the routes of access by Pakistani infiltrators is real propaganda to put Pakistan off guard and delude the world. All reliable information available to us at the time indicated that India had a clear and presented intention to mount a big offensive to seize Azad Kashmir; in order to arrest all further aggression by the Indian forces which had reduced the ceasefire line to a nullity. The Azad Kashmir forces backed by the Pakistan Army crossed the ceasefire line for the first time since the ceasefire agreement was reached 17 years ago. They advanced into the Bhimber sector and seized Chhamb and Deva the same afternoon the………….…..our Air Force in that area. The conflict was thus escalated by India while Pakistan had refrained from having recourse to its Air Force even to save the Uri-Poonch sector from seizure by India; on the 6th September night while the Security Council had appealed to both India and Pakistan to ceasefire, Indian forces launched a three pronged armed attack against Lahore making good their leaders’ threat to invade Pakistan at a place and time of their own choosing. A war of aggression by India has thus been forced on Pakistan. The Indian attacks have been repulsed. However, heavy fighting continues against escalating this conflict still further. On September 6 night the I.A.F., bombed Rawalpindi as well as Chittagong and Karachi. We have not attacked New Delhi or any major Indian City. From the foregoing facts it is evident where responsibility for present conflict lies. It is quite clear that there will be no peace in the region as long as there is no peace in Jammu and Kashmir and there will be no peace in the State until its people are allowed freely to decide the question of their future in accordance with the pledge given to them by the U.N. by India and by Pakistan. Pakistan welcomes the efforts of the U.N. to restore peace to the area. We welcome the proposal for a ceasefire in order to restore lasting peace and tranquility function in the State.

2. Within three months of the ceasefire a plebiscite should be conducted in the State under U.N. auspices to ascertain the wishes of the people of Jammu & Kashmir on the question of accession of their State to India or Pakistan. This is the only way in which peace can permanently return to this land. There is no other way. This in brief is our position. With the Indian armed forces attacking the sacred territory of Pakistan our duty is clear. The people of your country who were themselves victims of imperialist aggression and have fought against tremendous odds will I am sure understand the resolve of our people to defend our homeland in accordance with the charter of the U.N. Pakistan has invoked the right of individual and collective self-defence. We have also requested the Security Council to take action including enforcement action to suppress and vacate Indian aggression against Pakistan and Jammu & Kashmir. While we remain ready for a peaceful and honourable settlement based on the right of self-determination of the people of Kashmir as pledged to them by India and Pakistan, our immediate objective must be to throw the Indian aggression out of our soil. In this duty we seek the moral and material assistance of all peace loving people.

Moscow, September 13, 1965.

The incoming reports show that the Indian-Pakistani armed conflict is gaining ground. Military actions, which were started in Kashmir, are spreading to new districts. More and more troops are put into action from both sides. Air raids are growing in intensity and they are made not only on points within the zones of hostilities but also on towns deep in the territory of both countries, their capitals included. Paratroopers are sent into the rear. Naval forces are also being involved in military operations.

The stepping up of military actions between India and Pakistan, coupled with the continued aggression of American imperialism in Vietnam, increase still more the danger to peace in South and Southeast Asia and the danger to universal peace. It is understandable therefore that the governments of many countries situated near the conflict area as well as in other continents, voice justified concern and urge both sides to call an immediate halt to hostilities and settle the conflict peacefully. The U.N. Secretary General is also making efforts in this direction to compliance with the Security Council decision. More and more insistent demands are made for prompt action to put an end to the bloodshed, stamp out the conflagration of war in that area of Asia, and restore peace which is so badly needed by the Indian and Pakistani peoples for their constructive labour.

There are, however, forces which seek to profit by the worsened Indian-Pakistani relations. By their incendiary statements they push them toward the further aggravation of the military conflict. But such a turn of events can only aggravate the situation and cause the present developments to escalate into an even bigger conflagration. If matters develop in this direction, many states might find themselves drawn into the conflict one by one. This is a dangerous prospect. As shown by historical experience, this may have the gravest consequences – not only for the people of the region where the conflict began, but also far beyond it.

This course of event is unquestionably not in the interest of the peoples of India and Pakistan and the peoples of all Asia. And however the causes behind the hostilities between India and Pakistan are appraised, one thing is clear; their further extension would benefit only the forces of imperialism and reaction, only those who would like to re-impose the yoke of colonialism and neocolonialism on the newly free peoples. Even now American imperialism is trying to exploit the military clashes between India and Pakistan to divert the people’s attention from the US aggression in Vietnam.
Tass is empowered to state that the Soviet Government, seriously concerned over the turn of events, again calls upon the Governments of India and Pakistan to be reasonable and take measures to stop the hostilities at once. Nobody will deny that when blood is shed, when towns and villages are destroyed, when war hysteria is generated, it is more difficult to seek a reasonable solution to the problems which exist between the two states. Extension of the conflict inevitably engenders new problems which may prove even more difficult of solution.

The Soviet Government expects that the Governments of India and Pakistan, guided by the interests of peace, will, following the immediate cessation of hostilities, withdraw their troops behind the ceasefire line established by the Agreement of 1949, return them to the territory where they were stationed before the start of military operations. There is no possibility for settling the conflict other than peaceful talks. As it has been indicated in the messages of the Chairman of the USSR Council of Ministers to the Prime Minister of India and the President of Pakistan, dated September 4, the Soviet Government is ready to offer its good services if, of course, both sides express a desire for this.

The settlement of the conflict is primarily the concern of India and Pakistan. But in the situation that is taking shape a great deal depends also on other states.

One should realize the extent of the danger with which these events are fraught, display restraint and feeling of responsibility. All states should exert efforts to end the conflict and the bloodshed. The whole world, all states should warn those who facilitate the fanning of the conflict by their incendiary statements and by their policy that they thereby assume grave responsibility for such a policy, for such actions. No government has any right to add fuel to the flames. One should stop the dangerous development of events. Peace on the borders between India and Pakistan must triumph.

2205. Reply by Prime Minister Lal Bahadur Shastri to the letter from UN Secretary General U Thant.

New Delhi, September 14, 1965.

Mr. Secretary-General,

I thank you for your letter of 12th September, 1965 and appreciate greatly the sincere concern which you have expressed about the likely repercussions of the existing situation on the welfare of the peoples of India and Pakistan. Even since India attained independence in 1947, we have concentrated attention on the economic development of our country with a view to eradicating poverty and providing a reasonable standard of living of our people. Such resources as we could mobilize have been devoted to this vital task. All these years, we have actively and purposefully pursued a policy of non-alignment and of peaceful co-existence. We have sought peace and friendship with our neighbours. Our faith in the forces of peace was so genuine and so strong that we did not pay the requisite attention building up adequately the defence forces of the country. It was only after the Chinese invasion on our northern borders in 1962 that we realized how essential it was for us to be prepared for defending our territorial integrity.

So far as Pakistan is concerned, our effort has always been to promote good neighbourly relations. There has not been even a single occasion, during the last 18 years, when India has deviated from the path of peace in her relationship with Pakistan, let alone thinking of any aggressive action. In fact, on more than one occasion, but I and my distinguished predecessor have offered to enter into a no-war pact with Pakistan so that there is no possibility of a clash of arms between the two countries.

The response from Pakistan has been disappointing in the extreme. Our proposal for a no-war pact has been repeatedly turned down. An atmosphere of conflict and tension has been continuously maintain through a variety of ways, including firing across the cease-fire line, repeated border incidents elsewhere and a campaign of hate against India through the controlled press and radio of Pakistan. Important men, occupying responsible positions in that country, have openly and repeatedly declared their intention to use force against India in achieving their objectives. Not content with that, the rulers of Pakistan have launched naked aggression against India three times since 1947, twice in our State of Jammu and Kashmir and once in our State of Gujarat.

Mr. Secretary-General, we fully understand the concern of the Security Council over the present situation and we greatly appreciate its efforts towards the restoration of peace. I cannot, however, help expressing here that if the same concern had been shown immediately when Pakistan launched a massive attack on India on August 5, 1965, by sending thousands of armed infiltrators equipped with Pakistani arms and ammunition and officered by men of the regular forces of Pakistan, about which there is irrefutable evidence, for the purpose of capturing vital positions, such as airports, and police stations, cutting of lines of communication, destroying bridges, and other public property and creating disorder with a view to seizing power from the lawfully established Government in accordance with a predetermined plan of invasion, the situation would not have assumed its present serious proportions. I would not go further into this aspect of the matter but must add that having been attacked by Pakistan, we had to take action to defend ourselves. I must also stress, and I hope it will be appreciated, that at every stage whatever action our armed forces took was dictated solely by the requirements of self-defence to meet the aggression of Pakistan.

Whatever may be the context, Mr. Secretary-General, we greatly welcome your visit and we recognize the importance of your mission from the point of view of peace, not only in the Indian sub-continent, but, indeed, in the world as a whole. India has already believed in peace and her adherence to peaceful methods stands unshaken. In deference to the wishes of the Security Council and to the appeals which we have received from many friendly countries, we accept your proposal for an immediate cease-fire. We would, therefore, be prepared to order a cease-fire effective from 6.30 a.m. IST on Thursday, 16 September 1965, provided you confirm to me by 9 a.m. tomorrow that Pakistan is also agreeable to do so.

In your letter, it has been suggested that the Government of India and Pakistan should give the requisite order to their field commanders with a view to ensuring an effective cease-fire from the appointed time and date. This will, however, be effective only in respect of the armed forces in uniform engaged in the present combat. The problem of thousands of armed infiltrators who have crossed over into our State of Jammu and Kashmir, from Pakistan side, will, I am afraid, continue to remain on our hands. Armed as they are with dangerous weapons of destruction, such as machine guns and hand-grenades, they do even now, as I write this letter, make sudden depredations in an effort to damage vital installations and other property and harass the people of the State of Jammu and Kashmir. That this invasion by armed infiltrators in civilian disguise was conceived, planned and executed by Pakistan is now well-established. Your own report, Mr. Secretary-General, brings this out clearly. And yet, as we understand from you, Pakistan continues to disclaim all responsibility. We are not surprised at this denial, because even on an earlier occasion when Pakistan had committed aggression by adopting similar methods she had at first denied her complicity, although at a later date she had to admit her involvement. We must urge that Pakistan should be asked forthwith to withdraw these armed infiltrators. Until that is done, our security forces will have to deal with these raiders effectively.
Mr. Secretary-General, may I remind you that it was only the other day, in April this year, that Pakistan had launched an armed attack supported by tanks and other armour, in our State of Gujarat. Despite grave provocation, we had then acted with great self-restraint and had taken no counter-measures. Eventually, a cease-fire agreement was signed, in which among other things, both sides had expressed the solemn hope that the tension between the two countries would get reduced. Subsequent events have shown that Pakistan never meant what she had agreed to expressly and specifically in that cease-fire agreement. It has come to us as a great shock that even from the month of April, 1965, plans for invading India in another sector had been prepared and training was being imparted to the armed personnel for war-like operations on our territories. Within less than five weeks of the signing of the Indo-Pakistan Cease-fire Agreement relating to West Pakistan-Gujarat Border, Pakistan attacked India once again. In the light of our own experience during the last few months, we will have to insist that there must be no possibility of a recurrence of armed attacks on India, open or disguised. Let me make it perfectly clear, Mr. Secretary-General, that when consequent upon cease-fire becoming effective further details are considered, we shall not agree to any disposition which will leave the door open for further infiltrations or prevent us from dealing with the infiltrations that have taken place. I would also like to state categorically that no pressures or attacks will deflect us from our firm resolve to maintain the sovereignty and territorial integrity of our country, of which the State of Jammu and Kashmir is an integral part.

In conclusion, Mr. Secretary-General, I must point out that the menacing forces of aggression are unfortunately at large in Asia, endangering the peace of the world. If the Security Council does not identify the aggressor and equates it with the victims of aggression, the chances of peace will fade out. The situation which the Security Council is being called upon to handle has grave and vital implications in respect of peace and political stability in Asia. What is involved is the welfare of millions of human beings who have suffered for long and who are now entitled to relief and to a better standard of living. If the forces of aggression are not checked effectively, the world may find itself embroiled in conflict which may well annihilate mankind. We sincerely hope that the forces of peace will win and that humanity will go forward towards ever increasing progress and prosperity. It is in the spirit that we are agreeing to your proposal for a cease-fire.

PRIORITY

Addressed: to C.R.O. telegram No. WL 196 of 16 September
Repeated for information: New Delhi, Washington, UKMIs New York,

India/Pakistan War:

American Ambassador today 16 September showed me long telegram he has sent to Washington analyzing present position and recommending action which he thinks United States Government should now take. Following is substance of telegram.

2. Analysis of situation

(i) India is as responsible for present conflict as Pakistan, if not more responsible. Pakistan initiated sequence of events with infiltrations starting 5 August but all subsequent escalations except for Pakistan thrust in Chhamb sector were caused by India;

(ii) American stoppage of military aid hits Pakistan more severely than India;

(iii) American support for U Thant’s proposals for immediate cease-fire without strings in effect supports India;

(iv) If United Nations sticks to position represented in 6 September resolution (i.e., immediate cease-fire without strings) there is danger that Pakistanis will be forced into position of having either to make abject surrender or fight to finish;

(v) Pakistanis are most unlikely surrender;

(vi) On other hand fight to finish would destroy Pakistan military capability which is not in American interests. It might also have other undesirable effects;

(a) Throw Pakistan into Chinese orbit;

(b) Divide United Nations with some members (e.g., Iran and Turkey) giving material support to Pakistan thus impairing United Nations prestige and prolonging conflict.

3. Policy Recommendations;

In light of above analysis Ambassador recommends that United States should now try by means of discreet behind scenes work to get United Nations Security Council and Secretary-General to change their present approach. Specifically United States should:

(i) Work for a United Nations proposal for cease-fire followed by unconditional talks between India and Pakistan (possibly with help of third party);

(ii) Threaten a wide range of sanctions which would be applied by United States if two countries refused to agree to cease-fire on above terms;

(iii) Issue a declaration in support of a settlement of outstanding Indo-Pakistan differences (without specifying precise lines along which this might be achieved);

(iv) Offer full support to facilitate such a settlement (e.g., use of American good offices).

Addressed: to C.R.O. telegram No. WL 191 of 16 September

From High Commissioner in Rawalpindi

My telegram No.WL 187: India-Pakistan War.

I saw Foreign Secretary Aziz Ahmed this morning 16 September.

Ahmed read me text of Mr. Shastri’s reply to U Thant’s proposal for cease-fire at 0100 G.M.T. today. Text was as follows:

‘I reaffirm my willingness to order a simple cease-fire and cessation of hostilities as soon as you are able to confirm to me that the Government of Pakistan has also agreed to a cease-fire.’

2. Ahmed said that in their reply being delivered to U Thant through Pakistan Mission in New York Pakistan Government have:

(i) expressed Pakistan’s willingness in principle to agree to a cease-fire while.

(ii) regretting that U Thant’s proposals contained no (repeat no) guarantee at all that once cease-fire was effected Kashmir dispute would be finally settled. Negotiations for which U Thant had called in his cease-fire appeal were by themselves not (repeat not) enough, as was demonstrated by fact that 1962-63 negotiations to which U Thant referred in his appeal had been completely abortive owing to intransigent Indian attitude. Pakistan could not (repeat not) agree to a cease-fire not linked to some procedure for finally settling dispute since this would merely postpone the conflict.

3. When I deplored this negative reply, and expressed great sadness and foreboding about position into which Pakistan had put herself, Ahmed expressed hope that we would not regard reply as negative and said it was only answer possible in present circumstances.

4. Hard hitting arguments then developed about reasonableness of Pakistan position. Ahmed stuck rigidly to line that there was no point in stopping fighting without firm prospect of early final settlement. Pakistan's three-point plan for cease-fire imposed equal disabilities on either side and was entirely reasonable. In reply I emphasized:

(i) Three-point plan in effect represented terms which Pakistan would dictate if she had won the war. Pakistanis could not possibly expect Indians to accept it.

(ii) Vital need was for cease-fire which would provide pause for cool rational thought and facilitate negotiations. These must follow and could not (repeat not) precede a cease-fire.

(iii) Nobody could say what outcome of negotiations could be but they were only possible alternative to present tragic and wasteful conflict.

(iv) Big difference between present situation and situation in 1962-63 when Indo-Pakistan negotiations had been abortive was that international mood was quite different now. Whole world had been roused by present Indo-Pakistan war and wanted settlement of Indo-Pakistan differences.

(v) Force was a blind and deaf judge—and because of disparity in strength between Pakistan and India was bound to favour latter respective of merits.

5. My interview with Aziz Ahmed took place before (repeat before) I had seen your telegram 338, 344, 345 and 346 which have only just reached me i.e. since foregoing was drafted As you see I made a number of points in these telegrams to Foreign Secretary but am sure I should now reinforce approaches to President and Foreign Minister. Evidently your arguments and mine have been insufficient so far to make Pakistanis see reason but we can only continue to press them as hard as we can. A message to the President could be a valuable further means of persuasion.

6. You do not mention line we are taking in Delhi. I presume we are doing our utmost to get Indians to accept principle of negotiation over Kashmir following cease-fire. Even If Pakistanis drop their three point plan they must at least be able to count on a negotiation. Otherwise I cannot see Ayub agreeing to end the war since his own political survival is at stake.

EMERGENCY

Repeated: for information: Washington, Ottawa, UKMIs New York, Canberra, Rawalpindi, Moscow, Karachi, Wellington

C.R.O. telegram No.3204, [Telegram No. 718 to Washington] India-Pakistan.

I am worried at some implications in your telegram which affect our future policy in Security Council and elsewhere on the conflict between India and Pakistan, in particular your reference in paragraph 7 to possibility that Security Council may have to consider a clause about future of Kashmir.

2. During the past three days I have become increasingly concerned by the very serious and widespread disillusionment expressed here on our failure promptly and clearly to condemn Pakistan’s infiltration into Kashmir especially as subsequently we alone publicly deplored India’s crossing of the international border in the Punjab. This has very greatly diminished our influence and standing here; a false step at the Security Council meeting could, I believe, convert a temporary misunderstanding into irrevocable damage.

3. In considering our line for tomorrow’s meeting, I feel it must be recognized that our historic policy of holding the balance between India and Pakistan no longer accords with the facts:

(a) By her action in August 1965, Pakistan in effect abandoned her attempt to secure a political and diplomatic solution of the Kashmir dispute in favour of a military solution. This has now probably failed. India appears from here to be on the way to achieving substantial military superiority over Pakistan through the attrition of Pakistan armour and aircraft. If that assessment proves to be correct, I am convinced that India would not submit to a political settlement at this stage which appeared to favour Pakistan’s claims.
(b) Much more important than this emotional reaction is a military consequence which directly affects ourselves. If a political settlement enabled Kashmir to opt into Pakistan, Pakistan and China would then have a common land frontier of several hundred miles accessible by a main motor road within easy striking distance of one of the most thriving industrial areas of India, the Punjab. Whilst in the very long run India might doubtfully be brought to accept an autonomous Kashmir on the lines of Sikkim with international guarantees I do not believe that India could now accept the self-determination of an area which permitted Pakistan and China to develop direct land communications through Ladakh. Nor, as I see it, would this be in the interests of the West.

4. It follows that India is unlikely to accept a settlement in Kashmir which fails to acknowledge that what she has she holds, though adjustments in both directions to the CFL might be possible, provided these were suitable for development into an international border. At best it might be possible to persuade them to allow some autonomy for the Kashmiris, though this would not be immediately negotiable and would have to be supported by all members of the Council. On the other hand if, as seems possible, Pakistan has to admit to military defeat the political future of the Ayub Government may well be uncertain and the ability of Pakistan in doubt. In these circumstances, the only hope for the future stability of Kashmir would be in India. The alternative would be a vacuum waiting to be filled by China.

5. If we take as our immediate objective in the Security Council a simple cessation of hostilities, I would see no objection to our supporting (though without sponsoring) a resolution calling on members to stop the supply of military stores to both parties (Russia appears, however, at present to be continuing to supply India – see my telegram No. 3241). Nor if necessary (and subject to repercussions in the case of South Africa) would I see any objection to our being associated with general action to stop economic (but not food) aid temporarily if a further measure was needed to bring about a cessation of hostilities. But any steps towards a more permanent cease-fire which did not recognize the new position created by the recent fighting and by the continuing Chinese menace will be rejected with contumely by India.

Rawalpindi telegram No.WL 186 to Commonwealth Relations Office: India-Pakistan.

Prime Minister returned yesterday afternoon from Pakistan and summoned American Ambassador and myself late last night to tell us of the outcome of this visit. Iranian Ambassador was also present.

2. Hoveida concentrated much of his attention on my American colleague. He told him that he had found the President of Pakistan very anxious for American friendship and understanding and wanted the United States Government to use the influence she undoubtedly had over India to persuade her to come to terms with Pakistan. He asked Meyer to put this strongly to his Government. In reply American Ambassador was very outspoken about Washington’s exasperation with Pakistan and held out little hope that his Government would respond sympathetically to this appeal.

3. Hoveida then told us that his visit had convinced him that the Pakistanis would not accept the United Nations resolution (presumably the Security Council cease-fire resolution); they had repeated time and again that they would go on fighting to the bitter end and if necessary take to the hills and continue from there; he was convinced that means must be found of reaching a ‘non-military solution’ as soon as possible. The President of Pakistan had asked that the Shah should now send Hoveida immediately to London, Washington and Moscow, to explain the position and ‘to act as a bridge’. He asked us to put this proposal to our Governments urgently and called for an early reply.

4. I asked Hoveida whether he had any particular proposals to put to you.
He said ‘none’; his purpose was to act as a bridge and explore the possibilities of a non-military settlement. Both the American Ambassador and I pointed out that our two Governments were already well aware of the Pakistan position and we did not see what more he might be able to say at this moment. Nor did we know how this proposed visit would fit in with our Governments’ views on the next step following the return of U Thant to New York; both our Governments believed that a solution should if possible be achieved through the United Nations; I also mentioned the possibility of a Commonwealth initiative, which the Shah himself favoured. All we could say was that if our Governments believed that such a visit might contribute to a cease-fire we felt sure they would agree but timing would clearly be important. We discouraged the thought that you would favour an immediate visit.

5. Hoveida, in answer to our question, said he felt the Pakistanis would go along with the proposals outlined in paragraph 2 of my telegram No. 1041 to you but we both got the impression that he had not really sounded out the Pakistanis.

6. In answer to American Ambassador’s question, Hoveida said that there had been no time to discuss arms supplies. Meyer repeated United States Government’s refusal to allow export of American equipment from Iran. My Turkish colleague, who accompanied Hoveida to Pakistan, has since told me that both Hoveida and the Turkish Foreign Minister did their best without much success to persuade the Pakistanis to go for a peaceful settlement rather than look for more arms for their military forces.

7. The Shah spoke to me briefly this morning at his 25th anniversary celebrations about the proposal that Hoveida should visit London and Washington. He expects an early answer.

8. From the point of view of Anglo/United States relations with Iran and the other two regional members of CENTO, I hope you can give a sympathetic reply to this proposal. I have a feeling that the Shah’s senior Ministers and perhaps the Shah himself are looking for ways and means of getting themselves off the hook of having to supply military aid to Pakistan. At the same time, the Shah feels very deeply that he is in a humiliating position because he cannot adequately help his ally without United States permission. Agreement to receive Hoveida would at least give the Shah the feeling that he was doing something to help.

9. I have since heard that the Prime Minister saw Soviet Ambassador after us.

India-Pakistan

I saw U Thant at London Airport this morning and he gave me an account of his views following his mission to India and Pakistan.

2. U Thant said that he was not pessimistic. He did not think that India was counting on a military victory. Hopes of military success existed in Pakistan where the atmosphere was more tense and militant. He thought Pakistan had hopes of help from Iran and Turkey, and perhaps also counted on the Chinese. His proposal for a cease-fire had not been acceptable because of preconditions on both sides; the Indians had wished to retain some of their positions on Pakistani territory, and the Pakistani conditions, which he did not describe but were presumably those already made public, also raised serious problems.

3. The reason for U Thant's comparative optimism was his assessment that in the last resort both parties would accept a joint view of the Four Great Powers. He therefore intended to propose at the Security Council Meeting to be held on 17 September that a Committee be formed of United States, Britain, France and the U.S.S.R. to offer their good offices. He also intended that there should be a meeting of the heads of Government of India and Pakistan to discuss the substance of the question at which representatives of this committee should be present. Possibly this could take place in Burma or Ceylon. He hoped that India would accept this in view of the commitment in the Indian/Pakistan statement of 29 November, 1962. He was not yet sure what the Soviet attitude would be to this suggestion; at present he thought they would be reluctant to accept a role in a final settlement unless their participation was acceptable to India. He also had doubts about French willingness to join in. If he cannot make progress with this idea, U Thant had in mind the possibility of using the three Afro/Asian members of the Security Council in a rather similar role. But since Malaysia, Jordan and the Ivory Coast were all Moslem countries he did not think that this would be welcome in India.

4. I asked the Secretary-General whether he would find it helpful for Britain to support his proposal publicly as soon as it had been made. U Thant was sure that this would be the right course. He said that the United States had already promised to support anything he might propose. This will be considered further here and instructions will follow.

5. I also asked him whether he felt that the Commonwealth could help in the solution of the dispute. Up to the present we had felt that the most useful action we could take was to support his own mission. U Thant said that he had been grateful for our support, and thought that there might well be a role for the Commonwealth. But he did not seem to envisage any specific or immediate action before his own proposal is made to the Security Council.

6. In reply to a further question U Thant said that he did not envisage action in the Security Council to stop arms shipments since any resolution passed would have no effect on supplies from China and Indonesia.

7. The Secretary-General said he would not tell anyone of our conversation and asked for his confidence to be respected.
2211. Brief prepared for the Commonwealth Secretary of State on India-Pakistan for discussion in the Cabinet.

Brief for the Secretary of State

INDIA-PAKISTAN

U Thant will arrive back in New York on 16th September. Neither India nor Pakistan has accepted the Security Council’s call for a cease-fire, though there are signs that the Indians will be prepared to do so if the Pakistanis will also agree.

2. Pakistan has laid down three conditions for a cease-fire:

(i) Withdrawal of all Indian and Pakistan troops from the whole State of Jammu and Kashmir.

(ii) Introduction of an Afro-Asian force to keep law and order.

(iii) The holding of a plebiscite within three months of the cease-fire to settle the final disposition of the state between India and Pakistan. (There is no mention of any possibility of independence either for the whole or part of Kashmir).

There is no chance whatever of India accepting any of these conditions. It may well be politically embarrassing for President Ayub to agree upon a cease-fire without any guarantee of a Kashmir settlement, but the alternative – for Pakistan to continue the struggle with all arms supplies from Britain and America completely cut off – would be far worse for Ayub’s regime and even less likely to help Pakistan’s cause over Kashmir.

3. We are consulting with the Americans about the next round at the Security Council which will probably take place soon after U Thant has returned and reported. It may well be necessary for the Council at this meeting to call for a total ban on all arms supplies to the combatants. The Americans may suggest some economic sanctions but these would be very difficult for us and agreement on them among the major powers is unlikely. An oil embargo would be ineffective, because Iran would continue to supply Pakistan and India has her own substantial production. Some concerted suspension of at least new commitments of economic aid would be possible but its effect on our diplomatic ability to influence the two parties needs consideration with the Americans. Most donors are already in fact entering into no new economic aid commitments.
4. There is also the question of a Commonwealth initiative. This could not now take place until after the next meeting of the Security Council. It is unlikely that the Security Council will be ready at present to invite a Commonwealth Peace Mission to visit Delhi and Rawalpindi. If it is decided that U Thant should continue his efforts at conciliation, we should have to make sure that a Commonwealth Mission would be welcome to him. The Tunku has suggested a meeting of Commonwealth Prime Ministers. If the prestige of Commonwealth Prime Ministers is to be committed, it should be at the crucial stage. We are considering with our High Commissioners how to carry the matter further.

5. The composition of a Mission would need some careful thought. Sir Abubakar and Nkrumah want to see the Vietnam Peace Mission reactivated and are both keen to go to the sub-continent. Senanayake may wish to serve on the Mission to India and Pakistan even though he refused the offer of a place on the Vietnam Mission. It would take time to get any changes agreed by correspondence.

6. There is something to be said for keeping the core of the Vietnam Peace Mission in being and agreeing that both Abubakar and Nkrumah should go to the sub-continent. Both of them, especially Nkrumah, would be offended if they were excluded from any new Mission which is arranged. If however Dr. Williams continues to show no enthusiasm this time, it might be best to offer his place to Senanayake. The Mission would be much better balanced if Pearson, Menzies or Holyoake would agree to serve on it.

New Delhi, September 16, 1965,

The Ministry of External Affairs presents its compliments to the Embassy of the Peoples Republic of China in India and with reference to the Chinese Government's note of September 16, 1965, has the honour to say as follows:

Ever-since Sino-Indian border problem was raised by the Chinese Government, the Government of India had made strenuous attempts to settle the question peaceably and with honour. Even after unprovoked Chinese attack across the border in October-November, 1962, the Government of India consistently followed policy of seeking peaceful settlement honourable to both parties concerned. It was in this spirit that India accepted Colombo proposals which China has not accepted hitherto.

As has been pointed out in various notes to the Chinese Government in the past, the Government of India has given strict instructions to its armed forces and personnel not to cross the international boundary in the Easter and Middle Sectors and so-called 'line of actual control' in Western sector. The Government of India are satisfied after careful and detailed investigations that the Indian personnel as well as the aircraft have fully carried out these instructions and have not transgressed international boundary and 'line of actual control' in Western sector at any time at any place. The Indian Government are, therefore, absolutely convinced that allegations contained in the Chinese note under reply are completely groundless. The Government of India are constrained to reject these allegations and to re-assert emphatically that they do not accept claims to vast areas of the Indian territory in the Western, Middle and Eastern Sectors of the border put forward in the Chinese note under reply. As regards China's stand on Kashmir and on the present unfortunate conflict between India and Pakistan, it is nothing but interference on the part of China calculated to prolong and to enlarge conflict.

Chinese note has once again repeated allegations of so-called violations of Sikkim-Tibet border by the Indian personnel. These charges have already been answered and refuted by the Government of India. The Indian personnel have never crossed Sikkim border and committed any harassments or raids into Chinese territory. Nor have they seized livestock belonging to Tibetan herdsman or kidnapped any Chinese inhabitants from Tibetan territory. In the Indian Government's note of July 13, 1965, it was clearly stated that two Tibetan inhabitants alleged by Chinese Government to have been kidnapped by the Indian troops were actually refugees from Tibet who sought asylum in Sikkim. As the Chinese Government is aware, numbers of Tibetans have come over into India from time to time on their own volition and without our permission. Such persons are detained and questioned and any of them desiring to go back to Tibet are always permitted to do so. The Tibetans in question can also go back to Tibet if they wish to do so.

The Chinese Government’s note had re-asserted the old allegations that India has built military structures on Tibetan side of border. The Government of India has refuted this allegation on several occasions in the past. In September, 1962, some defence structures were constructed on the Sikkim side of Sino-Indian frontier. These structures have not been in occupation since cessation of hostilities in November, 1962. Since Chinese Government alleged that some structures were on their side of border, India had in its note of September 12 gone to the extent of suggesting that independent observer be allowed to go to this border to see for himself state of affairs. The Chinese Government has not unfortunately accepted this reasonable proposal of the Indian Government and has reiterated its proposal for joint inspection. Even though the Government of India are convinced that their troops have not built military structures in Tibetan territory they have no objection to joint inspection of these points of Sikkim-Tibet border where the Indian personnel are alleged to have set up military structure in Tibetan territory. The Government of India on their part are prepared to arrange such inspection as early as possible at appropriate official level on mutually convenient date. If any structures are found on Tibet side of the border, there can be no objection to their being demolished.

The Government of India would like to point out in conclusion that charges made by the Chinese Government in its note are really minor ones and could well be settled through peaceful procedures such as those proposed in this note. These allegations do not on any reckoning justify kind of threatening language and ultimatum held out by the Chinese Government. It is clear that China is fabricating these charges only to find pretext for further-aggression against India. India is peaceful nation and has no desire for war-like conflicts. If, however, such conflict is thrust on India by aggression from China, responsibility for grave consequences that might follow from such action will lie squarely on the shoulders of the Chinese Government.

The Ministry of External Affairs avails itself of the opportunity to renew to the Embassy of the Peoples Republic of China in India the assurances of its highest consideration.

My telegram No. WL 136: Indo-Pakistan Relations.

American Ambassador here (McConaughy) also talked to Iranian Amassador (Ansary) about Iranian Prime Minister’s visit. McConaughy’s impression tallies closely with my own except that McConaughy formed impression that Iranian Prime Minister (Hoveida) left Pakistan with firm intention of making tour of capitals described in paragraph 4(b) of telegram under reference, and that Hoveida was sure Shah would approve. Ansary told McConaughy that President Ayub had himself suggested idea of Haveida’s mission and had outlined following roles which he could helpfully play in each capital:

(i) Moscow. Give Russians a sympathetic appreciation of Pakistan’s position, aim being to get Russians to maintain present neutral attitude;
(ii) London. Give more detailed analysis of Pakistan’s position, aim being to get Britain and Commonwealth solidly behind peace terms which Pakistan would accept;
(iii) Washington. Aim here would be to set stage for full Pakistan/United States talks on all matters of major mutual interest. President Ayub told Hoveida he wanted complete restoration of Pakistan’s traditional friendly ties with United States including an understanding on economic aid. He also wanted American support for better (from Pakistani point of view) United Nations cease-fire proposals.

2. Ayub expressed willingness for early face to face talks in order to achieve reconciliation with United States. Ayub mentioned early October as possibility for a visit to Washington but, Ansary commented, Ayub still, needed help to get off consortium hook.
Ansary also told McConaughy:

(i) Ayub was contemptuous when asked about possibility of Chinese intervention in Indo-Pakistan war. He said that Pakistan would never be Chinese satellite. On other hand Pakistan was prepared if necessary to be United States Satellite but not (repeat not) a ‘satellite of India in collaboration with United States.’

(ii) Pakistanis told Iranians they were very pleased about two recent American initiatives:

(a) Rusk’s recent public endorsement of plebiscite principle. They thought this was significant and were sorry Pakistan Press did not give Rusk’s statement more prominence;

(b) American efforts to stop war spreading to East Wing. Bhutto had said he thought American action had restrained Indian aggression in the East and this proved that United States are capable of curbing Indians; it was therefore regrettable that they had not restrained them in West Wing.

(iii) Pakistanis had insisted throughout Hoveida’s talks that U Thant must be given broader terms of reference before his efforts to achieve cease-fire could be fruitful.

EMERGENCY

Addressed: to C.R.O. telegram No. WL 201 of 17 September

India-Pakistan

I have following very urgent comments on Delhi telegram 3274:

(i) I do not agree with assessment of present military situation in paragraph 3(a). In long term and in conditions of total war India could certainly be expected to achieve decisive military superiority but in immediate future this does not seem attainable. See my Military Adviser’s reply to C.R.O. telegram 2053 to Karachi being sent from Karachi.

(ii) As seen from here argument in paragraph 3(b) rests on false premise that if Kashmir were to be transferred to Pakistani orbit military threat to India would be greatly increased in view of Sino-Pakistan collusion.

(a) While Ayub regime survives likelihood of Sino-Pakistan military collusion against India in Kashmir or elsewhere is improbable. At present there is no (repeat no) solid evidence of any such collusion and Ayub’s make-up and his repeated statements in public and private do not (repeat not) suggest probability of collusion in future unless this is forced on Pakistan;

(b) Settlement of Kashmir along lines acceptable to Pakistan would not (repeat not) necessarily lead to increase in Sino-Pakistan links. Pakistan’s entente with China would probably cool off since achievement of Kashmir settlement would have removed major motive behind it.

2. As seen from here British Government is now faced with grave dilemma. If we support any ‘solution’ of present conflict that appears to favour Pakistan we risk possible irrevocable damage to our position in India. But to continue to support an immediate cease-fire without strings is to court disaster so far as Pakistan is concerned since:
Pakistanis have now got themselves into position where they cannot possibly agree to such a cease-fire; they will fight to finish rather than accept it.

Consequences of fight to finish would be to leave Pakistan militarily impotent. Probable other consequences are overthrow of Ayub regime, severance of ties with West (whom Pakistan would regard as having deserted her) and increase in Chinese influence in Pakistan. In addition Kashmir dispute would fester on. Even a weak Pakistan could mount another guerilla campaign in Kashmir particularly if, as would be probable, Chinese were to help.

Situation outlined above is surely as unacceptable to us as is situation outlined in Delhi telegram. A weak, chaotic, anti-West, hyper anti-Indian and pro-Chinese Pakistan still pursuing Kashmir would pose at least as great, and possibly greater, threat to India than would hypothetical circumstances.

Given above analysis only avenue open to us seems to be to work for a cease-fire which carries with it an Indian commitment to enter into talks. This is absolute minimum we can hope to get Pakistan to accept as an alternative to fight to finish. Surely Indians can agree to this:

(i) No prior commitment involved;
(ii) They were prepared to talk about Kashmir in 1962-63, although it was ‘Indian territory’ then;
(iii) They were prepared to negotiate on northern half of Rann of Kutch though that was ‘Indian territory’ too.

Another aspect of situation is that whole status of Kashmir is still formally before Security Council. Security Council therefore, has every right to address itself to the ‘future of Kashmir.’ If we were to object to it doing so we would be regarded by Pakistan as having reneged most despicably on the position we have taken up in United Nations on all previous occasions. Damage to British position and influence here would be very deep and perhaps wholly irreparable.

Your telegram No. 7288: India/Pakistan

Both Mr. Rusk and I had inescapable appointments this evening. The Minister, therefore, saw, Mr. Ball and gave him the gist of the messages to President Ayub and Mr. Shastri.

2. Ball welcomed the Prime Minister's initiative and saw considerable advantage in trying to bring home to both sides the potential dangers of China's entry on to the scene. Indeed he thought it might even be helpful in the longer term if the Chinese were to give some degree of substance to their threats since both India and Pakistan, though particularly the former (since their basic military position was stronger), would probably require to be submitted to strong external pressures before they could be brought to see the need of reaching an accommodation between themselves.

3. On the question of the real threat from China, Ball inclined to the view which Mr. Rusk had expressed earlier this evening. He thought it likely that the Chinese would shortly undertake strictly limited military operations (patrolling, probing and harassment) in the Sikkim border area and down the Chumbi Valley. He thought that the Indians would, by and large, be able to deal with this, but would have been 'sobered' by the expressed threat and the possibility of unpleasant if not seriously dangerous Chinese operations.

4. Stewart gave Ball the substance of paragraph 3 of your telegram under reference. Ball commented that this looked like another Pakistani attempt to get the Americans committed to their side. He preferred to let both sides sweat it out for a bit and put the United States effort behind U Thant. He thought, however, that Shastri had shown skill in proposing a joint Sino-Indian inspection of areas and sites under dispute on the Sino-Sikkim border.

5. Stewart spoke as instructed in paragraph 4 of your telegram under reference:

 Identical letters from Soviet Premier Alex Kosygin to Prime Minister Lal Bahadur Shastri and Pakistan
President Ayub Khan.

Moscow, September 17, 1965.

Esteemed Mr. Prime Minister/Mr. President
We deeply regret that the armed clash between India and Pakistan continues, the bloodshed has not been stopped, and the conflict has not been ended. Though it is now impossible to foresee all the consequences’ of this course of events, there are many reasons to fear that a continuation of the conflict may cause irreparable harm to the national interests of both India and Pakistan, to the cause of peace and security of the peoples.

There is no need, I think, to repeat here that our position in the obtaining situation is dictated by one thing, and one thing only – a sincere desire to contribute to the earliest restoration of peace on the borders between India and Pakistan. Guided by the best of intentions and the interests of preserving peace, the Soviet Government, in its Messages of September 4 this year to you, Mr. Prime Minister, and also to the President of Pakistan, set out some of its considerations concerning the settlement of the Indo-Pakistani armed conflict, and offered its good offices for this purpose.

We are glad that your Government received our approaches with understanding and positively assessed both our call for peace between India and Pakistan, and the stand taken by the Soviet representative in the Security Council. You also know of the TASS Statement containing a warning to those who would not be averse to profit from the state of Indo-Pakistan relations*.

* In the letter addressed to President Ayub Khan, this particular paragraph is substituted by the following paragraph:

“We are glad that you, Mr. President, highly assessed the Soviet Government’s concern over the Indo-Pakistani conflict and received with understanding our sincere effort to contribute to the earliest settlement of the conflict.”
In developing its offer of good offices to both sides, the Soviet Government is submitting the following proposal for the consideration of the Governments of India and Pakistan; to hold on our territory a meeting in which you, Mr. Prime Minister, and the President of Pakistan would take part to establish a direct contact in order to achieve agreement on the re-establishment of peace between India and Pakistan. If desired by both sides, the Chairman of the Council of Ministers of the USSR could also take part in this meeting. Such a meeting could be held in Tashkent, for instance, or any other city in the Soviet Union. One thing is important to meet and start negotiations. It is important that the guns become silent and the blood of the two fraternal peoples ceases to flow. Each new day of the armed conflict produces new complex problem, which above all can impose a heavy burden on the peoples of India and Pakistan.

We are convinced that India would only strengthen its international authority and its prestige as a peaceful state if on its part it displayed an initiative toward ending the bloodshed and took a definite step toward peaceful negotiations.

Yours faithfully

September 17, 1965.

You will now have seen my telegram No. 2345. I had a talk with Mr. Rusk about possible Chinese intentions on the Indian border when I saw him this afternoon. I asked how the Chinese Ambassador in Warsaw had reacted to the American warning reported in paragraph 2 of my telegram under reference. Mr. Rusk, who had Mr. Cabot's preliminary report on the meeting with him, said that on this particular point Cabot had not yet reported. Generally speaking, however, the meeting, which was a routine one, had shown the Chinese Ambassador in a less aggressive mood than usual. The Chinese had made the usual speech about Taiwan and Viet Nam and added piece about Indian aggression. All this however was old stuff.

2. Mr. Rusk went on to say that the American Government did not propose to panic about possible Chinese action. There were severe limits to what the Chinese could do and the Indian forces in the Darjeeling area, which the Indian Government had not touched, totaled six divisions. Though fully aware of this potential danger from China, he still had the impression that in relation to the whole of the present Indo-Pakistan conflict if we held our course steadily and stood firmly behind the Secretary-General's efforts, thing would 'shake down'. He added that he told the Indian Ambassador here that if, contrary to his own expectation, the Chinese did attempt a sizeable operation and the Indian appealed to the United States for assistance, the American Administration would regard it as a sine qua non that the Indians and Pakistanis first stop the fighting. Rusk continued that though there were certain limited things that the United States could do to help India in event of a major Chinese operation, anything in the nature of committing American forces would require Congressional sanction and he indicated he saw little likelihood of getting this as things stood at present.

Mr. Rusk told me this afternoon that he was following with close attention the activities of the Iranian Prime Minister. He had in particular been interested in a report from the United States Ambassador in Tehran that Bhutto had indicated to the Iranian Prime Minister that the Pakistani Government might agree to a solution of the present conflict which led to an autonomous Kashmir. Mr. Rusk, however, had been interested to note that Bhutto had asked the Iranian Prime Minister not to report what he had said to the Americans until after 17 September. He wondered whether this detail could be tied to the Chinese move on Sikkim.

American Ambassador, McConaughy, has given me following account of talks he had today, 19 September, with Foreign Minister, Bhutto, and Finance Minister, Shoaib.

2. McConaughy was instructed not (repeat not) to seek interview with President but to put following points to senior Ministers with request that they pass them to Ayub immediately;

(i) Chinese ultimatum and troop movements put grave responsibility on Ayub. If he encouraged Chinese intervention or by failing to agree to cease-fire provided opportunity for such intervention he would alienate Pakistan from West;

(ii) Chinese Threat to India and consequent great risks of escalation of present Indo-Pakistan conflict have created new situation in which Ayub could agree to immediate cease-fire without losing face;

(iii) United State recognizes that basic causes of Indo-Pakistan dispute cannot be disregarded and is working through United Nations to make permanent settlement possible inter alia by supporting U Thant’s proposals for Indo-Pakistan summit talks;

(iv) Most important, in present situation, for Ayub to put himself in as favourable position as possible by agreeing to cease-fire which would greatly increase chances of successful Security Council action aimed at promoting final settlement;
(v) If Ministers urged United States pressure on India to agree to purposeful negotiations or raised question of Pakistan's need for further American Aid, Ambassador was to say that he had no instructions; United States Government could not (repeat not) consider these matters until they had received definite assurance that Ayub was not going over to Chinese. There would not (repeat not) be one thin dime for any country supporting Red China.

3. McConaughy accordingly put these points to Shoaib and Bhutto. In addition to formal interview with Shoaib, with official taking notes present, (a 'semi-police state atmosphere' was Shoaib's comment), he also managed to see Shoaib alone for short time, during which Shoaib made points in paragraph 6 below. Talks with both Ministers took place before today's Cabinet Meeting and before my own interview with President.

4. Talks with Bhutto

Bhutto took hard line, indicating that Chinese or no Chinese there was no (repeat no) possibility of Pakistan agreeing to cease-fire without strings. Bhutto deplored failure of United Nations so far to take cognizance of:

(a) United Nations Resolutions of 1948-49

(b) Indian aggression on 6 September;

(c) Principle of self-determination which he said was enshrined in United Nations Charter.

Bhutto said no (repeat no) United Nations Resolution was acceptable which did not provide for withdrawal of Indian forces from Kashmir and settlement in accordance with United Nations principles already laid down. Pakistan stuck to it's three-point plan, but in view of present circumstances Bhutto was prepared to make following secret offer to McConaughy on his own initiative but in the certain conviction that it would be approved by President Ayub. Offer was that Pakistan would agree to immediate cease-fire provided United States agrees to promote within United Nations or outside immediate Indo-Pakistan agreement for withdrawal of all armed forces from Kashmir, if such an agreement, underwritten by United States, was effected Pakistan would not demand immediate troop withdrawal and would not press for implementation of remainder of three point plan.

5. On China, Bhutto said:

(i) Categorically, that Pakistan had no (repeat no) knowledge of Chinese intentions towards India. China had not consulted Pakistan and Pakistan had not and would not endorse a Chinese attack on India;
(ii) However, in view of all injuries done to Pakistan by India, Pakistan could not be expected to come out with any pro-Indian statement or action in event of Chinese attack;

(iii) He appreciated United States position in the event of Chinese attack on India, but responsibility for this would not be Pakistan's and Pakistan could not be expected to give up its just struggle because of these unrelated difficulties;

(iv) He earnestly hoped that United States would give no help to India against Chinese while India was still pursuing its aggression against Pakistan; effect of this would be very unfortunate.

6. Talk with Shoaib.

Shoaib told McConaughy that:

(i) Ayub was growing increasingly worried by events and that in his (Shoaib's) opinion he would now agree to cease-fire provided there was only a very modest advance on present United Nations Resolutions, e.g., clause to effect that efforts would be made by Security Council to get two countries to resolve all outstanding differences, including Kashmir, Ayub would not survive unless he could extract this absolute minimum;

(ii) There was growing (gp.undec.? disillusionment) in Government now, at mess which Bhutto's policies had got Pakistan into, coupled with resentment that this Sindhi Minister should be the man mainly responsible for present situation in which so many Punjabis and Pathans were dying on the battlefield;

(iii) Kalabagh was due to arrive in Rawalpindi today from Lahore.

EMERGENCY

Addressed: to C.R.O. telegram No. WL 230 of 20 September

Repeated: for information: UKMis New York, Washington, Karachi

From: High Commissioner in Rawalpindi.

My WL 222 and WL 223: Indo-Pakistan War.

American Ambassador has told me of interview he had alone with President Ayub this morning 20 September. Ambassador press Ayub very hard to accept Security Council Resolution demanding cease-fire on 22 September. Ambassador’s report will be available to you from United States Embassy London. As you will see Ayub knows gravity of decision he must take but doubts whether he can carry his people with him in the event of acceptance which he thinks might bring about his own downfall.

2. Clearly this is moment when I must make supreme effort with Ayub on behalf of Prime Minister. Suggest I be authorized by emergency telegram soonest to deliver oral message from Mr. Wilson making some or all of following points:

(a) If India accepts cease-fire, and Pakistan does not, latter will be in impossible moral position if Chinese subsequently attack India. Non-Communist world would inevitably infer (however wrongly) that there was collusion between Pakistan and China against India, and world would hold Pakistan, along with China, responsible for whatever disasters follow;

(b) Pakistan’s case on Kashmir, which commands much sympathy at present, would be wholly neutralized by world-wide disapproval that would be felt against Pakistan for prolonging the fighting;

(c) These dangerous probabilities can be averted by agreement on cease-fire from which Pakistan has everything to gain. Kashmir is now before world which is determined to promote a just and final settlement. Prime Minister appreciates that Security Council Resolution is not in form which Pakistan Government would have wished (nor is it what India would have wished to see). But Resolution says specifically that cease-fire is only first step towards peaceful settlement of outstanding differences between the two countries on Kashmir and other related matters. It is British Government’s intention, once cease-fire is effected, to do all in their power to promote such a settlement.

(d) To prolong fighting and thereby encourage Chinese intervention could bring disaster of such proportions on Pakistan (along with many other countries) as to threaten social (gp undec? Fabric) of this country, leading to a Communist take-over in due course. If now isolated at China’s side, Pakistan would soon find Chinese to be masters and not friends.

Mr. W. Buffum,

Miss. C. Laise,
Director, Office of South Asian Affairs

Sir Saville Garner

Mr. Stewart

Mr. Trench
In reply to a question Mr. Bundy expressed the view that the Chinese had postponed their ultimatum because, in the light of the Indian reply, it would have seemed to world opinion provocative to maintain their original demand. In addition President Ayub had said that he had asked the Chinese to hold off and Mr. Bundy thought that this was probably true.

2. Sir Saville Garner said that the British estimate agreed with this. As regards the general question of Pakistan’s behaviour, he thought that for the past year or so Ayub had been led astray by Bhutto and under the latter’s influence had indulged in the ultimate folly of sending infiltrators into Indian-held Kashmir. It was only in the light of world reactions to this that he realized what he had let himself in for. He probably now regretted having relied so much on Bhutto and might come more under the influence of Shoaib, which would be beneficial. No matter what the situation on the ground was, Ayub had to some extent won a victory, because he had drawn attention to the need to solve the Kashmir question, which is recent years had slipped out of sight. Nevertheless the Pakistanis were not satisfied with this, as shown by Jordan’s abstention in the Security Council.

Mr. Buffum pointed out that the Council was committed to searching for a solution, apart from the fact that the Secretary-General himself was directly involved. He also made the point that if one of the parties to the dispute refused to accept a cease-fire, it would be necessary for the Council to consider sanctions against the offender.

3. Sir S. Garner said that at the moment there was a tactical problem vis-à-vis Pakistan, but in the long run the real difficulty was going to be to get the Indians to agree to any settlement at all which was not entirely in their favour. Miss Laise noted, however, that if India wanted help from the United Nations in regard to Chinese threats, she would have to make some concession on Kashmir. Sir S. Garner thought that Shastri was not in an awkward domestic political situation. It was true that India had come off best on the ground, but he had no great victory to announce. As regards Pakistan, it was clearly difficult to convince Ayub that the present Security Council resolution was satisfactory for him, because it was impossible to guarantee what the ultimate outcome would be. In any case it was good tactics for the Pakistanis to object, in the hope of securing concessions later.

4. After reference had been made to the Soviet offer to arrange a meeting between Ayub and Shastri, which Mr. Bundy considered to be mainly a propaganda gesture, perhaps with China in view, Sir S. Garner said in reply to a question that the idea of a Commonwealth initiative was now more or less in cold-storage. He thought it possible, however, that Ayub and Shastri might find it easier to meet eventually in Colombo rather than in Tashkent.
5. Miss Laise said that the only way of bringing effective pressure to bear on India was through the United Nations. It was therefore important to keep the problem in this forum. Mr. Bundy observed that although moral pressure might well be exerted on India in the U.N., the main practical pressure derived from U.S. aid. It looked as though Congress would not vote any more aid to either country until the Kashmir problem was either settled or was clearly on the way to being settled. He wondered whether there was any opportunity for progress with both countries by working through the respective aid consortia.

6. Sir S. Garner thought that a great deal would depend on the standing of Ayub and Shastri after a cease-fire had been achieved. This was difficult to predict. Mr. Bundy agreed and remarked that it was at present impossible to say what the real military situation was. It looked however as though the Pakistanis had done much less well than had been expected. If this were so, then it seemed that, although we should have to press Pakistan hard now to agree to a cease-fire, we should have to exert four times as much pressure on India at a later stage in order to induce her to make any concessions.

7. Mr. Bundy thought that the Chinese probably did not intend to embark on any major action against India. If they were to indulge in some mild harassing action, this might even turn out to be helpful, because of the leverage on India which it would give us. It was clear from Chinese behaviour over the past few months that they did not want direct hostilities with the United States. Mr. Bundy confirmed that the American Ambassador in Warsaw had warned his Chinese opposite number obliquely of the danger of going too far vis-à-vis India.

8. Miss Laise speculated that China’s effective possession of one-third of Kashmir (in the Ladakh area) might enable her to prevent India and Pakistan ever reaching agreement on Kashmir. If this were the case, we would be merely deceiving ourselves if we talked about the possibility of our exerting pressure on India and Pakistan in order to bring about a Kashmir settlement. A neutral Kashmir would benefit only China. Miss Laise thought that a sine qua non for a settlement of any kind was an unmistakable dissociation of Pakistan from China.

9. Sir S. Garner said that it was necessary to satisfy the Indians that under any new arrangement for Kashmir India’s strategic position would be no worse than it had been up to the present. He wondered whether any eventual territorial loss by India might be compensated for by giving the Indians certain tactical rights.
10. Mr. Handley said that whatever the long-term solution might prove to be – if indeed one were possible – it was clearly essential that both India and Pakistan should accept the Security Council resolution. Sir S. Garner agreed and said that at present there seemed no action to be taken by either Britain or the United States. If however, Pakistan showed signs of any disposition to refuse to comply with the resolution, a major diplomatic effort would have to be made by both countries to persuade her to do so. Besides pointing out that, as mentioned earlier, world attention was now focused on the Kashmir problem, we should have to argue that the wording of paragraph 4 of the resolution was seriously intended and that we meant to work for a meaningful discussion. We would also have to make clear that any failure by Pakistan to comply with a mandatory resolution by the Security Council would only damage the United Nations, but would be harmful to Pakistan if she was looking to the United Nations for help in this context. Mr. Handley and Mr. Buffum agreed and suggested that at some stage use might be made of the argument that further military and economic aid could not be expected by a country which flouted the United Nations.

No. 3405 21 September, 1965

EMERGENCY

Addressed: to C.R.O. telegram No. 3405 of 21 September

Repeated: for information: Karachi, Washington, Rawalpindi, Moscow, UKMis New York

Indo-Pakistan Hostilities.

I was summoned to Prime Minister’s office this evening. L.K. Jha informed me that Shastri and Cabinet were very seriously thinking of accepting Kosygin’s offer to mediate so long as it was acceptable to Pakistanis. This would complement and not (repeat not) substitute for acceptance of Security Council Resolution. They gather from Indian Ambassador in Moscow that Russians have at least some reason to think that Pakistanis might also accept.

2. Before taking final decision Shastri wishes to know whether acceptance of Russian offer could attract strong hostility from British and United States Governments.

3. I said that in general our attitude was that any initiative to settle problems which had led to war was to be welcomed so long as it did not cut across Security Council Resolution. But that I could not take responsibility for giving official answer without instructions.

4. Naturally plan is contingent on Pakistan accepting United Nations Resolution along with India.

5. Very urgent answer required as Shastri unwilling to defer final decision beyond 0300 hours G.M.T. tomorrow 22 September. I must therefore pass any message by 0230 hours G.M.T.

7. My personal belief is that it would be wise for us to accept this with good grace because:

   (a) If (repeat if) Pakistanis also accept there is outside hope that mediation might be successful.

   (b) If it fails Russians will attract some odium.

   (c) I think Shastri’s mind is tilted this way already and it may be unwise to raise objections which he could override.

Helped by Shoaib I secured interview with President Ayub at 1515 G.M.T. today 21 September. He listened attentively but with some signs of restiveness (and I fear incomplete grasp) to warnings as in paragraph 2(a) and (b) of my telegram No. WL 230. However, when I made points in II(c) and (d) of that telegram, it was clear that both registered strongly with him.

2. President Ayub gave me no indication of decision he will take on cease-fire (and scarcely [groups omitted] to Bhutto’s current New York Mission – see my immediately following telegrams. He pressed me for news of India’s decision as to cease-fire, which I said to best of my knowledge had not yet been announced, though I expected it to be favourable.

3. As regards Chinese [group indec? Intention] President disclosed that he had yesterday made a second private appeal to Chinese Government not to aggravate situation, and when I asked for specific authority to inform you of this, readily agreed that I should do so. But he once again jibbed at my suggestion that he should make a similar appeal in public. As regards United States/United Kingdom attitude towards possible Chinese intervention, he said emphatically that this time we must not let the Hindus take us in. I said that if there were a cease-fire in the Indo/Pakistan war tomorrow the Chinese would probably not (repeat not) attack India; thus agreement by Pakistan to a cease-fire was best way open to her of preventing the unwelcome consequences to her of renewed Sino/Indian fighting.
4. Pakistan Foreign Secretary (Aziz Ahmed) was present and made several unhelpful comments, aimed at depicting Britain to the President as a slavism camp-follower of America.

5. I made following specific points on personal basis in addition to those [group undec? Augured] by your telegram No. WL 448:

(a) We were no country’s satellite, and if we were acting on this occasion in concert with Americans it was because we and they had a like interest in peace and stability of whole subcontinent;

(b) If Pakistanis refused to cease-fire, and Chinese subsequently attacked India, there would then be two wars in the sub-continent, which could speedily coalesce; resulting situation might easily escalate into an immensely complex and tragic disaster.

6. Comments

McConaughy’s account of his own earlier interview will be available to you in London and I will not summarise it here. He thinks there is a slightly better than even chance of the President deciding tomorrow in favour of a cease-fire. I would put the chance at evens myself.

7. On the credit side must be adopted the comparative calm and confidence shown by Shoaib to me tonight (as also to Mc Conaughy earlier). This has been the most re-assuring aspect of today.

Note of the Ministry of External Affairs to the Chinese Embassy in New Delhi.

New Delhi, September 21, 1965.

The Ministry of External Affairs presents its compliments to the Embassy of the People’s Republic of China in India and with reference to the Chinese Government note of September 19 has the honour to reply as follows.

The Government of India are surprised by the language and contents of the Chinese note of September 19. We have no desire to compete with the Chinese Government in the use of abusive and undignified language. But it must be pointed out that neither vituperation nor intimidation is conducive to peaceful settlement.

It is regrettable that the Chinese Government has not responded to the peaceful gesture and reasonable proposal made by the Government of India in its note of September 17.

In regard to the defence structures alleged by the Government of China to have been built by the Government of India on the Tibetan side of the Sikkim border, since matters of facts were in dispute the Government of India suggested in their note of September 12 inspection by an independent observer but the Chinese Government did not accept this reasonable proposal. The Government of India, therefore, agreed to the suggestion of joint inspection by the Indian and Chinese officials reiterated in paragraph 1 of the Chinese note of September 16. It is extraordinary that China now refuses to accept its own proposal for a joint inspection into allegations that Indian troops have built military structures on the Tibetan side of the Sikkim border.

The Chinese Government have now demanded that “India Government dismantle all its military works for aggression on the Chinese side of the China-Sikkim boundary or on boundary itself before midnight of September 22, 1965.” It has already been stated in the Government of India’s note of September 17 that if after joint inspection any structure are found on the Tibetan side of the border there can be no objection to their being demolished. Surely, if in fact there were in existence any such structures on the Tibetan side of the border, the Chinese Government would not have waited for our consent to demolish them or asked us to do so by sending our personnel across the border.

Furthermore it is not clear what the Chinese Government mean when they speak of military works not only on the Tibet side of the border but also “on the boundary line.” The Chinese Government are concerned only with alleged military works on the Tibet side of the border in respect to which the Government of India have already clearly stated their position in their note of September 17.
and which has been reiterated above. As regards military structures on the Indian side of the border, whether they exist or not, is a matter which concerns only the Government of India within its own sovereign rights and the Chinese Government is in no way concerned with any matter pertaining to the Indian territory.

The second demand of the Chinese Government is in respect of handing back four Tibetan inhabitants who are wrongly alleged to have been kidnapped and also for the return of 800 sheep and 51 yaks alleged to have been seized by the Indian troops. In their note of September 17 the Government of India have already stated that the number of Tibetans – and there are as the Chinese Government is aware thousands of such refugees in India – have come over into India from time to time on their own volition and without our permission, and any of them desiring to go back to Tibet are always permitted to do so.

The Government of India has told the Chinese Government again and again that our troops have not kidnapped any Tibetans nor have they seized any livestock. The two Tibetan inhabitants mentioned in the Government of India note of September 17 and the two Tibetan herdsmen who had come into India in 1963 with their livestock are free to go back to Tibet at any time if they desire to do so. The Chinese Government are aware that there are not four but many thousands of Tibetans who have left their homeland and sought refuge in India. As regard the Yaks we have already told the Chinese Government in our note of February 2, 1964, that no Yaks have been seized by our personnel.

It is clear that the Chinese Government are repeating these false and frivolous allegations and accusing India of “acts of aggression” merely to find pretext for committing aggression.

Finally, the Chinese Government have asked for assurance that “no intrusions or harassing raids across the border will occur in future.” The Government of India have already, in their note of September 17 and earlier notes, informed the Chinese Government that the Indian Government have given strict instructions to its armed forces and personnel not to cross the international boundary in the Eastern and middle sectors and the so-called “line of actual control” in the Western sector and these instructions have been observed strictly. Having given replies to the specific demands made by the Chinese Government, the Government of India cannot but observe that China taking advantage of the present unfortunate conflict between India and Pakistan is concocting without any basis causes belle in order to commit aggression against India. The Chinese Government accuse the Government of India of expansionism which is totally false as is self-evident to the world in order to justify its own aggressive intentions and desire to extend their domination over the whole of Asia. The Government of China in the note under reply have enunciated new doctrine that China must interfere in interse relations of the Asian countries. This claim of China to assume role of guardianship and hegemony over the Asian countries is a role which no self-respecting nation in Asia would be prepared to accept or recognize. Large or small, strong or week, every country in Asia has the fullest right to preserve its independence and sovereignty on terms of equality. Dominance of Chinese will not be accepted by any of them. The Government of India, therefore, reject the claim of China to advise the Government of India how to resolve its difference with its neighbour Pakistan over Kashmir or any other matter.

India’s record as peaceful country and good neighbour is well-known to the world and it is not necessary for the Government of India to argue this point with the Chinese Government who is blinded with hatred for India. It is also well-known to the world how India, since the establishment of the people’s Republic of China, extended hand of friendship to China and how in turn the rulers of China committed aggression against India and occupied by force 14,500 square miles of the Indian territory in Ladakh. India has neither forgotten nor accepted this illegal occupation of its territory by China. The Chinese note under reply has also repeated their aggressive claims to the Indian territory in the Eastern, Middle and Western sectors, claims which the Government of India categorically reject.

China’s aggressive intentions are clear from the fact that even while they have in their note extended the time limit by 72 hours in actual fact they have started firing at our border posts both in Sikkim and Ladakh having already crossed into the Sikkim border at Dongchui La and Nathu La. In the Western sector at Demchok several hundred Chinese troops have taken position across the Indian check-post which is well within the Indian side of the so-called “1959 line of actual control”. This action by China is in clear violation of the recommendation of 2(a) of Colombo proposals and China’s own so-called “unilateral cease-fire” declaration of November 22, 1962.

The whole attitude of the Chinese Government, its threat, and three days ultimatum prove that China is not at all interested in the peaceful settlement of the border question or in peaceful co-existence between India and China. India can only urge the Chinese Government to forsake path of belligerence and intimidation and to return to the path of peace and reason in its relations with India. On her part India has always been and continues to be willing to settle these differences by peaceful means.

PRIORITY
Addressed: to Foreign Office telegram No. 1082 of 22 September
Repeated: for information to: Washington, Ankara, Karachi, UKMис New York, UKDEL NATO Moscow, Bangkok, New Delhi My telegram No. 1078: India/Pakistan.

When I was in audience with the Shah this morning a telephone call to President of Pakistan which he had asked for before my arrival came through. Ayub Khan told Shah that he had accepted cease-fire and Pakistani troops would be withdrawn, but they would retaliate if attacked by Indians.

2. The Shah told me that he now intended to ‘raise hell’ in every possible forum to see that Pakistan got a square deal over Kashmir. He hoped that Commonwealth machinery could be established to ensure this rather than let the Russians meddle; he also looked to us to help Pakistan.

3. Before the phone call came through the Shah had told me that his purpose was to put more pressure on Ayub Khan to accept a cease-fire, and he would threaten to cut off such help as Iran was giving to Pakistan if he refused to do so.

4. I told the Shah that I felt sure you would wish me to congratulate him on his part in persuading Pakistan to accept a cease-fire.

Statement by Prime Minister Lal Bahadur Shastri in Parliament on the Cease-fire.

New Delhi, September 22, 1965.

I place on the Table of the House a copy of the Security Council resolution dated the 20th September, 1965, relating to the current conflict between India and Pakistan – a conflict which commenced on the 5th August, 1965, when Pakistan launched a massive attack on India by sending thousands of armed infiltrators across the cease-fire line in our State of Jammu and Kashmir.

As the Hon'ble Members would see, the Security Council had demanded that both Governments should order a cease-fire effective from 12.30 p.m. Indian Standard Time today, the 22nd September, 1965. On the question of cease-fire, the views of the Government of India were stated in detail and without any ambiguity in my letters of September 14 and 15, 1965, addressed to the Secretary-General. As stated in these letters, the Government of India had clearly accepted that they would order a cease-fire without any pre-conditions on being informed that Pakistan had agreed to do the same. On receiving the Security Council resolution, therefore, we sent a communication to the Secretary-General, in accordance with our earlier stand, informing him that we would be prepared to issue orders for a simple cease-fire effective from the appointed time and date, provided Pakistan agreed to do likewise.

Throughout yesterday, there was no further message from the Secretary-General, but in the early hours of this morning we received a message from him advising us to order a unilateral cease-fire in compliance with the relevant provisions of the Security Council Resolution, with the proviso that our troops could fire back if they were attacked. This, of course, was entirely impossible. In a battle which is continuing, it is just not possible for one side to ask its soldiers to stop firing, leaving the other side free to continue its operations. Our representative at the United Nations, was, therefore, instructed to inform the Secretary-General accordingly.

A further report was received a short while ago that at the request of the Foreign Minister of Pakistan, an emergent meeting of the Security Council was convened, at which an announcement was made, on behalf of Pakistan that they also had agreed to issue orders for a cease-fire and cessation of hostilities. From our side, the requisite orders are now being issued to our field commanders to effect a complete cease-fire by 3.30 a.m. tomorrow morning.

The Security Council Resolution refers to other matters which will require consideration subsequently. However, the policy of the Government of India in regard to matters which are of vital importance to us and which relate to the present conflict, has been stated by me on more than one occasion on the
to the Secretary-
I do not propose to go into any further details at the present stage. Detailed take place and there would have to be a fuller study of problems to which I have just referred. For this purpose, our representative of the United Nations will keep himself available to the Secretary-General.

There will now be cessation of hostilities. Peace is good. However, there is still a threat from the Foreign Minister of Pakistan, which he held out today, while speaking in the Security Council. We have, therefore, to be very watchful and vigilant.

The nation has recently been going through its greatest trial. The times have been difficult but they have served a great purpose. The whole world knows now that the people of India- Hindus, Muslims, Sikhs, Christians, Parsess and others, constitute a united nation with a determined common will and purpose.
On the battle front, the supreme sacrifice has been made by the members of all communities who have shown that they are Indians first and Indians last.

To our armed forces, I would like to pay on behalf of this Parliament and the entire country our warmest tributes. By their valour and heroism, they have given a new confidence to the people of India. Those who have lost their beloved on the battle front have made a contribution to the preservation of our independence which will never be forgotten by a grateful nation. Their sorrow and their pride are shared by the whole country.

Mr. Speaker, Sir, I would now seek your permission to express to all the members of this august House, to all the political parties in the country, to the leaders of public opinion, of labour organizations, of business and industry, and of many other voluntary associations, my feelings of the deepest gratitude.
In the hour of trial each one of the 470 million people of this country stood up shoulder to shoulder to meet the challenge to our freedom.

I should like to inform the House that on 18th September, 1965, I received a message from Mr. Kosygin, Chairman of the Council of Ministers, USSR, offering his good offices for bringing about improved relations between India and Pakistan. Mr. Kosygin is impelled by noble intentions. No one can ever contest the view that ultimately India and Pakistan will have to live together as peaceful neighbours. We cannot therefore say no to any efforts, which may help to bring about such a situation, made by those who are sincere and genuine in their feelings of goodwill and friendship. I have, therefore, informed Mr.
Kosygin today that we would welcome his efforts and good offices.
I would also like to give the House some further details about the tragic accident in which the other day, we suffered grievous loss. Investigations conducted on the sport show that the aircraft in which Shri Balvantray Mehta* was traveling, was shot down by a Pakistani plane. The marks on the fuselage establish that gun fire had been used. Preliminary investigations by the Air Force authorities who also have visited the scene confirm that the aircraft was shot down at a low height. The ammunition recovered at the site of the crash also proves that the attacking aircraft was a Pakistani plane. That a non-combatant civilian aircraft should have been shot down in this manner is one of the most inhuman acts which we must all deplore and condemn. Shri Balvantrayji, his wife and the others who were traveling with him have laid down their lives at the altar of the freedom of the country. Their names will remain enshrined in our memory.

We are, Sir, still faced with the Chinese ultimatum. The House is aware that almost at the same time when the Chinese Government announced the extension of the time-limit of the ultimatum to India by 72 hours on September 19, their troops started provocative activities at several points of the border. On the Sikkim border, about which the Chinese have been making baseless and threatening allegations, the Chinese troops crossed the well-known and delimited boundary at Dongchui La and Nathu La on September 20 and 21 respectively. They fired at our observation posts. They have tried also to intrude into our other territories. Our armed forces have clear instructions to repel the aggressor.

Yesterday we sent a reply to the Chinese note of September 20 in which India was alleged to have intruded into Dum Chale and committed armed provocation. The Chinese charge was rejected as a fabrication and a cover-up for the intrusion and firing at Tsaskur to which I have referred a little while ago.

The House is aware that on September 19, the Chinese Government sent us a note couched in unbecoming language, extending the period of the ultimatum, making demands for destruction of military structures etc. Regarding the so-called military structures we have already told the Chinese Government that if after joint inspection any structures are found on the Tibetan side of the border there can be no objection on their being demolished. I have been told that China has announced that some of these so-called structures have been destroyed by our troops while withdrawing. All this is a product of their imagination.

I must tell the House that we view with grave concern the Chinese activities on the border and the armed intrusions into our territory. We have urged the Chinese Government in our note of September 21 replying to the Chinese note of September 19 to forsake the path of belligerence and intimidation and to return to the path of peace and reason in its relations with India. I hope that even at this late hour China will respond to this call and prevent a major crisis.

We do not, however, know what the Chinese will do next. We have to remain vigilant all along the frontier.

These are times of the greatest trial for the nation, but the people all over the country are now in that mood which alone ensures the preservation of country’s freedom. We may have to face many ups and downs, but I know the people have steeled themselves into a resolve to meet even this bigger challenge. On our armed forces, there may be a heavier responsibility. I have no doubt that they are in good spirits. We have no intention of under-estimating the gravity of the situation. But we have resolved firmly to meet this challenge to our freedom.

2227. Letter of the British High Commission in New Delhi to the Commonwealth Relations Office conveying the conversation between the British High Commissioner and Italian Ambassador.

New Delhi, September 22, 1965.

REF: DO 196/38S

British High Commissioner New Delhi

PL-44/5 22 September, 1965

V.C. Martin Esq., South Asia Dept., C.R.O.

Dear Victor,

The following is a record of a conversation between the High Commissioner and the Italian Ambassador on 21 September. The Italian Ambassador is a well-informed person whose information is usually reliable.

2. ‘The Italian Ambassador called on me this morning to discuss the general Indo-Pak situation. In the course of the conversation he told me that he had a long talk yesterday with the Yugoslav Ambassador whom he knows intimately. The Ambassador told him that the Communist bloc had been making a very careful joint intelligence assessment of Chinese intentions. They had concluded that they had irrefutable evidence that there was an agreement between Pakistan and China that the Chinese should intervene in force if the Indo-Pak war spread to East Pakistan. The plan would have been to attack on the Sikkim front and join forces with the Pakistanis with the object of cutting off Assam from India. The Communists believe that there was probably no such agreement in the event of the Indo-Pak war being limited to West Pakistan. They considered that China’s decisions about operations in Sikkim or Ladakh are, in present circumstances, taken without reference to the Pakistanis, although they may well be known to the Pakistanis. They consider that, if the war goes on, the Chinese will intervene as a matter of political prestige and in order to strengthen their hold on the Pakistan Government. If, however, the Security Council resolution is effective, they consider that the Chinese may not make any further move. Alternatively, if they do, the appreciation, is that it will be a very minor one designed to ‘redress their frontier grievance’ and save face following their two ultimata.’

2228. Message from Prime Minister Lal Bahadur Shastri to the Soviet Premier Alex Kosygin.

New Delhi, September 22, 1965.

My dear Mr. Chairman,

I greatly appreciate the sincere feelings of friendship for India and concern for peace which have impelled you to send me your message, delivered to me by your Charge d’Affairs on 18 September, 1965. Considering the close and abiding ties that bind our two countries, our response to your offer of good offices, as our Ambassador must have told you already, is naturally positive.

2. Mr. Chairman, you have proposed a meeting between President AYUB and myself with the aim of achieving an agreement on the restoration of peaceful relations between India and Pakistan. Undoubtedly, the objective is laudable, because India and Pakistan will have to live together in peace in the interest of the welfare of Millions of people who inhabit this sub-continent. During the last 17 years, we have done all we could to promote good neighbourly relations, but unfortunately, the response from Pakistan has all along been disappointing. In fact, there has been a persistent and deliberate effort to keep up an atmosphere of hostility towards India, culminating in aggression upon our territory on three different occasions. There is also the fact that the gulf between the two is so wide. Pakistan which is already in forcible and illegal occupation of a substantial part of our territory, wishes to annex additional areas by force. Whereas we are determined to maintain our territorial integrity. Mr. Chairman, in bringing about an improvement in our relations with Pakistan there can be, from our point of view, no better good offices than yours.

3. I have had the distinct feeling that a meeting between President AYUB KHAN and myself could for obvious reasons, be appropriately considered only after fighting has ended and calmer atmosphere prevails. I have just received information that Pakistan has agreed to comply with the Security Council resolution calling for a cease-fire.

4. Before concluding this letter, allow me, Mr. Chairman, to express to you and to your great country and the friendly Soviet people, our feelings of gratitude for the help and support which you have extended to us in these days of trial for our country.

Yours sincerely
Lal Bahadur

2229. Record of Telephonic Conversation between the British Prime Minister and Pakistan President Ayub Khan.

September 23, 1965.

Ayub’s Reservation Over Soviet Initiative at Summit

President Ayub said that Pakistan had agreed to a cease fire called for by the Security Council in the firm belief that the British and American Governments would put their full weight behind a purposeful settlement of the Kashmir problem. That being so, two problems arose; first, the question of military disengagement and secondly, the establishment of political machinery for the settlement of the dispute.

The Prime Minister asked what he President had in mind. President Ayub said he would leave it to the Prime Minister. He hoped that the Prime Minister would consult the Americans and come up with a plan. He thought that the technique employed in solving the Rann of Kutch dispute might usefully be employed again. But Pakistan did not mind what the machinery was so long as it consisted of really impartial people who might shuttle between Delhi and Rawalpindi.

The Prime Minister said that he wished to say two things. First, he felt that the President had been absolutely right to agree to the Security Council’s proposals for a cease-fire. He knew that it had not been an easy decision to take but he was convinced that it was the right one. Secondly, he agreed on the need for a purposeful political negotiation on the basic subject of the dispute. The Prime Minister said that what we said in Security Council, we meant; now the problem was to give effect to that decision.

The Prime Minister went on to say that we would certainly get in touch with President Johnson and if possible with the Soviet Union, to see if we could get agreement on the form of machinery required. It was important to keep this within the ambit of the Security Council. The Prime Minister enquired how the President saw the Russian offer of mediation.

President Ayub said that the Russian offer was a propaganda stunt. If he and Prime Minister Shastri were to meet face to face in cold blood, they would merely restate their cases and depart without reaching agreement. The Rann of Kutch technique was by far the best way. He agreed that it should be under the auspices of the Security Council. But he would leave it to the Prime Minister how best to bring this about.

The Prime Minister said that we would first get in touch with the Americans and secondly try and devise the right machinery. He doubted whether it would be possible to carry the Russians with us, but it would be a very good thing if we could. There was a lot to be said for the Rann of Kutch approach.

It was agreed that the fact of the telephone conversation and its contents should remain secret and not be announced to the Press.

2230. Telegram from the British High Commissioner in New Delhi to the Commonwealth Relations Office.

New Delhi, September 23, 1965.

From: New Delhi
To: Commonwealth Relations Office

Mr. Freeman

No. 3428 23 September, 1965

IMMEDIATE

Addressed: to C.R.O. telegram No. 3428 of 23 September

Your telegram No. 3301: Kashmir.

Personal for Rumbold.

Your telegram was delayed in transmission and only arrived late on 21 September. I much appreciate having your personal thought at this time, since from here it has not been easy to judge exactly where we are going and what is best for British interests.

2. I absolutely agree that there can be no real peace or stability in subcontinent until Kashmir dispute is settled. My fear is that it will never be settled unless we take some account of recent events. In this connection, I fully agree with your paragraph 8. It is probably true that Pakistan has not been defeated, but it is certain that she has attempted to secure a military solution and has decisively failed. In these circumstances, I am not sure that I understand the thinking behind the second sentence of your paragraph 2. I personally do not see the slightest chance of India's ever accepting that the Vale should either go to Pakistan or become independent. On the contrary, it is certain that she will refuse such a solution and oppose those who promote it by every available means. The loss of Kashmir would thus have to be imposed on India by a threat of force as formidable as to be irresistible. Is it in our interests – short or long term – to support such a policy? I tried to suggest in my telegram 3274 that, on the contrary, the security of the West as a whole might be seriously threatened if China were allowed to secure an accessible land frontier with Pakistan from which she could pose a major and permanent threat to the Punjab.
3. I recognize that this thesis, if it is correct, will involve a complete rethinking of our relations with India and Pakistan. It is, however, arguable that during the past 18 years we and the Americans have, for reasons which were good at the time but may now be irrelevant, permitted a distortion of the relations between the largest and most powerful nation of the South Asia (India) and her much less powerful neighbour. This distortion has arisen from the fact that we have tried to equate India and Pakistan (in the same way that we tried to equate the Muslim League with Congress) in spite of the real difference in potential between them. The question we are now faced with is whether Pakistan’s nominal membership of CENTO provides us with a more reliable bastion against Communism than India does. If, as I suspect, dependence on the positive efficacy of CENTO has become a relatively minor factor in both our political and defence calculations, then it follows that our future relations with India, and the support of India against both the economic and ideological penetration of Russia and the physical and ideological aggression of China are of greater importance to the Americans and to ourselves than ever before.

4. I recognize that this is iconoclastic thinking. But if I am right thus far, the train of thought in your paragraph 4 and 5 may lead to a different conclusion from the one you draw. Is it true, for example, that the two parties have shown conclusively their inability to settle the matter between themselves? Perhaps the converse is true. If anything has come out of the past deplorable three weeks it is that Pakistan has proved her inability to secure what she wants by force. Per contra India has probably done enough to show that she could settle the matter by force if no-one intervened. Are we now going to bring extreme pressure to bear on India to persuade her to accept what Pakistan has failed to achieve by war? Or are we going deliberately and unnaturally to build up Pakistan to the point where she might after all be strong enough to break up India? If we believe that the former can be done by normal diplomatic pressures I am afraid that we over-estimate our influence. I am convinced that the Indians will not take it from us or the Americans diplomatically any more than they did militarily from the Pakistan army. (The Russians show no signs of being ready to join us on such a course). If, in the end, we overrode India by economic pressure or actual sanctions, then our influence and that of America would have gone and Indian economic development (the real stabilizer) would have been set back a decade. Should we have achieved anything from this except to lay the whole subcontinent open to Russian and/or Chinese influence? The alternative way of forcing India to toe the line would be to rebuild Pakistan’s military strength to a level at which she could impose a military solution on India. This would have to be done while the Russians continued to arm India. Would it not condemn the whole subcontinent to the certainty of major war in the future and once again do nothing but damage to all our interests?
5. In more detailed comment on your telegram:

(i) Your paragraph 3: On India’s side, given her new-found confidence that she can meet Pakistan militarily, relations with Pakistan may well be more relaxed in future, especially if Pakistan is not assisted to rebuild a large modern military force. The present conflict has united India as never before (I am told much more than in 1962).

(ii) Your 4(c): India has always claimed in the past, with little success, that Pakistan was the aggressor in Kashmir. Is the world prepared to believe that Pakistan was not (in non-technical terms) the aggressor in 1965?

(iii) Your paragraph 4(D): You are better placed than we are to judge Russia’s present intentions. As we see it, whilst in the past Russia has been ready to use her veto for India, this time she was able, without using the veto, to secure a Resolution which neither referred back to earlier resolutions on Kashmir nor specified self-determination. Russia appears to recognize at last some responsibility for securing a settlement of the Kashmir issue, but I assume that she still maintains her previous stand that Kashmir (however defined) is an integral part of India.

6. I recognize that British interests here may greatly diminish if political and economic stability falters. On balance, however, I believe that policy based on the views I have set out above would make such instability less likely, and so offer the best chance that India will follow western-oriented economic policies. A policy designed to force an unacceptable Kashmir settlement on India might positively ensure a decline in political stability which could otherwise be avoided.

7. I hope the tone of this telegram does not sound over-combative. Intention is to raise in sharpest form issues which are clearly crucial to British interests at moment when Ministers are bound to be reassessing them. I hope I may be kept informed as Ministerial thinking develops.

New Delhi, September 24, 1965.

Intervention in the Lok Sabha:

Mr. Deputy-Speaker, Sir, in my opinion, the resolution of the Security Council of the 20th September which we are discussing constitutes a major diplomatic reverse for Pakistan. I cannot say, and I would not be fair to this House if I said, that it is wholly favourable to India. But I can say this: I will put it negatively – it is not unfavourable to India. If the drafting of this resolution was in our hands, we would certainly have drafted a better resolution, but the resolution was drafted by the Security Council, not by our representatives there.

But I should analyse this resolution and satisfy this House that it constitutes, as I said, a serious diplomatic reverse for Pakistan. Let us look at the resolution:

“The Security Council, having considered the reports of the Secretary-General on his consultations with the Government of India and Pakistan,”

I am reading the preamble to the resolution –

“Commending the Secretary-General for his unrelenting efforts in furtherance of the objectives of the Security Council’s resolutions of 4th and 6th September.

Having heard the statements of the representatives of India and Pakistan, Noting the differing replies by the parties to an appeal for a cease-fire as set out in the report of the Secretary-General, but noting further with concern that no ceasefire has yet come into being……”

Then, this is a very important operative part – what we urged before the Security Council. Look at the difference between the attitudes of India and Pakistan. Our Prime Minister, by his letter of the 15th September, accepted an unconditional cease-fire. Contrast it with the reply of President Ayub of the 17th and record the fact that whereas India had accepted the ceasefire without conditions, Pakistan had not done so.

The Security Council could not go to that length, but I ask the House to see that by implication this preamble makes clear the position which I have just stated, because it says: “…differing replies by the parties to an appeal for ceasefire as set out in the report of the Secretary-General." Anybody who looks at the report of the Secretary-General and looks at the letter of our Prime Minister of the 15th, and the letter of President Ayub of the 17th, will see the thing. I ask you to note the difference between the two English expressions: it is not “different” replies but it is “differing” replies, which means that one reply is quite different in quality and character from the other. Therefore, in this preamble, it is clear that the Security Council has accepted the different attitudes taken up by India and Pakistan on the question of ceasefire.

Then, coming to the next paragraph:

“Convinced that an early cessation of hostilities is essential as a first step towards a peaceful settlement of the outstanding differences between the two countries on Kashmir and other related matters.”

Frankly, I am not very happy at the expression in question and the word “Kashmir” in this part of the preamble. But may I point out to this House that this expression “Kashmir and other related matters” appears in the joint declaration of the then Prime Minister, and President Ayub in 1962? May I also point out to this House that nowhere in this resolution is the word “plebiscite” used? Nowhere in this resolution is the old resolution of Security Council referred to. When we talk of Kashmir, as I said, we must not merely think of Pakistan’s claim for a plebiscite. Let us not forget that we were the complainants before the United Nations; that we went to the United Nations complaining of Pakistan’s aggression. That aggression still continues, and we have every right to say that if there is a Kashmir dispute, the only dispute is about Pakistan’s aggression and continuing aggression. So, there is no reason why we should look upon this part of the preamble as prejudicial to us.

I then come to the operative part:

“Demands that a ceasefire should take effect on Wednesday, 22nd September, 1965, and calls upon both Governments to issue orders for a ceasefire at that moment and a subsequent withdrawal of all armed personnel back to the positions held by them before 5th August, 1965.”

Now, our argument before the Security Council was that the only issue, as my hon. friend Shri U.M. Trivedi just now said, that the Security Council should consider was, who committed aggression, and if it was satisfied that Pakistan had committed aggression, condemn Pakistan as an aggressor. As I said, the time has come when the Security Council should call a spade a spade. It should not hesitate to do so. I said, take the evidence; look at the record and be satisfied. If you are satisfied that Pakistan has committed aggression, that is the only issue and you decide that issue. But the Security Council did not say so.
Pakistan Condemned

I will satisfy the House how in this operative part is implicit the condemnation of Pakistan. I also pointed out that really we are concerned with cessation of hostilities and the resolution should be confined to the question of cessation of hostilities; and, all extraneous matters should not be brought in at this stage. The resolution says:

“...and calls upon both Governments to issue orders for a cease-fire at that moment and a subsequent withdrawal of armed personnel back to the position held by them before 5th August, 1965.”

The most crucial date in this resolution is the 5th August, 1965, because that is the date on which Pakistan committed aggression on our country. I do not merely say that infiltrators entered into our country, because I think this was a naked aggression and unabashed invasion of India. The fact that they entered Kashmir makes no difference, because invasion of Kashmir is invasion of India. 5th August is the date which is to be found in the Secretary-General’s report. This is what the Secretary-General says in his report:

“Gen. Nimmo has indicated to me that the series of violations that began on the 5th August were to a considerable extent in subsequent days in the form of armed men generally not in uniform crossing the cease-fire line from the Pakistan side for the purpose of armed action on the Indian side.”

This is not our allegation, not our view of the situation, but the report of the most powerful, most impartial international civil servant in the world today, the Secretary-General of the United Nations. This is his finding. If ever there was a clear and explicit unequivocal finding about an aggression, here it is. His finding is that aggression was committed by Pakistan on the 5th August, 1965.

Therefore, when you look at this resolution and see the date 5th August, as I said, implicit in that is the condemnation of Pakistan for this aggression, because you cannot read the date devoid of the report of the Secretary-General. The date is taken from his report and we have to ask ourselves the question, what happened on the 5th August? Why is that date mentioned in this resolution? The only answer is that on 5th August took place aggression by Pakistan upon our country, invasion by Pakistan of our country. So, although there is no explicit condemnation of Pakistan as an aggressor, which this country and this House would have liked, implicit in this operative part, is the condemnation of Pakistan...

I hope my hon. friend appreciates that in view of that fact that the Secretary-General’s report mentions the date 5th August and says from that date a large number of armed people crossed over from Pakistan into Indian side, and this date having been mentioned in the resolution, there is implied condemnation of Pakistan.

As I pointed out, Pakistan has invaded India on three occasions. First was in 1947-48 when she invaded Kashmir. Then there was the Kutch invasion. This is the third invasion which is very similar to the first one into Kashmir, when Pakistan sent armed raiders, first denied any responsibility and then Sir Mohammad Zafrullah Khan admitted that Pakistan was behind it. But I will not deal with that now. I am dealing with this resolution.

Withdrawal of Forces

Let me deal with the question of the withdrawal of the armed forces. I have made the position perfectly clear before the Security Council as to what we mean by withdrawal of the armed forces back to the positions held by them before the 5th August. May I read out the passage? It is in the debate held in the Security Council on the 17th September – page 49. I do not know whether the official text has come yet. This is what I said before the Security Council on that day:

“This deals with the modality of the cease-fire. I do not want to deal with this in detail, but may I say this? All the invaders who have invaded Kashmir must leave. They must be withdrawn. They must be called back. As they were sent by Pakistan, they must be called back by Pakistan. Secondly, it must be made impossible for such infiltration to take place again. Thirdly, Pakistan must own its responsibility for this infiltration.”

Therefore, I made it clear that by withdrawal of the armed forces back to the positions held by them on 5th August, what I understood is, firstly, acknowledgement by Pakistan that she had sent these infiltrators, secondly, withdrawal of these infiltrators and thirdly, a situation to be created when such recurrence in future would be made impossible. I have not spelt out what the situation would be. But I would presently point out how the Prime Minister has taken up the same position in the correspondence, namely, that we do not want to go on from one cease-fire to another. We want to be satisfied that such a situation will not arise in future. We do not want to be put back in a position where thousands of infiltrators can enter our country and do what they have been doing there, create havoc, devastation, practice brutalities and cruelties, everything which I thought belonged to the past or the Hitler regime and not to modern civilized times...That is the position with regard to the 5th August.

Then, the resolution says:

“Calls on all the State of refrain from any action which might aggravate the situation there.”
Sir, this is a plea to all the States, and I take it that China is included, although it is not a member of the United Nations, not to intervene and aggravate this conflict. Then comes this:

“Decides to consider as soon as operative paragraph 1 of the Council’s resolution 210 of September 6 has been implemented, what steps could be taken to assist towards a settlement of the political problem underlying the present conflict, and in the meantime calls on the two Governments to utilize all peaceful means, including those listed in Article 33 of the Charter, to this end.”

Now, you will notice here that the steps which the Security Council could take are many. But here again there is no reference to Kashmir, there is no reference to plebiscite, and what we are called upon to do is to utilize all peaceful means including those listed in Article 33 of the Charter to this end. This country has always believed in peaceful means. It has always believed in debate and discussion. We are prepared to talk with anyone, including the devil, if necessary (Interruptions). Well, I do not know in whose favour the comparison is. But, Sir, you will notice that no time limit is fixed. It is left to us. This is purely recommendatory part of the resolution. We are asked to enter into discussions in order to bring about peaceful settlement, and there is mention of Article 33 of the Charter. Article 33 of the Charter, if you look at it, contains a large number of methods by which a peaceful settlement could be arrived at. Here also there is no prejudice as far as we are concerned.

Finally, it says:

“Requests the Secretary-General to exert every possible effort to give effect to this resolution, to seek peaceful solution, and to report to the Security Council thereon.”

Now, the best way to judge how seriously Pakistan considered this to be a diplomatic defeat is the response that was given by the Pakistan representative of the Security Council. I twice challenged him there to answer unequivocally whether he accepts a cease-fire unconditionally as our Prime Minister had done, and on both the occasions he refused to accept the challenge. This is what he says on the last day – this is very important. On the 20th September, when the resolution was about to be passed, this is the statement that he made. He said – this is page 23 statement by Mr. Zafar, Law Minister of Pakistan:

“On the other hand, should the Security Council adopt this draft resolution, we feel bound to warn and to put it on the record that unless the basic cause of the present conflict is removed, another and wider conflagration is bound to ensue.”
I told the Security Council that one aggression is not over and here is a threat of a new and wider conflagration. You will notice the note of utter dissatisfaction in this particular statement, because you will remember what the four conditions were which President Ayub was insisting on. The four conditions were: (i) cease-fire on which we are agreed; (ii) withdrawal of all troops not only from the part of Kashmir of which they are in unlawful occupation but we should even withdraw from our own Kashmir where we are there now; (iii) induction of Afro-Asian force; and, (iv) plebiscite within three months. In this statement Mr. Zafar said that as these conditions were not satisfied the resolution was unsatisfactory and another and wider conflagration was bound to ensure. You will notice that even President Ayub when he accepted the cease-fire said the resolution was unsatisfactory and mentioned that unless the Kashmir problem was solved, the continent will be submerged in a conflagration.

Goldberg Awakened at Dead of Night

It is surprising that although at this meeting, notwithstanding the challenge thrown out by me on two occasions, the Pakistan representative was not prepared to answer that Pakistan was prepared to accept a cease-fire unconditionally as our Prime Minister had done. It was only after a lapse of two or three days that President Ayub sent post haste Mr. Bhutto to the Security Council – poor Goldberg was awakened at dead of night, I do not know why, only for the purpose of permitting Mr. Bhutto making a speech to abuse our country. The acceptance could have been sent by a telegram, as we did, to the Secretary-General.

But the Security Council was convened solely for the purpose of enabling Mr. Bhutto to appear and abuse our country. I have shrewd suspicion – I may be wrong – that the reason for this delay, why the challenge was not accepted at the meeting of the Security Council and why some time lapsed before President Ayub accepted cease-fire, is that during that interval, a crucial interval, Pakistan was satisfied that China was not coming to her assistance. If Pakistan had felt that China was going to press home her ultimatum and attack us or invade us, I have a feeling that the answer of Pakistan would have been very different. Because Pakistan felt that not only she was militarily defeated but she could not even count on the perfidious alliance of China, that is why she was driven, however much she disliked it, to accept this cease-fire.

Kashmir an Integral Part of India

Now, Sir, I was telling you with regard to Kashmir. May I draw your attention to the fact that there also I took up an entirely unequivocal attitude. On the 18th September, speaking to the Security Council about Kashmir I said this:

“I come now to the question of Kashmir. I do not want to delve into history. I studied history at Oxford and I am very fond of history, but history must be reserved for a proper occasion. Therefore, all that I had to say about Kashmir I said at great length when I intervened in the debate last year. But I want to make my position clear about Kashmir. I do not want this Council to be under any misapprehension as to the attitude of my Government with regard to Kashmir, nor do I want the representative of Pakistan to be under any misapprehension. Kashmir is an integral part of India. Kashmir is a unit of the Indian Federation, and we will not permit our Federation to be broken up. The separation of Kashmir from India means the break-up of our Federation of India. It would mean as much a break-up as if any other part of India were separated from India. Therefore, as far as the position of Kashmir is concerned, it has been stated by the representative of the Government of India on more than one occasion and, as I said, I myself stated it clearly and categorically at our last meeting.”

Some apprehension was felt by some of the members as to the effect of withdrawing our troops to the 5th of August positions. At the very last meeting when the resolution was passed, I made a statement on this resolution and I made the position of the Government perfectly clear so that there will be no doubt as to what the position was. This is what I said:

“As I read it, this resolution is not directed against my country. We have already accepted the unconditional cease-fire and we certainly will carry it out if Pakistan will carry it out. To the extent this resolution deals with the cease-fire, it could only be directed against Pakistan, which has not accepted the unconditional cease-fire.”

This is the important part.

“With regard to the rest of the resolution all that I am going to say now is that I adhere to everything that I said in the two statements I made in the Council on Friday and Sunday. Various matters are dealt with in this resolution and I have taken up those matters in those statements. My Government adheres to every one of those statements and my Government also adheres to the explanations given by the Prime Minister of India in his letter, dated 14th September, which is included in the Secretary-General’s preliminary report. Therefore, my position is perfectly clear and the position of my Government is also perfectly clear. We have come here before you to help you to stop the hostilities. We give you our full co-operation. To the extent this resolution deals with other matters, I do not wish to comment on them because I have already done so in my two statements and the Prime Minister has commented on them in his letter of 14th September.”
Now it is very necessary to see what the Prime Minister says in his letter of 14th September because it clinches the matter both on the question of the withdrawal to the 5th August position and the question of Kashmir. This is the letter which the Prime Minister wrote to the Secretary-General, dated 14th. I will read the relevant passage:

“In the light of our own experience during the last few months, we will have to insist that there must be no possibility of a recurrence of armed attacks on India, open or disguised. Let me make it perfectly clear, Mr. Secretary-General, that when consequent upon cease-fire becoming effective, further details are considered, we shall not agree to any disposition which will leave the door open for further infiltrations or prevent us from dealing with the infiltrations that have taken place.”

The next is about Kashmir.

“I would also like to state categorically that no pressures or attacks will deflect us from our firm resolve to maintain the sovereignty and territorial integrity of our country, of which the State of Jammu and Kashmir is an integral part.”

Nothing can be clearer, more unequivocal, more categoric than this statement of the Prime Minister. I pointed out to the Security Council that this was the attitude of the Government and I had reiterated it.

India Prepared for Negotiations

So, the House need have no misunderstanding as to what is the modality of the cease-fire agreement. We have agreed to the cease-fire. The modalities have to be worked out and in working out these modalities we will adhere to the position that we have taken. We will discuss with President Ayub. As I said, we are prepared to discuss with anybody. But in discussing with President Ayub we will remember what the Prime Minister has said, that Kashmir is a closed chapter, as far as the territorial integrity of our country is concerned. I said that last year in the Security Council. We are not going to vacillate or wobble. I think our position should be absolutely clearly and emphatically stated to the world that we are not prepared to discuss under any circumstances the holding of plebiscite or… (interruption).

I hope I have satisfied the House. The resolution that the Security Council has passed is not unfavourable to India, for our stand has been made perfectly clear and there is no doubt, no ambiguity, as to what we stand for and what we will stand for in the future.

Before I sit down may I make one or two general observations on what happened in the Security Council? I think the time has come when we should do some rethinking on our foreign policy. The world is moving and there is a regrouping of forces, regrouping of powers and we cannot possibly take up a rigid attitude or stand where we stood some years ago. We have to move with the world. I think we should give a serious thought to what the position is in the world today.

Stand taken by other countries

In this connection, I would be less than doing my duty if I do not express publicly on the floor of the House my deep appreciation for the stand taken up by Malaysia in the Security Council. As I said the other day, it was a speech which a member of the Indian delegation could have delivered. And I must also express my appreciation of the great help we received from the USSR while the resolution was being drafted. If the House only knew that the resolution was passed at quarter to three in the morning and the meeting had been going on the whole of Sunday, every comma, every semi-colon, every sentence was considered and re-considered, it is only then that you realize how the assistance of a country like USSR in getting the resolution in this shape was invaluable.

And let me say this about USA. There was much more understanding of our position this year than I found last year. I am satisfied that on certain matters the world opinion is entirely in our favour, whatever some papers or some people may say. There is no doubt that the world is satisfied that Pakistan was the aggressor. There is no doubt that this myth of an uprising in Kashmir has been completely exploded.

I should also say with regret that I could not understand the position taken up by Jordan. We have stood by the Arab World. We have shown friendship to the Arab world ever since we became free. We were among those countries which stood with the Arab world during the Suez trouble. As against Pakistan, we supported Jordan in the Jordan water issue. So, it came to me as a great disappointment that Jordan practically, if I may use a colloquial expression, toed the line of Pakistan.

There is one lesson which I learnt and which I have been learning since I joined public life, and that is this, that what ultimately matters is power; what ultimately matters is the strength of your country. We may have all the idealism in the world, we may have all the justice on our side, but if we are weak, nobody is going to listen. If we want our influence to be felt in the Councils of the world, we must be strong and must develop all the strength and power that we have. Then we would be listened to with respect.

There is one thing that I must say. I was proud when I was arguing India’s case before the Security Council. I could hold my head up and felt proud of being an Indian and what India stands for. The first thing was the heroism displayed by our jawans. I could tell the Americans that notwithstanding your Patton tanks and all the modern equipment that you have given to Pakistan, our men are brave enough to fight them. Secondly, I was proud of the fact that not only Kashmir – Hindus, Muslims and Sikhs had stood by Government and resisted the aggression, but the whole of India was united on this issue.

Please do not forget that Pakistan counted on one thing. The grand design was that when the infiltration took place Kashmir would give trouble. It was exactly like the story of the Bay of Pigs in Kennedy’s regime. You remember, Sir, the Bay of Pigs. President Kennedy’s one great mistake soon after he assumed power was that he relied on his Intelligence. He was told that if he sent a few Americans, the people of Cuba would rise and when the people landed in the Bay of Pigs, they did not rise. And President Ayub - I do not know who was his informant; perhaps, Mr. Bhutto - was informed: Send 4,000 infiltrators to Kashmir and the whole of Kashmir will rise and will fall in your mouth like a ripe plum. That did not happen. He said, send these people to Kashmir and there will be trouble in India. Hindus, Muslims, Christians – India remains solid. And there again he failed.

Sir, I have taken longer than I expected; but, in conclusion, I think, we did wisely in accepting the cease-fire because I assure you, the whole world realized that we were dedicated to peace and did not want bloodshed even for a moment if hostilities could be stopped. I think, on the whole we have secured a Resolution which is not unfavourable to India and, I think, we can look upon this whole incident with pride. We should be grateful to our Prime Minister for taking up this strong line.

DISCUSISON IN RAJYA SABHA

Later, intervening in the discussion on the same subject in the Rajya Sabha, the Minister of Education and Leader of the House, said:

Sir, I will try and make my intervention as brief as possible. If I might deal with the last point raised by Mr. Jairamdas about the Commonwealth, I know how strongly we are feeling and we are entitled to feel strongly about the attitude taken by the United Kingdom on this question of Pakistani aggression. Before we take a decision fraught with serious consequences, whether we should remain in the Commonwealth or not, we must give it careful thought. I would only throw out the suggestion for the consideration of the House. Our quarrel is with the United Kingdom; our grievance is against the United Kingdom, not against the Commonwealth. The Commonwealth is not the property of the United Kingdom. The United Kingdom is only a member of the Commonwealth. In the other House, I just heard somebody saying, “We might ask the United Kingdom to leave the Commonwealth” rather than that we should leave the Commonwealth. Therefore, I would beg of this House, never take a political decision of far-reaching consequences when one is in a mood of indignation or anger. I think, as I said in London, our indignation and anger are perfectly justified but one must permit one's passion to cool down before one can come to a conclusion on so important a matter.

Dealing with the Resolution of the Security Council, an hon. Member said that it was not wholly satisfactory. I agree with him. As I was just telling the other House, this is not our draft. We did not approve of it. It was passed by the Security Council but I think, on the whole, it is a Resolution with which we might well be satisfied and it constitutes a serious and important diplomatic defeat for Pakistan. Just consider this. What did Pakistan want? She laid down four conditions, cease-fire, withdrawal of our troops from Kashmir and her troops from that part of Kashmir of which she is in unlawful occupation, induction of an Afro-Asian force and the holding of a plebiscite within three months. These were the conditions on which she was prepared to accept a cease-fire. Now, look at this Resolution. You do not find even a trace of any of these four conditions. There is no mention of a plebiscite, there is no mention of an induction of any foreign troops, there is no mention of evacuation of our troops from Kashmir and yet this Resolution, after a great deal of hesitation, Pakistan accepted. When I was arguing the case, the representative of Pakistan refused to give an unequivocal reply whether Pakistan was prepared to accept an unconditional cease-fire as our Prime Minister wants. It was only after the Security Council session was finished that President Ayub had second thoughts and sent Mr. Bhutto post haste to call a meeting at midnight to offer his acceptance.

I now come to the other point raised about the 5th of August by the hon. Member. He said this gives an advantage to the aggressor. Now, if you look at the Prime Minister's letter to the Secretary-General, it is perfectly clear as to what we mean by going back to the positions which were occupied by both the countries on the 5th August and I made Government's position perfectly clear to the Security Council that three conditions are implicit in this date, 5th August, one, that all the infiltrators who entered Kashmir and who commenced Pakistan's aggression must withdraw; second, Pakistan must admit responsibility for these infiltrators and third – and the most important – that we must create such a situation that infiltration in future would become impossible. We have had enough of these cease-fires, we have trusted Pakistan sufficiently and we are not prepared to trust her any more. Therefore, in the interests of our country, in the interests of our defence, we must have a cease-fire line of such a character that in future no infiltration would be possible. The cease-fire line is five hundred miles long. You may increase the number of U.N. Observers from forty to four hundred or four thousand but unless the cease-fire line is so constituted that infiltration becomes almost impossible, there is no guarantee as to what is going to happen in the future.

And this is all the more important when we realize the statement made by Mr. Bhutto recently, the statement by Pakistan’s representative in the Security Council and what President Ayub said in accepting the cease-fire. What did they say? They said that unless the Kashmir problem is solved and solved according to their pleasure, there will be a greater conflagration in this country. Therefore, my submission to this House is, let us for forget that the cease-fire is only a truce; it is not peace. Therefore, we have got to be watchful; we have got to be vigilant. I think the cease-fire is not the end of our trouble; it is the beginning of many things which will have to be worked out over a long period of time and we must not be caught napping again. Now we have got full notice that Pakistan does not accept this cease-fire as leading to peace.

Pakistan’s contention is that peace will only come when there is a plebiscite in Kashmir. No. I should not say that because what has been said in the Security Council and by Mr. Bhutto is that peace will only come when Kashmir goes to Pakistan. They have already anticipated a plebiscite; they are not worried about the plebiscite. What they want is that Kashmir should belong to Pakistan. The Law Minister of Pakistan when he was arguing his case talked of Kashmiris as being the kith and kin of Pakistan and I asked since when the Kashmiris had became the kith and kin of Pakistan. The only bond which he could find was the fact that majority of people in Kashmir were Muslims and Pakistan is a theocratic State. And I said that on that basis they might as well say that the 50 million Muslims in India are the kith and kin of Pakistan and the next demand they will make is they will invade India in order to bring these 50 million Muslims under their domination. That shows the absurdity of the claim. When you make religion the basis of citizenship, you are really living in medieval times, not modern times. That is the whole trouble.

I think my friend. Mr. Akbar Ali Khan, said that something much more was at stake in this fight between us and Pakistan, not merely the question of Kashmir. I entirely agree with him and may I quote from what I said in the Security Council on this very matter? This is what I said:

“This is not merely a conflict between India and Pakistan. It has a much wider significance. The first significance is that the threat and menace of China looms large behind this war. It is much more than a mere looming now. It has almost come to a concrete shape after yesterday’s ultimatum.”

I was speaking the day after the ultimatum and I charged Pakistan with having committed this aggression on India with the hope and expectation that China will be behind it and support it.

“Then there is the war between the two ideologies.”
That is what Mr. Akbar Ali Kahn was referring to.

“Let us face it. On the one hand, there is the religious State and on the other hand the secular State. This is the conflict. It is not Kashmir. Kashmir is merely the symptom; it is not the disease. The disease is that Pakistan believes in a religious State; it believes in religion as the nexus between citizens. We believe in a secular State, in a multi-racial society. It is also a fight between a free society and democratic institutions on the one hand and dictatorship and regimentation on the other. These are the issues involved in this war and I think, if I may say so, that it is in the interests of Asia and the world that our free society, our multi-communal federation should survive. The attack on Kashmir is an attack for the purpose of breaking up our federation, of breaking up our way of life and preventing us from carrying on our great experiment of men of different religions and different languages living peacefully together. You in this country are trying the same experiment. Other countries are trying it but Pakistan does not want it. It does not believe in it and wants to break it up. What we are defending today is not merely the territorial integrity of our country which is important; what we are defending today is the existence of a free democratic nation. We want to function as a free democratic nation. It is the threat to our institutions that we resist.”

So this really is the conflict. It is not merely Kashmir. Of course, Kashmir is important enough; every inch of our country is important to us but something much more is involved in this fight and it is really a fight between two ideologies.

Now I think an hon.Member said: Why should India be pressurized into entering into talks with Pakistan? Now, the Resolution, if you look at it, does not pressurize us. All that it says is:

“decides to consider as soon as operative paragraph 1 of the Council’s Resolution 210 of 6th September has been implemented, what steps could be taken to assist towards a settlement of the political problem underlying the present conflict…

That is, as far as the Security Council is concerned what steps it could take.

“…and, in the mean time calls upon the two Governments to utilize all peaceful means, including those listed in Article 33 of the Charter…”

No time limit is fixed. We are called upon to talk and I think in India we should be the last to say that we will not talk with anyone, not even the devil. Therefore, if our Prime Minister has said that he is prepared to accept the invitation of USSR that he and President Ayub should meet in that country under propitious circumstances, there is nothing to be frightened about it. I think the fear we have is that we will allow the Kashmir question to be reopened. Let us face it. We have done that in the past. The fear in this House which I fully appreciate is that we might be weak, we might vacillate, we might wobble over Kashmir but I wish to give this assurance to this House – the Prime Minister has said it in his letter to the Secretary-General and I have reiterated it in the Security Council – that as far as our basic stand is concerned, that Kashmir is an integral part of India, it remains unaltered. As I said, we will talk with President Ayub, we will talk with anybody else. After all this is another important issue about Kashmir that we can talk about and that is we went to the United Nations as complainants. Pakistan committed aggression on Kashmir in 1947 and that aggression still continues till today. Let that aggression be vacated. But as I said, it is perfectly clear on the record that our basic stand on Kashmir remains unaltered.

And may I say this? I think an hon. Member said something about the USSR. As far as the USSR is concerned until today, she has given us every assistance; she has made it perfectly clear and she has always said that she recognized that Kashmir was an integral part of India. And let me say this. This Resolution was passed on Sunday at quarter to three early in the morning. The Security Council sat the whole of Sunday and we were there. There were discussions over every comma, every semi-colon, every phrase and throughout those discussions we have every help and assistance from the USSR and I can assure this House that this Resolution would never have been passed in the terms in which it is has been passed but for the considerable assistance and help which we got from the U.S.S.R. Of Course, Malaysia also helped us but do not forget that what counts most in the Security Council is the five Big Powers which have the right of veto. Of course, Formosa does not count much but Russia, the United States, France and the United Kingdom to count because if one of them is opposed to a Resolution it makes no difference if everybody else supports it because that country can veto it. We succeeded in the Security Council to bring about unanimity among the Big Powers and even the non-permanent Powers and I repeat that but for the great assistance and help we had from the U.S.S.R. this Resolution would not have been carried and I say that this Resolution favours our country. It is a diplomatic defeat for Pakistan; it does not accept any of its conditions and I think we might took upon it as something which does not go against four interests at all.
Letter from Permanent Representative of Pakistan to the UN addressed to the UN Secretary General.

I am directed to refer to your telegram dated 20 September 1965, asking for a plan and schedule for withdrawal of troops, and to reply as under:

You have asked for a plan and schedule for withdrawal of our troops from their present position and you offer to send United Nations observers to assist in the withdrawal. You would appreciate that no withdrawal can take place until it has been jointly agreed to by representative of the two armed forces and a mutually accepted programme of withdrawal has been prepared. So long as such a programme has not been agreed to withdrawal cannot start and as such United Nations observers cannot begin to perform their function of supervising withdrawal.

In the meantime, I should like to state my Government’s position on this question. You appear to be concentrating almost exclusively on making arrangements for withdrawal of troops and re-establishing the old cease-fire in Jammu and Kashmir. In our judgement, however, military disengagement should proceed concurrently with an honourable political settlement. In other words, it is imperative that we should evolve a self-executing arrangement and procedures that would ensure an honourable settlement of the Jammu and Kashmir dispute which is the basic cause of the present conflict. Without such an arrangement it is hard to envisage an effective programme for the withdrawal of forces. Moreover, if immediate steps are not taken to bring about an honourable settlement of the Jammu and Kashmir dispute, we would be faced with the real danger of resumption of hostilities which we well lead to a conflict of much greater dimensions.

I shall be grateful if this communication is circulated as a Security Council document.
2233. Note from the High Commission for India in Pakistan to the Pakistan Ministry of Foreign Affairs.

No. HC-X/I. September 28, 1965

The High Commission of India presents its compliments to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the Government of Pakistan and is constrained to protest most strongly against the outrageous violations of its diplomatic rights and the humiliations and indignities to which the High Commission was subjected after 6th September, 1965.

The most flagrant offences of the Pakistani authorities were their armed search from 6.00 P.M. to 11.30 P.M. on September 11 of the dwellings of every single family of the Indian High Commission – including the High Commissioner’s— their further armed search between 2.30 A.M. and 6.30 A.M. on September 13 of the Indian Chancery and their inaction on September 21, 1965 while organized demonstrators attacked and extensively damaged the supposedly guarded chancery.

For over five hours on the evening of September 11, the residence of the High Commissioner and all the three other residential buildings into which the officers and staff of the High Commission had been herded with their families, were surrounded by scores of armed policemen, while dozens more searched every household and its contents. To the strong protests of the residents, the police rudely replied that they should get out of the way as no obstructions would be tolerated in the carrying out of official orders to search thoroughly every family, diplomatic or non-diplomatic. All crates, trunks and cupboards were opened, their contents thoroughly searched and the premises left littered with belonging of the families. In almost every case the Police took away papers both officials and personal, family correspondence, photographs, diaries etc. without giving any receipts. The Indian personnel were denied facilities to seek the intervention of the Ministry until the High Commissioner personally appeared on the scene of one of the searches. His protests were equally brusquely dismissed and when he finally succeeded in contacting the Foreign Ministry, the Police refused to accept the Ministry’s intervention saying they had their own orders and did not propose to talk to anyone from the Ministry. Even when the Director of the Ministry assigned as Liaison Officer for the High Commission, Mr. Choudhry, arrived, the Police paid little heed to his efforts except that they did not search the Deputy High Commissioner’s house. The Police continued their searches of all the other premises. Later when the High Commissioner visited other buildings that were being searched he was shocked to find that at every place the same pattern was being repeated; the family belongings had been turned inside out and strewn about with utter callousness. At his own residence, which had been ransacked in his absence, the High Commissioner found that his official papers and personal belongings in all the rooms had been fully searched. The authorities did not show the slightest respect for the inviolability of the residence of the Head of the Mission which is sacrosanct is international law.

In spite of the firm assurance given by Mr. Choudhury on September 11 that at least the Chancery’s inviolability would be respected, at 2.30 A.M. on September 12, armed Police surrounded that building and forcibly occupied it. The Indian officials and their families who were living in the Chancery were summarily moved out of the way and the rooms they were occupying searched while officers living elsewhere were sent for to bring the keys for other rooms. Every safe, cabinet, cupboard and desk had to be opened, under duress, and every document that could be found was studied. Some personal letters, official papers and calendar diaries were removed for which again no receipts were given. The Pakistan authorities were particularly persistent in demanding the Cypher documents of the High Commission, which they were told, had been destroyed earlier.

From the brutally stringent way all these searches were conducted, it was clear that their primary purpose was to humiliate the Indian personnel and to remind them that they could not count on any of the rights and privileges which are guaranteed to all diplomats under international law and practice.

This lesson was re-emphasised when on September 21, the Chancery was attacked by nearly two to three thousand organized agitators who came with three trucks full of stones, which they threw, along with fireballs, breaking every window in the four-storey building, wrecking the auditorium and almost setting fire to some rooms. The Police, including those who were permanently encamped on the Chancery grounds, allowed these assaults to continue for nearly two hours without any hindrance, regardless of the fact that the Chancery was being used, at the Pakistan Government’s instance, to house over 150 Indian officials, their wives and children, who had been made to move from their normal residences for the sake of their “Security”. Considering that merely 2000 demonstrators came in their waves with truck-loads of stones which they freely hurled at the Chancery for two hours, it is obvious that the so-called “spontaneous demonstration” was well organized with the connivance of the authorities.

When such enormities were permitted by the Pakistani authorities, it seems almost inapposite to mention the deprivations of the personal rights and privileges of the diplomatic officers and the staff of the High Commission, whom the Pakistan Government required to be herded together in conditions of acute discomfort, inconvenience and indignity, with inadequate facilities for meeting even essential requirements and with a progressive denial of all rights of communication with each other and even with the Pakistan Ministry of Foreign Affairs. The High Commissioner was progressively prevented from visiting the officers and staff of the Mission despite repeated reminders that it was his responsibility to look after their welfare; and from September 12 to 23, he was totally forbidden to leave his residence. The Indian diplomats were treated virtually as prisoners, dependent for the fulfillment of their needs on the varying helpfulness of the guards encamped on their grounds. The difficulties endured by individuals are wholly overshadowed by the outrages committed against the inviolability of the Mission, but they betray a no less derisive disregard for universally recognized diplomatic obligations and conventions.

The treatment with which the High Commission met constitutes a record of contempt by the Pakistani authorities for even the most fundamental rights of a diplomatic mission which is without parallel in the history of relations between civilized states. The inviolability of a diplomatic mission, its personnel and its premises, is one of the basic principles of international law, which every civilized state is obliged to observe in respect of the diplomatic missions it agrees to receive. Not only has the Pakistan Government totally disregarded its obligations, its authorities have taken action against the High Commission of India which, in any law abiding state, they are not even entitled to take against their own nationals without proper authorization and safeguard in law.

From the moment, on September 6th, when the Ministry of Foreign Affairs first informed the High Commission, orally, that restrictions were to be imposed on it, it was pointed out time and again to the Pakistani authorities that since India and Pakistan were not at war, and since neither Government had asked for the termination of the other’s mission, the High Commission failed to see on what basis the Pakistan Government was proposing to impose restrictions. No valid answer was available on the High Commission’s objections, the Indian personnel being simply advised to comply with the Pakistani requirements in the interests of the security of Pakistan and of their own security. Appreciating full well that the security of the Indian personnel was indeed dependent on the actions of the Pakistan authorities, the High Commission expressed its readiness, under protest, to comply with all reasonable limitations on its normal rights and functions. The Pakistani authorities not only proceeded far beyond any reasonable security requirements but, by forcing themselves into the premises of the High Commission, themselves committed most iniquitous breaches of the security they were supposed to safeguard.

The High Commission cannot protest too strongly against the insults, indignities and extraordinary violations of universally acknowledged diplomatic rights which authorities under the control of the Pakistan Government have perpetrated against it. There can be no excuse whatsoever for their behaviour. This has been repeatedly pointed out in oral protest which have been made to the Ministry by the High Commissioner and Deputy High Commissioner on the few occasions on which they have been able to have any contact with the Ministry during the last three weeks during which these offenses were being committed, but so far no satisfactory reply has been forthcoming. It is hoped that the Government of Pakistan will consider carefully the implications of what has happened. If such conduct is tolerated, diplomatic intercourse between states becomes impossible. The Government of Pakistan can well imagine that its own missions in India could not function if they were exposed to similar violations of their rights. No diplomatic mission can possibly function if it cannot be confident that the receiving state will respect and ensure the inviolability of its premises and personnel. The High Commission of India in Pakistan must therefore call for the most categorical assurances that its inviolability will be both guaranteed and safeguarded by the Pakistani authorities. The High Commission further trusts that appropriately severe disciplinary action will be taken against the officials responsible for the outrages committed against it, for which it expects to receive from the Ministry an unqualified apology, as well as the assurances that they will never again be repeated.

A note is being addressed separately to the Ministry seeking compensation for the damage caused to the Chancery.

In accordance with formal convention, the High Commission has the honour to renew to the Ministry the assurances of its highest consideration.

2234. Letter from Permanent Representative of India at the UN to the UN Secretary General.

Excellency,

With reference to your communication of the 20th September, 1965, I had already sent you an interim reply conveying the willingness of the Government of India to order cease-fire at the previously appointed time, namely, 7 A.M. GMT. While doing so, I had communicated the impossibility of our ordering a unilateral cease-fire and stressed the need for arranging that both sides cease-fire simultaneously at the appointed time. Subsequently, because of the delay in the communication of Pakistan's acceptance of the cease-fire, which was only communicated at the emergency meeting of the Security Council on the morning of September 22, the Security Council extended the time for the cease-fire to 2200 hours GMT on the 22nd September. As you are aware, the cease-fire was ordered by both sides at this hour.

On receipt of your communication of September 23, addressed to the Prime Minister, I was asked by my Government to seek clarification on certain points arising from your letter. I refer to the Aide Memoire which I handed to you on the 24th September. I received your reply to my Aide Memoire on September 25. I note your assurance that the use of the word 'troops' in the identical communications that you sent to me and to the Permanent Representative of Pakistan on September 20, connotes no restrictions on the meaning and purpose of the Security Council Resolution which relates to the withdrawal of "all armed personnel". As noted in paragraph 6 of your report (Document S/6651). "...the series of violations that began on 5 August were to a considerable extent in subsequent days in the form of armed men, generally not in uniform, crossing the CFL from the Pakistan side for the purpose of armed action on the Indian side." It will be recalled that throughout the recent discussions in the Security Council and your discussions with the Prime Minister of India in New Delhi, the greatest emphasis has been placed by us on the withdrawal of these armed men from Pakistan. The Security Council Resolution itself, by naming 5th August as the date in connection with withdrawal to previous positions, has, undoubtedly, recognized the fact that armed infiltrators from Pakistan, to which reference has been made in your report, must be withdrawn. In your Aide Memoire it had been stated that in the expression "withdrawal of all armed personnel back to the positions held by them before 5th August, 1965", the word positions "must connote identifiable military positions of some nature which prior to 5th August 1965 have presumably been occupied by some kind of armed personnel under the Government control and/or direction." The Government of India are unable to accept this restrictive interpretation of the Security Council Resolution. In fact, such an interpretation is not warranted by the Security Council Resolution, the Secretary General’s report to the Security Council Document S/6651, and the discussions in the Council. In paragraph 15(b) of S/6651. It will be recalled that it was proposed as one of the conditions under which restoration of the ceasefire and return to normal conditions along the cease-fire line could be achieved as “readiness on the part of the Government of Pakistan to take effective steps to present crossings of the CFL from the Pakistan side by armed men, whether or not in uniform.” It has always been the understanding of the Government of India that the withdrawals of all “armed personnel” contemplated in the three Resolutions of the Security Council must include withdrawals of such personnel not in uniform who have crossed the cease-fire line from Pakistan since August 5. Any schedule or plan of withdrawal of Indian troops has, therefore, necessarily to be related to and coordinated and synchronized with the withdrawal of Pakistani regular forces as well as armed men not in uniform who have crossed the cease-fire line and international border between Jammu and Kashmir and West Pakistan for both of which Pakistan must undertake full responsibility.

I would also, in this connection, refer to the Prime Minister of India’s communications to you of the 4th September and the 14th September. In paragraph 8 of the latter communication it was made clear that when, consequent upon cease-fire becoming effective, further details are considered, we shall not agree to any disposition which will leave the door open for further infiltrations or prevent us from dealing with the infiltrations that have taken place. I have under instructions from my Government brought to your attention numerous violations of the cease-fire by Pakistan since the cease-fire came into effect. Pakistan thus, despite its solemn pledge to cease-fire, is once again violating the pledge given to the Security Council in pursuance of the Council Resolutions. Pakistan should be made to observe the cease-fire. The question of withdrawals will come only thereafter. I am instructed by my Government to suggest to you that at that stage the best way of dealing with the question of withdrawal of armed personnel would be for you to send your representatives and/or team of observers to establish contact and have discussions with the Governments of India and Pakistan in order to assist in working out a plan of simultaneous, coordinated and synchronized withdrawal of all armed personnel of both sides.
2235. Statement by Prime Minister Lal Bahadur Shastri in Lok Sabha on Cease-fire Line in Kashmir.

New Delhi, November 20, 1965.

The Pakistan Press has been indulging, for several weeks, in intensive propaganda on the so-called concentration of Indian troops on the Cease-fire line. Newspaper headlines have tried to make out that India was planning to use, against Pakistan, the arms and equipment that she has received from friendly countries for her defence against Chinese aggression across her borders. To give an air of reality to these allegations, Pakistan has attempted to build up tension along the cease-fire line.

On October 16, the Pakistan Ministry of External Affairs handed over a note to our High Commission in Karachi alleging, inter alia, that Indian troops were stepping up their activity on the cease-fire line, particularly near village Chaknot, which according to Pakistan, had always been administrated by the so-called Azad Kashmir government, though they admitted that the village was situated on the Indian side of the Cease Fire line. The note went on to warn India that if a forcible seizure of Chaknot was attempted, the so-called Azad Kashmir Government Forces would be compelled to take whatever steps they might consider necessary to defend themselves and maintain the status quo. The threat held out in the Pakistan Note was supported by intemperate statements by Pakistan Ministers, even questioning the legality of the Cease-Fire Agreement in relation to the conduct of civilians and civil administration.

On October 22, Pakistan stopped the flow of water on their side of the cease-fire line in the power channel, which feeds the hydel generator situated in the town of Poonch. When to continue the supply of the water to the power house our workmen attempted to build a diversionary power channel, on our side of the cease-fire line and well away from the 500-yard demilitarized zone, they were fired upon from the Pakistan side, and one of our workmen was injured by rifle fire.

With considerable difficulty the work on the diversionary channel was completed by November 2 and the hydel generator began to function again. In this case also, Pakistan newspaper carried false reports of an attack by Indian troops and the resistance offered by the so-called Azad Kashmir Forces. This stoppage of water in the power channel to Poonch, we maintain, is a clear breach of the Indus Waters Treaty. This power channel takes off from the Betar Nallah on the Pakistan side of the cease-fire line. The firing incident on the power channel was reported by us to the U.N. observers and the question of the breach of the Treaty has also been taken up with Pakistan, officially, by our Indus Commissioner.
More recently, another report has been given wide currency by Pakistan newspapers and the Pakistan Radio, alleging that Indian troops have been active in village Polas, which is situated a few miles north-north-west of Poonch and the so-called Azad Forces are said to have been ordered to resist them.

All these Pakistan allegations are, of course, completely baseless. There is no concentration of Indian troops along the cease-fire line. We have, at no point, near village Chaknot, or near village Polas, increased, in any manner, our defence potential. All activities along the cease-fire line are under the constant scrutiny of the United Nations Observers. The U.N. Observers, we are informed, have visited Chaknot, and they have also visited the Betar Nallah near Poonch, in response to our complaints against Pakistan’s violations of the Cease-fire Agreement. Their awards are awaited. We have exercised complete administrative jurisdiction in all villages on our side of the cease-fire line and we shall continue to exercise such legitimate jurisdiction, without in any manner transgressing the Cease-Fire Agreement. If Pakistan has any complaints of any military build-up on our side, at any point along the cease-fire line, she is free to ask the U.N. Observers to go into the matter and report the results of their enquiry, after a verification on the spot, as they are authorized to do under the Cease-Fire Agreement. If Pakistan does not seek the assistance of the U.N. Observers we can only conclude that she is motivated by nothing but a desire to indulge in propaganda to malign India.

We want to live in peace with our neighbour, Pakistan. As we have repeatedly stated in the past, the arms we are receiving from friendly countries are not being used and will not be used against Pakistan. We have also repeatedly stated that although we claim and will continue to claim full and complete sovereignty over the whole of Jammu & Kashmir, as a result of State’s accession to the Indian Union, we have always hoped for and worked for a peaceful settlement of all disputes with Pakistan. But Pakistan has, all along, spurned our overtures of friendship and goodwill. This does not mean that we will change our policy of wanting friendly and co-operative relations with our neighbour.
Esteemed Mr. Prime Minister,

On the initiative of the Pakistani side. Mr. Z.A. Bhutto Minister for External Affairs of Pakistan stayed in Moscow from November 23 to November 26 this year and he had talks with me as well as with Mr. A.A. Gromyko, Minister for Foreign Affairs of the USSR.

In connection with the proposal of the Soviet Government for the good offices in solving the Pakistani-Indian armed conflict Mr. Bhutto laid down the considerations of the Government of Pakistan on this question and expressed some ideas on improvement of the Pakistani-Indian relations as a whole.

Mr. Bhutto stated that Pakistan accepted the Soviet Government’s proposal of the good offices and about the meeting with you of the President of Pakistan in the Soviet Union for conducting direct talks. Pakistan appreciates the proposal of the good offices suggested by the Soviet Union and considers that this proposal could be also an important step in correct direction in future.

Mr. Bhutto pointed out that the Government of Pakistan approached to the questions concerning relations with India with open mind and without bitterness and prejudices. Pakistan unconditionally accepts the proposal of the Government of the Soviet Union regarding the meeting of the Heads of Government of India and Pakistan to discuss all difference existing between the two countries.

During the talks Mr. Bhutto stressed several times importance and necessity of discussion of the question of Kashmir in the course of the possible meeting in Tashkent.

His attention, however, was drawn to the fact that if discussion of this question is to be considered as a precondition for the meeting of the Prime Minister of India and the President of Pakistan with the participation of the Chairman of the Council of Ministers of the USSR, then, taking into account the position of the other side, i.e. India’s stand, which holds different opinion on the Kashmir question, the meeting would have practically come into a deadlock at once. Then a question was put before Mr. Bhutto: would not it be more correct to agree that discussion should cover the issues, which are acceptable for both the sides. And, as is known, both the sides have such issues.
Replying to this question, Mr. Bhutto stated that discussion on any issues was finally connected with the Kashmir problem. The Government of Pakistan, however, was ready to accept also such an approach suggested by the Soviet side. He said that “Pakistan is ready not to put forward any concrete issue for discussion during the Indo-Pakistan negotiations. She is ready to discuss relations between India and Pakistan as a whole and it means that she is ready to discuss also any question, apart from that one of Kashmir, if India also is ready for such a discussion”. He added, that the Pakistani side was not putting forward any precondition that an exchange of opinion on the whole range of Indo-Pakistan problems should start namely from the discussion of the Kashmir question. The Government of Pakistan expressed the hope that India on her part would be ready for the meeting without any preconditions.

Mr. Bhutto said also that Pakistan would not like to recollect the past and to be engaged in making charges and counter charges.

In the past, Pakistan and India had settled a number of issues concerning their relations. Pakistan proceeds from the fact that since it was possible to settle with India certain concrete questions, solution of general problems could also be reached, if, of course, both the sides have such a desire. The Pakistani side feels that suggestions and goodwill of the other side should be taken into account in the course of the meeting. The discussion on all the questions should be held in a constructive way, without prejudices and with both the sides’ willingness to have friendly relations.

Mr. Bhutto confirmed that Pakistan was ready to implement the well-known resolutions of the Security Council taken in connection with the conflict and explained that the Pakistani side had agreed to the cease-fire and the withdrawal of the troops and armed personnel proceeding, firstly, from necessity to realize the corresponding resolutions of the Security Council and, secondly, because the Government of Pakistan strived to settle disputed questions with India by peaceful means, through negotiation.

The Soviet side told the Minister for External Affairs of Pakistan that the Soviet Government wanted the conflict to be caused and the friendly relations between India and Pakistan established as soon as possible. Such course of events would be a great victory of the peoples of India and Pakistan and a big contribution to the cause of preservation of peace in South Asia and throughout the world. In the Soviet Union there is the conviction that with the goodwill of both the sides given, the conflict can be settled. It will be, undoubtedly, settled and as soon as it is done, it is better for both the sides as the liquidation of the conflict will mean discontinuation of material and human losses, both on the side of India as well as Pakistan.
We do not share the point of view of the governments of some countries which are trying to confront interests of India against those of Pakistan.

This policy is alien to us. We stand for peace and friendship among the nations and we will try to do our best to help to improve the relations between India and Pakistan.

Informing you, Mr. Prime Minister, about the talks with the Minister for External Affairs of Pakistan, the Soviet Government would like to express some considerations.

The position of the Government of Pakistan, in our opinion, on the question of the peaceful settlement of the armed conflict changed lately for the better. If Pakistan previously as a condition of the meeting in Tashkent considered it necessary to make preparation for this through the Security Council and insisted on indispensable and immediate discussion at the meeting of the Kashmir issue, now, as is obvious from the position of the Government of Pakistan set forth by its Minister for External Affairs, Pakistan is ready to go for the Tashkent meeting without any preconditions.

Keeping in mind the consent given in principle by the Government of India to meet the President of Pakistan as well as the present position of Pakistan, there is, in our opinion, a considerable extent of agreement of the sides and, thus, suitable conditions for establishment of direct contacts between the leaders of India and Pakistan.

If you, Mr. Prime Minister, share our point of view there should be, possibly, an exchange of opinion on some questions of organization of meeting of the Heads of the Government of India and Pakistan, and in particular, on the question of the date of such meeting. On our part, we feel, that the end of December 1965, or January 1966 could be treated as the possible date of the meeting in Tashkent.

We also think that in case of your positive response to these considerations and thus to the understanding, reached in this connection, it would be expedient to publish in the nearest future an official announcement on the forthcoming meeting. As we think, that would be of positive effect.

It goes without saying that the final decision on the meeting is with the Indian and Pakistani sides. The Soviet Government found it possible to express these considerations frankly to you, using the right to be a friend of India and proceeding from the conviction that direct contact between the leaders of India and Pakistan can be a good beginning for the settlement of the disputable questions between both the countries and this, undoubtedly, would promote the normalization of relations between India and Pakistan.
It would be highly appreciated in Moscow, if you, Mr. Prime Minister, let us know about your opinion on these considerations. I do not think that I should mention the fact that friendly and frank exchange of opinion between our Governments is highly appreciated in Moscow and the opinion which you may find possible to express will be met with due attention.

Respectfully yours,

Kosygin

2237. Letter from Prime Minister Lal Bqahadur Shastri to the Soviet Premier Alex Kosygin.

New Delhi, December 3, 1965.

My dear Mr. Chairman,

1. I thank you for your message of November 27, 1965, which was handed to me by His Excellency I.A. Benediktov.

2. We have given careful consideration to the contents of your communication and particularly to the considerations expressed on behalf of the Soviet Government. We take note of your assessment that Pakistan’s attitude towards the question of peaceful settlement of the armed conflict between India and Pakistan has lately changed for the better. We have also from your letter noted with satisfaction Mr. Bhutto’s statement that Pakistan wishes to approach the questions concerning relations with India with open mind and without bitterness and prejudice.

3. As you are aware, I have publicly stated in Parliament and elsewhere and I have also taken the opportunity of informing you through diplomatic channels, that it is our sincere wish to live with Pakistan as peaceful neighbours. We are prepared to discuss the totality of relations between India and Pakistan on an enduring basis. If, as would appear from your letter, Pakistan shows the same desire, I feel that the talks in Tashkent might be worthwhile.
4. I note that Pakistan is not laying down any conditions to the talks. Nor are we. I have said that certain basic positions of ours in regard to Kashmir and the present armed conflict are well known and in any discussions it will not be possible for us to deviate from such positions. The reaffirmation of our views is not to lay down preconditions but merely to make our position clear. Having said this, however, I would add that at the summit meeting it would be open to the two sides to suggest any matters in the context of the totality of the relations between India and Pakistan. Naturally, as you have pointed out to the Minister for External Affairs of Pakistan, who seems to have agreed, in the course of the meeting the two sides will engage themselves in a discussion only of issues agreeable to both. The emphasis on the talks should be on seeking ways and means for establishing amicable relations between India and Pakistan.

5. I am agreeable to meeting President Ayub and I suggest that the meeting be convened in the first week of January.

6. I agree with you, Mr. Chairman, that there should be an early announcement of the forthcoming meeting. I feel that the announcement should be very brief and merely say that the President Ayub and myself have in response to you proposal, agreed to meet in Tashkent on the specified dates to discuss the question of establishing peaceful and good neighbourly relations between India and Pakistan. I am merely suggesting this phraseology for your consideration. Any other general form of words which gives expression to the same idea will be acceptable to me.

7. before I conclude, Mr. Chairman, permit me to say how much I appreciate your efforts and your offer of good offices for the Tashkent meeting between President Ayub and myself.

With my highest esteem and regards,

Yours sincerely,

Sd/- Lal Bahadur
First of all, I want to convey to you, Chairman Kosygin, the feelings of sincere appreciation with which my people, my Government and I hailed your bold initiative which has brought me and President Ayub Khan of Pakistan together in this historic Asian city. It is with great pleasure that I express on my behalf and on behalf of my delegation our gratitude for the hospitality which has been lavished upon us and the care and attention which has been bestowed upon us. The great welcome, which the people of Tashkent gave us, was indeed very moving.

Our response to your invitation for a meeting in Tashkent was immediate and positive. The objective of peace, which inspired you, is indeed a noble one. Peace is vital for both India and Pakistan and indeed for the world as a whole. It should be our endeavour to try to open a new chapter in Indo-Pakistan relationship. I would not like to go into past history. I feel, and I am sure President Ayub Khan also feels, that the conflict which took place between our two countries was most unfortunate. Our objective at this meeting should be not recrimination over the past, but a new look towards the future.

I know that there are many unresolved differences between our two countries. Even between countries with the best of relationship, there are differences and even disputes. The question, which we have both to face, is whether we should think of force as a method of solving them, or whether we should decide and declare that force will never be used. If other countries, even those with vast resources and much deeper differences, can avoid an armed conflict and live together on the basis of peaceful coexistence, should not countries like India and Pakistan, whose main problem is the economic betterment of their people, give up the idea of solving any problems by recourse to arms?

The only justification for the use of force in international relations is to repel aggression. Our assurance to each other not to use force would mean, therefore, that each agrees to respect the territorial integrity of the other.

We have always said, and I say it today also, that we unreservedly accept Pakistan’s sovereignty and territorial integrity. Equally, we have to preserve our own territorial integrity and sovereignty. Respect for each other’s sovereignty is essential for peace and good relations.

Once this has been clearly accepted, the whole character of Indo-Pakistan relationship could be transformed to the benefit of the people of both countries. Let me say quite clearly and very sincerely that we wish Pakistan progress and prosperity. We have ourselves been striving to better the lives of our people.
We are convinced that prosperity would come sooner to the sub-continent if there was better relationship between India and Pakistan.

The foundation of such relationship should be, as I have said, the acceptance of the policy of peaceful co-existence. In pursuance of this, action will have to be taken on several fronts. For instance, the atmosphere of cold war has to be removed. If through propaganda, in the press or by radio, a feeling of animosity or distrust is generated and sustained between the two countries, whatever we, as heads of the two Governments, might say, there will always exist the danger of a conflict.

Our aim should be to improve the totality of the relationship between the two countries. Our trade has been shrinking. It should grow instead. Many rivers flow between India and Pakistan. Instead of being a source of controversy, they could, through cooperative endeavours, enrich both our countries. There are many other areas of economic co-operation which, given goodwill and understanding, can be developed to our mutual advantage.

In saying all this, I am not trying to suggest that we could, or should, shut our eyes to the many points of differences that exist between the two countries. I do not want to enumerate them. What I do say, however, is that all these problems must be resolved through talks and negotiations and not by resort to force. An armed conflict creates more problems than it solves. It is an impediment to understanding and agreement. On the other hand, in an atmosphere of peace, we can make real progress towards solving differences between us.

It would be a notable achievement if at this meeting, which Chairman Kosygin has convened, an agreement could emerge for renouncing the use of force for settling our differences. This should pave the way for the kind of good neighbourly relations which both countries need and would also make the solution of many of our problems much easier. We could and should, of course, discuss other matters as well, but even if we differ on some of them and cannot see our way to an immediate agreement, we should still not forsake the path of peace.

A heavy responsibility lies on our shoulders. The sub-continent has a population of 600 million – one-fifth of the human race. If India and Pakistan have to progress and prosper, they must learn to live in peace. If there is constant conflict and hostility, our peoples would suffer even greater hardships. Instead of fighting each other, let us start fighting poverty, disease and ignorance. The problems, the hopes and the aspirations of the common people of both the countries are the same. They want not conflict and war, but peace and progress. They need not arms and ammunition, but food, clothing and shelter. If we are to fulfil this obligation to our peoples, we should, in the meeting try to achieve something specific and positive.
This is a momentous meeting. The eyes of the world are upon us. Let it not be said that the President of Pakistan and the Prime Minister of India met and failed to reach an agreement. Let us show by our actions that we are capable of seeing our own problems in the wider context of world events.

Mr. Chairman,

Mr. Prime Minister and Distinguished Delegates:

My delegation and I were deeply moved by the overwhelming warmth and spontaneity of the reception accorded to us by the people of this beautiful and historic capital of the Republic of Uzbekistan. We share with the people of this region many cultural traditions and many memories of a rich past. It is significant that this place should have been chosen for this historic Conference in which we hope to discover a fresh direction for our future -- a future based on understanding, goodwill and co-operation. Tashkent recalls the past as it beckons the future.

Mr. Chairman, we are also extremely grateful to the Soviet Government and to you personally for the vision and statesmanship which you have shown in convening this meeting and for making such excellent arrangements for it. We are all fully conscious of the demands on your time and the burden of your enormous responsibilities. I wish to assure you that the importance of your great gesture of peace is not lost on us, as indeed, it is not lost on the world.

The eyes of the world are on Tashkent. History has offered both India and Pakistan a great opportunity to resolve their dispute on a peaceful, just and honourable basis. We have come here determined to use this opportunity in a positive and constructive manner.

We have come in a spirit of co-operation. Our aim is to compose our differences with India, not to perpetuate them. We are not here to indulge in polemics. We want to eliminate tensions and to promote a sense of confidence and security among the peoples of the two countries. I have no doubt that the distinguished Prime Minister of India and his distinguished colleagues are inspired by similar sentiments.
The prosperity of 600 million people of India and Pakistan depends on peace. Both of us have suffered under long and dark periods of foreign domination. It is after centuries that we have regained our freedom. We must live in peace to be able to devote all our energy and resources to the liquidation of the grim heritage of colonialism and to open avenues of happiness and progress for our people. For us peace is vital – it is indispensable.

But wishing peace is not enough to establish peace. One has to work for it. And one way is to face the problems which endanger peace. We have learnt that we can ignore them at our peril. Nor can nations be content with a simulation of peace while the undercurrents of tension still remain. A semblance of peace is no substitute for real peace.

It is for us to face the problem and to create conditions which will provide a firm and lasting basis for peace between our two countries. In this context I recently made a sincere offer in the General Assembly of the United Nations to enter into a no-war pact with India once the basic problem confronting us was resolved according to the principles already accepted by both of us. A No-war-Agreement between nations can work only if it is adopted after taking concrete steps for resolving the disputes which divide them. And disputes can be resolved only in a spirit of conciliation.

The problems with which India and Pakistan are faced are complex no doubt. But it is not beyond the leadership in the two countries to solve them peacefully and honourably. After all we were able to reach an agreement on the Indus Basin Waters. That problem was no less complex or explosive. More recently we agreed to submit our dispute in the Rann of Kutch to an Arbitration Tribunal. Earlier, we had succeeded in demarcating our borders and settling many controversial points amicably. Why should we now feel unable to face up to the basic problem which continues to cause tension and conflict between us?

Both of us have limited resources and we need all that we have, and much more, to raise our people from their present level of existence. Neither of us can afford war nor can we divert our resources to preparations for war. This is the one lesson which we should have learnt from our recent experience. What we must provide to our people, and what they demand, are instruments of life, not instruments of death.

Let this conference become a harbinger of peace and let us issue from here a message of hope for our people. There is no problem between us which cannot be solved peacefully and honourably. We should address ourselves to them in all earnestness. This is how we must begin if peace is what we seek remembering always that no one nation can lay down the terms of peace. The terms of peace are equality and justice. These are the terms which nations must learn to respect and obey.
I wish to assure you, Mr. Chairman, and also the distinguished Prime Minister of India that we will give you our fullest co-operation in making this Conference a Conference of peace in its truest sense.

Before I conclude, I must thank you once again for your hospitality and for the great interest you have shown in bringing India and Pakistan together. Thank you.

2240. Speech by A.N. Kosygin, Chairman of the Council of Ministers of the USSR at the opening Session of the Taskkent Conference.

Tashkent, January 4, 1966.

Esteemed Mr. President,

Esteemed Mr. Prime Minister,

We are happy to welcome here in the capital of the Uzbek Soviet Socialist Republic, the city of Tashkent, Mr. Lal Bahadur Shastri and Mr. Mohammed Ayub Khan, prominent statesmen of two great Asian countries - India and Pakistan, the peoples of which enjoy the sincere respect and friendship of the peoples of the Soviet Union.

It is with profound satisfaction that the Soviet Government received the consent of the President of Pakistan and the Prime Minister of India to meet in Tashkent in order to establish direct contact with a view to improving relations and eliminating the conflict between India and Pakistan.

In proposing this meeting, the Government of the Soviet Union was guided solely by feelings of friendship towards the peoples of Pakistan and India, by a desire to help them to find a way to peace and prevent sacrifices and hardships brought by the disasters of war. The Soviet Union as a country that was fated to undergo exceptionally hard ordeals in previous wars, highly values peace and cherishes its ideals.

India and Pakistan are our southern neighbours. We have always advocated not only stronger friendly relations between the Soviet Union and India and Pakistan but a reign of peace and friendship between these countries themselves. The history of the peoples of India and Pakistan has known many instances when they fought shoulder to shoulder in the heroic struggle against foreign domination. Victory over colonialism was achieved by their joint effort, and common sacrifices were sustained for this cause. And today, as in the past, it is only the enemies of Pakistan and India that could be interested in a clash between them.

What brings the Indian and Pakistani people close together is not only a thing of the past. The tasks confronting them today coincide in many respects. The peoples of both countries are striving to solve major economic problems which are vital for the well-being of their populations and future progress. We understand these strivings. We would like to see Pakistan and India as States that live in friendship, that solve all questions arising between them peacefully, successfully advancing along the path of their national development. The Indian and the Pakistani peoples possess great potentialities. Their constructive enterprise, unfolding of their creative capabilities, the development of the natural wealth of these countries provide conditions for their rapid economic progress.

The Soviet people and the Soviet Government welcomed the consent of the Governments of Pakistan and India to ceasefire. Progressive people in all countries have received with satisfaction the ensuing statements of the statesmen of India and Pakistan concerning their desire to live in peace and friendship.

We regard this meeting in Tashkent as one which could mark a turning point in the relations between India and Pakistan. We believe that the leaders of both States have arrived in Tashkent full of desire to strive for this aim. Naturally, it may prove difficult to find the solution of all existing problems in the course of one meeting. However, it is important to locate the ways leading to their settlement, to create an atmosphere of trust and mutual understanding and at the same time to resolve those questions which today stand in the way of the normalization of relations.

This would be an important step forward, and together with all people of goodwill, we hope that President Ayub Khan and Prime Minister Shastri will bend their efforts to take this step. Life confirms that when governments in a composed and objective manner consider disputed questions, taking into regard their mutual interests, not only are conflicts eliminated but the sources of their origin are to a considerable extent removed. We believe that the public opinion of both countries and representatives of the Press, guided by peace-loving motives, would contribute towards that end.

The future of Indo-Pakistani relations rests with India and Pakistan, with their readiness to demonstrate goodwill and mutual understanding and persistence in achieving positive results. On its part, the Government of the Soviet Union will in every way promote the realization of these noble aims. We are ready to render good offices for the successful work of this meeting.

President Ayub Khan and Prime Minister Shastri will pursue their negotiations on the land of Soviet Uzbekistan which has scored great successes in the fraternal family of the peoples of the Soviet Union. The peoples of our country, and in particular of the Central Asian Republics, have long-standing close trade and cultural ties with the peoples living in Pakistan and India.

It can be said that normalization of relations between these two countries, which the coming negotiations must serve, will be conducive to still greater development of friendly ties of the Soviet Union with Pakistan and India and will lead to the further expansion of economic and cultural co-operation aimed at the strengthening of their national independence and the rise in the welfare of their peoples.

All those, for whom peace is dear, are following with great attention and hope this meeting between the President of Pakistan and the Prime Minister of India. They believe in the wise statesmanship of the leaders of Pakistan and India, they wish success to the Tashkent meeting, and peace and well-being to the Indian and Pakistani peoples. They wait for good news from Tashkent, they hope that this meeting will be fruitful and will consolidate the conviction of all progressive peoples that peace between states can be secured, and that even in the present difficult conditions ways for settling conflicts can be found.

In conclusion, may I wish you, our distinguished guests, successful work in the interests of the people of your countries, to the benefit of universal peace. We express hope that the new year of 1966 will be a year of the establishment of good neighbourly relations between India and Pakistan.

The Prime Minister of India and the President of Pakistan have agreed that the sides will continue meetings both at the highest and at other levels on matters of direct concern to both countries. Both sides have recognized the need to set up joint Indian - Pakistani bodies which will report to their Governments in order to decide what further steps should be taken.

The Prime Minister of India and the President of Pakistan record their feelings of deep appreciation and gratitude to the leaders of the Soviet Union, the Soviet Government and personally to the Chairman of the Council of Ministers of the U.S.S.R. for their constructive, friendly and noble part in bringing about the present meeting which has resulted in mutually satisfactory results. 2242. Press Conference of Prime Minister Lal Bahadur Shastri with the Soviet journalists.

Tashkent, January 10, 1966.

[Immediately after the signing of the Tashkent Declaration the Indian Prime Minister Lal Bahadur Shastri replied to the questions of Soviet Press correspondents.]

Question: Esteemed Mr. Prime Minister, what are in your opinion the most important results of the just concluded Tashkent meeting?

Answer: First of all I wish to note that here in Tashkent, we received with the President of Pakistan a very important opportunity to discuss frankly our disputed problems. The Tashkent Declaration shows that we have achieved very tangible results. The most important one of them is that a concrete step has been taken towards the restoration of genuinely peaceful relations between India and Pakistan.

Second, not less important result of the Tashkent talks is that their outcome undoubtedly will promote the strengthening of the cause of peace in Asia and throughout the world. I am convinced that the peoples of India and Pakistan, at one with the other peoples of the world, will meet with satisfaction the results of the Tashkent Meeting.

Q: Esteemed Mr. Premier, what specific steps is your government going to take to fulfil the Tashkent Declaration?

A: I imagine that appropriate Ministers of India and Pakistan will begin to work in the near future to outline specific steps for the fulfillment of the Declaration. It seems to me that commissions may also be set up at various levels which will look after the implementation of the Declaration.
Q: Mr. Prime Minister, to what extent did the conditions in Tashkent facilitate a success of your talks with the President of Pakistan?

Q: To a great extent! First of all, I wish to note the great and noble role played in the holding of the talks, due to his good services, by the Soviet Prime Minister Mr. Alexei Kosygin, and we are very thankful to him for this.

The second thing that also helped us, was that both the welcome on the day of our arrival and the attitude of the people of Tashkent to what we were doing here, were also an important element in our successful work. I think that this is a reflection of the goodwill of the Soviet people who are striving for peace.

Q: Mr. Prime Minister, what would you like to convey to the people of the Soviet Union?

A: Our good relations with the Soviet Union are commonly known. We wish to strengthen them, but I intend to express my feelings more fully tomorrow when we fly away from the wonderful city of Tashkent.

2243. Briefing by the Pakistani Foreign Secretary acting as the Official Spokesman of the Pakistan Delegation at Tashkent on the outcome of the Tashkent Conference.

Tashkent, January 10, 1966.

A spokesman of the Pakistan Foreign office tonight said that the Tashkent Declaration was message of goodwill and cheer for the people of Pakistan, India and Jammu and Kashmir that it opened the way for the settlement of the dispute of Jammu and Kashmir.

Addressing a Press conference after the formal signing of the Declaration, the spokesman said that the Declaration provided for the withdrawal of forces by a certain date. Following this withdrawal, the Security Council resolution, which called for a political settlement of this dispute, would reassert itself.

Secondly, it provided for direct negotiations between the two countries. Thirdly, it ensured the continued good offices of the Soviet Union for bringing about peace between Pakistan and India.
The spokesman did not rule out the possibility of another Tashkent conference or a similar conference in Pakistan in furtherance of the objectives laid down in the Tashkent Declaration.

Explaining the term “Armed Personnel” the spokesman said that it meant those people who bore arms and were within the control of the respective armies of the two countries. This was the meaning contained in the Security Council resolution, as drafted, he added.

He expressed gratitude to the Soviet leaders for taking the initiative in opening the dialogue between Pakistan and India. Their task had been very difficult, he said, and Premier Kosygin and Foreign Minister Gromyko had taken great pains.

Their role amounted to virtual mediation though this role had been confined to behind-the-scene activity in general. It was a matter of gratification that the initiative of the Soviet leaders had succeeded.

Characterizing the Tashkent Declaration as a declaration of intent, he said that this declaration had covered a lot of ground, though from Pakistan’s viewpoint it had not gone far enough.

Nobody, however, had expected that the Kashmir issue would be settled during the course of one conference. But they did expect that some self-executing procedure that might result in the settlement of the Kashmir dispute would be created. Obviously, he said, this dispute had to be solved if peace was to be established in the Pakistan-India sub-continent. This however, did not mean that the Tashkent Declaration was not a great achievement.

He said that they looked upon the Declaration as a victory for commonsense and not victory for either Pakistan or India. Its positive points were creation of a machinery for setting all disputes.

Pakistan had wanted a self-executing machinery, failing which a resort to conciliation, mediation or arbitration, but they, all the same, hoped that this machinery would achieve solution of all disputes including that of Jammu and Kashmir. There was also the provision for implementation of all existing agreements, withdrawal of forces and repatriation of prisoners. This would mark the end of the chapter of war. The problems of evictions and refugees’ influx had been referred to in the context of evictions of Muslims and their pushing into East Pakistan from the areas of India around it and the two lakh refugees from Kashmir.

Questioned about the term “all agreements”, he said that it included Berubari and other similar agreements entered into by Pakistan and India from time to time. About the Conference itself, he observed that mostly it had been conducted by the Soviet leaders, who had adopted an extremely sensible procedure for the purpose.

Concluding, he said in reply to a question that if the Tashkent Declaration contributed towards the establishment of peace between Pakistan and India, it would be a major factor in the matter of peace in our region.

2244. Statement by Indian Foreign Secretary C. S. Jha acting as the Official Spokesman of the Indian Delegation at the Tashkent Conference.
Tashkent, January 10, 1966.
The Tashkent Declaration signed by the President of Pakistan and the Prime Minister of India this afternoon, and witnessed by the Chairman of the Council of Ministers of the U.S.S.R., marks a turning point in the relations between India and Pakistan.

2. The two countries were poised at the cross-roads of history. There lay before them, on the one hand, the path of peace, good neighbourly relations and mutual cooperation made imperative by the common ties of history and the facts of geography and, on the other, the road to conflict and bitterness and misery to millions of people. In the Tashkent Declaration, India and Pakistan have chosen to turn away from mutual conflict and have resolved to base their relations on peace, friendship and good neighbourliness.

3. There is renunciation of the use of force and disputes are to be settled through peaceful means. These obligations of both countries as members of the United Nations have been reaffirmed in clear terms. Thus, the objective of the Tashkent meeting between the Prime Minister of India and the President of Pakistan has been fulfilled.

4. With the renunciation of force, both sides agree to the withdrawal of all armed personnel to the pre-5th August, 1965 positions in six weeks time and to observe cease-fire terms on the cease-fire line. Both sides have agreed to respect the cease-fire terms. This will ensure peace and tranquility all along the cease-fire line. Thus the dangerous tensions resulting from cease-fire violations will be eliminated, and the forces of peace will be strengthened between the two countries. Both countries will be able to conserve their resources for peaceful economic development. The security of both countries will be strengthened by the assurance of peace flowing from the Declaration.
5. The principle of non-interference in each other’s internal affairs, scrupulously observed by both sides, will substantially contribute to the elimination of misunderstandings and tensions between the two countries.

6. The discouragement of hostile propaganda and encouragement of propaganda which promotes the development of friendly relations, will be a positive factor for the promotion of good neighbourly relations. It is hoped that propaganda, often of a vicious kind, which has caused mutual resentment and marred relations between the two countries, will be a thing of the past.

7. The significance of the Tashkent Declaration is not that it resolves all outstanding problems between India and Pakistan, but that despite the existence of differences, the two countries have pledged to live together in peace as good neighbours. It is in this spirit that the subject of Kashmir was discussed. The two Heads of Government restated the respective positions of India and Pakistan on this matter.

8. The two High Commissioners are to return to their respective posts and normal functioning of the diplomatic missions of both countries will be restored in accordance with the Vienna Convention on diplomatic immunities. These steps will help normalize relations and the missions in the two countries can actively pursue the fulfillment of the objectives and agreements embodied in the Declaration.

9. Further meetings contemplated between the two Heads of Government in the Declaration will, no doubt, result in ever-increasing mutual cooperation to the enduring benefit of the peoples of both countries.

10. A meeting of the leaders of the two Asian countries on Asian soil in the Soviet Union has great significance. Premier Kosygin’s witnessing the Declaration gives it added weight and importance. While the declaration is a tribute to the wisdom and statesmanship of the Prime Minister of India and the President of Pakistan, much of the credit for the Declaration must go to the Chairman of the Council of Ministers of the U.S.S.R. and his colleagues.

We are greatly beholden to him and offer him our sincere thanks and gratitude for his efforts and for the warm and moving welcome and generous hospitality extended to us in Tashkent.

11. India and Pakistan have now the opportunity to live in peace and friendly cooperation. The Tashkent Declaration, sincerely observed and implemented, is a harbinger of peace and happiness and progress of the 600 million people of the Indo-Pakistan sub-continent.

Broadcast by the Pakistan President Mohammad Ayub Khan to the people of Pakistan.

Islamabad, January 14, 1966.

My dear countrymen:

On the fourth of this month I went to Tashkent to meet the Indian Prime Minister. I must explain to you the background of this historic meeting.

When our two armies clashed in Azad Kashmir and the situation took a serious turn, the Soviet Prime Minister invited the leaders of the two countries to Tashkent to provide us opportunity to settle our differences in a peaceful and an honourable manner. We received the Soviet invitation on September 4. Two days later India launched an attack on our sacred territory. What followed is known to all of you. The entire nation rose like one man and came through this ordeal in a gloriously successful manner. The heroic deeds of our Armed Forces as well as the civilian population will for ever be cherished in our history.

We have always held the view that countries must settle their differences on the basis of peace and justice. We want peace for the whole world and, as a member of the United Nations we have accepted the obligation to settle differences not by force but in a peaceful manner and through mutual understanding.

As for our differences with India, we have always made it clear that the basic cause of this conflict was the dispute about Jammu and Kashmir and there is a Security Council resolution on this issue. According to this historic resolution the people of Jammu and Kashmir have the right to decide whether they want to accede to Pakistan or to India. India is a party to this agreement and has pledged to the United Nations that it would give to the people of the State their right to freely choose their own future.

For the last 18 years, we have been constantly endeavouring to persuade India to fulfil its commitment. Unfortunately, India did nothing to honour it with the result that the people of Jammu and Kashmir rose in an open revolt. When the Indian Forces launched repeated attacks on the Azad Kashmir territory, the Pakistan Army had no option but to take action in support of the people of Jammu and Kashmir. The resulting armed conflict between the two countries amply demonstrated to the world that there could be no peace between India and Pakistan unless the Kashmir dispute was settled. The Security Council resolution of September 20, provided for a cease fire and the withdrawal of Armed Forces. It also provided that after the withdrawal of forces the Security Council would take steps to resolve the basic issue of Jammu and Kashmir. The resolution expressed the hope that till the completion of the withdrawal, the two countries should try to settle the dispute between themselves.
My meeting with late Mr. Lal Bahadur Shastri in Tashkent was a step in this direction. The Government of the USSR and their Prime Minister made an all-out effort for the success of these talks. We were received with great enthusiasm by the Russian people and their leaders, who observed impartiality throughout these negotiations. We are grateful to them for all this.

The Indian Prime Minister wanted us to sign a no war pact, but we made it clear to him that we would never be a signatory to such a pact unless the Jammu and Kashmir dispute was settled honourably and equitably. We, however, offered to reaffirm our obligation under the UN Charter. This obligation means that nations will not resort to force unless they have explored all avenues of peaceful settlement.

We also impressed upon the Indian Prime Minister that the future of the people of the two countries depended on peace in the sub-continent and that this peace could not be lasting unless the Kashmir dispute was amicably settled. If this dispute was not settled, both the countries would continue with war-like preparations and their resources, instead of being dedicated to the welfare of their people, would be diverted to the purposes of war.

Personally, I had a feeling that the Indian Prime Minister was agreeable to what I said but he wanted that we should first normalize our relations and then grapple with the basic issue. We explained our respective points of views to each other but unfortunately we reached no conclusions. As for Pakistan we stuck to our belief that the basic cause was the dispute concerning Jammu and Kashmir and unless this was settled there could be no peace between India and Pakistan. Pakistan was not prepared to consider Jammu and Kashmir as part of India or that it was their internal affair. The people of Jammu and Kashmir had a right to decide their own future and we will continue to support their inalienable right.

I would invite you to consider the various provisions of the Tashkent declaration against this background. The declaration has in no way detracted from or damaged our national viewpoint of Kashmir. Their right to choose their future remains inviolate.

I hope that this declaration will open new avenues for the settlement of the Kashmir issue. First we will take up this matter with the Indian representatives and then, after the withdrawal of Forces, the Security Council also will be in a position to deal with it.

Moreover, the interest shown by the Soviet Government in the settlement of the dispute will also facilitate the task.

I appeal to you to show the same sense of purpose and discipline in achieving peace as you did in achieving victory during the last war. The sacrifices made during that period are indelibly marked on our hearts and I assure you that no sacrifice will go in vain. Whatever steps your Government has taken or is taking they are for your good. We have been given assurances that sincere efforts will be made to settle the Indo-Pakistan dispute in a just and equitable manner. It is, therefore, necessary that we should take the fullest advantage of this effort.
It can only be translated into motion if we on our part implement the Tashkent declaration. I am sure, the nation will help the Government make a success of this effort for peace. If God forbid, for some reason or other, this effort does not bear fruit, it will not mean that we will ever be oblivious of our national interests or fail to safeguard the country’s defence. In any case, we have to build up our defence effort.

The Tashkent declaration has been hailed in many parts of the country but there are those as well who are not satisfied with it, I am fully aware of their misgivings and honour the sentiments which give rise to them. It is obvious that if the Kashmir dispute had been honourably settled at the Tashkent meeting you would have welcomed it, but complicated issues are not easy to solve and the Government has to adopt various means to solve it, according to circumstances.

There may be some amongst us who will take advantage of your feelings and will try to mislead you. They are not more patriotic perhaps than you and me and are, in fact, after their own selfish gains. You should be aware of their machinations. You should remain firm in your faith and steadfast in your discipline.
The ordeal is not yet over. Let us bow our heads to the Almighty and pray for the strengthening of our will and determination.

Pakistan paindabad.

2246. Press Note issued by the Pakistan Information Department carrying the Statement by Pakistan Foreign Minister Zulfikar Ali Bhutto on the Tashkent Declaration saying that the “Declaration not an end in itself”.

Handout No. 146K

I have learnt with deep concern and anguish the misgivings caused by the Tashkent Declaration. The President’s address to the Nation yesterday, he specifically assured the people of Pakistan that we will continue to support the inalienable right of the people of Jammu and Kashmir to decide their future.

Referring to the feeling among certain sections of the people, the President said: “I am fully aware of their misgivings and honour the sentiments which give rise to them.”

In considering the Declaration of Tashkent, it is well to remember that in the brief history of their existence as independent, Sovereign States, Pakistan and India have many a time attempted to settle disputes through negotiations. The Liaquat - Nehru Pact was one such agreement. It may also be recalled that a settlement of the Jammu and Kashmir dispute itself is the subject of an agreement between the two countries as embodied in the two Resolutions of the United Nations Council on India and Pakistan dated 13th August, 1948 and 5th January 1949. This agreement relates to the method of a free and impartial plebiscite under the aegis of the United Nations to enable the people of the State to decide the future affiliation and allegiance of their homeland. If, despite an international agreement, freely negotiated and mutually accepted, relations between the two countries failed to improve, and indeed, never ceased to deteriorate, it is not because of their incapacity to settle the dispute but because of India’s failure to implement honourably the agreement reached freely and in good faith.

The fundamental importance of resolving this dispute was stressed by the President in his opening statement at Tashkent on the 4th of January when he declared that unless we address ourselves to the resolution of the cause of conflict between India and Pakistan we would only be contending with the semblance of peace and not its substance.

Peace and justice are inseparable in the creed of Islam. Peace without honour is indeed inconceivable and repugnant to the tenets of our ideology. History is not deficient in instances where mere professions of peace have been overtaken by events resulting from the continuance of injustice and inequity. Words are no substitute for intents. If, in reality, injustice should persist, then peaceful declarations by themselves would not prevent tension or avert conflict.
The Tashkent Declaration has to be judged in its totality and against the historic background of our struggle for justice in Jammu and Kashmir. It is to be tested with regard to intent which determines the outcome of all accords. The realities of the situation invariably pierce through all perverse, biased and prejudiced interpretations of the words of any document. In the implementation of the Tashkent Declaration, its spirit as well as its specific provisions demand progress towards a settlement of all disputes particularly the basic dispute over Jammu and Kashmir.

Peace is not made of words but of actions. The specter of war and conflict can vanish only when a lasting peace is achieved by allowing the people of Jammu and Kashmir their right to freely determine their future. The struggle of the people of Jammu and Kashmir is based on the great movement for emancipation, equality and progress which has marked the history of this century. The great State on the soil of which the conference took place, the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics, came into being as a result of a mighty historic movement based on the principles of equality of man and self-determination of peoples. Historically and ideologically, the commitments of the Soviet Union to these ideals are irrevocable. The Soviet Union was itself conceived with struggle against the forces of oppression. The people of the Soviet Union have waged a heroic and ceaseless struggle against domination and exploitation. They have written a glorious chapter in the annals of human history by their resolute defence against aggression and by their successful war against human bondage.

It would be a fitting tribute to the Soviet Union if its initiative were to result in a significant contribution to the realization of the legitimate aspirations of the people of Jammu and Kashmir who have waged such a valiant struggle for their liberty. The Soviet leaders were no doubt mindful of their own rich heritage as fighters for freedom and liberty when they agreed at Tashkent that a solution of the Jammu and Kashmir dispute must be found.

Pakistan was itself founded on the principle of self-determination. The day must come when the people of Jammu and Kashmir will be enabled to decide their fate and their future in freedom and without coercion. The struggle in Jammu and Kashmir is between self-determination and alien domination, between freedom and oppression. What is at issue is not any territorial claim of Pakistan against the claim of India or the conflicting interpretations of an agreement but the right of the people of Jammu and Kashmir to decide their own future. Pakistan cannot be privy to any action which militates against this concept and commitment.

The U.N. Charter which represents the collective resolve of the world community to perpetuate peace, in Article 51 recognises the ultimate right of a nation to wage its struggle for freedom. It is precisely in this context that in the Tashkent Declaration we have reaffirmed our obligations under the Charter. The fact that we were unable to immediately arrive at a settlement at Tashkent does not detract one iota from our resolve to seek a just settlement under this very Declaration or even outside its framework.

The Tashkent Declaration is not an end in itself and cannot by itself represent a turning point in our relations with India. The slate can only be sponged clean when the people of Jammu and Kashmir have exercised their inherent right of self-determination and there can be no doubt or ambiguity about it. The Tashkent Declaration resumed the dialogue between India and Pakistan. But no amount of platitudes or polemics can substitute or detract from the imperative need for a permanent settlement of the tragic dispute over Jammu and Kashmir.

In the ultimate analysis it is the determination of the people of Pakistan and their willingness to make sacrifices that will prevail over all forces pitted against this nation in its resolve to uphold justice and honour.

The blood of our martyrs is dedicated to the supreme pursuit of a peace based on justice and not a purchased peace. Their sacrifices shall not be in vain, nor shall we fail to be worthy of those who died for us.

For 18 years the Jammu and Kashmir dispute has waxed and waned until only a few years ago it virtually lay frozen in the U.N. It is no more now a dead issue. Not only has the dispute been reactivated but because of the people of Jammu and Kashmir has been resurrected and the world community as a whole made aware of the imperative need for restoration of their rights. The Great Powers have recognized the far-reaching implications of the dispute. Is it not a tribute to the struggle of Pakistan that as never before in the history of Islam, the solidarity of the Millat was manifested so clearly from the shores of the Maghreb to the water of South East Asia – the Arabs, the Iranians, the Turks and the Indonesians have all demonstrated their unanimous support of Pakistan in its just struggle against the continued denial to the people of Jammu and Kashmir of their inalienable right of self-determination? The Afro-Asian and Latin American communities have also demonstrated their solidarity with us and made it quite clear that the people of Jammu and Kashmir cannot be treated as an exception to the rule of emancipation and freedom which constitutes the very essence of our contemporary political movement.

This then is the basic truth and it can never be eclipsed no matter how grave the vicissitudes or how far-reaching the challenge and the crisis.

New Delhi, 22 January 1966

INTRODUCTION

This Agreement is in four parts:

Part I Procedure concerning the immediate disengagement of troops and reduction of tension;

Part II Procedure concerning the withdrawal of troops from the occupied areas;

Part III Procedure concerning reduction of tension in the Eastern Sector;

Part IV General Points.

PART I

Disengagement of Troops and Reduction of Tension

PHASE 1

Both forces will withdraw 1,000 yards from the Line of Actual Control in sectors as specified below:

(a) RAJASTHAN/SIND
(b) AMRITSAR/LAHORE
(c) JAMMU/SIALKOT
(d) AKHNUR/CHHAMB (from River CHENAB NW 8061 To MAWA WALI KHAD NW 7770)

In all other sectors including sectors divided by the 1949 Cease Fire Line, troops will continue to hold their respective picquets as by so doing they will be automatically separated from each other. The only exception to this will be where, in hilly terrain, opposing forces are at present considered to be too close to each other, each side will withdraw to a distance to be mutually agreed upon by the local commanders not below the rank of Brigadier.

NOTE: In the Amritsar-Lahore sector, this 1000 yards withdrawal will be modified so that Pakistani troops who are actually on the West bank of the BRB Canal and Indian troops who are on the East bank of the BRB Canal facing each other will withdraw all armed personnel off the embankment to a distance of 200 yards on each side. Unarmed personnel may, however, live, move and work in this area.
The same principle will apply in Sulaimanki-Fazilka Sector, Hussainiwala Sector and Khem Karan Sector. After the withdrawal in this phase no new defences of any kind will be prepared in occupied territory.

There will be no movement of armed military, para-military or police personnel either armed or unarmed within the demilitarised zone and no civilian personnel will be permitted within it by either side.

The period for completion of this phase will be five days.

PHASE II

In this phase both sides will remove and nullify all defences which will include the:

(a) lifting of mines; and

(b) dismantling of all other defence works, less permanent defence structures constructed of steel and cement.

The period for completing this phase will be twenty-one days which will commence immediately after the five-day period mentioned in para 5.

Working parties for this purpose will be found by unarmed military personnel in uniform. No civilian or civil labour will be used for these tasks.

While every effort will be made to dismantle all defence works within the specified period, where owing to weather and other conditions it is not possible to complete this, the uncleared area so left will be clearly marked and a sketch of these given to the other side.

There will be no firing of weapons or use of explosives within 10,000 meters of the Line of Actual Control. Where explosives have to be used to dismantle defence works, this will only be done under supervision as specified later and after due intimation to the other side.

The present Agreement affecting restriction on flights of aircraft will continue to apply.

To ensure that the action agreed to in PART I above is being implemented in letter and in spirit, the good offices of UNMOGIP and UNIPOM will be utilised. In the event of a disagreement, their decision will be final and binding on both sides.

PART II

WITHDRAWAL OF TROOPS FROM OCCUPIED AREAS
After the dismantling of defences has taken place, all troops, para-military forces and armed police who are now on the other side of the international border and Cease Fire Line, will be withdrawn. This withdrawal will be completed by 25th February, 1966. If in any particular sector or part of a sector, the dismantling of defences has been completed earlier than the last date specified, withdrawal may be sectorwise if mutually agreed to.

During this withdrawal, there will be no follow up by civilians, armed military, para-military or police personnel until 25 February, 1966. Only unarmed military personnel at a strength mutually agreed upon at the sector level may move into these unoccupied areas for normal police duties (see paragraph 16 below).

After troops of both sides have crossed into their own territory, the procedure which was being followed by Pakistan and India before 5 August, 1965, for the security of the international border and the Cease Fire Line, will apply. Attention is drawn to Ground Rules 1961 for West Pakistan/Punjab, Rajasthan and Gujarat (India).

It is essential that under all circumstances troops must move out of occupied areas by 25 February, 1966, even if the dismantling of defence and lifting of mines have not been completed.

For immediate settlement of any points of dispute that may arise, sector commanders not below the rank of Major General will be designated by name and appointment both by India and Pakistan who will meet to settle the differences. Telephone or R/T communication will be established between these designated sector commanders and will be permanently manned.

Any matter on which there is disagreement will be referred to the C-in-C, Pakistan Army, and COA’s, India, for their joint decision. If the issue is still not resolved by them the good offices of Major General T· Marambio will be utilised and his decision will be final and binding on both sides.

PART III

REDUCTION OF TENSION IN THE EASTERN SECTOR

The limit of withdrawal in the Eastern Sector will be left to local commanders not below the rank of Major General to mutually decide where necessary, in consultation with the civil authorities concerned. Both sides will arrive at a working agreement as soon as possible.

Border Security Forces consisting of armed para-military units, police or any other irregular forces of both sides will not open fire across the border under any circumstances.
Any encroachment across the border will be dealt with through apprehension of personnel concerned and thereafter handing them over to civil authorities.

In any case where firing takes place across the border it will be investigated on the spot by a joint team consisting of border personnel from both sides within 24 hours of occurrence. Brigade Commanders/ DIGs responsible for this investigation will be designated by name and appointment sector wise for West Bengal, Assam and Tripura by India and for the adjoining areas of East Pakistan by Pakistan.

Liaison between commanders and telephone communications at various levels will be established as given in para 12 and 13 of the Ground Rules for Indo-East Pakistan border.

To ensure that the above Agreement is fully implemented, quarterly meetings will take place between Army and Police authorities of India and Pakistan, alternately in India and Pakistan, to assess the extent to which the Agreement is working in practice.

These are a supplement to the Ground Rules formulated by the Military Sub-Committee of the Indian and Pakistani delegations on 20 October, 1959.

PART IV

GENERAL POINTS

In order to resolve any problems that may arise in the implementation of this Agreement and to further maintain friendly relations between the two countries, the C-in-C Pakistan and the COA India will meet from time to time. The meetings will be held alternately in India and Pakistan and will be initiated by the respective Governments concerned.

Ground rules to implement this withdrawal Agreement in the Western Sector will be formulated by Lt. General Bakhtiar Rana Pakistan, and Lt. General Harbaksh Singh—India, under the Chairmanship of Major General T. Marambio as early as possible.

The Agreement comes into effect as from 0600 hours IST/0630 hours WPT 25 January, 1966.

February 1, 1966.

My dear countrymen Assalam-o-Alaikum, The month of January was important for us in many respects. We spent the major part of it in observing the discipline of fasting. The month of Ramzan represents not only an exercise in physical abstinence but also provides the mainspring of a spiritual happiness. It brings a message of peace, happiness and blessings for Muslims the world over, and provides us with an opportunity to reform our individual and national life.

It was in this month that Pakistan and India agreed on a Joint Declaration at Tashkent. I am aware that while this declaration has been welcomed in various parts of the country, there are people who are not satisfied with it. It is being asked what after all Pakistan has gained from it.

It is also being suggested that as a result of this declaration the Jammu and Kashmir dispute will be put in cold storage. Some suggest that to withdraw forces from battle positions will be of no benefit to us. There are others who apprehend that this declaration will not be implemented in letter and spirit and the basic political problem which has bedeviled Indo-Pakistan relations will gradually recede into the background. You have to decide for yourselves what basis there is in these doubts and suspicions. On behalf of the Government I will tell you the circumstances which led to our acceptance of the Tashkent declaration.
First and foremost, you should know who was responsible for the events which took place in the occupied part of the State of Jammu and Kashmir during the month of August last year. India has been telling the world that whatever happened in Jammu and Kashmir was engineered by Pakistan. I ask you, was it Pakistan which was responsible for the making and unmaking of so many governments in the occupied territory of Jammu and Kashmir? And have the political workers and leaders, of Jammu and Kashmir been put behind the bars at Pakistan’s behest? And is Pakistan responsible for the atrocities which are being perpetrated there day and night? If Pakistan is not responsible for these acts then it certainly cannot be held responsible for the grim consequences of these acts.

Of course, the people of Jammu and Kashmir had the support of Pakistan in their fight against oppression and in their struggle for freedom. This support they will always have till the question of Jammu and Kashmir is settled in a just and honourable manner.

The events of August last in Jammu and Kashmir were not the beginning of a new movement but the climax of 18 years struggle for freedom. There are some who believe that without Pakistan’s help the freedom movement of the people of Jammu and Kashmir would not have gathered momentum and led to a situation of war. What is being suggested is that Pakistan should have acted as an idle and helpless spectator and allowed India to swallow Jammu and Kashmir. And why? Because India happens to be big and because she has built up a powerful military machine. History has few instances to offer when a people made so many sacrifices and took such great risks for the sake of their kith and kin.

It is known to you that before the meeting at Tashkent, the Indian leaders declared, time and again, that they would never agree to any discussion on the question of Jammu and Kashmir. They had also asserted that they will not vacate Tithwal and Haji Pir Pass. But the Tashkent Declaration is in itself a testimony to the fact that the entire course of negotiations at Tashkent centered round the Jammu and Kashmir dispute. It was the pivotal problem.

True, we were not able to resolve this dispute in an acceptable manner. But who could expect that a problem which had been hanging fire for the last 18 years would be resolved in a single meeting. We did make it clear to India that an honourable solution of the problem of Jammu and Kashmir was an essential pre-requisite to the establishment of lasting peace between Pakistan and India.

World opinion has seen in Tashkent Declaration an opening for the peaceful settlement of the dispute of Jammu and Kashmir. But there are some people in our country who are not prepared to accept this. Perhaps they see war as the only means of the settlement of this dispute. Perhaps they believe that since we had war once we should have it all the time. The issues of Peace and War are not decided in the heat of emotion but by cold logic and cool thinking. The sentiments of people must be respected under all circumstances. But the interests of people come first. They cannot be sacrificed and no responsible person will do that.

I owe it to the position of responsibility, which you have given me, that I should ponder over national issues with a cool head and take decisions in the light of my Iman (faith) and keeping in view the interests of the nation without looking for public acclamation or worrying about out-bursts of criticism. It is my belief that the Tashkent Declaration not only strengthens the integrity of Pakistan but also provides a possibility for the peaceful settlement of the dispute of Jammu and Kashmir.

This possibility can be turned into a reality if India and Pakistan stop this sterile discussion of who won and who lost, and recognize that the future of the people of the sub-continent and their prosperity lie in peace. And to attain that objective they should resolve the dispute of Jammu and Kashmir in honourable and just manner through sincere and earnest endeavour. Therein lies the welfare of India, therein the welfare of Pakistan.

This is not going to be easy, nor is it going to come soon. But let us not forget that history has put both India and Pakistan on trial. Shall we resolve our basic difference through understanding and accommodation and rescue our people from the nightmare of constant friction and acrimony? The Tashkent Declaration offers the way for taking advantage of this historic opportunity. It should help create an atmosphere of mutual understanding. For this purpose, the forces of the two countries are being withdrawn from the borders. The withdrawal of forces and the generation of the spirit of mutual understanding are intended to enable India and Pakistan to consider the basic political problem between them. The Security Council’s resolution of September 20 has identified this problem. After the completion of the withdrawal of forces, the Security Council should turn its attention to this problem in accordance with its own resolution.

The outcome of the Security Council’s efforts would, however, depend largely on the attitude which India may adopt. It is our feeling that the Big Powers in the Security Council have realized the gravity of the problem of Jammu and Kashmir and the need for its solution.

In any case, you should rest assured that whatever be the outcome of the Security Council’s efforts, your Government is taking all possible and appropriate measures for the defence and integrity of Pakistan. At the same time, we have impressed upon India that mounting defence expenditure affects the economic and social conditions of the people and it is in the interest of both countries that they resolve the Jammu and Kashmir dispute honourably so that they can cut down their defence expenditure.
If the two countries go on increasing their forces and engage themselves in an arms race, then obviously not only the welfare of their people will suffer but peace between them remain constantly threatened. To say that we intend to keep the peace though we must go on building up our forces is a contradiction, because intentions can always change. What matters is the capability. Peace can be guaranteed only if both countries decide not to expand their military strength beyond certain agreed limits. You would be happy to know that our relations with our neighbouring countries are constantly becoming cordial and stronger. Before going to Tashkent I went to Kabul and I was glad to know that the people of Afghanistan have brotherly feelings for the people of Pakistan and that the Government of Afghanistan wish to develop economic and social relations with Pakistan. We greatly value this desire and on our part we shall do everything possible to promote still more cordial relations with Afghanistan. Similarly, at Tashkent our relations with the Soviet Government took a new turn. The Soviet Prime Minister, Mr. Kosygin, in particular, showed great sympathy and patience in trying to understand our point of view. I hope that the development of relations between the Soviet Union and Pakistan will prove beneficial to both countries.

At this point I would also like to thank, once again, those friendly countries who came to our help in our hour of need. We can never forget their sympathy and support and our relations with them are constantly growing. The help which these countries gave to Pakistan has left an indelible mark on our hearts.

The basic objective of our foreign policy is to develop friendly relations with our neighbours in particular and with other countries in general. Development of relations with any one country does not mean withdrawing from another. Nor is our policy influenced by ill-will or antagonism towards any particular country. Our relations with other countries are determined by mutual interests.

It is a difficult and extremely delicate policy to follow in the present day complicated international situation. But I believe that if we pursue this policy with honesty and sincerity there is no reason why we should not succeed.

In the end I would like to emphasise that the unity and solidarity displayed by the people of Pakistan during the war was not a passing phase. It was a reflection of our faith which can never be obliterated.

I appeal to you and in particular to the youth of the country that they should have faith in themselves and should not allow national unity to go under at any cost. The times ahead are going to be difficult. To face them it is our duty to identify our national-interests and follow the programme outlined for the integrity and progress of the country with complete confidence and unity.

_Ameen, Pakistan Paindabad._

2251. Record of discussion between the Chief of Army Staff, India and the Commander-in-Chief, Pakistan Army, regarding the Reduction of Military Forces in Kashmir.

It was agreed that in the State of Jammu and Kashmir, the quantum of regular troops, para-military forces and armed civilians who may be considered to constitute a military potential, to be located in the State, will not be more than as accepted by UMMOGIP in the context of the 1949 Karachi Agreement. This bringing down of armed personnel to these numbers will be completed by 1 April 1966 and be certified as having been done by UNMOGIP.

The question of raising, training and arming Mujahids, Razakars or armed irregulars in the State of Jammu and Kashmir who might in the terms of the 1949 Karachi Agreement be considered to constitute a military potential was discussed. It was agreed what this matter would be referred to the respective Governments for their consideration.

The Sector Commanders now nominated along each sector of the 1949 cease fire line will continue to meet from time to time to settle any points that may arise. The Chief of Army Staff, India, stated that apart from civilians interned on the Sialkot-Lahore fronts who were being returned shortly under civil arrangements only about 20 more prisoners were left in India and these would be returned very shortly. The C-in-C, Pakistan Army, handed over a list of names of 376 India prisoners and stated that individuals would also be returned shortly.
With regard to the writ petition filed in the Indian Supreme Court concerning the vacation of areas in the state of Jammu and Kashmir, the Chief of Army Staff, India, stated that he would clarify this position by 17 February 1966. It was agreed that a bridge as asked for by the UNMOGIP would be constructed near the URI check post by India and a maintenance post would be located there.

The Chief of Army Staff, India, C-in-C, Pakistan Army, exchanged views on other central points with regard to reduction of tension and decided to further discuss them at their next meeting.

2252. Speech of Prime Minister Mrs. Indira Gandhi in the Lok Sabha on Tashkent Declaration.

New Delhi, February 15, 1966.

As THE HOUSE is aware, at the initiative of the Chairman of the Council of Ministers of the U.S.S.R., Mr. Kosygin, there was a meeting between Prime Minister Lal Bahadur Shastri and President Ayub Khan of Pakistan in Tashkent. The Prime Minister and the President met in a plenary session in the presence of the Chairman of the Council of Ministers of the U.S.S.R. on January 4, 1966. Thereafter, there were a series of informal talks between the Prime Minister and the President. The Chairman of the Council of Ministers of the U.S.S.R. remained in close touch with both the Heads of Government. On January 10, 1966, the Prime Minister and the President signed the Tashkent Declaration.

The greater part of the discussions in Tashkent centred round the basic question of renunciation of force. Prime Minister Shastri made it clear that the main point was whether or not the two countries wanted to live in peace and settle their disputes without resort to force. The President of Pakistan raised the question of Kashmir as the basic issue which had to be settled before the two countries could live peacefully and as good neighbors. Prime Minister Shastri, in his talks with President Ayub khan, made it clear that it was not possible for India to deviate from its position that Kashmir was an integral part of India and that India’s sovereignty over Jammu and Kashmir was not negotiable. Eventually, there was agreement as embodied in article I of the Declaration.
For many years in the past, India had emphasized the importance of the two countries agreeing that all disputes and differences between them should be settled peacefully, without resort to arms. Unfortunately, no agreement could be reached on such a declaration between the two countries. The success of the Tashkent Declaration consists in the fact that both countries have now agreed not to have recourse to force and to settle their disputes through peaceful means. This has been done by a categorical reaffirmation in the Declaration of the obligations under the Charter of the United Nations to refrain from the use of force in settling international disputes. In the Tashkent Declaration, India and Pakistan have chosen to turn away from mutual conflict and have resolved to base their relations on peace, friendship and good neighbourliness.

Article II of the Declaration provides for the withdrawal of all armed personnel of the two countries, not later than February 25, 1966, to the pre-August 5 positions, as required in U.N. Resolutions. The fullest consideration was given to all aspects of the question of withdrawals before agreeing to this clause. In his letter of September 14, 1965, to the U.N. Secretary-General, Prime Minister Shastri had stated, “That when consequent upon the cease-fire becoming effective further details are considered, we shall not agree to any disposition which will leave the door open to further infiltrations or prevent us from dealing with infiltrations that have taken place.”

Under the Declaration, Pakistan has not only agreed to withdraw all armed personnel, but also undertaken not to resort to force for the settlement of any dispute and to respect the cease-fire terms on the cease-fire line. There is the further provision of non-interference by either country in the other’s internal affairs. Armed infiltrations across the cease-fire line would be wholly contrary to the Tashkent Declaration. The conditions laid down in the late Prime Minister’s letter to the Secretary-General of the United Nations have thus been met. The discouragement of hostile propaganda and encouragement of propaganda which promotes the development of friendly relations will be a positive factor for the promotion of good-neighbourly relations. It is hoped that propaganda of the kind which caused resentment in India and marred relations between the two countries will be a thing of the past. The Declaration provides for the normalization of relations between the two countries and for bilateral discussions, in a friendly atmosphere, to resolve various problems between the two countries.

Steps have already been taken towards the implementation of the Declaration. Agreement has been reached between the Chiefs of Armed Forces in both countries in regard to the withdrawal of forces on the west and for the avoidance of tensions. It has also been agreed that armed forces of both sides along the eastern borders will withdraw from forward positions and will not in any circumstances resort to firing. The high Commissioners of both countries have returned to their respective posts and normal diplomatic relations have been resumed. Over-flights of scheduled air services of both countries across each other’s territory have been resumed. Exchange of prisoners taken by either side has been completed to a large extent. The Government of India have proposed a Ministers’ level meeting at which various other matters concerning the normalization of relations and further steps towards the implementation of the Declaration could be discussed. Restoration of posts and telegraphs and telecommunications between the two countries is being arranged.

India and Pakistan have now the opportunity of living in peace and friendly cooperation. The Tashkent Declaration, sincerely observed and implemented, will, it is hoped, contribute to the prosperity and progress of the 600 million people of the Indo-Pakistan sub-continent.

In conclusion, I would express the deep appreciation of the Government of India of the initiative and good offices of Mr. Kosygin, Chairman of the Council of Ministers of the U.S.S.R., which made the Tashkent meeting a success.

2253. Reply by External Affairs Minister Swaran Singh to the debate on Tashkent Declaration in the Lok Sabha.

New Delhi, February 21, 1966,

Mr. Speaker, Sir, I am grateful to hon. Members who, while participating in this debate, lent massive support to the Tashkent Declaration. I am very happy that this support came not only from hon. Members belonging to this side of the house but several hon. Members from the Opposition Benches also supported the Tashkent Declaration, and have given on many occasions more reasons and arguments in favour of acceptance of the Declaration by the country. This expresses the determination of our people to treat this as a non-party issue, as a national issue.

My task in replying has been greatly lightened. It is very much easier as several hon. Members who have already participated and have lent their support to the Tashkent Declaration have given various arguments and reasons to remove some of the doubts that had been raised by those hon. Members who criticized the Declaration. I will not, therefore, be long in my reply. I will try to confine myself to meeting some of the specific points that have been raised by hon. Members who criticized the Declaration.
At this stage, I would like to say that a desire has been expressed by hon. Members that the Prime Minister should also make some statement on the Tashkent Declaration in the House. I am sure that this request, this wish that has been expressed on the floor of the House, will be conveyed to the Prime Minister, and in her intervention in the debate on the President’s Address, she can include her own statement on the Declaration.

The question of withdrawals of armed personnel from Haji Pir, Tithwal and Kargil has come up for comments; it has also been criticized by certain hon. Members. The question of infiltrators has also been mentioned. As a matter of fact, these two points are inter-connected, and I would like to say something on these two points together. We have first to see the objective that we had before us when the Indian armed forces moved to Kargil, the Tithwal and to Haji Pir. It is very important because we were facing aggression, and this massive aggression originated in the form of a large number of armed personnel crossing over to that part of Jammu and Kashmir which is in the actual possession and control, administrative and the rest, of the Government of India.

When we took up this matter with the Pakistan Government and pointed out to them the serious situation created by these armed infiltrators coming across into Indian territory, the Government of Pakistan did not accept any responsibility. It then became necessary for us to take defensive measures to check infiltration, because the responsibility in this respect was not accepted by the Government of Pakistan. It was in that context that the Indian armed forces moved into these two passes, Tithwal and Haji Pir, and we moved into Kargil because our line of communication to the Ladakh area was under constant threat by the sniping and other provocative acts which were indulged in by the Pakistan forces. These were the objectives before us when we moved to these passes.

We have now to see whether, when we agreed to withdraw, our objective had not been realised, whether the reason for which we moved to these passes still persisted at the time we agreed to this withdrawal. We gave very careful consideration to the various aspects. This was a very serious matter, and we attached a very great deal of importance to it. It was necessary for us to give the most careful consideration to the implications of the step that we were taking in agreeing to the withdrawal from these areas.

As I said when I initiated this debate, three conditions were agreed to by Pakistan. Firstly, both countries agreed that the use of force would be abjured in the settlement of any dispute, secondly that cease-fire terms on the cease-fire line would be adhered to and respected by the two parties, and thirdly that there would be non-interference in each other’s internal affairs. Even one of these considerations or conditions is enough to correct the mischief that can be created by the movement of infiltrators.
Sending armed infiltrators, for instance, is obviously use of force, and if both parties agree that force will not be used for the enforcement of any claim or the settlement of any dispute, obviously they cannot say that they will send these infiltrators in the exercise of their right to enforce a claim or to settle a dispute. It is quite another thing, a separate issue to which I will come, as to whether they will respect this or not, but my point is: is the sending of infiltrators protected or can it be resorted to by any loophole that is there in the agreement? My contention is that we should keep these two things separate, the interpretation of the agreement and their intentions or the question whether they will respect the terms of the agreement or not. At this stage, I am on this question whether the agreement itself covers armed infiltrators or whether, notwithstanding the terms of this agreement and even if they adhered to this agreement, they can make out a case that they can send infiltrators…. Pakistan has at no stage said that they have got the right to send infiltrators. All along they have denied having sent infiltrators, and even now they do not say that they have the right to send infiltrators. It is an important point. One of the first conditions of the agreement is not to use force, and sending armed infiltrators is use of force. That is what I am trying to contend. It is quite clear that even Pakistan has not said that they are entitled to send infiltrators or to use force even if Kashmir is not an internal matter of India. We do not accept the Pakistan contention that Jammu and Kashmir is not an integral part of India, and any interference by sending infiltrators, even by whipping up agitations there or trying to support those who are not accepting the writ of the local government there, is very much interference. We do not accept their interpretation of Jammu and Kashmir not being an internal problem or an internal responsibility of the Government of India.

The important point that I was mentioning at this stage was that this question of infiltrators and their being sent is covered by this condition which has been agreed upon between the two sides. I will not repeat it.

The second point that has been mentioned is that they do not accept Jammu and Kashmir as the internal problem of India, and therefore there may be a loophole for sending infiltrators. My reply to this is two-fold. Firstly, it is our interpretation, it is our very firm stand, that Jammu and Kashmir is an integral part of India, and that its sovereignty is not negotiable. In these circumstances, we do not accept this interpretation that they have got the right to interfere in this. So far as the question of armed infiltrators is concerned, whatever may their position with regard to Jammu and Kashmir, even if they are keeping up a dispute on that issue which we do not accept, we clearly say that there is no dispute—even then I contend that the clause relating to non-use of force covers this completely and any step that they take to interfere with the established administration on one side of the cease-fire line is a clear violation of the Tashkent Declaration, and is therefore something about which we need not have any doubt in our minds....
The late Prime Minister Lal Bahadur Shastri had also said: if the other party says that it wants to discuss Kashmir or they want to raise some point, all that I have to do is to state clearly that Jammu and Kashmir is an integral part of India; that is the position to which India, he said, would steadfastly adhere. In this context, at the meetings in Tashkent between our late Prime Minister and President Ayub Khan, it is a fact that President Ayub did raise the question of Kashmir.

Our late Prime Minister made a clear and categorical statement that Jammu and Kashmir is an integral part of India and that is the position to which he strongly adhered; we are not going to alter that position. As to what President Ayub said, or their Foreign Minister said, they are well known; they say from time to time that the people of that area should be permitted to express their desire about their future. If in reply to that we categorically reject any such claims and reiterate our stand on Jammu and Kashmir, it is not discussing the question of Kashmir; it is only reiteration of the position and that fact, Mr. Speaker, is clearly enunciated in the Declaration. The Declaration says that the two sides reiterated their position. Prof. Hem Barua is hurling the declaration at us. We went through every word of it. Shri Dwivedy raised a point that the position and manner in which this sentence is used perhaps might cast some cloud on our assertion. It is not at all correct. Article I says that the Prime Minister of India and the President of Pakistan agree that both sides will exert all efforts to create good neighbourliness between India and Pakistan in accordance with the U.N. Charter. It is unexceptionable. They reaffirm their obligation under the Charter not to have recourse to force but to settle their disputes through peaceful means. I would very strongly urge that this is a obligation not to use force. This should not be lightly dismissed; this is a clear affirmation of their obligation. They considered that the interests of peace in the region, particularly in the Indo-Pakistan sub-continent and indeed the interests of the people of India and Pakistan were not served by the continuance of tension between the two countries. They also said that our attitude should be to develop good neighbourly relations, to discontinue tension. It was in this context and in this background that Jammu and Kashmir was discussed and each side set forth its respective position. I have already said what our position was: namely, that it is an integral part of India. The other party said that they have got their own claim. They agreed to disagree on this issue. To bring about good neighbourly relations, they said there were other matters which should be attended to and the rest of the declaration proceeds to mention some of these other matters. The mention in this background under which Jammu and Kashmir was discussed is a point which clearly brings out our clear statement and position on Jammu and Kashmir. I would also like to mention that in the course of my talks with the Foreign Minister of Pakistan and his colleague, talks during which on our side my colleague Shri Chavan and other members of the delegation were present, I reiterated our position and our stand on Jammu and Kashmir in unmistakable terms. Some hon. Members here and some outside had mentioned that the country should be told as to what was talked between the two sides. I would like to clarify the position.

The Indian position on Jammu and Kashmir was not whittled down in the slightest and we reiterated in clear and unmistakable terms our stand and Pakistan is in no doubt about our stand. No newspaper, no critic or supporter of the Tashkent Declaration from Pakistan has ever asserted that India has deviated from its stand on Jammu and Kashmir. On an issue on which even Pakistan does not claim that we have changed our stand on Jammu and Kashmir, it is not wise or in our national interest to continue to agitate these points and unnecessarily to create doubts even when the other party is in no doubt.

I do not want to go into the whole history of how this wave of infiltration started and how we took preventive action by moving into some of the passes and how vigorously our security forces took very stern and effective measures to deal with the infiltrators who were operating in the Jammu and Kashmir territory…

The infiltrators who had crossed over were being dealt with and our security forces and our police made a very thorough job of it. If ultimately we were able to control the situation it was due to the effective steps that were taken by the security forces. I would also like to add that the Government of Jammu and Kashmir and, if I may add, the people there, acted very strongly and they fully cooperated with these steps taken by the authorities in dealing with the infiltrators. It was this support given to us, the lack of the response which mistakenly Pakistan thought they would get from the people, which was mainly responsible in thwarting the designs of the infiltrators. We are grateful to the people who gave information to the local authorities. We had a large number of non-officials who traced the movement of these people and supplied information to the authorities which ultimately led to the mopping up operations and in providing the necessary security to the areas and to the targets which unfortunately had been aimed at by the infiltrators.

I would also like to add that after the cease-fire operations, although Pakistan did continue to keep this posture that they had never sent these infiltrators, and continued to disown their responsibility, we have definite information that they called upon these people, who had been sent across, to return to that area. We had definite information on that score, and a large bulk of these people actually crossed over into the other territory. Our security forces also have been stepping up their efforts which continued after the cease-fire, because our Prime Minister had made it absolutely clear that any cease-fire agreement that is arrived at or any cease-fire arrangement that is accepted does not mean that our efforts to deal with the infiltrators or to deal with them effectively would in any way be influenced by the cease-fire. We made the position clear that this is an internal, law and order matter, and we had to function effectively. It was the combined effect of these two things: the continuous drive by our security and armed forces, the civilians and the civilian government - all this combined effort put so much pressure on them and they found, particularly after the cease-fire, that there was no point in their staying on, and a large number were actually thrown out and pushed back into the other territory. Out of the total number of infiltrators who were in thousands, a good bulk has been thrown back. A large number of them were killed; some of them were also arrested. The number that might be left there might be very, very small. It is very difficult for me to give any number, but it cannot be more than a few odds and ends, say, half a dozen or 10 people in one remote area or the other. I have not got the census or the list. If I knew the exact number, I will get hold of them or kill them or shoot them, those who come here without any authority. But the point is, the Pakistan Government, naturally from the very beginning, had taken the attitude that they are not concerned with them, that they have not sent them; we have information that they had done so and they had sent across these people. We had information that they were receiving messages and we intercepted some of those messages, and it was on that basis that we kept the county and this House fully informed about their activity; that they were sent across and they were supported. We had also information - we had definite information - that they were withdrawn after the cease-fire. So, this was a combined effect of the two-pronged operation, pressure by us, by our security forces, and also their attitude that they wanted to withdraw. In a matter like this, we have to see the results and need not insist on a public statement that they have withdrawn. I am sure that even on this statement of mine they might say, “No; we never sent anyone; we have not withdrawn anyone.” They may say as in their earlier statement that “We have not sent any man even in the initial stages”. So, we have to look to the situation on the ground and view it realistically, and realize that in future, these conditions are accepted: that non-use of force is accepted; non-interference in one’s internal affairs is accepted; and that observance of the cease-fire terms and the cease-fire line. So, in actual fact also, based upon this agreement that they have entered upon, we were fully satisfied that the question of infiltrators hereafter is not likely to arise and it is covered by the agreement because it was thereafter that we agreed in respect of Haji Pir and Tithwal, the passes through which we had moved in order to check further infiltration.

We are clear that if the terms of the agreement are adhered to, then, the question of sending infiltrators does not arise. It is a very pertinent question and a practical question; that is, if they do not adhere to the obligations that they have undertaken, then what is the guarantee? It is a very pertinent question. But the reply to this is linked up with all the other agreements that have been entered into between the two countries. In a matter like this, if we start with this attitude that any agreement that is entered into is not likely to be adhered to, they will find some excuses to go back upon the agreement, then, the reply is that we know how to deal with the situation. Then a new situation develops altogether. The agreement is clear. If they do not adhere to it, if they go behind the agreement and they do not faithfully carry out their obligations under the agreement and surreptitiously take resort to something else then it is a clear violation of the agreement; then a situation arises, and we will take the sternest measure to meet the situation, and of that we have never made any secret. I would beg of this House to see that the agreement is very clear, and that the ultimate protection in this case is provided by the agreement and by their adherence to this agreement. If the agreement is not adhered to, it depends upon our capacity to deal with the situation. Many of our foreign friends, sympathetic friends, have many times mentioned to us that a country of 45 crores or 48 crores of people hardly needs to go to the international community to say that this is a nuisance by the infiltrators and that there should be some solemn agreement on their part that they will never send the infiltrators. They have admitted their responsibility, though not in these clear words, that if the terms are adhered to, it is covered. If they do not observe the terms then it is a situation where our strength and our capacity to deal with them will be the real guarantee. That is something which we should not lose sight of....

The other broad political issue which Mr. Nath Pai raised is vital. In fact, that is the most important issue which cuts across any words that might be used: What is the ultimate guarantee in these cases? For that the reply is, we have to depend upon our strength and we have to tell the world, as they have told us on many occasions, if the infiltrators come, notwithstanding this agreement, the answer is, shoot them; hang them in the passes. That will be the biggest deterrent. Even on this occasion, although they started in a surreptitious manner, although it caused some worry to us, the way we dealt with this problem effectively is the biggest guarantee that they will not try again. What have they gained by this, except that they have lost hundreds of people and they had eaten their words? When Pakistan embarked upon this misadventure, they had all types of flamboyant statements to make: “We are doing this with this object or that object”. It is not for me to remind the Pakistani leaders, but without introducing any element of criticism of their earlier statements on this issue, I would certainly ask, whereas Pakistan had embarked upon this to realize certain objectives, viz., to get a solution of the Jammu and Kashmir problem which they thought fits in with their pattern, have they succeeded? No; they have not.

Ultimately the terms of the agreement are such that any action of that nature will be covered. Will they do that again? If they adhere to the terms of the agreement, they would not do that. But if they do not adhere to the terms of the agreement, a new situation arises, which the country will have to deal with, with all determination. I am sure that the full support of this House and of the country will be with any steps that are taken to deal with that situation.

The date 5th August is important, because on 5th August this infiltration started. Withdrawal of all armed personnel to positions which obtained prior to 5th August definitely covers the infiltrators also.

Another point which has been mentioned was that it appears as if some pressure was exercised on the late Prime Minister, Shri Lal Bahadur Shastri. I am very sorry that any such suggestion directly or indirectly was made... About this alleged pressure, those of us who were in touch with Shri Lal Bahadur Shastri can say that the actual volume of his work; the actual physical pressure, in those days was much less compared to the work he used to do in India where his responsibilities were so great, meeting a large number of persons from all sections of the House and leaders of various political parties, apart from his administrative work. But in Tashkent, we had gone for a special purpose. Myself, my colleagues and even the Press people who were there at Tashkent everyone knows that, judged in terms of sheer volume of work, it was much less as compared to his normal routine in Delhi.

Regarding the second point whether the functioning of the Soviet leaders and the Soviet delegation was such as to create the slightest feeling in our mind that they were trying to sell any particular idea, I would like to say categorically that the attitude of the Soviet leaders in this respect was one of full understanding of our position. Even before going to Tashkent, I had paid a visit to Moscow and had long talks with the Chairman of the Council of Ministers, Mr. Kosygin and also with their Foreign Minister, Mr. Gromyko. I had explained in full detail our stand on the various issues that were likely to come up during the Tashkent talks. Our stand on all these issues was fully known to the Soviet leaders. There was a great deal of understanding and they were quite objective. It will be absolutely wrong to suggest that they exercised any pressure directly or indirectly. It will be wrong on our part to suggest anything of that nature.

I would like to reiterate the expression of our gratitude to the Soviet leaders for all the understanding that they showed. If you look at the circumstances what could be the pressure? I fail to understand. Our late Prime Minister had gone to Tashkent as a great hero. He had the will and support of the entire country with him. Our army was standing on the outskirts of Sialkot and Lahore and we were occupying strategic passes. In the Security Council this matter has been agitated and we demonstrated very clearly that India will not brook any interference - we know what our case is and we will adhere to it steadfastly. So, what was the circumstantial pressure on him? Here was a person who was more or less in command of the situation. To suggest that there was any pressure either circumstantial or otherwise which impelled him to adopt this attitude is absolutely unjustified. There was some pressure on him in the sense that the saw as to what was in the best interests of the 600 million people of India and Pakistan. He, as a great leader, who could fight bravely the battles, also knew that India’s general attitude of peace also is something which requires all possible support and nursing. Therefore, if he acted in the interest of peace, when he was in that strong position, when he had this support, you cannot say there was any pressure of any kind, direct or indirect, on him. He acted in a very brave manner in reversing past unhappy trends by signing the agreement and in a sincere effort to reverse the trends without yielding on any essential matters.
Therefore, I would like very categorically and clearly, to reiterate that there is no question of any pressure either factual or circumstantial. He knew what he was doing and he did it with a great gesture, with great strength and it is for us really to honour that.

The Indian objective, when we had to face this armed conflict, was to repel aggression. That objective had been fully realized. We successfully met this aggression on the ground and also in signing this agreement. Now, some test of this can be the reactions of other countries. This is one of those rare agreements which has been welcomed by all countries excepting one, our northern neighbor, China or some critics on the other side. It is very interesting to see how the Chinese leaders looked at it. Even their reaction was not very spontaneous to start with. They started building up their attitude and they took some weeks before they actually gave out as to what was in their heart of hearts with regard to this. Apart from their hostility to India, about which we know, the House knows and the country knows - it is not that aspect that I want to put forward so much at this stage - unfortunately, China is one country which continues to hold that this doctrine of peaceful co-existence or the efficacy of peaceful means for resolving disputes is not good. All these are doctrines which, are not accepted by China. They saw in the Tashkent Declaration a clear vindication of these two very important principles of international behaviour, namely, the importance and the efficacy of peaceful co-existence and determination to solve their dispute by peaceful means. On both these grounds the official Chinese reaction is against this Declaration. They say the Soviet Union want to demonstrate that by bringing India and Pakistan together, and by asking them to abjure the use of force for settlement of any dispute, notwithstanding differences they can co-existence is possible and that settlement of disputes by peaceful means is also possible. As you know, the Chinese believe in the inevitability of war. They steadfastly hold this view that nothing can be resolved except through violence and resort to force. That is a doctrine which we have never accepted, which the rest of the world does not accept, and I would very humbly but very strongly place this aspect, not in any spirit of animosity against China because that relates to a matter which we can swear
- we have got our problem - but let us take it at a higher level - their adherence to the doctrine of the inevitability of war - this Declaration is a clear blow to their doctrine. For that reason also, this is a vindication of the general code of behaviour which the international community has embarked upon and is going assiduously to follow.

I would, before ending, earnestly appeal, now that we have had the debate, now that we have had our full say on this issue, let us now hereafter bring about a general support for this in our country so that the unfortunate trends of deteriorating relations, continuous friction and continuous tension might be reversed. I know that the process is difficult. I know that there may be difficulties which may also be created by the statements by the other side, may be that there are some difficulties on our side. But I would appeal that this Declaration is something worth working for; war and armed conflict is to be resorted to only if necessary in order to safeguard our security and integrity, but if peace can be restored by peaceful means and peaceful approaches, howsoever impracticable these efforts may appear to resolve all differences, it is something which is worth trying, and it is in that spirit that we should view this Tashkent Declaration.

[Introduction: After the August-September 1965 conflict and till 30th of April 1966 the National Assembly (Parliament) of Pakistan had two debates on foreign affairs, first in November 1965 and second after the Tashkent Declaration, in March 1966. In the latter two day debate, besides the Foreign Minister who initiated and finally replied, 38 more members participated. The speakers devoted a large part of their speeches to the Tashkent Declaration and Indo-Pak relations.

One of the significant points raised in the debate was that the Opposition, while it felt equally strong on the issue of Kashmir, disapproved the method of settling the dispute through armed conflict. Some of the charges leveled against Pakistan's foreign policy were (i) that it was ‘extremist’ (ii) that it had been full of contradictions and (iii) that the Tashkent Declaration was ‘a humiliating surrender, diplomatic subversion or ‘dishonourable’.

Summarily reproduce below are three speeches as reported by Dawn. First is that of the Foreign Minister; second is of the Leader of the opposition in the National Assembly; the third one is also of the Foreign Minister who wound up the Debate on the fifteenth of March – ]

Foreign Minister Z.A. Bhutto

Pakistan was born on the principle of self-determination. It established that every nation had the freedom to develop according to its genius and march towards its historic destiny. Pakistan, however, had suffered ill will and hostility from India for the last 18 years. The country had to face many India perfidies, calumnies, and crises. The people and the country met every challenge with the weapon of unity and solidarity, and emerged stronger and more united from every ordeal. The recent war was also a demonstration to friend and foe alike that Pakistan was not an amputated limb of another body politic but an independent sovereign state with a will to defend its integrity and sovereignty.

The history of past 18 years has chastened Pakistanis. They should, therefore, approach the problems between the two countries with caution, determination, patience and firmness. Our attitude towards the problems between the two countries, however, remains constructive. Pakistan was always, and is, willing for an honourable solution of the disputes so that the two countries could undertake economic development in an atmosphere of peace. Pakistan, due to geographical, economic, strategic, religious and cultural relations, has a claim on Kashmir. For other reasons, too, Kashmir has a close affinity with Pakistan. But their contention and aim has all along been that the people of Kashmir must be given an opportunity to exercise their choice whether they wanted to join Pakistan. Every constituent of Pakistan has exercised this choice. The former Provinces of East Bengal, West Punjab, Sind and Baluchistan have exercised the option. The territory of Sylhet and NWFP joined Pakistan after a referendum. Therefore Kashmir must also be given the right to determine her choice unless the dispute of Kashmir is settled in this light, the task of establishing peace in the Sub-Continent will remain unfinished. The broad objectives of Pakistan’s foreign policy since her inception have been and will continue in future as: (i) to complete, consolidate and defend sovereign independence and integrity of the nation; (ii) to carry forward the economic and social development of the country as rapidly as possible in order to transform our society, raise the living standards of our people and to bring to the country all the benefits and enlightenment which modern knowledge and technology can provide; and finally (iii) to play a role in the world commensurate with our size and situation and specially to contribute towards establishing a world order based on freedom and equality of all nations and peoples.

Right from the beginning, the aim of Pakistan’s foreign policy has been to foster goodwill towards all nations. It will be negation of this policy to make the country’s viability, defence and diplomacy dependent upon the goodwill of any particular country or group of countries.
Although Pakistan will not be able for some considerable time to become self-sufficient in her economic development and defence efforts but our endeavour must be progressively to reduce our dependence on external assistance and pursue consciously and systematically the noble objective of self-reliance.

The size, population and geo-political situation of Pakistan and the faith and ideology of its people have thrust upon it a certain role and responsibility. Pakistan is today in the mainstream of world politics. Events that happen in far away countries are capable of affecting our interests. We are frequently called upon to take a position or react to events that occur on the world stage. In one way or other we have a direct relationship with all the great powers. Bonds of brotherhood and cultural affinity bind us with the great Muslim world which spreads from the Pacific to the Atlantic. We have a circle of sympathy and common aspiration with the third world of Afro-Asian and underdeveloped countries, many of whom like us have struggled against colonial domination.

The foreign policy of Pakistan must be viewed against this moving and constantly changing backdrop. There was time when the foreign policy choices might have seemed simple. Today Pakistan must proceed with circumspection. The policy has to be evolved in the context of the complex clash of ideologies and interests amongst the great powers – clash which casts its shadow on the sub-continent adding to the intricacies of the problems and complexity of the situation. We seek the friendship of all countries honestly and without mental reservation. We have no desire to engage in the game of power politics. Our allegiance is not on auction to the highest bidder nor do we intend to play off one friend against another in search for diplomatic leverage.

Pakistan values its relationship with the United States. But there has been, some strains in Pakistan-American relations in recent years as a result of American decision to give the fullest assistance to India’s plan for a massive augmentation of its armed forces. Since President Ayub’s visit to Washington in December 1965, the United States has, however, a better understanding of Pakistan’s aims and objectives and of its policy of fostering relations with all neighbours.

Pakistan shall not forget the support and help which our great neighbour, China, extended to us in the recent conflict. The forthcoming visit of the President, Liu Shao Chi will further strengthen the bonds between the two countries and contribute to the strengthening of the fabric of peace in this region and in the world. Pakistan’s relations with her great and powerful neighbour to the north, USSR, are also growing in all fields. For the first time the USSR has participated directly to solve the disputes between India and Pakistan. The Tashkent Declaration, however, does not contain any specific answer or solution to problems between Pakistan and India. Neither does it foreclose any possibilities.
It is a door, not a barrier. It is not a contract, but a document of intent. It is aimed at clearing the damage and debris of war. It provides for a renewed effort for solving disputes between the two countries. It is for the future to show the results which emerge out of it. It has opened the era of consultations. This era may be a long one but it keeps the dialogue open. So long as the fundamental obstacle in the form of Kashmir dispute stayed and eviction of Muslims continued, it would be difficult to establish cordial relations. The Kutch dispute was an instance that if goodwill and desire to solve a dispute existed, the solution would not be difficult.

If relations with the Big Powers form an important aspect of Pakistan's foreign policy, relations with smaller powers are equally important for her. Indonesia lent her unstinting and unhesitating support to Pakistan during the war. The relationship with Indonesia is being developed on the RCD pattern. President Ayub visited Afghanistan early this year. The visit has laid the foundations for fruitful and ever-growing cooperation. And the bonds with Turkey and Iran, the RCD countries, are of abiding nature. The National Assembly is deliberating the issues of utmost importance to the nation. It will have a profound bearing on the destiny of Pakistan and the welfare of her people. It must, therefore, reflect a consensus of thinking within the country and project the aims and aspirations of its people. Let us, therefore, in discharging our responsibility proceed with sincerity and courage of conviction.

Leader of the Opposition in the National Assembly—Nurul Amin

The government follows an extremist policy whether it is foreign or domestic front. And that is why the Government has to change it frequently. We believe that outstanding problems between India and Pakistan could be settled through peaceful means, but when we advocated for the peaceful solution of disputes between India and Pakistan (November 1965), we were described as weak. The Foreign Minister had, then, told that Pakistan would quit the United Nations if it failed to solve the Kashmir dispute. I am however, glad to find that the Government has now accepted our (Opposition's) viewpoint. During the last 18 years a number of Governments had tried to tackle the basic cause of disputes between India and Pakistan. But in the past no Government had ever thought of solving this dispute by armed force. But the present Government had taken the risk of solving the question by armed force. When the war broke out in September 1965, the government even did not tell the people the causes of the war. We had expected that the Foreign Minister would at least inform the National Assembly about them. It is regretted that although thousands of our young men were killed and hundreds of people were uprooted yet the Government did not think it proper to let the people know the causes of war.

Certainly the United Nations has failed to solve the Kashmir dispute which has been hanging fire for the last 18 years. But war should have been avoided, in the interest of the teeming millions of both the countries and other avenues should have been explored to solve the Kashmir dispute before going for an armed conflict. Thank God and the United Nations that they have been saved from the calamity of an all out war. But the war has exploded the myth, that India is in such a position that it can destroy Pakistan. The war proved that our Armed Forces were brave enough to repel the Indian aggression. The 100 million Pakistanis rose to a man to save our territorial integrity. So, it was not a fact that Pakistan could be conquered by India.

It should be borne in mind that Pakistan had not been created by accident. It was the achievement of 100 million Pakistanis and they would fight for the existence of the country. Second thing to be kept in mind is that Jammu and Kashmir is the main bone of contention between India and Pakistan. The problem might be solved today or tomorrow. But this should be kept alive before the eyes of the world.

Nobody had expected that the Kashmir problem would be solved in Tashkent. But it is a great gain for Pakistan that Russia has involved herself in the India-Pakistan disputes. So far as the Tashkent Declaration was concerned, it was not an agreement but as a step towards the peaceful solution of the problems. And this effort to solve the disputes between India and Pakistan peacefully should continue.

Reply of Foreign Minister Z. A. Bhutto in the National Assembly: Some members have raised the question why did we go to war with India. This was an irresponsible utterance. No nation consciously sought a war. Other points raised and pleaded by Mr. Nurul Amin were that:

I. Relations with the USA, the USSR and China be considered carefully

II. Pakistan should follow a non-aligned and an independent policy

III. The economy must be self-reliant

IV. The present system of government was unsatisfactory

V. President Ayub’s criticism of politicians as being ‘disruptionist’ was incorrect

VI. The East Pakistan genuinely wanted regional autonomy; it would surely not disintegrate Pakistan

VII. There be adequate representation of East Pakistan in administration, and

VIII. The emergency should be withdrawn and fundamental rights restored and direct suffrage be introduced—Nothing but destruction and for nations complete annihilation. But it should also be remembered that wars had been fought and on the debris and rubble left by a war a new and better world had been constructed.

Before talking about the war, a distinction has to be made. Wars could be of avarice and exploitation. Wars could also be of justice and liberty. The wars waged by Alexander and Changez Khan were of the former category. But there were glorious wars to defend human dignity and liberty. These wars were resistance against foreign domination and for liberty.

This precise distinction has had to be made before examining the last war between Pakistan and India. Were Kashmiris fighting a war of avarice or was it for human dignity and liberty? The whole world had supported the people of Jammu and Kashmir and the people of Pakistan during the war. Why? Because Kashmiris were engaged in a just struggle. The world knew that Kashmiris were fighting for a cause which represented the culmination of self-respect for international morality. The Kashmiris are fighting against colonial domination. It is the same fight which was waged by Algerians and also the same as is being waged in Rhodesia. It was the justness of their cause which had resulted in the unique unity in the entire world of Islam, from Algeria on the shores of the Atlantic to Indonesia in the Pacific. The people of Pakistan stood courageously and valiantly for the cause of justice and liberty. It was a proud moment in the history of Pakistan. It was no adventurism. It was the heroic struggle of the people of Pakistan which would remain a pillar of strength to the people of Asia and Africa.

The United States had risked her society when under President Kennedy she gave an ultimatum to the Soviet Union for removing nuclear missiles from Cuba. Even now the world is on the brink of devastation and the world peace hangs by a thin thread because of the happenings in Vietnam. Great powers that are arrayed against one another are determined to support certain causes. Therefore, what is wrong if we supported the cause of liberation and honoured our commitment to the people of Kashmir? Were five million Kashmiris not equal to an Arch Duke since long forgotten for whom the First World War could be fought?

A member has asked why 50 million people of East Pakistan had been jeopardized for the sake of 5 million Kashmiris. This is a bankrupt and immoral argument. It is the product of a decadent mind of a decadent leadership. Some Indian leaders should have asked why were 400 million people of India, being asked to make sacrifices for Kashmir which anyhow is bound to be lost by India. Yet for chauvinistic and imperialist reasons, no Indian has said it, irrespective of the food shortage and other difficulties being faced by them. Such an argument in Pakistan therefore, is immoral. It was a shameful slander that there were some so brain-washed to say that Pakistan started the war.
Look at the world opinion. The whole world condemned India for its naked aggression against Pakistan. It was a pre-planned, pre-meditated aggression to destroy Pakistan under the pretext of Kashmir.

The Tashkent Declaration, as I have said earlier, is only a declaration of intent and not a contractual obligation. It does not stipulate the measures to solve disputes, but gives intentions of leaders of the two countries to resolve them peacefully.

The First clause which is the fulcrum of the agreement and from which the following clauses flowed, clearly lays down that the Jammu & Kashmir is a dispute between India and Pakistan. Renunciation of force promised in the declaration is not a new commitment either. Pakistan and India as members of the United Nations are already committed to it under the UN Charter. It is clearly directed against India because India was the aggressor and because India did not respect the Kashmiri people's right of self-determination, an obligation she has undertaken as a member of the United Nations.

As for the Third clause, it does not, by any stretch of imagination, accepts the State of Jammu and Kashmir an integral part of India. If Jammu and Kashmir had not been accepted as a disputed state, but as an integral part of India, it was inconceivable that the United Nations should have passed two resolutions on it, calling upon India to hold a plebiscite in the State in 1948 and 1949.

Clause Four also does not stop Pakistan from espousing the cause of the people of Jammu and Kashmir because it does not fall under the definition of propaganda.

As for clause Six, calling upon the parties to implement their existing agreement, it is also directed against India because she has to hand over Berubari and the State of Jammu and Kashmir and not otherwise. Clause Eight, asking for putting a stop to eviction of population from one country to other, is evidently for the use of Indian Government because Muslims are evicted from Rajputana, West Bengal, Assam and Tripura to Pakistan and not from Pakistan to India.

When the question of evolving a machinery for solution of the disputes was being discussed on January 9 in Tashkent, I put a direct question to the Soviet Premier, Mr. Kosygin, whether such a machinery would be able to take cognizance of the Kashmir dispute because without that it would not be acceptable to Pakistan. Mr. Kosygin's reply was that Pakistan could raise that question. It was because of that Pakistan was able to discuss the issue with India in the first ministerial meeting in Rawalpindi recently.

Besides, if the Tashkent resolution ran counter to the spirit of the United Nations Charter, it would be considered ultra vires to that extent. Under Article 51 of the UN Charter, which was an overriding Article, Pakistan could always go to the defence of her people in Jammu and Kashmir.

The members have also raised the question whether Pakistan can trust the Soviet Union. Pakistan's poor relations with the Soviet Union were inherited by President Ayub's regime. It was pity that past Governments of Pakistan did not consider the vast industrial country of Russia worth cultivating as a friend. Until I went to Russia to sign an oil agreement, there had been no contact between the two nations. This Government can, however, claim now that contact between Pakistan and Russia has been established and as a result, Russia has admitted the existence of a dispute between India and Pakistan over Jammu and Kashmir.

Russia is an ideological country, a product of the principle of self-determination of the people. Given normal relations with Pakistan it would be unrealistic for Russia to deny the right of self-determination to the people of Jammu and Kashmir. I cannot claim at this stage that as against Pakistan, Russia would not support India. But the fact of the matter is that the Soviet Union has come a long way from its attitude on the State of Jammu and Kashmir when Mr. Morozoff called it an integral part of India in the Security Council or when Khrushchev made a similar statement in Srinagar.

1. It was agreed that any formations that may have moved forward should revert to their normal peace locations as soon as possible.

2. It was agreed that timing and place of any exercises at divisional level or above be carried out by either army would be intimated to the other side. Any exercises at brigade level or above to be carried out by either side in the State of Jammu and Kashmir would be intimated to the other side through UNMOGIP. Holding of such exercises in the immediate vicinity of the border/Cease Fire Line will be avoided.

3. Prior information in regard to the holding of blackout exercises in towns near to the border will also be exchanged.

4. In order to avoid any misunderstanding on either side it was agreed to establish telephone/radio communications to facilitate contact between C-in-C Pakistan Army and Chief of the Army Staff India.

5. In the State of Jammu and Kashmir the normal procedure of the Sector-Sub-Sector Commanders meeting under the auspices of the UNITED NATIONS to investigate and arrest a situation where necessary will continue to be followed as already laid down.

6. In the order to restore completely the pre-5 August line it was agreed that the Sector/Sub-Sector Commanders meetings in Sialkot should re-start to resolve the problems in the same manner as it has been done in the past.

7. It was agreed that piquets held by either country on the wrong side of the Cease Fire Line will be vacated on a verdict given by the UNMOGIP.

8. In East Pakistan the normal procedure of meetings between BSF/EPR at appropriate level will continue as and when necessary.

2256. Record of discussions held between the Indian Chief of the Army Staff and Commander in Chief of Pakistan Army amplifying decisions contained in paras 2 and 3 of the Record of the meeting held at New Delhi on September 13-14, 1966.

Rawalpindi, October 25, 1967.

1. In amplification of the decisions contained in Paras 2 and 3 of Record of the Meeting held at New Delhi on 13-14 September 66, the following additional points were agreed:-

(a) Exchange of information regarding exercises should reach the other side three clear days before the moves for the main exercise take place.

(b) The information so exchanged, in addition to the time and place, should also include the level of the exercise.

(c) Information on 'Black-Out' exercises would only be exchanged in respect of towns lying within twenty-five miles of the border/Cease-Fire Line. Such information should also reach the other side three clear days before the actual date of the exercise.

2. In order to prevent avoidable incidents along the Cease-Fire Line/the working boundary as agreed to by the military commanders, local commanders should resort to the agreed methods of solving disputes/disagreements by holding joint meeting at various levels through the good offices of the UN Observers. Para 5 of Record of Discussion of New Delhi Meeting dated 14 September 66 refers.

3. With regard to the Sialkot-Jammu Sector it was agreed that sufficient flexibility be allowed to local commanders to enable them to define that line North of the Tawi on a basis similar to the one followed while establishing the working boundary South of the Tawi as required vide Chiefs’ agreement of 13-14 September 66.

4. It was agreed that service light aircraft will be permitted to operate up to a limit of 1,000 meters on own side of the border/Cease-Fire Line as discussed by the two Air Chiefs on 14-15 March 1966. Likewise civil agencies operating light aircraft should also be approached to observe the same limit. In cases of emergency, however, service light aircraft may approach own side of their border beyond the specified limit of 1,000 metres provided the other side has been given a prior notice to this effect.

5. With regard to the vacation of picquet's on the wrong side of the Cease-Fire Line, it was agreed that both sides will vacate such picquests as soon as possible in accordance with the verdict given by the UNMOGIP, except in case of general area Shaqma (NN 9283) long (NN 9383), where the existing picquets would be surveyed jointly by a team consisting of representatives from the following:

(a) Survey of India.
(b) Survey of Pakistan.
(c) UNMOGIP.

Such surveys will be carried out from known trig points on both sides of the Cease-Fire Line. The picquets in this area would then be finally adjusted in accordance with the findings of the joint survey team.

6. In continuation of Para 8 of the Record of New Delhi Meeting dated 14 September 1966, and in partial modification of Para 21 of Part III of the agreement between Chief of the Army Staff India and Commander-in-Chief Pakistan Army dated 22 Jan 1966, it was agreed that the level of liaison from the Pakistan side will be as under:

(a) DG EPR (Brigadier).
(b) Sector Commander (Lt. Col).
(c) Wing Commander (Major).

India will nominate its own counterparts corresponding to the levels mentioned above and intimate their designation/ranks to Pakistan. This will ensure the holding of meetings within 24 hours of any serious incident as already agreed to mutually.

Note Recorded by T.N. Kaul on his “Private” meeting with Sheikh Abdullah and submitted to Prime Minister Mrs. Indira Gandhi.

New Delhi, October 10, 1967.

Ministry of External Affairs

I had written a short letter to Sheikh Abdullah on the 3rd October 1967 through the Deputy Commissioner, Delhi, enquiring about his health and asking whether I could call on him at some mutually convenient time. He got my letter on the 7th and replied the next day that he would be glad to have me for tea on the 10th October. I have known Sheikh Abdullah since my student days in Kashmir and wanted to pay a purely courtesy call on him.

2. The Deputy Commissioner was good enough to send the ADM, Shri V.K. Kapoor, and Shri Marwaha of the Police to take me to see Sheikh Abdullah on the 10th October. They were present during my meeting with Sheikh Abdullah and I explained to the Sheikh that this was a purely personal and courtesy call and not an official call and should not be divulged to the Press. Sheikh Abdullah smiled and told me that I was an old friend and there was no question of anyone talking to the Press about our meeting.

3. We then went to the dining room and had tea there. The Sheikh looked quite healthy and I complimented him on his health and cheerfulness. He gave me a long history about his illness and the present state of health.

4. I then asked him how he looked at the world situation. At first he tried to evade the question and said that it was difficult for him to take an objective view because he had not moved outside his house and he did not think newspapers or the radio gave a correct report. He, therefore, did not wish to be subjective in his approach to things. (Incidentally, he mentioned that during the 1965 Indo-Pak conflict, he had been confined to a single room and that had affected his health and blocked his imagination, but he was feeling much better now after coming to Delhi. He played badminton and went for walks, but had to be careful about his diet.)

5. After further probing Sheikh Abdullah said that Chinese policy seemed to be getting more and more dangerous. China wanted to dominate the whole of Asia and felt that India was the main stumbling block in her ambitions. That was the reason why China had entered into an agreement with Pakistan against India. Pakistan probably saw in such an alliance a counter to fear of India. Although this fear may be unrealistic there were many elements in Pakistan who felt that India had not reconciled herself to the fact of partition. Certain elements in India also encouraged this feeling. Jammu and Kashmir, under his leadership, had voluntarily acceded to India without any pressure or inducement from India. The Kashmiris believed in 1947 that they had much more in common with Gandhi’s and Nehru’s India than with Pakistan. In spite of Hindu-Muslim massacres in the rest of India and even in areas of Jammu and Poonch in the Kashmir Valley, there had been perfect harmony between Hindus and Muslims.
He had insisted in October, 1947, that we should liberate the whole of Kashmir and not stop at Uri. Unfortunately, Panditji had overruled this. Even in the Security Council he had advocated that we should merely ask Pakistan not to allow facilities to the raiders to enter Kashmir and should ask them to facilitate their withdrawal, unfortunately he was again overruled, and unnecessarily we entered into a long discussion with Pakistan in the Security Council.

6. Sheikh Abdullah had then suggested to the Prime Minister that a Constituent Assembly should be called in Kashmir to finally ratify the accession to India, but Pandit ji had discouraged this because he felt it would go against the Security Council’s resolution. Pandit ji had declared to the whole world that the Act of accession was provisional and would be subject to final ratification by the people of Jammu and Kashmir. Later on Panditji wanted the accession ratified by the Constituent Assembly, but Sheikh Abdullah found it difficult to go back on what he had told his people earlier in accordance with Panditji’s wishes, i.e. that accession would be subject to ratification by the people.

7. Sheikh Abdullah had tried against very heavy odds to increase the revenues of the State and to give it a clean and efficient Administration. He had taken the wind out of the sails of the Communists by introducing land reforms and setting up debt conciliation Boards. However, the vested landed interests and moneyed people did not like this and started corrupting my colleagues like Bakshi Ghulam Mohammad, Sham Lal Saraf and others. When he asked Sham Lal Saraf to resign because of allegations of corruption against him, Bakshi Ghulam Mohammad opposed this because he feared that he would be the next man to be asked to go. They carried false tales to Delhi and got an order issued for the Sheikh’s arrest on the trumped up charge that he was going to Gulmarg to contact the Pakistanis. Actually he was going to Gulmarg with 3 of his personal staffs J.K. Zutshi, R.K. Raina and one other—and there was absolutely no truth in the allegations made against him. However, he submitted to this gross injustice, quietly and without any protest, in the hope and belief that truth would come to light one day. When he met Panditji after his release, the latter told him that he was very sorry about the whole thing and the Sheikh replied “Let us forget the past and look to the future”.

8. With Panditji’s blessings he went to Pakistan in 1964 and persuaded Ayub Khan to have a meeting with Panditji in order to bring about a peaceful and honourable settlement that would strengthen the secularism of India and at the same time provide a basis for improving Indo-Pak relations. The Sheikh did not wish anything to be done that would harm India or India’s secular policy. Unfortunately Panditji had passed away and the Sheikh’s plans could not materialise. After Panditji’s death, he said, there appeared to be a change in policy, mainly due to the pressure put by the then Home Minister (Shri Nanda) on the now Prime Minister (Shri Lai Bahadur Shastri). He was given a passport and allowed to go abroad. His statements in London were distorted and misreported to India. He had spoken to Mr. Jivaraj Mehta about this and asked him to give the correct version to his Government, but the Indian Press had already created the wrong impression that the Sheikh was doing anti-Indian propaganda abroad. He was not even allowed to complete his Haj pilgrimage and was asked to return. He had been offered passport and asylum by a number of countries, including Pakistan, but he refused all such offers and returned to India in spite of the fact that he had been warned that he might he arrested on landing in India. If he really had any designs of working against India, he would not have returned to India. He was not even given an opportunity to explain his activities abroad and was kept under detention. However, he felt no bitterness about it at all except a little sorrow that things had been allowed to drift in Kashmir and the situation grew from bad to worse. He had faith in God and in his people. He still believed that Indian secularism should be strengthened and India’s larger Interests should not be harmed in any way. At the same time he felt than the gradual whittling of Article 370 of the Constitution with regard to Kashmir was unfortunate. It showed a lack of faith in secularism and the ability of Hindus and Muslims in Kashmir to get along with each other. He did not know what the future held in store for him, but he had his ideals and his faith.

9. I had to take his leave at this juncture, although he wanted to talk more, because I had an appointment with the Burmese delegation. He said he would like to see me again and invited me to come for dinner on the 12th October. I told him that it would not be possible for me to come for dinner, but I would like to see him again without any other persons being present. He readily agreed.

11.10.1967.
Note Recorded by T.N.Kaul after his dinner appointment with Sheikh Abdullah and Submitted to Prime Minister Mrs. Indira Gandhi

New Delhi, October 12, 1967.

After consulting Home Secretary and Home Minister, I accepted Sheikh Abdullah’s invitation to meet him on the 12th October 1967. I was with him for 2 hours from 7 to 9 p.m. He insisted on my having dinner with him, but I excused myself as I had another engagement that evening.

2. This time we were alone and sheikh Abdullah spoke more concretely than on the 10th October. The main points he made are:—

(1) He stood by all he had said before his arrest in June 1953. He had not changed in any way, but, circumstances in Kashmir had changed. There was a pro-Pakistani element there and there were separatist trends in Jammu Province which was dominated by the Jan Sangh and also in Ladakh. Besides this, in the rest of India also, secular forces were getting weaker and communal forces were getting stronger. What had happened in Ranchi was bound to have some effect in Kashmir. He did not know whether the Central Government was strong and determined enough to crush the forces of communalism and strengthen those of secularism. He said that the present communal trouble in Kashmir had been aggravated by the speech of Shri Balraj Madhok who, according to him, had been responsible for inciting scores of murders of Muslims in the Jammu province in the past.

(2) Kashmir was not like any other State of India, but held a special position, which was recognised in Article 370 of the Constitution. However this special position had been eroded and in spite of the guarantees he had been arrested without any cause or justification in 1953. The people of Kashmir had lost faith in the sanctity of Article 370 and would ask for firmer guarantees about the autonomy of the State.

(3) Shri Jaya Prakash Narayan had some time ago suggested to him that Kashmir should go back to her autonomous status at the time of accession, but Sheikh Abdullah wondered whether this was possible now in view of —

(a) The opposition from Jammu Province which wanted complete integration with the rest of India,
(b) Opposition from Ladakh which wanted to become a separate Union territory and
(c) Opposition from pro-Pakistani elements and the Plebiscite Front in Kashmir itself.

He said that before he could accept such a proposition, Government must consider these three points and make up their mind whether they can deal with them effectively,

3. In passing, Sheikh Abdullah said that the people had lost faith in the word of the Government and even the Princes were losing faith because of the talk of doing away with Privy Purses and their privileges.

4. When I asked Sheikh Abdullah what, in his opinion, was a possible solution of the Kashmir problem, he suggested –

(1) Government should put the problem before a small body of leaders of public opinion whose patriotism and loyalty are unquestionable. He did not suggest any names. Such a body could go into the various implications and suggest a solution that should be accepted by Government. Government could include in this body some leaders of the Opposition Parties, if necessary. When I insisted on Sheikh Abdullah giving his own idea as to what such a body could recommend, he was disinclined to be drawn into a detailed discussion. However, he indicated that in his view if such a body recommended going back to the pre-1953 position and giving autonomy to Kashmir, such a solution might still be workable. However, there would have to be firm guarantee. The Government would not whittle down Article 370 as it had done.

(2) He said some bitter things about the suppression of democratic liberty and freedom in Kashmir. He said that the CRP and BSF were treating the people of Kashmir as if it was a colony of India. He conceded that, the presence of the Army was necessary to protect Kashmir against external threats, but he did not see any necessity for large scale presence of CRP and BSF for maintaining internal law and order. Their presence showed that the Government of India did not trust the people of Kashmir. When I told the Sheikh that Kashmir Police had many pro-Pakistani and communal elements and it behaved rather badly during the recent Kashmiri Pandits’ agitation, he admitted this and said the remedy was to remove such elements from the Kashmir Administration and not to bring in similar elements from outside Kashmir. He affirmed that relations between Kashmiri Pandit and Kashmiri Muslims had always been cordial; a Kashrairi Brahmin girls always had a Kashmiri Muslim foster mother and foster brother in whose hands her honour was safe. This was true till recently, but now the atmosphere in Kashmir had been poisoned by the inefficiency of the local Government, corruption and nepotism of the Administration and lack of a clear and farsighted policy by the Centre. I told the Sheikh Saheb that the question of Kashmir was not merely a question of 4 million Kashmiris but involved the fate of 55 million Muslims in the rest of India and peace in the whole sub-continent. He agreed with me and said he was prepared to do his bit provided the Government had confidence in him and gave him full trust and support and did not treat him like they had in the past. He said he had confidence in the bona fides of the Prime Minister, but he was not sure whether other elements in the political Parties would support him in any reasonable solution of the Kashmir question. I told him that the reaction in India was mainly due to the hostile criticism and propaganda in Pakistan. The Conditions in the Pakistan occupied Kashmir were much worse than in any part of India and that in spite of Kashmir being a border State, there was considerable freedom and democratic liberty there. Sheikh Abdullah admitted this but said that India was gradually slipping into the same communal atmosphere that prevailed in Pakistan. Unless this trend was stopped effectively, Muslims in Kashmir would lose faith in India. I asked Sheikh Saheb to bear in mind that the Kashmir problem was one to be settled between the Kashmiris and the rest of India. No third party had any locus standi in it. The Government of India could not afford to make any concessions on Kashmir to Pakistan nor was an independent Kashmir possible because its independence would not last more than a few days - it would only benefit China and neither India nor Pakistan. Sheikh Saheb did not contradict this, but said he would like to talk further on these matters. As it was getting late, I took leave of him and said I would come again. He Insisted on my having a meal with him next time.

5. My general impression as a result of the two talks I had with Sheikh Abdullah is as under:

1. He has probably realised that an independent Kashmir is out of the question - neither India nor Pakistan want it.

2. He has also realised that no Government of India can afford to give the Valley to Pakistan. He has also realised that this would weaken secularism in India and the position of 55 million Muslims in the rest of India.

3. Sheikh Abdullah is probably reconciled to the India of autonomous Kashmir within the Indian Union, but with proper guarantees and safeguards against whittling down the autonomy.

(4)  Sheikh Abdullah is not quite sure whether he will be able to take the people of Kashmir along with him if he gets a chance to resume his leadership and wants an assurance in advance that he will have the full support and confidence of the Government of India.

(5)  He is not sure that the Congress Party alone can solve the Kashmir problem and probably has apprehensions that even the Congress Government at the Centre may change after some time. He would, therefore like an All Party assurance or solution of some sort to be evolved in order to support and strengthen the Government’s stand on any reasonable solution of the Kashmir question.

(6)  Sheikh Abdullah is not bitter but sad. It will not be easy to deal with him if he resumes leadership of Kashmir again. He will make demands which will not be easy to satisfy, e.g. removal of CRP and BSF. But it is possible that once he sees the reality of the situation he may become more pragmatic and reasonable. Since Mr. Sadeq himself has said publicly that he is not against the release of Sheikh Abdullah it may be worthwhile considering this step after having some further talks with him and making it clear to him that Government of India cannot accept any solution which gives the Valley of Kashmir to Pakistan. It would perhaps be worthwhile for PM or Home Minister to invite Sheikh Abdullah for a meal and to have a quiet, friendly exchange of ideas with him. I got the feeling that although he was very free and frank with me, because I have known him for the last 36 years, he was still holding back his final cards which he will probably reveal only to the Prime Minister.

I had a third talk with Sheikh Abdullah on the 30th October 1967 for about 2 hours. His wife and daughters were in the sitting room and we talked alone in an adjoining room. I made it clear again to the Sheikh Saheb that I had seen him as an old friend, purely in my personal capacity, and had no instructions from Government to put forward any proposals nor did my statements commit Government in any way. Sheikh Saheb said he realised this, but, at the same time, our talks could not be useless and he hoped that they will bear some fruit.

2. Sheikh Saheb asked me what were my personal views about the Kashmir question. I told him categorically that no Government of India would be prepared to lose the Valley of Kashmir or hand it over to Pakistan at any cost. Apart from Jammu and Ladakh, the Valley of Kashmir was a symbol of India’s secular ideology and was vital for maintaining communal peace and harmony between the various communities in the country. What was involved in the Valley of Kashmir was not merely the fate of 4 million Muslims of Kashmir and not only the fate of the 56 million Muslims of the rest of India, but peace and harmony in the whole sub-continent. Besides this, the Valley of Kashmir was vital for the defence of India and particularly Ladakh vis-a-vis China. I appealed to the Sheikh Saheb to bear these considerations in mind and play a constructive role.

3. Sheikh Abdullah replied that it would have been possible, to work on these lines if the Government of India had not eroded Article 370 and arrested him and his colleagues. They had only played into the hands of anti-secular and pro-Pakistani elements thereby. Pakistan was much stronger today, having achieved economic and political stability and international prestige which she did not enjoy before. She had also acquired support among the Muslims in this side of the cease fire line which she did not have before 1953. This had been due to the wrong and repressive policies of the Government of India. Apart from this, the Muslims of Kashmir were facing in their own homestead frequent communal riots. There had been frequent communal riots in different parts of India also and the atrocities committed on the Muslim minority by the majority Hindus had shaken the confidence of the Muslims of Kashmir in the secular ideals of India. This had naturally helped the pro-Pakistani elements within the State to gain in strength. The most unfortunate fact of the matter is that the Government of India, through their stooges in Kashmir, provided all the material resources to strengthen and organise such elements not only during the regime of Bakshi Ghulam Mohammad but even today. The Sheikh had received authentic reports that the riots which took place in Kashmir recently were engineered, supported and guided by the ruling party - the Congress. Mirza Mohammad Afzul Beg was refused permission to address meetings in Srinagar and other important towns of the Valley for maintaining communal peace and harmony. The tragedy was that the Kashmir Government had placed under arrest a large number of workers of the Plebiscite Front, whose only sin was that under the direction of their President, Mr. Beg, they campaigned for communal peace and harmony, while those who had actually been indulging in fanning the flame of communal hatred, loot and arson were by and large moving freely under the protective wings of the ruling Party. Perhaps communal peace and harmony did not suit the interests of the present ruling Junta, who appeared to have been willing to harm India in order to maintain their own position.

4. I expressed surprise at these statements and said that I was not aware of any such thing. While some people did say that Bakshi Ghulam Mohammad, while he was in power, had boosted certain elements with the money provided by the Government of India, the present regime in Kashmir could not have any motive for following the same line. I also questioned the Sheikh’s statement that Pakistan today was stronger and his implied statement that India was weaker. I told him that after the 1965 conflict Pakistan should have learnt a lesson that she could not take Kashmir or any other part of India by force. Sheikh Saheb answered that the motives were identical, i.e. to keep themselves in power although some people attributed other motives also, e.g; to postpone the expected release of political prisoners, including Sheikh Saheb in order to prevent a rapprochement between them and the Government of India; (b) to scuttle the efforts of some elements in India who desired a settlement with Pakistan; (c) to provide justification for the continuance of repressive measures and thus continue the uncertainty in the State so that power remained in their hands; and (d) to fight the Plebiscite Front by encouraging the parties opposed to it and thereby to weaken the hold on it.

5. Sheikh Saheb added that all those who believed in the secular ideology should realise that by allowing the ruling party in Kashmir to pursue the suicidal course, they were unconsciously helping in the creation of a frankenstein which would destroy the very fabric of secularism which they were expected to uphold and strengthen. He reiterated his opinion that, for fear of losing power, the present set-up in power in Kashmir, would never encourage the Centre to adopt a more humane and democratic attitude towards the people of Kashmir in order to understand and meet their aspirations.
6. I told Sheikh Saheb that I could not agree with his sweeping statement. While there may be some anti-secular and selfish elements in Kashmir, as elsewhere, the present Sadeq regime had by and large a secular outlook. What was perhaps wrong in the present set up was the failure of a strong, efficient and honest Administration. I expressed the hope that Sheikh Saheb would work with secular minded elements in Kashmir in order to strengthen secularism in Kashmir and the rest of India. I drew Sheikh Saheb’s attention to a statement made by Mr. Sadeq which was published on 30th October. Sheikh Saheb said that he did not attach much importance to the utterances of Mr. Sadeq whose only aim was to retain power. Expressing his reluctance to work with

Some parts of para 6 and 7 missing

8. Sheikh Saheb emphasised the necessity of creating a proper atmosphere in which talks could be held between the people of Kashmir and the Government of India. When I asked him whether he meant introduction of President’s rule in order to create a proper atmosphere, he replied that before taking such a step Government should consider its implications both internal and international. It was possible that the people of Kashmir would not perhaps welcome such a step as it had the strong support of the Jan Sangh which had made such a move suspect not only in the minds of the Muslims of Kashmir but in the minds to the democratic elements in the country as a whole. Sheikh Saheb could not give his own opinion unless he was in a position to find the reactions of his comrades and the people to such a proposal. He hinted however that such a proposal might be necessary in order to prepare the ground for further steps.

9. I asked the Sheikh what people he had in mind besides himself with whom the Government of India could talk in Kashmir. He replied that he would suggest the Plebiscite Front. I said no Government of India could talk with a body which had as its objective the holding of a plebiscite in Kashmir which was out of the question now. It would, therefore, serve no useful purpose to talk with such a body if they stuck to this position. Sheikh Saheb warmed up at this and said that this attitude was similar to that of the British Government towards the Indian National Congress. The British in their arrogance and intoxication of power had closed their eyes to the realities of the situation, but events had forced them to seek peace and understanding from the “naked fakir”. India was committing a similar mistake in Kashmir. According to the Sheikh, the Plebiscite Front was the only organisation in Kashmir which represented the urges and aspirations of the majority of the people and which alone had the capacity and strength to mobilise public opinion behind any agreement which might finally emerge out of the talks with them. If, however, India was not willing to talk with the Plebiscite Front, it was no use to have talks with him either; he could not work in a vacuum.
10. I warmed up too and said that it was not fair or right to compare the British government with the present Government of India. The Congress have been fighting a foreign Power, but the people of Kashmir were brothers and kith and kin of the people of India. Differences could arise between brothers, but they could not be compared to the kind of differences between a foreign government and a subject people. Sheikh Saheb remarked that the people of Kashmir had never suffered such atrocities during the British or even the Maharaja’s regime as they were suffering now. I challenged the accuracy of this statement.

11. Sheikh Saheb then informed me that although he supported the Plebiscite Front’s basic stand, he was not himself a member of that organisation. As far as he knew, their stand on plebiscite was not rigid. Its leaders had repeatedly declared their willingness to consider any alternative method of ascertaining the will of the people of Kashmir. Sheikh Saheb expressed surprise that Government of India should refuse to talk with the Plebiscite Front, whose only crime apparently was that it demanded the fulfilment of the commitments and solemn pledges given repeatedly by India not only to the people of Kashmir but to the whole world. I told Sheikh Saheb that the commitment to ascertain the will of the people was made unilaterally by the Government of India to the people of Kashmir and it had been fulfilled a number of times, even according to the statements of Sheikh Saheb himself, before 1953. I told him however that if the Plebiscite Front was not rigid in its demand for holding plebiscite, perhaps talks could be held with them. Sheikh Saheb said it was very strange that while Government of India had no hesitation in talking to the Underground Nagas who had opened armed revolt against her, they should refuse to meet the real representatives of the people of Kashmir. I told Sheikh Saheb not to compare Nagaland with Kashmir. The Nagas had been deliberately kept out of touch with the rest of India by the British and had not been emotionally integrated with the rest of India, but the Kashmiris were so close and near to the rest of the people of India and the situation is not similar.

12. I asked Sheikh Saheb who were the people besides Mr. Beg in the Plebiscite Front with whom talks could be held. Sheikh Saheb replied that Mr. Beg was the President of the organisation and it was for him to suggest the persons. I told Sheikh Saheb that I was going out on tour for about a week and would like to see him again on my return if he so desired. Sheikh Saheb was hesitant to commit himself because he had said what he had to say. When I asked him whether my meeting him caused him any embarrassment, he assured me that there was no such thing, but he did not like to have political talks with anybody while in detention; it was only because of his past relations with me that he had agreed to meet me.
13. I asked Sheikh Saheb whether he would like to see Shrimati Gandhi or any other leaders. He replied that despite what he had suffered all these years, his affection and regard for Indira had not lessened and when he was free from detention “he would be glad to meet her.

Note recorded by T.N.Kaul of his Meetings with Sheikh Abadullah and submitted to Prime Minister Mrs. Indira Gandhi

New Delhi, January 1, 1968.

As I mentioned to PM, I invited Sheikh Abdullah and his wife and daughter to a quiet dinner at my house last night. Begum Abdullah was unable to come as she was not well, but Sheikh Saheb and his unmarried daughter came. Apart from my wife and daughter, Shri and Shrimati P.N. Haksar were also present. Sheikh Saheb and his daughter left at 1230 midnight.

2. It was a friendly social function and I told Sheikh Saheb that I hoped he would not record any Note about this meeting as it was a purely social, private and informal one. He agreed.

3. He talked most of the time, though I had to prod him now and then to draw him out. He repeated the same old arguments as before, but my impression was that his general attitude was less bitter than before and he seemed to be aware of the “realities of the situation” and that he would have to “face the facts”. He was also less bitter against Sadiq Saheb. Although he talked against Bakshi Ghulam Mohammad, he also admitted some of his dynamic qualities. As for Syed Mir Qassim, he did not seem to have a very high opinion of him and pooh-poohed his claim that he enrolled 7 lakhs of Congress members in the State. He also mentioned that Mir Qassim had received a certificate signed by Jinnah when, as a student at Aligarh University, he had campaigned for the Muslim League during the elections.
4. I am not mentioning the arguments I used with him, but following are the main points

Sheikh Saheb stressed:

(1) It is for the Government to take the initiative in setting right the wrong trends appearing throughout the country. He referred in connection to the situation in West Bengal, Haryana, Punjab, etc., the language question, the students' unrest, and last but not least, the anti-secular forces led by the Jan Sangh and communal minded elements in the Congress Party.

(2) He was directly concerned only with Kashmir, because he was partly responsible for the present situation there. He would, therefore, concentrate on his “base” in Kashmir and thereby help in setting right the trends throughout India by improving the situation in Kashmir.

(3) As he put it “Government must face the facts, and if they cannot handle the situation, they should get out and let others take the reins of power in their hands, or else the Prime Minister should bring in people who are known for their integrity, honesty and intelligence into the Government whether they belong to any political party or not.

(4) Only a bold leadership could set right things in the country,

5. He made the following points, in particular, with regard to Kashmir:

(1) The economic situation in the Valley was bad because people were unemployed for 4-6 months in the year. Communications must be improved and more employment provided for educated Kashmiris in the rest of India.

(2) In spite of the efforts of the Jan Sangh which wanted to wipe out secularism and considered the secularism in Kashmir as their main stumbling block, communal harmony had been, by and large, maintained throughout Kashmir, in contrast with what had happened at Ranchi and elsewhere. Secularism could be further strengthened in Kashmir and the rest of India if Government was prepared to support really secular elements and take strong action against communal minded elements. As he put it, “a surgical operation is necessary to cut off the diseased limb”.

(3) Kashmir’s accession to India was “provisional” and was based on the 3 subjects mentioned in the Instrument of Accession. As the Government of India had eroded the autonomy of Kashmir, Kashmir’s accession had also been eroded. It was difficult to say whether this accession could be revised or finalised by going back to the 1953 position. However, the will of the people had to be determined and Government was committed to this.

(4) As for the demand for a separation or complete integration of Jammu Province with the rest of India, and the demand for making Ladakh into a Union Territory, Sheikh Saheb said “we should settle this problem by persuasion and not by force. No section of people can be kept within India by force of arms and bayonets, but if they can be persuaded, that is the only way of keeping them within India. If they cannot be persuaded, then they have the right to go their own way. When asked whether this would not lead to the disintegration of the country, he said “if the leaders cannot persuade the people, naturally the country will disintegrate. The fault therefore lies with the leadership and not with the people. The Central Government had encouraged the wrong kind of leadership which was communal minded and exploiting the situation to keep themselves in power.

(5) If the Kashmir problem is settled amicably, it can have a tremendous influence in creating friendship between India and Pakistan which is most essential for both countries. As Sheikh Saheb put it “India should try to create friendly neighbours and not enemies”. He blamed Shri V.K. Krishna Menon for having misled Pandit] and provoked the Chinese through his forward policy.

6. Sheikh Saheb said he stood by Panditji’s ideals and the policies he had propounded after great thought and introspection. He said “our present leaders must look within and make a self analysis and find out where they have gone wrong. If they are prepared sincerely to follow Panditji’s path, I shall go along with them too”. He said that he felt Shrimati Indira Gandhi naturally wanted to follow the path laid down by Panditji, but he was not sure of “others in the crowd”. As for Shri Jaya Prakash Narayan, he said “he is an honest man and a man of integrity, but he is a visionary and not a practical man”. He blamed Dr. Lohia for having reduced the Parliament to a fish market. He thought, however, that there were people in the country who had honesty, integrity and intelligence, and if Shrimati Gandhi had the courage she could take a bold step in getting them together and asking them to give a lead to the country. The people at large were sound, but bold and imaginative leadership is lacking. Asked whether he would cooperate in this task, he said “I cannot take the leadership; let Shrimati Indira Gandhi give the lead on the right lines and I will go along with her”. Beyond this he would not commit himself.
2261. Statement of Pakistan Prime Minister Zulfikar Ali Bhutto on the Agreement between the Prime Minister Mrs. Indira Gandhi and Sheikh Mohammad Abdullah.

Rawalpindi, February 24, 1975.

The announcement of an agreement between the Prime Minister of India and Sheikh Mohammad Abdullah comes as no surprise. It was known for over two years that negotiations were going on between their emissaries. Equally well known was the aim of these secret parleys. The Government of India was seeing the surrender of a people’s right by a political group and its leaders in exchange for some concessions to them which, given the inherent nature of alien occupation, cannot but be illusory.

It has been Pakistan’s view that the deal sought to be transacted by India would not affect by one jot or title the moral and political rights and wrongs of the dispute concerning the State of Jammu and Kashmir. Even it succeeded in luring these politicians to forswear their previous public stand they could not sign away what was not theirs to give. For at stake is a people’s integrity, life and historic destiny and no politicians, howsoever popular he might have been, has the right to barter it away. The era of colonialism and alien rule is all but dead. The right of all peoples to self determination has long been universally recognized. In the case of the people of Jammu and Kashmir, the exercise of this inherent right has been specifically pledged to them by the United Nations and both India and Pakistan accepted the principle that the question of the accession of the State of Jammu and Kashmir to India or Pakistan shall be decided by its people through a free and impartial plebiscite.

In the past also, the Government of India made attempts to prejudice the right of people of Jammu and Kashmir by securing an endorsement of accession by a so called Constituent Assembly of India held Jammu and Kashmir, but by its Resolutions of 30 March 1951 and 24 January 1957, the Security Council declared that no action or arrangement which attempted to determine the future shape and affiliation of the State, or any part thereof, without an impartial ascertainment of the popular will, would constitute a disposition of the State in accordance with the principle of self determination. It follows that any agreement between the Government of India and one or more individuals in Jammu and Kashmir cannot resolve the issue concerning the status of the State. This is not the first time Sheikh Abdullah has made an arrangement with the Government of India. The arrangement he made in 1947 and the assurances he received thereafter were not honoured by the Government of India which dismissed him in 1953 and sent him to jail. In any case, neither that arrangement nor the one he has made now can weaken much less extinguish the right of the people of Jammu and Kashmir to self determination.
On 5 March 1973 and again on 10 July 1974, the Government of Pakistan reiterated its view that any agreement the Government of India might reach with Sheikh Abdullah could not compromise, much less destroy, the right of the people of Jammu and Kashmir to self-determination.

Also the Government of Pakistan has thrice written to the Government of India since last September reminding it of its obligations under the United Nations Resolutions and of its commitment in this behalf under the Simla Agreement. That agreement makes it quite clear that a final settlement of Jammu and Kashmir has to be discussed between India and Pakistan in the context of normalization of their relations and the establishment of durable peace in the South Asian region. Pakistan repeatedly urged India to refrain from any unilateral action which might prejudice the chances of the success of the talks which the two countries were pledged to hold. It is therefore most deplorable that India should have decided nevertheless to go ahead with an arrangement with Sheikh Abdullah such as might jeopardize these talks. This is all the more so because no such arrangement with Sheikh Abdullah or any other Kashmiri politicians can change the status of the dispute concerning the state of Jammu and Kashmir, nor indeed can it deprive the people of that state of the exercise of their inherent right of self determination in accordance with the United Nations Resolutions accepted by both India and Pakistan. As I said on 5th March 1973, Pakistan had steadfastly maintained its position of principle and we will continue to stand by our commitment to support the people of Jammu and Kashmir in their struggle to achieve the right of self –determination assured to them by the United Nations. Since the Government of India has decided to go ahead with its plans for the suppression of that right, I have called upon the people of Jammu and Kashmir, whether in Indian occupied part of the State or in Azad Kashmir or in Pakistan and abroad, to signify their rejection of this plan and their determination to continue the struggle to achieve their right of self-determination by observing a one day Hartal (strike) on Friday, February 28, as a measure of protest against the action of the Government of India and Sheikh Abdullah. Considering their indissoluble bonds with the people of Jammu and Kashmir, the people of Pakistan will also join their Kashmiri brothers in observing this Hartal.
Statement by Pakistan Foreign Minister Sahabzada Yaqub Khan in the Pakistan National Assembly on Siachen.

Islamabad, June 8, 1985.

Foreign Minister Sahabzada Yaqub Khan said on June 8 that Pakistan had categorically rejected the Indian claim to the Siachin glacier area which formed part of the Northern Areas of Pakistan. He assured the National Assembly that the Foreign Office would do its best to protect Pakistan's rights in the best possible manner without having to resort to the use of force.

The Minister made the statement in response to an Adjournment motion moved by Mr. Mumtaz Ahmed Tarar while referring to press reports that India had recently reiterated its claim to the Siachen glacier region.

Sahabzada Yaqub Khan said Siachen glacier was part of the northern areas of Pakistan and situated to the north of the terminus of the Line of Actual Control in Jammu and Kashmir. India had protested to Pakistan in 1981 against the so-called violation of this area.

On more than one occasion, Pakistan had reiterated the position in official communications to India and categorically rejected the India claim to the Siachen glacier area.

India had, for the second time, put forward its claim to this area. It obviously was not a new occurrence, he said.

Sahabzada Yaqub Khan pointed out that it was a matter on which exchanges of statements and diplomatic notes had already taken place between Pakistan and India over a period of time.

He assured the Assembly that the Government would take up this matter again with India.

He confirmed that a number of clashes had taken place in the area within this year and at least three flag meetings of commanders on both sides had already been held to prevent the escalation of fighting.

"Obviously it is desirable that armed conflict in the area is avoided," adding that this was the policy to which Pakistan was committed. Nevertheless, Pakistan would insist on discussing it at the appropriate level "the matter which is of concern to us all."

"I share the concern of the member and assure that the Ministry of Foreign Affairs will do its best to ensure that the rights of the Government of Pakistan are protected in the best possible manner obviously without having resort to the use of force," he remarked.

Editor’s Note: There was no statement issued at the end of the First Round of Talks.

2264. Questions replied to in the Pakistan National Assembly on Siachen.

The Pakistan National Assembly was informed on September 8 that Pakistan and India had accepted the importance of resolving the Siachen Glacier issue through peaceful means.

Responding to a question asked by Mr Mohammad Nawaz Khokhar during question hour, the Minister of State for Defence, Rana Naeem Mehmud Khan, told the House that there had been two rounds of talks between Pakistan and India at the level of Defence Secretaries on this issue.

In these talks, he added, each side got an opportunity to explain its viewpoint and heads of both delegations agreed to continue the talks for arriving at a mutually acceptable solution.

He explained that delineation of a line of control in the Siachen Glacier area had not taken place so far. The reckoning of violations in the absence of an agreed line of control was therefore technically not possible, he said.

The mere presence of Indian troops in the Siachen Glacier is a violation of the Simla Agreement. In violations of this agreement, Indian troops made inroads into the Glacier area. Pakistani troops were deployed there in April, 1984, to check further Indian incursions in the area. “Indian provocations are answered by our troops effectively,” he added.

To a question about the Nakial sector, he said that it was one of the sectors along the line of control in Jammu and Kashmir. Violations of the line of control, he said, were termed cease-fire violations and not border violations as the line of control is not an international border.
Eight ground violations he said were committed by Indian troops in the Nakial sector in the last three months (March 11 to June 10). Complaints were lodged with the UN Military Observers’ Group by Pakistan for these violations of the “line of control.”

There were occasional unprovoked violations of this nature by India troops, he said. Pakistan troops took appropriate defensive measures to deal with each situation, he added.

Letter from Deputy Chief of Mission of India in Pakistan A. B. Patwardhan to Joint Secretary (Pakistan) Ministry of External Affairs.

Deputy Chief of Mission

My Dear Satish,

The evolutions of the Government of Pakistan position on the Siachen clashes this summer has intrigued everyone, beginning as it did with a denial that the clashes have taken place, and proceeding through different stages of half admission, claims that Pakistan had seized the initiative to recapture the Quaid post, and that the Pak army had not lost ground, but in fact added to territory under Pak control.

2. The question which needs to be answered is: why this preoccupation with Siachen at this juncture? Leaving aside the seasonal factors which prescribe the constraints and openings in the high altitude Glacier area, requiring action before the early winter sets in, several factors come to mind in explaining Pak motives:
(i) One major hypothesis could be that, smarting from Benazir’s biting criticism of Gen. Zia’s personal failure to safeguard Pak control over the Siachen Glacier area, the Sadar Saheb approved plans by the new corps commanders, Rawalpindi and VCAS to perk up the army’s tactical position, and gain some new features which could lend credibility to Gen. Zia’s leadership as COAS. Several variants of the theme could be developed, but these I do not wish to elaborate here.

(ii) With Prime Minister Junejo’s high profile tour of the Northern Areas, and his reported visit to Pak troops in forward positions past Skardu in the Siachen theatre, earlier this year, there has been a general demand within the PML to regain the Quaid post. This post— no one is really clear as to whether and where this bastion exists at all – has assumed very jingoistic connotations within the ruling party and the army has fuelled the thought and sentiment in its own self- interest. In a related development, apparently in a briefing given to the Prime Minister and to the Defence Committee of the Cabinet, VCAS and Defence Secretary appeared to have talked about the tactical disadvantage which Pak troops suffered from. The emphasis on this aspect has led to a fortuitous emphasis on attempts to improve the Pak army’s position from the tactical point of view, without exactly understanding how this could be achieved.

(iii) Judging from the debate on the status of the Northern Areas in recent times, it appears that both the military and the civilian wings of the Government have been somewhat excessively worried on account of our own dispositions and initiatives, in particular the decision to establish a separate command for the Siachen Glacier area, and therefore forming what is seen here as a new division. This is being interpreted as an element in our forward strategy which seeks to delink the Northern Areas from the Kashmir question (defined in terms of J&K per se) and to bring back into play our territorial claims to Baltistan, Gilgit etc. From a reading of the debate in the Pak media and at some seminars in Lahore and elsewhere, I get the impression that the Pakistanis are at least as pressed, and perhaps confused, as we have tended to be on the inter-relationship between these other areas and the Kashmir valley plus Jammu. The upshot of this here has been to demand of the army a degree of preparedness which is difficult to distinguish from an activist forward policy. One Pakistani went so far as to tell me that since the Pak view considers the entire Northern Areas to be separate from the Kashmir question, and regards the question as more or less settled in the light of the boundary agreement with China, there is a growing demand that the army should prove itself to be capable of reaching the Karakorram pass and controlling the entire area within the grid to the south of it.
(iv) Yet another explanation is connected with what is seen as Junejo’s attempts to hold Gen. Zia and the GHQ accountable for defence preparedness, the Siachen Glacier having become a test case for judging their capacity to defend Pakistan’s integrity. Strange as this must sound, here PPP and PML must be considered bedfellows.

(v) Finally, could it be that the new clashes in the Siachen are an attempt to reactive the area, probably setting up the stage for talks with India on the Siachen question.

3. Whatever the interplay of institutional factors between the army and the ruling Muslim League, or between the President/ COAS and the Prime Minister, or even the amorphous regime and the opposition in Pakistan, I doubt if we should pursue a dialogue with Pakistan on this question at this stage. From our experience of such worthy neighbours as the Chinese, we might take a leaf out of the book of history, fortify our position to make it as impregnable as possible, assert our claims to the extent we consider these to be conforming to our past and present position vis-a-vis Pakistan and China in this strategic area, and then examine the relative advantages of a dialogue. Merely talking to the Pakistanis, without being reasonably clear about the probability of compromise to our satisfaction is a questionable and probably self-defeating alternative.

4. There was a time earlier this year when interested parties had spread rumours of possible Sino-Pak collusion on our border with these two neighbours. Stories of what the Chinese would do to provoke us or worse i.e. teach us a second lesson abounded. With the latest episode of the unrest in Tibet, from all that I have been able to sense from the reactions of the Chinese and other diplomats here, our clear and unambiguous advice to His Holiness the Dalai Lama not to indulge in political activity, and a restatement of our position on the question of Tibet have served to improve the atmosphere for our forthcoming talks with China. It cannot be in our interest to talk about Siachen with Pakistan at this stage, much as the Pakistanis might pretend to yearn for just such a meeting.

5. I am endorsing a copy of this letter to JS(EA) also.

Yours sincerely

Letter from High Commissioner in Pakistan S.K. Singh to Defence Secretary S.K. Bhatangar.
Ambassador of India
Islamabad

S. K. SINGH
No. ISL/AMB/399/87 15 November 1987

My dear Shashikant

1. It is not unlikely that you may soon have to hold another series of meetings with Ijlal Hyder Zaidi. So I thought I should brief you on the present state of general and public thinking on this matter here.

2. Pakistan Government is now trying to be tight-lipped about the recent clashes in the Siachen; after making certain evasive, contradictory and defensive statements in response to queries raised in the National Assembly. The Pakistani public and media have expressed concern at the confusion caused by the Government’s strange responses.

3. Replying to an adjournment motion in the National Assembly in early October, the Pakistani Minister of State for Defence, Rana Naeem Mehmud said, “the situation was totally under control at the Siachen and there was nothing to be worried about”. The Minister refuted the motion stating “that the gallant officers and jawans of the army had fought a battle at 22,000 feet which was unprecedented in the annals of history”. He was pained that some members “chose to criticise the gallant men of the armed forces who laid down their lives for Pakistan”. The Deputy Speaker ruled out the motion because “technically it was so sensitive”, and ruled that the matter be discussed in the Defence Committee. He also ruled that the movers of the adjournment motion would also be present when this committee met.

4. Ms. Benazir Bhutto has forged ahead with her criticism of Gen Zia on the Siachen issue. Addressing the newly elected office bearers of Ward Committees at Rawalpindi on October 25, Ms. Bhutto said that the Indian troops recently captured the Quaid post in Siachen and re-named it as Gandhi Post. She added that Gen Zia, who claimed to be the Chief of the Army Staff, had not once visited the Siachen Glacier to boost the morale of the troops who had to perform their duties against heavy odds. Ms. Bhutto claimed that this indifference to defence matters by the rulers amounted to “high treason”. Addressing a news conference at Islamabad on October 30, Ms. Bhutto demanded a “public inquiry into the measures that led to the fiasco in Siachen Glacier last month. She said that it was unfair to send soldiers to fight in Siachen with ‘doubtful’ leadership, lack of logistic support and an ill-prepared plan and, above all, lack of courage displayed by the senior army officers in failing to visit the area. She declared that the continuation of Gen Zia was “incompatible with the national security needs”. Further, Ms. Bhutto alleged that the military regime of Gen Zia, ruling through its nominated Parliament and Prime Minister, had completely failed to safeguard the national security of the Federation.

5. On the other hand Prime Minister Junejo told newsmen at Multan on October 25 that there had been no change in the situation on the Siachen Glacier. It was more or less status quo, both India and Pakistan were at their previous positions. His Government would not deviate from its stand on the Siachen Glacier. He added that preliminary and inconclusive demarcation of the Siachen area was made in 1970-71 and “India made unjustified interference in the matter”. He said Pakistan had to take steps in self-defence.

6. The Nawa-e Waqt of October 20 reports that the Liberation League Chief KH Khurshid has impressed upon the Pakistan Government to take people into confidence over the situation in the Siachen Glacier. He said that contradictory statements issued by the Pakistan President, Prime Minister and Minister of State for Defence in this regard have caused great anxiety among the people of Pakistan, particularly that of POK. Expressing concern over the reports about demarcation of boundary and line of control in the Siachen Glacier, he said that the effort to convert the ceasefire line into line of control would be tantamount to ending of the Kashmir issue.

7. Talking to newsmen on October 14, Rana Neem said that the third meeting at Defence Secretaries level between the two countries to solve this question was likely to be held in Pakistan. He recalled that in the past two meeting both sides agreed that the issue of Siachen Glacier existed.

8. Media: Initially the media was largely silent. Articles and news-items have now started appearing in the Pak media. These are mostly historical pieces based on background articles published last year at the time of the Siachen talks. The following detailed articles are enclosed for perusal. (not included here)

   (i) The Siachen Glacier dispute - Shariq Jamal
   (ii) Siachen : Let’s not miss the wood for wood for the trees - Brig (Retd) A R Siddiqui
   (iii) Siachen : What really happened? - Maleeha Lodhi
Shariq Jamal in his piece entitled ‘The Siachen Glacier dispute’ concludes that, “the troops stationed in the Siachen should be beefed up so that they can defend every inch of soil. At the moment, the settlement of the problem seems to be a far cry”. Of course, the Siachen problem is there with the backdrop of the Kashmir issue. He concludes that this problem would bedevil relations between India and Pakistan for a long time.

Brigadier (Retired) A R Siddiqui views the recent clashes in the Siachen Glacier against the historical backdrop of the 1965 and 1971 operations. He concludes that no army, regardless of its size and orientation, can or should fight for every inch of the sacred soil. Whilst Pakistan should refuse to withdraw its claim for Siachen, its should question the wisdom of raising it to the stature of a Jehad.

Dr. Ms. Khalida Yusuf’s letter in the readers’ column of The Nation of October 07, shows surprising familiarity with terrain and tactics. She writes that, “India’s next move will be toward the Gasherbrum peak. But they are trying to divide our attention by opening new sectors in such areas as Bilafondla and Gyongla. We, through The Nation’s pages, want to know whether Pakistani armed forces have set up any strong military encampments on or near the Baltoro glacier”.

In her news Analysis in the Muslim of October 22, Maleeha Lodhi suggests that, “the talks on the issue may need to be handled at a higher lever than has so far been the case. It is the spirit of the Simla Agreement that should inform such bilateral talks. The past record shows that once positions become deeply entrenched, little can be done especially in an environment marked by mutual mistrust and suspicion. A just and peaceful solution to this problem is therefore urgent and imperative”.

Writing on the Siachen Glacier dispute in the Pakistan Times of October 22, Bashir Ahmed says, “Pakistan wishes to explore all peaceful means for the recovery of the area and it is to be hoped that its efforts will bear fruit. India’s record in not setting the long-smouldering Jammu & Kashmir issue is, however, a pointer in other direction”.

(iv) Siachen Glacier dispute - Bashir Ahmad
(v) Siachen Glacier – What is India upto - Shabbir Hussain
(vi) Indians trained in Antarctica for aggression in Siachen - Javed Nazir
(vii) A Delayed Operation - Mariana Baabar
14. The political opposition in the country, especially Ms. Bhutto, will continue to needle, tease and embarrass the Zia - Junejo Government on the Siachen issue. The Government is trying its best to defuse the criticism by trumpeting the courage and valour of the Pakistani troops who lost their lives on the Glacier.

15. Members of the Parliamentary Committee of Defence affairs were briefed in mid October by representatives of the Armed Forces with the help of slides, films and charts. I believe the Army representative said that the conditions put forward by India for talks on Siachen were not acceptable. He assured the members that Pakistan would not relinquish even a single inch of territory including Siachen.

16. The latest articles on the Siachen Glacier – an article in three instalments by Ikram Ullah, and “Siachen and our territorial integrity” by Capt (Retd) Humayun Akhtar, Pakistan Navy are rather vague and general and not been summarised in this letter.

Yours sincerely,

2267. Joint Press Release issued at the end of Third Round of India – Pakistan talks on Siachen.

The third round of talks between the Defence Secretaries of Pakistan and India was held in Islamabad from May 18 to 20, 1988. During his visit. Mr. S. K. Bhatnagar, Defence Secretary of India was received by the President, the Prime Minister and the Minister of State for Defence. In these meetings, the Defence Secretary of India conveyed the greetings and good wishes of the Indian leaders and their resolve for settlement of all bilateral matters, including the Siachen issue, through negotiations.
The two delegations had intensive discussions in two plenary sessions on May 19 and a wrap-up meeting on May 20, 1988. In addition, the two Defence Secretaries also met separately.

There was a meaningful and valuable exchange of ideas and perceptions on the Siachen issue during these meetings. The two sides considered certain specific proposals and agreed to examine these further.

The Indian delegation was headed by Defence Secretary S. K. Bhatnagar and comprised:

Mr. S. K. Singh,
Ambassador of India

SECRET

Letter from Defence Secretary T.N. Seshan to Foreign Secretary K.P.S. Menon on Siachen

Government of India
Ministry of Defence
New Delhi- 110011

DEFENCE SECRETARY

Dear Shri Menon,

This has reference to Shri Satish Chandra’s do letter No. 6893/JS (AP)/88 of 5th December, 1988 and DO letter No. 7205/JS (AP)/88 dated 19.12. 88 regarding the possibility of formulating a more flexible approach on issues concerning Pakistan in the context of PM’s forthcoming visit to Islamabad. The views of the Ministry of Defence are briefly as given below:

SIACHEN

2.1 In the fourth (last) round of Defence Secretary level talks on Siachen, our stand was that a solution to the Siachen tangle could be found if Pakistan accepted the Saltoro ridge as the ground position line beyond NJ 9842 and a thinning of troops was possible if Pakistan accepted this position. It was contemplated that the de-escalation of the situation in Siachen would be formalised on the basis of the informal understanding earlier reached in the third round of talks. However, during discussions in the fourth round, the Pakistan side not only refused to accept the ground position line along the Saltoro ridge and insisted on demilitarization as a first essential step, but also disowned their informal acceptance of the realities on the ground reached in the third round of talks. Thus the suggestion which has now been made regarding exploring the possibility of ‘an understanding being reached on demilitarisation of Siachen’ would prima facia appear to be a reiteration of the Pak position in the last round of talks and is not acceptable. The search for a via media between the two opposite positions should take into account the fact that withdrawal from the Saltoro ridge would not be advisable on strategic considerations especially considering the tremendous cost at which the Army has continued to maintain its position on the ridge line. A reasonable approach, under the circumstances, would be that a mutual disengagement on the Saltoro ridge can be affected if Pakistan is willing to accept the ridge line as the logical extension of the Line of Control beyond NJ 9842. Disengagement has to be in relation to identified positions on the ground. Prime Minister may like to make this offer with an assurance that we have no intention of making any westward advances on the Saltoro ridge nor to attempt to alter the Line of Control unilaterally.

2.2 Whether to use this suggestion or not may be left to PM to decide.

3. As regards the dates for the next round of discussions, we may suggest the second week of February, 1989. This, however, may not perhaps be necessary as it has already been agreed in the last round of talks to hold the next round of discussions in Jan/Feb 1989 on mutually convenient dates.

Mutual reduction of ground force levels

4. It is unproductive to equate the force levels of the two nations as our respective strategic needs are totally different. Our force level vis-a-vis China cannot be made negotiable with Pakistan. An added dimension to the security aspect in the subcontinent is the nuclear question. For future negotiations, it would suffice if assurances are obtained that both sides have no intention of any military offensive against the other across the international border and Line of Control and would not assist or use clandestine or terrorist force against each other.

Notification of military exercises

5. An informal understanding was reached by our COAS in June, 1984, with the VCOAS of the Pakistan army to keep the border tension free and to inform each other about movement of troops close to the border. Any formalization of this informal agreement does not seem feasible or advantageous until a larger basis of the understanding could be reached.

Evolution of fresh border ground rules.
6. The Ground Rules are essentially between the BSF and the Pakistan Rangers and relate to the International border only. There is no compromise on our consistent stand that both the Armed Forces and building of defences on the border should be outside the purview of these Rules. However, both sides should utilise and strengthen the existing machinery for preventing military confrontation along the border.

Yours sincerely,
(T.N. Seshan)

Shri K.P.S. Menon,
Foreign Secretary,
South Block,
New Delhi.

2270. Interview of Pakistan Minister of State for Defence Ghulam Sarwer Cheema.

The Minister of State for Defence Col. (Retd) Gulam Sarwar Cheema has categorically refuted the Indian claim that Pakistan have recently established certain new posts at the war-torn Siachen Glacier.

Talking to The Nation, the Minister observed that following the “suspicious activities” of Indian forces deployed in the area appropriate action had been taken by the Pakistan armed forces.

He said that no new post had been established by Pakistan during the past four months. However, “readjustment” of certain posts had been made during the past summer, he said.

He regretted that the impression of goodwill which the Indian Prime Minister had left following his visit to this country in connection with the SAARC summit has been wiped out following the recent step of his government.

To a question about the reaction of the President and the Prime Minister regarding the matter he observed that the matter was not that critical as being suggested by the international media.

He evaded questions regarding the number of casualties in the recent clashes in the area.
He noted that the Siachen talks have been postponed four times and held the Indian Government responsible for this. The Indians were delaying the talks so that they could achieve a strong hold in the area and then hold negotiations from a position of advantage, he added. He at the same time observed “I am not pessimistic too.”

He reminded that the outcome of the previous four rounds of talks between the Secretaries of Defence was not encouraging.

He asserted that the area was an integral part of the country and that every possible step would be taken to counter the Indian designs.

2271. Joint Statement issued on the conclusion of the 5th round of India – Pakistan talks on Siachen.

Rawalpindi, June 17, 1989.

The fifth round of talks between the Defence Secretaries of India and Pakistan was held in Rawalpindi from 15th-17th June 1989.

The Indian delegation comprised the following:

Shri Naresh Chandra, Secretary Defence
H.E. Mr J.N. Dixit, Indian Ambassador at Islamabad
Shri N.N. Vohra, Secretary Deptt. Of Defence Production & Supply
Shri A.K. Chatterji, Joint Secretary (AP), Min. of External Affairs
Lt-Gen. V.K. Singh, Director General Military Operations
Brig. M.R. Sharma, HQ Northern Command
Shri Rangachari, Deputy Chief of Mission, Indian Embassy in Islamabad

The Pakistan delegation comprised the following:

Syed Ijlaal Haider Zaidi, Defence Secretary
H.E. Mr Niaz A. Malik, Pakistan Ambassador at New Delhi
Lt-Gen. Imtiaz Warraich, DG Joint Staff, Joint Staff HQ
During the visit, Shri Naresh Chandra, Defence Secretary of India, called on the President, the Prime Minister, the Adviser for Defence and the Chief of Army Staff. In these meetings, the Defence Secretary of India conveyed greetings and good wishes of the Indian leaders and their desire to see an early and peacefully negotiated settlement of the Siachen issue.

The discussion were held in a cordial and friendly atmosphere. Both sides discussed specific proposals aiming at an early settlement of the Siachen issue in accordance with the Simla Agreement.

There was agreement by both sides to work towards a comprehensive settlement, based on redeployment of forces to reduce the chances of conflict, avoidance of the use of force and determination of future positions on the ground so as to conform with the Simla agreement and to ensure durable peace in the Siachen area. The Army authorities of both sides will determine these positions.

They agreed that after an in-depth examination of such proposals the next round of talks between the Defence Secretaries will be held at New Delhi in the near future.

On June 19, the Pakistan daily Nation quoted Foreign Secretary Hamayun Khan to have told the paper that India had agreed to vacate the Siachen Glacier area and “a line of demarcation will be drawn to mark the boundary”. He further said that this was an issue of great importance and would play a key role in Pakistan - India relations. He described it a good omen that India had agreed to vacate the Glacier. Humayun Khan also told the press separately that the Defence Secretaries of the two countries had agreed to deploy their forces to the points they held at the time of the signing of the Simla Agreement. The army officials of the two countries would meet to identify such points as these were not clear. He also added that the agreement on Siachen would remove the potential source of conflict between India and Pakistan. However on the same day an Official Spokesman of the Ministry of External Affairs clarified in New Delhi that no agreement had yet been reached with Pakistan on the redeployment of troops on the Siachen Glacier to their respective positions as before July 1972. The Spokesman was commenting on the statement of Pakistan Foreign Secretary Humayun Khan. The spokesman drawing attention to the joint statements said that the two sides agreed to hold talks in New Delhi in the near future to work out a comprehensive settlement to the six-year old dispute. The settlement would be based on “redeployment of forces to reduce the chances of conflict, avoidance of use of force and the determination of future positions on the ground so as to conform with the Simla Agreement”. In other word the two sides had agreed to determine “future positions” of troops on the basis of 1972 Simla Agreement, not withdraw or redeploy troops to their pre-July 1972 positions, the Spokesman added. While the Ministry of External Affairs was upset at the interpretation given by Pakistan Foreign Secretary to the joint press statement, it believed it could be due to genuine misunderstanding on the part of Humayun Khan of the agreement reached by the two sides.

2272. Briefing by Official Spokesman of the Pakistan Ministry of Foreign Affairs on Siachen.

Islamabad, June 20, 1989.

Pakistan has reiterated that an agreement has been reached between India and Pakistan on the Siachen glacier. This position was reaffirmed by the official spokesman of the Foreign Office on June 20 during a briefing of national and foreign media.

When asked to comment on the reported denial by the Indian Foreign Ministry of any such agreement, as was broadcast by BBC, the Spokesman said: “there is nothing wrong with what the Pakistani press has reported”.

The spokesman referred to the joint statement issued at the end of the meeting of the Defence Secretaries of the two countries. He read out the joint statement adding that it was self-explanatory and contains the spirit of what the Foreign Secretary, Dr. Humayun Khan said at Islamabad airport in the presence of his Indian counterpart, Mr. S.K. Singh.
The spokesman said that the joint statements clearly implied that the two sides had agreed to resolve the existing problems in the spirit of the Simla Agreement and that redeployment of troops in disputed Siachen glacier would be decided by the militarily commanders of the two countries at their meeting likely to be held soon and decide on new positions in pre-Simla accord areas.

The statement, the spokesman pointed out, further states that the proposals of the army commanders then would be reviewed in another meeting of the Defence Secretaries of the two countries to be held in New Delhi soon.

However, he said, Pakistan was trying to get the text of the statements issued by the Indian Foreign Ministry and only after that it would be possible for it to comment on the Indian reaction. The spokesman said the Indian Foreign Secretary fully endorsed the statement of Dr Humayun Khan during the joint press conference at Islamabad airport. Asked if the Pakistani Press had correctly reported the contents of the joint press conference, he replied in the affirmative, saying: "By and large the position has been correctly reported in the Pakistani Press."

Media Report on the meeting between Indian and Pakistani military officials on Siachen.

New Delhi, July 11, 1989.

The first round of talks on the Siachen issue between senior Army officers of India and Pakistan concluded in New Delhi on July 17, 1989. Contrary to expectations no joint statement was issued before the Pakistani delegation left for Pakistan. An official spokesman of the Ministry of Defence said that the discussions had been "cordial" but declined to comment any further. The two sides met for about an hour. Earlier the Pakistani delegation accompanied by the Pakistani Ambassador in India, Mr Niaz A Naik, met the Defence Secretary Mr Naresh Chandra.

The talks were essentially of a preliminary nature as a first step in a process which was ultimately aimed at the withdrawal of troops to less combative positions along the 72-km glacier. If there were an agreement on the actual situation the next step would be a joint military commission to determine places to where the troops would move. And then, perhaps a monitoring system —
The recent deliberations will form the basis of the next round, which could be at a higher level. The Defence Secretaries of both countries have been meeting regularly to resolve this dispute.

Defence Ministry sources stressed that the discussions just concluded were not a level high enough to produce a solution. They said that the seven-year-old dispute cannot be resolved soon.

Pakistan had suggested that the troops should pull back during negotiations but India insisted on a concrete agreement prior to any such step. Indian military experts feel that a hasty withdrawal could prove risky. It would be extremely difficult for the troops to regain the high positions occupied now should the Pakistani forces seize them suddenly. The route on the ground and the supply line to the area where the soldiers are in an “eye-ball to eyeball” situation gives Pakistan a definite edge.

While the glacier is of strategic importance, both sides have realized that to continue an armed conflict there is very expensive. Because of the altitude and cold pulmonary oedema strikes regularly. Evacuation in often hampered by bad weather and blizzards. The truce announced after the last meeting of the Defence Secretaries appears to holding. The process towards demilitarization was expected to gather impetus after the Prime Ministers of both countries met.

2274. Extract from the Joint Press Release relevant to Siachen issued at the end of the visit of Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi to Islamabad.

Islamabad, July 17, 1989.

The two prime Minister reviewed the discussion held on the Siachen issue of Defence Secretaries and the army authorities of Pakistan and India in June and July 1989 respectively. In this context, they approved the joint statement issued at the end the Defence Secretaries talks on the 17th of June, 1989.

10. Taking note of these discussions, the two Prime Ministers directed that the Defence Secretaries of India and Pakistan should in their future meetings work towards a comprehensive settlement in accordance with the Simla Agreement and that this settlement be based on the re-deployment of forces to reduce the chances of conflict and avoidance of the use of force, and further directed that the army authorities should continue discussions to determine future positions on the ground to which re-deployment would take place so as to conform to the Simla Agreement and ensure durable peace in the area. The next meeting of the Army authorities is being scheduled during August, 1989.

A day earlier Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi speaking at the Banquet hosted in his honour by Pakistan Prime Minister had referred to the loss of lives “in the forbidding ice-bound terrain in the north” and said “the constructive discussions held on the subject contain encouraging pointers to a possible settlement.” Unfortunately the optimism generated by the Prime Minister’s visit did not last long. Ms Bhutto while visiting Siachen Glacier in the very next month (August) said “we were hoping that negotiations would make some progress before the winter snow, “but unfortunately, that has not happened”. Pointing to the soldiers, she said “you can see everybody here is quite dug in for another winter.”

Telegram from High Commissioner of India in Pakistan J. N. Dixit to Foreign Secretary.
Islamabad, November 28, 1989.

From : Hicomind Islamabad
To : Foreign New Delhi.

The spokesman of the Ministry of Kashmir Affairs and Northern areas of Govt. of Pakistan made an announcement late on Sunday November the 26th which was given publicity yesterday (November 27th) concerning Siachen, which should be a matter of concern to us.
2. Spokesman announced that Federal Government of Pakistan has taken a decision to “revive/create two districts named Ghizar and Ghanche with certain territorial modifications of administrative and cartographic purposes”. He went on to state that “the Federal Govt. has decided to create an additional subdivision named as Siachen subdivision with headquarters at village Thagas in the Ghanche District.”

3. The Hqrs. of the new Siachen subdivision, Thagas, is apparently located 13 to 14 Kms North-East of Khapalu on the Saltoro river approximately at 3513 N latitude and 7629 (E) longitude.

4. Government Spokesman gave following further details: “as a result of revival/creation of these two districts and the additional subdivisions in the Ghanche district in the Northern area, the Federal Government is further pleased to define and notify the subdivision-wise territorial composition of the five districts in Northern areas as under:

1) Gilgit District: Gilgit subdivision, Hunza subdivision, Nagar subdivision.
2) Ghizar District: Gupis/Yasin subdivision. Punial and Ishkoman subdivision.
3) Ghanche District: Khapalu subdivision, Siachen subdivision.
4) Baltistan District: Skardu subdivision, Shigar subdivision, Kharmong subdivision
5) Diamir District: Chilas subdivision, Astore subdivision, Darel and Tangir subdivision.

This notification will become effective from 1st December 1989.

5. the objective of creating a new subdivision North-East of Khapalu and calling it the “Siachen subdivision” is obviously to shake up the spurious claims of Pakistan on the Siachen Glacier area and to use this as an administrative/legal argument when the next round of Indo-Pak discussions takes place on Siachen issue.

6. I think we should immediately take up this matter with the Pakistani authorities putting them on notice that their creating a new subdivision called Siachen subdivision will not be acceptable to us. I could personally call on the acting Foreign Secretary M. Bashir Babar and deliver a note verbale objecting to this administrative-cum-cartographic decision and endorsing a copy of it to the Defence Secretary of Pakistan. The note verbale would state that this step by Pakistan is unacceptable and it would only vitiate prospects of successful negotiations on the Siachen issue.
7. You might consider calling in the High Commissioner of Pakistan in New Delhi and making a similar demarche as early as possible.

8. Request your telegraphic instruction to be taken by me in the context of suggestion in para six above.

9. You will notice from the details of the official spokesman’s statement given above that Government of Pakistan is administratively re-organising the whole Northern area to which we have claims. This also could be objected to by us generally depending on political consideration whether we wish to touch upon the larger controversies affecting POK and related territories.

2276. Aide Memoire from Ministry of External Affairs to Pakistan Ministry of Foreign Affairs.
New Delhi, December 1, 1989.

AIDE MEMOIRE

The Government of Pakistan has brought about an unilateral alteration in the situation in the northern territories of Jammu and Kashmir through its recently announced revival/creation of two new districts and a new subdivision which has been provocatively called Siachen subdivision. This action is not in keeping with the Simal Agreement and the Government of Pakistan has no right or sanction to do the above.

The creation of the so called Siachen subdivision cannot but be construed as a provocative step which can only vitiate the atmosphere of the ongoing discussions between our two countries to work out a comprehensive mutually acceptable settlement. The Siachen glacier area has always been an intrinsic part of the Nubra Tehsil of Ladakh district of Jammu and Kashmir and continues to be under Indian administrative control and jurisdiction.

Speech of Pakistan Prime Minister Benazir Bhutto in the Joint Sitting of Parliament initiating the debate on the Situation in Kashmir.

Prime Minister Benazir Bhutto reiterated on February 10 Pakistan's principled position on the Jammu and Kashmir dispute and said that the present upheaval in Kashmir was the natural consequence of the persistent Indian repression over the last 42 years.

Initiating the debate on the evolving situation in Kashmir, in the joint sitting of Parliament, she regretted Indian attempts to externalize the Kashmiris struggle for independence, and repudiated Indian charges of Pakistan's involvement in the developments in Kashmir. She said it was the Kashmiris' will for independence. It was the fire smouldering for the last 42 years inside Kashmir. It was a revolution which had been passed on from one generation to the other.

Ms. Bhutto declared that the situation in Kashmir was not merely a law and order situation or an economic problem. It was the result of the spirit for independence and freedom on the part of the Kashmiris, she added.

She said when the entire world was in the grip of a wave of freedom and the Berlin Wall was breaking, the Kashmiris had also risen against their illegal and unconstitutional occupation by India.

She declared that the lasting solution of the Kashmir dispute had to be found through negotiations, dialogue and peaceful means. But she said that option for peace did not mean that Pakistan would abandon the Kashmiris' right for self-determination. Pakistan would never compromise on the Kashmiris' right of self-determination and it would continue to support the resolution of the dispute through free, fair and impartial plebiscite in Kashmir.

Ms. Bhutto said that Pakistan did not wish a clash or confrontation with India. There had been two wars between the two countries on this issue and Pakistan did not want the third one.

The Prime Minister assured the countrymen that Pakistan's armed forces were vigilant and ready to defend the motherland. Pakistan did not want war with India nor did it like to encourage a war-psychosis, she said.

She, however, declared that under no circumstances Pakistan's security and independence would be thrown to jeopardy. Pakistan, she said, was faced with many challenges and it must measure up to them. "We must remain steadfast and unflinching in our resolve and determination," she said adding. We will not be intimidated. Internal unity is the real strength."

Repudiating Indian accusations against Pakistan on the subject, she termed it as an attempt to externalize the issue and divert public attention from it. She said that the evolving situation in Kashmir could not be the work of external elements or the miscreants. The fact of the matter, she said, was that the Kashmiris had never accepted Indian occupation. The Kashmiris' struggle had started against Indian occupation as far back as 1947.

Ms Bhutto recalled that when the Indians went into Kashmir, the Kashmiris rose against it. It was India which rushed to the UN following which the Security Council passed resolutions for a free, fair and impartial plebiscite.

She, however, regretted that India resiled and flouted its commitment in this regard. It was unfortunate that Pandit Nehru's commitments on the subject were still to be honoured by the Indian authorities, she said.

Stating that Pakistan could not remain a silent spectator to the objective realities in Kashmir, Ms. Bhutto said that when the wave of freedom throughout the globe had changed the map of the world, the uprising in Kashmiri had a special significance. Pakistan, she said, was with them in their just cause. Pakistan had extended moral and political support to the Kashmiris in the past and would continue to do so in the future.

She said that all countries, which valued human dignity must not remain silent when blood was staining the beautiful valley of Kashmir.

Referring to the threats being hurled at Pakistan by India, Ms Bhutto said that Pakistan wanted a peaceful settlement of the Kashmir dispute and it could not be intimidated by threats. The people and the Government of Pakistan were one and would defend the integrity and solidarity of Pakistan. "We have the courage, will and capability to defend the motherland," she declared.

She vehemently denied that Pakistan was providing arms to the Kashmiris and regretted that India was trying to turn the Kashmiris' own struggle into Pakistan's struggle, which was far from the truth. She declared that it was the struggle of the Kashmiris who were waging their crusade with bare hands. "The Kashmiris' sacrifices would never go waste," she declared.

Ms Bhutto said that the situation in Kashmir was not only an important event in Pakistan's history, but also in the world history. She said the world was changing, the people were awakening and dictators were falling in the world, with the wave of freedom all around. The masses, she said, were anxious for freedom, for which they were rendering immense sacrifices.
She said that the people of Kashmir had also risen against the 42 years of repressive Indian rule. Bullets were ringing in the valley of Kashmir and the people were writing new history. But, she said, a new freedom fighter was born with every drop of blood spilling there - who was imbued with the spirit of freedom and who dreamt for revolution.

She said the Kashmiris were rendering sacrifices for their right of self-determination, and the entire valley was groaning under the impact of repression and firing.

In these circumstances, she said, Pakistan, Ummah and the world at large could not remain silent spectators. Pakistan had always supported the principle of right of self-determination, and it was in this context that Pakistan's support for Palestine, Afghanistan and Namibia had remained unflinching throughout. On the same plain, she said the Kashmiris would continue to enjoy Pakistan's full support for their right of self-determination.

She said that the nation displayed solidarity with the Kashmiris on February 5 and she appreciated the opposition's exemplary conduct in this connection. She described it as an expression of patriotism and political vision. It had proved that the Kashmir issue transcended all political differences.

She declared that Pakistan had proved to the Kashmiris that they were not alone in their struggle for the right of self-determination and 100 million people of Pakistan would continue to support them morally and spiritually and in every other way.

She also referred to the countrywide strike as a token of solidarity with the Kashmiris with discipline and restraint and saluted the people of Pakistan for their laudable conduct. This had proved, she said, that the nation would stand united in any crisis and would render all sorts of sacrifices for the country.

Ms Bhutto said that the National Assembly and the Senate had debated the Kashmir issue, in one way or the other, over the past one year. But Pakistan could not remain silent in the current situation in Kashmir.

She said that she had held detailed talks with the Azad Jammu and Kashmir President and the Prime Minister on the subject, while Foreign Minister Sahabzada Yaqub Khan expressed Pakistan's grave concern over the situation in Kashmir during his visit to the Indian capital. The government, she said, desired to afford an opportunity to the elected representatives to discuss this issue in this august forum of the Majlis Shoora (Parliament) so that a consensus could be evolved on the issue.

She said that it had remained an ardent desire of Pakistan throughout its history to find a peaceful solution of the Kashmir dispute. The desire was, however, spurned by the negative attitude of the Indian government.

Pakistan, she said, wanted to establish tension-free relations with India so that attention could be diverted to the elimination of hunger, poverty and disease.

She said that it was Pakistan's persistent endeavour to resolve outstanding problems with India on the basis of sovereign equality and principles of justice. This desire, she said, was conveyed to the new Indian government as it was voted to power.

The Prime Minister, however, regretted that as true of the past, the Indian authorities had this time as well resorted to leveling wild allegations against Pakistan, in the context of the Kashmiris' struggle for independence. What should be noted, she said, was that India had failed to provide even a single proof of Pakistan's involvement in the Kashmir situation.

She said that the PPP government was proud of having supported the Kashmiris' cause throughout. She recalled that the late Zulfikar Ali Bhutto, first elected Prime Minister of Pakistan, raised his voice vociferously in support of the Kashmiris. The Kashmiris in the valley responded comprehensively to his call for strike on February 22, 1975.

She said that the present government had brought home to the foreign governments at different levels Pakistan's principled position on the Kashmir situation. The ambassadors in Pakistan were also briefed on the situation.

She said that Pakistan was keeping a vigilant eye on these developments and assured the members that whatever steps the Pakistan Government would take would be in consonance with the aspirations of the people.

2279 Clarification provided by the Official spokesman of the Ministry of External Affairs regarding the Joint Press Statement issued on the sixth Round of Talks on Siachen.

New Delhi, November 6, 1992.

In response to a query, on the apparently differing perceptions of India and Pakistan on the outcome of the Defence Secretary level talks on the Siachen issue held in New Delhi from November 2 to 4, 1992, the Spokesman clarified that the Statement issued by the Government of India reflects the “clinical and factual position”. There was a certain progress made in terms of the technical details of disengagement of troops. It was on this particular question the talks in 1989 had floundered. On this occasion, however, the talks did not flounder on this point. The point is that when one talks of disengaging, one has to take note of the places to which we move, but the places from where we withdraw is also to be on record. The Pakistani side is still unable to see the full logic of this approach but we are trying to overcome this and are hopeful that we will move forward in the next round.
Media Briefing by Official Spokesman of Pakistan Ministry of Foreign Affairs.

Islamabad, November 11, 1992.

The Pakistan Foreign Office spokesman said on November 11 that the Siachen talks have failed, though both Pakistan and India agreed to continue the process in Islamabad for which no dates have been set. Briefing newsmen, he said: “It is regrettable that the sixth round of talks on the Siachen issue ended without forward movement. It is important that both sides should approach the Siachen question with an open mind and a constructive attitude and that neither side should insist on preconditions.”

The spokesman said the talks are stalled because India has introduced a new element of preconditions which is against the June 1989 agreement and against the Simla Agreement.

The tense relations between the two countries appear to have an effect on the latest talks, where India appears to be looking for non-issues to stall any progress. Doubts also arise that by not agreeing to any definite dates for the next round of talks, India has sent a signal that it is not willing to play ball. Even on the issue of Sir Creek, the spokesman admitted that both sides stated their known position but there was no forward movement.

Asked about the core issue between the two sides, the spokesman replied: “If the Kashmir issue is resolved, there would be no Siachen problem. The other issues would also be easily resolved.” But the spokesman was not willing to admit that these talks should be treated as a negative signal from India when he said to a query: “I would not go beyond that; regretfully the Siachen talks were without any forward movement. In stating this, we speak about the totality.”

Giving a background of these talks, the spokesman said in the sixth round of Foreign Secretary-Level talks, it was decided that the Siachen issue should be resolved in accordance with the June 1989 agreement. “It was agreed by both parties to work out a comprehensive solution to the problem,” he added.

The three main elements of the June 1989 agreement “from which India backed out this month were redeployment of forces, reduction in chance encounters and redeployment of forces on the ground. This, the spokesman said, under the Simla Agreement would ensure a durable peace in the Siachen area.

Citing the present position, the spokesman said there was no difference in working out modalities of redeployment of the two armed forces as well as no difference on monitoring arrangements by the military sides. The spokesman, however, said, “The Indian side has introduced preconditions that are not acceptable.”

Coming the second point, the spokesman said the question of delineation of the Line of Control between the last known point of NJ 9842 and the Karakorum Pass can be jointly taken up after the redeployment agreement in accordance with the June 1989 understanding.

He said Pakistan’s stand was that the area in Siachen which is a kind of a triangle should be considered no-man’s land in which neither side should intrude after they have reached an agreement in this regard. He said: “There is no problem on where the forces will go back from. In fact, there was progress on this. But we did not agree to where they insist their troops presently are.”

2282. Note circulated to the press by the Government of India after the Seventh Round of India – Pakistan talks on Siachen.

New Delhi, November 6, 1998.

As part of the composite dialogue process between India and Pakistan, discussions were held on Siachen area in Delhi on 6 November, 1998. The composite dialogue process is directed at improving relations between the two countries across a broad, building confidence and trust, putting in place a stable structure of cooperation and addressing all outstanding issues.

The Line of Control in Jammu & Kashmir, demarcated following the Simla Agreement, extends up to point NJ 9842. The areas North and East of NJ 9842 have always been under our administrative control and our troops were located at Daulat Beg Oldi, Sasoma and Zingrulma, Siachen area and area up to Karakoram Pass was patrolled regularly since 1950s. Pakistan deliberately encouraged activities such as granting illegal permission to mountaineering expeditions. Further Pakistani maps surfaced with the unacceptable arbitrary line from the grid reference NJ 9842 to the Karakoram Pass without any basis in law, tradition or fact. By late 1983, Pakistan had flown air photo missions, acquired special snow clothing and had plans to induct specially trained and equipped forces for the military occupation of the Siachen area. Under these circumstances, India had by 1984, no option but to secure its position in an area historically under its control in a state that in its entirety is its integral part.

Pakistan has not been willing to accept India’s legitimate presence in a part of its own territory. It, therefore, began hostilities against Indian posts in the Siachen area which have continued unabated. Pakistani troops have made repeated attempts to dislodge Indian troops from their positions. These attempts have all along been repulsed. It is noteworthy that Pakistani provocative actions in the Siachen area have been particularly marked since September this year. Even as our delegations were engaged in the opening round of the composite dialogue in Islamabad last month, Pakistani forces made an attempt to capture one of our posts in the area.

The Indian approach during the recently concluded discussions on Siachen has been characterized by its earnest desire to have peace and tranquility in the Siachen area and to put an end to the hostilities. With the above in mind, we have proposed an agreement on ceasing fire in Siachen. Such a step, in our view, would immediately defuse tension and the atmosphere of confrontation in the area. We have also proposed additional steps such as discussions of the modalities of implementation of the cease-fire and authentication of the existing ground position in the area so as to ensure an effective implementation of the cease-fire. After these essential steps, discussions could take place on other aspects of the issue such as disengagement/redeployment.

2283. Joint press statement issued at the end of the India – Pakistan talks on Siachen.

New Delhi, August 6, 2004.

The two day Defence Secretary level talks between India and Pakistan on Siachen, in the frame-work of the Composite Dialogue were held in New Delhi on 5 – 6 August 2004. The Indian delegation was led by Defence Secretary, Shri Ajai Vikram Singh. The Pakistan delegation was led by Defence Secretary Lt. Gen. (Retd.) Hamid Nawaz Khan.

2. The Defence Secretary of Pakistan called on Raksha Mantri, Shri Pranab Mukherjee and National Security Advisor, Shri J. N. Dixit.

3. Frank and candid discussions were held in a cordial and constructive atmosphere aimed at taking the process forward. Both sides assessed positively the ceasefire that has been in effect since 25 November 2003.

4. The military experts of the two sides also met to discuss modalities for disengagement and redeployment of troops, and agreed to have further discussions.

5. The two Defence Secretaries agreed to continue their discussions with a view to resolving the Siachen issue in a peaceful manner1.

❖ ❖ ❖ ❖ ❖

1. Before the arrival of the Pakistani delegation and to prepare for the talks the Cabinet Committee on Security (CCS) on August 4 deliberated on the options for solving the Siachen and Sir Creek disputes with Pakistan. The two-hour long meeting was given a presentation by the Army on the Siachen dispute and the implications on the country’s security if the positions on the glacier were left unmanned. The meeting chaired by Prime Minister reviewed the position regarding demarcating the Line of Control beyond the grid reference NJ 9842, withdrawing the troops to agreed positions only after recording the existing positions and defining a no-war zone.
Joint press release issued on talks between the Defence Secretaries of India and Pakistan on Siachen.

Islamabad, May 27, 2005.

The Defence Secretaries level talks between Pakistan and India to discuss Siachen Issue under the Composite Dialogue Framework were held in Islamabad on 26-27 May 2005. The Pakistan delegation was led by Defence Secretary Lt. Gen. Tariq Waseem Ghazi (Retd.). The Indian delegation was headed by Defence Secretary Ajai Vikram Singh.

The two sides held frank and constructive discussions with a view to taking the process forward. They expressed satisfaction at the ceasefire currently in place since November 2003 and agreed to its continuation.

It was agreed by the two Defence Secretaries to continue with their discussions to resolve the Siachen issue in a peaceful manner.

The Defence Secretary of India called on the Senior Minister for Defence Rao Sikandar Iqbal and Foreign Secretary Mr. Riaz Muhammad Khan.

* A day earlier on May 26 the Army Chief, General J.J. Singh said that India “wants that the 110 k.m long actual ground position line on the Siachen glacier should be authenticated by Pakistan.” Stating the Indian position, General Singh said that the country’s interests “will be served only when the Actual Ground Position Line (AGPL) is authenticated”. He said the country’s basic position was that the present AGPL between NJ 9842 to upper Saltoro ridge should be authenticated as “it will safeguard the country’s interests in the future”. The army chief added that the Army had given the plans and feedback to the government on the issue. The official sources reiterated this position on the eve of External Affairs Minister’s visit to Islamabad in October. It was stated that redeployment of Indian and Pakistani troops in the Siachen would be possible provided the two sides agreed on the current actual ground position. It was further stated that the two countries would have to arrive at an understanding on what would be done with the area where the troops were currently deployed. Media quoted official sources to say that India favoured plotting the further course of the Line of Control which stops at Point NJ9842. President Musharraf during his visit to New Delhi in April had agreed that there should be some form of verification of the actual ground positions in Siachen.
Joint Press Release issued on the conclusion of Defence Secretary-level talks between India and Pakistan on the Siachen issue.

New Delhi, May 24, 2006.

1. The Defence Secretary-level talks between India and Pakistan on the Siachen issue in the framework of the Composite Dialogue were held in New Delhi on May 23-24, 2006. The Indian Delegation was led by Shri Shekhar Dutt, Defence Secretary, and the Pakistan delegation by Lt Gen (Retd) Tariq Waseem Ghazi, Defence Secretary. The Defence Secretary of Pakistan called on Shri Pranab Mukherjee, Defence Minister of India and Shri MK Narayanan, National Security Advisor.

2. The two sides held frank and constructive discussions in a cordial atmosphere. They welcomed the successful continuation of the ceasefire since November 2003 and reaffirmed their commitment to it

3. The Defence Secretaries agreed to continue the discussions to resolve the Siachen issue in a peaceful manner

1. Almost a month ahead of the Siachen talks National Security Advisor MK Narayanan had told journalists (on April 20) that India and Pakistan were “closer” to a “final point” on the Siachen problem. Talks were on to finalise the modalities for the authentication of the present troop positions, which could pave the way for the demilitarization of the world’s highest battlefield. He said India was keen on having “iron clad guarantees” from Pakistan to avoid a scenario in which India would have to “reclaim” the positions it now occupied. “(Agreements) on Siachen and Sir Creek have been on the anvil for a long time. As far as Siachen is concerned the issue has been how do you authenticate the line where they (troops) are,” Mr. Narayanan said. Asked the minimum conditions that India would expect Pakistan to meet, he said “I don’t think we are laying any conditions.” The only point is that we are occupying positions on the Saltoro Bridge. If we move back and if for some reason it becomes necessary to go back, it becomes so much more difficult,” he said.
2286. Joint Press Statement issued at the end of India-Pakistan Defence Secretary level talks on Siachen.

Islamabad, April 7, 2007.

The Defence Secretary level talks between Pakistan and India on the Siachen issue within the framework of the Composite Dialogue were held in Rawalpindi on April 6-7, 2007. The Pakistan delegation was led by Mr Kamran Rasool, Defence Secretary while the Indian delegation was led by Mr Shekar Dutt, Defence Secretary.

2. The discussions were held in a candid and constructive atmosphere. The two sides reaffirmed their commitment to the November 2003 ceasefire between the two countries which is holding successfully.

3. The Indian Defence Secretary also called on Rao Sikandar Iqbal, Senior Minister for Defence.

4. The Defence Secretaries agreed to continue the discussions to resolve the Siachen Dispute in a peaceful manner.

1. A report in the Pakistani paper Daily Times said that Pakistan had softened its position on the question of authentication of maps indicating the present troops position on the ground as suggested by India. The report said Pakistan had offered a package deal under which it had agreed to the Indian suggestion for authentication “but asked for time-bound withdrawal of troops to the pre-conflict position as a quid pro quo”, the paper reported. “Pakistan would also like India not to use authentication for any sort of legal claims in future,” the paper quoted its sources as saying. Earlier the leader of the Indian delegation Defence Secretary Shekhar Dutt on arrival in Islamabad for the talks had said “I am sure we are heading for a resolution.” Meanwhile Defence Minister A. K. Antony on May 5 during his visit to Siachen reiterated that India was in no hurry to vacate unfriendly heights of the Siachen glacier and Saltoro Ridge saying there was no question of troops withdrawal until Pakistan agreed to authentication of the 110-km Actual Ground Position Line (AGPL). He said: “I can’t say if a solution is in sight … Before any forward movement, we must authenticate relative troop positions on sides of the AGPL.” However there was no change in the Pakistan position. India in the face of Pakistani reluctance could too make no further move. When Defence Minister was asked by journalists on June 18 whether India and Pakistan were closed to resolving the Siachen dispute, Defence Minister Mr. Antony pointed out that India had “stated very clearly” that any forward movement would depend on Pakistan agreeing to authenticate the Actual Ground Position Line (AGPL) and troops position. The Pakistani Spokesperson responded to Defence Minister’s observations and said in Islamabad on June 20th “Repetition of a rigid position that Pakistan has already rejected is not going to be of any help and will lead to nowhere.”

It may be relevant to recall that Prime Minister Dr. Manmohan Singh had proposed two years ago that the icy heights of Siachen in Jammu and Kashmir be demilitarized and converted into a “mountain of peace”. However, before undertaking demilitarization, New Delhi has been insisting on “iron-clad” authentication by Islamabad of the present troop positions of the two countries as it is wary of repetition of Kargil experience when Pakistani troops captured mountain heights vacated by India in winter. Pakistan’s reluctance to authenticate has prevented any forward movement in talks over the issue.

2287. Note from Pakistan High Commissioner in India to the Ministry of External Affairs.

New Delhi, July 14, 1948.

Office of the High Commissioner for Pakistan in India
New Delhi

No. 62(1)P/48-1893, the 14th July, 1948

Subject: Boundary dispute between Sind and Kutch State.

The High Commissioner for Pakistan in India presents his compliments to the Secretary to the Government of India in the Ministry of External Affairs and Commonwealth Relations and has the honour to enclose a copy of letter from the Dewan of Cutch to the Chief Secretary to the Government of Sind No. 1806, dated the 24th/26th May 1947 from which it will be observed that the Dewan has proceeded on the assumption that the un-demarcated part of the boundary between Sind and Cutch had been settled since its trigonometrical survey during the seasons 1881-1882 and 1883-1884. The position, however, is that the boundary in question is still in dispute and must be settled before the question of fixation of boundary pillars can be considered or taken in hand.

2. It appears that the question of settling the boundary after it was raised in 1875 was revived again in 1926. Nothing further developed until 1937-38 when a topographical survey was carried out by the Survey Department of the Government of India. The Officer-in-Charge of the Survey held a conference of the representatives of Sind and Cutch and Wav states but no agreement was arrived at. The representative of Sind claimed that the boundary line passed through the middle of the Rann of Cutch thus attaching the northern part of the Rann to Sind and wished it to be marked accordingly. That was not, however, agreed to by the representatives of Cutch and Wav States.

3. There was further correspondence between the Government of Sind and the Officer-in-Charge, No. 1 Party, Survey of India on the subject of the alignment of the boundary in question in the topographical maps of the Survey of India resulting in the latter's letter No. 1575/44-B-4, dated the 23rd August 1939 (copy enclosed) in which he agreed to omit the disputed boundary from the modern survey maps. Even if the boundary line is shown contrary to this agreement, topographical maps of the Survey of India are not authoritative as regards the alignment of fiscal boundaries.

4. Non-demarcation of the boundary on the ground is causing considerable hardship to the cattle owners of the area claimed by Sind. It has been represented to the Collector of Tharparkar that the Cutch authorities have leased out the entire Rann of Cutch to one Shadikhan who is harassing and charging exorbitant grazing fees from the maldars (cattle owner) of Thar who can legitimately claim to have free grazing as the northern part of the Rann is claimed by Sind as part of Sind territory. The Collector wrote to the Cutch authorities requesting them to stop Shadikhan from harassing the maldars but received no response.

5. The question of settling the boundary and erecting the boundary pillars between Sind and Cutch is now very important and urgent, particularly as local disputes about grazing fees might easily lead to unpleasant incidents. As, however, there has been no agreement between Sind and Cutch State on the disputed boundary for such a long time, the Government of Pakistan has suggested that a Joint Boundary Commission of the Dominions of India and Pakistan should investigate and settle the dispute. The views of the Government of India on the suggestion may kindly be communicated to the High Commission for Pakistan at an early date.

Copy of Letter No. 1806 of 1947, dated the 24th/26th May 1947 from the Dewan of Cutch to the Chief Secretary to the Government Of Sind, Karachi.

Subject: Erection of Boundary Pillars between Kutch and Sind in accordance with the boundary already agreed to.

I have the honour to state that boundary pillars were erected in 1924 on the boundary line between Cutch and Sind from the mouth of the Sir Creek to the Tri-junction of Karachi and Hyderabad Districts and Cutch State. The trigonometrical survey of the rest of the boundary between Sind and Kutch was completed during the seasons of 1881-1882 and 1883-1884, as shown in the trigonometrical sheets Nos. 40D/12 – 16, 40D/11 – 15, 40H/3 – 7, 40H/4 – 8, 40H/11 – 15, 40L/3 – 7, 40L/11 – 15, 40L/10 – 14, 40P/3 – 7 and 40P/2 – 6. A Topographical survey of the Tharparkar District was made in 1937–38 and the same boundary as mentioned above has been marked on the topographical survey sheets Nos. 40L/SE, 40L/SW and 40L/NE. The position has once again been clearly shown in the trigonometrical sheet No. 40D/SE in parts of 40H/SW which was reprinted in 1939 with additions and corrections from extra-departmental information.
2. The Government of Cutch now propose that pillars on the boundary line already determined beginning from the Tri-junction up to the end of Sind-Cutch boundary in the east should be erected during the next cold season. The Government of Cutch are prepared to supply the required pillars and to erect them in conjunction with the Sind Government on the basis of the expenses being shared equally by the parties concerned.

Copy of letter No. 1575/44-B-4, dated the 23rd August 1939 from the Officer-in-charge, No. 1 Party, Survey of India to the Collector, Tharparkar District, Mirpurkhas.

Reference your No. I.S./3684 of 1939, dated 18-8-1939.

I have the honour to inform you that as the Provincial boundary in the Rann of Cutch is un-demarcated and the authorities of Sind, Cutch State and Wav State still differ as to its correct alignment no decision can be arrived at by me. I propose to omit this boundary from the modern survey maps.

2288. Letter No. 2109, dated the 15th August 1948 from the Chief Commissioner for Kutch to the Deputy Secretary to the Government of India, Ministry of States, New Delhi.

Subject: Boundary dispute between Sind and Kutch.

Reference your letter No. F.3(2)-IA/48 dated 24th July 1948 on the above subject.

The dispute between Kutch and Sind regarding western boundary arose in 1908 with regard to the territory between the Sir and Kori Creeks. The Bombay Government at that time claimed the Sind boundary up to the Kori Creek. The dispute was mutually settled between the Bombay Government on the one side and the Mahrao of Kutch on the other. This boundary was clearly demarcated and the boundary pillars were erected in 1924 from point B – C – D. This boundary joins up with the Kutch – Sind boundary in the north – east, namely the tri-junction of the Talukas of Jati and Badin in Sind and Kutch, marked as D in the map. The boundary line runs from the middle of north of the Sir Creek, point A to B from whence it goes east to C and then northwards to D, the tri-junction of Jati, Badin and Kutch. The remainder of the boundary which runs along the northern edge of the Rann of Kutch was not in dispute then and has never been disputed since. We have always claimed and enjoyed possession of the entire Rann up to the above mentioned boundary line from point D eastwards marked E F G H I J K L.

2. The Viramgam Salt Line (as it then existed) also runs along this boundary line showing that from the tri-junction point (marked D) the then British Indian jurisdiction began. All along this line the Government of India maintained Customs Chowkies (posts) at suitable intervals and the road joining these has always been recognized as the boundary between Sind and Kutch up to the point L. Thus not an inch of land south of the Viramgam Line has ever belonged to Sind.

The Government of Kutch has also a fort (now in ruins) situated about a mile south of Rahimki Bazar (marked X).

3. Regarding the north-eastern portion of our boundary marked L M N O P, it was proposed to resurvey the Tharparkar District (in 1938) and a Survey Party was sent by the Government of India for the purpose. Taking advantage of this the Sind Government raised an objection to our existing boundary, claiming that half the Rann in that area should be included within their boundary. But on our vigorous protest the matter was dropped and the existing boundaries were allowed to continue and thus the entire Rann which had always belonged to us continues to be ours till today.

4. The letter No. 1575/44-B-4 dated 23.8.1939 from the Officer-in-Charge No. 1 Party, Survey of India to the Collector, Tharparkar District, refers to this north-eastern boundary only. The Officer-in-Charge No. 1 Party could not be presumed to have had authority to undo what had been authentically shown on the Survey of India maps as the boundary between the Province of Sind and the Kutch State, and the boundary line as shown by the Survey of India maps is the real boundary of Kutch and had never been changed or modified since (as shown in the trigonometrical sheets Nos. 40D/SE, 40H/SW, 40H/SE, 40L/SW, 40L/SE and 40P/NW).

5. New as the Wav State has become a part of the Indian Union territory the question of dispute between Kutch and Wav does not arise. It only remains to settle the boundary between Sind and the Union Government which may be done by getting suitable boundary pillars erected along the line shown in the trigonometrical sheets referred to, shown in map attached herewith from point D to N. I would like to point out that the Sind Government has always cast covetous eyes on Kutch territory adjoining their boundary, especially the Chhad Bet (marked Y) as it provides excellent pasturage. Numerous attempts had been made by the Sindhis in the past to establish their grazing claim on this area by sending cattle, sometimes stealthily and sometimes forcibly there, and this has always been resisted by the Kutch authorities and till now the Government of Kutch has succeeded in asserting their possession of this area by recovering grazing dues from the Sind cattle owners. Also we are maintaining a few camel sowars (riders) there for this purpose.

6. Historical. In ancient days the river Indus used to flow through a part of this Rann and it was not barren as it is now and produced bumper rice crop. Some of the finest rice used to be produced in this area and the Government of Kutch used to derive a revenue of 8 lakhs from it as can be seen from “Selection from the records of the Bombay Government No. XV (page 99)”, an extract of which is reproduced below:-

   “Goolam Shah (the Sind Mir) at this period (1762 A.D.) or a short time previous, had inflicted an irreparable injury on Kutch. The Rann which had received its waters chiefly from the eastern Brach of the river Indus, had yearly produced large quantities of rice, and revenue to the state of eight lakhs of Koris. By building an embankment at Ally Bunder the flow of fresh water was prevented and no resistance being offered to the sea, the Rann became quickly inundated and has remained a salt marsh, perfectly unproductive, ever since.

This also proves that even in those days this area belonged to us.

2289. Office Memorandum from the Government of India, Ministry of States to Ministry of External Affairs.

New Delhi, July 5, 1949.

No. F. 122 – P /49

Government of India
Ministry of States

Office Memorandum

Boundary dispute between Sind and Kutch.

The undersigned is directed to invite a reference to the Office Memorandum from the Ministry of External Affairs No. F. 12 – 8 (48) Pak – I dated the 2nd May, 1949 on the above subject and to state that this Ministry has carefully examined the claims of the Pakistan Government that the disputed boundary between Sind and Kutch should be investigated by a Joint Boundary Commission of the two Dominions. A dispute arose in 1908 between the Sind Government and the Kutch State regarding the western boundary between Sind and Kutch and this was finally settled in 1912 by a compromise agreed to by all the parties which defined the Western boundary from the mouth of the Sir Creek to top of the Sir Creek. This boundary was later on demarcated and boundary pillars were erected. The rest of the boundary between Sind and Kutch ran over the border of the Rann of Kutch and there has never been any dispute about this. In 1937 – 38 this boundary was rigorously surveyed by the Survey of India and the boundary is shown clearly in the Survey of India Sheet No. 40 L/S.E. The boundary between Sind and Kutch shown on this map was not demarcated on the ground but was surveyed following the limit of the Rann of Kutch as pointed out by local officials. The boundary thus surveyed was subsequently compared with the record copies of maps received from the Superintendent of Survey and Land Records, Sind, and was found in agreement suitable to the scale.

2. The Sind Government have never disputed this boundary between 1924 – 1947 when Sind was treated as a separate Province and it is surprising that they should have raised the issue on a request from the Kutch Durbar for the erection of boundary pillars. In the circumstances explained above the Government of India do not admit that there is any dispute as regards the boundary between Sind and Kutch and do not see any necessity for the appointment of a Joint Boundary Commission as suggested by the Pakistan Government.
3. The Chief Commissioner of Kutch has reported that a highly inflammatory leaflet said to have been printed at Hyderabad, Sind, is in circulation on the northern border of Kutch. It alleges that Chhad Bet belongs to Pakistan Government and that removal of grass, cattle, etc. to Kutch from this area is a heavy loss to the Pakistan Government and that measures should be taken to restore Chhad Bet to Pakistan. This Ministry considers that this kind of propaganda for a revision of boundaries should be discouraged. The Agent employed by the Kutch Government for collecting much needed fodder from this Chhad Bet area has been threatened with dire consequences by Pakistan nationals which finds expression even in newspaper articles. This may be brought to the notice of the Pakistan Government who may be requested to take strong and prompt action to stop this propaganda.

2290. Letter from Ministry of External Affairs to High Commissioner for India in Pakistan.

New Delhi, July 29, 1949.

No. F. 12 – 8/48 – Pak.I. the 29 July, 1949

From : Prem Krishan Esquire, I.C.S.,
Deputy Secretary to the Government of India.

To : His Excellency the High Commissioner for India in Pakistan,
Karachi

Subject: Boundary between Sind and Kutch.

Sir,

I am directed to forward herewith a copy of communication No. 62(1) P/48/1893 dated the 14th July, 1948, from the High Commissioner for Pakistan in India, and of its enclosures, regarding the boundary between Kutch State and Sind.

2. A dispute arose in 1908 between the Government of Sind and the Kutch State regarding the Western boundary of Sind and Kutch. This was finally settled in 1912 by an agreed compromise which defined the western boundary from the mouth of the Sir Creek to the top of the Sir Creek. This boundary was later on demarcated and boundary pillars were erected. The rest of the boundary between Sind and Kutch runs over the border of the Rann of Kutch and there has never been any dispute about this. In 1937-38 this boundary was rigorously surveyed by the Survey of India following the limit of Rann of Kutch as pointed out by local officials and in clearly shown in the Survey of India sheet No. 40. L/S.E. The boundary thus surveyed was consequently compared with the record copies of maps received from the Superintendent of Survey and Land Records, Sind, and was found in agreement suitable to the scale. The Sind Government never disputed this boundary between 1924 – 47 when Sind was a separate province and it is surprising that the Government of Pakistan should have raised the issue now on the request from the Kutch Darbar for the erection of boundary pillars.

3. The Government of Pakistan refer to letter No. 1575/44 – B - 4 dated the 23rd August, 1939 from the Office – In – Charge, No. 1 Party, Survey of India to the Collector, Tharparkar District Mirpurkhas in support of their contention that the boundary between Sind and Kutch was in dispute in 1939. No definite conclusion to this effect could be drawn in the absence of all the connected correspondence leading to this letter and the Government of India cannot understand why this question should be raised at all particularly as the boundary shown in the Survey of India Sheet No. 40 – L/S.E. was found in agreement with that shown in the record copies of maps received from the Superintendent of Survey & Land Records, Sind. The Government of India do not agree, therefore that there is any dispute as regards the boundary between Sind and Kutch or that there is any necessity for the appointment of a joint boundary commission as suggested by the Government of Pakistan.

4. I am to request that the above reply may kindly be conveyed to the Pakistan Government at an early date.

Yours faithfully

Sd/- Prem Krishan
Deputy Secretary.

No. IHC-5-Poll/49-IX. the 10th August, 1949

The Indian High Commission present their compliments to the Government of Pakistan, Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Commonwealth Relations, Karachi, and in reply to the Communication from the High Commissioner for Pakistan in India addressed to the Government of India, Ministry of External Affairs, No. 62(1)P/48-1893, dated the 14th July, 1948, regarding the settlement of boundary dispute between Sind and Kutch State, state as under.

2292. Note from the Pakistan Ministry of Foreign Affairs to High Commission of India in Pakistan.

Karachi, May 29, 1951.

Government of Pakistan
Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Commonwealth Relations, Karachi

No. IA.3/2/50. the 29 May, 1951.

The Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Commonwealth Relations, Government of Pakistan, present their compliments to the High Commission for India in Pakistan and, with reference to their Note No. Poll. 30/50 – II, dated the 22/23rd November, 1950, have the honour to say that they have thoroughly examined the points raised by the High Commission in their above note:-

(1) It is not a fact that the Northern edge of the Rann of Kutch has always been the accepted boundary. The High Commission will be aware that this boundary is under dispute which is borne out not only by the relevant correspondence but also by the 70 mile India First Edition Map, printed at the Survey of India’s office, in which the word “disputed” is added to this boundary. The map under reference is thus showing the correct position.

(2) And (6) The High Commission have used the rather vague term “inaccurate” and unless details are given the Ministry regret they can offer no comments.
(3) As the High Commission are aware, the State of Jammu and Kashmir and the State of Junagadh are forming the subjects of disputes pending before the U.N., and the Government of Pakistan do not acknowledge their occupation by India. The High Commission are, therefore, wrong in claiming that these states are forming part of India.

(4) The boundary immediately West of that which forms the subject of dispute No. IV between India and Pakistan in the Karimganj area has been drawn in accordance with the Bagge decision as accepted and published by both, the Governments of India and Pakistan.

(5) As the High Commission are aware, the boundary in the vicinity of the junction of the Mathabhanga and the Ganges is being demarcated jointly by both the Governments in accordance with the Award of the Inter-Dominion Boundary Dispute Tribunal.

2. The Government Pakistan do not recognize the occupation of Hyderabad by India and it is, therefore, correct to show her on the map separately.

3. The Ministry avail themselves of this opportunity to renew to the High Commission the assurances of their highest consideration.

To,
The High Commission for India in Pakistan,
Karachi.

Note from Pakistan Ministry of Foreign Affairs to High Commission of India in Pakistan.

Ministry of Foreign Affairs And Commonwealth Relations
Karachi

No. 1(I) 3/9/54. the September 20/22, 1954

Subject: Sind – Kutch Boundary.

The Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Commonwealth Relations, Government of Pakistan, presents its compliments to the High Commission for India in Pakistan and, with reference to their Note No. IHC-5-Poll/49-IX, dated the 10th August 1949, has the honour to state that the boundary between Sind and Kutch, for the purpose of demarcation, may be divided into two sectors, as under :-

(a) From the mouth of the Sir Creek to a point approximately long. 68º 48’ E, lat. 23º 58´ N, as explained in paragraph 3 below.

(b) from the latter point onwards.

2. The sector of the boundary included in (a) above has been demarcated and there is no dispute about it.

3. The remaining portion of the boundary mentioned in (b) above was never demarcated. It will be seen from the map appended to Bombay Government resolution No. 1192, dated 24th February 1914, to which the Indian High Commission refer, that the Runn was not a part of the Cutch State and that the Resolution defined the boundary merely from the mouth of the Sir Creek to the point longitude 68º 48´ E, latitude 23º 58´ N. It is therefore obvious that the rest of the boundary in sector (b) was never surveyed or demarcated but continued to be in dispute; nor did the Government of Sind ever accept the claim now brought forward by India between the years 1924 and 1947 when Sind was a separate Province. This is clear from the following facts:-

(i) In his letter No.1171/44-B, dated 19th May 1938, Major G.H. Osmaston, Officer-in-Charge, No. 1 Party, Survey of India, wrote to the Collector of Tharparkar that no regular demarcated boundary existed for survey between the States of Cutch and Wav and District of Tharparkar and that the territorial claims and representations of these authorities in the Runn of Cutch were discordant.
ii) In a subsequent letter No. 100/44-B-4, dated 16th January 1939 from Captain C.A. Biddle, Officer-in-Charge, No.1 Party, to the Superintendent of Survey and Land Records for Sind, it was pointed out that the external boundary of Tharparkar district remained “undecided”.

(iii) The map of India prepared by the Survey of India in 1938 also clearly shows this boundary as disputed.

(iv) Again Mr. W.H. Strong, Officer-in-Charge, No. 1 Party, in his letter No. 1575/44/B-4, dated 23rd August 1939, to the Collector of Tharparkar, wrote: “as the Provincial boundary in the Runn of Cutch is undemarcated and the authorities of Sind, Cutch State and Wav State still differ as to its correct alignment, no decision can be arrived at by me and I propose to omit this boundary from the modern survey maps”. But the Collector of Tharparkar instructed him not to omit the boundary but to show it as in old maps by means of a special symbol or a footnote indicating that it is in accordance with the old records “but in dispute”.

4. Besides these documentary proofs, there are innumerable instances to show that the Government of Sind exercised unfettered jurisdiction in the Runn of Cutch. Some of these may be enumerated here:-

(i) The boundary between Sind and Cutch was stated to be half a mile to the north of the dharamsala (Place of religious worship) in the Giandi ji Chann by the Mukhtiarkar of Diplo in his reply to a query from the Political Superintendent, Tharparkar (Superintendent’s Note No. 3706, dated 8th June 1875).

(ii) In 1856, the Commissioner in Sind sanctioned a sum of Rs. 2,800 for a dharamsala at Narrabate in the Runn (sic).

(iii) In 1923-24 an area measuring 20-27 acres was brought under cultivation by a certain Arbab Mir Khan and his son Mohammad Unis, and another piece of land measuring 20-23 acres in 1924-25 on Seanthro Canal. This canal, about 40 years ago, used to take off from Dhoro Puran at village Rahimki Bazar and flowed 7 or 8 miles in the Runn. The revenue due on the paddy crop cultivated with the water of this canal was collected by the Taluka of Diplo. The two old villages Vigakot and Kanjhikot (in the Runn), which are extinct now, were under the jurisdiction of the Government of Sind.

(iv) The lake called Shakur-ji-Mian which was about 6 miles from Rahimki Bazar in the Runn used to get water from the Dhoro Puran and the lease for catching fish in the lake fetched Rs. 50,000 a year to the Government of Sind.

(v) A certain Gul Muhammed of Vingi, Taluka Diplo, got a tank excavated in the Char Bet about 100 years ago. The tank is still in existence and is called after his name as Gul Muhammed tank.

(vi) In 1936-37 a certain Ramsingh, Head Constable of Police, Rahimki Bazar, was murdered in the Runn at a distance of 24 miles from Rahimki Bazar. The Police Commissioner and other authorities of Cutch State refused to take action in the matter because the murder took place within British territory. Consequently the investigation was conducted by the Sub-Inspector of police, Diplo.

(vii) The cattle of three desert Talukas, viz., Mithi, Diplo and Nagarparkar, used to graze freely in Char and other neighbouring Bets without payment of any charges. This continued up to 1943-44 and the trouble arose only when Shadi Nohri appeared on the scene. This Shadi Nohri was given a contract in the Char Bet by the Cutch State authorities. The Collector of Tharparkar in his letter No. J – 270, dated 17th January 1947, to the Secretary to the Resident for Western India States at Baroda protested against the action of the State authorities in giving the contract in the Bet to Shadi Nohri, as it was under dispute. The Dewan of Cutch in his letter No. 1806, dated 24/26th May 1947 to the Government of Sind suggested that boundary pillar should be shown on the topographical sheets. As the topo sheets were unauthentic and unreliable, the Collector of Thar Parkar, in his letter No. 8680, dated 25th August 1947, informed the Revenue Commissioner that the question of boundary pillars can only be taken up after the boundary has been determined.

(viii) In 1945 an offence was committed at a place between Badin-Nagarparkar Road and Bedia Bet over eight miles in the Runn, and only 1½ miles to the north of Bedia Bet. On 26th February 1945 the Diplo Police registered a case under sections 324 and 333 I.P.C. read with section 148 I.P.C. and rule 81(4) of the Defence of India Rules. The Foujdar at Khawaro in Cutch state was approached by the Officer-in-Charge of the Police Station Khadai, Taluka Diplo, for assistance in arresting the accused but he refused to render any assistance because the offence was committed outside Cutch State and consequently only one accused out of 8 was arrested in Cutch and tried by the First Class Magistrate, Diplo.

(ix) In criminal case No. 19 of 1945 the police diaries reveal that the murder of Ramsarup of the Customs Department was committed in the Runn on the road from Rahimki Bazar to Cutch, about 18 miles from Ding, Sind Customs Station. The accused could not, however, be secured because the Commissioner of Cutch State at Bhuj did not render any assistance to the Diplo Police Station.

(x) An offence under section 394 I.P.C. was committed by Hashim and Khan Muhammad near Vigaokot on the thoroughfare leading to Cutch proper in the Runn at a distance of 10 – 12 miles from Ding- jo–Pattan (Ferry of Ding). The accused were tried and convicted by the First Class Magistrate, Diplo.

5. From the facts mentioned in paragraphs 3 and 4 above it is abundantly clear that the boundary between Sind and Cutch from the top of Sir Creek onwards has always been in dispute. In regard to the topo sheets of the Survey of India maps, on which the Government of India base their claim, the Government of Pakistan would point out that topographical maps are not considered authoritative in the case of boundary alignment. In the circumstances the Government of Pakistan trust that the Government of India will agree to the demarcation of the boundary in the sector mentioned in (b) in paragraph 1 above. If, however, the Government of India do not see their way to agree to this suggestion, the Government of Pakistan propose that a Conference should be held between representatives of the two Governments as soon as the Government of India are prepared to discuss this matter. If the Government of India consider it doubtful that a settlement could be reached by correspondence or conference, the Government of Pakistan are prepared to agree to the reference of this dispute to an impartial tribunal on the lines of the tribunal decided upon at the Indo-Pakistan Conference held at Calcutta in October 1953.

The Ministry avails itself of the opportunity to renew to the High Commission the assurances of their highest consideration.

2294. Note from High Commission of India in Pakistan to Pakistan Ministry of Foreign Affairs.

Karachi, May 9, 1955.

High Commission for India in Pakistan
Karachi

No. F. IHC – 5 – Poll. /49 – IX. the 9th May 1955

The High Commission for India in Pakistan present their compliments the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Commonwealth Relations of the Government of Pakistan and with reference to their Note No. I (I) 3/9/54, dated the 22nd September, 1954, in reply to the High Commission’s Note No. IHC–5– Poll./49 – IX, dated the 10th August, 1949, regarding the Indo – Pakistan boundary between Kutch and Sind, and have the honour to state as follows:

2. The Government of India, after careful and thorough consideration, categorically and most emphatically repudiates the claim of the Government of Pakistan that the boundary between Kutch and Sind from the top of Sir Creek onwards “has always been in dispute” for the reasons given in the three sub – paragraphs below:

(1) The only dispute which ever arose between Kutch and Sind on their boundary was in respect of the territory between the Sir Creek and the Kori Creek. The Sind Government claimed its boundary up to Kori Creek. According to them the boundary should have been from the mouth of the Kori Creek to near the top of the Creek and from there due North up to the tri-junction of Jati and Badin talukas in Sind and the Kutch State. The dispute was discussed and a compromise reached in 1913. The Agreement was sanctioned by the Government of India and the Government of Bombay in their Resolution No. 1192, dated the 24th February, 1914, defined that “the boundary between Kutch and Sind should be the green line in the accompanying map from the mouth of the Sir Creek to the top of the Sir Creek at the point where it joins the blue dotted line; from there it should follow the blue dotted line due East until it joins the Sind boundary as marked in purple on the map”. Form the terminus of the blue dotted line in the East at the point approximately longitude 68º 48´ E latitude 23º 58´ N, the Sind boundary, marked in purple on the relevant map, was clearly shown as running to the North till it joined the tri-junction point of Jati taluka (Karachi District) and Badin taluka (Hyderabad District) in Sind and the Kutch State and then from the tri-junction point, the Sind boundary followed the Northern limit of the Rann of Kutch. Under this compromise, the Kutch State agreed to Sind’s jurisdiction over the triangular portion covered by the following three points, namely, (a) top of the Sir Creek, (b) tri-junction point of Jati and Badin talukas in Sind and the Kutch State and (c) a point approximately at longitude 68º 48´ E latitude 23º 58´ N. There was no dispute about any other portion of the boundary between Kutch and Sind.

(2) This agreement was then put into effect. The boundary was duly surveyed and demarcated by the construction of pillars on the ground along the line from the top of Sir Creek due East to the point longitude 68º 48´ E latitude 23º 58´ N and then along the line from the latter point due North to the tri-junction point of Jati and Badin talukas in Sind and the Kutch State. These operations were carried out jointly by the Sind and Kutch authorities in 1923–24. This position should be well known to the Government of Pakistan in view of the documents adduced in Appendix I, attached to this Note.

(3) The boundary from the tri-junction point of Jati and Badin talukas in Sind and the Kutch State due East along the northern limit of the Rann of Kutch till it meets the tri-junction point of Jodhpur, Sind and Kutch, was not demarcated by the construction of pillars and it was the question of demarcation of this portion of the boundary between Kutch and Sind which was taken up with the Government of Sind by the Kutch Darbar in their letter No. 1806 of 1947 dated the 24th/26th May 1947, referred to by the High Commission for Pakistan in India in their Note No. 62(1)P/48 – 1893, dated the 14th July 1948, to the Ministry of External Affairs of the Government of India.
3. The Government of India are, therefore, amazed that the Government of Pakistan should have thought fit to raise an absolutely untenable claim that the boundary between Kutch and Sind from the top of the Sir Creek “has always been in dispute” without ascertaining the correct facts, which were available from the relevant records of the Sind authorities in their possession. It is indisputably established that the boundary between Kutch and Sind from the top of the Sir Creek due East to the point longitude 68º 48´ E latitude 23º 58´ N and from the latter point due North to the tri-junction point of Jati and Badin talukas in Sind and the Kutch State on the Northern limit of the Rann of Kutch was properly demarcated on the ground. It is, therefore, not understood how the Government of Pakistan ignores this stretch of boundary running due North from the point approximately longitude 68º 48´ E latitude 23º 58´ N up to the tri-junction of Jati, Badin and Kutch. Once this position is understood, Pakistan’s contention of an alleged line running within the Rann of Kutch becomes meaningless. The question is not of a line from the point at longitude 68º 48´ E latitude 23º 58´ N up to the tri-junction of Jodhpur, Sind and Kutch but of a line from the tri-junction of Jati and Badin talukas and Kutch up to the tri-junction of Jodhpur, Sind and Kutch.

4. The Government of Pakistan will thus doubtless appreciate that their claim that the boundary between Kutch and Sind from the top of the Sir Creek “has always been in dispute” and that the boundary from the point longitude 68º 48´ E latitude 23º 58´ N onwards was “never surveyed or demarcated” is absolutely without any foundation. The portion of the Kutch – Sind boundary which remains to be demarcated is from the tri-junction of Jati and Badin talukas and Kutch due East along the Northern limit of the Rann of Kutch till it meets the tri-junction of Jodhpur, Sind and Kutch. The Sind authorities did not raise any dispute in regard to this portion of the boundary either at the time of negotiations between the Government of Bombay and the Maharao of Kutch leading to the rectification of the Western boundary between Kutch and Sind as defined in the Government of Bombay Resolution No. 1192 of the 24th February 1914, or at the time of the actual demarcation of the boundary from the top of the Sir Creek to the tri-junction point of Jati and Badin talukas and Kutch in 1923 – 24, or at any other time till the topographical survey of the area covered in Sheets Nos. 40 L and 40 P was undertaken by the Survey of India in 1937 – 38. The claim put forward by the Mukhtiarkar of Nagar Parkar in the meeting held between the representatives of Sind, Kutch and Wav and the Officer – in – Charge, No. 1 Party, Survey of India, on the 22nd January 1938, was not supported by the competent authorities of Sind, who accepted the alignment of the Sind boundary as shown in the Sind Topo Survey Sheets of the Survey of India, which would be obvious from a perusal of all the relevant correspondence as indicated in Appendix 2 attached to this Note.
In the light of facts stated in Appendix 2, the Government of India would like to point out that the “documentary proofs” cited by the Government of Pakistan in Sub-paragraphs (i) to (iv) of paragraph 3 of their Note under reply can in no way be substantiated by the relevant correspondence between the authorities concerned in Sind on the one hand and the Officer-in-Charge, No. 1 Party, Survey of India, on the other, read as a whole, or from the relevant records of the Survey of India and are, therefore, wholly misconstrued. The fact that the boundary between Kutch and Sind as shown in Sheets Nos. 40 L and 40 P of the Survey of India was based on the original maps furnished by the Superintendent of Survey and Land Records in Sind and was accepted by the competent authorities of Sind, is beyond dispute.

5. The Government of India have also carefully considered the contention of the Government of Pakistan in paragraph 4 of their Note under reply that the Government of Sind used to exercise “unfettered jurisdiction” in the Rann of Kutch as well as the instances quoted by them in support of their contention and find that they are not only totally misconceived but are also without any substance, which would be clear from the position explained in Appendix 3, attached to this Note.

6. The Government of India are, therefore, constrained to express their deep regret and painful surprise that the Government of Pakistan should have put forward after a lapse of about five years an utterly untenable claim in regard to the Indo-Pakistan boundary between Kutch and Sind without ascertaining the true facts, which, the Government of Pakistan will no doubt appreciate, is hardly conducive to the promotion of good neighborly and friendly relations between the two countries. The fact that there is absolutely no dispute about the Kutch–Sind boundary from the tri-junction of Jati and Badin talukas and Kutch due East along the Northern limit of the Rann of Kutch to the tri-junction of Jodhpur, Sind and Kutch, and that this boundary had all along been accepted by the Government of Sind would be clearly established from the following:

(1) The Kutch–Sind boundary from the tri-junction of Jati and Badin talukas and Kutch due East along the Northern limit of the Rann of Kutch as shown in the Survey of India Sheets Nos. 40 D and 40 H (including part Sheets) had never been disputed by the Government of Sind which is further borne out from the facts given below.

(i) The area covered in Sheet No. 40 D was resurveyed (blue print verification survey) during 1939–40. The boundaries were shown in this Sheet after they were compared against the relevant original taluka maps furnished by the Sind authorities. All discrepancies were corrected after verifying the position from the Sind authorities.
(ii) The area covered in Sheet No. 40 H was resurveyed (blue print verification survey on $1\frac{1}{2} = 4$ miles scale) during 1943–44 from the Sind side and the Kutch–Sind boundary was clearly shown along the Northern limit of the Rann of Kutch in a mosaic received by the Survey of India from their Frontier Circle for the purpose of compilation of Hind 5014 Sheets Nos. 42 NE and 42 SE. The relevant records are, however, not available with the Survey of India but it is presumed that the Kutch–Sind boundary was shown with the approval of the competent Sind authorities in accordance with the usual practice.

(2) The remaining portion of the Kutch–Sind boundary from the tri-junction of Jodhpur, Sind and Kutch due West along the Northern limit of the Rann of Kutch as shown in the Survey of India Sheets Nos. 40 P and 40 L (including part Sheets) was based on the relevant original taluka maps furnished by the Superintendent of Survey and Land Records in Sind and was in accordance with the instructions of the competent authorities of Sind as explained in detail in paragraph 4 above.

7. The Government of India, therefore, maintain that the Kutch–Sind boundary from the tri-junction of Jati and Badin talukas and Kutch due East along the Northern limit of the Rann of Kutch to the tri-junction of Jodhpur, Sind and Kutch has all along been shown by the Survey of India on their relevant map Sheets as verified and as accepted by the competent authorities of Sind and that the Government of Pakistan cannot, therefore, raise any claim in respect of this boundary. The Government of India would, however, like to make it clear that the agreement of the Kutch Darbar was not obtained in the case of the alignment of the Kutch–Sind boundary on certain maps of the Survey of India and they reserve their right to claim certain areas of the Kutch territory which have been wrongly shown in the territory of Sind on those maps.

8. The Government of India would like to affirm in the strongest terms that the only question which now remains to be settled is the demarcation of the Indo-Pakistan boundary between Kutch and Sind from the tri-junction of Jati and Badin talukas and Kutch due East along the Northern limit of the Rann of Kutch to the tri-junction of Jodhpur, Sind and Kutch and that the Government of India are perfectly willing to discuss any proposal for the demarcation of this portion of the Kutch–Sind boundary by the construction of pillars in accordance with the procedure already agreed upon between the two Governments on other sectors of the Indo–Pakistan boundary.

The High Commission takes this opportunity to renew to the Government of Pakistan the assurances of their highest consideration.

APPENDIX - 1

1. In a letter No. 1244 dated the 12th July 1923, to the Collector of Karachi, the Superintendent of Land Records in Sind wrote:

   "In reference to your letter No. 147/R dated the 21st June 1923 I have the honour to state that the work of demarcation of the Sind – Cutch boundary will be started on the 1st November 1923. It will commence from the top of Sir Creek at the point (A) where the green line from the mouth to the top of the Creek joins the blue dotted line, vide map attached. The boundary due east shown in the blue dotted line will at first be demarcated and next “the Sind boundary” marked in purple on the map running north to the tri-junction of Jati and Badin talukas and the Kutch State."

2. The theodolite survey of the boundary will be done by a Revenue Surveyor who will be deputed by me on the work and he will be assisted by Khalasis (helpers) up to six in number who will be employed by my order for the purpose. The Cutch authorities will undoubtedly send their own responsible Survey Official to represent them from the start to the finish of the work who will accompany my Revenue Surveyor along the whole boundary line during the progress of the operation.

2. In a further letter No. 42, dated the 10th January 1924, to the Collector of Karachi, the Superintendent of Land Records in Sind stated:

   * * * * * *

2. The total length surveyed amounts to 45 miles of which 22 miles are comprised in the southern line and 23 miles in the eastern line joining the tri-junction of Badin and Jati talukas and Kutch territory in the north.

3. The survey work was actually started on the 28th November 1923 and completed on the 19th December, i.e. in about three weeks ……

3. In a letter No.17, dated the 2nd February 1924, to the Government of Bombay, the Political Agent for Kutch, while forwarding a copy of letter No. 53 dated 31-1-1924 from the Dewan of Cutch, stated that “it will be seen that the work of fixing the pillars on the Sind-Kutch boundary is progressing favorably and the Cutch Darbar expect to complete the work by the 20th February 1924.”

The relevant extract from the above-mentioned letter of the Dewan of Cutch is reproduced below:

“… I have the honour to state that from a report received from the Cutch Officer at Lakhpat it appears that in all 133 pillars were to be fixed as under:

67 pillars on the line from East to West on the Muio Creek, and 66 pillars on the Kiriawali line from North to South.

2. Of the above number all the pillars (67) on the Muio line and 14 on the Kiriawali line have been already fixed i.e. in all 81 pillars are fixed. The work is now being proceeded with on the Kiriawali line, and the party expects to complete the whole work by the 20th February 1924.”

4. The Secretary to the Government of Bombay, Finance Department, in a Note No. 3085-A dated the 24th March 1924, for the Legislative Council, stated:

“In connection with the question of rectification of the Sind – Cutch boundary which was decided upon by Government a few years back a settlement was made by the Collector of Karachi with the Cutch Darbar whereby the latter have to arrange for the supply of stones and fixing thereof along the boundary at a total estimated cost of Rs. 5,880, half of which is to be borne by this Government ………. The work is now coming to an end and it is understood that the original estimate which was made by the Cutch Darbar is likely to be exceeded. The Cutch Darbar has not presented their claim and Government is unable to state what their share will be. However, in order that the provision of Rs. 2,940 may not lapse the Commissioner in Sind at his own suggestion was asked to pay the amount to the Darbar immediately…."

APPENDIX-2

1. The Officer-in-Charge, No. 1 Party, Survey of India, in his letter No. 1171/44-B-4 dated 19-5-1938 to the Collector of Thar Parkar, while stating that the territorial claims advanced by the representatives of Sind, Kutch and Wav in the Rann of Kutch were discordant, wrote that “therefore I forward herewith a Trace showing the extent of the Rann and areas surveyed during the last field season with the request that you will kindly show on it the correct alignment of the external boundaries of Tharparkar District in the Rann of Cutch and also with Wav and Cutch States, with copies of the relevant notifications, to enable us to show these boundaries on topographical maps now being drawn in this office.”

2. The Superintendent of Survey and Land Records in Sind in his letter No. T. 372 dated 12-11-1938 to the Collector of Thar Parkar, a copy of which was also forwarded to the Officer-in-Charge, No. 1 Party, Survey of India, under his letter No. T. 373 dated 12-11-1938 while stating that the boundaries of the talukas in question were derived from the topographical survey sheets of the Survey of India and were reproduced to the present reduced scale of the maps in his office, wrote that “it would suffice if the Officer-in-Charge, No. 1 Party, Survey of India, is informed that the boundaries as originally taken from the Survey of India maps stand unaltered so far the taluka maps in question are concerned. If the maps of this office showing the boundaries in question are however required by the Officer-in-Charge, No. 1 Party, Survey of India, the needful will be done.”

3. The Collector of Thar Parkar in his letter No. 6777 of 1938 dated 6-12-1938 to the Officer-in-Charge, No. 1 Party, Survey of India, confirmed that “the external boundaries of the Thar Parkar District stand unaltered as originally taken from the Survey of India maps.”

4. The Officer-in-Charge, No. 1 Party, Survey of India, in his letter No. 100/44-B-4 dated 16-1-1939 to the Superintendent of Survey and Land Records in Sind stated that the question of boundaries remained undecided and therefore requested that “you may please either send me a full reference (i.e., the number, scale and year of edition) of the Survey of India maps from which you originally took off the boundaries, or if such information be not available with you your office maps in original as proposed by you in your letter under reference) contained the boundaries, so that the necessary information can be extracted from them here in my office.”

5. The Superintendent of Survey and Land Records in Sind in his letter No. 357 of 1939 dated 8-2-1939 to the Officer-in-Charge, No. 1 Party, Survey of India, while forwarding the relevant maps, stated that:

“… the boundaries of all the talukas sub-divisions and the districts of the Province of Sind have been reproduced from the Sind Topo Survey sheets of the Survey of India …………..

In the case of Mithi and Nagar Parkar talukas in question, it is, however, seen that the boundaries of the talukas were reproduced by the Photocinco Office, Poona, from the maps supplied by this office on a smaller scale of 4 miles to an inch. These maps appear originally to have been prepared from the Indian Atlas (4 miles = 1 inch) edition 1871 of the Survey of India.

The original maps of Mithi and Nagar Parkar talukas referred to above and the map of Thar Sub-division showing the required present unaltered boundaries are forwarded herewith for your reference ………

The boundaries shown on these original maps furnished by the Superintendent of Survey and Land Record in Sind were found in agreement suitable to scale with the boundaries depicted on Sheets No. 40 L and 40 P drawn by the Survey of India as a result of the survey carried out in 1937 – 38.

The Original maps referred to above were returned to the Superintendent of Survey and Land Records in Sind by the Officer-in-Charge, No. 1 Party, Survey of India, with his letter No. 775/44-B-4 dated 2-5-1939 and their receipt was acknowledged by the Superintendent of Survey and Land Records in Sind in his letter No. 889 of 1939 dated 11-5-1939.

6. In view of the facts stated above, the stand taken by the Collector of Thar Parkar in his letter No. I.S.4416 dated 2-10-1939 to the Officer-in-Charge, No. 1 Party, Survey of India, in regard to the intention of the latter “to omit the boundary from modern survey maps”, was justified in so far as it instructed him not to omit the boundary but to show it as in old maps. There is, however, no justification for the stand taken by the Collector that the words “but in dispute” should be added to a footnote in the map to the effect that the boundary was in accordance with the old maps, particularly when the boundary in question was being shown according to the original maps furnished by the Superintendent of Survey and Land Records in Sind and the instructions of the Collector of Thar Parkar himself in his letter No. 6777 dated 6-12-1939 mentioned above.

The fact that the latter stand taken by the Collector of Thar Parkar was not sustained by the Director of Map Publication when the matter was referred to him for a decision by the Officer-in-Charge, No. 1 Party, Survey of India, is obvious from the orders contained in his letter No. 67/5-D dated 25-11-1939 to the effect that the boundary should continue to be shown to the best of their knowledge and that a footnote inserted saying that “the boundary between Sind and States of Western India is taken from previous maps.”

7. The addition of the word “disputed” along the Kutch-Sind boundary in the 70 Miles Map of India Edition printed in 1938 has been carefully investigated by the Government of India. It appears that the word “disputed” was added as a result of the confusion arising from the territorial claim advanced by the Mukhtiarkar (officer) of Nagar Parkar at the time of the topographical survey of the areas covered in Sheets No. 40 L and 40 P carried out by the Survey of India in 1937-38, which was, however, neither substantiated nor pursued further by the competent authorities of Sind, who accepted the Kutch-Sind boundary as shown in Sheets No. 40 L and 40 P.

The fact that the addition of the word “disputed” was an error and was rectified by the Survey of India themselves is borne out from their relevant records. After completing the printing of the map, the then Director of Map Publication ordered an investigation as to whether this boundary was in fact “disputed” or not. As a result of this investigation, he ordered the word “disputed” to be deleted from the map and this correction was carried out by hand on the fair drawn original as well as on the office copies and the stock copies. This correction was, however, not carried out on the standing negatives due to an oversight with the result that the subsequent reprints of the 1938 Edition and also the 1947 Edition of this map repeated the error of adding the word “disputed” along the Kutch-Sind boundary.

No importance can, therefore, be attached to the addition of the word “disputed” along the Kutch-Sind boundary in the 70 Miles Map of India which was merely an error as explained above.

APPENDIX - 3

1. The dharamsala in the Giandiji Chhan and at Marrabate referred to by the Government of Pakistan in sub-paragraphs (i) and (ii) of paragraph 4 of their Note, apparently relate to the Gaenda Bet in the Rann of Kutch. The fact that the Kutch Darbar exercised jurisdiction over the entire Rann including this Bet and that this was accepted by the British authorities as early as 1854-55 would be apparent as follows:-

(i) The Assistant Political Agent for Kutch, in his memorandum No. 720, dated 20th December 1854 to the Mahrao of Kutch, forwarded a proposal from the Deputy Collector and Magistrate of Thar Parkar for the construction of a dharamsala in the Gaenda Bet in the middle of the Rann but as the Bet in question was within the boundary of Kutch, he wanted to be informed of the opinion of the Mahrao of Kutch.

(ii) The Mahrao of Kutch in his memorandum No. 383, dated 27th December 1854 to the Assistant Political Agent, did not agree to the construction of a dharamsala by the Sind authorities in the Gaenda Bet but offered to construct one himself.
The Assistant Political Agent for Kutch in his memorandum No. 21, dated 16th January 1855 to the Mahrao of Kutch stated that “as the Gaenda Bet is lying between Dhrobana and Balihari and as such within your State territory, you will build a rest house and sink a well in the said Bet”.

As regards the statements made by the Government of Pakistan in subparagraphs (iii) and (iv) of paragraph 4 of their Note, any action taken by the Sind authorities in the area of the Rann of Kutch below Rahimki Bazar, where they had no jurisdiction, without the knowledge or the agreement of the Kutch Darbar, could have no effect whatsoever on the rights of the Kutch Darbar. The fact that the Kutch Darbar exercised full jurisdiction up to the Northern limit of the Rann of Kutch just below Rahimki Bazar is clearly established by the existence of a fort known as Kanjar Kot (now in ruins) situated in the Rann of Kutch about a mile south of Rahimki Bazar. The Government of Pakistan have not adduced any evidence to show that the two old villages called Vijakot and Kanjhikot in the Rann, which are now extinct, belonged to Sind at any time.

The statements made by the Government of Pakistan in subparagraphs (v) and (vii) of paragraph 4 of their Note are not correct, which would be obvious from the following facts:

(i) There is no such tank as referred to by the Government of Pakistan in Chhad Bet. There is only a small depression, which holds some water during the monsoons. There being no facility for drinking water, the Kutch Darbar sanctioned a sum of Kories 1,000 during the year 1924–25 and a well was dug but it had to be abandoned as only salt water was found.

(ii) The Kutch Darbar have throughout exercised full jurisdiction over the Chhad Bet and other Bets in the area of the Rann and collected grazing dues from the graziers belonging to Sind. The fact that the jurisdiction of Kutch Darbar over the Chhad Bet and other Bets was accepted by the Sind authorities would be apparent from the cases mentioned below:

(a) The Sind authorities agreed in 1944-45 to the extradition of Mounted Police Sowar (horse rider) Ketamal Versimal, Sumara Sidik and Bhil Kania Gamia of the Diplo Taluka in the Thar Parkar District of Sind to Kutch for trial under Sections 393-398 and 347 I.P.C. for attempt of robbery and wrongful confinement of one Mahmmed Hamir, who was returning from Sind near a place called Kunverbet in the Rann of Kutch. Please see the endorsement No. J/7930 of 1945 dated 7th November
(b) In 1945, some employees of the Kutch State stationed on duty in the Chhad Bet apprehended some Sind cattle owners for grazing their cattle without payment of grazing dues and brought them to Khavda Police Station in Kutch. The Sind cattle owners were released after they had made payment of the grazing dues. They returned to Diplo and lodged a complaint against the Kutch State employees. The Diplo Police authorities registered a case under sections 223, 148 and 342 I.P.C. and the District Magistrate of Thar Parkar sought extradition of the Kutch State employees through the Resident for Western India States, who addressed the Kutch Darbar in the matter in his letter No. A/4-3(C), dated 17th September 1945. The Kutch Darbar did not surrender their employees who had only discharged their duties within the State territory and the Sind authorities had to drop the matter.

(iii) The protest stated to have been made by the Collector of Thar Parkar to the Secretary to the Resident for Western India State against the action of the Kutch Darbar in giving the contract to one Shadi Nohri for collecting the grazing dues in the Chhad Bet was not referred by the Secretary to the Resident to the Kutch Darbar. The letter No. 1806, dated 24th/26th May 1947 from the Kutch Darbar to the Government of Sind had, therefore, nothing to do with the protest mentioned above but only related to the demarcation of the Kutch-Sind boundary from the tri-junction of Jati and Badin talukas in Sind and Kutch due East along the Northern limit of the Rann of Kutch.

4. There is nothing to show in the records of the Kutch Darbar that the incident in 1936-37, referred to by the Government of Pakistan in sub-paragraph (vi) of paragraph 4 of their Note was ever brought to the notice of the Kutch authorities or that they refused to take any action in the matter on the ground that the murder took place within British territory.

5. The records of the Kutch Darbar do not show that any approach was made by the Diplo Police authorities to the Kutch authorities for assistance in connection with the offence referred to by the Government of Pakistan in subparagraph (viii) of paragraph 4 of their Note.

6. The statement made by the Government of Pakistan in subparagraph (ix) of paragraph 4 of their Note is not correct. The fact that all possible assistance was rendered to the Sind authorities by the Kutch authorities to trace the culprits and that the offence was committed within Kutch territory would be clear from the following:-

(i) The Commissioner of Police, Kutch, in his letter No. 422 of 1945 dated 19th June 1945 to the Collector of Central Excise, Bombay, stated that Sub-Inspector of Police Jiwanlal Gangaram of the Diplo Police Station was given the assistance of a whole-time Sub-Inspector of Police of the Kutch State and that all the subordinate authorities were warned to strive their level best to trace the accused if they belong to Kutch and that their services will not only be rewarded by the Collector of Central Excise, Bombay, but also by the Kutch Darbar.

(ii) The Commissioner of Police, Kutch, in his letter No. 450 of 1945 dated 4th July 1945 to the District Superintendent of Police, Thar Parkar, stated that:

“I was expecting some sort of communication from you as regards the opinion to which the Sub-Inspector, Diplo Police Station, had arrived on leaving Kutch State after his investigation at various places where he had reasons to believe the suspects if they belonged to Kutch State could be traced. However, having not heard either from him or you, I am addressing this letter to you and also attach a copy of notes taken by me during his meeting with me at Bhuj on the 4th of June, 1945 ...........

Thus you will be pleased to observe that the offence of murder which has been registered at the Diplo Police Station, took place from the account given by your Sub-Inspector of Police, at a place about 18 miles from the Ding Customs Outpost.

I have carefully examined the topographical maps of surveys of this State, showing exact delimitation and giving details, and finds that there is no Rann of Sind at any place. Further the Great Rann of Kutch within the State territory commences immediately after leaving the Ding Outpost, as would be seen from the rough sketch sent herewith. In these circumstances, the murder of the Sowar could not have taken place in the Sind territory”.

It is therefore clear that had the culprits responsible for this offence been traced, they would have been handed over for trial in the Kutch Courts.
7. In the absence of the date and year of the offence referred to by the Government of Pakistan in sub-paragraph (x) of paragraph 4 of their Note, it is not possible to offer any comments.

(Note by the Editor: The spellings of Kutch (Cutch) as appearing in these pages are as in the original in the Government of India records. The appendices appear only to be extracts and not complete texts of the originals.)

2295. Note from the High Commission of India in Pakistan to Pakistan Ministry of Foreign Affairs.

High Commission Of India
Karachi.

No. IHC.5/Poll/49/IX. Dated the 12th January, 1956

Subject: Kutch – Sind Border

The High Commission of India presents its compliments to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Commonwealth Relations and has the honour to state as follows:

It has been reported to the Government of India that the Pakistan authorities have posted units of a special constabulary known as Special or Sind Police Reserve at their outposts at Wingi and Jat Tarai on the border between Sind and Kutch. Members of these units have been crossing the border into Indian territory and proceeding to the pasture land known as Chhad Bet. They have been instigating the cattle owners whose cattle graze in the Bet not to pay grazing fees to the Indian authorities, or to the contractors who hold grazing rights under them. They have also cleared a pathway from the border up to Gulnamad Talavdi in the Chhad Bet so that a motor truck can go on to the Bet.

In its Note of the 9th May, 1955, the High Commission had stated that “the Government of India after careful and thorough consideration categorically and most emphatically repudiate the claims of the Government of Pakistan that the boundary between Kutch and Sind from the top of Sir Creek onwards ‘has always been in dispute’…” The High Commission is instructed to re-assert that position and to emphasize that as no doubt or dispute has existed or exists regarding the territories in the ownership and possession of the Kutch State, which is part of the Union of India, the activities aforesaid of the Pakistani police units constitute violation of the Indo-Pakistan border, trespass into Indian territory and interference with the rights of the Kutch authorities or persons deriving rights from them.

As these activities are not conducive to the maintenance of peace and tranquil conditions on the border, which it is the agreed aim of the two Governments to preserve, the High Commission is instructed to request the Government of Pakistan to take steps which will ensure that the aforesaid activities and any of like effect cease immediately and the integrity of the border is respected.

The High Commission of India avails itself of the opportunity to renew to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Commonwealth Relations the assurances of its highest consideration.

The Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Commonwealth Relations, Karachi.

2296. Aide Memoire from the Ministry of External Affairs to Pakistan Ministry of Foreign Affairs.

New Delhi, February 23, 1956.

[The Aide memoire was handed over to the Pakistan High Commissioner by Commonwealth Secretary, Ministry of External Affairs]

The Government of India had received reports that Pakistani Police forces stationed on the Kutch – Sind border, accompanied by other Pakistani nationals had been trespassing into Indian territory and proceeding to the pasture land known as “Chhad Bet”, where they had been instigating the cattle owners whose cattle graze on the Bet not to pay grazing fees to the Indian authorities or to the contractors who hold grazing rights under them. It was also reported that the Pakistani forces or nationals had cleared a pathway from the border up to Gulmamad Talavdi in the Chhad Bet so that a motor truck could go on to the Bet.

2. Under instructions from the Government of India, the High Commission of India in Karachi presented to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Commonwealth Relations of the Government of Pakistan Note No. IHC.5/Poll/49-IX dated the 12th January 1956. In its Note of the 12th January, 1956, the High Commission of India stated that the activities aforesaid of the Pakistan Police units constitute violation of the Indo-Pakistan border, trespass into Indian territory and interference with the rights of the Kutch authorities or persons deriving rights from them. Continuing, the High Commission requested the Government of Pakistan to take steps to ensure that the aforesaid activities and any of like effect ceased immediately and the integrity of the border was respected.

3. In the discussion that ensued on the occasion of presentation of the High Commission of India’s Note of the 12th January 1956, between the Deputy High Commissioner for India in Karachi and Mr. Dehlavi of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Commonwealth Relations of the Government of Pakistan, the latter stated that the matter was being considered by the Sind Government and that he hoped that a reply to the High Commission’s Note would be given soon. No reply has so far been received.

4. Subsequently the Government of India continued to receive reports of trespass by Pakistani forces and nationals on to the Chhad Bet. They have now received a report of an extremely serious incident that has taken place there.

5. It is reported that on the 17th February, 1956, an Indian police patrol party observed Pakistani personnel taking up positions in the area of Guilmamad Talavdi on the Chhad Bet. After some time, these personnel were observed to retreat. But on the same evening when the Chhad Bet contractor sent some of his men on camels to the Bet to investigate reports of unauthorized grazing, they were fired on to the extent of 50 – 60 rounds. On the morning of the 19th February, an Indian military patrol approaching Chhad Bet was fired on with automatic weapons by Pakistani forces from dug-in positions. Three members of the patrol were injured and three camels were killed. The condition of two of the casualties is serious.

6. The Government of India takes a serious view of this deliberate aggression on Indian territory which indicates calculated disregard of the request made to the Government of Pakistan in the High Commission of India’s Note of the 12th January, 1956. The Government of India protest most emphatically against the trespass by Pakistani forces into territory which is and always has been part of the Kutch State, one of the states of the Union of India and in respect of which the Government of Pakistan have no rights whatever. The Government of India further protest most emphatically against the wanton and unprovoked attack on the Indian military patrol.

7. The Government of India request that the Government of Pakistan issue immediate instructions to their forces to withdraw forthwith from Indian territory and take immediate steps to punish those responsible for the acts of trespass into Indian territory and of the unprovoked attack on the Indian patrol on Indian
The Government of India further request that the Government of Pakistan take adequate steps to ensure that such acts of trespass into Indian territory and of unprovoked attacks against Indian forces and nationals on Indian territory do not recur and that the border is not violated again.

8. The Government of India hold the Government of Pakistan responsible for the injuries inflicted on the three members of the Indian military patrol party and in that connection reserve the right to claim compensation from the Government of Pakistan.

Note from Pakistan High Commission in India to Ministry of External Affairs.

New Delhi, February 26, 1956.

MOST IMMEDIATE

Office of the High Commissioner for Pakistan in India, New Delhi

No. F. 62 (1) P/48

26th February, 1956

The High Commission for Pakistan in India presents its compliments to the Ministry of External Affairs of the Government of India and, in continuation of Foreign, Karachi’s Secret telegram No. 922 dated, February 24, 1956 to Foreign, New Delhi, has the honour to inform the Government of India that it has come to the notice of the Government of Pakistan that Indian troops on the morning of February 25 at 5 a.m. launched a heavy attack on Pakistan Border Police Forces stationed on the border between the State of Kutch (India) and West Pakistan which resulted in casualties to the latter. The Government of Pakistan are constrained to protest against this grave occurrence, coming as it did after the Government of Pakistan had suggested a meeting of senior officials of the two countries to discuss the situation and had expressed their anxiety to secure a peaceful and amicable settlement of border incidents in that area.

2. In order therefore to avoid the occurrence of further incident, the High Commission has been instructed to impress on the Government of India the need for ensuring that no action is taken which would lead to a further deterioration in the situation. At the same time the Government of Pakistan reaffirm their desire for a peaceful and amicable settlement and reiterate their earlier proposal that senior officials of both countries of Divisional Commissioner or Inspector-General of Police rank having jurisdiction over these areas should meet together to study the situation with a view to arriving at a peaceful and amicable settlement, and propose that pending such a meeting the Indian Armed Forces and the Pakistan Border Police be withdrawn from the area in question.

3. The High Commission has been further instructed to inform the Government of India that the Government of Pakistan hold the Government of India responsible for the injuries inflicted on Pakistan border Police personnel as a result of the incident which occurred on the 25th February, 1956, and reserve the right to claim compensation thereof.

4. The High Commission avails itself of the opportunity to renew to the Ministry of External Affairs the assurances of its highest consideration.

2298. SECRET

Message from the Ministry of External Affairs to Pakistan Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Commonwealth Relations, Karachi, February 27, 1956.

The Government of India has carefully considered the request made by the Government of Pakistan in their message No. 922 dated 24th February regarding the recent incident in the Rann of Kutch. This incident has already been the subject matter of protest made by the Government of India to the Pakistan High Commissioner here on the 23rd February and repeated through our High Commissioner in Karachi. Government of India also sent another note on 24th February in reply to the note of 23rd February from the Government of Pakistan and this has been handed over to the Pakistan Ministry of External (Foreign) Affairs and Commonwealth Relations in Karachi on 25th.

2. As early as 9th May 1955, it was pointed out to the Government of Pakistan in the Indian High Commission’s note of 9th May 1955 that the Chhad Bet in the region of the Rann of Kutch, where this incident occurred, is indisputably in Indian territory. This was repeated in the Indian High Commission's note of 12th January 1956. No reply from the Government of Pakistan has so far been received to any of these notes.

3. The Inter-Dominion Agreement of 1948 and the subsequent agreement extending the arrangements of the 1948 Agreement to the Sind Kutch border referred to in your telegram do not apply to the present incident as disputes involving questions of policy are excluded from the scope of the general orders issued under the Inter-Dominion Agreement and, in any case, these arrangements cannot apply to the present incident, which was deliberate violation of Indian territory by Pakistani armed personnel involving an unprovoked attack on the Indian military patrol on Indian soil.

4. The Government of India is anxious to maintain friendly relations between our two countries and are, therefore, always willing to discuss any matters of common interest to the two Governments. Though the Inter-Dominion Agreement of 1948 and the subsequent agreement referred to in your telegram do not apply to this incident, Government of India are, in the interest of maintaining a peaceful and amicable atmosphere between the two countries, prepared to consider and discuss, at governmental level, any views that the Government of Pakistan may advance in reply to the Indian High Commission's notes of 9th May 1955 and 12th January 1956.

Note recorded by Commonwealth Secretary M. J. Desai and the Orders of Prime Minister thereon regarding the incident of firing by Pakistan Police at Chhad Bet in Kutch.

New Delhi, February 27, 1956.

Ministry Of External Affairs

A review of the circumstances leading to the Chhad Bet incident and the experience gained in dealing with Pakistan’s aggression in this sphere indicates that certain follow-up action is necessary not only in this region but also generally in all border areas to counter similar attempts by Pakistan in future. That Pakistan will be aggressive, whenever possible, must be accepted, this apart from the possibility of a restricted clash in certain selected area which may arise perhaps a year later. It is also necessary to forestall Pakistan in the propaganda and publicity sphere, particularly with the Western powers.

2. I agree that it is easy to be wise after the event but this need not preclude learning from experience and I suggest that the following measures be taken. These will be passed on to the Ministries concerned for their consideration after P.M. has accorded his general approval to various ministries being approached.

Ministry of Home Affairs & States:

(i) The present Chief Commissioner of Kutch has not displayed the same amount of alertness as a Chief Commissioner in a border state should. A major part of the conflict which arose was due to his failure to maintain initiative and to keep Government of India adequately informed of Pakistan’s aggressiveness on Kutch – Sind border and suggesting definite action to contain this aggressiveness. There is no reflection on the officer himself. I have known him since 1930 but he is good enough for routine jobs and a more dynamic individual is required as Chief Commissioner in this border area. Apart from the present incident, we will have Khandla port in this area and extreme vigilance has to be maintained all along the coastal seas in the region to prevent Pakistan poaching in our water, which is generally combined with espionage activities.

(ii) Immediate action must be taken to strengthen the Special Police Reserve in Kutch state as the local police can hardly manage their routine work. Maintenance of border patrol and check on violations of the frontier are normally a police affair and we cannot have the army called in to remedy neglect by the state authorities and their police force as was done in the present case.
(iii) The army authorities are establishing a post in the Chhad Bet region to control border violations but this post will be temporary for two or three weeks and will have to be taken over by the police. As the state police can hardly tackle this job, it will have to be a post maintained by the Special Police Reserve. During our discussions, the army authorities have agreed to draw up a complete blue-print for the maintenance of the police post, their strength, equipment, supplies, communications etc., and to give on loan such equipment and materials as may be required. This must be followed up by the Chief Commissioner and the local commander of the Special Police Reserve in consultation with the army commander in the area and the police post established in the Chhad Bet, the army being relieved, within three to four weeks, of this liability.

(iv) In view of the discussions that have already taken place, instructions may be issued to discontinue auctioning of the Chhad Bet grazing concessions so as to seal the border more effectively. This can be reconsidered when more amicable border relations prevail between India and Pakistan, particularly in the Sind – Kutch region.

Ministry of Communications:

Our experience during the last week when army operations in the area were being considered shows how the army was handicapped by complete lack of telegraphic and telephonic communications in this important border region of Kutch. A general directive may be issued to remedy this to the Chief Commissioner, Kutch, and the Ministry of Communications asked to give all possible facilities. The maintenance of the police post in Chhad Bet requires that these facilities should be installed very early and similar arrangements may be necessary in other border areas in other States. The position may be reviewed by the Ministry of Home Affairs & States and the Ministry of Communications and necessary action take where required. Action, so far as Kutch is concerned, does not require any further consultations.

Ministry of Transport:

So far as border regions are concerned, road and communications are a vital arrangement if the borders are to be kept inviolate and threatened violations to the border are to be met immediately. The Ministry of Home Affairs and States may, in consultation with the Ministry of Transport, take such action as is required to remedy this deficiency about roads in the border areas. This will be done in consultation with the States concerned. So far as Kutch is concerned, this is an urgent matter and the Chief Commissioner’s views may be asked for by the Ministry of Home Affairs and States immediately.
Ministry of Defence:

(i) Communications:
For this Kutch incident, the army authorities suffered considerably from want of civil communication facilities. The improvement of communication facilities in Kutch should be coordinated with the army authorities, so that the Army Headquarters may keep for themselves such extra facilities as are required to maintain this border area inviolate.

(ii) Continuous liaison between the civil and military authority in border regions is necessary. There must be orders about this but in the case of the Kutch incident, the army authorities hardly knew anything about what was going on. These orders may have to be re-emphasized and their observance reviewed periodically.

(iii) So far as border areas are concerned, a certain amount of intelligence work is normally and continuously done by the local police. This is supplemented in most cases with army intelligence. In the Kutch case when we heard about this incident the army authorities were completely taken by surprise and there seemed to be very little army intelligence in this border region. We had to wait five days before we could get some information as to what the strength of the Pakistan police force in Chhad Bet – a place 35 miles from the nearest army post – was. Army intelligence work to be coordinated with the police intelligence and strengthened wherever required so far as the border areas are concerned.

(iv) P.M. knows about the long discussions regarding use of the Air Force in the Kutch incident. These were necessitated because of the complete lack of artillery assistance in the Southern Command. We must expect Pakistan aggressiveness in border areas generally. Therefore, the various Commands concerned should have the requisite artillery assistance within fairly easy reach of border areas so that limited army action to deal with intruders more expeditiously can be taken than was possible in this case so that no question of using the Air Force and making it a major incident may be involved in future.

General :-

It may be desirable to draw the attention of the various State Governments to the history of this particular incident, the serious developments that occurred because of the failure to take timely action to contain Pakistan aggressiveness and the need to take effective action at the earliest possible sign of Pakistan probing in border areas. This can be done by the Ministry of Home Affairs and States and a brief note will be supplied to them in this connection by the Ministry of External Affairs based on the history of the Kutch incident.
Press:

It is necessary that adequate publicity should be given to the history of this particular incident, the facts of the case, the action taken by the Govt. of India and the latest position. This can be done either by a press release or/and press conference but it will be better in view of the great interest shown in the Lok Sabha that PM makes a suitable statement in this connection sometime towards the end of the week. So far as timing is concerned, it is best that this statement is made before the arrival of the British Foreign Secretary on 3rd March. If P.M. accepts the suggestion, a brief note will be supplied to him for his use.

Sd/ - M.J. Desai.

P.M.

Note by Prime Minister

PRIME MINISTER’S SECRETARIAT

I agree generally that we should examine the position created by Pakistan’s incursions and become more vigilant. You can discuss these matters with the Ministries concerned.

2. I have not met the Chief Commissioner of Kutch, but his behavior on this occasion appeared to me very casual. I think he should be told so.

3. The auctioning of the Chhad Bet area must be discontinued for the present at least.

4. While communications should certainly be improved, it is not clear to me how we can lay roads leading to Chhad Bet when most of that area is under water for many months.

5. Your suggestion that artillery should be spread out all over the border does not seem to be a feasible one. It is always a bad policy to disperse your strength and we have not too much to disperse. Personally I would take the risk of not having Artillery in a particular place provided I have a good reserve somewhere from which this could be sent if necessity arose. Anyhow this is a matter for our Army Headquarters to consider and decide.

6. I am not inclined to make a special statement in Parliament. The Press has given adequate publicity to our retaking Chhad Bet. I could add nothing to it. The other question will relate to Pakistan’s complaints and legal issues etc. I imagine, however, that there would be further questions in Parliament on this issue and I shall certainly answer them. Therefore a brief note should be prepared.

7. I told you this morning about some agreement arrived at after long discussion and argument between the old Sind Government and Kutch, probably in 1924. The border was demarcated by this agreement. Please have this matter investigated by our Historical Section.

Note from Ministry of External Affairs to High Commission of Pakistan in India.

New Delhi, March 1, 1956.

No. F. 4 (14) – Pak. III/55.

The Ministry of External Affairs presents its compliments to the High Commission of Pakistan and with reference to the High Commission’s Note No. F. 62(I)P/48 of the 26th February 1956, has the honour to refer to (i) the Aide Memoire handed over to His Excellency the High Commissioner for Pakistan by the Commonwealth Secretary to the Government of India on the 23rd February 1956 and (iii) the copy of the reply by the High Commissioner for India in Karachi to the Pakistani Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Commonwealth Relations’ Note of the 23rd February, supplied to the High Commission of Pakistan on the 25th February and to state that the Government of India consider it a complete distortion of facts to describe the Pakistan border Police Forces involved in this incident as being “stationed on the border between the State of Cutch (India) and West Pakistan”.

2. The facts are that the Pakistani armed forces violated the Indo – Pakistani border by entering Indian territory and establishing themselves on Chhad Bet, 4 – 5 miles inside the Indian border. They opened five without provocation on the 19th February on an Indian military patrol as it approached Chhad Bet, causing serious injury to three members of the Indian patrol. This incident has already been the subject matter of a protest by the Government of India on the 23rd February 1956.
3. It is not a fact, as stated in the High Commission’s Note, that Indian troops on the morning of February 25 at 5 am. launched a heavy attack on Pakistani Border Police Forces which resulted in casualties to the latter. There was in fact no firing at all on the part of Indian troops on the 25th February. It is possible that some members of the Pakistani Border Police Force which intruded into Indian territory suffered casualties as a result of firing by the Indian military patrol in the incident that took place on the 19th February. The Indian military patrol, having been fired on by the Pakistani armed forces which were unauthorisedly in Indian territory, was completely within its rights in returning the fire in self-defence. In the circumstances, the Government of India is unable to accept any responsibility for any injuries which may have been caused to the intruding Pakistani Forces.

4. The Government of India are, in view of the position stated in the above paragraphs, unable to understand on what grounds the Government of Pakistan have lodged the protest contained in the High Commission’s Note referred to above.

5. With regard to the proposal by the Government of Pakistan referred to in para 2 of the High Commission’s Note, the Ministry has the honour to enclose for the information of the High Commission a copy of a message sent to the Pakistan Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Commonwealth Relations on the 27th February. The Ministry would draw the special attention of the High Commission to paragraph 4 of this message in which it is stated that the Government of India are prepared to consider and discuss at governmental level any views that the Government of Pakistan may advance.

6. The Ministry of External Affairs takes this opportunity to renew to the High Commission of Pakistan the assurances of its highest consideration.

The High Commission of Pakistan,
New Delhi.

2301. Note from Pakistan Ministry of Foreign Affairs to High Commission of India in Pakistan.

Karachi, April 9, 1956.

Government Of Pakistan,
Ministry Of Foreign Affairs and Commonwealth Relations
Karachi

No. I (I) 3/10/56. the 9th, April 1956

The Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Commonwealth Relations, Government of Pakistan, present its compliments to the High Commission for India in Pakistan and, with reference to their Note No. F. IHC.5 (Poll)/49 – IX – 3252, dated 9/11th May, 1995 and Foreign, New Delhi, telegrams No. 30354 and 30355, dated 11 – 3 – 1956, has the honour to say that they notice with regret and surprise that despite the unassailable and overwhelming evidence cited by Pakistan, the Government of India should have considered that there does not exist any dispute with regard to the boundary between the Hyderabad and Tharparkar districts of the Sind Division and the Cutch State. The Government of India is obviously labouring under a misapprehension and has confused two distinct disputes between the pre–partitioned Government of Bombay and the Cutch State.

2. One of the disputes was regarding the land lying between Sir Creek and Khori Creek and the meeting point of Karachi and Hyderabad districts with the greater Rann. This dispute was settled by way of a compromise in 1913. A portion of the disputed territory in the actual possession of the Sind Administration was awarded and handed over to the Rao of Cutch while the remaining portion continued as territory of the Sind Administration.

3. This compromise was implemented by actual demarcation in situ in 1923 thereby terminating the Sir and Khori Creek dispute, also known as the Lakhpat –Sind dispute.

4. The other dispute relating to the territorial jurisdiction and the boundary alignment of the Hyderabad and Tharparkar districts of Sind on one side and the Cutch State on the other has never been settled though efforts to do so started in 1875.

This is clear from the following relevant entries in the records of the Sind Administration:-

(i) In 1875 on an enquiry by the Commissioner of Sind the Political Superintendent of Tharparkar asked the Mukhtiarkar of Diplo to intimated the boundary between the Cutch State and the Tharparkar district. The Mukhtiarkar gave the following detailed report:-

“The boundary between Cutch Bhuj and Diplo taluka is as under:–

In the Rann beyond Rahamki there is the “Serai of Manji” in the north of Allah Bound. The Serai is at a distance of 24 miles from Rahamki. The boundary is near the Gaindiji Chan beyond the villages of Vanger and Balihari. There is Dharamshala at a distance of half a mile to the north of that Dharamshala. No pillars are in existence along the boundary. The boundary can be ascertained by the fact that during the Talpur Regime, the Mirs used to maintain law and order on the side of Gaindi and beyond that the matters were referred to and settled in Cutch Bhuj Darbar.

The whole Banni land is in the territory of Cutch Bhuj State. It is known on enquiry that the Banni land is at a distance of 2 miles from Khavro. The description of the situation is as under:-

1. In the South of Cutch Bhuj lies Tar of Sosrasar at a distance of 14 miles.
2. North 24 miles distant.

On further enquiry, the Mukhtiarkar elucidated the boundary as under:

“In Rann proper there is a Chan of Gaindi and there is a Dharamshala at that place. The Dharamshala is fixed as the boundary of Tharparkar district and Cutch State. The land lying between that Dharamshala and Diplo belongs to the Tharparkar district and the land on the other side of Dharamshala belongs to the Cutch Bhuj State. The Dharamshala marks the boundary between the Tharparkar district and the Cutch Bhuj State.”

The position explained by the Mukhtiarkar was accepted not only by the Political Superintendent, but also by the Commissioner. The latter referred the matter to the Bombay Government who in pursuance of the Commissioner’s observations, asked the Cutch State authorities to depute the Political Superintendent, Cutch State to meet the Political Superintendent, Tharparkar for the demarcation of the boundary. Unfortunately this could not be brought about on account of the death of the then Rao of Cutch, and consequently the actual boundary continued to remain un-demarcated.

The Government of India would thus appreciate that even as far back as 1876 the territorial boundary between the Kutch State and the Sind was the line dividing the Greater Rann practically into two halves.

(ii) In 1903, the Collector of Hyderabad raised the question whether the Government could assert any right to the produce of a ‘Dhand’ in the Rann of Cutch five miles beyond the survey limits of the Badin Taluka and the Commissioner “considered that the right of the Sind authorities extended to at least the centre line of the Rann”.

(iii) The question was again taken up by the Bombay Government in 1905 but His Excellency the Governor of Bombay thought, “the question might well be left alone till we are forced to take it up. That date is not very distant if the Railway goes through Cutch.”

(iv) The northern portion of the Rann continued to be administered by the Sind authorities and the southern portion by the Cutch authorities without any objection or hindrance from either side. In 1926, however, the Cutch authorities tried to interfere with the grazing and Assishi right of the maldars of the Sind villages in respect Chhad Bet. The Raj – Mahajans and Patels of these villages put in a written application on 1 – 7 – 1926 wherein they complained that one Narainji a Police Jamadar of the Kutch State of Khaoro tried to levy grazing fee on them which they had never paid in the past. Their complaint was examined and the Collector ordered on the 20th December, 1927, that the area in which these persons grazed their cattle lay within the territory and jurisdiction of the Sind Administration and they should not, therefore, pay any grazing fee to the representative of the Kutch (Copy attached). It was clearly stated in this order that half of the Rann belonged to the British (Sind Administration). The Cutch authorities neither objected to this decision of the Collector nor made any representation against it to the authorities concerned.

It is important to note that this decision was given by the Collector soon after the actual demarcation of the boundaries of the area lying between the Sir Creek and Kori Creek was carried out. It is, therefore, clearly established that the said dispute was entirely a different one and so far as the boundaries between the Cutch State and the Hyderabad and Tharparkar districts of Sind were concerned no settlement had been arrived at.

(v) In 1937–38 when No. 1 Party, Survey of India, undertook half inch survey in Sheets 40 L and 40 P (in which a portion of the Rann of Kutch falls) they wanted to mark on the map the correct boundary between the Cutch State, the Sind Province and the Wav State. A conference of the representatives of the two States and the Sind Province was held for this purpose. The representatives of the Sind Administration claimed that the northern half of the Rann belonged to the British Government. In support of his contention he cited the decision given by the Collector of Tharparkar. No agreement could, however, be arrived at and the boundary remained a disputed one.

The Officer— in— Charge, No. 1 Party (Survey of India) in his letter No. 100/44 — B — 4, dated 16-1-1939, remarked that the views expressed by the Superintendent of Survey and Land Records and the Deputy Commissioner, Tharparkar, were not definite and differed in regard to the alignment of the boundary on the map. It was added that in these circumstances the question remained undecided.

In his letter No. 1575-44-B-4, dated 23rd of August, 1939, the Officer-in-Charge, No. 1 Party wrote to the Collector, Tharparkar as follows:—

“As provincial boundary in the Rann of Cutch is un-demarcated and the authorities of Sind, Cutch State and Wav State still differ as to the correct alignment, no decision can be arrived at by me. I propose to omit this boundary from the modern survey maps”.

Thereupon the Collector of Tharparkar asked the Superintendent of Survey and Land Records, Sind, to give his opinion and the latter suggested that it would not be right to omit the existing boundary from the Survey of India maps as suggested by the Officer-in-Charge, No. 1 Party, Survey of India. It was added that it should be shown by a special symbol and a footnote should be given indicating that it was in accordance with the old records but that the dispute was still there. The Collector accepted the suggestion of the Superintendent of Survey and Land Records, Sind and informed the Officer-in-Charge, No. 1 Party, Survey of India accordingly (vide letter No. I.S. 4416 of 2-10-1939).

The Survey of India officers tried to get an agreement of the representatives of the Government of Sind, Cutch and Wav State but could not succeed. The Officer-in-Charge, No.1 Party, therefore, recommended that the boundary should be omitted from the map. The Collector, Tharparkar district, however, did not agree and maintained that it should be shown by a special symbol with a foot note indicating that it was in dispute. In view of these circumstances the Director of Map Publication was not competent to show the boundary on the maps without specifying it as “disputed”. He should have refrained from doing so particularly in view of the note on the Survey boundaries supplied by the Officer-in-Charge, No. 1 Party, Survey of India, as an enclosure to his letter No. 1171-44-B-4, dated the 19th May, 1938, wherein it was clearly laid down that the Survey of India maps are not authoritative as regards the alignment of fiscal boundaries and where the boundary is not demarcated, the lack of demarcation on the ground is indicated on the map by a special symbol and where a boundary is in dispute and is not demarcated, it is customary to show the alternative alignment. In this case there was a dispute and the boundary should have been shown as disputed. The decision of the Director of Map Publication to show the boundary by the demarcated symbol without adding the word “disputed” on the large scale was, therefore, clearly unwarranted and cannot be binding on the States concerned.

Even if it is assumed that the action of the Director of Map Publication was correct it will only amount to laying down that the older map boundaries were preserved. The correct thing, therefore, would be to find out the old map boundaries. In this connection the following extract from page 74 of the Imperial Gazetteer of India (1908 Edition published at Oxford at the Clarendon Press) is relevant: -

“CUTCH (Kachchh or The sea-coast land’’) – Native State under the political superintendence of the Government of Bombay bounded on the north and northwest by the Province of Sind, on the east by Native States under Palanpur Agency, on the south by the peninsula of Kathiawar and the Gulf of Cutch and on the southwest by the Indian Ocean. Its limits, exclusive of a portion of the great salt marsh termed the Rann, extend from 22º 47’ to 24º N and from 68º 25’ to 71º 11’ E, comprising as belt of land 160 miles from east to west and about 35 to 70 miles from north to south. The area of the State (exclusive of the Rann) is 7,616 square miles, and it contains 8 towns and 937 villages.”

This shows that the northern most limit of the Cutch State could not go beyond latitude 24º. This view is further corroborated by the original map which formed the basis of the 1913 dispute which was finally closed in 1923. Therein the jurisdiction of the Cutch State is shown by a yellow riband and this riband in its extreme northern corner does not go beyond latitude 24º.

It must also be emphasized that the action taken by the Director of Map Publication was erroneous for another very important reason. In the 1871 map there is no boundary symbol along the southern pacca portion of the Sind Administration. Subsequent insertions by the Survey of India were not only unauthorized but absolutely unjustified. Such symbol should have been inserted only if the un-demarcated boundary had been determined either by the competent authority or through an agreement of all the parties concerned.

It is significant that the word “disputed” was printed in 1938 along this boundary on a 70 mile map of India showing Provinces, States and Districts and was subsequently shown on reprints of the map in 1940, 1944 and 1946. The Government of India has tried to explain this important point by saying that the word “disputed” was entered by a mistake. The above analysis shows, however, that the entry of the word “disputed” repeatedly shown in maps for the years 1938, 1940, 1944 and 1946 was not really a mistake but was correct as the boundary was really in dispute and had not been determined by the orders of a competent authority or through an agreement of the parties concerned.

5. With this background it would be clear that the Government of India have confused the real issue. On the basis of the settlement of Khori and Sir Creek dispute, which was settled in 1913, they have tried to show that there is no dispute so far as the boundary between the Kutch State and the Hyderabad and Tharparkar districts of Sind is concerned. It is not, therefore, necessary to offer any detailed comments on the points raised by the Government of India in their Note No. F.IHC. 5/Poll-49/IX, dated 9-5-1955. For the sake of clarification, however, the following observations are made:

(a) The Government of India have laid great stress on the fact that in the implementation of the decision regarding Khori and Sir Creek dispute, actual pillars were erected from point at longitude 68º 48´ and latitude 23º 58´ up to the tri-junction between Karachi and Hyderabad districts and the Rann of Cutch. It has been contended by them that up to this point the boundary have been demarcated and if any demarcation is to take place it should be east of this point. Such a contention would be absolutely unjustified in view of the fact that this was altogether a separate dispute and Sind jurisdiction over half of the Rann of Cutch was never disputed. This is amply supported by the observations made by Mr. H.S. Lawrence, the Collector, Karachi, in his note dated the 29th January, 1910, that the Rann of Cutch itself wasn’t involved in the dispute and he clearly stated that he “excluded of course any reference to the Rann of Cutch itself”.

(b) Correspondence shows that the Rao of Kutch was not very keen to have pillars fixed between longitude 68° 48′ latitude 23° 58′ and the northern tri-junction. The Commissioner, however, insisted that the boundary pillars should be fixed on this line as well presumably for the following reasons:

(i) That the two legs of the triangular area left to Karachi district should be clearly demarcated on site with definite pacca boundary pillars because of the shifting nature of the soil.

(ii) That the Revenue staff of their field work and inspection purposes may be able to locate the turning point at longitude 68° 48′ latitude 23° 58′.

(c) The Government of India also appears to have placed reliance on the erroneous description of the northern pillar given by the Superintendent of Land Records, Sind, who described it as the tri-junction between Jati and Badin Talukas and the Kutch State. In fact this was a tri-junction between these Talukas and the Great Rann. This is amply borne out by the extracts taken from the letters of the Commissioner of Sind and the Political Agent of Cutch. Both the Commissioner of Sind as well as the Political Agent of Cutch described this point as “a tri-junction of the Karachi and Hyderabad districts and the Rann of Cutch”. No capital can, therefore, be made out, of the wrong description given by the Superintendent of Land Records, Sind.

In view of the facts stated above it is clear that neither the wrong description given by the Superintendent of Land Records nor the actual fixation of the pillars up to the tri-junction mentioned above can be taken as the basis for the contention that up to this point the boundary between Sind and the Cutch State has been demarcated on the ground and that further demarcation should start from the point of this tri-junction. The Rann has four sides and so far only the western side has been demarcated and settled. As regards the southern, northern and eastern sides, no demarcation or settlement has yet been arrived at. It is the determination of these three sides which is pending settlement and it cannot, therefore, be maintained that there is no dispute.

(d) The Government of India has produced nothing to show that there was at any time any settlement or demarcation of the boundary between the Cutch State and the Tharparkar and Hyderabad districts of Sind. Mere reliance on the demarcation of the boundary between the Rann of Cutch and the Karachi district in 1923 cannot, in view of the circumstances mentioned, be of any help in supporting their contention so far as the question of demarcation of the boundary between Cutch State and Hyderabad and Tharparkar districts of Sind is concerned.
(e) The Government of India have also relied upon the map 40 L and 40 P. The remarks made in paragraph 4 (v) above clearly show that the Director of Map Publication was not justified in omitting the word “disputed” especially when no agreement between the representatives of Cutch, Sind and Wav Administration was ever arrived at.

Moreover, the Survey maps only show the boundaries along the edge of pacca land of both Sind and Cutch State. No map was ever prepared in accordance with an agreement of all the parties concerned which would have shown that the boundary of the Cutch State went as far north as the southern boundary of the pacca land of Hyderabad and Tharparkar districts and would have depicted the whole of the Rann as part of the Cutch State.

So far as the actual territorial jurisdictions are concerned they are not authoritatively shown on the Survey map. If on the basis of these maps the intention is to argue that the Sind Jurisdiction ended with the pacca land of the Sind Province similar remarks would apply to the pacca land of the Cutch State and the jurisdiction of the State will end with its northern pacca land.

(f) If the Pakistan Government were to follow the example of India they could, on the basis of India’s own arguments, claim the entire Rann. They have, however, not done so. It should, however, be emphasized that the Survey Maps are not conclusive so far as the territorial jurisdiction is concerned and cannot, therefore, be utilized for purposes of settlement of the actual territorial jurisdiction of Sind and Cutch State in the Rann of Cutch. From the records available with the Pakistan Government it is established beyond doubt that Sind Administration exercised territorial jurisdiction over the northern portion of Rann right up to Dharamshala near Ganda Bet. The actual limit, however, of this jurisdiction has not been determined so far. The dispute, therefore, is about the actual line which would indicate the exact position where the Sind jurisdiction ends and that of the Cutch State begins.

(g) Territorial jurisdiction can only be determined by the actual exercise of authority. In their Note dated the 22nd September, 1954, the Pakistan Government gave numerous instances of the exercise of authority of the Sind Government over the northern portion of the Rann both before and after 1923 when the Khor and Sir Creek dispute was finally closed. The Government of India, however, simply tried to explain away the real importance of these instances by remarking –

“Any action taken by the Sind authorities in the area of the Rann of Cutch below Rahimki Bazar, where they had no jurisdiction, without the knowledge or the agreement of the Cutch Darbar, could have no effect whatsoever on the rights of the Cutch Darbar.”

It is hard to believe that while the Sind Administration exercised authority as illustrated by the examples quoted above the Cutch Administration should have remained ignorant of it. An impartial examination of the evidence available would go to show that the Cutch authorities accepted the position under which the authority of the Sind Administration extended up to the middle of the Rann. It was for this reason that while the Rao of Cutch objected to the construction of Dharamshala he himself suggested the repairs to the roads lying north of the Allah Bund and never disputed the grazing rights of the British citizen in the northern portion of the Rann up – to Dharamshala.

6. It has been emphasized that the Rann is a dead sea. According to the international practice also such seas are divided equally between the States situated on either side of it. The same principle appears to have been followed while settling the dispute over the little Rann between the two States of Morvi and Kutch. The Pakistan claim to the northern portion of the Rann up to Dharamshala is, therefore, supported not only by possession and exercise of authority but also by international practice and precedent.

7. It is thus clearly established that in spite of India’s assertion to the contrary, a dispute does exist about the determination of the boundary alignment of the Hyderabad and Tharparkar districts of the former Province of Sind on the one side and the Cutch State on the other.

8. The Government of Pakistan would, therefore, urge emphatically that in the interest of good neighbourly relations between the two countries as also with a view to avoiding recurrence of unfortunate incidents of the nature that have recently occurred on this frontier, the Indian forces should be withdrawn immediately from Chhad Bet Nara Bet and the status quo restored pending final settlement of the dispute and the ultimate demarcation of the boundary in situ.

The Ministry avails itself of this opportunity to renew to the High Commission the assurances of its highest consideration.

2302.  Note from High Commission of India in Pakistan to Pakistan Ministry of Foreign Affairs.

Karachi, June 12, 1956

High Commission for India in Pakistan
Karachi

No. F. 113/6/56 – Genl. the 12th June 1956

The High Commission of India presents their compliments to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Commonwealth Relations and with reference to the Ministry's Note No. I (I) 3/10/56 dated the 9th April 1956 regarding the Kutch – Sind border have the honour to state as follows:

2. The Government of India, after careful examination of the various contentions advanced by the Government of Pakistan in support of their claim that the border between the Hyderabad and Tharparkar districts of Sind on the one side and the Kutch State on the other "has never been settled though efforts to do so started in 1875", are constrained to state that in view of the established facts which are well known these contentions are wholly untenable and entirely misconceived. The fact that the entire Rann of Kutch up to its northern limit, which formed the border between the Hyderabad and Tharparkar districts of Sind and the Kutch State, was included within the territorial limits of the Kutch State and that this was clearly recognized by the competent British authorities, including the supreme Government, from the earliest times till Partition is indisputable, as would be clear from the following :-

(1) Selections from the Records of the Bombay Government – No. XV – New Series – 1855 Edition. – These Selections contain the following:-

(i) A New Map of Kutch prepared by Lt. A. Burnes, Deputy Adjutant Quarter Master General in Kutch, from actual measurement and personal observation during 1825 – 28, was used by Mr. Lumsden, Political Agent in Kutch, to show the possessions of the Maharao of Kutch and was submitted together with a letter to the Bombay Government in June 1843. This map shows the possessions of the Maharao extending right up to the northern limit of the Rann of Kutch.

(ii) A Memoir on Kutch State along with a Sketch of the Rann and adjacent countries submitted by Lt. Raikes, Assistant Political Agent in Kutch, to the Bombay Government in November 1854. The Memoir states that the Province of Kutch "contains about 6500 square miles, independent of the Grand Rann which, however, may be considered as a part of the Province, and which, including the islands with the portion bounded by the Guzerat Coast (east and south – east), occupies an area of 9,000 square miles”.

(2) Gazetteer of India compiled by the authority of the East India Company by Edward Thornton – Vol. II – 1854 Edition. – This Gazetteer while describing the territory of the Kutch State, states that “Its limits, inclusive of the great salt marsh termed the Rann extend from lat. 22º 47´ to 24º 40´ and from long. 68º 26´ to 71º 45´”.

(3) Gazetteer of the Bombay Presidency – Vol. V – 1880 Edition – published under the authority of the Bombay Government – This Gazetteer describes the Kutch State as “Cutch, or the sea coast land, lying between the Peninsula of Kathiawar on the south and the Province of Sind on the north, extends from 20º 47´ to 24º north latitude and 68º 26´ to 71º 10´ east longitude. Exclusive of the Rann, it contains an estimated area of 6,500 square miles ……. “ The map appended to this Gazetteer clearly shows the entire Rann as included within the limits of the Kutch State. Besides, the “Notes for revision of Vol. V” published as Gazetteer of the Bombay Presidency – Vol. V – B – 1905 Edition under the authority of the Government of Bombay made the description clear by stating that “It has an area of 7,616 square miles (exclusive of the Rann, 9,000 square miles belonging to the State).”

(4) Imperial Gazetteer of India – Vol. III – 1881 Edition – published by authority. – This Gazetteer while describing the territory of the Kutch State, states that “Its limits, inclusive of the great salt marsh termed the Rann, extend from lat. 22º 47´ to 24º 40´ and from long. 68º 26´ to 71º 45´.”

(5) Imperial Gazetteer of India – Vol. IV – 1885 Edition – published by authority. This Gazetteer also describes the limits of the Kutch State as inclusive of the great salt marsh termed the Rann.

(6) Imperial Gazetteer of India – Vol. XI – 1908 Edition – published under the authority of the Secretary of State for India. – This Gazetteer describes the territory of the Kutch State as “Its limits, exclusive of portion of the great salt marsh termed the Rann, extend from 22º 47´ to 24º N and from 68º 25´ to 71º 11´ E ……. The area of the State (exclusive of the Rann) is about 7,616 square miles ……”

The Government of Pakistan has misconstrued the above description to contend that “the northernmost limit of Cutch State could not go beyond lat. 24º N”. This contention is utterly baseless as would be apparent from the maps showing the “Political Divisions of the Indian Empire” and “Bombay, Sind, Baroda and States of Western India” (Plates Nos. 21 and 38, respectively) in the final volume of the Imperial Gazetteer – New (Revised) Edition – Vol. XXVI – published in 1931 under the authority of the Government of India. These maps show the entire Rann of Kutch right up to its northern limit as included within the territorial limits of the Kutch State.

3. The Government of India are surprised that the Government of Pakistan should have thought it fit to re-assert that the printing of the word “disputed” along the Kutch – Sind border in the 70 mile Map of India showing Provinces, States and Districts (1938 Edition and its subsequent reprints of 1940 and 1946) “was not really a mistake but was correct as the boundary was really in dispute”. The relevant records of the Survey of India clearly prove that the addition of the word “disputed” was a mistake and that orders were duly issued by the Director of Map Publication to delete the word “disputed” from the map. While this correction was carried out by hand on the fair drawn original as well as the office copies and the stock copies, it was, however, not carried out on the standing negatives due to an oversight, with the result that subsequent reprints of the 1938 edition reproduced the mistake of printing the word “disputed” along the Kutch – Sind border. Besides, the 70 Mile Map of India showing Provinces, States and Districts (1938 Edition) was intended to conform in all respects to the 70 Mile Map of India showing Political Charges which was published by the Survey of India in 1938 for the use of the Political Department after it had been approved by that Department. The 70 Mile Map of India showing Political Charges is thus the authentic map for the purposes of delineating the territories of the States and it clearly shows that the entire Rann of Kutch right up to its northern limit was included within the territorial limits of the Kutch State under the charge of the Western India States Agency. The printing of the word “disputed” along the Kutch – Sind border in the 70 Mile Map of India showing Provinces, States and Districts (1938 Edition) thus lacked authority and was undoubtedly a mistake which was duly rectified by the Director of Map Publication. It will be seen that even in this map the boundary symbol “dash – dot – dash” is used along the northern limit of the Rann, which indicates an accepted boundary and therefore the insertion of the word “disputed” has no meaning.

4. The Government of Pakistan should be aware that it was a well established practice of the undivided Government of India that the Political Maps of India showing the external frontiers and the internal divisions were published by the Survey of India only after they had been approved by the Foreign and Political Department. The Foreign Department in their letter No. 3434 – F, dated the 2nd November 1906 while approving the proofs of the 4th edition of the 32 Mile Map of India (Political Edition) stated that “It does not appear to be correct to show the Rann of Kutch as though it were all water. The symbol for a swamp might be used.” Again the Foreign and Political Department, while considering the proofs of the 5th Edition of the 32 Mile Map of India in their note dated the 31st March 1914, approved the depiction of the Rann as a marsh and directed the Surveyor General to show in this edition the rectified Kutch – Sind western boundary as agreed to by the Maharao of Kutch and the Bombay Government in 1913 and as sanctioned by the Government of India. The instructions made it clear that the boundary followed the mid-stream of the Sir Creek from its mouth to its top. The 5th edition of the 32 Mile Map of India was finally approved by the Foreign and Political Department in its note dated the 18th September 1914 and the 1915 edition of the 32 Mile Map of India clearly showed the rectified western Kutch – Sind boundary and included the Rann of Kutch up to its Northern limit within the territories of the Kutch State. The subsequent editions of the 32 Mile Map of India, which were published not only with the approval of the Government of India but also after incorporating the corrections intimated by the local Governments, clearly showed the territorial limits of the State of Kutch as inclusive of the Rann right up to its northern limit. It will, therefore, be seen that the 1915 and subsequent editions of the Map of India (Political Edition), which were published with the prior approval of the Government of India and were authoritative for the purpose of delineating the British territory and the territory of the States, clearly showed the entire Rann of Kutch up its northern limit as included within the territorial limits of the Kutch State and depicted the border between the Hyderabad and Tharparkar districts of Sind on the one side and the Kutch State on the other along the northern limit of the Rann of Kutch.

5. The various contentions made by the Government of Pakistan in regard to the depiction of the Kutch – Sind boundary on the Survey of India topographical sheets have already been dealt with in paragraphs 4 and 6 of the High Commission’s note No. F. IHC – 5 – Poll/49 –IX, dated the 9th May 1955 and appendix 2 attached to that Note. These show that the Government of Pakistan’s contentions are utterly untenable, because the Kutch – Sind boundary was shown in accordance with the original taluka maps furnished by the Sind authorities themselves. Moreover, the Government of Pakistan has conceded that “Even if it is assumed that the action of the Director of Map Publication was correct it will only amount to lying down that the older map boundaries were preserved. The correct thing, therefore, would be to find out the old map boundaries.” The assertions made by the Government of Pakistan regarding the old map boundaries are examined below :-
(1) The Government of Pakistan state as follows:-

“In the 1871 map there is no boundary symbol along the southern pucca portion of the Sind Administration. Subsequent insertions by the Survey of India were not only unauthorized but absolutely unjustified. Such symbol should have been inserted only if the un-demarcated boundary had been determined either by the competent authority or through the agreement of all the parties concerned.”

These contentions are without any foundation, as would be evident from the following:-

(i) It was the established practice of the Survey of India from very early times that the provincial boundaries on their large scale topographical maps were shown with the agreement of the local British authority. Where the boundary between a British Province and an Indian State was settled by demarcation, by treaty or was acknowledged in practice, it was shown by a dash – dot – dash ( – . – . – . – .) symbol engraved on the map with appropriate colour ribands on either side of it.

(ii) The Sind Topo Survey Sheets Nos. 11 NW. NE, SW & SE published in the Indian Atlas Series 1871 -72 by the authority of the Government of India showed the Sind boundary terminating on the northern limit of the Rann of Kutch by the dash – dot – dash ( – . – . – . – .) Symbol. This symbol clearly denotes that this boundary was acknowledged in practice. Besides, this boundary was compared only with the settlement maps of Sind and was shown in consultation with the Sind authorities and the Kutch authorities were not consulted. These sheets are, therefore, authoritative in so far as the Sind boundary is concerned.

(iii) The boundaries of all the talukas, sub – divisions and districts of Sind were derived from the Sind were derived from the Sind Topo Survey Sheets published in the Indian Atlas Series 1871 -72, which is clear from a letter No. 357 of 1939 dated the 8th February 1939 from the Superintendent of Survey and Land Records in Sind to the Officer-in-Charge, No. 1 Party, Survey of India. Since the Sind Topo Survey Sheets were authoritative as explained in Sub-Para above, it is not understood how the boundary symbol along the northern limit of the Rann of Kutch could be omitted from the original taluka maps of Sind. It is, therefore, clear that while the omission of the boundary symbol from the original taluka maps, if any, was unauthorized, the survey of India were fully justified in using this symbol in their maps, which were published with the authority of the Government of India and showed the boundary in accordance with the Sind settlement maps and with the agreement of the Sind authorities.

(2) The further assertion made by the Government of Pakistan that in the map which formed the basis of the 1913 settlement "the jurisdiction of the Kutch State is shown by a yellow riband and this riband in its extreme northern corner does not go beyond latitude 24º" is also without any basis, as would be apparent from the following:

(i) The map which formed the basis of the 1913 settlement comprised the Sind Topo Survey Sheets Nos. 11 SW (reprinted in 1898), 11 NW (reprinted in 1895 with additions) 11 SE (reprinted in 1890) and 11 NE (reprinted in 1895 with additions). These sheets were again published with the authority of the Government of India and clearly showed the Sind boundary by the demarcated dash-dot-dash (– . – . – ) symbol terminating on the northern limit of the Rann of Kutch. The jurisdiction of Sind was also shown to terminate along this symbol by a purple re-band. There is thus no doubt that neither the boundary nor the territorial jurisdiction of Sind extended south of the northern limit of the Rann of Kutch.

(ii) The erroneous depiction of the jurisdiction of Kutch by a yellow riband along its land portion is due to the fact that the Rann of Kutch was wrongly shown in earlier maps as all water in spite of the fact that all textual description referred to it as a Salt Marsh. This misleading depiction was, however, removed by the orders of the Government of India in their letter of the 2nd November 1906 and their note of the 31st March 1914 mentioned in Para 4 above, which directed the Surveyor General to show the Rann of Kutch by the symbol for a swamp. All the maps published after 1915 invariably showed the jurisdiction of the Kutch State over the entire Rann of Kutch right up to its northern limit. This was so not only in the Map of India (Political Edition) published with the approval of the Government of India but also in the topographical maps which showed the Kutch –Sind boundary in agreement with the original taluka maps of Sind. These maps showed the Kutch – Sind boundary along the northern limit of the Rann of Kutch, which had come to be widely acknowledged in practice, by the demarcated dash-dot-dash (-.-.-.-.) symbol with or without a pink or purple riband on the Sind side and a yellow riband on the Kutch side.

(iii) The map which formed the basis of the 1913 settlement was composed from reprints between 1890 and 1900 of the 1871-72 Sind Topo Survey Sheets in the Indian Atlas Series i.e. before the order of the Government of India of the 2nd November 1906 and the 31st March 1914 mentioned above.

(3) As regards the contention of the Government of Pakistan that “So far as the actual territorial jurisdictions are concerned they are not authoritatively shown on the survey map” it would suffice to say that the authenticity of the boundaries shown on these maps is derived from the competent authority. It has been clearly explained in the above paragraphs that the Kutch – Sind boundary has throughout been shown on the Survey of India maps in agreement with the original taluka maps furnished by the Sind authorities themselves or after the position had been verified and accepted by the Sind authorities.

The Sind authorities should, therefore, be the last to question the accuracy of these maps or to doubt the authenticity of the Sind – Kutch boundary shown therein.

6. The assertions made by the Government of Pakistan in regard to the actual fixation of pillars from the point at long. 68º 48´ E, lat. 23º 58´ N to the Karachi – Hyderabad – Kutch tri-junction on the northern limit of the Rann of Kutch that “neither the wrong description given by the Superintendent of Land Records nor the actual fixation of pillars up to the tri-junction mentioned above can be taken as the basis for the contention that up to this point the boundary between Sind and the Cutch State has been demarcated on the ground and that further demarcation put forth by them in support of these contentions are completely baseless, as would be obvious from the following:-

(1) If the boundary between Kutch and Sind from the point at long. 68º 48´ E, lat. 23º 58´ N onwards “was altogether a separate dispute and Sind jurisdiction over half of the Rann of Kutch was never disputed” as stated by the Government of Pakistan, there would have been absolutely no sense in the Sind authorities agreeing to the demarcation of the line from the point at long. 68º 48´ E lat. 23º 58´ N to the Karachi – Hyderabad – Kutch tri-junction on the northern limit of the Rann of Kutch by the actual fixation of pillars on the ground. This was the “Sind boundary as marked in purple on the map” referred to in the Bombay Government resolution No. 1192 dated the 24th February 1914 and was clearly shown as such in the map accompanying the Resolution and this alone is enough to prove that this was the boundary between the Kutch State and the province of Sind which was demarcated on the ground and about which the Sind authorities were so clear that they insisted that boundary pillars should be fixed on this line. The map attached to the Gazetteer of the clearly shows the south-north line as the territorial boundary of the Kutch
State in this sector.

(2) The presumptions of the Government of Pakistan that the Maharao of Kutch was not keen on demarcating this line are not borne out from the facts which are that the arduous work of actually fixing the pillars on a difficult terrain was undertaken by the Kutch authorities. It these pillars were constructed only to demarcate the legs of the Karachi district and to enable the Sind Revenue staff to locate the turning point at long. 68° 48´ E lat. 23º 58´ N, there was no reason why the Kutch Darbar should have not only undertaken this work but also paid half of the expenditure involved. The Kutch Darbar was in no doubt that the line from the point at long. 68° 48´ E lat. 23º 58´ N to the Karachi – Hyderabad – Kutch tri-junction on the northern limit of the Rann of Kutch was the boundary between the Kutch State and the Sind Province and that it was that Kutch – Sind boundary which was demarcated on the ground.

(3) Any doubt that this was not the Kutch – Sind boundary should be further removed by the Bombay Government Resolution No. 6783 dated the 3rd April 1928 sanctioning the expenditure on account of Sind’s share payable to the Kutch Darbar for the work carried out by them which was debited to the specific head of “Demarcation of boundaries between British territory and Indian States”.

(4) There is nothing wrong in the description of the “tri-junction of the Karachi and Hyderabad districts and the Rann of Kutch” as the tri-junction of Jati taluka, Badin Taluka and Kutch State by the Superintendent of Land Records in Sind as there is no difference between the two. The Rann of Kutch up to this point and east of the line demarcated on the ground was an integral part of the Kutch State right up to its northern limit.

(5) The argument of the Government of Pakistan that the actual fixation of pillars only demarcated and settled the western side of the Rann and that the northern Southern and eastern sides remain to be settled has no meaning. There is a substantial portion of the Rann lying west of the line from the point at long. 68° 48´ E lat. 23º 58´ N to the Karachi – Hyderabad – Kutch tri-junction on the northern limit of the Rann of Kutch.
Therefore the line demarcated in 1923 – 24 could not be the western limit of the Rann but only the western border between Kutch and Sind. The only other part of the Rann requiring similar demarcation is its northern limit because this forms the boundary between Kutch and Sind.

(6) In view of the position explained above, the Government of India should like to state emphatically that it is an unchallengeable fact that boundary between Kutch and Sind from the top of Sir Creek up to the Karachi – Hyderabad – Kutch tri-junction on the northern limit of the Rann of Kutch has been actually demarcated on the ground and that further demarcation of the Kutch – Sind border should start from the tri-junction point and proceed due east along the Kutch – Sind boundary shown in purple in the map attached to the Bombay Government’s Resolution No. 1192, dated 24 – 2- 1914 up to the Sind – Kutch – Rajasthan tri-junction on the north – eastern extremity of the Rann.

7. In view of the facts stated in the above paragraphs, which clearly establish that the Rann of Kutch up to its northern limit was an integral part of the territories of the Kutch State, that the sovereignty of the Maharao of Kutch over the Rann up to its northern limit was recognized in the clearest terms by the competent British authorities, including the Supreme Government, that the boundary between the Kutch State and the Sind Province was demarcated on the ground up to the Karachi – Hyderabad – Kutch tri-junction on the northern limit of the Rann and that the boundary between the Hyderabad and Tharparkar districts of Sind on the one side and the Kutch State on the other was acknowledged to follow the northern limit of the Rann of Kutch not only by the competent Sind authorities but also by the Supreme Government, it is amazing that the Government of Pakistan should completely ignore these indisputable fact and contend that “The Government of India have produced nothing to show that there was at any time any settlement or demarcation of the boundary between the Kutch State and Tharparkar and Hyderabad districts of Sind.” The boundary between the Hyderabad and Tharparker districts of Sind on the one side and the Kutch State on the other along the northern limit of the Rann of Kutch has been a settled fact from the earliest times till Partition and continues to be so although it has not yet been demarcated on the ground. The Government of India, therefore, reiterate their regret and surprise that when the question of demarcation of this boundary, which should have presented no difficulty, was taken up with the Sind authorities in May 1947, the Government of Pakistan should have sought to reopen the entire question of the boundary between the Hyderabad and Tharparker districts of Sind and the Kutch State after Partition, without ascertaining the facts and basing their case on certain alleged acts of exercise of jurisdiction by the Sind authorities in the Rann of Kutch and certain unsubstantiated statements made by the Sind officials in times gone by. The Government of Pakistan should have known that the alleged acts of exercise of jurisdiction, if any, were clearly unauthorized in view of the fact that the sovereignty of the Maharao over the Rann of Kutch was throughout recognized by the Supreme Government and had at no time been challenged by any competent British authority and that the vague and unsubstantiated statements of the Sind officials without any authority of the higher Government, i.e. the Bombay Government or the Government of India, could have no validity in affecting the sovereign rights of the Kutch Darbar over the Rann of Kutch. Nevertheless, the alleged acts of exercise of jurisdiction by the Sind authorities quote by the Government of Pakistan in paragraph 4 of their Note No. I (I) 3/9/54, dated the 22nd September 1954 were thoroughly examined in appendix 3 to the High Commission’s Note No. F.IHC – 5 – Poli/49 – IX, dated the 9th May 1955, a perusal of which once again will show that most of the instances cited by the Government of Pakistan were without any basis or without any authority. The Government of India had, on the other hand, referred to certain irrefutable facts establishing in the clearest terms that the jurisdiction of the Kutch Darbar extended over the entire Rann right up to its northern limit and that this was accepted by the Sind authorities themselves in a number of cases. The attention of the Government of Pakistan is again drawn to the following:-

(1) The entire Gainda Bet was clearly accepted as part of the territory of the Kutch State not only by the Political Agent in Kutch but also by the Magistrate of Tharparkar from as early as 1854 – 55. The boundary between the Sind Province and the Kutch State could not, therefore under any circumstances run through the Gainda Bet dividing it practically into two halves as alleged by the Government of Pakistan on the basis of an unsubstantiated statement made by the Mukhtiarkar of Diplo in 1875.

(2) The fact that the Kutch Darbar exercised full jurisdiction right up to the northern limit of the Rann of Kutch is clearly established by the existence of a fort known as the Kanjar Kot (its ruins are still in existence) belonging to the Maharao of Kutch. This fort is situated close to the northern limit just a mile or two south of the Rahim – ki – Bazar, the nearest village in Sind above the northern limit of the Rann.

(3) The fact that the Kutch Darbar have throughout exercised full jurisdiction over the Chhad Bet and other Bets in the Rann of Kutch by collecting grazing dues from the cattle owners of Sind and that this was accepted by the Sind authorities is borne out from the following :-

(i) The Kutch Darbar sanctioned a sum of Kories 1,000 /- during the year 1924 – 25 for digging a well in Chhad Bet as there was no facility for drinking water. The well was dug but it had to be abandoned as only salt water was found.
(ii) The Sind authorities agreed in 1944 – 45 to the extradition of mounted Police Sowar Ketamal Versimal, Sumra Sidik and Bhil Kania Gamia of the Diplo Taluka in the Tharparkar district of Sind to Kutch for trial under Sections 393 – 398 and 347 I.P.C for attempt at robbery and wrongful confinement of one Mahamad Hamir near a place called Kunvar Bet in the Rann of Kutch. The endorsement No. J/7930 dated the 7th November 1945 from the District Magistrate of Tharparkar to the Secretary to the Resident for Western India States refers.

(iii) In 1945 some employees of the Kutch State stationed on duty in the Chhad Bet apprehended some Sind cattle owners for grazing their cattle without payment of dues and brought them to Khavada Police Station in Kutch. The Sind cattle owners were released after they had made payment of the grazing dues. On return to Diplo, they lodged a complaint against the Kutch State employees and the Diplo Police authorities registered a case under Sections 223, 148 and 342 I.P.C. The District Magistrate of Tharparkar sought extradition of the Kutch State employees through the Resident for Western India States, whose letter No. A/4-3 (C) dated the 17th September 1945 to the Kutch Darbar refers. The Kutch Darbar refused to surrender their employees who had only discharged their duty within the State territory and the Sind authorities had to drop the matter.

(4) The Kutch authorities not only extended full assistance to trace the culprits responsible for the murder of Ramsarup of the Customs Department in the Rann of Kutch at a distance of about 18 miles from the Ding Outpost on the northern limit of the Rann but also informed the Superintendent of Police. Tharparkar that the offence was committed within Kutch territory. The letter No. 450 dated the 4th July 1945 from the Commissioner of Police in Kutch to the Superintendent of Police, Tharparkar, refers.

8. The contention of the Government of Pakistan in their telegram No. 1141 dated the 7th March 1956 that the Nara Bet in the North-eastern portion of the Rann of Kutch falls in the Nagarparkar taluka of Sind “according to official survey maps of 1927 and 1938” has been examined and is found to be without any basis, as would be clear from the following:-

(1) No survey maps containing the area of the Nara Bet were published by the Survey of India in 1927 or 1938 nor was the area surveyed by the Survey of India in those years. The Government of India are, therefore, not aware of the “official survey maps of 1927 and 1938” referred to by the Government of Pakistan.
The records about the Nara Bet show that it was a part of the Suigam Taluka (formerly in the Wav State) under the Western India States Agency but this was disputed by the Kutch State. This area was accordingly shown as “disputed” in the Survey of India Sheet No. 40 P. Nara Bet was never a part of the Nagarparkar taluka of Sind and Sind was not a party to the dispute between the Wav and Kutch States, as the boundary of Sind was shown clearly in Sheet No. 40 P in accordance with the original taluka maps furnished by the Sind authorities to the Survey of India. It is not necessary to go into the merits of the dispute between the Kutch State and Wav State as both the States became an integral part of India after Partition and the Nara Bet is thus clearly within Indian territory.

The Government of India presumes that the Government of Pakistan are aware of the engagement entered into by the Supreme Government with the Maharao of Kutch in the Treaty of Alliance of October 1819 guaranteeing the dominions of the Maharao. Since the sovereignty of the Maharao over the Rann of Kutch was recognized by the Supreme Government and since the jurisdiction of the Maharao over the Rann of Kutch right up to its northern limit was not only accepted but actually exercised by the Maharao, no unilateral action on the part of the Sind authorities could in the slightest way affect the established and recognized rights of the Maharao without his agreement and the sanction of the Government of India. If the Sind authorities or any other British authority had any doubt about the territorial limits of the Kutch State or had any claim on its territories, there was no reason why the proper course of negotiating with the Maharao or making a reference to the Government of India, if it was not possible to arrive at a settlement with the Maharao, was not adopted, as in the clear precedent of the dispute about the western portion of the Kutch – Sind boundary which was settled in 1913 in an appropriate manner. The fact that this was not done for nearly 75 years, according to the Government of Pakistan themselves, should be sufficient to signify that Sind had no claim at all. This also explains the reason why the Government of Bombay did not take any action on the references made by the Sind authorities in the matter on two occasions in 1875 and 1905. That the Sind authorities failed to establish their territorial claim for 75 years and that their authentic taluka maps throughout showed the boundary of Sind as terminating on the northern limit of the Rann of Kutch further prove the utter baselessness of Sind’s claim.

The question of application of International practice in regard to “dead seas” for determining the boundary between the Kutch State and Sind Province raised by the Government of Pakistan is absolutely irrelevant, as the fact that the Rann of Kutch has been an integral part of the territories of the Kutch State from the earliest times till Partition is beyond dispute, as has been shown in the above paragraphs. In any case, the Rann is not a sea, “dead” or “inland” or of any other description. It is a salt marsh and has been so described since earliest times. The erroneous depiction of it on certain maps as all water was corrected by orders of the Supreme Government in 1906 and 1914 (see paragraph 4 above).

11. The Government of India should like to emphasize that the alignment of the boundary between the Hyderabad and Tharparkar districts of Sind on the one side and the Kutch State on the other along the northern limit of the Rann of Kutch is a settled fact and that the only question which now remains is the demarcation of this boundary by actual fixation of pillars on the ground. The Government of India are always prepared to discuss proposals for the demarcation of the Kutch – Sind border from the Karachi – Hyderabad – Kutch tri-junction on the northern limit of the Rann of Kutch due east to the Sind – Kutch – Rajasthan tri-junction on the north – eastern extremity of the Rann of Kutch in accordance with the procedure already agreed upon between the two Governments on other sectors of the Indo – Pakistan boundary.

12. From what has been said in this and earlier communications on this subject from the Government of India, it is clear that the Rann of Kutch up to its northern limit has always formed part of the Kutch State which is now a part of the Union of India. Consequently, the entry of Pakistani forces into Chhad Bet in February 1956 constituted a deliberate violation of Indian territory. As stated in paragraph 2 of telegram No. 30355 dated the 11th March 1956 from Foreign New Delhi to Foreign Karachi, Indian forces are in the Chhad Bet area in the performance of their normal duty of preventing any violation of Indian territory.

13. The High Commission takes this opportunity to renew to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Commonwealth Relations the assurances of their highest consideration.

2303. Note from Pakistan Ministry of Foreign Affairs to High Commission of India in Pakistan.

Government of Pakistan
Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Commonwealth Relations
Karachi

The Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Commonwealth Relations. Government of Pakistan presents its compliments to the High Commission for India in Pakistan and, with reference to their Note No. F – 113/6/56 – Genl., dated the 12th June, 1956, regarding the Kutch – Sind border has the honour to state as follows:

The Government of Pakistan regrets that despite the overwhelming evidence quoted in their Notes No. I (I) – 3/9/54, dated the 22nd September, 1954 and No. I (I) -3/10/56, dated the 9th April, 1956, the Government of India have thought it fit to assert that “the boundary between the Hyderabad and the Tharparkar districts of Sind on the one side and the Kutch States on the other along the northern limit of the Rann of Kutch has been a settled fact from the earliest times till partition and continues to be so although it has not yet been demarcated on the ground”. The position has been utterly misconceived by the Government of India as would be clear from the following:

2. (a) Once the Government of India realize the following two facts this case will cease to escape a solution. Firstly, that the Rann of Kutch has always been a distinct unit of area, entirely separate from Kutch. Secondly, that what existed between Sind and Kutch were two disputes each relating to a different area and having a different nature as follows:

(i) One dispute related to the Sind – Kutch boundary on the land lying between Creek and Khori Creek and the meeting point of the Hyderabad and Karachi districts with the Greater Rann. The dispute was settled through the Government Resolution No. 1192, dated the 24th February, 1914, and the actual demarcation effected on the site in 1923 in accordance therewith. In pursuance of that settlement an area of 76,527 acres 23 gunthas, as specified in the Commissioner-in-Sind’s Notification No. 7749 – A, dated the 13th April, 1925, was transferred from Sind to Kutch. No portion of the Rann lies in the area which was the subject matter of this dispute and the statement to the contrary in Sub-Para. (5) of paragraph 6 in the High Commission’s Note under reference is unfounded.
The other dispute related to the delimitation of the respective rights of Sind and Kutch in the Ram itself and involved the territorial jurisdiction and the boundary alignment therein of the Hyderabad and Tharparkar districts of Sind on one side and the Kutch State on the other. This dispute was first raised in 1875 when the relevant boundary defined by the Mukhtiar of Diplo [as mentioned in paragraph 4 of this Ministry’s Note No. I (I) – 3/9/54, dated the 22nd September, 1954], was accepted by the Political Superintendent of Tharparkar and the Commissioner of Sind as well as by the Bombay Government. The Bombay Government moved the Kutch Darbar for an actual demarcation to be effected in accordance therewith but this could not materialize because of the death of the Maharao of Kutch that year. The above position is borne out by record which shows that the Political Agent, Kutch State showed his inability to meet the Political Superintendent of Tharparkar that season. Therefore, the Government issued the Resolution of February, 1876, that the demarcation in question must be postponed till next season and the Commissioner in Sind was informed accordingly.

After 1875, this dispute arose only on two occasions as under:

(i) In 1926, when the official representative of the Kutch tried to charge grazing fee from the Sind graziers in Chhad Bet, the Collector of Tharparkar made a reference to the Commissioner and he was informed that no change had occurred in the boundary line since 1875. Thereupon the Collector of Tharparkar passed an order that half of the Rann belonged to the British (Sind) Administration and no grazing fee should be paid to Kutch.

(ii) In 1937 – 38, when topographical Survey was carried out by the Survey Department of the Government of India. At that time the Officer-in-Charge held a joint conference of the representatives of Sind, Kutch and Wav States but no agreement could be arrived at. The Sind representatives claimed that half of the Rann should be included in Sind and desired that boundary line be drawn accordingly. This was not agreed to by the representatives of Kutch and Wav States. On correspondence being carried on with the Officer-in-Charge of boundary line in the Rann of Kutch which was un-demarcated, he was prepared to omit the boundary line from the modern Survey maps.

(b) The existence of the two disputes as distinct entities is clearly expressed in the demi-official letter dated the 10th October, 1905, addressed by Mr. Morrison of Sind Government to the Government of Bombay in which he said “the boundary between Sind and Kutch” ‘AND’ “the question of rights within Rann of Kutch” “will have to be settled one day or other, and my opinion is that the sooner the matter is taken up the better. Further delay will only give the Darbar opportunities, now that they apparently are thinking of their claims to accumulate or even manufacture evidence in their favour”. However as already pointed out in Sub-Para. (iii) Of paragraph 1 of this Ministry’s Note No. I (I) – 3/10/56, dated the 9th April, 1956, the Government of Bombay replied through their letter dated the 23rd November, 1905 that His Excellency (the Governor of Bombay) “thinks the question might be left alone till we are forced to take it up”. They were “forced” to take up the question relating to the settlement of the Sind – Kutch boundary to the west of the Rann because the following incidents occurred in that area one after another which threatened to strain the relations between the British Administration and the Maharao :-

(i) Ahmad Juma, a Tindal who was employed at the British Customs post at Sarganda was arrested and handcuffed by the Kutch authorities because he visited the west coast of the Sir Creek in the performance of his duty.

(ii) The Kutch authorities created a beacon “at the entrance to the Sir Creek and posts in the channel that thence connects with the Khori Creek”.

(iii) The Kutch State Police levied fees forcibly from the fisherman fishing in the open sea about 25 or 30 miles from the shores of Soir and Busta.

(iv) Certain Jakirani Jats who used to pay grazing fees to the British Government for the right to graze their camels between the Khori and Sir Creeks complained that they were compelled to pay the same fee over again to the Kutch Darbar.

(c) Sind – Kutch boundary to the west of the Rann was physically defined between Sind and Kutch through the Bombay Government resolution No. 1192, dated the 24th February, 1914 and demarcated accordingly in 1923. From the Government of Bombay Resolution No. 1192, dated the 24th February, 1914 and the map attached to that resolution, it is clear that only the boundary from the mouth of the Sir Creek to latitude 23º 58´ N, longitude 68º 48´ E was settled. No incidents occurred to similarly ‘force’ the British Administration to take up the question relating to the Rann ‘itself’ and so this question still remains unsettled.

(d) The Government of India would appreciated that the settlement of one dispute implies neither that the other disputed did not exist nor that the other dispute was automatically settled by the settlement reached in the former dispute. It is inconceivable that the British Administration would give away the entire Rann of Kutch without saying a word to that effect while for the very small area settled by the Bombay Government Resolution No. 1192, dated the 24th February, 1914, they would issue a notification (Commissioner-in-Sind’s No. 7749 – A, dated the 13th April, 1925) specifying the area (76,527 acres 23 gunthas) and particulars of the land involved. In the map which formed the basis of the 1913 settlement, the jurisdiction of the Kutch State is shown by a yellow riband and this riband in its extreme northern corner does not go beyond latitude 24°. The Bombay Government Resolution (mentioned above) made it clear that the boundary laid down therein ended at the meeting point of the blue dotted line with the Sind boundary as mentioned in purple on the map i.e., at the point latitude 23° 58´ N, longitude 68° 48´ E. The contention of the Government of India that the Sind authorities assumed that the Rann of Kutch was included in the Kutch State on the basis of the “Sind boundary as marked in purple on the map referred to in the Bombay Government Resolution No.1192, dated the 24th February, 1914” is utterly misconceived for the following reasons :-

(i) The map referred to in the Bombay Government Resolution
No.1192, dated 24th February, 1914, was no more than an annexure to this Resolution and had no other purpose except to illustrate the area of 76,527 acres 23 Gunthas thereby ceded to Kutch from the Karachi district.

(ii) The dash-dot-dash-dot symbol upon it was inserted by hand only to illustrate the Taluka District boundaries for the purpose of illustrating the area of Jati and Shah Bunder Talukas of the Karachi district which were ceded to Kutch. No such boundary symbol existed on the 1886-87 map of the Survey of India nor in the map prepared in 1910 to accompany the Sind Gazetteer and in fact the maps of 1927-28 (of Nagarpur Taluka) and 1929–34 – 42 – 43 (of the Thar Sub-Division of the Tharparkar district) show the Sind jurisdiction to at least the centre of the Rann.

(iii) The map of Sind prepared in 1927 on a scale of 8 miles to an inch was reprinted in 1933, 1936, 1940 and 1941. A copy was signed by the Superintendent of Survey and Land Records in Sind on 3rd September, 1940, and printed in Poona in 1941. In this map, the words “Kutch State” have been spaced along the Talukas of Jati and Shah Bandar of the former Karachi District from the mouth of Sir Creek to the point lat. 23° 58´ N and long. 68° 48´ E. Beyond this point the words “Rann of Kutch” have been spaced along the south of the Pacca land of the Talukas o Badin, Diplo, Mithi and Nagar Parkar of the Sind Province. It is quite clear from this map that the extreme eastern portion of Kutch State in the Rann area demarcated in 1923 under the Bombay Government Resolution No. 1192, dated the 24th February, 1914 ended at the point lat. 23° 58´ N and long. 68° 48´ E and beyond that it was the Rann of Kutch. It is, therefore, established that the Bombay resolution only related to the area up to the extreme eastern portion ending at the point 23° 58´ N and 68° 48´ E and that it had no reference to the area east of this point.

(iv) On the 20th December, 1927 (i.e. soon after the actual demarcation of the boundaries of the area lying between Sir Creek and Kori Creek was carried out in pursuance of the Bombay Government Resolution quoted above), the Collector of Tharparkar issued an order that Chad Bet lay within the territory and jurisdiction of the Sind Administration and the maldars grazing their cattle there should not pay any grazing fee to the Official representative of the Cutch. It was clearly stated in this order that half of the Rann belonged to the British (Sind) Administration. It is to be noted that it was a Police Jamadar of the Kutch State who had tried to collect the grazing fee and he would not have failed to inform the Kutch authorities that under the orders of the Collector of Tharparkar the graziers had refused to pay it. The Kutch authorities neither objected to this decision nor made any representation against it to the Sind authorities. A copy of the Collector's order had already been forwarded to the Government of India as an enclosure to this Ministry's Note No. I (I) – 3/10/56, dated the 9th April, 1956.

3. The position taken up by the Government of India is that "the (so called) boundary between the Hyderabad and Tharparkar districts of Sind on the one side and the Kutch State on the other along the northern limit of the Rann of Kutch" is not a disputed boundary but represents a disputed area since "it has not yet been demarcated on the ground". This position has been utterly misconceived by the Government of India. The correct position is that the Sind Administration has always exercised jurisdiction in the northern half of the Rann and the area which needs to be demarcated and that the disputed area would be that roughly represented by a line passing through almost the centre of the Rann. This is proved from the following:-

(a) The under mentioned entry appears on page 5 of the Sind Gazetteer of the year 1907:-

to Kori Creek was richly fertile, according to tradition and intercourse between Sind and Kutch, was free and frequent, obstructed by no desert barrier. In fact there was probably good water-way by the Puran from Lakhpat to Umerkot. About 30 miles from Lakhpat and 20 miles from Ali Bundar was fort of Sindhria frontier post and Customs house of the Kutch Government.

But in 1762 or there bout, Ghulam Shah Kalhore built a great dam across the Puran and Mori which served two purposes, fertilizing his own land and desiccating those of his enemy, the Rao of Kutch. The Kori became a mere creek and Lakhpat the furthest point of Kutch. The terrible earthquake of 1819 completed the work of desolation. A sudden subsidence of the land caused an inrush of sea which converted the country round Sindhri into a Salt lake for the time and destroyed that place. Since the earthquake the frontier of Sind from Kori Creek to Nagarparkar has been unmitigated saline desert.”

From this it is clear:-

(i) That the Rann was an inland sea,
(ii) That the land in the northern half of the Rann was under the Kalhora Kings of Sind,
(iii) That Sindhri was a frontier outpost of the Kutch State,
(iv) That Sindhri was about 30 miles away from Lakhpat and 20 miles from Ali Bunder, and
(v) That the Bund (shown on the map as Allah Bund) was constructed by the Kalhora Kings of Sind from Mori.

(b) The topo sheet published in 1898 (by the authority of the Government of India) under the direction of the Major General C. Stranhan, R.G., Surveyor General of India shows all the places named above. It also shows the Dharmsala mentioned in 1875 by the Mukhtiarkar of Diplo as pointed out in Sub-Para (1) of paragraph 4 of the Government of Pakistan’s Note No. I (I) – 3/10/56, dated the 9th April, 1956.

(c) Very obviously the treaty of Alliance of October, 1819, guaranteeing the dominions of the Maharao did not extend to or include the Rann of Kutch and this should become very obvious from the fact that the map prepared by Burns, Deputy Adjutant Quarter Master General “from actual measurement and personal observation” in 1825 (namely, soon after the Treaty of Alliance of October, 1819) did not show the Rann of Kutch as included in the Kutch State. On the other hand, the words “THURR” and “PARKUR” respectively, are inserted on the space in which the Rann area is depicted in this map.

(d) In a permanent record consisting of Ism-Shumari for the year 1869 – 70 onwards there are clear entries about patches of areas granted by the then Revenue Officials of Taluka Diplo for Kharif and Rabi cultivation on both sides of the Dhoro Puran for which land revenue was recovered by the Taluka Revenue Officers. Dhoro Puran has been clearly shown in the Indian Atlas sheet No. 3 NESE as being approximately 4 miles inside the Rann of Kutch. This shows that as many as 87 years ago the Revenue authorities of Diplo Taluka exercised jurisdiction over this part of “BANNI” land and recovered land revenue.

(e) The following extracts from letter No. 372 of 1923 dated the 4th August, 1923 and letter No. 484 of 1923 dated the 29th September, 1923 from the Diwan of Kutch to the Political Agent of Kutch on the question of improvising water, provisions and conveyance etc., for the party demarcating the boundary (in accordance with the Bombay Government Resolution No. 1192, dated the 24th February, 1914) clearly show that even the Kutch State did not claim an area in the Rann beyond ten miles to the north of the point long. 68º 48´ E, lat. 23º 58´ N. and recognized that it was the Sind Administration which exercised jurisdiction over the remaining area of the Rann.

(Letter No. 372, of 1923)

(i) “This arrangement was availed of from the Seer Creek to the angle of the triangle and 10 miles northwards. Beyond this the party had expected to obtain water, provisions and conveyance etc., from the Sind side.

(ii) “With regard to the request, about rendering the Sind authorities every possible assistance, contained in your letter No. 664, dated the 13th June, 1923, I may inform you that the necessary help will be afforded to the Sind authorities when work is being done on the line from the Seer to the angle of the triangle and 10 miles northwards. Beyond that, Darbar trust that every assistance will be given to the Kutch party by the Sind authorities”. (Letter No. 372, of 1923)

(iii) “Referring to your endorsement No. 1062, dated the 11th September, 1923, I have the honour to say that as already stated in this office letter No. 372, dated the 4th August, last, the required arrangement can be made for the party mentioned in letter No.
1645, of the 6th instant from the Superintendent Land Records in Sind, when work is being done on the line from the Seer to the angle of the triangle and 10 miles north-wards, and beyond that the Sind Authorities will be expected to arrange for water, provisions and camels for their as well as the Kutch parties”. (Letter No. 484, of 1923)

(iv) “The Officer in-charge of the Kutch Party will notify to the Sind Officer what arrangements he would requires from the Sind authorities, when they are working beyond the ten miles northwards on the Sind side. It is therefore requested that the Sind authorities might be addressed to render every possible help to the Kutch party on requisition”. (Letter No. 484, of 1923)

(f) The Imperial Gazetteer of India (Volume XI 1908 Edition) published under the authority of the Secretary of State for India fixes the boundary of the Kutch State as extending not beyond nearly 24º North latitude. It elaborately defines the limits of the boundary of the Kutch State. The Government of Pakistan emphasise that according to this Gazetteer “the whole territory of Kutch is almost entirely cut off from the continent of India north by the Great Rann, east by the little Rann south by the Gulf of Kutch and West by the Arabian Sea”.

(g) That the Maharao did not regard the area beyond ten miles to the north of the point long. 68º 48´ E, lat. 23º 58´ N, as Kutch territory and regarded the demarcation in that area to be the responsibility of the Sind authorities, is proved by the letter No. 372 of 1923 and letter No. 484 of 1923 from the Diwan of Kutch to the Political Agent in Kutch quoted above. There is also correspondence which shows that the Kutch Darbar did not accept responsibility for the affixation of the pillars beyond ten miles to the north of the point 68º 48´ E, 23º 58´ N. The Commissioner in Sind insisted on this demarcation by pucca boundary marks so that in the same continuation the two legs of the triangular area left to the Karachi district may be clearly demarcated on site with definite pucca boundary pillars because of the shifting nature of the soil and the Revenue Staff for their field work and inspection purposes may be able to locate the turning point at long. 68º 48´ E, lat. 23º 58´ N. For facility of reference the area to which the total cost of the demarcation pertained may be split up into, (1) from the top of the Sir Creek eastward to the point long. 68º 48´ E, lat. 23º 58´ N. (2) from the point long. 68º 48´ E, lat. 23º 58´ N, northward to a distance of 10 miles, and (3) from the point ten miles to the north of the point long. 68º 48´ E, lat. 23º 58´ N, to the tri-junction of the Karachi and Hyderabad districts with the greater Rann. All that can be said, is that the cost of the demarcation relating to the last-mentioned portion of the area should have been separated from the total cost and debited exclusively to Sind and that the small amount representing 50 per cent of the cost relating to this portion was an ex-

(h) gratia payment by Kutch. The Government of Pakistan regret that the Government of India again capitalize on the wrong deception by the Superintendent of Land Records of the point as “the tri-junction of Jati Taluka, Badin Taluka and Kutch State” even though this point is explicitly described in the old Revenue records as well as in the relevant correspondence both by the Commissioner of Sind and the Political Agent of Kutch as “a tri-junction of the Karachi and Hyderabad districts and the Rann of Kutch.”

(i) The Government of Pakistan note that none of the numerous instances of the exercise of jurisdiction by Sind in the northern half of the Rann, quoted in the Ministry’s Note No. I(I) – 3/9/54, dated the 22nd September, 1954, and Note on I(I) – 3/10/56, dated the 9th April, 1956, has been refuted by the Government of India.

(ii) It should, therefore, be obvious to the Government of India that

(iii) the order of the Commissioner of Sind and the Political Superintendent of Tharparkar by which they approved the boundary of the Tharparkar district was “defined” by the Mukhtiarkar of Diplo in 1875,

(iii) the declaration of the Commissioner of Sind (when the issue was raised by the Collector of Hyderabad in 1903) that “the right of the Sind authorities extended to at least the centre of Rann”, and

(iii) the order of the Collector of Tharparkar dated the 20th December, 1927 (on the application of the Raj Mahajans and Patels of Diplo Taluka) stating that half of the Rann belonged to the British (Sind) Administration were not the “vague and unsubstantiated statements of Sind officials” but were the views of competent authorities of the then British Administration and in accordance not merely with the position as accepted by the Government of Bombay in 1876 and the Gazetteers subsequently published under the authority of the Government of Bombay and the Secretary of State for India, respectively, but also in accordance with the admissions of the Kutch Darbar itself as mentioned above.

4. The jurisdiction in the northern half of the Rann was exercised by the Government of Sind after the British annexation and this is abundantly borne out by the numerous instances of their exercise of jurisdiction in this area as are mentioned in paragraph 4 of the Ministry’s Note No. I(I) – 3/9/54, dated the 22nd September, 1954, which the Government of India have not refuted but which they have lightly ignored as being without the knowledge of the Kutch Darbar. No instance whatsoever has been quoted by the Government of India to show the exercise of any fiscal jurisdiction by the Kutch Darbar in the northern half of the Rann and, surely, an instance like that of collecting a fee to the tune of Rs. 50,000/- per year by the Government of Sind from the lease of the fishing rights in the lake called Shakur-ji-Mian (lake in the Rann of Kutch about six miles from Rahim-ki-Bazaar which used to get water from Dhor Puran) could not have been unknown to the Kutch Darbar and could not have failed to evoke a protest from them if the Kutch Darbar had ever exercised even the semblance of an authority in this area. Records of the year 1904 – 05 of the Diplo Taluka office contain a number of applications from villagers (Abad- gars) residing near the border of Rann for grant of Banni land in the Rann for cultivation purposes. But the then Deputy Collector on the report of the then Tapedar in October, 1904 decided that there was bandish (restriction) on the disposal of this land and that the land was reserved as Charagah (grazing ground) for the cattle. The Tapedar in his report has clearly stated that the land in the Rann is sarkari, i.e., British India Government property.

5. (a) The Government of Pakistan reiterated that in the 1871 map there is no boundary symbol along the southern pucca, portion of the Sind Administration. Subsequent insertions by the Survey of India are not only unauthorized but absolutely unjustified in the absence of any notification from competent Authority. Such symbol should have been inserted only if the boundary alignment had been determined either by the competent authority or through the agreement of all the parties concerned and approved by the competent authority.

(i) The dash-dot-dash-dot symbol showed only the Taluka District boundaries and not the State or Provincial boundaries as it is marked within the Sind territory representing the boundary between the two Talukas of Sind on all the maps. There is no dash-dot-dash-dot symbol on the original maps of 1871 -72 and this is a subsequent and unauthorized insertion. The arguments advanced in clause (ii) of sub-paragraph (1) of paragraph 5 of the High Commission’s Note are, therefore, entirely unfounded.

(ii) The contention of the Government of India in clause (i) of sub-Para(1) of paragraph 5 of their Note is irrelevant, firstly, because the dash-dot-dash-dot symbol and the ribands appear only on the map which formed the basis of the 1913 settlement and this map was intended to be no more than an annexure to the Bombay Government Resolution No. 1192, dated the 24th February, 1914 and to illustrate no area other than that which was ceded under this Resolution to Kutch from the Karachi district, and secondly, because instead of there being anything to show any “agreement of the local British authority” to the Kutch jurisdiction extending to the northern border of the Rann the numerous instance of the exercise of authority of the Sind Government over the northern portion of the Rann of Kutch both before and after 1923 (when the Khor and Sir Creeks dispute was finally closed) [No. I (I) – 3/9/54, dated the 22nd September, 1954 and No. I(I) – 3/10/56, dated the 9th April, 1956] and the instances relating to the years 1875, 1903, 1905, 1926 – 27 and 1938 – 39 (referred to above) and the Survey of India and Government of Bombay maps of 1886 – 87, 1927 – 38, 1929 – 34 – 42 – 43, 1927 – 36 – 40 – 41 and 1910 and 1938 – 40 – 44 – 46 (mentioned in the following Sub-Paragraphs) show that jurisdiction was always and continuously claimed and exercised by Sind up to the centre of the Rann although the Sind – Kutch boundary within the Rann was not physically settled.

(iii) The Government of India refer to letter No. 357 of 1939 dated the 8th February, 1939 from the Superintendent of Survey and Land Records in Sind to the Officer-in-Charge No. 1 party (Survey of India) according to which the Sind Topo Survey Sheets published in the Indian Atlas series 1871 -72 were the source from which the boundaries of all the Talukas, sub –Divisions and Districts of Sind were derived. However, the Government of Pakistan refer again to the note on the survey boundaries supplied by the Officer-in-Charge No. 1 Survey Party, Survey of India, as an enclosure to his letter No. 1171-44-B-4, dated the 19th May, 1938, wherein it is clearly laid down that “the Survey of India maps are not authoritative as regards the alignment of fiscal boundaries”. The Government of Pakistan are surprised that the Government of India have chosen to rely on the Sind Topo Survey Sheets published in the Indian Atlas series of 1871 -72 because, firstly these maps in no way bear out the India contention and secondly the subsequent maps of 1886 – 87 referred to in the next succeeding sub – paragraph completely, refute the Indian contention. In any case, the revenue maps are for the purpose of assessing land revenue and obviously, therefore, there was no necessity to indicate in them the fiscal boundaries of the Rann of Kutch which was either water or marsh and swamp. The original Taluka maps of Sind purport to delineate only the ‘pucca’ land and are by no means an acknowledgement or even evidence of the territorial jurisdiction in the Rann of Kutch.

(b) Maps prepared by the Surveyor – General of India during the years 1886 – 87 on 13 = 1 mile scale based on the ground survey of 1885 – 86 show parts of District Tharparkar and Rann of Kutch. No. boundary along the Banni (Pucca) land is shown on these maps nor is any mention made as to whom the area of the Rann of Kutch belongs. There is no mention of Kutch State anywhere on these maps. On the maps, just below the Tharparkar District of Sind the islands named Bordia Bet, Dhan Bet and Parathna Bet and other small islands (the positions of which geographically correspond to the present Buruya Bet, Bhun Bet and Nara Bet) are shown. On the north-west corner of the maps the fact is mentioned that the maps cover some parts of District Tharparkar of Sind but there is no mention of Kutch anywhere, although some land portion in the Rann is shown on the Kutch that fell adjoining the Sind pucca (Bhanni) land and was under the control of the Sind Administration.

(c) From the Revenue map of Nagar Parkar Taluka prepared in 1927 – 1938 and duly signed by the Superintendent of Survey and Land Records in Sind and from the map of the Thar-Sub-Division of the Tharparkar District, Sind prepared in 1929-1934-1942-1943 and duly signed by the Superintendent of Survey and Land Records, Sind, it is clear that the islands of Buruya Bet, Bhun Bet, Selia Sochi Bet and Nara Bet, etc., in the Rann of Kutch were part of Nagar Parkar Taluka and were administered by the Sind Administration. If the situation of these islands is examined on a small scale map it will be found that the bottom of one of the islands (Nara Bet) goes below the centre of the Rann. These maps show that the Sind Administration exercised jurisdiction to at least half of the Rann area.

(d) A map of Sind was prepared in 1927 on a scale of 8 miles to an inch. It was reprinted in 1933, 1936, 1940 and 1941. A copy was signed by the Superintendent of Survey and Land Records in Sind on 3rd September, 1940 and printed in Poona in 1941. In this map, the words “Kutch State” have been spaced along the Talukas of Jati and Shah Bandar of the former Karachi District from the mouth of Sir Creek to the point lat. 23° 58´ N and long. 68° 48´ E. Beyond this point, the words “Rann of Kutch” have been spaced along the south of the Pucca land of the Talukas of Badin, Diplo, Mithi and Nagar Parkar of the Sind Province. It is quite clear from this map that the territory of the Kutch State ended at the point lat. 23° 58´ N and Long 68° 48´ E and to the east of this point it was the Rann of Kutch.

(e) The Government of Pakistan would again refer to the circumstances already mentioned in their Note No. I(I) – 3/10/56, dated the 9th April, 1956 and say that the printing of the word ‘disputed’ represented on actual fact and was not a mistake in the 70 miles map of India showing Provinces, States, and Districts (1938 Edition) and that if the 32 mile map of India referred to in paragraph 4 of the High Commission’s Note under reference showing the Rann of Kutch as a part of the Kutch State were to represent a “settled fact”, the Survey of India officers would not have subsequently arranged and failed to obtain an agreement on the subject in the latter years of 1938 and 1939 between representatives of the Government of Sind, and of Kutch and Wav States respectively, and the Officer-in-Charge No. 1 Party (Survey of India) in his letter No. 1575-44-B-4, dated the 23rd of August, 1939 to the collector of Tharparkar would not have proposed “to omit this boundary from the Modern survey maps” for the reason that “authorities of Sind, Kutch State, and Wav State still differed as to the correct alignment”. It was the Collector of Tharparkar who insisted that position be made explicit by the insertion of the word “disputed” at the relevant places in the Survey maps. This shows that the boundary was not settled till 1939 – 40. Any doubts which the Government of India may still be entertaining on the subject should be removed by the maps referred to in sub-paragraphs (c) and (d) above which are more reliable than the 32 mile map of India referred to in paragraph 4 of the High Commission’s Note. That the Director of Map Publications realized that the boundary was in dispute is clear from the fact that in this letter No. 67/5 – D, dated the 25th November, 1939, he said that a foot-note should be inserted saying that “the boundary between Sind and the States of Western India is taken from previous maps. Therefore, this boundary should have been the same as shown in the maps mentioned in sub-paragraph (b), (c) and (d) and this is what was contemplated by the Collector of Tharparkar in his letter No. I.S. 4416, dated the 2nd October, 1939, to the Officer-in-Charge, No. 1 Party, Survey of India. The Government of India have pointed out that the Government of Pakistan should be aware that it was a well established practice of the undivided Government of India that the Political Maps of India showing the external frontiers and the internal divisions were published by the Survey of India only after they had been approved by the Foreign and Political Department”. The Government of Pakistan, however, regret to note that the Government of India, while applying this doctrine to the 32 mile map of India as mentioned in paragraph 4 of their Note under reference, should deny it to the 70 mile Map of India as published in 1938 and even to its subsequent reprints of the years 1940, 1944 and 1946 respectively and should insist that the printing of the word “disputed” at the relevant place therein was a ‘Mistake’. The Government of India have chosen to rebut the contents of the 70 mile Map of India showing Provinces, States and Districts (1938 Edition) to which the doctrine of authenticity quoted above applies by the 70 mile map of India showing Political changes to which such a doctrine does not apply.
(f) It is equally surprising that in spite of the fact that the map which formed the basis of the 1913 settlement, where the jurisdiction of the Kutch State is shown by a yellow ribbon and this ribbon in its extreme northern corner does not go beyond latitude 24º, the Government of India should say that “this erroneous depiction is due that the fact that the Rann of Kutch is wrongly shown in earlier maps as all water”, and add further that when the Government of India in their notes of 2nd November, 1906, and 31st March, 1914, respectively, directed it to be shown as a salt marsh or a swamp “all the maps published after 1915 invariably showed that jurisdiction of the Kutch State over the entire Rann of Kutch right up-to its northern limit”. The Government of India point out in this connection that “the map which formed the basis of the 1913 settlement was composed from reprints between 1890 and 1900 of the 1871 – 72 Sind Topo Survey Sheets in the Indian Atlas Series, i.e., before the orders of the Government of India of the 2nd November, 1906, and the 31st March, 1914 mentioned above”. All that the Government of India’s notes of the 2nd November 1906 and the 31st March, 1914, said was that the symbol for depicting the Rann of Kutch in the maps should not be that used for water but that for salt marsh or swamp. The genesis of the above quoted arguments in the High Commission’s note is that when the Rann of Kutch was treated as all water it was not a part of Kutch but when it came to be treated as salt marsh or swamp it became as part of Kutch. There was no Government order or Resolution to that effect. In fact the entire contention of the Government of India is wrong as even in the 1871 – 72 map of the Survey of India, the Rann of Kutch is shown by marsh or swamp symbol. The map showing the political district of Sind Province referred to in sub-paragraph (h) below was prepared in 1910, i.e., after the above quoted note of the Government of India, dated the 2nd November, 1906 and yet it omits the southern boundary of the Taharparkar district with the Kutch State. This proves that the Government of India’s Notes of the 2nd November, 1906 and 31st March, 1914 did not imply that the Rann was to be treated as a part of the Kutch State.

(g) In the interim edition of March, 1943, of Sheet No. 40 – P, the part of the Rann bounded by the Banni (Pucca) land of Tharparkar District of Sind, Jodhpur or Marwar and Sabar Kantha Agency and the chain of islands to the south–east of Nagar Parkar Taluka are shown as disputed in the administrative index, although the boundaries along the Banni (Pucca) land of the above districts and States are shown by a regular symbol of dash-dot-dash-dot (-----). This shows clearly that the dash-dot-dash-dot symbol is not in all cases an authoritative symbol for showing demarcated boundaries. This also shows that the topographical maps of the Survey of India are at variance with the another in connection with fiscal boundaries and cannot be relied upon as an authority for administrative boundaries and in fact they have never been intended to be so relied upon vide note on the Survey boundaries supplied by No. 1, Survey Party, Survey of India, as an enclosure to their letter No. 1171 – 44 – B – 4, dated the 19th May, 1938, wherein it is clearly laid down that “the survey of India maps are not authoritative as regards the alignment of fiscal boundaries”.

(h) Map of Sind on scale 16 miles =1" reduced to ½" scale from original by Government Photographic Office, Poona, in 1910 prepared to accompany the Sind Gazetteer on which political Districts of Sind Province are shown, shows the boundary all ever by -.-.-.- symbol but omits the southern boundary of the Tharparkar district with the Kutch State. This clearly indicates that the boundary in this area was not defined even in 1910.

(i) Map of the North Western Frontier of British India including the protected Kutch State compiled from the then best and most recent authorities by T.B. Tassin in scale 32 mile to one inch published at the Government Press, Calcutta shows Rann of Kutch with marsh or swamp symbol and shows “Kutch” the Rann of Kutch and Sind separately. It is a map of the period after the earthquake of 1819.

(j) Sheet No. 3 of Sketch Map of India in 6 sheets, printed in 1867 on scale
32 miles = 1 inch, published under the direction of the Surveyor – General of India shows Kutch, Sind and Great Western Rann separately; the land area of Kutch and Sind is shown by ribands. Some of the islands in the Great western Rann have been shown but they have no ribands.
The Rann is shown by water symbol.

(k) There are a number of other maps of the period 1832 to 1900 wherein Sind has been shown as separated from the Kutch State by the Great Rann and the Great Rann has been treated as an entirely separate unit.

6.(a) A dispassionate study of the maps referred to above leads to the following conclusions:–

(i) That the Rann of Kutch was a separate unit of area entirely different from Kutch State,

(ii) That while no map shows the Rann as a part of the Kutch State, some maps clearly show the northern portion of the Rann as included in Sind,

(iii) That the Survey of India maps show the boundaries only of the pucca land,
(iv) That the Survey of India maps are at variance and are not and were not intended to be an authority for fiscal boundaries,

(v) That the dash-dot-dash-dot symbol was not always treated as an indication of demarcated boundaries,

(vi) that any ribands or symbols in the 1871 publications of the Survey of India map or in the 32 mile map of India showing the Rann of Kutch as wholly comprised in the Kutch State were subsequent insertions without any authority and have no evidentiary value on subjects, and

(vii) That the dash-dot-dash-dot symbol only indicated the Taluka boundaries and did not indicate State or provincial boundaries.

(b) The Government of India have solely relied on certain maps. These maps, as analysed above, neither prove India’s case nor are reliable so far as fiscal boundaries are concerned. For determining these boundaries, we have to seek for other reliable evidence.

7. Such evidence would be found either in the instances of the exercise of jurisdiction referred to above or in the relevant entries in Gazetteers and Memoirs. The Gazetteers and Memoirs also support Pakistan’s case but the Government of India have completely misunderstood the position laid down therein as would appear from the following :-

(a) The Government of India is no doubt aware that the Gazetteers published by authority in pre-partitioned India were continuously revised in the light of newer research in factual matters, and their contents were superseded in relevant respects by the more recent editions. The latest Gazetteer quoted by the Government of India in the High Commission’s Note under reference is that of the year 1908 (Imperial Gazetteer of India – Volume XI – 1908 Edition – published under the authority of the Secretary of State for India) and this approximately fixes the boundary of Kutch State as extending not beyond 24 deg. North Latitude and elaborately defines the limits of its boundary. The Government of Pakistan emphasise that according to this Gazetteer “the whole territory of Kutch is almost entirely cut off from the continent of India – north by the Great Rann, east by the little Rann, south by the Gulf of Kutch and west by the Arabian Sea”. This shows that the Kutch State did not extend to beyond approximately 24 deg. N. latitude.

(b) The latest description in an Imperial Gazetteer on the subject is that contained in the 1908 edition. However, the 1931 publication constituting Volume XXVI contains only the maps. The Government of India is, no doubt, aware that in the event of an inconsistency between a description and a map on the same subject the former prevails. In any case the 1931 edition (mentioned above) is amply refuted by the maps referred to above in paragraph 5 and even by the contents of the General Index appended to this (1931) edition wherein the Great Rann of Kutch is specified separately and not as a part of the Kutch State.

(c) The Gazetteer of the Bombay Presidency, Volume V, 1880 Edition (published under the authority of the Bombay Government) describes the boundary of the Kutch State as extending only as far as 24º north latitude. Moreover, it specifically excludes the Rann of Kutch from the boundary of the Kutch State and further lays down that the area of the State is 6500 square miles. It may be pointed out that the Rann itself covers an area of 9000 sq. miles.

(d) The statement of boundary of the Kutch State mentioned in sub-paragraph (c) above is corroborated by that contained in the Imperial Gazetteer of India, Volume II, 1908 Edition published under the authority of the Secretary of State for India.

(e) The Government of Pakistan are surprised that the Government of India should seek to contradict the unequivocal statements made in the Gazetteers mentioned above in sub-paragraph (c) and (d) by certain maps which are appendices even though it is obvious that these small scale maps show the Rann of Kutch as all water and do not assign it to Kutch State.

(f) The memoir of Kutch State which was submitted by Lt. Raikes (an Assistant Political Agent in Kutch) to the Bombay Government in 1854 is not an authentic document; “yet even therein the area of the Province of Kutch” is mentioned as 6500 sq. miles (thus showing that the area of the Rann was not treated as being a part of Kutch State) while all that is expressed in reference to the Rann of Kutch is a possibility that the “Grand Rann may be considered as a part of the Province”, a statement which denies the assertion that the inclusion of the Rann of Kutch in the Kutch State “has been a settled fact from the earliest times”.

(iii) The Imperial Gazetteer of India – Volume IV – 1885 Edition – published by authority; and purport to lay down only a hypothesis and not a fact as in each case they make a separate and distinct reference to the Rann of Kutch as a separate unit which is dubious in its context. Were they to express a “settled fact” there would have been no need to specify the Rann and the area and boundary of the Kutch State would be assumed to be inclusive thereof. These Documents only show that the position about the Rann of Kutch was fluid and unsettled. In any case the Imperial Gazetteer of 1908 (Volume XI published under the authority of the Secretary of State for India) will prevail over these Gazetteers as mentioned in sub-paragraph (a) above.

8. The Government of Pakistan note that the Government of India has ultimately chosen to fall back on the instances of exercise of jurisdiction in the Rann. But the instances thus quoted by them do not bear out their claim at all as would be clear from the following :-

(a) There is nothing to show that the “entire” Gainda Bet was ever “clearly accepted by the Political Agent in Kutch or by the magistrate of Tharparkar as part of the territory of the Kutch State”. The Government of India will no doubt appreciate that the Rann was never demarcated (either entirely or territorially between Sind and Kutch) and the Gainda Bet is one of the very small and equally numerous islets in the Rann area. The jurisdiction which the Government of Pakistan define as theirs is half of the entire Rann and it so happens that thereby the Gainda Bet is roughly divided into halves, a position which is conformable to the fact that jurisdiction to the north of the Dharamashala in this Bet was exercised by the Sind Administration.

(b) Kanwar Bet extends south to beyond the centre of the Rann. The endorsement No. J/7930, dated the 7th November, 1945, by the District Magistrate of Tharparkar (relating to the extradition of mounted Police Sowar Ketamal Versimal Sumra Sidik and Bhil Kania Camia of the Diplo Taluka in the Tharparkar District of Sind to Kutch for Trial under sections 302, 393 – 398 and 347 I.P.C.) is, therefore, not relevant to the Indian case. The Government of Pakistan would like to point out two instances of the same year (1945) relating to Bhihar and Karimshahi Bets in the Rann of Kutch in which the offences of assault on a Customs Sowar and a Head Constable were registered in Diplo Police Station of the Tharparkar district of Sind [vide Cr. No. 19 of 1945 under sections 302 and 242 I.P.C. and Cr. No. 7 of 1945 under section 326, 333 and 148 I.P.C. and Rule 81 (4) of the Defence of India Rules, respectively].
(c) If the murder of Ramserup of the Customs Department (in 1945) in the Rann of Kutch (at a distance of about 10 miles from the Ding Outpost—a Sind Police Outpost on the northern limits of the Rann) were committed in Kutch territory, there could be no question of the “Kutch authorities (merely) extending full assistance to trace the culprits responsible for the murder”. In that case the apprehension of the culprits would be their exclusive responsibility. It will be noted that the scene of the offence in this case was only a couple of miles or so to the north of the centre of the Rann (which is approximately 24 miles wide) and the culprits probably slipped into the southern half thus making the assistance of Kutch authorities necessary to apprehend them. The letter No. 450, dated the 4th July, 1945, from the Commissioner of Police in Kutch to the Superintendent of Police, Tharparkar does not go beyond showing that the former laid a claim that the scene of the offence was in Kutch territory; there is nothing to show that this claim was accepted. This instance on the other hand shows that jurisdiction in the northern half of the Rann was exercised by the Sind Administration.

(d) The following instance may be reproduced verbatim as mentioned in the High Commission’s Note because it shows that the territorial position of the Rann was in dispute and that it was not a “settled fact” and that Chhed Bet was regarded by the pre-partition “British Administration as a part of Sind and not as that of Kutch”. “In 1945 some employees of the Kutch State stationed on duty in the Chhed Bet apprehended some Sind cattle owners for grazing their cattle without payment of dues and brought them to Khaawda Police Station in Kutch. The Sind cattle owners were released after they had made payment of the grazing dues. On return to Diplo, they lodged a complaint against the Kutch State employees and the Diplo Police authorities registered a case under sections 223, 148 and 342 I.P.C. The District Magistrate of Tharparkar sought extradition of the Kutch State employees through the Resident for Western India States, whose letter No. VA/4 – 3(C), dated the 17th December, 1945, to Kutch Darbar refers (and by which he obviously endorsed the stand of the District Magistrate of Tharparkar). The Kutch Darbar refused to surrender their employee”. There is nothing to show, as the Government of India contends, that the Sind authorities had to drop the matter. On the other hand, as mentioned in sub-Para(a) of paragraph 2 of this Note, the Collector of Tharparkar issued an order in 1926 that Chhed Bet lay within his district and that grazing fee in this area should not be paid to the official representative of the Kutch State. The Sind Authorities did not press the matter because they hoped that after this order and the registration of a case against the Kutch officials; culminating in the issue of warrants of arrest against them the Kutch officials, in future, would not attempt to enter Chhed Bet.

(e) The Government of Pakistan deal separately with the following two instance quoted by the Government of India in order to emphasise that the latter have been misinformed about them:

(i) No well was ever dug in the Chhed Bet. The only excavation appearing there is a tank about three feet deep built by the Raj Mahajans of Diplo Taluka for the storage of drinking water during the rains for the cattle grazing in Chhed Bet. It is, therefore, wrong that in pursuance of some sanction given by the Kutch Darbar in 1924-25, “a well was dug (in Chhed Bet) but it had to be abandoned as only salt water was found”.

(ii) The fort which is about two miles to the south of Rahim – Ki – Bazar never belonged to the Maharao of Kutch. It was built by the Kalhoras and belonged to them.

9.(a) The Government of Pakistan are confident that in view of what has been stated above the Government of India will now accept the position that from earliest times the Sind Administration have exercised jurisdiction over at least the northern half of the Rann and would now agree to have the demarcation carried out in the Rann of Kutch accordingly. This demarcation would also be in conformity with the principle which would be applicable if the Rann of Kutch were treated as an inland sea. That the Rann of Kutch is an inland sea (now dead) is proved conclusively from the following extract of page 85 of the Imperial Gazetteer of India (Volume XI) published under the authority of the Secretary of State for India at Oxford at the Clarendon Press in 1908 wherein the Rann is described as below:

“It is believed to be the bed of an arm of the sea, raised by some natural convulsion above its original level, and cutoff from the ocean. It was a navigable lake in Alexander’s time (325 B.C.) and a shallow lagoon at the date of the Periplus (third century A.D.) and there are local traditions of seaport on its border. Geologically, it is of recent formation. The northern or larger Rann – measuring, from East to West about 160 miles and from North to South about 80 has an estimated area of not less than 7,000 square miles. The eastern or smaller Rann (about 70 miles from East to West), which is connected with the larger Rann by a narrow Channel, covers an area estimated at nearly 2,000 square miles. Between March and October, when the whole tract is frequently inundated, the passage across is a work of great labour and often of considerable danger. Some of this inundation is salt water, either driven by strong south winds up the Lakhpat river from the sea, or brought down by brackish streams; the rest is fresh, the drainage of the local rainfall. The flood — waters as they dry leave a hard, flat surface, covered with stone, shingle and salt. As the summer wears on, and the heat increases, the ground, backed and blistered by the sun, shines over large tracts of salts with dazzling whiteness, the distance dimmed and distorted by an increasing mirage. On some raised plots of rocky land water is found, and only near water is there any vegetation. Except a stray bird, a herd of wild asses, antelope, or an occasional caravan, no sign of life breaks the desolate loneliness. Unseasonable rain, or a violent south — west wind at any period, renders the greater part f the Rann impassable.
 Owing to the effects of an earthquake in 1819 the greater Rann is considerably higher in the centre than along the edges while the centre, therefore, is dry; there are frequently water and mud at its sides. The little Rann is at present undergoing a marked change.
 Year by year the sea is spreading farther eastward; and, along the coast, places which a few years ago were inaccessible to boats are now open to water traffic.”

(b) In this connection the Government of Pakistan wish to emphasise that the principle on which the dispute over the little Rann between the two States of Morvi and Kutch was decided is definitely applicable to this case and the argument that Morvi and Kutch both have been subsequently integrated into the Union of India does not deprive the aforesaid principle of the status of a precedent according to which the current dispute between India and Pakistan should be decided.

10. The Government of Pakistan therefore hope that the Government of India will now be convinced that Pakistan’s claim to the northern half of the Rann is conformable not only (a) to the facts of the situation relating to actual possession and exercise of the jurisdiction in the area and the admission of the Kutch Darbar itself, but also (b) to the international law and practice relating to the settlement of such a dispute in a tract of the nature of an inland sea, and will agree to demarcation being carried out accordingly.

11. The Sind Administration had always been exercising jurisdiction in Chhed Bet as it lay within the northern half of the Rann. After the Independence there were instances of unjustified encroachments in this area by the Indian troops and personnel against which protests were constantly lodged by the Pakistani authorities with their counterparts. In view of what has been stated above the unlawful occupation of Chhed Bet and other places in the northern half of the Rann by Indian troops was nothing short of aggression. The Government of Pakistan hope that the Government of India will now be convinced of the justice and the necessity for restoring the status quo in these areas and of a very early settlement of this dispute.

12. The Ministry avails itself of this opportunity to renew to the High Commission the assurances of its highest consideration.

High Commission For India In Pakistan
Karachi

F. 113(6)/56 – Genl. the 23rd February, 1959

The High Commission of India presents their compliments to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs & Commonwealth Relations, Government of Pakistan, and with reference to the Ministry's Note No. I (I) – 3/10/56, dated the 19th May, 1958, regarding the Kutch – Sind boundary, have the honour to state as follows:

2. The detailed replies to various points given in the High Commission’s note No. 113/6/56 – Genl dated 12 – 6 – 56 conclusively established that there was no substance in the arguments advanced by the Government of Pakistan in support of their claim. The Government of India have, nevertheless, again given careful consideration to the arguments advanced in the Ministry's note of 19th May, 1958, sent in reply to the High Commission's note of 12th June, 1956. The Government of India regret to have to state that the Ministry's note contains no new arguments beyond those dealt with before and shown to be without any substance whatever. The Government of India are constrained to state that the Government of Pakistan have attempted to side – track the basic facts regarding the Kutch – Sind boundary, have repeated claims already shown to be groundless, quoted claims advanced by subordinate officials which, in fact, were not supported by their higher authorities at the time and, what is particularly distressing, as shown in the following paragraphs, misquoted historical records, omitting portions which clearly establish a position other than the one the Government of Pakistan desire to establish. It is not surprising, in the circumstances, that the Government of Pakistan could not but arrive at wrong conclusions. The Government of India do not, in view of this position, propose to go into great detail over various questions which have been dealt with in the High Commission’s notes mentioned in the footnotes* but will limit this communication to stating their views on the principal arguments advanced in the note of the Pakistan Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Commonwealth Relations dated 19th May, 1958.

3. Before offering further comments, the Government of India wish to point out that the following statement in Para3 of the Ministry’s Note under reply is incorrect:-

“The position taken up by the Government of India is that ‘the (so-called) boundary between Hyderabad and Tharparkar districts of Sind on the one side and the Kutch State on the other along the northern limit of the Rann of Cutch’ ‘is not a disputed boundary but represents a disputed area,’ since “it has not yet been demarcated on the ground”.

The Government of India to do not consider that there is any disputed area involved. The position of the Government of India is clearly set out in the High Commission’s Note dated 12-6-1956 in the following terms:

“The Government of India would like to emphasise that the alignment of the boundary between the Hyderabad & Tharparkar districts of Sind on the one side and the Kutch State on the other along the northern limit of the Rann of Kutch is a settled fact, and that the only question which now remains is the demarcation of this boundary by actual fixation of pillars on the ground.”

4. In the Ministry’s note under reply, the Government of Pakistan have raised the following principal contentions:

I. That the scope and applicability of the Bombay Government’s resolution No. 1192 dated 24–2–1914 and the demarcation of the boundary along the triangle from the top of the mouth of Sir Creek to the Karachi–Hyderabad–Kutch tri-junction has no relevance so far as the question of the northern boundary between Sind and Kutch is concerned. The Ministry’s note stresses the following points in support of this contention:

(a) “Sind – Kutch boundary to the west of the Rann was physically defined between Sind and Kutch through the Bombay Government Resolution No. 1192, dated the 24th February 1914, and demarcated accordingly in 1923. From the Government of Bombay Resolution No. 1192 dated the 24th February, 1914, and the map attached to that Resolution, it is clear that only the boundary from the mouth of the Sir Creek to latitude 23º 58´ N and longitude 68º 48´ E was settled,” and

(b) “That the Maharao did not regard the area beyond ten miles to the north of the point long. 68º 48´ E, lat. 23º 58´ N, as Kutch territory and regarded the demarcation in that area to be the responsibility of the Sind authorities, is proved by letter No. 372 of 1923 and letter No. 484 of 1923 from the Diwan of Kutch to the Political Agent in Kutch quoted above. There is also correspondence which shows that the Kutch Darbar did not accept responsibility for the affixation of the pillars beyond ten miles to the north of the point 68º 48´ E, 23º 58´ N. The Commissioner in Sind insisted on this demarcation by pacca boundary marks so that in the same continuation the two legs of the triangular area left to the Karachi district may be clearly demarcated on site with definite pacca boundary pillars because of the shifting nature of the soil and the Revenue Staff for their field work and inspection purposes may be able to locate the turning point at long. 68º 48´ E, lat. 23º 58´ N. For facility of reference the area to which the total cost of the demarcation pertained may be split up into, (1) from the top of the Sir Creek eastward to the point long. 68º 48´ E, lat. 23º 58´ N, (2) from the point long. 68º 48´ E, lat. 23º 58´ N, northward to a distance of 10 miles, and (3) from the point 10 miles to the north of the point long. 68º 48´ E, lat. 23º 58´ N, to the tri-junction of the Karachi and Hyderabad districts with the Greater Rann. All that can be said, is that the cost of demarcation relating to the last mentioned portion of the area should have been separated from the total cost and debited exclusively to Sind and that the small amount representing 50% of the cost relating to this portion was an ex – gratia payment by Kutch.”

5. That the scope and applicability of the Bombay Government’s resolution No. 1192, dated 24th February, 1914 and the demarcation of the boundary along the triangle from the top of the mouth of Sir Creek to the Karachi – Hyderabad – Kutch tri-junction are not as restricted as stated in the Ministry’s note and that under the Bombay Government resolution quoted above, the tri –
The Commissioner of Sind in his letter of 28th February, 1910 addressed to the Government of Bombay explaining Sind Government’s claim stated as follows :-

“The authorities summarized in this statement constitute a mass of evidence to the effect that since 1837, the boundary between Sind and Kutch has been recognized and shown on all maps which have been prepared from that date to the present day, to be a straight line drawn due south from the tri-junction of the Badin taluka of the Hyderabad District, Jati taluka of the Karachi district and the Rann of Cutch to a point on the North bank of the Kori Creek, east of the Musafirkhana at Kotri, and from that point the Khori Creek until that Creek joins the Arabian Sea.

“The new trigonometrical survey maps prepared in 1904 – 05 also show the same boundary, and so does the map of the Bombay Presidency including Cutch contained in the official memoranda on Native States in India 1909. I have also obtained additional valuable evidence of the correctness of this boundary which has never before been questioned since the conquest of Sind in 1843.”

The Maharao of Kutch, while accepting the settlement of the boundary line in his letter of 16th June, 1913 to the Political Agent of Kutch, stated that it would be desirable to erect boundary pillars on the line from the point at long. 68º 48´ E, lat. 23º 58´ N due north to the Karachi – Hyderabad – Kutch tri-junction, at the time of demarcating the boundary from the top of Sir Creek to that point. The Government of Bombay in their letter of 17th July, 1916 asked the Political Agent for Cutch to inform the Cutch Darbar that “the Commissioner in Sind has issued orders for the fixing of boundary pillars all along the boundary of the triangle on its southern and eastern sides, i.e. along the dotted blue line on the map, and also along the purple line from where it joins the dotted blue line to the tri-junction of the Karachi and Hyderabad districts and the Rann of Cutch.”

After the boundary had been demarcated the Superintendent of Land Records in Sind in his letter of 10 – 1 – 1924 reported to the Collector of Karachi as follows :-

“Our survey party ….. returned from the Rann of Kutch after completing the survey of the Sind – Kutch boundary on the 20th idem ……….
The total length surveyed amounts to 45 miles, of which 22 miles are comprised in the southern line and 23 miles in the eastern line joining the tri-junction of the Badin and Jati talukas and the Cutch territory in the north."

The above quotations, which give the position of the two contending parties regarding the points in dispute and the orders of the Government of Bombay as well as the final report of the Superintendent of Land Records in Sind to the Collector of Karachi after he had finished demarcation work in accordance with the orders of the Government of India, clearly establish that just as the Talukas of Badin and Jati on the Sind side of the boundary form part of the Sind Province. The Rann of Kutch on the Kutch side of the boundary forms part of the Kutch State. The Government of India regret to note that the Government of Pakistan have not only been ignoring the unimpeachable evidence against their contentions but have also been constantly modifying their position in connection with the scope and applicability of the Bombay Government's resolution No. 1192 dated 24–2–1914. In the Ministry's note dated 20–9–1954, it was stated that no demarcation had taken place beyond the point, 23° 58´ N – 68° 48´ E, whereas after considering the reply of the Government of India, the Government of Pakistan now argue that though demarcation had taken place right up to the tri-junction of the boundaries of the Badin Taluka of the Hyderabad District, the Jati Taluka of the Karachi District and the Rann of Kutch, this was for some purpose other than that of boundary demarcation. Similarly, the Government of India regret that the Government of Pakistan have now advanced other equally facile arguments that the map attached to the Bombay Government's resolution was a "mere annexure" without any significance and that the cost of demarcation relating to the portion from the point 10 miles to the north of the point, longitude 68° 48´ E and latitude 23° 58´ N, to the tri-junction of the Karachi and Hyderabad Districts with the Rann of Kutch, was charged to and paid by the Kutch Darbar under a mistake. In view of the clear evidence in (i), (ii) and (iii) above, the Government of India hope that the Government of Pakistan will not raise these arguments again and accept the position that the tri-junction point on the boundary of the Badin Taluka of the Hyderabad District, Jati Taluka of the Karachi District and the Rann of Kutch, demarcated in accordance with the Bombay Government's resolution No. 1192, dated 24–2–1914, is the established boundary between the old State of Kutch and Sind.

6. The second contention raised in the Ministry's Note is that (1) the Commissioner of Sind and Political Superintendent of Tharparkar had approved the boundary of Tharparkar District as defined by Mukhtiarkar of Diplo in 1875, (2) the Commissioner of Sind had declared that the right of the Sind authorities extended to at least the centre of the Rann when the issue was raised by the Collector of Hyderabad in 1903 and (3) that the Collector of Tharparkar had issued orders on 20th December, 1927, stating that half of the Rann belonged to the British Sind Administration. The Government of Pakistan have also stated that “from earliest times the Sind Administration have exercised jurisdiction over at least the northern half of the Rann”. If these alleged orders and declaration were based on proper authority and if the Sind Administration had actually exercised jurisdiction up to the middle of Rann of Kutch, it would have been incumbent upon the then Government of India authorities to describe the boundary of Sind as running along the middle of the Rann of Kutch in such official publications as the Gazettes of India and to show the boundary accordingly in the maps published by all the competent authorities of the then Government of India. However, it is clear that, in no authoritative publication is the description of Sind Province given as including the Rann of Kutch, nor are there any authorized maps which show the boundary of Sind as running through the middle of the Rann of Kutch from the point long. 68° 48´ E lat. 23º 58´ N. The alleged declarations and orders of the local authorities of Sind have no validity. Any orders affecting the boundary between Sind and Kutch could have only been passed by the Government of former British India after agreement with the Maharao of Kutch.

7. The third contention raised in the Ministry’s Note is that certain maps quoted in the Ministry’s Note support the claim of Pakistan. These contentions are dealt with below:

(a) The dash – dot – dash (.-.) symbol in the map accompanying the 1914 Resolution is alleged to have been unauthorized.

The map in question comprised Indian Atlas Sheets Nos. 3 NE, 3 SE, 11 NW & 11 SW on the scale of 1½ = 4 miles, and all these were published by the “Authority of the Government of India”. These Atlas Sheets were based on maps compiled from the Sind Survey operations in 1867–70 and published in 1871 – 72. These maps were prepared after comparison with existing Settlement maps in Sind, and the Sind authorities were fully consulted in the preparation of these maps. It is worth noting that the authorities who were not consulted in the preparation of these maps were the Kutch Darbar. The boundaries shown in these Survey maps were adopted without change in the Indian Atlas Sheets. There is, therefore, not the slightest doubt that the alignment of the boundary in these Atlas Sheets so far as Sind was concerned, was fully authenticated. This matter has been fully explained in Para. 5(i) of the High Commission’s Note dated 12th June, 1956. Moreover, during the negotiations leading to the Bombay Government’s Resolution of 1914, the map was specifically referred to the Commissioner in Sind, and no objection was taken by him as to the Sind boundaries shown. That the Pakistan Government’s contention is without any substance is clear from the fact that demarcation operations northwards up to the Karachi – Hyderabad – Kutch tri – junction would not have been undertaken and completed nearly ten years after the date of the Bombay Government’s Resolution if there had been the slightest doubt about the authenticity of the boundary as shown in the map accompanying the Bombay Resolution.

(b) It is alleged, on the basis of the 1886 – 87 Survey of India maps and certain other maps that the Bets of Bordia, Bhan and Paratha actually fell under Sind Administration.

So far as the 1886 – 87 Survey map is concerned, in the absence of a boundary line, what is of decisive importance is the “Index to adjoining Sheets”. The Index clearly shows these Bets as outside the Tharparkar District. Further, the attention of the Government of Pakistan is invited to one map which they have themselves cited in their note. In this map of Sind, signed by the Superintendent, Land Records, Sind, and published in Poona in 1927, the engraved dash – dot – dash symbol has been used to denote the Sind boundary, and clearly excludes from Sind jurisdiction the Bets in question. This very map contradicts the conclusions desired to be drawn by the Pakistan Government in citing the Maps of Nagarparkar Taluka 1927 -28 and of Thar sub – Division, 1929 – 34 – 42 – 43. If any further evidence was required, this will be found in Indian Atlas Sheets 21/ SW published under the “Authority of the Government of India” in 1890, which showed these Bets with the yellow riband leaving no doubt that they did not belong to Sind.

The Pakistan Government’s attention is also invited to the official publications of Sind, the latest of which was the Gazetteer of the Province of Sind – B. Vol. VI – Thar and Parkar District, 1919 and 1926 editions, published under the authority of the Government of Bombay, which gives the longitudinal and latitudinal limits of the three Talukas of Tharparkar as follows:-

This clearly precludes any such contention as has been made by the Pakistan Government.
The Government of Pakistan have also referred to certain correspondence among the O.C. No. 1 Survey Party, the Resident, Western India States, and the Collector of Tharparkar, during the 1937-38 surveys. A fuller examination of this correspondence would show the following:-

On the Sind authorities' claiming that there was divergence between their maps and the tracing furnished by the Survey of India, the O.C. Survey party insisted that the original Sind maps should be furnished to them by the Superintendent of Land Records, Sind. After examination of these original Sind maps, which showed the external boundary of Sind running partly along the limit of the Rann of Kutch, and partly along the cart track along this Rann, O.C. Survey party pointed out as follows:-

“This agrees with the alignment shown on our previous old maps of the area………

(a) Statement, dated 22 – 1 – 38, of the Mukhtiarkhar Nag Parkar is nullified………

(c) Cutch agrees with the Superintendent of Surveys and Land Records in Sind.

(d) The only dispute is between Kutch and Wav States over a bit of the Rann of Kutch area…..

The O.C. Survey party concluded as follows:-

“Under these circumstances it is evident that the alignment of the provincial boundary between Sind and the States of Western India as shown by the Superintendent of Surveys and Land Records in Sind, is correct and undisputed”.

8. The fourth contention in the Ministry’s Note is a reiteration of the argument regarding the origin of the word “disputed” in the 70 – mile map printed in 1938 and re – printed in subsequent years. This has already been dealt with in the High Commission’s Note of 12th June, 1956 and the Government of India would state again that they have established conclusively that the Director of Map Publications had ordered the word “disputed” to be removed and that the continued use of the word “disputed” was unauthorized and erroneous.

9. The fifth contention raised in the Ministry’s Note is that quotations from Gazetteers support the position of the Government of Pakistan that the Rann of Kutch has been described as separate from the Kutch State or that it has been excluded from the Kutch State. That this contention is groundless is clear from the following :-
(a) The Rann of Kutch has been described as a separate geographical feature and special mention made of it, but it has nowhere been stated that the Rann of Kutch or any part of it is part of the territory of Sind. All authorities indicate that the territory of Sind is bounded on the south by the Rann of Kutch. An example may be found in the Gazetteer of 1908 which defines the boundaries of Sind as follows:

“Sind is bounded on the north by Baluchistan, and Punjab, and the State of Bahawalpur; on the east by the Rajputana States of Jaisalmer and Jodhpur; on the south by the Rann of Kutch and the Arabian Sea; and on the west by the territory of the Jam of Las Bela and of the Khan of Kalat (Baluchistan)”.

(b) If further evidence from the Gazetteers is necessary, attention is invited to the following:

(i) The Gazetteer of India compiled by the authority of the East India Company by Edward Thornton – Vol. II, 1854, defines the area of Kutch as follows:–

“It is bounded on the north – west and north by the province of Snide; on the east by the dominions of the Guicowar; on the south by the peninsula of Kattywar and the Gulf of Cutch, and on the south-west by the Indian Ocean. Its limits, inclusive of the great salt march termed the Runn, extend from lat. 22º 47´ to 24º 40´, and from long. 68º 26´ to 71º 45´. Its greatest length from east to west is 205 miles, and its breadth from north to south (which is nearly equal throughout its whole extent) 110 miles. The area, exclusive of the Runn is 6,764 sq. miles, and its population is returned at 500, 536”.

The above definition clearly establishes that in 1854 the British authority in India acknowledged that the Rann of Kutch formed part of the Kutch State.

(ii) The same Gazetteer (of 1854) defines the boundary of Sind as follows:-

“It is bounded on the north by Baluchistan, the Daman, and Bhawlpour; on the east by Jessulmere and Marwar; on the south by Cutch and the Indian Ocean; on the west by Baluchistan; and is situated between lat. 23º 37´ – 28º 32´ and long. 66º 43´ – 71º 3´.

The establishes that the British authorities recognized clearly that the Rann of Kutch did not form part of Sind.
(c) In the Treaty of Alliances of October 1819 the British guaranteed the integrity of the territory of the Maharao of Kutch and, therefore, there could be no question of any unilateral alteration of the boundaries of the Kutch State. There was no agreement between Kutch State and the British Government after 1854 whereby the boundaries of the Kutch State were altered by ceding the northern half of the Rann of Kutch to the British.

(d) The Pakistan Government have stated that in the General Index to the 1931 edition of the Imperial Gazetteer, the Great Rann of Kutch has been shown as a unit separate from the Kutch State. If it is proposed to draw any conclusions from this, similar conclusions would also have to be drawn from the fact that Thar Desert has been shown in the General Index as within Rajputana, although a part of it in fact clearly falls in Sind. It is pointed out that the Government of the India have not thought it fit to claim the whole of the Thar Desert on such grounds.

10. While on the subject of Gazetteers the Government of India would like to refer to a quotation from the Sind Gazetteer of the year 1907 given in Para. 3 of the Ministry's Note. This quotation is inaccurate and incomplete. The full and correct extract of the relevant paragraph in the Gazetteer is reproduced below and the portions omitted in the quotation in the Ministry's Note have been italicized:

“The Rann (or Run; in Sind it is pronounced Ryn.) of Kutch forms the southern, or south–eastern boundary of Sind from Rajputana to the sea and it is difficult to understand the history of the country without bearing in mind the great changes which have come about in that tract. It is now a vast salt waste, flooded to a great extent for several months of the year by the waters of the sea driven into it by the force of the south – west monsoon, which convert it into a salt lake. At other seasons it is a desert, flat, firm and quite bare, except for a few “islands”, where there is scanty herbage. Chinkara and the wild ass roam over it, crossing the border only to feed. But reasons are not wanting for the belief that, when Alexander the Great was in Sind, it was an inland sea, or lake, fed by the “lost river” and afterwards by the Puran. More recently the western part at least of the Rann, from Ali Bandar to Kori creek, was richly fertile, according to tradition, and intercourse between Sind and Kutch was free and frequent, obstructed by no desert barrier. In fact, there was probably a good water – way by the Puran from Lakhpat to Umarkot. About 30 miles from Lakhpat and 20 from Ali Bandar was the Fort of Sindri, a frontier post and custom house of the Cutch Government. Rahimki (more correctly Raomki) Bazar was another frontier town. But in 1762, or thereabouts, Ghulam Shah Kalhora built a great dam across the Puran at Mori which served two purposes, fertilizing his own lands and desiccating those of his enemy the Rao of Kutch. The Kori became a mere creek and Lakhpat the furthest habitable point of Kutch. Then the terrible earthquake of 1819 completed work of desolation. A sudden subsidence of the land caused an influx of the sea, which converted the country round Sindri into a salt lake for the time a destroyed that place. A sketch of Sindri, taken by Captain Grind in 1808 and published by Alexander Burnes in his Travels into Bokhara, shows a square fort, with a high round tower at one corner, situated on the bank of a large river with boats sailing up it. Since the earthquake the frontier of Sind, from the Kori creek to Nagar Parkar, has been an unmitigated saline desert, and the frontier towns, like Raomki Bazar, have dwindled away.“

11. It will be obvious from the above that when omissions are supplied and the full text is quoted accurately, the position that emerges is that the Rann of Kutch did not fall within the boundary of Sind, that it formed the southern or south – eastern boundary between Sind and Rajasthan to the east, and that ‘Rahimki (more correctly Raomki Bazar) was another frontier town’ of the State of Kutch besides the fort of Sindri. The quotation also shows that Ghulam Shah Kalhora built a great dam across the Puran at Mori (not Puran and Mori as misquoted in the Ministry’s Note), and that the dam was built not in the Rann of Kutch but in the Sind territory beyond the Rann of Kutch. The Government of Pakistan have tried to confuse this dam with the ‘Allah Bund’ which was not ‘constructed by the Kalhora Kings of Sind from Mori’ but was a natural feature which had arisen as a result of the earthquake of 1819. An account of the earthquake of 1819 given in the Imperial Gazetteer of India, Vol. XI, 1908 Edition at page 77 gives the following:

“North of Sindhdi, after the earthquake was over, a bank about 50 miles long and from 10 to 18 feet high stood out from the plains which had before stretched as level as the sea. On account of its sudden appearance across the old bed of the Indus, the natives gave to this bank the name of Allah Band, or ‘God’s embankment’. Early observers speak of it as an upheaval of the surface.”

12. The quotation also corrects the misquotation in the Ministry’s Note that “The Kori became a mere creek and Lakhpat the furthest point of Kutch”. The correct quotation from the Sind Gazetteer is “The Kori became a mere creek and Lakhpat the furthest habitable point of Kutch”, showing clearly that the Kutch territory extended beyond Lakhpat.

13. The sixth contention advanced by the Government of Pakistan in paragraph 8(e) (ii) of their Note is that “The fort which is about two miles to the south of Rahimki Bazar never belonged to the Maharao of Kutch. It was built by the Kalhoras and belonged to them”. The Government of Pakistan have quoted no authority to support this statement and are clearly misinformed about the correct position. Attention in this connection is invited to the following statement in the Brief Sketch of the History of Kutch by Capt. Charles Welter, Assistant to the Political Agent, 1854, Selection from the records of Bombay Government – No. XV – New series, 1855 Edition (pp. 106 – 107).

“The Rao having freed the country from all invaders, now reposed confidence and favour (which he never withdrew) upon Deokurn Sett; placed the Pugree of Minister on his head, and gave up the entire management of affairs to his charge ……..

By the power which his immense wealth enabled him to exercise, he carried an army into Parkur and established a Thanna at Veeravow, to punish the Sodas who had made incursions into Kutch………

In Sindh he was called in by the Rymas, who, though converted Muslims, had sprung from the same sources as the Jharejas (Samatrees); and to secure his acquisition, built a fort at the town now called Rymaka Bazar, and extended the Rao’s influence in that quarter”.

“Not content with securing the safety of the province, he spread the Rao’s name and power by carrying an army into Parkar, and, leaving a post there, overawed the Sodhas and put a stop to their raids. In west Kathiawar, the Okhamandal pirates, who had been harassing the trade of Mandvi, were punished and kept in order by building in their district the fort of Cutchigad; and in the east Balamba and other Halar villages were recovered from the estate of the traitor Kanyoji. In Sind, called in by the Raimas, Musalmans of the Jadeja stock, Devkarn protected them, and, to secure the lands he had won, built a fort at Rahim – ki – bazaar. All this was done without rousing the ill will of the chiefs and proprietors, who, on the slightest summons were ready to gather round the Rao’s standard.”

15. The fact that the fort at Rahimki Bazar was built by the Maharao of Kutch is corroborated also by the account given in a Memoire written by Dr. James Burns in 1828, entitled a “Narrative of a visit to the Court of Sind”. It is stated in the Memoire:-

“The Raos of Kutch had at no distant periods three tannas in the Dominion of Sind, viz., Ballyaree, Rao – ma – ka Bazar and Badenna, their right to which was undisputed. The year 1762 gave a new era to both nations and it was the commencement of a calamitous one for Kutch. Ghulam Shah Kalhode, after bringing an army of 80,000 to Kutch and meeting with a warm reception at a hill above the small village of Jhara in Kutch, returned full of vengeance to Sind and threw a bund across the Phurram river.’

16. The above accounts clearly establish that the fort at Rahimki Bazar was built by the Maharao of Kutch and that the boundary of Kutch extended beyond this fort, \textit{i.e.}, the Rann of Kutch was part of the Kutch State. This is in consonance with the existing boundary of Kutch running approximately along the northern limit of the Rann of Kutch.

17. In alleging that the Darbar of Kutch did not maintain jurisdiction over the northern portion of the Rann, the Pakistan Government have cited the \textit{Ism – Shumari} (census) records of Diplo for the year 1869-70 onwards stating that land revenue was collected for cultivation “on both side of the river Dhoro Phurram”. It is to be pointed out that this river is a long one of which only 4 miles extended into the Rann. A reference to both sides of the river need not necessarily show areas comprising in the Rann. Considering the fact of the Kutch Darbar’s Fort at Rahimki Bazar mentioned above, it would appear that the conclusions envisaged by the Pakistan Government are ill-conceived.

18. The seventh contention in the Ministry’s Note is based on certain usages in the past. These are dealt with below:

(i) With reference to Para. 8 of the Ministry’s Note under reply, relating to Gainda Bet, attention is invited to Appendix 3 of High Commission’s Note dated the 9\textsuperscript{th} May, 1955, and para 7 (i) of their Note dated 12\textsuperscript{th} June, 1956.

(ii) As regards the construction of a well in Chhad bet in 1924-25, there are clear records to prove that the Kutch Darbar sanctioned a sum of 1,000 Kories for the purpose, and it is not understood how the Government of Pakistan can maintain a different view in the face of these records.

(iii) With regard to the case of the Sind cattle owners, who were made to pay grazing dues in 1945, the facts of the case are that, in forwarding the request of the Sind authorities, the Resident in his letter No. A. /4-3 (c) of 17\textsuperscript{th} September 1945 merely requested that “if the Kutch Darbar had no objection”, the request may be acceded to. In actual fact, the Kutch authorities had every objection, and they refused to surrender their employees who had only done their duty within Kutch territory. If, as the Pakistan Government have stated, the Sind authorities dropped matter in the hope that on the basis of an \textit{ex-parte} order by the collector, Tharparkar, of 18 years previously, Kutch officials would not attempt to enter Chhad Bet, all that can be observed is that it was a hope entirely lacking in substance. Any such hope would have had to overcome the presumptions raised by the fact that the British authorities had over this length of period not found it appropriate to take action in furtherance of the order of the Collector Tharparkar.

19. The only boundary dispute that arose between Kutch State and the Government of former British India related to western boundary between Kutch and Sind and that dispute was settled in 1913-14. The local officials of Sind made an attempt in 1875 to advance a claim that half of the Rann of Kutch belonged to Sind but nothing came out of it. The Government of Bombay was not prepared to sponsor the claim and the matter was never raised with the Kutch Darbar. If any correspondence was exchanged by the Sind officials with the government of Bombay, it was of no concern to the Kutch State. They only competent authority to raise a boundary dispute with the Kutch State was the Government of former British India represented by the Government of Bombay or the Political Agent in the State. The Government of former British India never disputed the fact of the Kutch State boundary extending up to the northern limit of the Rann of Kutch. In 1938, when, on the occasion of the topographical survey of 1937-38, the Kutch State representative reported to the State Government, after the meeting of the representatives of the Sind Government, the Kutch State and the Wav State with the Officer-in-Charge, No.1 Party, Survey of India that the Sind representative had put forward at the meeting a claim that the northern half of the Rann of Kutch belonged to Sind, the State Government protested against this claim to the Resident for the States in Western India. The Dewan of Kutch in his letter No. 156 of 1938 dated 5th March 1938 addressed to the Resident of the States of Western India wrote:

“The Survey Superintendent has returned from Nagar Parkar and reports that as the representatives of Kutch, the Sind and Wav did not agree to the alignment, that Officer of the Survey party did not proceed with the survey work. The Sind representative is also reported to have claimed that half the Rann belonged to Sind. This has caused no small surprise to the Darbar as the boundary between Sind and Kutch has already been determined and shown on the Topographical Survey Sheets. Again, the boundary dispute between the Bombay Government and Kutch Darbar was settled long ago, and boundary pillars were erected in 1924 where the boundary was disputed.

“The Darbar, therefore, consider that the present claim of the Sind authorities has no validity and there was never any doubt that the entire Rann belongs to Kutch.”

The above letter put forward the position about the boundary clearly. The Government of undivided India never challenged this position.
20. Reports on the Administration of the Kutch State were regularly submitted by the Kutch Darbar to the British Government through the Political Agent/Resident. These Reports invariably mentioned that the Rann was a part of the Kutch State territory. An extract from the Report on the Administration of the Kutch State for the period 1st April 1944 to 31st October 1945 is reproduced below:-

“The area of the State is 8,249.5 sq. miles exclusive of the Rann of Kutch which forms part of the Kutch State territory and which comprises an area of about 9,000 sq. miles.”

This statement was never questioned by the Government of undivided India, as it has all along been recognized as an established fact that the Kutch – Sind boundary ran approximately along the northern limit of the Rann of Kutch.

21. In the light of the clear evidence adduced in Paras 2 to 20 above and in the previous notes of the High Commission referred to in Para. 2, the Government of India trust that the Government of Pakistan will accept the Government of India’s contention that the Kutch State boundary runs approximately along the northern limit of the Rann of Kutch (as shown in the Survey of India Sheets Nos. 40D, 40H, 40L & 40P on 1½ : 4 miles scale, 1942 Edition), that the boundary from the top of Sir Creek to the tri-junction of Jati taluka of Karachi district and Badin taluka of Hyderabad district in Sind and the territory of Kutch has already been demarcated and that the rest of the boundary, though defined, has still to be demarcated by erection of boundary pillars. The Government of India would be glad to discuss steps for the demarcation of the Kutch – Sind boundary from the Karachi – Hyderabad – Kutch tri-junction and would suggest that the Pakistan Government may agree to an early meeting between representatives of the two Governments for that purpose.

22. The High Commission of India avail themselves of this opportunity to renew to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs & Commonwealth Relations, Government of Pakistan, and the assurances of their highest consideration.

Rectification of the boundary between Sind and Kutch State

Read again paragraphs 9 and 10 of Bombay Government letter No. 5543, dated the 20th September 1913, to the Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department :-

9. On full review of the evidence, therefore, Government arrived at the conclusion that the boundary between Kutch and Sind should be the green line in the accompanying map from the mouth of the Sir Creek to the top of the Sir Creek at the point where it joins the blue dotted line; from there it should follow the blue dotted line due east until it joins the Sind boundary as marked in purple on the map, and His Highness the Rao has now expressed his willingness to agree to this compromise.

10. On this proposed settlement being referred to the Commissioner in Sind that officer agreed to the adoption, as the frontier line, of the blue dotted line running due east from the top of the Sir Creek. He observed, however, that the Sir Creek changes its course from time to time and the western boundary of the area, which it is proposed to surrender to the Rao, should therefore, be described as “the centre of the navigable channel of the Sir Creek”. A similar method has been adopted in determining the boundary between the Khairpur State and British territory where the river Indus is the boundary, and the position of the navigable channel varies from year to year.

I am to explain that the term “navigable” is really inappropriate in the larger sense. The Creek is, of course, tidal, and it is only at certain conditions of the tide that the channel is navigable and then only to country craft as far as the point from which the proposed boundary turns due east from the Creek.

2305. Note from the Pakistan Ministry of Foreign Affairs to Ministry of External Affairs.

Ministry of Foreign Affairs And Commonwealth Relations
Karachi

No. I (I) – 2/3/59 the 11th December, 1959

The Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Commonwealth Relations, Government of Pakistan, presents its compliments to the High Commission for India in Pakistan, and with reference to their note No. F. 113(6) / 56 – Genl., dated the 23rd February, 1959, regarding the Kutch – Sind border has the honour to state as follows :-

2. The Government of Pakistan had produced overwhelming evidence through its notes (No. 1(I) -3/9/54 dated the 22nd September 1954, No. I (I) – 3/10/56, dated the 9th April, 1956 and No. I(I) – 3/10/56, dated the 19th May, 1958) but observes with regret that the Government of India have not taken cognizance of a large number of important points contained therein and instead have merely repeated certain assertions, although these very assertions were fully rebutted.
by the Government of Pakistan in the notes mentioned above. While there has been an extensive reproduction in the Government of India’s note of extracts from the Government of Pakistan’s note dated the 19th May, 1958, the Government of India have not met most of the material contentions and instead chosen to ignore the conclusions which necessarily follow from those contentions.

3. The High Commission’s statement that the Government of Pakistan have misquoted historical records is not correct. The only instance cited by the High Commission in support thereof is certain extract from page 5 of the Sind Gazetteer (1907) which was also quoted by the Government of Pakistan explicitly to indicate what the nature of the Rann was and who administered its northern half when the Treaty of Alliance between the Maharao of Kutch and the British Government in India was concluded in October, 1819. The Government of India have not disputed that the Rann is an inland sea. The additional quotation given by them is not relevant, since it relates to a period proceeding the year 1762, when Ghulam Shah Kalhora had finally extended his sovereign jurisdiction to the southern half of the Rann. The Government of India will no doubt appreciate that the extent of the Maharao’s territory in October, 1819, is all that is relevant for the purpose of the territorial dispute in the Rann of Kutch area. There is no evidence of any expansion of the Maharao’s influence in the Rann between 1762 and 1819. In this context, the Government of Pakistan would refer to paragraph 11 of the Government of India’s note under reply to point out that the location of the great Dam built by Ghulam Shah Kalhora which crossed the Puran at Mori conclusively establishes that his jurisdiction extended right up to the middle of the Rann. The Dam built on Puran at Mori by Ghulam Shah Kalhora was about fifteen miles to the South of Rahim – ki – Bazar at a point approximately 69° 10´ long. E. 24º 8´ lat. N. This Dam is described as an “old Bund” in a “New Map of Kutch” prepared by LT. Burns in 1828. This area subsequently turned into a lake as a result of the earthquake of 1819 as shown on the map of “North – West Frontier of British India including the protected Sikh States, Lahore, Kashmir, Kabul, Heart, Kandahar, Shikarpur and Bhawalpore together with Sinde and Rajpootana, the Indus River and part of Baluchistan” prepared by J.B. Tassin in 1848 from “the best and most recent authorities”. This is further confirmed by the map prepared by Lieutenant William Max-field in 1809 which shows the route taken by N.H. Smith the British envoy to Sind. The Government of India have also overlooked the fact that although at the time when Ghulam Shah Kalhora built the Dam there, the area in question was pucca land but it was subsequently submerged in water as a result of the earthquake of 1819. However, its geographical location has always been the same and it was situated right in the middle of the present Rann area, less than half a mile from Allah Bund. That Ghulam Shah Kalhora built his dam several miles into the Rann area establishes that his jurisdiction extended not only beyond the present pacca land but to the entire northern half of the Rann. It should, therefore, be clear to the Government of India that the extracts from the Gazetteer, which they have quoted in support of their claim, really falsify it, and confirm the case of the Government of Pakistan. The objection taken by the Government of India to the description of the Bund given in the Ministry’s note of even number dated 19th May, 1958 as being built on the “Puran and Mori”, is really an objection to a typographical error. The correct words should have been “Puran at Mori.”

4. The position taken up by the Government of India in paragraph 7 of their note dated the 12th June, 1956, was that the “boundary between the Hyderabad and Tharparker districts of Sind on the one side and the Kutch State on the other along the northern limit of the Rann of Kutch has been a settled fact from the earliest time till Partition and continues to be so although it has not yet been demarcated on the ground”. This position is entirely unsustainable from the numerous instances of the exercise of jurisdiction by the Sind Administration in the northern half of the Rann and particularly from those quoted in Paragraph 4 of this Ministry’s note of the 22nd September, 1954 which remain un-replied. Demarcation of the boundary is always undertaken in pursuance of some agreement, resolution, or notification of the Governments concerned. The Government of India would appreciated that there is nothing whatsoever to show when and how the territorial alignment between Sind and Kutch in the Rann of Kutch was settled and what evidence is available in pursuance of which the Government of India desire that a boundary should be so demarcated on the ground as to include that entire Rann of Kutch to the former State of Kutch.

5. A reference to Para 5 of their note under reply would disclose that the Government of India have modified their previous stand. Their original position was that there was only one dispute and that was settled by the Bombay Government Resolution No. 1192, dated the 24th February, 1914. In paragraph 2 of their note dated the 9th May, 1955, the Government of India have defined the area involved in this dispute by stating that “the only dispute which ever arose between Kutch and Sind on their boundary was in respect of the territory between the Sir Creek and the Kori Creek …….. The dispute was discussed and a compromise reached in 1913. The agreement was sanctioned by the Government of India and the Government of Bombay in their Resolution No. 1192, dated the 24th February, 1914, defined that ……….”. They have now tried to extend the scope and applicability of this resolution and have asserted that this Resolution established that “the trijunction of the Badin Taluka of the Hyderabad District, Jati Taluka of the Karachi District and of the Rann of Kutch was established as the proper boundary point between Sind and Kutch”, in spite of the fact that there is no mention at all of this trijunction in the Bombay Government Resolution of 1914 referred to above. In this connection, the Government of India have placed reliance on certain documents which will be dealt with presently. At this stage, however, the Government of Pakistan want to emphasize that the Government of India have changed their position in this manner because they do not find it possible to refute the overwhelming evidence of exercise of jurisdiction in the northern half of the Rann by Sind Administration as embodied in the preceding notes of the Government of Pakistan. The Government of Pakistan further points out to the Government of India that the Bombay Government Resolution, of 1914, describes the purple line as the Sind boundary. It does not describe it as the Kutch boundary or the Sind – Kutch boundary. The Government of Pakistan are, therefore, unable to see how the Government of India can contend that the Rann of Kutch was regarded under the aforesaid Resolution as being a part of Kutch.

6. To support the position now taken up by them, the Government of India have relied on the following documents. The First three of which are not available with the Government of Pakistan:

(i) The Commissioner – in – Sind’s letter of the 28th February, 1910 to the Government of Bombay;

(ii) The Maharao of Kutch’s letter dated the 16th June, 1913 to the Political Agent of Kutch;

(iii) The Government of Bombay’s letter dated the 17th July, 1916 to the Political Agent for Kutch; and

These are dealt with as under:

(i) The Government of India seem to have relied on the words “boundary between Sind and Kutch” occurring in the Commissioner – in – Sind’s letter of the 28th February, 1910, to substantiate their stand that the Commissioner regarded the trijunction as being situated at the meeting point of the Kutch territory with Sind. However, the Government of India have significantly omitted to observe the fact that in the same sentence the Commissioner has specifically described this trijunction as being the meeting point” of the Badin Taluka of the Hyderabad district, Jati Taluka of the Karachi district and the Rann of Kutch (and not Kutch)”.

As already pointed out to the Government of India, there were two distinct disputes between Sind and Kutch. While one such dispute related to the Sind – Kutch boundary on the land lying between Sir Creek and Khori Creek and the meeting point of Hyderabad and Karachi districts with the Greater Rann; the other related to the delimitation of the respective rights of Sind and Kutch in the Rann itself and involved the territorial jurisdiction and the boundary alignment therein of the Hyderabad and Tharparkar districts of Sind on one side and the Kutch State on the other. The position taken by the respective parties (namely, the Government of Bombay and the Kutch State) in reference to the former dispute was that the entire area therein involved belonged to them. The Commissioner – in – Sind’s letter of the 28th February, 1910 was an assertion of the Sind Government’s claim to the area comprised in this dispute and had no reference whatsoever to the Rann of Kutch. It is inconceivable that while claiming the entire territory between Sir Creek and Khori Creek and the meeting point of Hyderabad and Karachi districts with the Greater Rann for Sind, the Commissioner – in – Sind through his letter of the 28th February, 1910 would concede that the whole of the Rann of Kutch belonged to Kutch. In fact, the description given by him of “the boundary between Sind and Kutch” included the entire area involved in the former dispute in the Sind Jurisdiction and therefore, the only inference that can be drawn therefore is that the Commissioner assumed that the whole of Rann also belonged to Sind. In view of the fact that Mr. Morrison and the Governor of Bombay in their correspondence of the year 1905 had clearly expressed that they were aware of the existence of the question of rights of Sind and Kutch respectively in the Rann which had arisen as far back as the year 1875, it is impossible that the Commissioner – in – Sind in 1910 would proceed on the assumption that no dispute relating to the Rann did exist, or that, while for a small area of about 75,000 acres transferred to Kutch a Resolution of the Government would be called for, the Commissioner will concede the whole of the Rann to Kutch through a tacit statement. The Commissioner – in – Sind’s reference to the trigonometrical survey map of the year 1904 – 05 and the map of the Bombay Presidency is solely in respect of the first dispute and has no connection whatsoever with the dispute about the Rann of Kutch.

(ii) If the Government of India intend to infer from the Maharao’s letter dated the 16th June, 1913 to the Political Agent of Kutch that the Maharao wanted a physical demarcation of the boundary to be done in an area over which his jurisdiction had been a settled fact, they will no doubt find it impossible to adhere to this position in view of :-

(a) Letter No. 484, dated the 29th September, 1923, addressed by the Diwan of Kutch to the Political Agent, Kutch, in which the former had clearly stated that the provisions for the Survey Party will be supplied by the Kutch Durbar “when work is being done on the line from the Sir (Creek) to the angle of the triangle and 10 miles northwards, and beyond that the Sind Authorities will be expected to arrange for water, provisions, etc., for their as well as the Kutch parties”, and

(b) Letter No. 372, dated the 4th August, 1923 (again from the Diwan of Kutch to the Political Agent Kutch) in which it is clarified that the arrangements made by the Kutch Durbar for the survey party were availed of from the Sir Creek to the angle of the triangle and ten miles northwards, and “beyond this, the party had expected to obtain water, provisions and conveyance, etc., from the Sind side”.

It is, therefore, abundantly clear that the Maharao’s jurisdiction extended to only ten miles north beyond the point Long. 68º 48’ E. Lat. 23º 58’ N, and no further.

(iii) The Commissioner – in – Sind’s order as referred to in the Government of Bombay’s letter dated the 17th July, 1916 explicitly refers to the trijunction as being located in the Rann of Kutch. It does not say that it was the meeting point of the Karachi and Hyderabad districts with the Kutch State. Obviously no conclusion can be drawn therefore in favour of the Government of India’s case. The trijunction of the Hyderabad and Karachi districts and the Rann of Kutch was the only Pucca point in that area from where the point Long. 68º 48’ E lat. 23º 58’ N could be located by means of Cross Staff and Chains. The latter point could easily be obliterated by vagaries of Nature in the shifting soil where it was placed. Therefore, usefulness of pillars both sides all along the line from the trijunction to the point Long. 68º 48E lat. 23º 58N is clearly understandable. Obviously the Survey of India did not want to send their technical staff for theodolite survey to fix the point Long. 68º 48E Lat. 23º 58N each time it got obliterated.

(iv) Description of the trijunction given by the Superintendent of Land records in Sind, in his letter of the 10th January, 1924 as being the meeting point of Badin and Jati talukas and the Kutch territory in the North has no significance. The Government of India themselves have quoted the letter dated 28th February, 1910 of the Commissioner – in – Sind and dated the 17th July, 1916 of the Government of Bombay in which this trijunction has been described as being in the Rann of Kutch (and not in the State of Kutch). Furthermore, the circumstances recapitulated in the succeeding paragraphs 8 and 11 of this note should leave the Government of India in no manner of doubt that the trijunction was regarded as being located in the Rann of Kutch.

7. The remaining points raised in Paragraph – 5 of the Government of India’s note under reply are discussed below:-
(i) The Government of Pakistan emphatically repudiate that they have ever modified their position relating to the scope and applicability of the Bombay Government's Resolution No. 1192 dated the 24th February, 1914. It has always been the case of the Government of Pakistan that only the Western Boundary of the Rann of Kutch was determined by this Resolution and that its boundaries in the other directions have always remained unsettled and continue to be so. The Government of Pakistan have repeatedly drawn the attention of the Government of India to the impossibility of the Hypothesis that while for the small area of 76,527 acres 23 ghuntas transferred to Kutch in the settlement of the boundary dispute relating to the Western side of the Rann the Government of Bombay passed a Resolution and issued a formal Notification giving all the necessary particulars of the land involved, the whole of the area in the Rann where the rights of Sind and Kutch remained undetermined could be deemed to have been made over by the former to the latter merely by implication or tacit acquiescence.

(ii) The Government of India is not correct in stating that the Government of Pakistan have advanced the argument that the map attached to the Bombay Government's Resolution was "without any significance". On the other hand, the Government of Pakistan has accepted that the only significance of this map was to illustrate the area covered by the Bombay Government's Resolution to which it was an annexure. It will be surprising if the Government of India seriously consider this map as having any bearing whatever to an area involved in an entirely different dispute which for as entirely unconnected with the Government of Bombay's Resolution to which the map was annexed.

(iii) The Government of Pakistan have never said that any payment made by the Kutch Durbar relating to the cost of demarcation from the point ten miles to the north of the point Lon. 68° 48E Lat. 23° 58N to the trijunction of the Karachi and Hyderabad districts with the Rann of Kutch to the East was "under a mistake". The relevant statement to that effect in the Government of India's note under reply is a misquotation. It is true that added advantages accrued therefore to the Sind Administration for the benefit of the Revenue Staff doing field inspection and by the two legs of the Karachi district being demarcated on the ground; but the fixation of pillars from the trijunction to the point Lon. 68° 48E Lat. 23° 58N was necessary for the preservation of the latter point. The proportionate share contributed by the Maharao in this connection could not therefore be regarded as having been "charged to and paid by Kutch Darbar under a mistake".
Finally, the Government of Pakistan are rather astonished that the Government of India hope that “the Government of Pakistan will not raise these arguments again and accept the position that trijunction point on the boundary of the Badin Taluka of the Hyderabad District, Jati Taluka of the Karachi district and the Rann of Kutch, demarcated in accordance with the Bombay Government’s resolution No. 1192, dated the 24th February 1914, is the established boundary between the old State of Kutch and Sind.” The Bombay Government Resolution had nothing whatsoever to do with the demarcation of the trijunction at all. All that the aforesaid Resolution did was to assign 76,527 acres 23 ghunthas to Kutch from out of the area claimed by Sind. The Government of Pakistan completely fail to realize how the Government of India have found it possible to base their claim to the entire Rann of Kutch on the Resolution while they themselves have described the trijunction point as being in “Rann of Kutch” and not in the state of Kutch, in the relevant assertion contained in the last sentence of paragraph 5 of their note under reply.

A reference to the first paragraph 7 of the Government of India’s note under reply (which does not contain any paragraph 6) shows that the contentions of the Government of Pakistan have not been viewed in their proper perspective. It has been the stand of the Government of Pakistan that the Rann of Kutch is an inland sea, that no part of it has been surveyed or demarcated on the ground so as to determine its administrative boundaries, and that the rights therein exercised by Sind and Kutch have been roughly determined by the proximity of its various areas to the pucca lands comprised in their respective territories. Furthermore, the Government of India’s attention has also been drawn to the letter dated the 23rd November, 1905, according to which the then Governor of Bombay had thought that the question of rights within Rann of Kutch might be left alone till they were forced to take it up. Under these circumstances, it is surprising that the Government of India should attach any significance to the omission of “the then Government of India authorities to describe the boundary of Sind as running along the middle of Rann of Kutch in such official publications as the Gazetteers of India and to show the boundary accordingly in the maps published by all the competent authorities of the then Government of India”. Secondly the statement that “in no authoritative publication is the description of Sind Province given as including the Rann of Kutch, nor are there any authorized maps which show the boundary of Sind as running through the middle of the Rann of Kutch from the point long 68° 48E lat. 23° 58N, is no way, supports the Government of India’s case that the whole of the Rann of Kutch belonged to Kutch. The Government of Pakistan claims the northern half of the Rann on the basis of ancient usage. Attention of the Government of India has also been drawn to the maps of the Nagar Parkar Taluka published in 1927 and of the Thar Sub – Division of the Tharparkar district published in 1928, by the Superintendent of Survey and Land Records, Sind, in which the various islands in the northern half of the Rann have been clearly shown to be within the administrative boundaries of the Nagar Parkar Taluka of the Tharparkar district. These two maps are of the highest authoritative value as evidence of Sind’s jurisdiction in the northern half of the Rann. Thirdly, the reference made by the Government of Pakistan to the District Magistrate of Tharparkar’s letter No. 2813 – R., dated the 31st December, 1927, by which he exercised his jurisdiction in the northern half of the Rann, was not intended to fall back on a local authority in support of Pakistan’s claim as is alluded to in the last but one sentence in the first paragraph 7 of the Government of India’s note under reply, but was intended to correct the wrong impression of the Government of India that the demarcation carried out in 1924 in pursuance of a settlement between Sind and Kutch, relating to another area, was understood by the parties to mean as also settling the entire Rann in favour of Kutch State or that it was then taken for granted that the Rann was a part of latter. Surely, if such were the case the District Magistrate of Tharparkar, three years later, would not have asserted his jurisdiction in the northern half of that area.

9. In sub-Para(a) of the second paragraph 7 of their note under reply, the Government of India have admitted that the Sind survey operations took place in 1867 – 70 and, as a result thereof, maps were published by the Survey of India in 1871 – 72. Nor do the Government of India deny the fact that the -.-.-.-.-.-.-. (Dash dot dash dot dash dot) symbol in the southern extremity of the Pucca land of Sind was a subsequent handwritten insertion and did not exist on the original of the relevant document. Obviously, such an insertion could not have been made so as to create any fiscal rights to the prejudice of one party and in favour of the other without the express consent of both. For this reason, the reliance placed by the Government of India on the alleged Indian Atlas Sheets 21/SW which are said to have been published in 1890 and in which the islands are said to be shown with a yellow ribbon is wholly misplaced specially when there was no sanction for such ribbons to be inserted when they did not exist in the Survey of India Maps of 1871 – 72. Again the Government of Pakistan cannot appreciate how the Government of India can but treat the -.-.-.-.-.-.-. symbol in the map accompanying the 1914 Resolution as unauthorized. This map committed the Government of Bombay only in so far as regards the area which it was intended to illustrate with reference to the Bombay Government’s Resolution No. 1192, dated the 24th February, 1914. In this connection, the Government of Pakistan would invite the attention of the Government of India to the contents of Paragraph 2 (d) (ii) of the former’s note dated the 19th May, 1958 on which the Government of India have not offered any comments.
As for sub-Para (b) of the second paragraph 7 of the Government of India’s note under reply, the Government of Pakistan are surprised how the Government of India regard the “Index to adjoining sheets” as being in any way, relevant to the alignment of the territorial boundaries. Surely, the Government of India knows that this has no such value whatsoever. Furthermore, the Government of Pakistan are quite unable to appreciate how the Government of India could use in their support the map of Sind signed by the Superintendent, Land Records in Sind (and prepared in Poona in 1927) in which only one Bet (Nara Bet) is shown and that, too merely by a conventional symbol. This map does not even indicate any of the islands in the Rann of Kutch. A more detailed study has been made of the boundary alignments of the various islands in the Rann in the map of Taluka Nagar Parkar and of the Thar Sub – Division of the Tharparkar district which was prepared in 1927 and 1928 respectively. These are on the scale of two miles to an inch while the map referred to by the Government of India which was prepared contemporaneously with these maps is on the scale of eight miles to an inch. After the unequivocal and irrefutable alignment shown in the maps cited by the Government of Pakistan, there is no room left for the Government of India to advance their case on the basis of such other maps which are not and were not intended to be an evidence of fiscal boundaries. In this connection, attention of the Government of India is also drawn to the following paragraph 5 of the note on the Survey of Boundaries.

“The topographical maps of the Survey of India are not authoritative as regards the alignment of fiscal boundaries, they can however be used as evidence in the sense that they portray the features of the ground, including existing boundary marks (where surveyed), as accurately as the scale permits.”

10. In Sub – Para (b) of the second paragraph 7 of their note under reply, the Government of India have also quoted the longitudinal and latitudinal limits of the talukas of Diplo, Mithi and Nagar Parkar to show that the Rann of Kutch was not included in these Talukas. However, this does not support the case of the Government of India that the Rann of Kutch was included in the Kutch State. On the other hand, the Imperial Gazetteer of the year 1908 lays down that boundary of Kutch State did not extend beyond 24º North latitude and specifically excludes the Rann from Kutch territory. Finally, the latitudinal limit of the Nagar Parkar Taluka (24º 12’ N as mentioned in the Sind Gazetteer which the Government of India have quoted) goes into the Rann beyond the Pucca land and thus, according to a document upon which the Government of India themselves rely their assertion that the limit of Sind ended with the Pucca land is contradicted.
11. In sub-paragraph (c) of their second paragraph 7, the Government of India have quoted incompletely from some document whose nature and context is only known to themselves and have reproduced some conclusion said to have been expressed by the O.C. Survey Party during the 1937-38 surveys. The Government of Pakistan are unable to see what value can be attached to it when, subsequently, on the 23rd August, 1939, the Officer-in-Charge wrote to the Collector of Tharparkar that “as the Provincial boundary in the Rann of Kutch is undemarcated and the authorities of Sind, Kutch State and Wav State still differ as to its correct alignment; no decision can be arrived at by me. I propose to omit this boundary from the modern survey maps”. Thereon the Collector of Tharparkar asked him on the 2nd October, 1939, that, if it was not possible for the Officer In-charge of the Survey Party to decide the boundary definitely, it may be shown as in the old maps, by means of a special symbol and a note written indicating that it was in accordance with the old records, but was in dispute. In fact, the word “disputed” appears in the 70 mile map printed in 1938 and reprinted in the subsequent years 1940 – 1944 and 1946. In an identical dispute between the Kutch and Wav States, which occurred contemporaneously, a similar procedure was followed by the Officer In-charge of the Survey Party and it is impossible to see how he could be competent to act differently in the present case.

12. As for paragraph 8 of the Government of India’s note under reply, the Government of Pakistan are surprised that the Government of India attach any importance to the move, if any, made by the Director of Map Publications, that the word “disputed” be removed from the map in view of the following facts:–

(1) The boundary was actually disputed between the parties.

(2) The Officer In-charge of the Survey Party had proposed to omit it altogether from the modern Survey Maps.

(3) It was the suggestion of the Collector Tharparkar that this boundary should be shown as in the old maps but with a special symbol with the word “disputed” written thereon, and

(4) In the subsequent map the word “disputed” did appear not merely in its publications of the year 1938 but also in its reprints of the subsequent years (1940, 1944 and 1946).

13. The contentions contained in paragraph 9 of the Government of India’s note are dealt with below seriatim:

(a) The description of Sind’s boundary in the Gazetteer of 1908 does not support India’s case since it does not state that the Rann was a part of the Kutch State. On the other hand, the Imperial Gazetteer of India of the same year fixes the boundary of the Kutch State as extending not beyond merely 24º North Latitude. It elaborately defines the limits of the boundary of the Kutch State. The Government of Pakistan emphasizes that according to this gazetteer the whole territory of Kutch is almost entirely cut off from the continent of India – north by the Great Rann east by the little Rann, south by the Gulf of Kutch, and west by the Arabian Sea.

(b) (i) The reliance placed by the Government of India on Vol. II, 1854 Edition of the Gazetteer of India compiled by Edward Thornton under the authority of the East India Company is unwarranted because the two statements made therein are mutually contradictory. While defining the area of Kutch, this document includes the Rann in Kutch; it excludes it when specifying its area in square miles. The area of Kutch as given here is 6,764 square miles although the area of the Rann itself is 9,000 square miles. (ii) The same Gazetteer in giving the latitudinal limits of Sind includes the whole of the Rann in Sind territory. It describes Sind as situated between lat. 23º 37´ – 28º 32´ which clearly includes the area of the Rann. Apart from this patent rebuttal of the Government of India’s case contained in this document that the Rann was a part of Kutch territory, the Imperial Gazetteer of India, which is a more authoritative document, in its later edition of 1908 specifically, excludes the Rann from the Kutch State territory as already mentioned above.

(c) The Government of India have rightly stated that the only relevant date for determining the territorial extent of Kutch State is October 1819 when the Treaty of Alliance was concluded between the Maharao and the British Government. However, as indicated above, the reliance placed by the Government of India on the Sind Gazetteer of 1854 to establish their claim is wholly indefensible.

(d) The Government of Pakistan regret to state that the analogy attempted in sub – Para (d) of Para 9 of their note under reply by the Government of India is fallacious. So far as the dispute whether the Rann belonged to Bombay or to Kutch State is concerned it existed ever since 1875, and no dispute ever existed regarding the territorial alignment of the Thar Desert. Therefore the fact that the Great Rann of Kutch has been shown as a unit separate from the Kutch State in the General Index to the 1931 edition of the Imperial Gazetteer has its own significance and shows clearly that the Rann was not treated as a part of the Kutch State.

14. With reference to paragraph 10 of the Government of India’s note under reply it is pointed out that the extensive quotations given in that Para could serve no other purpose than that of establishing that the Rann is in fact an inland sea. The same purpose was adequately served already by the less extensive quotation, from the same Gazetteer, in the Government of Pakistan's note dated the 19th May, 1958. However, the Government of Pakistan would once again draw the Government of India's attention to the last sentence in the following quotation given by them:

"Since the earthquake the frontier of Sind, from the Kori Creek to Nagar Parkar, has been an unmitigated saline desert and the frontier towns, like Rahim – ki – Bazar, have dwindled away".

The Government of India are well aware that Rahim – ki – Bazar remained under the Sind Administration ever since the year 1762. The above quoted statement in the Gazetteer amply bears out that the whole of the Rann was treated as Frontier of Sind and being comprised in it. Therefore, the document(s) cited by the Government of India themselves, contradicts their claim and shows that the entire area was included in Sind. In so far as it is not denied that a fort to the south of Rahim – ki – Bazar did exist the following quotation in paragraph 10 of the Government of India's Note has no relevance whatsoever:

"A sketch of Sindri, taken by Captain Grindlay in 1808 and published by Alexander Burns in his Travels into Bokhara, shows a square fort, with a high round tower at one corner, situated on the bank of a large river with boats sailing up it."

15. Any reference to Rahimki Bazar relating to a period earlier than 1819 is entirely irrelevant for the purposes of this case. It is not disputed by the Government of India that Rahimki – Bazar ceased to be under the control of Maharao of Kutch after the conquest by Ghulam Shah Kalhora in 1762. In paragraph 12 of their note, the Government of India have not attempted to assert that after 1762, while Lakhpat was the farthest "habitable point" of Kutch, there was some non – habitable point in the northern half of Rann still under the influence of the Maharao.

16. As already explained in paragraph 3 of this note the Bund was built by Ghulam Shah Kalhora in the middle of the Rann area which was then Pucca land but was subsequently submerged in water as a result of the earthquake of 1819. The statement in the Government of India’s note that the dam was not built in the Rann of Kutch is, therefore, incorrect. The Government of Pakistan are unable to appreciate, how the emergence of a natural bund as a result of the earthquake of 1819 (as emphasized in paragraph 11 of the Government of India’s note under reply), is relevant, once the Government of India have admitted that Ghulam Shah Kalhora, a Ruler of Sind, did build a dam across the Puran at Mori in 1762 which shows that he did then exercise jurisdiction in the northern half of the Rann. The same fact, namely, that the authority of Ghulam Shah Kalhora was established over the Rann area as a result of his conquest over the Maharao of Kutch in the year 1762 is borne out by the Memoire written by Dr. James Burns in 1828, entitled a “Narrative of a visit to the Court of Sind” as mentioned in paragraph 15 of the Government of India’s note under reply. The relevant quotation is given below :-

“The year 1762 gave a new era to both nations and it was the commencement of a calamitous one for Kutch. Ghulam Shah Kalhora, after bringing an army of 80,000 to Kutch and meeting with a warm reception at a hill above the small village of Jhara in Kutch, returned full of vengeance to Sind and threw a bund across the Khurram river.”

The Government of India have not given a single historical instance to show that any time after the year 1819 and, in fact, during any time between 1762 and 1819, the Maharao of Kutch exercised any authority in any portion of the northern half of the Rann.

17. The contents of paragraphs 13, 14, 15, and 16 in the Government of India’s note under reply relate to a period which as mentioned in the first paragraph of this note, is relevant for the purposes of this case. In 1762, the authority of the Maharao of Kutch in the northern half of the Rann was finally vanquished by Ghulam Shah Kalhora, as is revealed by historical documents and in fact by those quoted in the Government of India’s note itself. In 1819, the Treaty of Alliance guaranteeing the integrity of the territory of the Maharao of Kutch was concluded between the Maharao and the British Government in India. There is nothing to show that at any times after 1819 or between 1762 and 1819 any assertion or exercise of authority was done by the Maharao in the northern half of the Great Rann.

18. The argument in paragraph 17 of the Government of India’s note that the Kutch Darbar’s fort existed at Rahim – Ki – Bazar after 1869/70 with the result that land revenue could not have been collected for the cultivation done on both sides of the river Puran in the Rann of Kutch, is clearly rebutted by the historical fact that after 1762 the Maharao of Kutch had no control whatsoever in the northern half of the Rann. Moreover, the Ismushumari (census) record clearly indicates that land revenue was collected by Sind for the cultivation done in the Rann area on either side of the Bhoro Puran.

19. With reference to paragraph 18 of the Government of India’s note under reply, the Government of Pakistan regret to observe that the Government of India have again quoted the same three instances in relation to which replies have been furnished to them already:-

(a) The Government of India have not given any proof in any way how the entire Ganda Bet was ever accepted by the Political Agent in Kutch or by the District Magistrate of Tharparkar as part of the territory of the Kutch Stat. The Ganda Bet lies right in the centre of the Rann with its northern half and southern half being respectively situated in the northern half and southern half of the Rann. The Government of India will appreciate that the alignment of the Sind – Kutch boundary in the Rann was never demarcated or defined. In these circumstances this instance quoted by the Government of India in Appendix 3 of their High Commission’s note dated the 9th May, 1955, and repeated in paragraph 7(1) of their Note dated the 12th June, 1956, and again repeated in paragraph 18 of their note under reply does not, in any way, lend support to their claim that the entire Rann was a part of the Kutch State.

(b) A physical inspection of Chad Bet would convince the Government of India that there are no traces of any well having been dug there. The only excavation there is a tank about 3 feet deep which was made by the Raj Mahajans of Diplo Taluka for the storage of rain water for the cattle grazing in Chad Bet.

(c) The Government of Pakistan regret that the Government of India have capitalized on the phrase “if the Kutch Darbar had no objection” contained in letter No. A|4 – 3(c), dated the 17th September, 1945, from the Resident, Western India States to the Kutch Darbar as indicating that this did not amount to an assertion of the rights of the Tharparkar administration on the northern half of the Rann. The Government of India are no doubt aware that such phrases were a normal usage of correspondence between the Political Department and a Ruling Chief. If the Resident of the Western India States knew, and he would have surely known if such were the facts, that the entire Rann was a part of the Kutch State he would have refused to forward the request to the Kutch Darbar for extradition of the Kutch employees. This instance is significant as it refutes the Government of India’s contention that the only authorities to raise the relevant boundary dispute were the Sind Officials with the Government of Bombay.

20. The Government of India have stated in paragraph 19 of their note under reply, that “the only competent authority to raise a boundary dispute with the Kutch State was the Government of former British India represented by the Government of Bombay or the Political Agent in the State.” The Government of India would no doubt agree that the Resident of the Western India States would fall within the category of a “competent authority” as envisaged by them. Mr. Morrison’s letter dated the 10th October, 1905 and the Government of Bombay’s reply thereto dated the 23rd November, 1905 (quoted in Sub – Para (b) of the paragraph 2 of this Ministry’s note dated the 19th May, 1958, on which no comment, whatsoever, has been made by the Government of India in Para 19 of their note, that the Government of Bombay was not prepared to sponsor its claim to the Rann of Kutch.

21. In paragraph 20 of their note, the Government of India have made a reference to a Report on the Administration of Kutch State for the period from the 1st April, 1944, to the 31st October, 1945, wherein the Kutch Darbar have asserted that the Rann of Kutch formed part of Kutch State territory. But the Government of India would accept that this Report was written after a series of incidents had taken place in which the authority of the British Government in India and the Kutch Darbar in the Northern half of the Rann had become an issue. Some of such instances have been quoted in paragraph 8 of the Government of Pakistan’s note dated the 19th May, 1958 which the Government of India have not found it possible to rebut. Already, the Dispute had been highlighted in 1937 -38 during the Topographical Survey Operations. As anticipated by Mr. Morrison in his demi – official letter dated the 10th October, 1905, the Maharao who had started thinking of his claims tended to accumulate or even manufacture evidence in his favour for the entire Rann. However, since the British Administration in Sind continued to exercise authority over the northern half of the Rann, they would not have considered it necessary to ask the Kutch Darbar to define the limits of the administrations in a land which was merely a marshy tract. As mentioned in the letter referred to in paragraph 2(b) of the Government of Pakistan’s note dated the 19th May, 1958, their policy was that “that question might be left alone till they were forced to take it up”. This letter which is dated the 23rd November, 1905 expresses the view of the Governor of Bombay in the following terms :-

“Please see Morrison’s Demi – official letter dated 10th October, 1905 regarding the proposed settlement of the boundary between Sind and Kutch. His Excellency thinks the question might well be left alone till we are forced to take it up. That date is not very distant if the Railways go through Kutch”.

There is absolutely nothing to show that the claim of the Maharao over the entire Rann was ever accepted by the British Government in India. In these circumstances, the Diwan of Kutch’s letter of the 5th March, 1938 has absolutely no bearing on the case now advanced by the Government of India.

22. The Government of Pakistan has suggested that a solution to this dispute could be based either on the actual facts of the situation relating to the exercise of jurisdiction, or on International Law and usage as applicable to an inland sea. The latter basis was adopted for the settlement of a similar dispute between Kutch and Morvi State in the little Rann. The Government of India has not stated which of these two alternatives is acceptable to them. On the other hand, they had proposed that a meeting should be held between the representatives of the Governments to take steps for the demarcation of the boundary. Such a meeting can only follow after the alignment of the Indo—Pakistan boundary in the Rann of Kutch has been defined. The Government of Pakistan hope that one of the two alternatives stated above will be acceptable to the Government of are still unable to do so the boundary dispute in the Rann may be discussed at the forthcoming Indo—Pakistan Conference on West Pak./India Border Disputes.

2306. Note from High Commission of India in Pakistan to the Pakistan Ministry of Foreign Affairs.

High Commission of India
Karachi

No. F. 113(6)/56 – Genl. 31st December, 1959

The High Commission of India in Pakistan presents its compliments to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs & Commonwealth Relation, and with reference to the Ministry’s Note No. I (I) – 2/3/59 of 11th December, 1959, has the honour to convey the serious disappointment of the Government of India at the reiteration by the Government of Pakistan of their position on the question of the West Pakistan – Bombay boundary in the Sind – Kutch region, which the detailed Notes exchanged over the last 10 years show to be entirely unsupported by the reliable evidence. The previous correspondence, particularly the considerable historical evidence cited, has already established that neither the old Government of Bombay nor the then Government of India had any doubts whatsoever regarding the alignment of the territorial boundary between Sind and the territories of the Kutch Durbar. The only dispute raised was settled in 1914.

2. The Government of Pakistan have only adduced some instances of unilateral statements/actions by subordinate officials of the Sind Administration in support of their contention that the boundary in dispute. Neither the old Bombay Government nor the then Government of India, in exercise of their authority and responsibility for Sind and Kutch, considered that these unilateral statements by subordinate officials deserved any attention. They, therefore, continued to show the correct alignment of the boundary in their authorized maps and documents, and continued to base their administrative arrangements on the basis of this alignment.

3. The Government of India is also unable to see how the question of an inland sea, or the international practices connected therewith are relevant in this case, as the Rann of Kutch is not such a sea.

4. Since, the Government of Pakistan desire it, the Government of India have no objection to discussing this matter at the Indo – Pakistan Western Border Conference scheduled for early January, 1960.

5. The High Commission of India in Pakistan avails itself of this opportunity to renew to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Commonwealth Relations, Government of Pakistan, the assurances of its highest consideration.

2307. Notes Exchanged during the Indo – Pakistan Minister Level Conference on the Western Border Issues, held in January, 1960, by the two Working Parties setting out the respective stands on the dispute raised by Pakistan regarding the Kutch – Sind Boundary.

(i) Indian Note of January 8, 1960.

(ii) Pakistani Note of January 8, 1960.

Indian Note

The Indian view was that the totality of the evidence available from historical records, statements and actions of the British authorities representing the paramount power, gazetteers (Imperial, Bombay and Sind), Administrative Reports of Bombay State and of Kutch, establish without doubt that there is no dispute regarding the boundary between Kutch and Sind as acted upon by the paramount power up to the time of Partition. The only dispute between Sind and Kutch that the paramount power considered as obliging them to settle was settled by the Bombay Government’s Resolution No. 1192 of 24th February, 1914. The very terms of this Resolution laid down the boundary between “Kutch and Sind”, and described it in terms of a line drawn on the accompanying map “until it joins the Sind boundary as marked in purple”. There is no evidence that the Resolution dealt only with Pucca land, so as to exclude the Rann. Demarcation on the ground by the placement of pillars pursuant to this Resolution was undertaken with the full knowledge of the Sind Government, the Kutch Durbar and the paramount power, and extended to the tri-junction of Karachi and Hyderabad districts and the northern limits of the Rann. The correspondence relating to this demarcation, and routed through the agents of the paramount power, leaves no doubt that the entire stretch covered by the demarcation was the boundary between Sind and Kutch; that the expenditure was intended to be shared equally and was so shared between the Government of Bombay and the Kutch Durbar; that the rendering of assistance by the Kutch Durbar for demarcation work up to 10 miles northwards of the point 23º 58’ N Lat. was no more than an arrangement of convenience arising from the terrain.

2. There is nothing in historical records to show that the Kalhaura Kings maintained jurisdiction amounting to dominion over the Rann. The garrison established by Ghulam Shah at Lakhpat was withdrawn by his son. The evidence is to the effect that the Bund established by him was north of Rahim – ki – Bazar. In any case, such vague claims based on past history of relations between Kutch and Sind rulers in this region were settled by the 1914 Agreement.

3. There is no evidence that the Treaty of Alliance between the East India Company and the Kutch Durbar in 1819, which guaranteed the dominions of the Rao of Kutch, was modified by the paramount power so as to reduce the area of his jurisdiction. While subordinate authorities of Sind may have raised claims in the Rann, all evidence is to the effect that the paramount power, i.e., the Government of Bombay until 1924, and the Foreign and Political Department thereafter, did not consider them deserving of their attention, so as to alter the previous boundary of the State of Kutch. On the contrary, evidence from 1878 onwards is clear that the view of the representatives of the paramount power was that the Rao of Kutch’s claim to the whole of the Rann was unchallenged. Moreover none other than the Commissioner in Sind had acknowledged in 1910 that there was “a mass of evidence that since 1837 the boundary between Sind and Kutch had been recognized and shown on all maps which have been prepared from that date to the present day to be a straight line due south from the tri-junction of the Badin taluka of the Hyderabad district, the Jati taluka of the Karachi district and the Rann of Kutch ….”, and the following authorities cited by him establish the boundary as following the north of the northern limit of the Rann:

(a) Memoir on Kutch State by S.N. Raikes, Assistant Political Agent, Kutch.
(b) General report on revenue survey operations in Sind for 1869 – 70.
(c) Official Memoranda on Native States in India 1909 and attached map.

Jurisdiction.

4. Certain records relating to the period from 1865 to 1872 were produced purporting to show that lands north of the middle of the Rann had been given for cultivation by the Sind authorities. These records, however, did not indicate that the lands concerned were without question outside Sind territory. The same applies to instances cited of the grant of fishing rights. Neither these records nor the unilateral instances affecting Sind residents can establish possession or jurisdiction adverse to the Kutch Darbar as these acts were beyond the knowledge of the Durbar. The records of the Kutch Durbar have clear statements about the Durbar’s jurisdiction extending well north of the middle of the Rann and of collection of Grazing Fees from cattle owners of Sind, or of digging of wells in Chad Bet.

5. Apart from the clear evidence in the earliest maps in Gazetteers and Memories, the 1937 edition and later 1938, 1939 and 1942 editions of the 70 – mile map showing Political charges, issued at the instance of the Political Department, depicted the Rann as falling within the Western India States Agency.
6. Exaggerated importance appears to have been given to the word "disputed" appearing in respect of the northern boundary of Kutch in the 70-mile map of 1938. This map was produced by the Surveyor-General to meet public demand. It was intended to conform to the 70-mile map showing political changes. The records of the Survey of India of 1939 show clearly that the word "disputed" was entered by mistake, and contain orders by the Director of Map Publications that this should be deleted. Stock copies were corrected accordingly, but owing to inadvertence standing negatives were not corrected with the result that certain later editions continued to show the word 'disputed'.

7. The map of Tharparkar for the year 1927–1928 has been cited as authority to show the limits of the District. The only revenue surveys of Sind carried out in the area was in the years 1867–70. The maps sheets prepared from these operations in 1871–72 show the rest of the boundary in a firm manner and the conclusion is that these sheets are authoritative for Sind boundary.

The 32-mile Map of India, 1915, published after it had been approved for boundaries by the Government of India and the subsequent edition of the map, the 50-mile Map of India published in 1928, 1936, and 1945, and the map sheets on the scale 13 = 2 miles and 13 = 4 miles, show that the boundaries between Kutch and Sind were firm and undisputed.

8. The omission of a boundary in 40L/12 and 16 of 1887 and 40L/11 and 15 of 1887 printed in 1908 does not detract from the firmness of the established boundary nor show that the decision of the Director, Map Publications in 1939 overriding the recommendations of O.C., No. 1 Survey Party was unauthorized.

In September, 1917, Government of Bombay in considering improvement of taluka maps issued clear orders that these maps of Sind should be derived from the Sind Topo Survey sheets. In December, 1938, Superintendent, Land Records, Sind had clearly stated that the external boundaries of Tharparkar district "stand unaltered" as originally taken from the Survey of India maps.

No map of the area prepared by the Survey of India prior to 1938 showed the area covered by 40L and 40P as disputed; Sind authorized themselves had acknowledged that their taluka maps were taken from the Survey of India maps. The decision taken by the Director, Map Publication to insert a footnote showing that the boundary was under dispute between Wav and Kutch, which was done in map sheets 40L/SE and 40L/SW was unquestionably correct.

Gazetteers etc.

9. A thorough examination of Gazetteers (Imperial, Bombay and Sind), Reports of Bombay and Kutch States show that while the area of Kutch State has been described as “exclusive of”, “besides” or “inclusive” of the Rann, in no case has the area of Sind been described in these terms. On the contrary, Sind has been described as bounded by the Rann of Kutch.

The latitudes of the extremities of the Province of Sind are described in terms which clearly exclude the Rann of Kutch.

Dead Sea.

10. There are no grounds for regarding the Rann of Kutch as a dead – sea. In 1906 the Foreign Department of the Government of India clearly instructed the Surveyor General of India that it was more correct to show in maps the Rann as a ‘marsh’ than as a ‘lake’. The international practice in regard to dead seas is not relevant.

Kutch Morvi.

11. Some confusion has been created by the consideration of the dispute between Kutch and Morvi as a boundary dispute. It was no such disputed and the settlement was a separation of interests sanctioned by the paramount power. That settlement has no relevance to the present case.

12. Apart from the overwhelming evidence already mentioned, in 1935 the Reforms Office of the Central Government, while considering the definition of the boundary of the newly created Province of Sind, defined it as following the northern boundary of the States of the Western India Agency westwards until it met the Arabian Sea. All maps show the Rann of Kutch as within the Western India States Agency. In 1943, the Chief Secretary and the Chief Engineer in Sind in considering the project for bringing Indus Water to Kutch State defined both by description and by map, Kutch territory in terms which rule out any possibility of the northern half of Rann belonging to Sind.

13. The totality of the evidence given above clearly indicates that there are no grounds whatever for regarding the Kutch – Sind boundary as in dispute. This boundary from the top of the Sir Creek to the trijunction of the Jati taluka of Karachi district, Badin taluka of Hyderabad district and Kutch has already been demarcated by pillars during 1923 – 24. The remaining portion of the boundary has been clearly defined and accepted by the representatives of the paramount power, until 1924 by the Government of Bombay and thereafter until Partition by the Foreign and Political Department. This portion of the boundary along the north of the northern limit of the Rann of Kutch up – to the trijunction of Sind, Rajasthan and Karachi is shown in Survey of India sheets 40D, 40H, 40L and 40P on scale 13 to 4 miles and requires only demarcation on the ground.
Pakistan Note

Subject Matter of the Dispute.

This is an area lying between 20º 55´ and 24º 43´N and 68º 45´ and 71º 46´ E covering about 7000 square miles. According to the Imperial Gazetteer of India published under the authority of the Secretary of State for India in 1908, this area “is believed to be the bed of an arm of the sea, raised by some natural convulsion above its original level and cut off from the ocean. It was a navigable lake in Alexander’s time (325 BC) and a shallow lagoon at the date of the Periplus (3rd Century AD) and there are local traditions of seaports on its border. Geologically it is of recent formation. Between March and October when the whole tract is frequently inundated, the passage across is a work of great labour and even of considerable danger. Some of this inundation is salt water, either driven by strong south winds up the Lakhpat river from the sea, or brought down by streams; the rest is fresh, the drainage of local rainfall. The flood waters as they dry leave a hard, flat surface, covered with stone, shingle and salt. On some raised plots of rocky land water is found, and only near water is there any vegetation. Except a stray bird, a heard of wild asses, antelopes, occasional caravan, no sign of life breaks the desolate loneliness. Unseasonable rain, or a violent south – west wind at any period, renders the greater part of the Rann impassable. Owing to effects of an earthquake in 1819 the greater Rann is considerably higher in the centre than along the edges; while the centre, therefore, is dry, there are frequently water and mud at its sides”.

International Law Applicable to the Subject.

The subject matter of the dispute is thus either a land-locked sea or a boundary lake separating two different States from each other. According to the Treatise on International Law by Dr. L. Oppenheim, (page 485 Vol. I) the boundary line in this case must run through the middle of this area unless some special Treaty (which does not exist in this case) were to portion off such a lake or sea between riparian States.

History of the Dispute

Before 1762 the whole of the Rann of Kutch up to its northern extremity, and even beyond including Rahimki Bazar and Verawow fell within the jurisdiction of the Kutch State. However, in 1762 Ghulam Shah Kalhora, a Ruler of Sind invaded the Kutch State and defeated the Mharao at Jarrah. He annexed the whole of the Rann of Kutch to Sind, established his garrison at Lekhpat, built an embankment across the eastern branch of the Indus within his own territories and dug canals for the purpose of withdrawing the water of the river entirely from Kutch. This dam was constructed across the Puran at Mori and served a two-fold purpose, namely, fertilizing the lands of Ghulam Shah Kalhora and desiccating those of the Maharao of Kutch. The location of this dam was about 15 miles to the south or Rahimki Bazar at a point approximately 69° 10′ Long. E, 24° 8′ Lat. N. The above facts are borne out by:

(i) Narrative of a Visit to the Court of Sind by James Burns (page 21); and
(ii) Gazetteer of the Province of Sind compiled by E. H. Aitkin (page 5); and
(iii) New Map of Kutch prepared by Lt. Burns in 1828.

After the death of Ghulam Shah Kalhora in 1772, his son Sarfraz Khan recalled the troops stationed by his father at Lakhpat but twice thereafter he entered Kutch with a considerable force and devastated a great part of the country before he quitted it. It further transpires from the above mentioned historical document prepared by James Burns, that between 1816 and 1819 the Maharao of Kutch was anxious to avoid the expansion of the influence of either the British or the Sind Rulers in his State. Exaggerated reports of the domestic disturbances in Kutch reached Sind and the Rulers of Sind from a fear that the Rao would again request the assistance of the English, determined, if possible, to keep this, their constant object of dread, at a distance, by offering the necessary support themselves. But the Maharao declined this assistance and kept the Rulers of Sind out of Kutch by the cession of the Fortress of Lakhpat Bunder. The British annexed Sind in 1843. The record of the year 1856 relating to the following expenditure amply bears out that the whole of the Rann of Kutch came under the British Administration of Sind:-

(1) Clearing road from Raoma Bazar (Rahimki Bazar) along the edge of the Rann from Parkur to Sooegaum (Suigam) in Gazarat the distance being 193 miles. Rs. 9065.

(2) Making out the road with stones across the Rann from Koura to Bullaree and from Parkur to Narabate and clearing road in Thurr from Bullaree to Verawow. Rs. 1000.

(3) Cost of Dharamsala at Barana, Kasua, Verawow, Narrabate (Between Parkur and Gazerat in the Rann) Deepla, Mittee, Islamkote, Karreea and Ghoree.

However, in 1875 the Mukhtiarkar of Diplo replying to a query from the Political Superintendent of Tharparkar, reported that “in the Rann proper there is a Chan of Gaind and there is a Dharamsala at that place. That Dharamsala is fixed as the boundary of Tharparkar district and Kutch State. The land lying between that Dharamsala and Diplo belongs to the Tharparkar district and the land on the other side of the Dharamsala belongs to the Kutch Bhuj State. The Dharamsala marks the boundary between the Tharparkar district and Kutch Bhuj State”. This Dharamsala is situated in the southern half of the Gainda Bet. If a line were drawn through the middle of the Rann of Kutch, one half of the Gainda Bet would lie to its north and the other half to its south. The boundary within the Rann was not demarcated because the British Government did not wish to have any controversy in this connection with the Kutch Darbar. The Rann of Kutch had no better value than that of a marshy tract. In 1905 Mr. Morrison (Commissioner – in – Sind) suggested to the Government of Bombay that “the question of rights within the Rann of Kutch” should be settled earlier as “further delay will only give the Darbar opportunities, now that they apparently are thinking of their claims to accumulate or even manufacture evidence in their favour”. But the Governor of Bombay thought that “the question might be left alone till they were forced to take it up”.

In 1926 when an official representative of the Kutch Darbar tried to charge grazing fee from the Sind graziers in Chad Bet the Collector of Tharparkar made a reference to the Commissioner and he was informed that no change had occurred in the boundary line since 1875. Thereupon the Collector of Tharparkar recorded that since half of the Rann belonged to the British (Sind) Administration no grazing fee should be paid to Kutch. Finally, this question arose during the topographical survey of the year 1937 – 38 and by then, it seems, the Kutch Darbar had developed the attitude which had been predicted by Mr. Morrison 33 years earlier. They started laying claims to the whole of the Rann. The Officer – in – Charge of the Survey Party proposed to omit the boundary line altogether from the modern survey maps as the parties did not agree to its alignment. Further, the Collector of Tharparkar suggested that this boundary should be shown as in the old maps with a special symbol and with the word “disputed” written thereon. Consequently, in the map published in the year 1938 and in its subsequent re – prints of the years 1940, 1944 and 1946 the word “disputed” is mentioned on the relevant boundary line. As there has been no agreement between the parties concerned, there has so far been no alignment of the boundary between Sind and Kutch in the Rann area.

Exercise of jurisdiction.

The record of the years 1856 and 1875 which has been discussed above to trace the history of this dispute shows the exercise of jurisdiction in the Rann area by Sind Administration ever since the annexation of Sind by the British in 1843. The following are additional instances which lead to the conclusion that the northern half of the Rann has been administered by Sind:-
(i) There is one lake Shakooriji Mian six miles away from Rahimki Bazar in the Rann of Kutch which used to get water from Dhora Puran and the leases for catching fish in the lake fetched a sum of Rs. 50,000/- per year which according to Public Works Department record continued to be realized till at-least 1935 – 36 by Sind Administration.

(ii) Gul Muhammad of Vingi, Taluka Diplo, got a Tank excavated in the Chhar Bet (Chhad Bet) about 100 years ago and this tank is still in existence and called after his name as Gul Muhamad Kapri tank.

(iii) Ism – Shumari (Census) record of the year 1869 – 70 shows that patches of area in the Rann on both sides of Dhoro Puran were granted for cultivation by the Sind Authorities and the Revenue collected by them.

(iv) Records of the year 1904 – 05 of the Diplo Taluka Office contain a number of applications from villagers (Abadgars) residing near the border of Rann for grant of Banni land in the Rann for cultivation purposes. But the then Deputy Collector on the report of the then Tapedar in October, 1904, decided that there was Bandish (restriction) on the disposal of this land and that the land was reserved as Charagah (grazing ground) for the cattle. The Tapedar in his report clearly stated that the land in the Rann is Sarkari, i.e. Sind Government property.

(v) In 1923 -24 an area measuring 20 acres 27 gunthas was brought under cultivation by Arbab Mir Khan and his son Muhammad Unis and so also another piece of land measuring 20 acres 23 gunthas in 1924 -25. These lands were settled on Sanho Canal. This canal, about 40 years ago used to take off from the Dhoro Puran at village Rahimki Bazar and flowed 7 or 8 miles in the Rann. The revenue on the paddy crop cultivated with the water of this Canal was collected by the Taluka of Diplo. The two old villages called Vigakot and Manjhikot (in the Rann), which are extinct now, were under the jurisdiction of the Government of Sind.

(vi) There is a remark of the Collector of Tharparkar dated the 20th December, 1927 (on the application of the Raj Mahajans and Patels of Diplo Taluka) stating that half of the Rann belonged to the British (Sind) Administration.

(vii) In 1945 an offence was committed at a place between Badin – Parkar Road and Bedia Bet over eight miles in the Rann and only 1½ miles to the north of Bedia Bet. On the 6th February, 1945 the Diplo Police registered a case-under Sections 324 and 333 I.P.C. read with Section 148 I.P.C. and rule 81 (4) of the Defence of India Rules. The Foujdar at Khavda in Kutch State was approached by the Officer – in – Charge of the Police Station Khadai, Taluka Diplo, for assistance in arresting the accused. One accused out of 8 was arrested by Kutch Police in Kutch and was sent to Diplo where he was tried by the First Class Magistrate Diplo.
(viii) In Criminal case no. 19 of 1945 the police diaries reveal that the murder of Ramsarup of the Customs Department was committed in the Rann on the road from Rahimki Bazar to Kutch, about 18 miles from Ding, the Sind Customs Station. The Police Commissioner of Kutch State at Bhuj did render assistance to the Diplo Police for the apprehension of the accused.

(ix) An offence under section 394, I.P.C. was committed by Hashim and Khan Muhammad near Vigahkot on the thoroughfare leading to Kutch proper in the Rann at a distance of 10 to 12 miles from Ding – Jo – Pattan (Ferry of Ding). The accused were tried and convicted by the First Class Magistrate Diplo.

Pakistan’s Case.

On the basis of the historical facts mentioned above Pakistan could lay claim to the entire Rann of Kutch. However, in view of the Mukhtiarkar of Diplo’s and report the year 1875 which is on their own record and the instances of the exercise of jurisdiction by the Sind Administration they have confined their claim only to the northern half. In the absence of any Treaty, agreement, or Resolution of the concerned Governments to that effect, the Government of India are not entitled to claim the northern half of the Rann. On the other hand, Pakistan’s claim to the northern half of the Rann is also supported by the International law applicable to this area. In this connection there exists a precedent relating to the little Rann wherein a similar dispute between the Kutch and Morvi states was settled by dividing that area in two halves between the contending parties.

No. PI – 108(72)/64 dated the 12th February, 1965

The Ministry of External Affairs present their compliments to the High Commission of Pakistan in India and regret to state that there has been a serious violation of India territory by personnel of the West Pakistan Rangers and the Indus Rangers on the Gujarat West Pakistan border in the area of Kanjarkot in Gujarat.

2. Surreptitious intrusions by the Pakistan Rangers were noticed in this area late in January, 1965. An on-the-spot inspection by the District Magistrate of Kutch on 27 – 1 – 1965 fully established that the Pakistan Rangers had made unauthorized entry into Indian territory, in heavy motor vehicles, in the Kanjarkot area, the intrusion extending to more than 1½ miles inside Indian Territory. The fact that Kanjarkot is indisputably Indian territory has been made clear to Pakistan as far back as January, 1960. In May, 1964 when three Pakistan nationals were arrested by the Gujarat State Police, during routine patrol duty, at Kanjarkot, the fact of Indian jurisdiction of the area was again brought home to the Pakistan authorities. Efforts to discuss the May, 1964 incident with the Pakistan Rangers were thwarted and the Gujarat Police released the three Pakistani nationals as a gesture of goodwill.

3. When fresh intrusions by the Pakistan Rangers were noticed by the Gujarat State Police patrol late in January, 1965, efforts were made (on the 3rd and 4th February 1965) by the O.C. Chhad Bet to meet representatives of the Pakistan Rangers but the latter failed to appear for a meeting. It was noticed that the Pakistan Rangers were now using heavy motor vehicles for patrol duty. Presumably, these freshly acquired vehicles were deployed by Pakistan Rangers for the latest incursion into Indian territory. With the vehicles and other fresh equipment, the Pakistan Rangers have been emboldened to intrude into Indian territory in and around Kanjarkot, in Platoon strength, and to establish themselves in the old Fort. The Pakistan Rangers platoon at Kanjarkot is equipped with semi-automatic weapons.

The Ministry of External Affairs wish to protest against this unauthorized and forcible intrusion by the Pakistan Rangers across the boundary of Kutch and Sind and urge the High Commission to move the Pakistan Government for the immediate withdrawal of Pakistan intruders from the area referred to in the preceding paragraph.
4. such intrusion and violation of Indian territory by Pakistan Rangers may be due, in part, to the un– demarcated nature of the Gujarat – West Pakistan border. It is imperative therefore, that action is taken by the Governments of India and Pakistan to demarcate this border as a matter of top priority. In October 1964, the Survey of India had addressed a letter to the Survey of Pakistan reminding the latter of their joint responsibility for the demarcation of the entire India – West Pakistan border, in terms of the agreement of 1956. The High Commission is aware that the demarcation of the Rajasthan - West Pakistan border has been completed. The last phase in the demarcation of the India – West Pakistan border relates to the Kutch – Sind sector. It is regretted that there has been no response from the Survey of Pakistan to the request made to them by the Survey of India to begin work on demarcation of this boundary.
If incidents are to be avoided and tension lessened, it is essential that the Survey of Pakistan are instructed by the Pakistan Government to begin work on the demarcation of the Kutch – Sind border, without further delay.

5. The Government of India will be prepared to put a Survey Party at work at this border immediately. The High Commission is requested to suggest it to their Government that similar instructions should be issued to the Survey of Pakistan so that demarcation on the Kutch – Sind border could be taken in hand in the next few days.

The Ministry of External Affairs avail themselves of this opportunity to renew to the High Commission of Pakistan in India the assurances of their highest consideration.

2309. Note from High Commission of India in Pakistan to Pakistan Ministry of Foreign Affairs.

High Commission of India
Karachi

No. D. 270-FSP/65

February 18, 1965.

The High Commission of India presents its compliments to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the Government of Pakistan, and has the honour to request that urgent action be taken by the competent Pakistani authorities to rectify a serious violation of Indian territory by personnel of the West Pakistan Rangers and the Indus Rangers on the Gujarat – West Pakistan border in the area of Kanjarkot in Gujarat.

2. After various intrusions in this area in January, 1965, the Pakistani Rangers penetrated two miles into Indian territory, set up a post in an old fort at Kanjarkot, and have been obstructing the Indian border authorities from their legitimate patrolling up to the border with Pakistan. The Gujarat Government sought to take up the matter immediately with the Pakistan authorities, and the Government of India also drew the attention of the Government of Pakistan to the need for urgent action in a note handed over to the Pakistan High Commission in New Delhi on the afternoon of February 12th, 1965. The Indian authorities had succeeded in arranging for a meeting between D.G., West Pakistan Rangers, and the D.I.G., Rajkot, for the 15th February, 1965, but the day before the meeting was to take place, the West Pakistan Rangers, Lahore, informed Rajkot that the meeting would be attended by the local Commanding Officer. The massage from the West Pakistan Rangers claimed that Kanjarkot lay well within the areas claimed by Pakistan, and this unjustified claim was repeated by the Pakistan side at the meeting of border officials when it was held on February 15th, 1965. These officials refused to examine the evidence which the Indian side produced as clear proof that Kanjarkot was well within Indian territory, as has indeed been made clear previously to the Pakistan Government. Not only was the meeting rendered fruitless but the Pakistani Rangers in the Kanjarkot area have persisted in obstructing Indian patrolling, and have sent their forces in line formation even beyond the limits up–to which they had earlier intruded. The Pakistani forces have been reported to be in uniform, carrying semiautomatic weapons and using motor vehicles.

3. The Government of India must emphatically protest against this provocative violation of Indian territory. The high handed action of the Pakistan Rangers is clearly against the ground rules agreed to by both Governments.
The Government of India reiterated their request to the Government of Pakistan to arrange for the immediate restoration of the status quo ante and its strict maintenance in future pending the demarcation of the frontier in this area. They would like to remind the Government of Pakistan that the Indian Survey authorities have been asking their Pakistani counterpart to cooperate in demarcating this one remaining un-demarcated area on the frontier between India and West Pakistan, but there has been no response to the Indian request. In addition to the steps immediately required to withdraw the Pakistani intruders and ensure prevention of all further violations, it is also necessary for the demarcation work to be undertaken rapidly so as to preclude the possibilities of any further incidents. The Government of India trust that the extreme forbearance shown by the Indian authorities will not be tried further. They hope that the Government of Pakistan will extend their immediate and effective cooperation both to rectify the immediate situation and to arrange for early demarcation.

The High Commission of India avails itself of the opportunity to renew to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs the assurances of its highest consideration.

2310. Telegram from West Pakistan Rangers at Lahore dated 26th February, 1965 received at Rajkot at 10 A.M. on 27 – 2 – 1965.

Allegations made in your Telegram of 23rd baseless and misleading and I deny them with all force at my Command. As previously informed Kanjarkot falls in our de facto control and Rangers have patrolled it for many years. Your contention regarding our huge war-like reinforcement in trucks is really amusing. Suggest you instruct your junior Commander to refrain from passing back exaggerated information. Only wish your assurances of best cooperation were sincere and such situation as has been created by S.R.P. by plying war – like machines over our area and sending your personnel fully armed with L.M.G. loaded in vehicles in our area could have been avoided. In interest of peace and harmony in the area you must abide by the decisions of the meeting of 15th February between you and Commandant Indus Rangers. You have ignored protest lodged by my Commander against your unwarranted activities in the disputed Rann of Kutch and in Knajarkot area which is in our de facto control. Rangers have full right to patrol Pak - territory as you have in India. I would ask you to maintain status quo in the area and not create situations that might result in incidents against common aim of preserving peace along the Border. Sincerely advise you to contact Commander Indus Rangers and discuss the matter with him preferably at your Karimshahi Post if you have still any doubt. Assuring you of my cooperation at all times.

2311. Note from Pakistan Ministry of Foreign Affairs to High Commission of India in Pakistan.

Karachi, March 1, 1965.

Ministry of Foreign Affairs
Karachi

The Ministry of Foreign Affairs presents its compliments to the High Commission of India and with reference to its Note No. D. 270 – FSP/65, dated 18th February, 1965, has the honour to say that the Knajarkot Fort lies well within the area of the Runn of Kutch, which has been in de facto possession of Pakistan since August 1947, and Pakistan border forces have been patrolling it regularly.

2. On 30th January 1965, a party of Indian border forces made an effort to patrol the area in proximity of the Fort and was immediately challenged by the Indus Rangers. Again on February 3, 1965, an Indian Patrol party was seen in the area, whereupon the Area Commander Diplo (Pakistan) lodged a protest with his counterpart across the border. No attention seems to have been paid to the protest, as on February 5, 1965, an Indian patrol party again made an appearance on the scene. This time the Indian party was in 4 jeeps, 2 of which were carrying army personnel and the other 2 SRP personnel. A machinegun was mounted on one of jeeps. This patrol party was intercepted by the Indus Rangers and upon being asked to do so, it returned to its Camp.

3. In the judgment of the Local Commander, the sudden Indian activity in the area was directed at occupying the Kanjarkot Fort. Precautions have been taken to prevent this, but it is not correct, as alleged in the High Commission’s Note, that the Fort has been occupied by the Indus Rangers.
4. The Commandant Indus Rangers met the D.I.G. Rajkot, on the latter's request on February 15, 1965, to review the situation. The position regarding the border in this area was explained fully to the D.I.G. Rajkot, at this meeting and he was requested to see to it that no violation took place of Pakistan's borders by the forces under his command. However, in view of the concern expressed by the Government of India and with the desire to avoid the unnecessary creation of tension over this issue the Government of Pakistan have agreed that the situation might be discussed at a meeting at D.I.G. level and the D.I.G. West Pakistan has been instructed to make himself available for such a meeting at the request of the D.I.G. Rajkot.

5. It will be seen that no violation of Indian territory has taken place. On the contrary, Pakistan border forces in the area have acted to prevent the violation of Pakistan territory by Indian troops and have done so peaceably and without the use of force.

6. The Government of Pakistan trust that the Government of India have no interest in heightening tension in this area.

7. The Ministry wishes, in this connection, to draw attention of the High Commission to the following violations of Pakistan airspace in this area:-

(a) February 18th, 1965 – Three Indian aircraft (two Vampires and one Dakota with No. HJ – 247) violated Pakistan airspace over Indus Rangers posts Rahimki Bazar and Peneli.

(b) February 19th, 1965 – Two aircraft (Vampires) violated Pakistan airspace at our posts SURAI and MARAH.

(c) February 20th, 1965 – One Indian aircraft (Dakota) violated Pakistan airspace over our post RAHIMKI BAZAR.

(d) February 20th, 1965 – Three aircraft (Vampires) violated Pakistan airspace over our posts MARAH, RAHIMKI BAZAR and SURAI.

(e) February 21, 1965 – An Indian aircraft (Dakota) violated Pakistan airspace over KANJARKOT and our post SURAI.

8. It will be noted that these incidents have occurred simultaneously with the delivery of the High Commission’s Note of protest under reply and that at the same time the completely unfounded charge of Pakistani violation of Indian territory is being agitated in the Indian press. The Ministry earnestly hopes that an end will be put to such activities so that the settlement of the boundary question relating to the Sind Kutch sector can be effected in a calm and peaceful atmosphere.
9. The Sheikh – Swaran Singh Agreement of January 1960 records the decision of the two Governments to “study the relevant material and hold discussions later with a view to arrive at a settlement of this dispute”.

10. It is clear that this is a matter for discussion and agreement between the two Governments and that until such agreement is reached, the two Surveyors – General cannot proceed with the demarcation. The reference in the High Commission’s Note to the lack of response from the Surveyor – General of Pakistan is not, therefore, understood.

11. In the meantime, the Ministry hopes that attempts to create artificial tension over this issue will cease. Violations of Pakistan airspace and territory in the area can only lead to the creation of such tension, which the Government of Pakistan wish to avoid. The Ministry would, therefore, be grateful if necessary instructions could issue, to the Indian border personnel to avoid violation of the status quo both on the ground and in the air.

12. The Ministry of Foreign Affairs avails itself of this opportunity to renew to the High Commission of India the assurances of its highest consideration.

2312. Statement by External Affairs Minister Swaran Singh in Parliament on Pakistan Ranger’s intrusions in Kutch.

There have been intrusions of Pakistan personnel into Indian territory south of the Kutch – Sind border in the Kanjarkot area. This area has been regularly patrolled by our border police forces. The intrusions first came to the notice of the Gujarat border police on January 25 and are still continuing. These consist of the use of a new track by Pakistan vehicles south of Kanjarkot fort, well within Indian territory, patrolling by Pakistan border forces up to this new track, and obstruction to our patrol’s proceeding north of this track. Concentration of Pakistani forces in Pakistan across the frontier has been reported at Maro, Bedin and Rahim ki Bazar.

As soon as the intrusions became known, a protest was lodged locally with the Pakistan authorities. At the same time our border police were asked to undertake vigorous patrolling of the area right up to our border. When our patrols encountered Pakistani armed personnel belonging to the Pakistan Rangers, the latter claimed that the area belonged to Pakistan and that our Patrol was in the Pakistani area illegally. Subsequently the Gujarat Government asked for an immediate meeting with the Pakistan Rangers at the highest level possible. The Gujarat Government continued patrolling of the area. On February 12, 1965, we also lodged a protest with the Government of Pakistan, through the Pakistan High Commissioner in Delhi, against violation of Indian territory. The Government of Pakistan were requested to issue instructions to their forces to withdraw the intrusion and agree to our request, which had already been pending with them since October 17, 1964, for immediate demarcation of the Kutch – Sind border. On February 15 a meeting was held at a place south of Kanjarkot between D.I.G., Rajkot, and Commandant of the Indus Rangers, Hyderabad Sind. This meeting came to nothing since the Pakistani party refused to study the map which the Indian party produced at the meeting showing clearly that Kanjarkot was well within the pre-partition boundaries of Kutch. The Commandant, Indus Rangers, maintained that the area in question was Pakistan territory. They had not occupied the Knajarkot fort but were patrolling the area south of this fort since there was a customary track joining the two Pakistani customs posts of Ding and Surai.

In view of the unsatisfactory outcome of this meeting and continuing Pakistani intrusions into Indian territory, it was decided to instruct our High Commissioner to see the Pakistan Foreign Minister immediately and to bring to his notice the gravity of the situation. A note was handed on February 18, 1965, by our High Commission to the Pakistan Foreign Office requesting for the withdrawal of Pakistani forces to their previous positions and for agreement of the Pakistan Government to our proposal of October, 1964, for a meeting of Surveyors – General of the two countries for the purpose of demarcation of the Kutch – Sind border. On February 19, our High Commissioner saw the Pakistan Foreign Minister and urged on him to issue instructions for immediate demarcation of the border. The Pakistan Foreign Minister said that he was not aware of the facts and promised to look into the matter.

On February 20, 1965, a senior official of our High Commission again approached the Pakistan Government and pressed for the acceptance of our proposals. The Pakistan Government takes the line that the Pakistani personnel south of the Kutch – Sind border in the Kanjarkot area are on their own territory and that Pakistan has always exercised de facto control up to the new Customs track. They further contend that there is nothing much to talk about but that if our border forces have any doubt they should ask for a meeting between D.I.G., Rajkot, and D.G., West Pakistan Rangers.
Yesterday evening, we received from our High Commission in Karachi the text of a Note received by them on 1st March, from the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the Government of Pakistan. The Note repeats the stand of the Pakistan Government that Kanjarkot lies well within the area of the Rann of Kutch which, the Pakistan Government claims, has been in the de facto possession of Pakistan since August, 1947. The Note points out that while Kanjarkot is being patrolled by the Pakistan Rangers, the old fort in the area has not been occupied by the Pakistan forces. The Note asserts that there has been no violation of Indian territory by Pakistan and makes the allegation that India's border police have intruded into the area and Indian aircrafts have been violating Pakistan air space. It is stated in the Pakistan Note that this matter is for discussion and agreement between the two Governments and that until this agreement is reached, the Surveyors – General of India and Pakistan cannot proceed with demarcation of the Kutch – Sind border.

The position taken by the Government of Pakistan in their Note is wholly untenable. It is not correct that the Pakistan Rangers have been in de facto possession of Kanjarkot and Rann of Kutch, or that it was being patrolled by the Pakistan Rangers until they intruded in this area, in some force, in January this year. The Government of Pakistan, it is regretted, have adopted a most unhelpful attitude. We should have thought that if the Pakistan Government genuinely desired to avoid a serious situation, they would agree to an immediate meeting of representatives of two sides for the purpose of demarcation or to a high level conference. The Pakistan Government's attitude is unreasonable and totally contrary to the pre- partition maps which conform with the actual situation, namely, that Kanjarkot fort is well within our territory 1300 yards south of the Kutch – Sind frontier.

The Government of India take a serious view of the Pakistani intrusions. The Kutch - Sind border, though not demarcated with pillars, is well defined. If there is any difference of opinion about where the border exactly is on the ground, this is a matter of demarcation of the border in the course of which any differences can be sorted out. The Government of India will never accept the unilateral assertion of any claims by Pakistan Government on this border or elsewhere. They will continue their diplomatic efforts to bring about a demarcation of this border. At the same time they must insist on restoration of status quo ante and the withdrawal of Pakistan intrusion, to be followed by talks between the two Governments.

The Pakistan Government’s plea that the D.I.G., Rajkot Rangers and D.G., West Pakistan Rangers, should meet if there are any doubts does not take the matter much further; there has already been such a meeting before which produced no result. However, in consonance with our general policy of trying to solve problems by peaceful methods, we are asking for such a meeting. We hope that the meeting will result in the elimination of tension that has been created by Pakistan’s unilateral action and intrusion into our territory and lead to discussions between the representatives of the two Governments in regard to demarcation of the frontier. The House may rest assured that the Government will take every possible step to protect the integrity of our border.

2313. Note from Pakistan Ministry of Foreign Affairs to High Commission of India in Pakistan.

Karachi, March 5, 1965.

Government of Pakistan
Ministry of Foreign Affairs
Karachi

No. Pol. I(A) – 2/4/62 dated the 5th March, 1965

The Ministry of Foreign Affairs presents its compliments to the High Commission of India in Pakistan and in continuation of this Ministry’s Note of even number, dated the 1st March, 1965, has the honour to draw the attention of the High Commission to the following incidents in the Kanjarkot area:

(a) On February 26, 1965, Indian border forces made a new track by driving 3 jeeps about 300 yards north of their existing tract opposite Pakistan’s border posts at Vingi and Paneli. At a flag meeting, the Area Commander of Pakistan border forces pointed this out to the Indian D.S.P., who admitted that the Indian patrol had come to the north by mistake.

(b) On February 27, 1965, an Indian patrol about 20 strong, armed with rifles and light machine guns in 4 jeeps was observed patrolling the area opposite Pakistan’s border posts at Vingi, Paneli and Gethi between 1200 hours and 1500 hours.

(c) Again of February 27, 1965, an Indian patrol about 40 strong in jeeps and in 2x3 tons arrived opposite Kanjarkot on the Indian side about 14.30 hours and left at 1700 hours.

The show of force by the Indian border personnel as exemplified by a continued violation of Pakistan’s borders and air space and the artificial tension which is being whipped up in India against Pakistan on the basis of completely unfounded charges is not conducive to the maintenance of calm in the area. The Ministry hopes that in the interest of avoiding any untoward incident in the area, Indian border personnel would be advised to desist from attempts to violate Pakistan borders and to cease all unnecessary show of force.

The Ministry avails itself of this opportunity to renew to the High Commission the assurances of its highest consideration.

2314. Note from Ministry of External Affairs to Pakistan High Commission in India.

New Delhi, March 11, 1965.

The Ministry of External Affairs present their compliments to the High Commission of Pakistan in India and with reference to the Notes handed over by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the Government of Pakistan to the High Commission of India in Pakistan, on 1st March and 5th March, 1965, have the honour to say that the narration in these Notes is completely at variance with the actual position on the Kutch – Sind border where Pakistani personnel, in some force, have intruded into and continue to violate Indian territory, despite formal and informal protests made to the Government of Pakistan and their agencies by the Ministry of External Affairs of the Government of India, the High Commission of India in Karachi and officers of the Gujarat State Police. The facts relating to these intrusions were brought to the notice of the Government of Pakistan, formally, in a Note handed over by the Ministry of External Affairs to the High Commission of Pakistan in New Delhi on 12th February, 1965; and by the High Commission of India in Pakistan to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs on 18th February, 1965. In addition to these, protests have been made, more than once, by the D.I.G. Rajkot to the D.G. West Pakistan Rangers in which facts relating to Pakistani intrusion into Indian territory on Kutch – Sind border have been recorded, with details of the intrusions and the dates on which the intrusions occurred.

In the Pakistan Government’s notes of 1st March and 5th March, 1965, handed to the Indian High Commission, Karachi, allegations of intrusion by Indian border force into so–called Pakistan territory have been made. The fact is just the opposite. The Kanjarkot area which the Pakistan Government claims to be Pakistan territory is and has been unquestionably Indian territory. The boundary of Kutch and Sind is well defined in the pre–Partition maps published by the Surveyor–General, copies of which are available with the Government of Pakistan. These pre–Partition maps clearly depict this boundary which lies well north of the Kanjarkot Fort (in ruins). Kanjarkot was unquestionably a part of Kutch. The authorities of the State and the Central Governments in India have exercised effective control and jurisdiction over this area, and Indian border police have regularly patrolled the Kanjarkot area right up to the border north of the Fort. In the face of these facts the claim made by the Pakistan Rangers and by the Government of Pakistan to Kanjarkot offends against the facts of history, cartography and jurisdiction. The Government of India rejects all these claims which are presumably based on insufficient appreciation of relevant facts relating to the boundary of Kutch and Sind and lack of correct information regarding the effective and continuing jurisdiction of the Government of Gujarat over Kanjarkot.

In the light of the facts stated in the preceding paragraph, the instances cited in the Pakistan Government’s notes referred to above do not amount to intrusion by Indian border police into Pakistan territory. On the contrary, the obstructions by the Pakistan Rangers to Indian patrols in this area amount to an unwarranted intrusion, and a unilateral assertion, by show of force, of Pakistan’s claim to this area.

However, since the Government of Pakistan have cited some detailed instances in their notes, the Government of India would like to draw the attention of the Pakistan Government to the true facts in their correct sequence:

(i) On 6 – 2 – 1965, a small party of the Gujarat border police were surprised to see a large party of the Pakistan Rangers, deep inside Indian territory, in the Kanjarkot area. When the Indian party wished to know the reasons for this intrusion, the Pakistan Rangers threatened the Indian party not to patrol in the area and, in any case, not to cross the new track that the Pakistan Rangers had established nearly 2 miles south of the Kutch – Sind border.

(ii) On 13 – 2 – 1965, the Gujarat Border Police was obstructed by personnel of the Pakistan Rangers from continuing with their legitimate duty of patrolling on Indian territory.

(iii) On 16 – 2 – 1965, the Gujarat Border Police patrols noticed two sections of Pakistan Rangers, again deep inside Indian territory. Pakistan Rangers advance towards the Indian party in a threatening posture. The Indian party, not wishing to create further tension, withdrew while the Pakistanis continued to advance into Indian territory.

(iv) On 18 – 2 – 1965, another party of the Gujarat Border Police was threatened by a large group of Pakistan Rangers from advancing in an area 800 yards south of the new track that the Pakistan Rangers had established nearly 2 miles south of the Kutch – Sind border.

(v) On 23 – 2 – 1965, the Gujarat Border Police patrol were accosted by a sizeable group of Pakistan Rangers who took positions, adopting a menacing attitude and threatening that they would open fire on Indian patrol.

(vi) Again, on 23 – 2 – 1965, a sizeable group of Pakistan Rangers tried to encircle a small group of the Gujarat Border Police more than two miles inside Indian territory.

(vii) On 24 – 2 – 1965, a small group of Gujarat Border Police were physically obstructed while they were in Indian territory, by a full Company of the Pakistan Rangers.

(viii) On 26 – 2 – 1965, a group of Gujarat Border Police was gain physically obstructed from patrolling in Indian territory and when a Gujarat Police Official protested, the Pakistan Rangers told him that he should lodge the protest with their Director – General at Lahore.

(ix) On 26 – 2 – 1965, again, Pakistan Rangers on Indian territory issued a warning to the Gujarat Police that they should not patrol an area some 2 miles south of the Kutch – Sind border.

(x) The allegation that the Indian DSP admitted the Indian patrol having come to the North by mistake is baseless. The correct position is that the Gujarat Border Police patrols started patrolling from the 25th February opposite Wingi and Paneli south of the old customary track which forms the border between India and Pakistan, at a distance from 300 to 800 yards south of the latter. Under Ground rules, patrolling up to 150 yards of the boundary is permissible.

(xi) On the 26th February afternoon, the Indian patrol met Pakistan Rangers at 1400 hours at Wingi and at 1350 hours at Paneli. The Pakistan Rangers objected to the said patrolling opposite Wingi and Paneli. The Indian patrol told them that this was well within Indian territory and that patrolling would continue in the area. The Indian patrols have continued to patrol in the area.
(xii) On the 27th February, Indian border police patrolled in the area opposite Wingi and Paneli, referred to in preceding sub-paragraph, from 1215 hours to 1830 hours. They observed 8 armed camel sawars belonging to the Pakistan Rangers near Wingi post who started patrolling parallel to the Indian patrol but no communication was made. Near Paneli a Pakistani jeep came at 1345 hours and two Pakistani Captains Nazrat and Morteza contacted the Indian patrol alleging that they had changed their patrolling route and demanding that they should patrol on the old track. Indian patrol replied that they were patrolling within Indian territory.

(xiii) On 28 – 2 – 1965, a Pakistani post Commander of Wingi during his meeting with the Indian Inspector stated that the Indian patrol vehicle will be blown off. The Indian Inspector very firmly replied that they were patrolling in Indian territory and would not yield to any threat. In these exchanges, it is reported that while objecting to change of patrolling route the Pakistan authorities have not at any time contended that the Indian patrolling was not within Indian territory. Apparently, the Pakistan local Commanders have distorted the facts while reporting to their higher authorities.

The India Border Police have continued patrolling of Indian territory up to the boundary. On 25 – 2 – 1965, the Indian day patrol went to the Kanjarkot area. On 26 – 2 – 1965, Indian patrol with two platoon strength went to Kanjarkot. On this day, they observed that one company strength of Pakistan Rangers was illegally deployed around Kanjarkot. The Indian patrol went west of Kanjarkot but were interfered with by the Pakistan Rangers. The Officer Commanding, Chhad Bet, thereupon lodged a protest. On 28 – 2 – 1965, the Indian night patrol went to Kanjarkot area and patrolled it.

The High Commission of Pakistan cannot be unaware of these incidents and the facts relating to these intrusions into Indian territory by personnel of their West Pakistan and Indus Rangers. As has been made clear in the various Notes already sent to the Government of Pakistan, these intrusions by personnel of the Pakistan Rangers are unwarranted, illegal and against the letter and spirit of the Ground Rules of 1960, to which the Government of India and Pakistan are a party. The effort of the Pakistan Rangers to disturb the status quo on the Kutch – Sind border through show of force and threat of use of force, has resulted in a very serious situation and threatens to disturb peace and tranquility on the border. The Government of India are greatly surprised that the Government of Pakistan should have ignored the Protests made by the Government of India and the Government of Gujarat, at various levels. It is unfortunate that in an effort to provide a cover to the illegal and provocative activities of the Pakistan Rangers, the Government of Pakistan have thought it necessary to make baseless charges of Indian intrusion into Pakistan territory.
In their Note dated 5th March, the Government of Pakistan have complained that the Border Police of the Gujarat Government are patrolling (Indian) territory opposite certain “border posts of Pakistan”. It is strange that the activities of the Gujarat Border Police on Indian territory should cause offence to the Government of Pakistan. All such activity is confined to the territory of the erstwhile State of Kutch which has lawfully acceded to India, and is strictly in accordance with the Ground Rules of 1960.

The Pakistan Rangers have established a new, long, track nearly 2 miles deep into Indian territory, south of the old fort at Kanjarkot which again is 1300 to 1500 yards inside Indian territory. It is hardly relevant on the part of the Government of Pakistan to complain about the activities of the Gujarat Border Police on their own territory, particularly when personnel of the Pakistan Rangers are known to have crossed the border and violated Indian territory in this manner.

In their Note dated 1st March, 1965, the Foreign Ministry of the Government of Pakistan have complained of certain alleged violation of Pakistani air space by Indian aircraft. The Government of India were greatly surprised to read these allegations. To make assurance doubly sure, they made careful checks with the authorities in India who confirmed that at no stage had any Indian aircraft violated Pakistani air space on the Kutch – Sind border. There seems little doubt that what the Government of Pakistan allege as over-flights by Indian aircraft over Pakistan territory, are nothing more than flights undertaken by Indian aircraft south of the Kutch – Sind border and well within Indian territory. The Government of India are constrained to reject the allegations made by Pakistan which are contrary to the facts and have obviously been made with an eye to propaganda.

In their Note dated 12th February, 1965, the Ministry of External Affairs had suggested that the best way to avoid incidents and to reduce tension on this well defined but partly demarcated border was to undertake demarcation of the area as a matter of high priority. In this connection, the Ministry of External Affairs drew the attention of the Pakistan High Commission to letter dated 17th October, 1964 from the Surveyor – General of India to the Surveyor – General of Pakistan, inviting the latter to begin work on demarcation of this border. It is to be regretted that the Government of Pakistan have adopted a most unhelpful attitude on this proposal in stating that “this is a matter for discussion and agreement between the two Governments and until such agreement is reached, the two Surveyors – General cannot proceed with demarcation.”

The Government of India are anxious that the recent developments on the Kutch – Sind border, arising solely from intrusion of Pakistani personnel into Indian territory, should be discussed without delay between representatives of the two Governments. The consequences of delay in dealing with this problem could be most serious. The Government of India do not wish to stand on formality in this important matter; they would, therefore, suggest a very early meeting with the Government of Pakistan, at any level acceptable to the latter, where a solution to the problem could be found and firm decisions taken for early demarcation of the Kutch – Sind border. At this meeting, both sides could exchange data and other material relevant to the Kutch – Sind border and consider the modalities of dealing with the problem of demarcation on the ground of the well defined boundary of Kutch and Sind. Pending such a meeting, the Government of India would emphasize the urgent need of maintaining status quo ante on the Kutch – Sind border. To this end, as provided for in Ground Rules, the D.I.G. Rajkot has already sent a message to D.G. West Pakistan Rangers for a meeting of border officials of the two sides. To-date there has been no response from D.G. West Pakistan Rangers to this message from D.I.G. Rajkot. The Government of India expect that the Government of Pakistan would issue immediate instructions to D.G. West Pakistan Rangers to meet his Indian counterpart and take early steps to restore status quo ante on the Kutch – Sind border. Any unilateral attempt to disturb a historically established boundary or to interfere with the status quo, through use or threat of use of force is not permissible, and it is hoped that Pakistan border police will not attempt to enforce Pakistan claims by force.

It is earnestly hoped that the Pakistan Government are as anxious as the Government of India on this issue. The Government of India, therefore, trust that the Pakistan Government will respond promptly to the proposals made in preceding para.

The Ministry of External Affairs avail themselves of this opportunity to renew to the High Commission of Pakistan the assurances of their highest consideration.

Dear Sen,

I am sorry I have not been able to reply to your telegram of 1st March, 1965, earlier due to multifarious pre-occupations. I am constrained to point out to you that a dispute which should have been settled at Government level has been made as an instrument to create unnecessary tension along the border. You know very well that Indus Rangers have all along patrolled the area much beyond Kanjarkot fort, whereas SRP patrols never came there. It is also on record that when your troops tried to construct some pillars further south in the disputed land, and when we lodged a protest against it, you had vide your letter No. CB/B/10/BOR dated 25th December, 1964, assured us that you had instructed your troops not to commit any further acts in the Rann of Kutch, which might bring about deterioration in our friendly relations. Yet the situation as it exists today has been created. Now that the matter has been reported to both the Governments who are in communication with each other, I feel that the meeting at DIG’s level which both the Governments have agreed, should be held whenever it is convenient to you. This is necessary because we desire to avoid unnecessary creation of tension over this issue. You know that no violation of Indian territory has taken place. On the contrary, in the face of repeated provocation from your side, Indus Rangers in the area have acted with unprecedented restraint, and whatever little activity they were compelled to undertake, it was meant to prevent violations of Pakistan territory by Indian troops. I would like to bring to your notice the contents of the Shaikh – Swaran Singh Agreement of January 1960 in which it was decided that the two Governments would study the relevant material and hold discussions later with a view to arriving at a settlement of the dispute regarding the Rann of Kutch. I therefore would request you to please order your troops not to create unnecessary tension along the border and let both the Governments decide in manner as they like.

I once again take this opportunity to renew the assurances of continued cooperation to you,

Yours sincerely,

Khuda Dad Khan.
2316. Express Telegram from D.I.G., Rajkot, dated March 17, 1965, to Director General, West Pakistan Rangers, Lahore.

Your telegram of Twenty-sixth February full of exaggerated statements and baseless claims. The line of our de facto control is clearly indicated in the Pre-Partition Survey maps which were produced by us in the Minister level Conference at Lahore in January, 1960 and also shown to Commander Indus Rangers by me at Conference of Fifteenth February. Our patrols have been patrolling and will continue to patrol up to that line and all territory south of that line including Kanjarkot is under our de facto control. Your reference to War-like machine not understood. Essential that you order your men to desist from intrusions into our territory and from interfering with our patrols the consequences of which will be entirely your responsibility. Understand from my Government that discussions have commenced at higher level. I would welcome a conference with you personally and not with Commander Indus Rangers who is not competent under ground rules to participate in conference at my level. This time conference should be held in your territory at Rehimki Bazaar since the last conference was held in our territory. I suggest that we settle this matter promptly in the interests of peace and friendly relations between our two Great Nations. I assure you of my cooperation in achieving peaceful conclusion to the state of tension which your men have unilaterally created. Grateful for immediate reply.

2317. Aide Memoire handed over on March 30, 1965 by Mr. Akhund, Ministry of Foreign Affairs, Government of Pakistan, to Shri P.N. Kaul, Deputy High Commissioner of India in Pakistan, Karachi.

AIDE MEMOIRE

The Government of Pakistan in Ministry of Foreign Affairs notes No. Pol.I(A)-2/4/62 dated 1st March, and 5th March, 1965 have already made known their concern to the Government of India at the highly provocative activities of the Indian Army and Border Forces on the Sind – Kutch Sector of West Pakistan – Gujarat Boundary. Tension in the area has been aggravated by the Indian patrolling in the disputed area in violation of the status quo which has prevailed for the past several years.

The Government of Pakistan now learns that on the 27th and 28th March India carried out large scale Army/Navy operational manoeuvres in the disputed Rann of Kutch area, very close to Pakistan borders. The following forces are believed to have participated in the exercise:

1. Aircraft carrier INS Vikrant and 8 other first – line ships of Indian Navy.

2. Ground troops located at Kutch and in the Maharashtra area. Aircraft from INS Vikrant were reportedly used in extensive ground support operations. One of them violated Pakistan air space in the course of the exercise.

Earlier reports have described the opening of new Indian posts, construction of bunkers, digging of trenches and making of new tracks in the disputed territory.

These war–like activities in a territory, final disposition of which is to be the subject of negotiation and agreement between the two countries and in such close proximity to the Pakistan borders constitute a provocative show of force and serve only to aggravate the existing tension.

Simultaneously a hostile and apparently well–organized publicity campaign against Pakistan is being carried out in the Indian press making it difficult to create an atmosphere in which fruitful discussions between India and Pakistan might be held to eliminate the causes of tension.

The Ministry of Foreign Affairs hopes that the Government of India will carefully weigh all the consequences of the needless and artificial exacerbation of tension and will desist from all show of force and provocative activity in the interest of maintaining peace at the borders between the two countries.

Karachi, the 30th March, 1965.
2318. Letter from DIG, Rajkot Camp Bhuj dated the 1st April, 1965 to Director – General, West Pakistan Rangers, Lohore, West Pakistan.

2. I regret the delay in replying to your letter under reference as I had to go on leave for a few days due to the death of my father. It was unavoidable. I am taking the earliest opportunity on return from leave to reply to your letter.

3. I am afraid I cannot agree with the views expressed by you and the reasons are as follows:

   It is astonishing to read in Para 2 of your letter that Indus Rangers have, all along patrolled area much beyond Kanjarkot fort. This patrolling was never done by them and the Indus Rangers were for the first time noticed patrolling in our territory on the 25th January, 1965, when my patrols saw fresh and new illegally made track by your troops within Indian territory for which immediately protest was made by me. The dash dot line as shown to your Commandant Indus Rangers on 15 – 2 – 1965 in the various Survey Maps of pre – partition and post – partition up to which our patrols have been patrolling is the \textit{de facto} boundary and crossing of this line by your troops is a violation of Indian territory. A proper study of the letter referred to by you will clearly indicate that we had not agreed to remove any boundary pillars. These brick structures were not boundary pillars at all, and were made for marking our track. However, the dash dot line on Survey Maps as referred to above and as shown to your Commandant is our \textit{de facto} boundary and we reserve all our rights to put up any structures other than recognized boundary pillars in our territory according to our own needs pending demarcation of the \textit{de jure} boundary which question is being dealt with by both the countries at a higher level. A convenient date for a meeting at DIG’s level will be communicated to you in due course. In spite of strong protests lodged by me from time to time against the flagrant, deliberate and illegal violation of Indian territory made by your Rangers, I certainly feel amazed to read in Para 3 of your letter under reference that no violation of Indian territory has taken place. On the contrary the present position on the border will clearly show that your Rangers armed with war – like weapons have forcibly taken over possession of the area around the ruin of Kanjarkot fort which is south of dash dot line, \textit{i.e.} the real \textit{de facto} boundary and in Indian territory and they are still in full occupation of the same.

4. In the context of the above, I strongly protest against this illegal and deliberate occupation and violation of Indian territory and I request you to order your...
KUTCH

Rangers (border forces) to vacate Kanjarkot fort forthwith so that the situation at the border may be maintained peacefully till the question about de jure border is settled by the higher authorities of the two countries. Under these circumstances, if anything untoward happens on the border between your border forces and my patrols, you will be solely responsible for the same.

5. Since the last conference was held on 15 – 2 – 1965 on Indian soil, I suggest that next conference should be held at Rahim Ki Bazar which is in Pakistan.

6. I again take this opportunity of assuring you of my continued cooperation with you at all times.

2319. Note from Pakistan Ministry of Foreign Affairs to the High Commission of India in Pakistan.

Karachi, April 7, 1965.

The Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the Government of Pakistan presents its compliments to the High Commission of India in Pakistan and with reference to the Ministry of External Affairs Note dated 11th March, 1965 delivered to the Pakistan High Commission in Delhi, Ministry of Foreign Affairs wishes to state the following:

The Government of Pakistan are willing as they have always been to enter into discussions with the Government of India for the settlement of the dispute relating to the boundary between Sind and Kutch the only sector of the West Pakistan – India boundary which remains unsettled.

The Government of India are aware of course that the dispute relates to the precise location of the boundary and for this reason the proposed high level meeting cannot contrary to the suggestion in the India note confine itself to considering "the modalities of dealing with the problem of demarcation on the ground of the well defined boundary of Kutch and Sind". The problem of border demarcation is subsequent to that of definition and can be tackled at the appropriate technical level after the proposed high level political meeting has led to agreement as to the precise alignment of the border.

The Government of Pakistan have watched with growing concern the buildup of military forces which has been going on in and around the disputed territory of the Rann of Kutch since 30th January. The Ministry regrets that instead of rectifying the situation as they have been repeatedly urged to do, the Government of India have not only intensified the buildup but thought it fit to hold combined military exercises in the region. The Government of India cannot have been unaware of the provocative nature of such actions at this time and of the effect they would have on an already tense situation. The Government of Pakistan is of the view that useful discussions cannot be held between the two countries on the settlement of Rann of Kutch border dispute in the atmosphere of tension by such provocations and show of force.

The Government of Pakistan is anxious to peacefully settle the Rann of Kutch problem at the earliest time. In order to permit a beginning to be made it is requested that the Government of India should immediately withdraw all additional troops and civil armed forces inducted since 30th January into the disputed part of Rann of Kutch, vacate position occupied or other measures taken to strengthen Indian military presence in the area and to cease all further activities of this kind.

The Ministry of Foreign Affairs sincerely hope that the Government of India will issue instructions immediately to all concerned to this effect. It is a matter of concern that the flag meeting fixed for 8.30 a.m. on 6th April did not materialize on account of the failure of the Indian side to be present.

The Government of Pakistan hope that an immediate restoration of the status quo will be brought about in order that the way may be opened for peaceful settlement of this border dispute. At the same time the Government of Pakistan must reserve the right to take necessary measures to defend its position and interest in the area.

The Ministry of Foreign Affairs avails itself of this opportunity to renew to the High Commission of India the assurances of its highest consideration.

2320. Note from Ministry of External Affairs to Pakistan High Commission in India.

New Delhi, April 8, 1965.

Ministry of External Affairs
New Delhi

Note No. PI – 108(72)/64 April 8, 1965

The Ministry of External Affairs, Government of India, presents its compliments to the High Commission of Pakistan and has the honour to draw the attention of the High Commission to the Ministry’s Note Verbale No. PI – 108(72)/64 handed to the High Commission on the 12th February 1965, the High Commission of India’s Note Verbale presented to the Pakistan Ministry of Foreign Affairs on the 18th February 1965, and to the Ministry’s Note Verbale presented to the Pakistan High Commission on the 11th March, 1965. In these Notes the Government of India protested against the unauthorized and forcible intrusion into Indian territory by Pakistan Ranger south of the boundary between Kutch and Sind, and the disturbance of the status quo in this area. The Government of India requested the Pakistan Government to withdraw these intrusions and restore the status quo ante.

2. The High Commission will recall that in the Ministry’s Note of the 11th March, the Government of India proposed as follows:

“A very early meeting with the Government of Pakistan, at any level acceptable to the latter, where a solution to the problem could be found and firm decisions taken for early demarcation of the Kutch – Sind border. At their meeting, both sides could exchange data and other material relevant to the Kutch – Sind border and consider the modalities of dealing with the problem of demarcation on the ground of the well defined boundary of Kutch and Sind. Pending such a meeting, the Government of India would emphasize the urgent need of maintaining status quo ante on the Kutch – Sind border.”

3. In the same Note of the 11th March, 1965, the Government of India, on the assumption that the Pakistan Government were as anxious as themselves to resolve this issue, expressed the hope that the Pakistan Government would respond promptly to the above proposals. The Ministry is greatly disappointed that there has been no response to the above proposals made in the Ministry’s Note of 11th March, 1965. The Indian border police authorities made a request on the 3rd March for a meeting between the DIG Rajkot Rangers and DG, West Pakistan Rangers. No meeting has taken place in spite of repeated reminders by the Gujarat authorities, because of the virtual refusal of the DG, West Pakistan
Rangers. Nor has the Government of Pakistan agreed to the very reasonable proposal for a meeting between the two Governments at any level acceptable to the Government of Pakistan at which a solution to the problem could be found and firm decisions taken for early demarcation of the Kutch–Sind border.

4. Meanwhile the Government of Pakistan have not only continued and maintained their illegal intrusions but reinforced such activities. They have set up two standing posts at Kanjarkot and at a place west of Kanjarkot which the Pakistan forces choose to call Ding, respectively 1300 and 2000 yards into Indian territory south of the well–defined and well–understood Kutch–Sind border. The Pakistan Government has also brought up a heavy concentration of their armed forces along the border in Pakistan territory with a view to backing up and supporting their illegal activities. The Government of India strongly protest against such actions of the Pakistan Government and would request the immediate disbandment of the standing posts which Pakistan has set up in Indian territory and the restoration of the status quo ante.

5. The Government of India would once again request the Pakistan Government to agree immediately to a meeting between the DG, West Pakistan Rangers, and the DIG, Rajkot Rangers. In the hope that the Pakistan Government have the desire to reach a peaceful solution of the problem the Government of India would urge the Government of Pakistan to agree to a meeting between the representatives of the two Governments at whatever level considered appropriate.

The Ministry of External Affairs, Government of India, takes this opportunity to renew to the High Commission of Pakistan the assurances of its highest consideration.

The Government of India emphatically protest against armed attacks by Pakistan armed forces including the 18th Punjab Regiment on the Indian border police posts at Sardar and Vigokot. This unwarranted attack on the Indian border police posts lawfully situated well within Indian territory, south of the Kutch – Sind border, constitutes a pre–meditated and unprovoked aggression against India, a violation of Indian territory, and breach of the Ground Rules which were agreed upon as part of the Indo – Pakistan border agreement dated the 11th January, 1960.

On the early morning of April 9, the Indian border post at Sardar was subjected to heavy artillery and mortar fire by the Pakistan army. Subsequently, on the same afternoon, the Indian police post at Vigokot, nearly seven miles south of the well–defined Kutch – Sind border, was also subjected to heavy attack.

The Government of India have already protested to the Pakistan Government in their notes dated 12th February, 18th February, 11th March and 8th April, 1965, against illegal intrusions by Pakistan forces into Indian territory and the setting up by Pakistan of two posts – one at Kanjarkot and the other at a place west of Kanjarkot respectively 1300 and 2000 yards to the south of the Kutch – Sind border.

The Government of India have repeatedly brought to the attention of the Pakistan Government the serious consequences of such illegal and aggressive activities. The Pakistan Government have paid no heed to the previous protests of the Government of India and the events on the 9th April referred to above clearly show that the Pakistan Government are determined to create trouble and heighten tension and conflict between the two countries. The Government of India call upon the Government of Pakistan immediately to vacate their aggression against Indian territory, to withdraw all their armed forces including their army form Indian territory, to remove the post set up by them in Indian territory at Kanjarkot and another post to the west of Kanjarkot set up recently by Pakistan. The Government of India further demand adequate compensation for the loss of life and property caused by the illegal action and unprovoked aggression by the Pakistan Government.

2322. Note from High Commission of India in Pakistan to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs Government of Pakistan.

Karachi, April 12, 1965.

The High Commission of India presents its compliments to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs Government of Pakistan and has the honour to invite attention to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs Aide Memory dated 30th March 1965 concerning the alleged activities of the Indian Army and border forces on the Sind – Kutch sector of West Pakistan – Gujarat boundary. The complaint made by the Government of Pakistan has been thoroughly investigated by the Government of India. The area mentioned in aide memoire is indisputably and unquestionably Indian territory. It is perfectly normal for any country to hold exercises in its own territory. Hence Pakistan has no right or competence or locus standi to object. The Government of Pakistan’s aide memoire is a transparent attempt to cover up the unprovoked and lawless military aggression committed by the Pakistan Army in the Indian Territory in Gujarat. The Government of India repudiate the charges and the allegations made in the Pakistan Governments’ Aide Memoire of 30th March as they have no basis in fact.

The Government of India express the hope that the Government of Pakistan would urgently take the steps indicated in High Commission of India’s note No. KAR (P) – 108 (5)/65 which was handed over by our High Commissioner to Mr. Agha Shahi on 11th April, 1965 which will help to reduce tension in Sind – Kutch border and maintain peace between the two countries.

The High Commission avails itself of this opportunity to renew to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs the assurances of its highest consideration.

Karachi
Note from Pakistan Ministry of Foreign Affairs to High Commission of India in Pakistan

Karachi, April 12, 1965.

The Ministry of Foreign Affairs presents its compliments to the High Commission of India in Pakistan and with reference to the latter’s note, dated 11th April, 1965 on the situation in the Rann of Kutch has the honour to state the following:

The Ministry categorically rejects the charge of aggression against Indian territory leveled at Pakistan in the Indian Note. The two places mentioned in the note namely Sardar Post and Vijokot, situated in the disputed part of the Rann of Kutch and not “south of the well-defined Kutch-Sind border” as is contended in the High Commission’s note, are not under the occupation of Pakistan forces as appears to be implied in the note.

The High Commission’s note once again makes the untenable claim that Kanjarkot and another post, which is not named (but may be presumed to be the one at Ding) lie within Indian territory. The Ministry has, on many occasions, in writing as well as orally, explained that both Ding and Kanjarkot are situated within Pakistan territory and have always been under Pakistan’s \textit{de facto} control. The fact that Pakistani forces had been patrolling a track between their posts at Ding and Surai, running south of Kanjarkot was admitted in the Rajya Sabha by the Indian Minister of State for Foreign Affairs, Mrs. Lakshami Menon.

The existing tension and the outbreak of hostilities have been caused by the attempt of Indian forces to interfere with Pakistan’s well-established rights in the area. In reply to the High Commission’s note, dated 18th February, the Ministry in its note of 1st March pointed out that even though Kanjarkot Fort lay within Pakistan territory, Pakistan border forces had not occupied it, but had been obliged to take measures to foil an Indian attempt to occupy the fort as part of their plan to prevent Pakistan border forces from patrolling the area as they have been doing for many years. In the same note and in subsequent note, dated 5th March, the Ministry enumerated a number of instances in which Indian border forces had attempted to intrude into Pakistani territory; Indian aircraft had violated Pakistan air space and in general, a show of force had been staged in a provocative and hostile manner. In disregard of these protests and of Pakistan’s willingness to hold discussions to find a peaceful solution of the dispute, activities of this nature were continued and intensified.

On 27th and 28th March, the Indian Army and Navy held a joint exercise in the Rann of Kutch with the participation of the 31st Indian Brigade, the aircraft carrier “INS Vikrant” and number of first line ships of the Indian Navy. One of the aircraft from the carrier violated Pakistan air space. In its Aide Memoire, dated 30th March, the Ministry lodged a strong protest against this willful and irresponsible action carried out in disputed territory at a time and in a manner which could not fail to raise serious questions about the intentions of the Indian Government. The Aide Memoire also drew attention to the reports of the opening of new posts, construction of bunkers and digging of trenches in the disputed territory by Indian forces. No reply to this Aide Memoire was received.

On March 31, the Indian Home Minister Mr. Gulzari Nanda visited the border area and on his return, reported to a meeting of the Emergency Committee of the Indian Cabinet, which was attended among others, by the Indian C-in-C, General Chaudhri. On 7th April, Mr. Nanda declared in the Indian Lok Sabha that the Government of India intends to take “effective measure to remove intrusions and ensure the safety of our borders”. In the meantime, on the night of 4/5 April, an Indian force infiltrated into Pakistani territory, established a post 300 yards north-west of Ding and deployed a company between that Pakistani post and Mara on a North–South axis. In response to a demand by the Local Commander of Pakistan border forces for the vacation of the intrusion, the Indian local Commander requested a flag meeting which was arranged for 8.30 A.M. on 6th April. At the request of the Indian Commander, this meeting was first postponed to the following day and then to the 8th and then significantly to the 10th April, the day after the one on which the Indian forces launched this attempt to dislodge Pakistani border forces from their established position, resulting in the out-break of fighting.

It must be noted that this unjustified and wanton recourse to force occurred when the Government of Pakistan were awaiting a reply to the proposal made in their note a 7th April for a restoration of the status quo followed by high level negotiation and at the very time when the modalities of bringing about such negotiations were being discussed with the High Commissioner of India. It was this attempt of the Indian troops in the area to seek a decision by force and not any alleged “aggression” by Pakistan which has provoked a clash and the consequent aggravation of the situation.

This development was brought to the attention of High Commissioner that very night and he was requested to impress upon his Government the urgency of putting an end to the needless fighting and to reiterate Pakistan’s willingness to seek a negotiated settlement of the Rann of Kutch dispute.

It is a matter of regret that instead of agreeing to the Government of Pakistan’s proposal for an immediate ceasefire to be followed by negotiations, the Government of India have advanced totally unfounded and baseless allegation of Pakistan’s aggression. In the light of events and the reported move the 1st Indian Brigade from Bhuj to position around the Ding – Kanjarkot area, the Government of Pakistan cannot but take a serious view of the reiteration of Indian charges of aggression which the Government of India must itself know to be wholly without any foundation.

The Government of Pakistan hope, therefore, that, as earlier proposed, the Government of India will stop all show of force and military build–up and agree to put an immediate and unconditional end to the fighting in the area. The Government of Pakistan remain willing, as already stated on a number of occasions, to discuss at an appropriate high level all aspects of the dispute relating to the Rann of Kutch.

The Ministry of Foreign Affairs avails itself of this opportunity to renew to the High Commission for India in Pakistan the assurances of its highest consideration.

2324. Statement by Home Minister Gulzarilal Nanda in Lok Sabha on Kutch – Sind Border Situation.

New Delhi, April 12, 1965.

I made a statement in the House on the afternoon of April 9, and briefly recounted events on the Kutch – Sind border in the area of Kanjarkot, culminating in the attack on one of our border posts by Pakistan Forces earlier that day.

According to information received subsequent to the statement, an attack on our border post at Sardar commenced at 03:40 A.M. on April 9, with heavy mortar and MMG fire, followed by artillery fire from 25 pounder guns under cover of which two battalions of the Pakistan regular army belonging to 51 Infantry Brigade advanced towards the post. Our CRP unit stationed at Sardar put up a fierce resistance as a result of which the Pakistan battalions had to withdraw leaving 34 dead on the field including two officers and four prisoners in our hands. We lost four policemen dead, 5 were wounded and 19 men including the Deputy Commandant of the CRP are missing at present.

Apprehending a further attack later in the evening and as the Sardar post was subjected to intermittent artillery fire which became heavy in the afternoon, the police withdrew to our Vigokot post, 4 miles south – east of Sardar. The Vigokot post was also shelled by Pakistan artillery in the afternoon.

The Chief of the Army Staff was instructed on April 9, to take over operational control of the border and Army units moved into Vigokot the same evening. This is commendable promptitude considering the distances and the nature of the terrain. Army patrols re–occupied Sardar post on April 10 and some Pakistani documents and equipment were recovered from the neighborhood of the post.

From the interrogation of the prisoners taken in the engagement and the examination of the documents recovered it appears that the plan of the assault on our border post by the Pakistan Army was drawn up in the second week of March and movement of troops began thereafter. Orders of the attack were apparently given on April 7 and the attack was launched in the early hours of April 9. The second phase of the plan, namely, consolidation of Sardar post was foiled by the brave resistance put up by our border police.

I would like to pay a tribute to the gallantry of the police force at the Sardar post which for over 12 hours heroically defended themselves against such heavy odds and repulsed the attacks by two battalions of Pakistan Army. The House, will, I am sure, wish me to send our condolences to the families of those who were killed in this action. Government would make suitable provision for giving relief and financial assistance to the bereaved and the injured.

Apart from the precautions that have already been taken for the security of the border, we lodged on April 10, a strong protest with the Pakistan Government against the use of regular army units for attacking our border police post and the unprovoked aggression on our territory leading to loss of life and property to our nationals. Adequate compensation for the loss caused, as well as immediate withdrawal of all forces from our territory, have been demanded. Simultaneously, Members of the Security Council and Governments of friendly nations have been addressed with a view to acquainting them with the grave happenings which have dangerous possibilities if Pakistan persists in its present aggressive posture in the Kutch – Sind border.

The Government's policy in this matter is clear. We are taking every step to protect the integrity of our frontier. On the 10th April our High Commissioner in Karachi was told by the Pakistan Government that there should be a meeting between the two Governments first at the official and thereafter at the ministers' level. The House will recall that this was the proposal made in our notes of the 18th February and 11th March to the Pakistan Government. We wish that Pakistan had accepted our proposal before mounting an attack by the Pakistan Army on our border force. However, we are prepared for these talks, and we are communicating this to the Pakistan Government.
2325. Note from Pakistan Ministry of Foreign Affairs to High Commission of India in Pakistan.

Karachi, April 17, 1965.

Ministry of Foreign Affairs
Karachi

The Ministry of Foreign Affairs presents its compliments to the High Commission of India in Pakistan and has the honour to acknowledge its Note No. KAR (P) 108 (5)/65, dated April 12, 1965, which is in reply to the Ministry’s Aide Memoire, dated the 30th March, 1965.

The Ministry rejects as absolutely untenable and totally unacceptable the affirmation made in the High Commission’s note, that the area “is indisputably and unquestionably Indian territory”. The High Commission will recall that the dispute over this sector which relates to the alignment of boundary between India and Pakistan was last discussed at a ministerial level meeting in January, 1960 between General K.M. Shaikh representing Pakistan and Sardar Swaran Singh representing India and the following decision was then arrived at:

“Exploratory discussions regarding the boundary dispute in the Kutch – Sind region showed that the differences between the Governments of India and Pakistan could not be settled. Both Governments have decided to study the relevant material and hold discussions later with a view to arriving at a settlement of this dispute”.

The Ministry further recalls the provisions of Rule 9 of the Indo – Pakistan Border Ground Rules of 1960, which reads as under:-

“Notwithstanding the provisions of paragraphs 6 to 8 above, in areas regarding which disputes of title are already pending with the respective Governments for a decision, the status quo inclusive of defence and security measures will be strictly maintained until such time as the de jure boundary is finalized and the return of territories in adverse possession of the two countries takes place”.

The holding of military exercises in the area was, therefore, a violation of the Ground Rules of 1960, a flagrant breach of status quo ante and highly provocative show of force as a part of India’s recent abortive attempts to seize the territory by force.

The Ministry in its note of 30th March had drawn attention to serious misgivings about the intentions of the Government of India which were raised by the military exercises and which aggravated the already tense situation. On this point the High Commission's note is silent.

As regards the boundary question and the final disposition of the disputed territory, these matters must form the subject of discussions between both the Governments, as already proposed.

The Ministry of Foreign Affairs avails itself of this opportunity to renew to the High Commission for India in Pakistan the assurances of its highest consideration.

2326. Statement from the Official Spokesman of the Pakistan Ministry of Foreign Affairs on the Kutch-Sind Dispute.
Karachi, April 26, 1965.

The Government of India has rejected Pakistan's offer of cease – fire in the Rann of Kutch to be followed by an immediate withdrawal by both Governments of all their armed forces, both civil and military, from the disputed territory so as to pave the way for talks to evolve a peaceful solution of the dispute.

India's rejection of the constructive proposals put forward by Pakistan furnishes evidence that India is determined to remain in forcible occupation of this territory, comprising 3,500 square miles approximately.

In rejecting Pakistan's offer India has stated that the territory does not become disputed territory merely because one side claims it to be so. In other words, India now denies even the existence of the dispute in the Rann. This indeed is most extraordinary and represents a most blatant volte face yet assumed by India in its dealings with Pakistan apart from Kashmir.

Two of the agreed decisions occurring in Indo – Pakistan agreement on West Pakistan – India border disputes – signed on behalf of India by Commonwealth Secretary M.J. Desai on January 11, 1960 and ratified on the same date states as follows:

Exploratory discussions regarding the boundary dispute in Kutch – Sind region showed that differences between the Governments of India and Pakistan could not be settled. Both Governments have decided to study the relevant material and hold discussions later with a view to arriving at a settlement of this dispute.

Paragraph 4 of the joint communiqué issued on the occasion also stipulates as follows:

Both countries agreed to collect further data in respect of the dispute regarding the Kutch – Sind boundary and discussions will be held later with view to arriving at a settlement of the dispute.

Apparently India now feels militarily strong enough to repudiate this agreement and to force a military decision on Pakistan.

The dispute over the Rann of Kutch is that of title to territory. It has existed since before partition. It has been subject to negotiations between the two countries on a number of occasions. It was last discussed between General Shaikh of Pakistan and Sardar Swaran Sing of India in January 1960. As no agreement was reached it was decided to defer consideration to a subsequent meeting. No meeting has since been held. Meanwhile, the two countries agreed in terms of Rule 9 of the Ground Rules of 1960 that “in areas regarding which disputes of title are already pending with the respective governments for decision, the status quo inclusive of defense and security measures will be strictly maintained until such time as the de jure boundary is finalized and the return of territories in adverse possession of the two countries takes place.”

Towards the end of January, 1965, Indian forces attempted to interfere with Pakistani’s patrolling outside the disputed territory. Later, in February, India accused Pakistan of occupying the Knjarkot Fort lying north of a track between Ding and Surai, customarily patrolled by Pakistani border forces. It was pointed out to India that Pakistani forces had been patrolling this track for the past several years and that, therefore, there had been no violation of the status quo.

Meanwhile,

1. Intensive Indian patrolling was started on a newly established track in close proximity of Pakistan tracks. Patrols carried automatic weapons, recoilless rifles, etc.;

2. New Indian posts were created early in March opposite Pakistani positions, notably at Vigokot, Sardar, Karimshahi and Sarafbel, equipped with VHF communication equipment and observation tower;

3. On February 24, the 31st Indian Infantry Brigade was moved from Ahmadabad and deployed near the area;
(4) The headquarters of the Indian armed forces in Gujarat state were moved forward to Bhuj to facilitate operational control;

(5) Extensive digging of trenches and construction of bunkers and new tracks in the disputed territory was commenced;

(6) Frequent reconnaissance flights by Indian Air Force planes were started;

(7) Large-scale combined Army / Navy operational exercise was carried out in the area by India. The forces participating in the exercise included the 31st Infantry Brigade, and Indian aircraft carrier, seven destroyers/frigates and one fleet support and reconnaissance missions. Naval ships carried out bombardment in support of ground forces.

Even while the modalities of reducing the tension in the area were being discussed, Indian forces attacked Pakistani border outpost at Ding within Pakistani territory on the night between April 4 and 5 and established positions to the north of that post. A flag meeting arranged by the local commanders to discuss the situation was repeatedly postponed by the Indian side. On April 9, Indian forces launched an attack on Pakistani forces in an attempt to dislodge them from their positions. It is this attempt of the Indian troops in the area to seek decision by force which has provoked hostilities between the forces of the two countries.

Subsequently, the conflict was enlarged when India brought in heavy armor and regular army units into the forward area and Pakistan was obliged to take appropriate measures for the defense of its borders and of its interests in the disputed territory.

India is focusing attention on Kanjarkot to divert attention from the fact that the entire northern half of Rann is in dispute and that the international boundary line lies along the 24th parallel. Indian designs became manifest in Prime Minister Shastri's statement of April 12, which he repeated in Lok Sabha on April 16 that India would insist on the vacation of Kanjarkot at the forthcoming talks and that in the meantime preparations would continue unabated to take Kanjarkot by force if necessary. In the light of this we have proposed that both sides should move their forces out of the disputed territory. In the meantime, India is making the situation more tense by moving in troop reinforcements and by threats of action against other sectors in the border.

The Rann of Kutch is not an isolated instance where India has used force to resolve an outstanding dispute. In the past India took Hyderabad and Junagadh by force. Today it is holding Kashmir in its colonial grip by sheer armed strength. Recently its aggressive activities on the ceasefire line in Kashmir have increased. They still continue.
Again, about two months ago, for no rhyme or reason, India suddenly occupied Dahagram – a Pakistani enclave in Cooch Behar. The Indian plan here was to force an exchange of enclaves at this stage and thus postpone to an indefinite future the demarcation and transfer of Berubari to Pakistan. The firmness shown by Pakistan in the face of India’s aggressiveness resulted in the withdrawal of Indian forces from Dahagram and in the reestablishment of Pakistan’s control.

India’s military move in the Rann of Kutch is yet another effort by Indian leaders to seek solution of disputes relating to the boundary by the use of forces.

While we have offered to discuss this dispute amicably with the Government of India, we reserve the right to take appropriate measures for the defense of our interests in the disputed territory.

2327. Statement by Prime Minister Lal Bahadur Shastri in Lok Sabha on Pakistan’s Armed Aggression on Kutch Border.

New Delhi, April 28, 1965.

[Moving a motion in the Lok Sabha on April 28, 1965 for the consideration of the situation arising from the repeated attacks by Pakistan’s armed forces on the Kutch border, the Prime Minister, Shri Lal Bahadur Shastri, made the following speech]

I rise to move that this House may take into consideration the situation which has arisen as a result of repeated and continuing attacks by Pakistan’s armed forces on the Kutch border. There have been serious and frequent engagements. Our men are defending our frontiers with exemplary valour and I should like to tell them that this House and all the people of this country stand solidly behind them, and will consider no sacrifice too great to meet this challenge to our territorial integrity.

The situation which we are facing today is undoubtedly grave. I think the House would like to have a connected account of the events leading up to the situation that exists today.

During the last few months, Pakistan has been resorting periodically to firing and clashes at several points in the Indo–Pakistan border, both in the East as well as in the West. Our men have taken defensive action at all these points effectively, but with great restraint. The clashes on the Kutch border are the latest in the series of incidents which Pakistan has chosen to indulge in. Sometime ago, Pakistani patrols were noticed moving on a track close to the Kutch – Sind borders. On being challenged by our patrols, the Pakistani patrols claimed that they were moving on a track which was the old customs track and within Pakistan territory. It was also noticed that Pakistan had occupied Kanjarkot and established a standing post there. In accordance with paragraph 3 of the Ground Rules, the Deputy Inspector – General of Police, Rajkot Rangers, took up the matter with the Director – General, West Pakistan Rangers and called for a meeting to discuss the situation and to determine the status quo. The Director – General, West Pakistan Rangers did not attend, but sent his local Commander who had a meeting with the DIG, Rajkot Rangers. This, however, led to no result and encounters between our patrols and those of Pakistan continue.

On April 9, in the early hours of the morning, our border post at Sardar was attacked with heavy mortar and MMG fire, followed artillery fire from 25 pounder guns under cover of which two battalions of the Pakistan Regular Army belonging to 51 Infantry Brigade advanced towards the post. Details of this encounter have already been given to the House in the statement by the Home Minister on the 12th April. The fact that this attack was pre–meditated and preplanned was quite clear from the documents captured from the Pakistan prisoners and from their interrogation. The plan of assault on our border post by the Pakistan Army was drawn up in the second week of March and movement of troops began thereafter. Orders for the attack were apparently given on April 7 and the attack was launched in the early hours of April 9.

Therefrom, as the House knows, the Chief of the Army Staff was instructed to take over operational control of the border and army units moved into Vigokot the same evening. The Pakistanin firings and shellings, however, continued to which our armed forces have replied.

Since then Pakistani armed attacks of increasing intensity have been continuing at many points into our territory south of the Kutch – Sind border. On April 24 our company post at Point 84 was shelled in the morning and later attacked by Pakistan infantry supported by tanks and other armour. On April 26, Pakistan armed forces, again with tanks and armoured vehicles, attacked our border post at Biarbet. These attacks are still continuing.

Pakistani armed action is a naked act of aggression. They have attacked Indian posts deep into Indian territory, six to eight miles south of the border – a territory which on Pakistan’s own admission has never been in its possession. Hon’ble Members have no doubt seen the statement of the Pakistan Foreign Minister, Mr. Bhutto, on the 15th April in which he said, defending the Pakistan position: “It must be remembered that the central fact is that this is a dispute over territory which lies roughly north of the 24th Parallel. The dispute has arisen not because the boundary is undemarcated, but because the disputed territory is in India’s adverse possession.” This is what he has said. In other words, Pakistan has chosen to mount an armed attack on territory over which Pakistan has never exercised possession and over which Pakistan in fact admits India’s possession. Pakistan thus stands self – condemned. She has used force for changing the status quo and for vindicating its territorial claims. This is contrary to the United Nations Charter and to the Ground Rules under the Indo – Pakistan Border Agreement of 1960. Pakistan’s behavior in fact amounts to a clear and open aggression on our territory.

As is usual with Pakistan even while discussions have been in progress through diplomatic channels to settle the matter peacefully, Pakistan has been intensifying its attacks and moving in tanks and heavy artillery to attack our posts.

On April 19, the Foreign Secretary handed over a formulation to the High Commissioner which in substance was the same as the Pakistan Foreign Office had suggested to our High Commissioner in Karachi, a few days earlier, namely, that there should be a ceasefire, to be followed by talks at official level with a view to the determination and restoration of the status quo ante, and later a high – level meeting between the two governments to discuss the boundary question. On the morning of the 24th April, the Pakistan High Commissioner handed over an alternative formulation to the Foreign Secretary according to which ceasefire was to be followed by the withdrawal of the armed forces of both India and Pakistan, whether civil or military, from certain areas which they contended were the disputed territory. But earlier the same morning, even before this new formulation had been presented, Pakistan had launched a heavy attack in brigade strength on our post at Point 84, west of Chadbet with heavy artillery.

Throughout this period, Pakistan has been making shifting claims and conflicting statements. At the meeting between the DIG, Rajkot Rangers and Lt. Col. Aftab Ali, Commandant of the Indus Rangers, at Kanjarkot on the 15th February, 1965, they said that they had not occupied Kanjarkot but that they were patrolling the area up to the track south of Kanjarkot which according to him was the old customs track adjoining Surai and Ding. In the Government of Pakistan’s note dated the 1st March, 1965, which was in answer to our protest note of 18th February, 1965, it was stated by Pakistan Government that Kanjarkot fort had not been occupied by the Indus Rangers. Today, not only Pakistan is in occupation of the Kanjarkot fort but it has gone much beyond its claim to patrolling up to the customs track. Pakistan today is laying claim to a large area south of the Kutch – Sind boundary and north of the 24th Parallel.
I want to state clearly and emphatically that we reject and repudiate these claims in their entirety. Pakistan claims that the Rann of Kutch is an inland sea and, therefore, Pakistan is entitled to half of this area. This is completely untenable. The Rann of Kutch is not an inland sea and has never been recognized as such. Long before the creation of Pakistan, the then British Government of India decided formally in 1906, that it was more correct to define the Rann of Kutch as a “marsh” rather than as a “lake” or “inland sea”. That the Rann of Kutch is a “marsh” is indisputable. It has all the flora and fauna of marshland with marsh – grown grass in abundance and other characteristics. What happens is that during the monsoon period because of the strong winds and the high tides in the Arabian Sea, this low – lying area gets flooded by sea water? Furthermore in the monsoon period, it receives fresh water from the swollen rivers. The area, therefore, is flooded from about the middle of May till the end of October. It is mostly dry and partly marshland during the remainder of the year.

Pakistan’s claims also ignore the historical fact that even through the Kutch – Sind Border is undemarcated, it is well – defined on maps and well–recognized in fact. Prior to the partition of India, the Kutch – Sind border separated the then British Indian province of Sind and the Indian State of Kutch. Not being an international boundary then, it did not need to be demarcated. The boundary itself was, however, well – defined in all official maps dating from 1872 to 1943 and even later, and was well–known and well–established. The boundary has also been described in detail in official documents over the last three quarters of a century prior to the partition of India. The boundary shown in the official maps of undivided India prior to August 15, 1947, cannot be questioned.

The Official gazetteer of the Province of Sind published in Karachi in 1907, the Gazetteer of India of the Bombay Presidency published in 1909, and the Imperial Gazetteer of India published by the British Secretary of State for India in 1908 are all categorical about the Rann of Kutch being outside the province of Sind.

In all the documents of the Political Department of the then British Government of India of 1937, 1939 and 1942, defining the political charges of various officers, the Rann of Kutch was invariably shown as falling within the Western India States Agency and Never as falling within the province of Sind. As the House is aware, the entire Western India States Agency became part of India as a result of accession. The totality of evidence leaves no basis whatsoever for any dispute regarding the border between the Sind Province and Kutch.

Ever since these recent intrusions commenced, the Government of India suggested repeatedly to Pakistan that meetings should be held between local officials and also talks be held at a higher level. For instance, we suggested to the Pakistan Government that the Surveyors – General of the two countries should meet to discuss the problem of demarcation. Pakistan refused. We reminded Pakistan of the Ground Rules and the desirability of a meeting between the local Commanders for the restoration of the status quo. We also suggested in our note of 18th February that there should be a meeting between the representatives of the two Governments at whatever level considered appropriate by Pakistan and repeated this suggestion later more than once. Despite these endeavour’s, there was no proper response from Pakistan.

On 13th April 1965, the Pakistan Government made a three step proposal suggesting (i) ceasefire, (ii) an inter – governmental meeting to determine what was the status quo which should be restored; and (iii) a higher level meeting. The Government of India authorized their High Commissioner the very next day, i.e. on 14th April, to convey the acceptance of these proposals. It is to be deeply regretted that the Government of Pakistan later went back on their old proposals.

On 19th April, the Government of India repeated that the proposal for ceasefire should be accepted forthwith, but instead of accepting this proposal, the Government of Pakistan put forward an entirely new formula on the 23rd April which, as I have already mentioned, required the withdrawal of Indian forces from what Pakistan chooses to call unilaterally a disputed territory but which in fact indisputably in this demand. This attitude on their part means a virtual rejection of all our efforts to wean them away from warlike postures.

Sir, I have made this rather long narrative in order to give the House a complete picture of the false nature of Pakistan’s claims, its sinister designs and the naked and reckless use of force by Pakistan against us.

It is apparent that one of the prime reasons of Pakistan’s irrational behavior is the obsessive hatred against India which Pakistani leaders, Pakistani pres and communal fanatics in Pakistan have worked into their system over the past two decades.

The events which I have just described have caused us all the gravest concern. Ever since the attainment of Independence, India has stood for peace, international amity and goodwill. India has a living and vital stake in peace because we want to concentrate attention on improving the living standards of millions of our people. In the utilization of our limited resources, we have always given primacy to plans and projects for economic development. It should therefore, be obvious to anyone who is prepared to look at things objectively that India can possibly have no interest in provoking border incidents or in building up an atmosphere of strife.

However, our neighbours, both China and Pakistan, have chosen to adopt an attitude of aggressive hostility towards India. Lately they seem to have joined hands to act in concert against India.
In these circumstances, the duty of Government is quite clear and this duty will be discharged fully and effectively. The entire resources of the country in men and material will be employed to defend our frontiers and to preserve our territorial integrity. I know that each one of our 450 million people of India is today prepared to make any sacrifice in defence of the motherland. We will prefer to live in poverty for as long as necessary but we will not allow our freedom to be subverted.

The specific question which we have to consider and, by this, I mean not only the Government but this House and indeed, the whole country is what course we should now pursue. Which path do we take? We are prepared to take the path of peace but we cannot follow it alone. Pakistan must decide to give up its warlike activities. If it does, I see no reason why the simple fact of determining what was the actual boundary between the erstwhile Province of Sind and the State of Kutch and what is the boundary between India and Pakistan, cannot be settled across the table. It need not even be a negotiating table. It is more a question of finding out the facts, rather than of negotiating a settlement. It can be done by experts on both sides. All this is possible provided there is an immediate cessation of hostilities and restoration of the status quo ante.

I should like to tell the House that on the Kutch Border Pakistan has many advantages. What is more, our soldiers are occupying posts in areas which will soon be submerged in water and from where they will, therefore, necessarily have to withdraw. If Pakistan continues to discard reason and persists in its aggressive activities, our Army will defend the country and it will decide its own strategy and the employment of its manpower and equipment in the manner which it deems best. Countries who are friendly to us have urged that a ceasefire should be agreed to as soon as possible. We are ready to respond to these appeals. But, at the same time, I must tell the House that we have also to be ready for the alternative.

Mr. Speaker, I have uttered these words after the most serious thought and with full consciousness of my responsibilities. This is one of the most fateful moments of our times. I realize that both India and Pakistan stand poised at the cross – roads of history. The path of reason and sanity, of peace and harmony, is still open. Even while our police and later our Army have been defending our soil with commendable courage in the face of heavy odds, the path to peace has not been blocked. But it is a path on which we cannot walk alone. It takes two to make friendship and peace.

It is my earnest hope that the point of no return will not be reached and that Pakistan will still agree to ceasefire in accordance with its own proposals of April 13, which Indian had accepted.
It is my earnest hope that the point of no return will not be reached and that Pakistan will still agree to ceasefire in accordance with its own proposals of April 13, which Indian had accepted.

I know at this hour every Indian is asking himself only one question: What can he do for his country and how can he participate in the nation’s endeavour to defend our freedom and territorial integrity. To them and to all our people, I want to address this appeal: wherever you are and whatever your vocation, you should work with true dedication. Bring out the best in you and serve the country selflessly. The supreme need of the hour is national unity – unity not of the word but of the heart. All Indians, of whatever faith or profession, have to stand solidly together and prepare themselves for hardships and sacrifices. Let us give no quarter to any ideas that tends to divide us. Let us all work together with a new sense of national discipline and with an inspired feeling of dedication to the cause of country’s freedom and integrity. And I would close by asking this august House to give its wholehearted and mighty support to the Government at this momentous hour.

British and American envoys are pursuing their discussions with BHUTTO this evening and MORRICE JAMES will go back to Pindi tomorrow for further processing. Presumably their respective envoys in Delhi are keeping you informed. I have not received any report from you on their discussion in Delhi but so far as I can gather here the Pakistanis are still refusing modifications of their demand for withdrawal of troops a precondition to cease fire on the ground that this is the only way to ensure that India acknowledges what the dispute is about and does not consolidate herself in the “Disputed” territory as she has done in Kashmir etc. Pakistan is doubtless seeking to derive the maximum gain from her tactical advantage and will continue to be obdurate, but in so far as her opposition to Wilson’s proposals is based on misgivings about our alleged going back on the scope of the dispute we can remove these suspicions or at any rate put Pakistan in the wrong, by clarifying in the very formulation of the proposals that the scope of negotiations will remain as it has always been so far. The basis for doing this lies in the conclusions reached after the 1960 border conference. Pakistanis have themselves quoted the relevant para of the agreed decisions of 11th January 1960 in the note they gave us on the 17th of April. So we can say that it represents their own definition of the scope of talks. From our point of view the relevant para of joint communiqué of 11th January 1960 is somewhat better than the phrasing of the agreed decisions of that date, but either can be used.

2. It is for consideration whether further processing of proposals for a ceasefire etc. should be left to the good offices of our western friends or whether it would be appropriate for us to give Pakistanis another concrete proposal incorporating the clarifications they profess to want. If you agree to our taking an initiative ourselves we could phrase the formula as follows:

“At the conclusion of the ministerial conference on the India – West Pakistan border, the Government of India and Pakistan announced in the communiqué issued on 11th January 1960 that they had ‘agreed to collect further data in respect of the dispute regarding the Kutch – Sind boundary and discussions will be held later with a view to arriving at a settlement of this dispute’. To enable such a settlement to be reached as soon as possible the two Governments agree that the situation of armed conflict which has developed in the Sind – Kutch border area should immediately be resolved. They have therefore agreed that:

(a) There should be a ceasefire effective from …….

(b) Immediately thereafter the two Governments will hold talks to determine and restore the status quo ante on the following basis:

(i) The armed forces of both sides will withdraw to the positions they respectively held on 1st January 1965.

(ii) Without prejudice to the de jure position, the de facto jurisdiction exercised by the civil authorities, including police, as of 1st January
1965 will be restored in the spirit of the Prime Ministers’ Joint Communiqué of the 12th September 1958.

(c) hereafter there should be high level meeting to settle the dispute as envisaged in the joint communiqué of 11th January 1960."

3. There are two points to note about this:

(i) The Pakistanis cannot reasonably expect us to agree to any new and broader definition than in the past. Their present insistence on our withdrawal from the so called disputed area and specific acknowledgement that it has been in dispute is going beyond a restoration of the status quo and amounts to conqueror’s terms. The recalling of the 1960 terminology should satisfy them about the scope of negotiations if they are genuinely concerned about this. The formula would however remain consonant with the stand we have been taking throughout the present crisis.

(ii) Difficulty will be about the restoration of civil and police jurisdiction referred to in sub para b (ii) of the formulation. It would mean Pakistan disbanding her two posts around Kanjarkot, whereas we will have to disband our posts at Sardar Vigokot and Karim Shahi which would leave us only Chad Bet in the northern Rann. Moreover the question of the right to patrol as before will also be complicated. Pakistan’s claim to have patrolled the track around Kanjarkot will conflict with our right to patrol right up to the frontier as we have said we have always been doing. These aspects will need careful handling.

4. It is difficult to say that Pakistan in her present mood would accept any such formulation. However if you agree that we should present something on these lines, you might consider whether it would be appropriate for me to give and discuss it with President AYUB himself who will be in Karachi on Monday. BHUTTO is in any case leaving the country today and it is impossible to do any business with the Foreign Office. It is conceivable that a frank discussion with the President might prove helpful. Alternatively we could simply give the proposed formula through normal diplomatic channels.

Ambassador from Foreign Secretary.

Cabot Lodge called on Prime Minister on 30th evening. Prime Minister expressed grave concern regarding Pakistan’s actions on Kutch border. He said he hoped the conflict would not escalate. Pakistan seemed in a belligerent mood. India had accepted Pakistan’s proposals of 13th April for ceasefire on basis of status quo ante. Pakistan had gone back on these proposals. India had now accepted British ceasefire proposals. Prime Minister, however, stated that he shuddered to think what would happen if a major conflict developed. Apart from grave economic and human consequences the problem of the minorities, both within India and Pakistan, had to be considered. Prime Minister further stated that neither the Parliament nor the country would tolerate an Indian withdrawal from Kutch without Pakistan having accepted ceasefire on basis of status quo ante. He stated that he had informed Parliament that if Pakistan persisted he would have to leave it to the army “to defend the country and it will decide its own strategy”.

2. The Prime Minister made the following other points:

1) Prime Minister made reference to Pakistan’s absurd propaganda that we first attacked their posts on the border. Prime Minister said if we wanted to attack Pakistan surely we would not have selected the impossible terrain of the Rann of Kutch.

2) Now Pakistan was laying claims to all territory north of the 24th Parallel which amounted to some 3500 square miles. This was fantastic claim.

3. Cabot Lodge stated that he would convey what the Prime Minister had stated to President Johnson. Chester Bowles expressed the hope that the Prime Minister would give to U.S. time to settle the question. He said he hoped “time would not run out and no precipitate action be taken as he was quite sure, given time the U.S. would succeed in its endeavors to bring about ceasefire”.

4. Lodge had earlier called on my colleagues and myself. We had explained to him with the aid of large scale map that the Kanjarkot area had been precisely defined on the map and agreement had been reached between the Sind Government and the Kutch Durbar in 1914. There was an area to the east which had not been demarcated.

5. Lodge explained to Prime Minister the United States’ policies in Vietnam. A separate report will follow on this subject.

C.S. Jha from Parthasarthy.

I am grateful for L.K. JHA’s telegram No. PRIMIN 21091 30th April which reached me only this morning. I had talk with MORRICE JAMES yesterday soon after his return. JAMES said that the “lull” in the fight was a welcome respite and gave sometime in which he could work on the Pakistanis – and us – to process an acceptable formula. He seemed to feel however by that his task was very difficult and needed painstaking negotiations to achieve result.

2. You would be receiving my telegram No. 308 1st May in which I have suggested a formula by which we ourselves should present to the President AYUB KHAN. I feel strongly that we should keep the diplomatic initiative in our hands and not allow our western friends to take charge of the negotiations as they are likely to lead us gently on the unwelcome compromises. In view of this misgiving that I have I urge that we should not countenance suggestion made by FREEMAN and MORRICE JAMES in para 4, 5 and 6 of your telegram for introducing British "expert" or remitting the matter to the High Commissioners in London.

3. In regard to para 1 (c) of L.K. JHA's telegram our Western friends seem to be considering the possibility of arbitration on the ground that in the present atmosphere bilateral negotiations even at the ministerial level envisaged in the SHEIKH – SWARAN SINGH communiqué of 11th January 1960 might not yield any results and that the Pakistanis have misgivings on this score. You will recall that para eight of the earlier SHEIKH – SWARAN SINGH agreed decisions of 23rd October 1959 provide for an impartial tribunal to resolve border disputes but para 6 of the joint communiqué issued on 24th October 1959 provides reference of disputes to the impartial tribunal if these are "not settled by negotiation". I feel that our stand should be that there is provision in previous agreements for binding decisions by impartial tribunals in the event of failure by two parties to agree through negotiations. Either side is therefore entitled to invoke these provisions after repeat after possibilities of bilateral negotiations provided in the same agreements are exhausted.

4. I had mentioned in my telegram of 1st May the difficulties we might have in negotiating with Pakistan for the retention of civilian posts in the Rann particularly in regard to Chad Bet. Pakistan is now maintaining that Chad Bet was under their administration until forcibly occupied by us in 1956. BHUTTO who has long been arguing this from his personal experience “as a boy” asserted it in his statement of 28th April and President AYUB KHAN repeated it in his broadcast last night. I am not aware whether they ever made such a claim during the 1960 Conference. In any case even after the Chad Bet incident of 1956 the Pakistanis agreed both in the penultimate paragraph of Prime Ministers’ joint communiqué of 12th September 1958 and in Paragraph 9 of the 1960 Ground Rules that the status quo which means the situation prevailing at the time of these agreements should be maintained. This is itself evidence that their present demands for consequent withdrawal of even civil and police posts from the so – called “disputed” area are totally invalid.

Mr. Chairman, Sir,

I beg to move that the situation arising out of the repeated and continuing attacks by the armed forces of Pakistan on the Kutch border be taken into consideration.

I know how anxious the Hon'ble Members must be to know the facts of the situation and the policy of Government in regard to the grave developments which have taken place. First of all, I would like to report to the House that during the last two or three days, there has been no major engagement on the Kutch border and that the aggressive armed forces of Pakistan have not been able to make any further inroads on our territory. Secondly, during the clashes which took place, heavy losses were inflicted on the intruders. The morale of our armed forces is very high. I know that this House and the people of India stand behind them, united in the determination that the territorial integrity of India must be preserved fully and completely.

With your permission, Sir, I would like to state briefly the facts of the situation.

The Kutch - Sind border is a well-defined, well-known and well-established border which is clearly marked in the various editions of the Survey of India maps ever since 1871. A large part of the boundary is not demarcated on the ground.

This is so, however, because there was no disputed boundary between the province of Sind and the Kutch Darbar; and it was not customary to demarcate with pillars boundaries between provinces and States of British India as they were not international boundaries.

On the 15th August, 1947, Pakistan was carved out of India as an independent State. Under the Independence Act, the territories of Pakistan were enumerated and these included the province of Sind. The boundary between Sind and Kutch, thus, became an international boundary. Pakistan is precluded from claiming any more territory than was included in the province of Sind on the 15th August, 1947. No part of the territory south of the Kutch - Sind border which is shown in the map as situated north of Kanjarkot which is thus clearly Indian territory, could, conceivably, be a part of Pakistan. In fact, this area was under the jurisdiction and authority of the Ruler of Kutch which had extended at all times both in law and in fact right up to the border between Sind and Kutch as shown in the Survey of India maps of 1871, 1886, 1898, 1943 and 1946 which was the last map before the date of independence.

The boundary between Kutch and Sind has also been described in detail in other official documents over the last three quarters of a century prior to the partition of India. The Official Gazetteer of Sind published in Karachi in 1907, the Gazetteer of India of the Bombay Presidency published in 1909 and the Imperial Gazetteer of India published by the British Secretary of State for India in 1908, are all categorical about the Rann of Kutch being outside the Province of Sind. In all the documents of the Political Department of the then British Government of India in 1937, 1939 and 1942, defining the political charges of the various officials, the Rann of Kutch was invariably shown as falling within the Western India States Agency and never as falling within the province of Sind. As the House is aware, the entire Western India States Agency became part of India as a result of accession. The position is so clear that in the light of this, the attack on the Kutch border is a clear case of aggression by Pakistan. This aggression also fits into the pattern of Pakistan's aggressive behavior during the last few months. Pakistan has been resorting frequently to firing and clashes at several points on the Indo-Pakistan border, both in the East and in the West. She has shown an utter lack of responsibility and displayed amazing recklessness.

A few days ago, Prime Minister Wilson sent a message to me and I presume a similar message to President Ayub Khan, making certain proposals in the framework of which a cease-fire could be brought about. The Prime Minister of U.K. is still pursuing his efforts and, therefore, for obvious reasons, I am unable to say much more about this matter at this stage. I can, however, assure the House that in the exchanges I have had with Mr. Wilson and in any further exchanges, we shall not depart from the position that along with cease-fire there must be a restoration of the status quo ante.

Mr. Chairman, the Indian Government and the Indian people have no ill-will against the people of Pakistan. We wish them well and we would be happy to see them progress on the road to prosperity. We are aware that their prosperity as well as the prosperity of the people of India, of the 600 million people who inhabit this sub-continent, depends upon the preservation of peace. It is for this reason that we have adhered fervently to the path of peace all these years. A war in the Indian sub-continent may well undo the massive efforts which have been made in both countries to secure an improvement in the living standards of our people. The march in this direction has only just begun and there is a long way yet to go. But President Ayub has talked of a total war between India and Pakistan. We on our part have been greatly restrained not because we are unprepared to meet President Ayub's challenge but because we feel that reason and sanity should prevail over aggression and bellicosity. President Ayub seems to suggest that whereas his country has the right to commit aggression on Indian territories at will and at a point of its own choice, India must not take effective counter-measures. This thesis is totally unacceptable to us. The pattern of Pakistani activity is this: First raise a claim to neighbour's territory; suddenly mount an attack taking the neighbor by surprise; launch an ingenious propaganda campaign to suggest that the action is only of a defensive character. I do want to urge President Ayub to think a little more carefully of the consequences of the line of action that he has chosen to pursue. So far the Pakistani aggression on the Kutch border has been met only by local defensive action to protect our territories. From the Indian side there have been no counter - measures and the aggression has, therefore, been a totally one-sided affair. We have restrained ourselves, but if the Government of Pakistan persists in its present aggressive posture, the Government of India will be left with no alternative except to think how best to defend the territorial integrity of the motherland.

Mr. Chairman, let me once again make the position of the Government of India perfectly clear. We will have no objection to ordering a cease - fire on the basis of a simultaneous agreement for the restoration of status quo ante. After the status quo ante has been restored, we will be willing to sit together with the representatives of Pakistan to demarcate the boundary in accordance with the well-settled and well-established dividing line between the erstwhile Province of Sind and the State of Kutch. At the same time, I must reiterate clearly and emphatically that the Government of India do not recognize that there is any territorial dispute about the Rann of Kutch. Let me also make it clear that the threat of total war held out by President Ayub will not deter us from performing our rightful duties. No Government in the world would be worth its name if it allows its own territories to be annexed by force by an aggressive neighbour. The Government of India know their responsibilities in the present situation and they are determined to discharge them most effectively.

Among the people there must be a real sense of unity. WE must give no quarter to the rumours that are sought to be circulated by anti social elements. I am greatly strengthened by the knowledge that the morale of our people is high and that every Indian today is prepared to make any sacrifice for defending the territorial integrity of India.

The Rann of Kutch has been and continues to be India’s territory. It has been in our possession according to Pakistan itself though Mr. Bhutto characteristically chooses to call it adverse possession. Pakistan now seeks to annex this territory by force. This we shall not allow. No Government in the world would allow that. We have acted with the greatest restraint so far but the sands of time are running out.

I shall say no more on this difficult situation. This is a testing time for our country and our people. I would say to our people: be united, feel the pride of belonging to a great nation, carry out your tasks with true dedication. Take no notice of the false Pakistani propaganda. Let us have faith in ourselves and in the great destiny of our country. I would now close by asking the House to declare that we all stand together united in defending our motherland.
2332. Statement carried by the Chinese newsagency Hsinhua on Indo–Pakistan border conflict.

Peking, May 4, 1965.

The Hsinhua News Agency is authorized to make the following statement on Indian–Government’s slander against China in connection with the Indo–Pakistan border conflict.

1. India has recently provoked armed conflict in the Rann of Kutch on the Indo–Pakistan border in an attempt to forcibly occupy this disputed territory by armed attack. Pakistan took self–defence measures and suggested that both sides effect ceasefire persisting in settling the border dispute through peaceful negotiations. However, the Indian Government went so far as to alert three services and busily deploying troops to the Rann. The Indian Navy carries out exercises in sea off the area. The Indian side even threatened that the military action against Pakistan would not be confined to the Rann alone and India was free to choose the time and place of attack. Meanwhile, the Indian Prime Minister, Shastri and other ranking Indian officials blatantly declared the China colluded with Pakistan in taking aggressive and hostile attitude towards India and the present conflict was engineered by China, behind the scenes. News bulletins distributed by the Indian diplomatic mission in other countries also spread the lie that China’s sabre is in Pakistan’s sheath, etc. Such lies and slanders by the Indian Government are sheer fabrication and entirely groundless.

2. It is common knowledge that the Indo–Pakistan border in the Rann of Kutch has never been delimited. The area is a disputed territory, left behind by history. The Indo–Pakistan agreement on West Pakistan–India border disputes signed by the two sides in New Delhi on January 11, 1960, clearly stipulates that the Rann is one of the disputed territories on the Indo–Pakistan border and the two countries agree to study relevant material and hold discussions later with a view to arriving at the settlement. However, the Indian Government has gone back on the agreement and claimed that the area is Indian territory and there is no dispute over it. It has sent troops to occupy the area and carried out armed provocation against Pakistan. This is the crux of the present Indo–Pakistan border conflict. Such action on the part of the Indian Government once again shows up India’s big nation chauvinism and expansionism. The position of the Indian Government on the border disputed with the neighbouring countries has always been truculent and unreasonable and one of rejecting peaceful negotiations. The logic of the Indian Government is ‘my territory is mine, yours is also mine, places I occupy are mine and those I want to occupy are also mine’.
In the prolonged Sino – Indian border disputes and repeated Sino – Indian border conflicts the Chinese Government has long had experience of the big nation chauvinist and expansionist logic of the Indian ruling circles. The Chinese Government and people fully sympathies with and support the solemn and just stand of Pakistan Government in opposing the Indian policy of military expansion and advocating settlement of the border disputes through peaceful negotiations.

3. The Indian reactionaries have, for years made use of the Sino – Indian border dispute and flaunted anti – China banner to solicit money and guns from U.S. imperialism and its followers, to engage in military expansions on all points of compass and to intensify suppression of democratic forces at home. The U.S. imperialism and its followers, on their part, have energetically supported the Indian reactionaries, by giving them money and guns to encourage India’s arms expansion and war preparations. They have done so not only to make India a pawn in anti China crusade but to back India in bullying its neighbouring countries so as to carry out their evil schemes of making Asians fight Asians and disrupting Afro – Asian solidarity. Events show that India’s neighbours have often been subjected to its bullying and interference. This perverse line of action followed by the Indian Government has made itself more isolated than ever before in the world and intensely hated by its own people. Yet, it still hypocritically tries to present itself as peaceful, neutral, and non – aligned. This can deceive no one. Now the Indian Government has provoked border conflict with Pakistan and tries to vilify China with a view to stirring up tension and distracting attention of its people. It will never succeed in this.

4. The Chinese Government strongly condemns the big nation chauvinist and expansionist policy of the Indian Government. We would like to advise the Indian Government to give primary consideration to the interests of the Indian people and to the Afro – Asian solidarity and thereby settle it’s disputed with neighbouring countries, through peaceful negotiations. It instead, it insists on having its own way and playing with fire and widens armed conflict it will certainly come to no good end.
The Government of India has seen the statement of May 4 issued by the New China News Agency on behalf of the Chinese Government in support of Pakistan’s aggression against India in the Rann of Kutch.

It is significant that this statement is more prompt and vehement than even the innumerable utterances of the Chinese Government on the grave situation in Vietnam. This is a demonstration of the aggressive partnership between the Chinese and Pakistan Governments against India. The Chinese statement contains a threat against India when it says that if armed conflict is widened “the Indian Government will definitely come to no good end.” This is nothing but an open incitement to Pakistan to persist in its aggressive occupation of Indian territory in the Rann of Kutch under the umbrella of a Chinese military threat against India and is further evidence of China’s collusion with Pakistan against India.

The Chinese and Pakistan Governments entertain a common hatred and a common hostility against India. Both have committed aggression against India in Kashmir; both have laid claims against Indian territory and grabbed a portion of it illegally; and both have constantly applied military, political and propaganda pressure against India in order to make India submit to their aggressive demands. It is, therefore, not surprising that the Chinese Government has come out with this statement supporting Pakistan in its aggression in the Rann of Kutch just as the Pakistan Government has come out in support of Chinese aggression against India.

The boundary between India and Pakistan in the Rann of Kutch is a well-established and delimited boundary. What Pakistan has tried is to assert its fantastic claim by use of force. The whole world knows that it’s Pakistan who launched an attack in the Rann, using considerable military force with tanks and heavy artillery, and that India had to send troops there purely in self-defense.

The world also knows that it is Pakistan who has used American tanks to fight Indian troops in this area – tanks which it has got under a military agreement with the United States and under the SEATO and CENTO pacts of which Pakistan is a founder-member and evidently China approves of this. To ignore these facts and to accuse India of fighting its neighbors with “U.S. imperialist arms” proves nothing but utter opportunism and cynicism of the Chinese Government in the field of international relations.
The Chinese Government has alleged that India is carrying out the “U.S. scheme of making Asians fight Asians and disrupting the Afro – Asian solidarity.” This is a mantle which falls fittingly on China and Pakistan who are fellow – aggressors against India. In committing aggression against India and in encouraging Pakistan to commit aggression against India it is the Chinese Government that is disrupting Afro – Asian solidarity and making Asians fight Asians. While paying lip service to Asian – African unity and the Bandung principles, the rulers of China are doing everything possible to subvert these principles.

In the statement issued by the New China News Agency, the Chinese Government had the presumption to advise the Government of India to give consideration to the interests of the Indian people and “settle its disputes with neighboring countries through peaceful negotiations.” The only two neighboring countries who have resorted to military action against India in defiance of international law and good neighbourly relations and refused to settle problems through peaceful negotiations are China and Pakistan. The Chinese Government’s “advice” should, therefore, have been addressed to itself and to the Government of Pakistan.

The world has not forgotten that the Chinese Government has suppressed by massive force the autonomy of Tibet and the elementary rights of the Tibetan people, has invaded India and is occupying large areas of its territory and is interfering in the internal affairs of sovereign states and indulging in subversive activities aimed at overthrowing the lawful governments of such states in Asia as well as in Africa.

The Chinese Government’s stand on Pakistani aggression in the Rann of Kutch is a reflection of its familiar technique of trying to change the established frontiers of states through the use of military force. This is contrary to the principles of peaceful coexistence and the principles of Bandung and the declaration of the Cairo conference of non – aligned nations. The people of Asia and Africa can see that China is unashamedly fomenting trouble and conflict in Asia and Africa. China has emerged as the greatest disruptive force in Asia, a chauvinistic and imperialist power which has made a mockery of the principles of peaceful coexistence and is trying to bully and intimidate its neighbours and other Asian and African countries.

Border incidents have occurred on the section of the frontier between India and Pakistan in the area of Rann of Kutch, developing into an armed conflict. As reported by the foreign Press, the formal cause of the conflict was the different interpretation by India and Pakistan of the position of the frontier in the uninhabited district of Rann of Kutch. Large military units have now been concentrated in the area by both sides, with the result that the situation there has become tense.

It is not hard to understand, however, that a military solution of the conflict between India and Pakistan would be contrary to the interests of both states. The events in the Rann of Kutch area add to the tension in the relations between the two countries: their development, far from leading to a solution of the problem, is increasingly aggravating it. If the conflict is not extinguished, its continuing development will drain the forces of India and Pakistan and can lead to a great loss of life, endangering peace in Asia.

Only the imperialist circles of the Western powers are interested in such a development of events. As a rule these circles either come out as the direct instigators of military conflicts or set states at loggerheads by acting through others. They strive to create a tense situation in various parts of the world so as to hinder the development of states that have recently won independence, to suppress the national – liberation movement of the peoples.

Presumably, the need for a peaceful settlement of the Indo–Pakistani border conflicts is realized also by the leaders of both countries. The Head of the Government of India – a country, whose policy of non- – alignment finds broad international recognition – Lal Bahadur Shastri, as far back as April 16 stated that India was ready ‘to hold talks with Pakistan in as much as it always seeks to settle international conflicts by peaceful means’. Speaking in the Parliament of India on April 28 in connection with the event in the Kutch area, Prime Minister Shastri said: ‘We are prepared to go along the road of peace but we cannot go alone. Pakistan must decide to renounce military actions.’

For his part the President of Pakistan Mohammed Ayub Khan stated on April 27 that Pakistan ‘seeks to settle its differences peacefullly by negotiations’ and that ‘Kutch – the area of the latest incident – is not fit for life and not worth quarrelling about’; on May 1, he said, that Pakistan was ready ‘to sit at a conference table and settle the conflict peacefully.’
Tass has learned that Soviet official circles display an understanding of these statements. Questions of relations between two states, just as international problems involving the interests of many states, cannot now be solved with the help of arms. Proceeding from this position, the above–mentioned circles express hope that the Governments of India and Pakistan will display the necessary restraint and patience, will find ways of settling the conflict by peaceful means. It is sincerely hoped in the Soviet Union that the differences between India and Pakistan will be settled by them by way of direct talks with due consideration for the interests of both sides. Not only the peoples of India and Pakistan but also the cause of universal peace will stand to gain from such a settlement.

Record of the call by the United Kingdom High Commissioner on Foreign Secretary C. S. Jha and Cabinet Secretary Dharma Vira.
New Delhi, May 17, 1965.

No. 4118 – FS/65.

Ministry of External Affairs

The U.K. High Commissioner saw me this afternoon at 4.30 p.m. The Cabinet Secretary, Shri Dharma Vira, was also present.

2. With reference to the Cabinet Secretary’s observation on the 15th, when he and C.S. last saw the U.K. High Commissioner, namely, that the Ministers were getting a little tired at this interminable consultations and drafts and counter drafts, the High Commissioner had reported to London and asked whether a stage had not come when the parties should talk directly and try to iron out their differences. This could be in London or elsewhere as agreed upon. The High Commissioner went on to say that he had received a reply from London to the effect that the U.K. Prime Minister felt that for the time being he should persevere with his efforts. Later, when he felt that there was no possibility of reaching agreement on certain points, he might either publish his own formulation of what should be a fair basis of agreement or request the two Governments to have talks in order to iron out their differences. Asked whether we would like the U.K. Government to continue their efforts, the Cabinet Secretary and I said that we were appreciative of the efforts being made by the U.K. Prime Minister and the difficulty experienced by him in getting Pakistan to agree to his draft formulations, and that there was no suggestion on the part of our Government that the U.K. Prime Minister should give up his attempts.

3. Coming down to the draft handed by the U.K. High Commissioner on the 15th May at 6.00 p.m. (which was considered by the Emergency Committee of the Cabinet this morning), I made the oral comments as indicated in the paper below (not available). A copy of this was given to U.K. High Commissioner making it clear that we were not handing any formal paper but were only letting him have our oral comments with precision. The High Commissioner said that he fully understood this.

Record of the Call by the United Kingdom High Commissioner on Foreign Secretary C. S. Jha and Cabinet Secretary Dharma Vira.

New Delhi, May 19, 1965,

Ministry of External Affairs

The U.K. High Commissioner called on Cabinet Secretary and myself this evening at 6.45 p.m. at his request.

2. He said he had not come to deliver any paper or make any fresh proposals; he had only come to apprise us orally of certain difficulties that had arisen subsequent to our oral communication to them of 17th May. (Please see my note of 17.5.65 submitted to members of E.C.C.:Emergency Committee of cabinet). The High Commissioner said that the difficulty had arisen because Pakistan had a different view of what the status quo was prior to 1st January 1965 in regard to patrolling in the border area, from what had been put down in the British paper given to us on the 12th May. It would be recalled that in this paper the status quo regarding patrolling had been set down as follows:-

Clause 2.

(iv) Indian police may patrol on the track from Chhad Bet westwards along the northern edge of the Rann of Kutch to the River Nara;

(v) Pakistan police may patrol on the track along the northern edge of the Rann from Ding to Surai.

At the time that the proposal of the 12th May had been handed to the Pakistanis, the latter, according to the High Commissioner, had stated that they would comment on these two points after consulting their border police. Pakistan had now come forward with its version of the status quo as follows:-

"According to Pakistanis, Clause 2(IV) is incorrect and Clause 2(V) gives an incomplete picture.

(2) Actual position stated to have been as regards (IV) that Indian police patrolled from Karimshahi to the North East up to a point six thousand yards south of Pakistani post Vingoor; then eastwards to Gulu Talao (which is located six thousand yards South of old Customs track) and then South to Chhad Bet."
(3) Actual position stated to have been as regards sub para (B) that Pakistani police patrolled on track from Ding to Surai, and then to a point about seven thousand yards South of Rahim Ki Bazar (and sometimes down to Vigokot)."

3. The U.K. High Commissioner felt that this was so different from what they (the British) had formulated according to the best information that they had in London, in their paper of the 12th May, that they wished to consult us as to how we would like them to proceed. In this regard they have made certain suggestions which are enumerated in paragraph 4 of the Summary of oral communication which the High Commissioner handed to me this evening.

4. We asked the High Commissioner whether he could say that Pakistanis would accept the formulation of the 15th May in regard to paragraph 2(iv). We also asked him whether the Pakistanis had accepted the rest of the proposals made in the British paper of the 15th May. The High Commissioner promised to check up and give us an answer to these queries tomorrow morning.

5. In the course of talks, the High Commissioner also gave the following clarifications:

(i) The oral communication made by him to us was under instructions from London.

(ii) These instructions had been received after the High Commissioner had communicated our comments of the 17th May to them.

(iii) It was in anticipation of the kind of difficulty that had now arisen in regard to status quo concerning police patrolling, that they had offered to make the good offices of a British General available in their original proposals of 4th May. When we said that the services of third party were not necessary, they tried to spell out the status quo in terms of paragraph 2(iv) and (v) of the paper of the 12th May. But once they did that, they have come up against the Pakistan version which he appreciated was not likely to be acceptable to us.

6. The High Commissioner said that we could take our time over this matter and give him our considered views later.

7. The Summary of the oral communication made by the High Commissioner, the Pakistan view of status quo, and relevant extracts from the British proposal of 4th, 12th and 15th May, which were handed by the High Commissioner, are attached.

SUMMARY OF ORAL COMMUNICATION ADDRESSED BY BRITISH HIGH COMMISSIONER TO FOREIGN SECRETARY 19 MAY, 1965.

1. Our proposals for status quo of 4 May (attached) were unprompted by either party. We foresaw difficulties of definition at that time hence our offer of British senior officer to assist.

2. Indian Government thought this offer unnecessary. Therefore our new proposal, Article 2 (i); (iv) and (v) of 12 May (attached). This was also unprompted and based on best information available to London about status quo.

3. Pakistanis after consultation with local police officials eventually objected to formulation of 12 May and defined the position as in attached note. Hence our reformulation of 15 May.

4. Thus there now seem to be three alternatives.
   (a) A general article such as was originally put forward on 4 May and re–formulated in our proposals of 15 May.
   (b) The two parties could try to settle now what were the actual routes of patrols. This would mean considerable delay in conclusion of agreement.
(c) We could stick to Article 2 (iv) as formulated in proposals of 15 May and state in confidential letter that although patrols on both sides have the right to undertake the patrolling they were doing before 31 December, 1964 never the less in order to avoid clashes during the period during which the border was being determined by the process set out in the agreement patrols on the Pakistani side would be limited to the Ding – Surai track and on the Indian side to the area between Karimshahi and Chhad Bet.

5. We should like advice as to how you would like us to proceed. We have no certainty whether the Pakistanis can be persuaded to accept (c) above.

6. We have been thinking about possible methods of signing agreement and confidential exchange of letters in due course. Following procedure would seem sensible to us and would, we believe, be acceptable to Pakistanis:

Signature to take place at either Ministerial or Secretary level.

Signatories not to meet in one place.

Precise time and date of signing to be agreed in advance and Indian and Pakistan representatives in Delhi and Rawalpindi respectively to sign three copies of each document in presence of respective British High Commissioner, copies subsequently provided to the other parties.

*******

PAKISTAN VIEW

According to Pakistanis, Clause 2 (IV) is incorrect and Clause 2 (V) gives an incomplete picture.

2. Actual position stated to have been as regards (IV) that Indian police patrolled from Karimshahi to the North East up to a point six thousand yards south of Pakistani post Vingoor; then eastwards to Gulu Talao (which is located six thousand yards South of old Customs Track) and then South to Chhad Bet.

3. Actual position stated to have been as regards sub para (V) that Pakistani police patrolled on track from Ding to Surai, and then to a point about seven thousand yards South of Rahim Ki Bazar (and sometimes down to Vigokot).

Letter from High Commissioner in Pakistan G. Pathasarathi to Secretary to Prime Minister L. K. Jha.

High Commission for India
Karachi

No. HC/TS/45/65.  6th June, 1965

My dear L.K.,

In continuation of the telegram I sent from Rawalpindi yesterday, I enclose the record of my meeting with the President. As you will notice, we went over familiar points but I thought you should have full version, rather than a summary of the substance, so that you can judge for yourself the proper significance of what was said, or not said. I should add that, to the extent that mood and manner have their own significance, my personal impression was that the President was his customary confident self, and quite unemotional, but both he and Bhutto seemed a little drawn; and it might not be fanciful to sense that they had been under strain. The President talked cordially and unconcernedly but it was also noticeable that he did not seem particularly anxious to discuss Indo-Pakistani relations in general, and waited for me to start even the specific discussion on the present crisis. Too much need not be read into these touches of atmosphere, but perhaps I should record that at one point when I had occasion to refer to the deterioration of relations since last autumn, I mentioned that this was particularly unfortunate since it followed the Prime Minister’s meeting with the President in October last year, which Shastriji had thought was a good meeting and which he had hoped might lead on to more fruitful exchanges; there was no positive reaction from Ayub.

2. However, we have to consider facts rather than feelings. The main point that emerged from the meeting with Ayub was that, as regards the restoration of the status quo in the Rann there was room for manoeuvre, but on the need for an agreement on general disengagement the Pakistanis were insistent. This was confirmed during my subsequent meeting with Aziz Ahmed, the record of which is also enclosed. Much of this seemed an unnecessary exercise, but there were two points of significance:

(a) In the morning the President had spoken of the possibility of neither side patrolling in the Rann as offering the basis for a solution. Aziz Ahmed had then quickly tuned to his idea of a proviso that officials meet to sort out any conflict of patrolling rights. In the afternoon he dealt exclusively with this, and the idea of both sides abstaining from patrolling was not mentioned. I had purposely not probed the President further on this as it involves obvious difficulties for us; I also did not remind Aziz Ahmed about it. Any formal agreement to abstain from patrolling might be misunderstood on our side. However, a tacit understanding to this effect could offer a way out so long as the formal position was not jeopardized. For instance, the May 15th British formula that both sides may patrol as before January 1st, meets our position without spelling anything out; if it were buttressed with a tacit understanding that conflicts in patrolling would be avoided, there would seem to be a possibility here of finding a mutually acceptable formula. Whether this could include the amendment about officials meeting to work out arrangements, as Aziz Ahmed suggested, is a more doubtful question. Everything would depend on the spirit in which the agreement was worked. If the Pakistanis were to send patrols so as to establish their rights by the very fact of coming into conflict with our patrols, we could have endless trouble. If however the Pakistanis can be persuaded that in fact there would be no patrolling during the next few months and meanwhile the whole question would go into the automatic processes for a final settlement, then a suitable formula could be devised.

(b) In the morning meeting Ayub had said a general programme for disengagement would be necessary, but it would be sufficient if it were in general terms. In the afternoon Aziz Ahmed said that what the President had in mind was for the G.H.Qs. of both sides to get into touch and agree on the broad pattern of withdrawal. However, both Aziz and Ayub himself had said they accepted Wilson’s disengagement draft; this does not call for any programme but merely says that “necessary arrangements to this end shall be set in train forthwith”. I purposely did not enter into argument with Aziz Ahmed but there is room here for further discussion if Government feel that we can or should make any proposals on the disengagement issue.

3. The President was certainly emphatic that progress depended on our “seeing reason” regarding the need for a disengagement agreement. We have to consider what the Pakistani motives can be in digging their toes in on this point. They could simply be trying to wear us down and also show to their own people that, in contrast, to previous Governments, the Ayub regime knows how to “stand up to India”; they could be genuinely apprehensive about our intentions and seeking guarantees because of real fears; they could be preparing to exploit the situation, either for diplomatic and propaganda purposes or for the more sinister purpose of starting trouble in Kashmir and blaming it on the inevitable “spark” which was bound to be struck as a result of the confrontation. Doubtless our Intelligence authorities are especially alert to warnings about this eventuality. For the rest, the question for us to decide is whether we should stick to a firm line of having no truck with the Pakistanis till they sign an agreement on the Rann, or whether we should manoeuvre for a settlement involving some commitment on disengagement. If the latter course seems preferable, then one possibility which might be considered is to tell Ayub that we cannot agree to a formal agreement on disengagement for various reasons, including the question of principle that the disposition of troops on one's own territory cannot be the subject of an international agreement, but that as soon as an agreement on restoring the status quo in Kutch is signed there can be an exchange of letters between the Prime Minister and President, in which each could welcome this peaceful measure and add that, in view of it, and of the desire to contribute to a further reduction of tension the Government concerned was ordering the return of its forces to their normal stations.

4. My call on the President has in a sense reestablished direct contact between the two Governments. We now have to decide both the matter of substance, as to the use to which these direct contacts should now be put, and also the matter of form, as to what the next contact should be. The President will be leaving Pakistan on June 13 and will be back only after the Algiers Conference. It is for decision whether anything further should be communicated to him in the form of concrete proposals or whether we should invite him to meet the Prime Minister in London. I shall be grateful for appropriate instructions as soon as possible. I would also like to have Government's views on the points raised by Aziz Ahmed.

5. Incidentally, Morris James was in Rawalpindi for another round of talks with Aziz. I saw him before calling on the President in order to find out what the latest position was on the British side. He explained they were still discussing these two problems of defining the status quo and ensuring disengagement and were wondering how to progress; he was due to see Aziz later. He called on me in the evening to say that nothing new was discussed with Aziz but the latter had said there had been a useful meeting with me in the morning. In order not to have any crossing of wires with the British, and also lest Aziz had given some slanted version of my meeting with the President, I told Morris James that I had used my farewell call to try and have direct contact with the President to see what chances there were following up the British initiative, and gave him a very brief outline of my talks without going into details.

6. I enclose an additional set of these papers (this letter and the records of the meeting with Ayub and with Aziz Ahmed) for the Foreign Secretary to whom you may kindly pass them on.
With kind regards,

Yours sincerely

(G. Parthasarathi)

Shri L.K. Jha,
Secretary to the Prime Minister,
Prime Minister’s Secretariat,
New Delhi

P.S.

I have just learnt that the telegram that I sent yesterday from Rawalpindi after my meeting with the President has not been transmitted. I am having it repeated to you today from Karachi.

*************

A record of meeting with President Ayub Khan at Rawalpindi on June 5th, 1965.

I saw President Ayub Khan for one hour at Rawalpindi on June 5th. Bhutto and Aziz Ahmed were present. I had taken Shankar Bajpai with me. I explained that since the President would be leaving on tour abroad in few days and I might be leaving Pakistan before his return, I wanted to say farewell and also take advantage of the opportunity to discuss the crisis arising from developments in the Rann of Kutch. I said I had been to Delhi last week and had met Prime Minister and Foreign Minister, and I knew how seriously the Government of India viewed the present situation. As Prime Minister had stated publicly and also in exchanges with the British, we sincerely wanted to settle our problems with Pakistan peacefully and had been hoping that the various proposals we had accepted for a solution of the Sind – Kutch border issue would lead to a lowering of tension, but unfortunately we found that each time we were practically on the verge of agreement some new difficulty arose in Pakistan’s position, and today we were still without any solution. The British had been trying to resolve our differences and we were both grateful for their efforts, but since we seemed to be stuck I thought during my visit I might hear the President’s views on the present situation and the way out of it, and also give him the Government of India’s views.

2. Ayub spoke first about the points of difference regarding the restoration of the status quo ante in the Rann of Kutch. He said he had instructed Aziz Ahmed to iron out difficulties because he did not want efforts for a solution to flounder on claims pressed by local officials. Even when it was reported to him that the officials concerned had clear evidence that Pakistan had patrolled deep in the Rann around Kanjarkot he had insisted on seeing them himself to make sure that they were not exaggerating. He had found them convincing and had also made them explain the case to the British High Commissioner. The area involved was a very small corner of the Rann and he could not understand why India should make such a big issue of denying Pakistan patrolling rights in even this little area. Whatever we might claim, Pakistan had been exercising jurisdiction around Kanjarkot for years, yet since our Prime Minister had gone on record that there would be no talks unless Pakistan withdrew from Kanjarkot, in order to help our position Pakistan had, of its own accord, agreed not to have a post at Kanjarkot. India however evidently wanted to establish claims to patrol an area which Pakistan had always patrolled. The argument seemed so petty, particularly as the agreement which was thus being held up would soon settle the major issue and make this point meaningless. (The President also said in passing that no patrolling would be possible for the next few months anyway.) In short, he could not understand why this minor point should become such a major obstacle.

3. I said that we on our part were wondering in precisely the same way why Pakistan was creating difficulties over this issue. Our position was simply that the status quo should be restored, and from Bhutto's own statement of April 15th, it was clear that the status quo meant India's possession of what Pakistan chose to call disputed territory. (Bhutto said he had never said this, but when we produced his speech he quickly slurred over it as not bearing the meaning we gave it). I added that we had made a number of concessions, and had agreed on the processes for a settlement of the main problem, but this essential precondition, which was in accordance with Pakistan's own April 13th proposal, was not being met. Pakistan might satisfy herself that she had been patrolling the Kanjarkot area as she claimed, but we also knew that we had been patrolling there without being challenged. We had some argument about this, with Aziz Ahmed and Bhutto trying to go into details, but the President intervened to say that it seemed to be a matter which human ingenuity should be able to sort out. Pakistan for instance was prepared not to patrol in the area if India also agreed not to, and had made an offer to this effect. When I expressed surprise as no such offer had been put to us, Aziz Ahmed intervened to say that he had made another proposal to the British, namely, that the patrolling rights need not be spelled out but left in general terms which did not damage the claims of either side, with the addition of a proviso that if in the exercise of the rights any conflict arose, officials of both sides should meet to resolve the problem on a practical basis, it being specified that arrangements made would be without prejudice to the formal claims of either side. Aziz Ahmed added that there was now also the idea suggested by the President of both sides agreeing not to patrol. I started to point out the objection to any abandonment of rights implicit in an agreement.
to the effect that there would be no patrolling, but Bhutto intervened to say it was all really a drafting problem which could be sorted out if there was a genuine desire for agreement. Ayub said that was the real question. I said that the desire was very much there on our side, which was why I was having this discussion, but certain rights could not be given up. President said what he had suggested would leave India in Chhad Bet while Pakistan would withdraw from Kanjarkot, which meant India would retain her presence in the Rann while Pakistan would give up her’s entirely; he thought this should be more than adequate for us. There were further remarks about the problem not being insoluble, and discussion on this aspect ended with Aziz Ahmed offering to discuss it further with me in the afternoon.

4. We next turned to the question of disengagement, and I explained how in our view this should not be tied up with a Kutch settlement. Any confrontation of forces was the direct consequence of Pakistan’s violation of the status quo in the Rann, and should she agree to restore that status quo there would be an automatic lowering of tension and a general disengagement. Pakistan could rest assured of our sincere desire to reduce tension and our willingness to proceed with disengagement once the Kutch status quo was restored, but we could not agree to a formal agreement on such disengagement as a precondition to, or part of, an agreement on the Rann. Ayub at once said he could not understand what possible objection we could have. It was true that the present situation had arisen because of the conflict in the Rann but that was now a relatively small point of danger compared to the risk of a really major conflict developing out of the two armies facing each other with weapons ready for action. The slightest incident between them could give rise to fatal consequences. This confrontation and the Kutch issue had thus become part of a whole new situation which needed the most urgent solution. Pakistan did not want war, he wanted us to be very sure of this; but our army was in menacing deployment and a little local mistake could spark off war without either side wanting it, and if there was a war it would be a terrible one, we should also realize that. It was therefore only reasonable for the two Governments to tackle this danger. Given the acute suspicion and mistrust that had grown up between the two sides, neither side could be expected to withdraw any forces without at least a general programme being agreed to in advance. He was sure our soldiers would want to sit tight till they saw the Pakistanis move back, and naturally Pakistan would want to be sure we were withdrawing before they started to pull back. I said this raised the very question of how each side could satisfy the other in a formal agreement that a disengagement would be effected. If the two sides were to spell out which battalion should go back to which station, we would not only be negotiating over matters which were theoretically confidential for each side but which involved its sovereign right to dispose of its own forces on its own territory. Moreover, if it took so long to determine what forces could be where in the Rann, the difficulty of sorting out the predisposition of troops from all over the frontiers would be endless and the whole discussion would get bogged down without any settlement regarding Kutch having been put into effect. We on our part also knew of Pakistan’s heavy deployment of forces against us and would certainly be willing to work out a suitable disengagement but first things must come first and that meant a settlement of the Rann issue. In point of fact, the whole problem of restoring tranquility on the borders between India and Pakistan and along the cease – fire line in Kashmir was most important, and we had agreed last year to meeting to deal with it on November 2, 1964, but Pakistan had cancelled it at the last minute and showed no desire to take it up again. On the contrary, the present tension had been created, of which the most important was the Rann of Kutch. If Pakistan was genuinely concerned about these tensions, she should agree to restore the status quo, and in the improvement of the atmosphere that would automatically follow we would be glad to revive the meeting arranged last year to restore tranquility on the borders.

5. We had some short arguments about what was really meant by first things first (the President being quick to ask, when I referred to the cease – fire line, “what about Kashmir itself”) but these were incidental. When the President referred to the danger of war I drew attention to our offer of a ‘No – War’ Pact, but he dismissed it as though it was joke, adding “Let us settle our problems and then we can have a No War Pact”. On the main question of disengagement, he repeated that it was not reasonable for India to refuse to restore the status quo in the areas of really dangerous confrontation while insisting on forcing Pakistan to restore the status quo in Kutch. He said he wholly failed to see what were our objections. Nobody wanted detailed discussion on which units should be moved to which station; all that was necessary was an understanding in general terms to disengage according to some broad programme, the adherence to which could convince each side that the other was honouring her commitments. Unfortunately, neither side was able to trust the other, and some such definite understanding was necessary. Once India saw the logic of this, it would be easy to work out satisfactory agreements regarding the Rann.

6. To my comment that Pakistan’s stand meant that she would not withdraw from the Rann unless India agreed to a general withdrawal of troops, which in turn meant an attempt to coerce us, Ayub replied very emphatically “No Sir, it is India which is trying to coerce us”. He again said he of all people knew what war would mean, and could assure us he wanted no such disaster for either country. Pakistan was keen on a peaceful settlement but why was India so adamant in trying “to hide” the need for disengagement? Any rational analysis of the present situation was bound to conclude that his general confrontation was the greatest danger, and Pakistan was not asking anything extraordinary.
in wanting a formal assurance that once she withdrew from Kutch, the confrontation would not be kept up on some other pretext. I again explained that we emphatically did not want war, and once Pakistan agreed to restore the Kutch status quo there would be no reason for any confrontation, but Ayub merely repeated that if we felt this way why did we hesitate to write it in to a formal agreement. I said we had already agreed to indicate our sincere desire for lowering of tension in the preamble of the last British formulation. Ayub persisted in asking why did not we accept the full British disengagement proposal. I repeated our stand that the Kutch problem should not be linked up with other matters. Ayub said Pakistan did not want to link up any other issue whatsoever, though he thought it was a pity to let disputes about border areas continue; eventually it would be sensible for both Governments to get rid of these sources of friction, as in the past Sheikh – Swaran Singh agreements. (In this context we talked briefly of the enclaves in the East, Berubari, Lathitilla etc.). But it was far from Pakistan’s intention to raise any such matters at present. All he wanted was what any realistic appraisal would show, namely, that the Kutch situation was now a small part of a much more dangerous confrontation; it might be true that the confrontation developed from what happened in the Rann but it was not reasonable to expect Pakistan to trust us to withdraw merely on word of mouth; we were trying to restore the status quo in the Rann and he could see no rational objection to our simultaneously agreeing to restore the status quo which had been changed all along the frontiers.

7. The discussion terminated at this point, as the President had to receive the Soviet Cultural Minister. However, he said he felt sensible people should be able to work out a solution, and Bhutto and Aziz Ahmed would be available for further discussion. As I was leaving, the President expressed the usual sentiments, wishing me well for the future.

TOP SECRET

A Record of a meeting of High Commissioner G. Parthasarathy with Mr. Aziz Ahmed in Rawalpindi 5.00 to 5.30 P.M. on June 5, 1965.

Pursuant to his offer made during the meeting with President Ayub in the morning to discuss further Pakistan’s position regarding the status quo ante in the Rann of Kutch, Aziz Ahmed produced a map on which, he said, the Pakistani officials concerned with the area, had drawn up the lines of patrolling actually followed by both sides before January, 1965. The map showed the Pakistanis as following the track along the northern edge of the Rann (which follows the border as we maintain it to be) until it reaches the DING – SURAI Sector, where the Pakistani line was shown as following the southern arc, taking in Kanjarkot on their side. For the Indian patrols, this Pakistani map showed a track coming north-west from Chhad Bet to a point roughly a mile south of the frontier and from there running westward parallel to the frontier track until it reaches a point due south of the Pakistani post of VINGOOR; from there it turns south – east to Karim Shahi. The point made by Aziz Ahmed was that the British formulation of May 10th would have authorized India to patrol the track along the northern edge of the Rann westward to the river NARA, and Pakistan had investigated the facts fully to show that India had never patrolled along this track, but only along a track south of it, and that too never westward of VINGOOR; in other words, a triangular corner in the north – west around Kanjarkot had never been patrolled by the Indians. Aziz Ahmed said that when he pointed this out to the British High Commissioner to justify Pakistan’s objection to the May 10th formula, Sir Morris James had challenged the Pakistani claim that the Indians had never come west of VINGOOR by referring to the May 1964 incident, when our patrols had an exchange with the Pakistanis as to whom Kanjarkot belonged to. Aziz Ahmed said they further looked into the facts, and the Pakistani officials had pointed out that the Indian patrol which came to Kanjarkot in May 1964, had not come westward from Vingoor (in which case it would have been seen by the various Pakistani posts between Vingoor and Kanjarkot), but had appeared straight from the south, apparently coming north from Karim Shahi via Vigaykot, and had been seen for the first time only by the patrol sent out by the Pakistanis from Rahim Ki Bazar. In brief, the Pakistanis were clear that the area immediately to the south and east of Kanjarkot had been patrolled by their side, and the Indians had never come westward of Vingoor, that was why the Pakistanis could not accept the May 10th formula and why they had been unable to abandon their right to patrol in this area.

2. Aziz Ahmed went on to say that in spite of this factual position, Pakistan was willing to try and find a formula satisfactory to India and he had thought a great deal how this might be achieved. He felt the May 15th formula of the British which allow both sides to patrol as they had been doing before January 1st, 1965, without specifying what patrolling they were entitled to, was a suitable basis for settlement; the only difficulty about it was that some additional proviso would be necessary to deal with the situation that might arise in case the patrolling rights sought to be put into effect by either side brought about a conflict in practice. He had, therefore, after much careful thought, suggested to the British a proviso to the May 15th formula, to the effect that if such a conflict of patrolling rights ever arose, officials of both sides should meet to work out a practical solution, which would be without prejudice to the claims of either Government. Aziz Ahmed did not spell this out, but he said something, not very clear, about both Governments instructing their officials to ensure that the actual patrolling was carried out in such a way that the two sides did not get into conflict. What he seemed to have in mind was that if at any stage an Indian patrol ran into a Pakistani patrol, there should immediately be a meeting of officials concerned to work out patrolling arrangements, which would not bring the two sides into physical contact; presumably, it would mean a working arrangement that the two sides patrol on different days, it being specified that this would not prejudice either side's actual claim. Aziz Ahmed said he had given a possible draft to this effect to the British a few days ago, and he understood it would be discussed with us in Delhi. Pakistan Government would be interested to have our reaction. He added that Pakistan was anxious to find a way out of this impasse over patrolling and would welcome any alternative proposals from us.

3. Aziz Ahmed then said, the other question, which had been discussed with the President in the morning, was disengagement and on this he would like to mention the following. He heard that India was very disturbed that an agreement seemed in sight and then suddenly Pakistan started raising new objections; he could see the superficial justification for this, but that did not take account of the new developments which had been taking place while discussions had been going on. When the British High Commissioner had come about 3 weeks ago, to urge the President not to delay a settlement in the Rann, the President had asked him bluntly, what he was talking about; did he not realize that the Rann of Kutch was a "flea–bite", it was along the other frontiers that the fighting would take place because of the confrontation that had developed, and it was there that disengagement was necessary. The President was quite emphatic that a tremendous concentration of troops had been going on, on the Indian side, and consequently on the Pakistani side, and in comparison to that the Rann of Kutch was no danger at all. If the British wanted to ensure peace between the two countries, they should give their full attention to bringing about a disengagement along these other frontiers. Side by side with this determination to seek a general disengagement, the Pakistan Government had also been exercising the utmost restraint to try and avoid having a little spark set off a major catastrophe. Aziz Ahmed said, for example, Indian planes had been very provocatively violating Pakistani air space, but Pakistan had put up with it. One day an Indian plane flew over the SULAIMANKI Head–works for half an hour; on another occasion, an Indian plane hung around for 45 minutes over the Pakistani cantonment of KHARIAN. It would have been easy enough to shoot down the Indian plane, but the Pakistanis confined their reaction to Protest Notes Regarding the Kharian over – flight. Aziz Ahmed said the Pakistani Air Force were most agitated and wanted permission to bring the Indian plane down. Aziz Ahmed claimed, he told them not to do anything of the sort, but P.A.F. then said the Army at Kharian was very upset and insisted that the Air Force do something; Aziz Ahmed claimed, he then sought instructions from the President, who simply said his orders that the Pakistani forces should avoid all action which might aggravate the situation, had to be carried out without fail. When the feelings of the Army and Air Force were conveyed to him, the President said the plane over Kharian should be left undisturbed, but the Foreign Office should tell the Indians, the British and the Americans, that if one more Indian plane intruded in this way, the Pakistani Air Force would in future have to exercise its own discretion of what action to take. Fortunately, no Indian plane had intruded since this was conveyed to us, but the point was that Pakistan had been strictly following a policy of avoiding action to aggravate the situation. Nevertheless, the situation persisted and was in itself so dangerous that some little mistake could spark off a war. That was why the President was so insistent on disengagement being extended all along the frontiers; the President realized the difficulties, and he knew that it would take time for the forces to withdraw; Pakistan also did not claim the right to decide what station the Indian forces should withdraw to; each side, doubtless, had information as to the normal stations for the forces of the other, but in reverting to the status quo, it was for each Government to decide what withdrawal would constitute the restoration of status quo. The other Government could not interfere, but both sides knew very well what was disengagement and what was not, and that was why the President had been insisting in the morning, that there must be some general programme. Aziz Ahmed now added that, in fact, the President felt the two G.H.Qs would have to get into touch with each other to work out such a broad programme and doubtless it would take many weeks for the disengagement to be effective. However, some agreement, such as proposed by Mr. Wilson, was acceptable to Pakistan and should be acceptable to India. (Aziz Ahmed produced the draft on disengagement prepared by the British which, in the version shown by him, read that the withdrawal of the forces should be completed “as soon as possible”. Aziz Ahmed had struck out these words and substituted the amendment “within a month”. The draft given by the British in New Delhi reads as amended by the Pakistanis. Aziz Ahmed said a month might not be enough, but that could be easily settled once India accepted the main fact that an agreement on disengagement was necessary.

4. Aziz Ahmed concluded with two further points:

(a) He noticed that India was complaining that Pakistan was holding up settlements. The actual fact was that Pakistan was very willing to work out a satisfactory agreement regarding the Rann as soon as possible, but India was avoiding the main issue, which was the need for general disengagement.
He also noticed that India had some feeling that Pakistan wanted to use the Kutch discussions as some sort of pretext for dragging in other issues. This was totally incorrect. Pakistan had never mentioned any other item, not even the border disputes that flared up from time to time in other areas. His Government had no desire whatsoever to raise other matters, but simply wanted a general disengagement and nothing more. The only point they insisted on was that this general disengagement was not “another issue”, but part and parcel of the problem which required immediate attention.

2338. Agreement between the Government of India and the Government of Pakistan relating to Cease – Fire and the Restoration of the status quo as on 1 January 1965 in the Gujarat/West Pakistan Border and Determination of the Border in that Area.

New Delhi, June 30, 1965.

Whereas both the Governments of India and Pakistan have agreed to a cease – fire and to restoration of the status quo as at 1st January 1965 in the area of the Gujarat/ West Pakistan Border, in the confidence that this will also contribute to a reduction of the present tension along the entire Indo – Pakistan border;

Whereas it is necessary that after the status quo has been established in the aforesaid Gujarat/ West Pakistan border area, arrangements should be made for determination and demarcation of the border in that area;

Now therefore, the two Governments agree that the following action shall be taken in regard to the said area;

Article 1

There shall be an immediate cease – fire with effect from 0030 hrs GMT, 1 July, 1965.

Article 2

On the cease – fire:
All troops on both sides will immediately begin to withdraw;

This process will be completed within seven days;

Indian police may then re-occupy the post at Chhad Bet in strength no greater than that employed at the post on 31 December 1964;

Indian and Pakistan police may patrol on the tracks on which they were patrolling prior to 1 January 1965, provided that their patrolling will not exceed in intensity that which they were doing prior to 1st January 1965 and during the monsoon period will not exceed in intensity that done during the monsoon period of 1964;

If patrols of Indian and Pakistan police should come into contact they will not interfere with each other, and in particular will act in accordance with West Pakistan/India border ground rules agreed to in January 1960;

Officials of the two Governments will meet immediately after the cease–fire and from time to time thereafter as may prove desirable in order to consider whether any problems arise in the implementation of the provisions of paragraphs (iii) to (v) above and to agree on the settlement of any such problem.

Article 3

In view of the fact that:

(A) India claims that there is no territorial dispute as there is a well established boundary running roughly along the northern edge of the Rann of Kutch as shown in the prepartition maps, which needs to be demarcated on the ground;

(B) Pakistan claims that the border between India and Pakistan in the Rann of Kutch runs roughly along the 24th Parallel as is clear from several pre–partition and post–partition documents and therefore the dispute involves some 3,500 square miles of territory;

(C) At discussions in January 1960, it was agreed by Ministers of the two Governments that they would each collect further data, regarding, the Kutch – Sind boundary and that further discussions would be held later with a view to arriving at a settlement of this dispute; as soon as officials have finished the task referred to in Article 2(vi), which in any case will not be later than one month after the cease – fire, Ministers of the two Governments will meet in order to agree on the determination of the border in the light of their respective claims, and the arrangements for its demarcation. At this meeting and at any proceeding before the Tribunal referred to in Article 3(ii) and (iv) below, each Government will be free to present and develop their case in full.

(ii) In the event of no agreement between the Ministers of the two Governments on the determination of the border being reached within two months of the cease – fire, the two Governments shall, as contemplated in the joint communiqué of 24 October 1959, have recourse to the Tribunal referred to in (iii) below for determination of the border in the light of their respective claims and evidence produced before it and the decision of the Tribunal shall be final and binding on both parties.

(iii) For this purpose there will be constituted, within four months of the cease – fire, a Tribunal consisting of three persons, none of whom would be a national of either India or Pakistan. One member shall be nominated by each Government and the third member, who will be the Chairman, shall be jointly selected by the two Governments. In the event of the two Governments failing to agree on the selection of the Chairman within three months of the cease – fire they shall request the Secretary – General of the United Nations to nominate the Chairman.

(iv) The decision of the Tribunal referred to in (iii) above shall be binding on both Governments, and shall not be questioned on any ground whatsoever. Both Governments undertake to implement the findings of the Tribunal in full as quickly as possible and shall refer to the Tribunal for decision of any difficulties which may arise between them in the implementation of these findings. For that purpose the Tribunal shall remain in being until its findings have been implemented in full.

In Witness Whereof the undersigned have signed the present Agreement.

Note of the Ministry of External Affairs on Agreement signed by the Governments of India and Pakistan on the 30\textsuperscript{th} June, 1965 agreeing to a cease – fire and the restoration of status quo as of 1\textsuperscript{st} January, 1965, in the area of Gujarat/West Pakistan border.

Missions are aware that an Agreement was signed between the Governments of India and Pakistan on 30\textsuperscript{th} June, 1965, at New Delhi for a cease–fire with effect from 0030 hrs. G.M.T.: 1\textsuperscript{st} July, 1965. This agreement provided for the restoration of status quo as on 1\textsuperscript{st} January, 1965, in the area of the Gujarat/ West Pakistan border. A similar Agreement was also signed on the same date in Karachi.

2. India had been greatly concerned all these months because of Pakistan aggression on India soil across the Kutch border. Unfortunately, relations between the two countries had not been cordial lately and the situation further deteriorated by an armed attack along our Gujarat border, specially at a time when it was only guarded by the Border Police Force. We took all necessary steps to defend our territorial integrity. We also made it clear that aggression had to be vacated and that too with the minimum of delay, if escalation of the conflict was to be avoided.

3. The British Prime Minister offered his good offices to prevent the situation from getting out of control totally. We made it abundantly clear that there could be no cease–fire without a simultaneous Agreement about the vacation of aggression and the restoration of status quo ante as on 1\textsuperscript{st} January, 1965. We have always been opposed to the enjoyment of the fruits of aggression by any aggressor and our basic stand on this issue was stated more than once in Parliament.

4. The Agreement of the 30\textsuperscript{th} June, 1965, vindicates India’s position that negotiations should take place after Pakistan aggression is vacated and the status quo as on 1\textsuperscript{st} January, 1965, restored. It is our conviction that this Agreement, which has been facilitated by the patient and quiet efforts of the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom, is in conformity with the pledge given by our Government to Parliament.

5. Pakistan has agreed to withdraw its forces from Indian territory beyond the Kutch – Sind international boundary. On our part, we have indicated that since we have no desire to keep up a war – like atmosphere, we would withdraw our troops from the Rann of Kutch.
6. India’s right to police patrolling of the Rann of Kutch up to the international boundary and to restore civil administration in the area has been recognized. Indian police would return to the positions they occupied before 1st January, 1965. Under the agreement we have the right to patrol up to Kanjarkot while Pakistan has had to vacate it and cannot now send any patrols there. We have thus won our point on this issue which had assumed so much prominence. It may be noted that there will now be no Pakistani military or police post in the Rann of Kutch. Thus the forcible occupation of territory in this area by Pakistan has been fully vacated.

7. Pakistan has, of course, gained the right to police patrolling of the Ding-Surai track, which in a small sector passes through our territory. This was part of the restoration of the status quo ante as on 1st January, 1965. This police patrolling on a specific limited track is the only right available to Pakistan under the Agreement so far as the Rann of Kutch is concerned. India will continue to patrol from Chadbet to Kanjarkot via Karimshahi. That patrol track passes by Biarbet and Vigokot. We will also reestablish our earlier police posts. India’s civil control over this area will thus be fully restored. Precautions have been taken to ensure that clashes between police patrol parties of the two countries are avoided. There is a clause in the Agreement that if police parties come into contact they will not interfere with each other and will act in accordance with the established Ground Rules.

8. Regarding withdrawal of troops from this area, the significant feature of the Agreement is that troops should not be confronting each other. Vigokot post was established after 1st January, 1965, and was situated about 7 miles south of the border. Sardar post was established on the 13th March, 1965, about 2 miles south of the border. As there were no Indian posts in these two places before 1st January, 1965, the Indian army has withdrawn from there. In this respect, we should bear in mind the physical features of the Rann of Kutch. Practically the whole of the Rann of Kutch gets waterlogged during the monsoon. Therefore, the withdrawal of Indian troops is not of any immediate practical significance. In any event, the Indian police posts along the border will have necessary backing if any need arises. According to the Agreement, the Indian Army shall vacate Chadbet post and the Police will take up this post again.

9. Pakistan has gained two points. One is the right to patrol the Ding-Surai track which Pakistan had constructed through Indian territory. This had to be conceded because Pakistan produced conclusive evidence to prove that they were patrolling that track before 1st January, 1965. But India has agreed to Pakistan patrolling of Ding-Surai track without prejudice to its claim that the area north of it belongs to it. This will be discussed during the negotiations at the Minister level meeting. The other point which Pakistan has gained is the recognition of its claim for a border in the Rann of Kutch proper.
10. The Cease–fire Agreement will not, perhaps, satisfy all critics but then no Agreement does so. We have accepted this Agreement because of our belief and conviction in the genuineness of our case. It would not have been in our interests to allow tensions to continue. India and Pakistan were virtually at war on the Gujarat–Sind border. It was, therefore, necessary to see that the situation did not escalate further. As such, in order to arrive at a settlement, an element of “Give and Take” had to be accepted.

11. The Cease–fire Agreement contemplates meetings between officials of India and Pakistan to resolve any problems that may arise in connection with the withdrawal of the troops and the resumption of police patrolling. Such a meeting has not taken place as yet but may in due course. In the interim we are preparing our case for the meeting of Ministers. They must conclude discussions by the end of August 1965. Failing an agreement between the Ministers about the border, the matter will have to be referred to a Tribunal of three persons neither of whom will be a national of either country. The composition of this Tribunal has to be settled by the end of September and the Tribunal is to assemble by the end of October 1965.

Subject: Pakistani aggression on Gujarat—Agreement of the 30th June, 1965.

Dear Ambassador/High Commissioner/Charge d’Affaires,

Pakistani propaganda has been trying, sometimes subtly and often quite brazenly, to misrepresent the Agreement of the 30th June as a triumph for Pakistan’s strength and wisdom. The Minister of Information Shahabuddin sang a paean of praise of the Field Marshal for this achievement.

2. The Pakistani line of misrepresentation is as follows:

(a) That Pakistan has brought India to admit a dispute not only over the demarcation of the border but over 3,500 square miles of territory:

(b) That Pakistan has made India accept the principle of arbitration for the first time: and

(c) That Pakistan has prevailed on India to agree to a general disengagement along with a disengagement in the Kutch area.

3. These propagandist misinterpretations should be refuted on the following lines:

(i) Nowhere in the Agreement has India conceded that there is a dispute over 3500 square miles of territory. The text of the Agreement merely states the formal claims of the two sides. These claims were precisely those advanced in the series of notes exchanged between the two Governments from 1949 onwards and also during the conference of January 1960. Throughout these exchanges Pakistan claimed that there was a dispute over the northern half of the Rann; the Government of India rejected this claim and maintained that the only matter to be settled was the demarcation of the boundary on the ground. This position has in no way been altered by the Agreement of the 30th June: on the contrary it has been reaffirmed. The Government of India have maintained the position which they have held all along, that their sovereignty over the Rann of Kutch is not in dispute. Nevertheless, they have always been ready to discuss any points which Pakistan might wish to raise. The latest accord constitutes absolutely no departure from this stand.

(ii) It is not correct to claim that India has now accepted the principle of arbitration for the first time. In point of fact, the agreement of 30th June, 1965 contains no reference to arbitration. If the two Governments fail to agree by direct negotiation, the issue will be referred for settlement to an impartial tribunal. This reference to an impartial tribunal not only has precedent in other Indo-Pakistan border issues: (such as those settled by the Bagge Award), but is also specifically provided for in the October 1959 Indo-Pakistan border issues: in which the two Governments agreed that “all outstanding boundary disputes raised so far” should be referred to an impartial tribunal. The Agreement of the 30th June 1965 specifically invokes the Agreement of 1959 by stating that the “two Governments shall, as contemplated in the joint communiqué of the 24th October 1959, have recourse to the Tribunal”. To pretend that this procedure represents a sudden new change in India’s position is patently dishonest.

(iii) Pakistan’s attempt to misrepresent India’s readiness to secure a disengagement of forces from other parts of the Indo-Pakistan border as another departure from India’s original position, is equally dishonest. The military confrontation on our borders had been thrust upon us by Pakistan’s aggression in Kutch and aggressive preparations on other borders. Once Pakistan vacates her aggression and refrains from further aggressive acts, there would be no need for this confrontation, which is contrary to our national ideals, our national policy and our national interest.

(iv) India’s consistent stand in the context of Pakistani aggression (which was also the stand taken in the context of China’s aggression) that the aggressor must first vacate his aggression, has been vindicated. Pakistan’s aggressive intrusion into Biar Bet, Point 84 and Kanjarkot has been vacated, although Pakistan has been allowed to patrol the track between Ding and Surai during the interim period.
4. If there are any other points on which you would need clarification, you will, no doubt, kindly write to us.

Yours Sincerely
(B. Deva Rao)

2341. Statement by Prime Minister Lal Bahadur Shastri in Lok Sabha on Kutch Agreement.

New Delhi, August 16, 1965.

Mr. Speaker, Sir,

I beg to move “that the statement laid on the Table of the House by Prime Minister on the 16th August, 1965, on the Indo – Pakistan Agreement of June, 1965 relating to Gujarat – West Pakistan border be taken into consideration.”

The House will recall that the last session of the Lok Sabha devoted considerable time and attention, and rightly so, to the developing situation between India and Pakistan on the Kutch – Sind border culminating in the inroads committed by Pakistani armed forces in the Rann of Kutch. I had made a number of statements in the House. It would be recalled that as a result of Pakistani armed intrusions into the Rann of Kutch and their aggression committed against us, there was serious danger of a military conflict between India and Pakistan, which, in the very nature of things, could not have been confined merely to the Kutch – Sind border. As I said in my statement in this august House on April 28 that was one of the most fateful moments of our times and both India and Pakistan stood poised at the crossroads of history. I made it quite clear then and afterwards that we are a nation pledged to peace, but that, at the same time, we are determined to defend our country.

Throughout those difficult days we were subjected to great provocation. Pakistan did everything to wash away the bridges of peace and to engulf the two countries in a military conflict the consequences of which would have been grave for both. However, the firm steps that we took, including the dispatch of troops to the frontiers to meet the threat posed by the concentration of troops on the other side, made Pakistan realize that it could not hope to get away with aggression.
I cannot but make a reference to the present situation as it exists in Kashmir. It is a new situation, full of the most serious potentialities. Large number of raiders in civilian disguise but heavily armed have come across the cease – fire line and are indulging in serious acts of sabotage and destruction. These raiders are being spotted out and dealt with firmly and effectively. The number of those killed, wounded and captured is now fairly large. Our valiant security forces, both army and police, are acting with exemplary valour.

The two situations to which I have made a reference arose at different point of time and I have no doubt whatsoever that the manner in which Government dealt with them was the best possible in the circumstances. I would urge the House to consider the Gujarat – West Pakistan Border Agreement in the light of the stand the Government had taken while the Parliament was still in session and which was stated in this august House on more than one occasion.

May I now refer to the Gujarat – West Pakistan Border Agreement in some detail. As the House is aware, on April 28, the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom, Mr. Harold Wilson, wrote to me and to President Ayub Khan expressing great concern at the situation that had developed in regard to the Kutch – Sind border. He suggested a cease – fire to be followed by withdrawal of troops and restoration of the status quo on 1\textsuperscript{st} January, 1965 and thereafter talks between the two governments. These proposals basically conformed to the stand consistently taken by the Indian Government in the fruitless exchange of notes which had taken place between the governments of India and Pakistan in the months of March and April. I, therefore, replied to Mr. Wilson accepting these principles. Thereafter followed a long process of negotiations on details through the intermediary of U.K. High Commissioners in India and Pakistan and the U.K. Government. Eventually, on the 30\textsuperscript{th} June, 1965, an Agreement was signed between India and Pakistan.

The main elements of this Agreement are: A cease – fire on both sides to be followed by withdrawal of forces and restoration of status quo as prevailing on the 1\textsuperscript{st} January, 1965. Once these are accomplished, there is to be a meeting between the Ministers of India and Pakistan and if such meeting is unable to resolve the boundary issue, a three – man impartial tribunal is to be constituted to give its findings on the subject. A time – table is set out in the Agreement for these various steps. The withdrawal of forces from the Rann of Kutch is to be completed within seven days of the cease – fire. Restoration of the status quo in it’s entirety, including resumption of normal police patrolling, is to be completed within a month from the date of the cease – fire. The Ministers’ meeting is to conclude discussions within two months and the tribunal is to be set up within four months of the cease – fire.
The Agreement is in conformity with the Indo – Pakistan Border Agreements of 1959 and 1960. In connection with the latter, I would like to recall that those Agreements were placed before the House on the 16th November, 1959 and 9th February, 1960 respectively and statements thereon had then been made by the late Prime Minister, Pundit Jawaharlal Nehru, and the Minister of State, Shrimati Lakshmi Menon.

Hon'ble Members will recall that in my statement before the House in the last session, I had said that we would agree to talks but only if Pakistan's aggression was vacated and the status quo ante was restored. I had also stated that Pakistan would have to vacate Kanjarkot. All this has been complied with. There is no Pakistani post now in Kanjarkot. Biarbet and other points which they had occupied have also been vacated.

As regards patrolling also, the position would be restored as on 1st January, 1965. The officials of the two governments have met to sort out details.

I should like to say a few words with regard to the status quo ante. The Agreement restores the status quo as on 1st January 1965. Generally speaking, implicit in the concept of status quo is adherence to a position prevailing at a given time. In agreeing to the restoration of the status quo ante, we have not introduced any new principle.

The question as to what was the actual position in regard to various matters on the 1st January 1965 was one of fact and not of any sovereign rights. The restoration of that position was considered essential in order to get Pakistan's aggression vacated – aggression which Pakistan had committed in April 1965. The interim period, while the question of demarcation of the boundary is being pursued, would be of a short term duration. As I have said already there is a definite time – table for the entire work to be completed even if it becomes necessary to refer the matter to a tribunal. It is perfectly clear that the boundary would be demarcated on the basis of documentary evidence and the de facto interim position would have no relevance what so ever.

One matter about the Agreement which has caused some comment is that of patrolling. On this question also, the actual position obtaining on the 1st January, 1965, had to be restored. Pakistan Government put forward the claim before the United Kingdom Government, who were acting as the intermediary that it was patrolling on that date over a wide area in the Rann of Kutch. This claim was found to be without foundation except with regard to a small track close to the international border, over which Pakistani patrols were said to have passed while moving from Ding to Surai both of which lay in Pakistani territory. This position had to be accepted as a part of the over all restoration of the status quo ante, on which, from the very beginning, India had taken a firm stand. I should make it clear, however, that the use of this track does not in any manner confer any rights on Pakistan. The authority of India is complete and extends to the whole of the Rann of Kutch.

A few words more about Kashmir before I conclude. All my colleagues and I myself share fully the grave anxiety which I know fills the minds of all Hon’ble Members. As the Hon’ble Members are aware, the armed raiders have crossed the cease–fire line deceitfully in civilian disguise. According to information available and as has just now been said by the Defence Minister these people had been specially trained to indulge in acts of sabotage and destruction by the armed forces and officers of Pakistan. Our security forces are dealing with these raiders in the only manner appropriate to the situation. Amongst those arrested, there are some officers and from the statements made by the prisoners it would appear that the present operations have been planned and are being directed with the approval of the highest authorities in Pakistan.

The situation in Kashmir is completely under control. The raiders are being tracked down even with the help of the local population. It may take a little time to apprehend all the raiders but the operations are proceeding satisfactorily. The Government and the people of Kashmir are prepared to face the challenge and I would like to pay my tributes to the courage of the people and to the boldness and determination shown by the Government of Jammu & Kashmir under the distinguished leadership of G.M. Sadiq Sahib.

Hard days lie ahead, but we have to face the future with bold resolution. The price of freedom is paid not once but continuously. We have to be prepared as a country to pay that price.

So far as Government are concerned, we have dealt with the developing situation, whether in relation to Kutch or in relation to Kashmir in the best manner possible in our circumstances. Government will continue to do so in the days ahead, but their hands would be greatly strengthened by the mighty support it gets from this House.
2342. Notes exchanged between the Foreign Ministers of Pakistan and India regarding the appointment of a Tribunal for reference of the Kutch dispute.

August 18, 1965.

Note from the External Affairs Minister to Pakistan Foreign Minister

Excellency,

In view of the atmosphere created by the sharp deterioration of relations between India and Pakistan, we feel that there is no possibility of the meeting between Ministers referred to in article 3(i) of the Agreement dated 30 June 1965, between the Governments of India and Pakistan, resulting in a consensus. We consider, therefore, that the better course would be to proceed to the next stage of reference to a tribunal on the footing that no agreement has been reached between the Ministers, and we suggest that this course be adopted.

With assurances of my highest consideration,

Swaran Singh

Note from Pakistan Foreign Minister to External Affairs Minister

Excellency,

I am in receipt of your message dated 18 August unilaterally, calling off the projected Ministers’ meeting referred to in article 3(i) of the Agreement, dated 30 June 1965, between the Governments of India and Pakistan with regard to the dispute concerning the Rann of Kutch.

In our view the deterioration of relations, to which you refer, made it all the more necessary for this meeting to be held. In saying that there was no possibility of reaching a consensus on the Rann of Kutch dispute you have unfortunately prejudged the outcome of the meeting which could only be known after our discussions had concluded. Furthermore, it has been our understanding that the object of the proposed meeting was not only to try and reach consensus as regards the Rann of Kutch dispute, but also to seek, as far as possible, ways of improving generally the relations between India and Pakistan.

However, in view of the fact that you have come to the conclusion that no useful purpose would be served by holding the meeting, we have no alternatives but to acquiesce in your suggestion that the meeting may not be held and that we proceed to the next stage of reference of the Kutch dispute to the Tribunal provided under the Agreement.

With assurances of my highest consideration,

Zulfikar Ali Bhutto

New York, 16/17 December 1965.

Excellency,

I have the honour to refer to our previous exchange of correspondence relating to the Rann of Kutch Agreement of 30 June 1965. I now have the pleasure to inform you that, pursuant to the requests which I received from the two parties and in accordance with Article 3(iii) of the Agreement, I have nominated Judge Gunnar Karl Andreas Lagergren (Sweden) as Chairman of the Tribunal. Judge Lagergren’s curriculum vitae is attached for your information.

The Government of Sweden has agreed to relieve Judge Lagergren of his present responsibilities for the period necessary for the completion of the work of the Tribunal.

I am taking this opportunity to suggest, for your consideration, the following conditions of office for Judge Lagergren, it being understood that the parties to the Agreement will meet the costs involved in equal proportions.

Judge Lagergren’s appointment might be for an initial period of up to a maximum of six months, with provision for further extension of up to six months if the Tribunal has not concluded its work within that period. As a basis for his remuneration, I would suggest that a suitable standard, computed on a monthly basis, would be the salary received by a Judge of the International Court of Justice which is at the present time set at Dollars 25,000 a year. Should the Tribunal complete its task before the expiry of Judge Lagergren’s first period of appointment for six months, I would nevertheless consider it equitable that he receive a minimum payment of Dollars 12,500. To the extent that Judge Lagergren’s remuneration might be subject to taxation by the State of which he is a national, I would suggest that the two parties would agree to reimburse him the amount of such taxation. However, in this respect, I wish to inform you that I have myself requested the Government of Sweden to refrain from taxing any emoluments received by Judge Lagergren as Chairman of the Tribunal, and I shall apprise you in due course of the results of my request.

In addition to the foregoing, I would propose that Judge Lagergren receive a subsistence allowance of Dollars 25.00 for each day on which he exercise his functions. It would also be understood that Judge Lagergren’s travel costs in connection with the work of the Tribunal, including possible visits to India and Pakistan, would be borne by the two parties, as well as the costs of such secretarial and other assistance as he may require in the discharge of his duties.

I am pleased to inform you that, if the parties so request, it would be possible for office and other facilities to be made available to Judge Lagergren’s at the European headquarters of the United Nations. Facilities can also be made available there, upon request, for formal meetings of the Tribunal, on the understanding that to the extent that extra costs may be involved in these respects, they will be reimbursed by the parties.

Please accept, Excellency, the assurances of my highest consideration.

Under the Agreement of June 30th 1965 between India and Pakistan on Kutch the two countries had agreed to arbitration if they failed to resolve the issue between them. Having failed to do so, both had decided to go for arbitration and appointed a judge each of their choice as provided under Article 3 (iii) of the Agreement, and approached the Secretary General of the UN also under Article 3 (iii) to appoint a Chairman of the Tribunal. The present appointment was in fulfillment of this request of the two countries.
2344. Statement of Pakistan Foreign Minister Sharifuddin Pirzada on the Kutch Tribunal Award.

Islamabad, February 20, 1968.

The Award rendered in Geneva today by the Rann of Kutch Tribunal should put an end to a long standing dispute between Pakistan and India, over which there was fighting between the two countries on two occasions. In 1956 Indian troops forcibly occupied the Chhad Bet area. In 1965 they attempted to do the same thing in Kanjar Kot. I recall these two conflicts not in a spirit of recrimination but to emphasise the fact that the correct course is to seek settlement of disputes through peaceful means. The full text of the Award has not yet reached the Government. We shall give it the most careful study when we receive it. From the summary received it appears that Dr. Bebler, the Yugoslav Member, has given a dissenting opinion in support of the Indian case that the whole of the Rann of Kutch right up to its northern edge formed a part of India. The other member of the Tribunal, Mr. Nasrullah ENTEZAM, considered the Pakistan case regarding the northern half of the Rann to have been established but has concurred in the findings of the Chairman, Judge GUNNER LEGERGREN of Sweden. The Award of the Tribunal based on a majority holds that certain areas in the northern half like Kanjar Kot, Pirol Valo Kun, Chhad Bet, Dhara Banni and the Nagar Parkar inlets form a part of Pakistan. In reaching the Rann of Kutch Agreement of 1965 Pakistan showed its willingness to settle such disputes by recourse to the internationally accepted methods for the peaceful settlement of disputes. The Agreement states that the decisions of the Tribunal shall be final and binding on both Governments and shall not be questioned on any ground whatsoever. Both Governments also undertook to implement the findings of the Tribunal in full as quickly as possible. It will be recalled that this Agreement was approved by the Indian Parliament on 18th August 1965.

A Pakistan Foreign Office Spokesman in his comments on the Award said:
“The foundations of Pakistan’s case appear to have been accepted in the main. Nevertheless, what has been awarded to Pakistan is the barest minimum of the essential areas. We cannot hide our disappointment in the result. The areas awarded to Pakistan are areas under the occupation of India and are those over which the fighting in 1956 and 1965 took place. The Award will be studied more carefully before further comments can be made. Meanwhile, all that is necessary to say is that under the Agreement of June 30, 1965, the Award is binding on both the parties and neither party has the right to question it on any ground whatsoever. The Tribunal is to remain in being till its Award is fully implemented.”

4. Mr. Munir,

   Survey of Pakistan.

5. Mr. N.A. Waheed,
   Director General, Buildings,
   West Pakistan, P.W.D.,

6. Mr. Abdul Fateh.

After I made a brief welcome speech, I drew attention of the Pakistan Delegation to the Agenda for this meeting settled in the Agreement between the two Agents, dated 13 July 1967, and called upon the Representative of Pakistan to state the views of his Delegation on these items. The items were:

(1) The strength of the demarcation team.

(2) The design and specifications of the boundary pillars and the traverse pillars. The number and spacing of pillars.

(3) Detailed operational instructions for the guidance of the field staff.

(4) Any other matters which require consideration for effective demarcation work.
2. The Pakistan Delegation pointed out that each Government is required, under the Agreement, to nominate an Officer-in-Charge and stated that the Officer-in-Charge on behalf of Pakistan would be Mr. Rafique, Deputy Director, Survey of Pakistan. I stated that it will be for the Government to nominate the Officer-in-Charge on behalf of India and he may be either Col. P. Rout or Lt. Col. T.S. Bedi.

3. The Pakistan Delegation thereupon proposed that the reconnaissance work should be undertaken during the present season ending with the advent of monsoons and the remaining work should be left over for the next season commencing with the end of the monsoons, the entire field work for demarcation to be completed by the end of March 1969 and the strip maps to be signed by the end of May 1969. The reconnaissance work, it was explained, would consist of determining the control points astride the boundary line as close as practicable. These Control points would be about 50 - 60 in number, about 28 on each side of the boundary line. The control points will have to be determined by the triangulation method. Determination of the control points would involve the checking of the existing control points. After the control points have been determined the control pillars may be fixed. Four teams will be required for the reconnaissance work. The design of the control pillars, on the Pakistan side, would be the one used by Pakistan at present and the design of the control pillars on the Indian side would be such as in use at present in India. The control pillars on the Indian side will be provided and fixed by India and the control pillars on the Pakistan side will be provided and fixed by Pakistan.

4. The boundary pillars should be of the design and specifications of the boundary pillars used along the West Pakistan - Rajasthan boundary.

5. The number and spacing of pillars has necessarily to be flexible but not less than 3 pillars should be used in a mile. 300 boundary pillars and 900 sub-pillars may be required.

6. The Pakistan delegation suggested that the traverse pillars should be of stone, 6"x6"x30" in size. These traverse pillars are not intended to be very permanent.

7. The Pakistan Delegation stated that there are pillars along the “vertical line” in the west and it may have to be considered whether they should be replaced by the pillars now used for the rest of the boundary.

8. I asked the Pakistan Representative whether he has given his thought to the possibility of completing the entire demarcation work during the present season only and he indicated that this would not be possible in view of the terrain and the attendant difficulties.

Note recorded by Special Secretary, Department of Legal Affairs B. N. Lakur laying down the Procedure for Demarcation of the West Pakistan — Gujarat Boundary according to the Award of the International Tribunal.

March 4, 1968

1. Every act necessary for demarcation has to be performed jointly by the Indian and Pakistan personnel.

2. The first task of the demarcation team is to ascertain if any control points exist and are available. If there are no control points in the area, the control points will have to be provided. Provision of control points is an indispensable step in doing the demarcation work and without the control points, the pillar positions cannot be determined accurately.

3. In the relevant area, control points do not exist for about 40-50 miles to the north and south of the boundary all through. The provision of the new control points in the area requires checking up of the old control points to start with. There will be about 30 control points on each side of the boundary line, about 25 of them being nearest to the boundary line—within one mile of the boundary line.

4. After the control points have been ascertained, pillars will have to be erected on the ground at all these control points.

5. It is estimated that the provision of the control points will take about 40 days. The control pillars will be erected side by side. The erection and curing of these pillars will be completed about 10 days after the provision of the last control point. In other words, the provision of the control points and the erection of pillars would take in all about 50 days.

6. The period mentioned above will be on the basis that Pakistan will agree to the use of Tellurometer. (In the course of the discussions today, the Pakistan Delegation faintly indicated that the ascertainment of the control points will be made by Bilby Tower Triangulation. If the method suggested by Pakistan is employed, the provision of control pillars will take about three months. Every attempt will be made to persuade the Pakistan Delegation to agree to the use of Tellurometers).

7. After the control points have been provided and control pillars erected, the next step would be to compute and adjust the co-ordinates of the control points. Such computation would take about 8 to 10 days.
8. The next step would be to determine the boundary pillar positions along the boundary line. This operation would take about 8 to 10 days.

9. Thereafter, pillars have to be laid on the pillar positions on the ground. One team would be able to relay 5-6 pillars a day. The total number of pillars to be relayed would be about 1200. If 20 teams are employed, the relay of pillars will be completed in about 10 days. But it is not practicable to employ 20 teams as they will have to be backed up by simultaneous erection of the pillars of the requisite specifications and with men and materials brought from a distance of about 60-70 miles every day. The Chief Engineer of Gujarat unequivocally rules out the possibility of supplying men and material and transport across the Rann for 20 teams. The optimum number of teams to be employed would be ten teams. That being so, the relay of pillars would take 20-25 working days.

10. After the boundary pillars are erected, Theodolite traverse of the secondary accuracy will have to be run to provide final co-ordinates to all the boundary pillars. This would take about 20-25 days with 10 teams working.

11. The next step is to carry out a Plane-table survey, which will take about 20 days. Thereafter, fair-drawn originals (strip maps) have to be prepared and printed. This will take about 2 months. After the strip maps are authenticated by the Plenipotentiaries of the two Governments, the demarcation is completed and the boundary is ratified.

12. It will be observed that the field operations will take about 140 working days and the office work, consisting of preparing fair drawn originals will take about 60 days. This would be on the assumption that there would be no dispute or difference between the Indian team and the Pakistan team at any stage. Any dispute or difference would further delay the proceedings of demarcation.

13. Before the work commences, the Indian team and the Pakistan team will have to be fully organized, necessary equipment provided and the teams and the equipment moved to site. This would take at least a fortnight. The earliest date by which the work in the field would commence would thus be 20/25 March 1968. The Rann will get tide water and there may be an occasional shower in the month of May, when the work will have to be discontinued due to inaccessibility. Even assuming that the whole of May is available for the field work, there would be less than 70 days available for the field work and, as observed above, the field work requires about 140 days. Thus it is impossible to complete demarcation during the current season.

14. The most practicable programme would be to ascertain the control points, erect the control pillars and observe all control pillars now and undertake the rest of the work during the recess and the next field season commencing from October. According to this programme, it will be possible to complete the field work by the end of March 1969 and prepare and authenticate the strip maps by the end of May 1969.

15. I have recorded the above note after full discussions with the officers of the Survey of India and the Chief Engineer of the Government of Gujarat, who is fully familiar with the conditions of the Rann as well as who is responsible for the supply of men and material for the erection of pillars.

2347. The Indo-Pakistan Western Boundary Case Tribunal
       (Constituted Pursuant To The Agreement of 30 June, 1965)
       Minutes of the meeting held on 22 September, 1969 at 10 a.m. at Svea Hovratt, Stockholm

       Present:                        The Tribunal:
       Gunnar Lagergren,             Gunnar Lagergren,
       Chairman                     Chairman
       Nasrollah Entezam,            Nasrollah Entezam,

       Alevs Bebler,                 Alevs Bebler, Member                       Member

       H.E. Mr. Y.K. Puri, Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary
       H.E. Mr. Ikbal Akhtar, Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary
       J. Gillis Wetter, Secretary-General

                       ..................

1. The meeting was opened by the Chairman at 10 a.m.

2. The Chairman made reference to the Agreement of 30 June, 1965 pursuant to which the Tribunal had been constituted, Article 3 subparagraph (iv) of which provided in part as follows:

“Both governments undertake to implement the findings of the Tribunal in full as quickly as possible and shall refer to the Tribunal for decision any difficulties which may arise between them in the implementation of these findings. For that purpose the Tribunal shall remain in being until its findings have been implemented in full.”

3. The Chairman recalled that the Award of the Tribunal was rendered in Geneva on 19 February 1968, at which time, i. a., the Conclusions of the Award had been communicated to the Parties, and that the full text of the Award had been delivered to the Parties in Stockholm on 31 March 1969. Subsequent to the latter meeting a copy of the full Award had been forwarded to the Secretary-General of the United Nations for deposit and custody in the United Nations archives at Headquarters.

4. The Chairman referred to the Agreement on the rules of Procedure for the Demarcation of the Boundary entered into between the Parties on 13 July 1968, which was attached as Annex 1 to the Award. In accordance with its provisions, the Tribunal had received monthly Progress Reports from the Parties on the demarcation of the boundary.

The Secretary-General, at the request of the Chairman, read certain passages from Reports dated 17 April 1968, 12 May 1968, 8/9 July 1968 and 9 July 1968.

5. The Chairman stated that the Tribunal had not been called upon to decide any question in the course of the implementation by the Parties of the findings of the Tribunal. Both Parties, the Government of Pakistan by a letter dated 8 July 1969, and the Government of India by a letter dated 22 July 1969, had transmitted to the Tribunal original copies of a document entitled “Agreed minutes”, executed by both parties on 6 July 1969, which provided in part as follows:

“The boundary has been demarcated on the ground in accordance with the Award and the Agreement on the Rules of Procedure for the Demarcation of the Boundary entered into between India and Pakistan on July 13, 1967. The final record of the demarcation, as prepared by the Officers-in-Charge of demarcation, and signed by them, was noted and approved. Fifteen copies of the strip maps have been authenticated in original by the Plenipotentiaries of both the Governments after they had been signed by the Officers-in-Charge demarcation and by the Representatives of the two Governments in overall charge of demarcation. Five copies of the strip maps have been retained by each Government. The remaining five copies will be submitted, for record, by the Government of Pakistan to the Chairman of the Tribunal in Stockholm under intimation to the Government of India.

“The findings of the Tribunal have accordingly been implemented in full by the two Governments and the boundary determined by the Tribunal has been demarcated on the ground. The boundary so demarcated is the boundary between India and Pakistan in this sector.”

The Agreed Minutes further provided that both Parties would request the Chairman to convene a meeting in Stockholm at which the Tribunal should take note of the Agreed Minutes and the authenticated maps which evidenced the implementation of the findings of the Tribunal in full, and declare that the Tribunal’s work having been completed, it stood dissolved with effect from such date. The Agreed Minutes also stipulated that a copy of the Agreed minutes, together with a copy of the signed minutes of the final meeting of the Tribunal, be sent to the Secretary-General of the United Nations for his information.

In their aforesaid letters of transmittal, the Government of India and the Government of Pakistan had requested the Chairman to convene a meeting for the purpose set forth in the Agreed Minutes.

6. The Chairman declared that the Tribunal had taken note of the content of the Agreed Minutes and had also placed on record the original authenticated copies of the 51 strip maps which had been delivered to the Tribunal.

7. The Chairman made the following statement on behalf of the Tribunal:

“Since the Award of this Tribunal was rendered a year and a half ago the Tribunal has closely followed the Progress Reports which have been received from India and Pakistan on the demarcation of the boundary determined by the Tribunal. The immensity and severe difficulty of the task undertaken by the Parties has been vividly brought forth in some of the Progress Reports, as illustrated by the few passages read earlier in the course of this Meeting. The painstaking joint work of the Parties is further admirably evidenced in the final maps covering the entire boundary which are laid on the table before us. We express our respect and admiration for the promising spirit of co-operation and fairness which has reigned between the Parties since the day of the execution of the constitutive Agreement of 30 June, 1965, throughout the written and oral proceedings and the subsequent implementation in full of our findings. It is our belief that the boundary case which this Tribunal was called upon to resolve will prove to be of significance far beyond the compass of the actual matter in dispute. In this instance two of the most important nations in the world have elected a course of action on the road to peace which has given an anxious mankind a streak of hope.”
8. The Ambassador of India made a statement attached as Annex I hereto.
9. The Ambassador of Pakistan made a statement attached as Annex II hereto.
10. The Chairman stated that a copy of the Agreed Minutes and of the present Minutes would be sent to the Secretary-General of the United Nations.
11. The Chairman declared the Tribunal dissolved.

Done in sextuplicate on this 22nd day of September 1969 in Stockholm, the Parties taking one original copy each.

ANNEX – I

Statement made by His Excellency, Mr. Y.K. Puri, Ambassador of India.

Mr. Chairman, Excellencies and Gentlemen:

You, Mr. Chairman, have summed up admirably the history of this Tribunal since its inception in February 1966 and the result of its labours. Now that the labours of the Tribunal have come to a close, I deem it a privilege to be present on this solemn occasion when the Tribunal holds its final Session. I take this opportunity to express the thanks of the Government of India to the Governments of Sweden, Yugoslavia and Iran for having made available the services of eminent citizens to serve on this Tribunal. Our thanks are also due to you, Mr. Chairman, to His Excellency Dr. Ales Bebler and to His Excellency Mr. Nsrollah Entezam for having accepted the membership of the Tribunal and for the sincerity with which they have carried out their onerous responsibilities. I would also like to convey our sincere appreciation of the work done by Dr. J. Gillis Wetter as Secretary-General of the Tribunal.

May I also take this opportunity to request you, Mr. Chairman, to convey to the Secretary-General of the United Nations, the Government of India’s appreciation of the interest he has taken in the setting up of the Tribunal and its work.

Y. K. Puri
Statement by His Excellency Mr. Ikbal Athar, Ambassador of Pakistan

Mr. Chairman,

May I take this valedictory occasion to thank you and the distinguished members associated with you in your Tribunal, on behalf of my Government, for the eminent way in which all of you have through your indefatigable and strenuous public labours in the highest traditions of law and equity, brought this Rann of Kutch boundary dispute to a successful conclusion.

Permit me to endorse what you have just said on behalf of your Tribunal, and I quote: “In this instance two of the most important nations in the world have elected a course of action on the road to peace which has given an anxious mankind a streak of hope.”

That statement to my mind expresses neatly and succinctly the far reaching international significance of your work. I do not therefore have to say more.

In conclusion, allow me once again to express the deep appreciation of my Government and myself for the splendid work that you and your distinguished colleagues have put in to help translate our hopes of peace into reality.

I thank you Mr. Chairman.

Ambassador of Pakistan

CANAL/INDUS WATERS
2348. Extract relevant to Canal Waters from the Record of the meeting of the Partition Committee held at Jullundur.

Jullundur (Punjab), 18th and 19th November, 1947.

Supplementary Agenda

Item 4.-Consideration of the interim report submitted by Khan Bahadur Muhammad Abdul Hamid, Chief Engineer, West Punjab, Irrigation Branch, regarding the future management of the Bari Doab Canal and Ferozepore Headworks.

NOTES.-While considering paragraph 15 of the Report of Expert Committee ‘B’ in regard to the Upper Bari Doab Canal and the Ferozepore Head-works, the Partition Committee decided in their meeting held on the 28th July 1947 that the matter should be looked into by a sub-committee consisting of Messrs. Saroop Singh and Hamid (from the Irrigation Department of West Punjab Government) and that they should put up a joint proposal in respect of maintenance of supplies of water to the areas in the two provinces irrigated by these canals and collection and crediting of water rates on the understanding that the Head-works could be maintained by the province in whose jurisdiction they were located.

2. In this connection Mr. Hamid has submitted an interim report vide his demi-official letter No. 46/Partition, dated the 8th November 1947, a copy of which is enclosed, for the information of the Partition Committee.

**********

Letter No. 46 dated November 8, 1947 from West Punjab Government to East Punjab Government. Lahore, 8.11.1947

D.O. No. 46/Partition November 8, 1947

Reference your D. O. letter No. 940-PC.47/568, dated 28-10-47, the position is that the Sub-Committee of S. B. S. Sarup Singh and myself deputed one officer from each side namely K. B. S. I. Mahbub for the West Punjab and R. B. L. Hakim Rai for the East Punjab to work out proposals for irrigation arrangements from the Upper Bari Doab Canal. These officers prepared proposals which did not deal with the problem in sufficient detail. Early in August S. B. S. Sarup Singh left for Simla. Also all the detailed plans were in charge of the Superintending Engineer, Upper Bari Doab Canal Circle (R. B. L. Hakim Rai) and although Mr. Mahbub has been trying to get copies of the plans for formulating proposals, he has not been able to get any plans so far. Thus the question of a joint discussion of the proposals by S. B. S. Sarup Singh and myself has not arisen so far. Secretary ‘W’ (Mr. Protheroe) is trying to arrange a joint meeting of Chief Engineers, West and East Punjab, in which this matter would also be discussed.

2. Similarly the question of further proposals for proper distribution of supply between the various partners from the Ferozepore Head-works has not been discussed so far and will be discussed by Secretary ‘W’ in the joint meeting of the Chief Engineers, West and East Punjab.

3. Until these proposals are discussed, further question of collection and crediting water rates and apportionment of costs of repairs of the canal and Head-works etc. cannot be considered in detail.

At its second meeting held on November 27, 1947 in Lahore the Committee decided that “Mr. M. A. Hamid, Chief Engineer, West Punjab, and S. Sarup Singh, Chief Engineer, East Punjab, will submit a joint report at its next meeting regarding the future working of the Upper Bari Doab Canal and the Ferozepore Head-works”. When the next meeting of the Punjab Partition Committee took place at Jullundur on December 19-20, 1947, it was recorded: that “the Chief Engineers of the two Provinces had recorded and signed agreements regarding the future working of the Upper Bari Doab canal and the Ferozepore Head-works. These agreements were approved by the Partition Committee.”

2349. Stand-still Agreement regarding the running of the Upper Bari Doab Canal between the Governments of East and West Punjab.

1. This agreement has validity up to the end of the current rabi crop i.e. the 31st March 1948 and the parties to the agreement may during the currency thereof execute a further agreement for any period subsequent to the aforesaid date.

2. In the distribution of supplies to the channels that are now situated within the territories of the East Punjab and West Punjab, the status quo i.e. the system in vogue prior to the partition of the Punjab shall be maintained.

The distribution programme will be prepared by the Superintending Engineer, Upper Bari Doab Canal, East Punjab and the Superintending Engineer, Central Bari Doab, West Punjab in consultation and put into force immediately.
With a view to effecting proper regulation of channels the telegraph lines running from Amritsar to Wagha and along the Main Branch Lower shall be immediately restored by the parties concerned.

3. No party will have any claim for the restitution of water not used by it when available.

No claim whatsoever for compensation shall lie against the Government of the East Punjab for any closure of the canal which is necessary in the interest of the safety or maintenance of the works or on account of shortage of supply due to causes beyond its control. As far as practicable due notice of closure will be given.

4. The maintenance and management of the Head-works with its connected works and of the main canal branches and distributaries lying within the territory of the East Punjab shall rest entirely in the hands of the Government of the East Punjab.

5. The West Punjab Government will pay to the East Punjab Government its share of all expenditure in proportion to the authorized full supply of its channels, from the 15th of August 1947 to the 31st of March 1948.

6. This stand-still agreement is without prejudice to the case pending before the Arbitral Tribunal regarding the valuation and division of canal assets.

On March 29, 1948 Irrigation Secretary of East Punjab in an express telegram informed the Chief Engineer (Irrigation) of West Punjab, Lahore to note that the Stand Still agreements relating to Upper Bari Doab and Sutlej Valley Canals expire on March 31, 1948. On March 31, the Chief Engineer, Irrigation of West Punjab telegraphically requested the Chief Secretary, West Punjab to extend the two agreements “pending consideration at the next meeting” and asked for earliest convenient dates for the meeting. On 2nd April Chief Engineer, West Punjab Protheroe sent a telegraphic message to his counterpart in East Punjab Sarup Singh: “Hear you have stopped supplies Central Bari Doab Canal and Sutlej Valley Canals. Kindly extend period of Stand-still Agreement pending next joint meeting. Wireless already sent requesting you fix earliest convenient date.”

1. This Agreement will have validity up to the end of the present Rabi crop, i.e., 31st March, 1948; and the parties to the Agreement may during the currency thereof execute further agreement for any period subsequent to the aforesaid date.

2. In the distribution of supplies of the Sutlej Valley Canals that are situated within the territories of East and West Punjab and Bikaner and Bahawalpur States, status quo will be maintained.

On account of the partition of the Punjab, copies of the water accounts will also be sent to the Chief Engineers of East and West Punjab.

3. No party will have any claim for the restitution of water not used by it when available.

No claim whatsoever for compensation shall lie against the Government of the East Punjab for any closure of any canal which is necessary in the interest of equitable regulation or the safety or maintenance of the works.

4. Besides the existing financial arrangements, the West Punjab will pay to the East Punjab Government its share of all expenditure on Ferozepore Headworks on account of the Depalpur Canal. The amount payable by the Bahawalpur State on account of tail distributary of the Eastern Canal will now be the dues of the Eastern Punjab.

Simla, April 10, 1948.

Your wireless message M. 161, dated thirty first March, 1948. The Stand-still Agreement expired on thirty-first March, 1948, and accordingly the supplies were stopped. East Punjab Government notes your request for supply of water to your Central Bari Doab Canal Channels and Sutlej Valley Canals. We are prepared to consider the matter on terms to be mutually agreed upon. Chief Engineers, Irrigation Branch, East Punjab, would be glad to meet your Chief Engineers at Simla on fifteenth April. Please make this convenient. It is understood that the question of modification of the boundary at Ferozepore and Suleimanki would also be considered. On hearing from you arrangements will be made for accommodation at Simla. Chief Engineers, Irrigation, East, will also communicate with your Chief Engineers.

2352. Wireless message from the Chief Secretary, West Punjab, to the Chief Secretary, East Punjab.

Lahore, April 12, 1948.

Your wireless message. My Government regret to note that your Government has stopped the water supply in our canals without good cause. Termination of period of previous agreement could not mean that water supply should be stopped. Supply of water is essential element in all partition arrangements relating to these canals and separate agreement relates to incidentals only. Hope you will restore water supply immediately as requested by me on telephone. Our Chief Engineers will reach Simla for meeting on fifteenth. Regret they cannot discuss boundary question because Inter-Dominion agreement is that policy questions regarding boundary should be discussed at dominion level only.

2353. Wireless message from West Punjab Governor to East Punjab Governor.

(Date not available)

It has been brought to my notice that supplies in the Upper Bari Doab Canal and the Depalpur Canal from the Ferozepore Head-works are being stopped on account of the expiry of the Stand-still agreements. Shall be grateful if you will pass orders for the immediate resumption of supplies pending extension of the stand-still agreements in view of the fact that we have agreed to pay 43 per cent. of the cost of the entire canal system for the Upper Bari Doab and 69 per cent of the cost of Head-works in the case of Depalpur.

2354. Telegram from Pakistan Prime Minister Liaquat Ali Khan to Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru.

Karachi, April 15, 1948.

IMMEDIATE

No.1361.

Following from Liaquat Ali Khan to Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru.

Upper BARI DOAB canal which is perennial, taking off at MADHOPUR in East Punjab irrigates GURDASPUR and AMRITSAR districts of that province and Lahore district of West Punjab. The distribution of water supplies among various canals is well recognised by irrigation officers of the two provinces. Similarly DEPALPUR canal which irrigates MONTGOMERY district in West Punjab takes off in East Punjab Province. This canal is not perennial and carries water in hot weather from April till October.

2. Government of West Punjab has reported that East Punjab has stopped supply of water to Lahore through Upper Bari Doab canal since April 1st and it has refused to supply water in Depalpur canal with effect from April 11th. The ostensible reason given is that an agreement subsisted between the two

On April 14, 1948 also the Indian Deputy High Commissioner stationed at Lahore telegraphically informed the Ministry of External Affairs of the stoppage of the canal waters to West Punjab on expiry of agreements on April 1st. He further added that “West Punjab Government has stopped operation of lockers and removal of household effects in retaliation. Quick decision necessary in the matter. Meeting Premier tomorrow.”
provinces for a period of 3 months up to March 31st 1948 and has not been renewed yet. This agreement referred to incidental matters. The Government of East Punjab had suggested a meeting and has now fixed 15th as the date. West Punjab Government has agreed to send its engineers to attend it.

3. The view of West Punjab Government is that water supply cannot be stopped on any account whatsoever and we fully endorse this view. Such stoppage is a most serious matter and affects a million acres of land. It will cause distress to millions and will result in calamitous reduction in production of food grains etc. Repercussions of grave character are apprehended and I am sure that neither Dominion would like such a dangerous situation to arise.

4. I shall be grateful if you take immediate action for restoring water supply and for arranging that water supply through the two canals is not stopped by East Punjab in future. I regret that before we have had time enough to settle our existing problems the Government of East Punjab has thought it fit to create new ones and I have no doubt that you will take a serious view of this situation.

In reply on April 16, in his telegram No. PRIMIN 1124 Prime Minister Nehru informed Liaquat Ali Khan that it was understood from East Punjab Government "that repeated attempts were made by them by telephone and telegram to West Punjab Government to consider problem of canal water supply as previous agreements expired on March 31st," and since "There was no response from West Punjab Government" the supplies were stopped. He expressed the hope that the proposed conference at Simla being planned by East Punjab Government will resolve the problem satisfactorily.
Agreement between the Government of the East Punjab Province of the Dominion of India and the Government of the West Punjab Province of the Dominion of Pakistan about the supply of water to the Channels of the Central Bari Doab Canal system of the West Punjab Province.

Simla, April 18, 1948.

WHEREAS on the 20th December 1947 the Government of the East Punjab Province of the Dominion of India and the Government of the West Punjab Province of the Dominion of Pakistan entered into an agreement regarding the continued running of the Upper Bari Doab Canal up to the 31st March 1948 on the terms and conditions specified therein.

AND WHEREAS the agreement dated 20-12-47, was made specifically subject to the award of the Arbitral Tribunal regarding the valuation and division of the canal assets.

2. AND WHEREAS the Arbitral Tribunal has, on the 17th March 1948 by virtue of the authority vested in the Tribunal under the Arbitral Tribunal Order, 1947, and the Punjab Partition (Apportionment of Assets and Liabilities) Order, 1947, made under section 9 of the Indian Independence Act, 1947, given the award regarding the Irrigation System of the Punjab Province providing inter alia:

(i) that twice the book values of the Irrigation system as a whole shall be taken as the value of the system and shall be apportioned between West Punjab and East Punjab in the general ratio; and

(ii) that, each Province shall bring into account the portion of the system lying within its areas taken at twice its book value.

3. AND WHEREAS in accordance with aforesaid Orders and award the East Punjab Government has become the owner of the Upper Bari Doab Canal System and the channels of the System in the West Punjab Province ceased to receive the supply of water after the 31st March 1948.

4. AND WHEREAS at the request of the West Punjab Government, the East Punjab Government has agreed in consideration set out hereafter to supply water to the channels of the Central Bari Doab Canal System of the West Punjab Province through the Irrigation System owned by the East Punjab Government on the terms and conditions hereinafter stated.
Now THIS AGREEMENT WITNESSETH as follows:

5. This agreement will take effect from the date of its ratification by the Dominions of India and Pakistan and will be valid up to the end of the 1948 Kharif crop i.e. 30th September 1948. (The agreement was not ratified by the Government of Pakistan)

11. 12. A sum of Rs.9,40,000/- on account will be paid by the Government of the West Punjab to the Government of the East Punjab by the end of April 1948 in lieu of the supply of water for the period 15.8.1947 to 31.3.1948 and will be adjusted on furnishing of the final account by the East Punjab. In working out the exact amount, the same principles will be applied as in the schedule referred to in clause 11 above, except that no Seigniorage charges shall be levied.

SCHEDULE

Calculations for amount recoverable from West Punjab for the supply of water by East Punjab to the channels of Central Bari Doab system of West Punjab for Kharif 1948.

This consists of three parts:—

(A) Interest charges at 4% on the present capital value of the Head-works, main canal and branches, and distributaries for 6 months.

(B) Working expenses for the Head-works, main canal and branches, and distributaries for 6 months.

(C) Seigniorage charges.

(A) Booked capital outlay to end of 31-3-1947:

- Head-works = Rs. 11,71,000/-
- Main Canal and Branches lying in the East Punjab = Rs. 93,59,641/-
- Distributaries = Rs. 2,33,248/-
- Total = Rs. 107,63,889/-
- Other charges such as Establishment, Tools and Plant, etc. = Rs. 28,87,800/-
- Grand Total = Rs. 136,51,689/-

Present capital value of the above works is taken at four times the above booked outlay.

Interest charges on the present capital value at 4% for 6 months

\frac{4}{100} \times \frac{6}{12} \times 546,06,756 = Rs. 10,92,135/-

(B) Working expenses from 15.8.1947 to 31.3.1948.

- For Head-works = Rs. 7,07,141/-
- For Main Canal & Branches = Rs. 2,63,100/-
- For Distributaries = Rs. 15,606/-
- Total = Rs. 9,85,847/-
This expenditure is for 7½ months. To work out the expenditure for 6 months, a factor of 0.8 is applied. Thus working expenses for 6 months are:—

\[9,85,847 \times 0.8 = \text{Rs}.7,88,678/-\]

Total of \((A) + (B) = 7,88,678+10,92,135 = 18,80,815/- (sic \text{Rs}. 18,80,813)\)

Portion debitable to West Punjab @ 40 %

\[= 18,80,815^* \times 40/100= \text{Rs}.7,52,325/- \text{ I}\]

\((C) \quad \text{Seigniorage} \quad \text{charges @ Rs. 70/. per cusec of discharge}=2477 \times 70 = \text{Rs}.1,73,390/- \text{ II}\)

Total of I+II = 7,52,325+1,73,390 = \text{Rs}. 9,25,715/-

Say= \text{Rs}. 9,25,000/-

2357. Wireless message, from the Chief Secretary, West Punjab, to the Chief Secretary, East Punjab.

Lahore, April 20, 1948.

Our Chief Engineers have reported to Government the results of their negotiations at Simla. We are of opinion that the basis for agreement requires scrutiny and the final decision after further negotiations between Dominion Governments assisted by their Provincial Governments may take some time. We, therefore, suggest that water supply in Upper Bari Doab and Dipalpur Canals for West Punjab areas may be restored at once. Whatever agreement is finally arrived at will have effect from 1st April 1948 or any prior date agreed upon. Further stoppage of water supply will affect production of food and cause great and unnecessary distress and we appeal to you to help in avoiding it. We are ourselves anxious that there should be agreement regarding these canals, but we consider that water supplies should continue uninterrupted as token of our friendliness. We are contacting Pak Government to arrange early meeting to be attended by Dominion and Provincial Representatives on both sides.

❖ ❖ ❖ ❖ ❖❖ ❖ ❖ ❖ ❖❖ ❖ ❖ ❖ ❖

The next day (21-4-48) the Chief Secretary, East Punjab replied in his wireless message No 100G-ER: "Your wireless message of twentieth instant. The matter was thoroughly discussed with your representatives at Simla and as a result of lengthy negotiations the terms were agreed upon. These were carefully scrutinized and signed by your Chief Engineers in token of acceptance and we were hoping to get your approval to acceptance of these terms. We shall immediately open canals on hearing your acceptance of these terms. Final ratification by Dominion Governments can follow. We ourselves fully appreciate difficulties and are very anxious to avoid unnecessary hardship and distress occasioned by stoppage of water, but cannot disregard obligations to our own people."

Telegram from Pakistan Prime Minister Liaquat Ali Khan to Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru.

Karachi, April 24, 1948.

MOST IMMEDIATE

From Liaquat Ali, Khan for Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru.

No. 1519.—Your telegram PRIMIN in 1124 of April 16th, I may mention at the outset that my telegram to which yours was a reply did not refer only to the Upper BARI Doab Canal but also to DIPALPUR Canal.

I have consulted West Punjab Government. It is correct that East Punjab engineers approached West Punjab engineers in March for preparing a fresh agreement for regulation of water supplies after March 31st. West Punjab engineers had similarly approached East Punjab engineers for same purpose but no meeting could take place because East Punjab appointed neither date nor place of meeting. West Punjab sent message on March 31st requesting the calling of an early meeting and suggesting continuance of previous arrangements. Throughout this period there was no suggestion of stoppage of water supply. In fact the stand-still agreement for three months January to March was accepted by West Punjab Government on express assurance by Sardar Sawarn Singh (at that time Minister in the East Punjab Government) to Sardar Shaukat Hayat Khan that East Punjab had no intention of stopping supply of water at any stage. This assurance was given at Jullundur in a meeting of Partition Committee presided over by Governor East Punjab in December 1947. We maintain that all arrangements connected with partition stipulated that lands receiving irrigation from canals should continue to receive similar irrigation in spite of partition. This was the reason why all head-works and water channels of Irrigation Department were valued for purpose of financial adjustments, otherwise water channels in Province other than Province which got head-works would be valueless. The main point is that West Punjab has both inherent and prescriptive rights to obtain water of which it is being deprived. Who maintain that such right cannot be interfered with simply because some agreement regarding incidentals has yet to be negotiated. West Punjab will hold Government of East Punjab liable for any loss or damage which people of West Punjab might be put to by this stoppage of water.

You have referred to exploratory conference of engineers held in Simla on 17th instant. I have seen terms of proposed settlement that have been offered by East Punjab to West Punjab after discussion among engineers. I observe that these terms have far-reaching consequences and it will be necessary to hold Inter-Dominion Confidence to discuss them. Will you very kindly suggest a suitable place and date for such conference as early as possible? In the meantime I would request you to ask East Punjab to restore water supply forthwith because its interruption is likely to cause great distress to very large areas and to very large number of persons and it will have very serious consequences. I trust, therefore, that you would agree to my suggestion and have water supply restarted immediately.

In his telegram No. PRIMIN 1146 of 27th April Prime Minister Nehru suggested May 3 as the date for the inter-dominion conference in New Delhi.

2359. Telegram from Chief Secretary, East Punjab, to Chief Secretary, West Punjab.

Simla, April 26, 1948.

No. N. PTN48/2019. Your wireless Message of twenty-fourth. We cannot accept your statement that the documents signed by Chief Engineers were merely a record of the best terms which our Engineers were prepared to offer. These documents themselves explain their nature. The terms offered to your Chief Engineers were considerably whittled down and after lengthy discussion and negotiations terms acceptable to your Chief Engineers were embodied in these agreements. In coming to agreement our Engineers were prompted by keen desire for immediate settlement in view of hardship involved if water supplies were stopped for any length of time. This was exactly the procedure followed when last Stand-still agreements regarding canal water supplies were entered into and endorsed by the Partition Committee. Regret we cannot restore supplies in the absence of any agreement after expiry of last Stand-still agreement. Suggest the agreements accepted by Chief Engineers should govern water supplies pending settlement at dominion level as proposed by you. We shall abide by whatever settlement is finally made as a result of Inter-Dominion Conference.

Letter from Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru to Premier of East Punjab Gopichand Bhargava.

New Delhi, April 28, 1948.

My dear Gopichand ji,

I am greatly worried at the stoppage of canal water which used to flow to Lahore district. Whatever the legal and technical merits may be, there is little doubt that this act will injure us greatly in the world’s eyes, and more specially when food production is so urgently needed everywhere. As you are perhaps aware, we have convened an inter-Dominion conference to consider this matter and your Government’s representative will be coming to it.

There is another difficulty. I am told by our military authorities that owing to the stoppage of water there is too much water roundabout Pathankot and this is coming in the way of our building a bridge which is so urgently needed.

I have little doubt that water will have to be allowed in future because such stoppages cannot occur normally unless there is actual war. To stop water for the fields is supposed to be rather an inhuman act. I suggest to you, therefore, to consider this matter afresh. If we act with grace now (although it is getting rather late for it), we might get the benefit of it. Otherwise there will be no grace left and no benefit.

You will know best how to deal with this situation. If I may suggest a possible course, it is this: You may say that in view of the fact that an inter-Dominion conference is going to be held soon to consider this matter, your Government is permitting the flow of water for the time being as it is not your desire that the common people should suffer.

Yours sincerely,

Jawaharlal Nehru

Shri Gopichand Bhargava,
Premier, West Punjab
Simla.

From Liquat Ali Khan to Pundit Jawahar Lal Nehru.

No. 1583. Your telegram No. 1146 dated 27th. We accept May 3rd as date of meeting at New Delhi. PAKISTAN Government’s Delegation will be led by Mr. Ghulam Mohammad, Finance Minister, who will be assisted by High Commissioner for Pakistan in New Delhi, Mr. WASIM, Advocate-General of Pakistan and Mr. MOHSIN ALI, Consulting Engineer. The West Punjab Government will be represented by 2 Ministers, Mr. MUMTAZ DAULTANA and Sardar SHAUKAT Hayat Khan, who will be assisted by Majid, Chief Secretary, Hamid, Chief Engineer and Mr. ABDUL AZIZ, Engineer.

2. Regarding the question of water supply I understand that correspondence between East and West Punjab has been INFRUCTUOUS. In view of serious consequences that are likely to result from continued stoppage of water may I request you to order the opening of supplies pending settlement of entire question during Inter-Dominion Conference. The interval between now and Conference is very short but period is most vital.

2362.  Telegram from Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru to Pakistan Prime Minister Liaquat Ali Khan.

New Delhi, April 29, 1948.

Following for Liaquat Ali Khan from Jawaharlal Nehru.

No. PRIMIN. 1155—Your telegram No.1583, dated 28th April. We are glad that your representatives are coming here on the 3rd May to discuss the question of supply of water from Upper Bari Doab and Dipalpur Canals. Both Government of India and East Punjab Government are anxious that this matter should be settled satisfactorily. Indeed as you know a settlement was arrived at recently between East Punjab and West Punjab engineers. We accepted that settlement but West Punjab Government has thus far not accepted it. We can only proceed on the basis of that settlement so long as no other arrangement is arrived at an Inter-Dominion conference.

I have been sorry to notice that an official spokesman of West Punjab Government had made various charges against East Punjab Government which are completely without foundation. In particular his statement that Sardar Sawaran Singh, Revenue Minister, East Punjab Government, gave an undertaking to West Punjab Government is untrue. However I do not wish to enter into this argument except to make it clear that East Punjab Government has consistently tried to implement agreements arrived at and is anxious that no suffering or injury be caused to agriculturists. I have spoken to Premier, East Punjab and in view of impending Inter-Dominion conference he is agreeable immediately to issue orders for resumption of water supply from the Upper Bari Doab and Dipalpur canals. It should be understood that this is on basis of agreement arrived at Simla recently subject to any variation which might be made at the Inter-Dominion conference. Orders are being issued accordingly.

Following Prime Minister’s intervention, on April 30th Chief Secretary, East Punjab telegraphically informed Chief Secretary West Punjab that while no reply had been received from West Punjab to East Punjab’s telegram No. Ptn. 48, dated 28th instant “but as a gesture of goodwill we have decided to supply you water on the basis of the agreement reached on the 18th April at Simla between the Chief Engineers of East and West Punjab and have issued instructions to our Chief Engineers today. Kindly acknowledge immediately.”

Karachi, May 1, 1948.

For Jawaharlal Nehru from Liaquat Ali Khan.

No. 1633. Many thanks for your telegram dated April 30th, 1948 intimating resumption of water supply to UPPER BARI DOAB and DIPALPUR Canals. I refrain commenting on terms offered by East Punjab at Simla in view of forthcoming Inter-Dominion conference at New Delhi on May 3rd. Nor do I wish to offer any remarks on paragraph No.3 of your telegram at this stage. I hope a satisfactory solution would be reached at conference. Meanwhile thank you for all trouble you took in getting water supply re-started.

2364. Record of the meeting between Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru and Pakistan Finance Minister Ghulam Mohammed.

New Delhi, May 3, 1948.

Mr. Ghulam Mohammed came to see me this evening. He was alone. He spoke to me about the canal water dispute between East and West Punjab and said that to his great regret the inter-Dominion conference today had suddenly broken up. The conference, he said, was proceeding calmly and cooperatively and an attempt was being made to find a way out of the difficulties. Mr. Gadgil was helpful. At a later stage however Dr. Ambedkar (Law Minister) intervened and laid down the law rather harshly and brusquely. Dr. Ambedkar would consider no interim arrangement and insisted that the legal position as maintained by the East Punjab Government must be accepted or else there could not even be a temporary agreement.

2. Mr. Ghulam Mohammed had suggested that in view of a conflict of opinion about certain legal aspects, the matter might be referred to arbitration. This proposal was rejected and ultimately Mr. Gadgil put an end to the conference.

3. Mr. Ghulam Mohammed told me that he was greatly distressed at this and he was eager to find some way out of the impasse. He was not in a position to accept the legal formula which the East Punjab Government had advanced because of its far-reaching consequences. The subject was a difficult and complicated one and he was not lawyer enough to say much about it. He suggested therefore that without prejudice to the position taken up by either party, a provisional agreement might be arrived at so that water should be supplied by the East Punjab Government and paid for by the West Punjab Government. Meanwhile, experts and others could consider the question in all its details and implications. This could not injure either party’s rights in any way. He was particularly concerned about the effect of any agreement on the riparian rights of rivers flowing from East Punjab. As the agreement would be without prejudice to the contentions of either party, and, meanwhile, ad hoc payments could be made, it would be a tragedy to stop the water and increase bitterness all round leading to further unfortunate consequences. He suggested that the Prime Minister of Pakistan would come here for further talks as soon as possible.

4. I told Mr. Ghulam Mohammed that I was not fully seized of all the facts of the case and had not yet seen the relevant papers. But it seemed to me that after the provisional agreement which ended on March 31st and the Arbitral Award, the rights in the canal head-works and the water vested completely in East Punjab. No doubt East Punjab should continue to supply water subject to the terms of any agreement. To challenge that fundamental right created a difficulty as the East Punjab Government thought that they would be put in a false position by submitting to that challenge. Again it might be easy to supply surplus water. But when water was relatively scarce the question would arise as to who should get it and in what quantity. In the arrangement of the canal system in the past the West Punjab area had been favoured and certain districts of East Punjab had suffered greatly. Hissar and other districts had suffered from famine repeatedly. It was natural for the East Punjab Government to desire to supply more water to Hissar and other neighbouring districts. If this was to be done West Punjab would inevitably suffer a lack from this source. It was for West Punjab to make alternative arrangements. These arrangements would no doubt take a little time and East Punjab would try to supply water to the best of its ability during this intervening period.

5. Mr. Ghulam Mohammed said that this matter was actually being discussed in the conference and Mr. Gadgil had appeared to favour some solution when Dr. Ambedkar put an end to such discussions. Mr. Ghulam Mohammed agreed that West Punjab should make its own arrangements and it may be that when these arrangements were completed East Punjab might be entitled to put an end to the arrangements to supply water.

6. I said if this was so, then it was obvious that East Punjab had the fullest right over the supply of water. If they could stop it after a certain period, then that right was there even now, subject, it may be, to humanitarian and other reasons which made it desirable to supply water till other arrangements were made. The legal position now was clear and East Punjab’s contention was justified.
7. Mr. Ghulam Mohammed pointed out that in calculating the value of the canal system the Arbitral Tribunal had taken present prices which were much more than original prices. They had valued the canal system and the head-works accordingly and West Punjab had been made to pay for that canal system. If East Punjab could stop the water for two canals then obviously those canals were completely useless and had no value left. Hence it could not be maintained that water should be stopped. Apart from this it was most unreasonable to allow water to flow into the sea when it could be used for agricultural and other human purposes.

8. Mr. Ghulam Mohammed repeatedly said that he could not argue the legal point, but when West Punjab is prepared to pay for the water he could not understand the difficulty of arriving at a provisional agreement without prejudice to either party’s contention. In the course of a month or two the matter could be examined fully by competent experts; also, that the real difficulty was not the canal water but the riparian rights of rivers.

9. I told Mr. Ghulam Mohammed that the real difficulty was the fear on either side of accepting a legal position which might be disadvantageous. This related to the seigniory rights. As a matter of fact Bikaner etc., who were taking water from these canals, paid a certain sum for these rights and there seemed to me no particular difficulty in West Punjab agreeing to this. In any event it might be possible to come to an arrangement under which the amount due to East Punjab from West Punjab on account of seigniory dues might be deposited somewhere, for instance, in the Reserve Bank, pending a final settlement of the other sums to be paid to East Punjab. Ghulam Mohammed indicated that he might be willing to agree to this as he was anxious to remove this great cause of friction on which both the East - West Punjab Governments felt so strongly and which affected the lives of a million and half people in West Punjab.

10. I asked him if he accepted the other figures which had been agreed by respective engineers. He said that those engineers were not competent to consider financial matters. They had been confronted with a document by the East Punjab engineers and they had ultimately signed it subject to agreement in regard to these controversial clauses by their respective governments. While he did not accept those amounts mentioned he thought there would great difficulty in arriving at some figures. In any event ad hoc payments could be made pending further consideration. The main point was that this would be completely without prejudice to each party’s contentions and that suitable payments could be made. Further that a sum might side for seigniory dues pending a final decision. All these not to apply to riparian matters.

11. I told Mr. Ghulam Mohammed that I had spoken to him without a brief but I proposed to look into the papers. I have asked him and some of his colleagues to see me tomorrow afternoon.

2365. Inter-Dominion Agreement on the Canal Water Dispute.

New Delhi, May 4, 1948.

A dispute has arisen between the East and West Punjab Governments regarding the supply by East Punjab of water to the Central Bari Doab and the Depalpur canals in West Punjab. The contention of the East Punjab Government is that under the Punjab Partition (Apportionment of Assets and Liabilities) Order, 1947, and the Arbitral Award the proprietary rights in the waters of the rivers in East Punjab vest wholly in the East Punjab Government and that the West Punjab Government cannot claim any share of these waters as a right. The West Punjab Government disputes this contention, its view being that the point has conclusively been decided in its favour by implication by the Arbitral Award and that in accordance with international law and equity, West Punjab has a right to the East Punjab rivers.

2. The East Punjab Government has revived the flow of water into these canals on certain conditions of which two are disputed by West Punjab. One, which arises out of the contention in paragraph 1, is the right to the levy of seigniorage charges for water and the other is the question of the capital cost of the Madhavpur (Madhopur) Head Works and carrier channels to be taken into account.

3. The East and West Punjab Governments are anxious that this question should be settled in a spirit of goodwill and without prejudice to its legal rights in the matter. The East Punjab Government has assured the West Punjab Government that it has no intention suddenly to withhold water from West Punjab without giving it time to tap alternative sources. The West Punjab Government on its part recognise the natural anxiety of the East Punjab Government to discharge the obligation to develop areas where water is scarce and which were under-developed in relation to parts of West Punjab.

4. Apart, therefore, from the question of law involved, the Governments are anxious to approach the problem in a practical spirit on the basis of the East Punjab Government progressively diminishing its supply to these canals in order to give reasonable time to enable the West Punjab Government to tap alternative sources.

5. The West Punjab Government has agreed to deposit immediately in the Reserve Bank such ad hoc sum as may be specified by the Prime Minister of India. Out of this sum, that Government agrees to the immediate transfer to East Punjab Government of sums over which there is no dispute.

6. After an examination by each party of the legal issues, of the method of estimating the cost of water to be supplied by the East Punjab Government and of the technical survey of water resources and the means of using them for supply to these canals, the two Governments agree that further meetings between their representatives should take place.

7. The Dominion Governments of India and Pakistan accept the above terms and express the hope that a friendly solution will be reached.

For Liaquat Ali Khan from Jawaharlal Nehru.

No. PRIMIN 1217- I draw your attention to the Inter-Dominion agreement arrived at on 4th May regarding the dispute between East and West Punjab on the subject of canal water. I had fully hoped that pending the examination referred to in paragraph 6 of the joint statement issued on the 7th May, matters would be allowed to take a normal course. East Punjab Government had given an earnest of their desire for friendly settlement by letting the waters flow into West Punjab even before the Inter-Dominion conference. I have now received reliable information that West Punjab Government have begun digging a channel with a view either or both to connect river Sutlej with Dipalpur canal or divert the course of Sutlej at Ferozepore. I am informed that bulldozers are already working on the site on the right side of the river just above Ferozepore where the river lies in loop by the Pakistan territory and that large labour force has been collected and the work has started in earnest. Should West Punjab complete this work it would cause a disaster for the Ganga Canal Colony in Bikaner State. East Punjab Government would not be able to feed their canal throughout the winter and in the event of digging of special channel by the West Punjab there is possibility of river avulsion and the result would be that the East Punjab will not be able to feed their canal even during summer.
In view of the gravity of the issues involved and their urgency the East Punjab Premier sent a wireless message to Premier, West Punjab Government. He has however been told in reply that this is a matter which should be taken up between the two Dominions.

I must ask that the matter be taken up immediately. Ghulam Mohd. will tell you that as a result of prolonged discussions conducted in a very friendly spirit we were able to arrive at a satisfactory provisional agreement. The whole of this will be upset if West Punjab persists in the course which it is reported to me they have taken. Any action of this sort taken by West Punjab Government unilaterally would, I need scarcely tell you, have very grave repercussions.

I shall be grateful for a very urgent reply as to whether the information I have received is correct, if not what the facts are.

I have not yet received a reply to my telegram PRIMIN. No.1179, dated 8th May addressed to Ghulam Mohd. Regarding the deposit of money in Reserve Bank, would you please have this expedited.

❖ ❖ ❖ ❖ ❖❖ ❖ ❖ ❖ ❖❖ ❖ ❖ ❖ ❖

The matter of the digging was first taken up by the East Punjab Irrigation Department with the West Punjab Irrigation Department on May 15, 1948. In view of the urgency of the matter the East Punjab Governor also wrote to his counterpart in Lahore, but the latter informed him that “channels of diplomatic correspondence” precluded him “from answering” his queries and that he had sent a copy of the message to the Government of Pakistan and advised the East Punjab Governor to take up the matter with the Government of India if considered desirable. He said that this matter being “other than partition matter, and should, therefore, be discussed and settled at Dominion level only.”

On May 21 Prime Minister Nehru again sent a telegram to his counterpart asking for an urgent reply and suggesting that “there have been further reports since then of the active part taken by West Punjab Ministers in the matter” and “all these reports have caused the greatest uneasiness to us and the East Punjab Government.”

Regarding the last paragraph of his message for deposit of Rs. 30 lakhs, Prime Minister suggested that it be deposited in the Reserve Bank at Amritsar as charges for the period from 15-8-1947 to the end of current quarter ending in June for the maintenance of the Madhopur Head-works and carrier channels.

2. Reference your telegram No. PRIMIN-1217 dated May 18th to Liaquat Ali Khan and your subsequent reminder. We have consulted West Punjab Government and position appears to be somewhat different from that mentioned in your telegram. In view of acute distress caused by suspension of water supplies to Dipalpur Canal the West Punjab Government prior to Delhi talks had initiated a scheme for digging a channel for connecting the Sutlej within our boundary with our Dipalpur Canal so as to ensure supply of water into canal should this prove necessary. Subject to saving our full legal rights and any final agreement that may be concluded between the two Dominions the position is as follows.

The work done by West Punjab Government is confined to PAKISTAN territory. We maintain that we have absolute right to take adequate precautionary measures to meet all eventualities. We are however prepared to obtain an assurance from West Punjab Government that marginal embankment will not be cut unless East Punjab Government again discontinue water supplies. In this connection it is pertinent to point out that West Punjab Government have been greatly perturbed by speech made by Sardar PRATAP SINGH, East Punjab Minister who is reported to have said that supplies of water to DIPALPUR Canal would be discontinued if exchange of prisoners was not effected promptly. You will agree that in view of their recent experience Government of West Punjab are fully justified in taking precautionary measures.

3. We have every intention of following up arrangement arrived at Delhi Conference and West Punjab Government have been requested to arrange to deposit necessary money in Reserve Bank of India.

For Zafrullah Khan from Jawaharlal Nehru.

No. PRIMIN. 1242— Your telegram No. 1922, dated 22nd May. Last Inter-Dominion Conference resulted in clear and signed agreement about supply of water and procedure to be followed in future. No mention was made then of this new scheme of West Punjab Government which vitally affects the whole question of canal water supply to both parties. I am surprised that this fact should have been kept away from us when this very matter was being discussed. There is no point in Inter-Dominion agreements if they can be by passed in this way.

You will appreciate that if West Punjab Government digs new channels which inevitably must cut across marginal embankments then East Punjab Government must also take precautionary measures which may result in tapping Sutlej waters higher up. This will adversely affect West Punjab interests and we are loath to embark on any such undertaking unless circumstances compel us. This process of mutual retaliation can only injure both parties and is entirely opposed to the spirit of our agreement. If any steps have to be taken by West or East Punjab Government this should first be considered at Inter-Dominion or Inter-Provincial conference in terms of Inter-Dominion agreement otherwise that agreement has no value. I trust therefore that no further steps will be taken till full discussion between parties concerned. I shall be glad to have an urgent assurance to this effect. I have not seen report of Sardar Partap Singh’s speech but there is and should be no connection whatever between supply of water and exchange of prisoners. Both questions should be dealt with separately. In regard to exchange of prisoners the sooner this is completed the better. I would remind you that this was stopped for a totally irrelevant reason by West Punjab Government.

2. Your telegram No. 1242 of May 23rd. In view of our offer to obtain an undertaking from West Punjab Government that marginal embankment will not be cut until there is a further stoppage of water we do not see how our precautionary measures are described as opposed to spirit of arrangements agreed upon at Delhi Conference. This is not a retaliatory measure but a precautionary measure which will come into operation only if there is a failure of Inter-Dominion arrangements. For our part we are observing terms of arrangements and West Punjab Government will deposit in Reserve Bank Amritsar a sum of Rs.30 lakhs. In circumstances I feel that your apprehensions are justified (unjustified?) and I do not feel why this should start a process of what you describe as mutual retaliation. We fully intend to implement arrangements agreed upon pending settlement of our full legal rights which I hope to discuss with you in Delhi on June 5th when, if you so wish, I shall also invite representatives of West Punjab.

I am happy you agree that there should be no connection whatever between the 2 separate problems of supply of water and exchange of prisoners and trust you will impress this upon Sardar PRATAP Singh.

Replying to Zafrullah on May 29, Nehru advised him not to bring along the representatives of West Punjab to discuss the canal water question, when the discussion in Delhi on June 5 were essentially “intended to enable the two Prime Ministers to discuss major issues of policy.” He however assured Zafrullah that he would “of course be delighted to discuss with him the general implications of the canal dispute between the two Provinces.” Zafrullah agreed with Nehru and in reply on June 2 suggested that he would however, “be glad to discuss the general implications of canal dispute” with him as suggested.
3. Maintenance of Upper Bari Doab Canal and Ferozepore Headworks

Note by West Punjab Government.—The Expert Committee ‘B’ appointed for the division of the physical assets of the Punjab Province considered the question of the future management of the Upper Bari Doab Canal and secondly, the Ferozepore Headworks and made certain recommendations vide para. 15 of their report. The Partition Committee however asked Messrs Sarup Singh and Hameed to put up a joint proposal in the matter. The two Chief Engineers’ agreements in this case valid up to the 31.3.1948, were duly approved by the Partition Committee. No further agreements were however executed after the 31st March, 1948 and the supply of canal water to the West Punjab was stopped. The supply has however since been resumed on the basis of an agreement between the two dominions and the facts are known to the representatives of both the East and West Punjab Governments on the Partition Committee. Further negotiations will also take place at Dominion level. The matter is now laid formally before the Partition Committee for their information.

The Committee noted this information.

2. Bahawalpur Government has complained that supply of water received through State distributary of Eastern Grey Canal which takes off from Ferozepore Head-works has been stopped and over 60,000 acres of land are affected. They did not receive any water for this distributary for rabi season 1947-48 and were under impression stoppage was due to unavoidable factors but they have now reason to believe that stoppage is deliberate. Would you very kindly ask East Punjab Government to restore water supply immediately as stoppage is causing serious distress to people of Bahawalpur and has already inflicted severe damage and loss.

2. Reference your telegram. No. 2125, dated June 4th. Bahawalpur State distributary of Eastern Grey Canal is a non-perennial channel and does not run during, rabi season. In April 1948 East Punjab engineers enquired from West Punjab engineers whether any arrangements were desired to supply water to this distributary after the expiry of the Standstill Agreement on the 31st March 1948 but were informed that West Punjab was not interested. Similarly in the discussions at Delhi which preceded the Inter-Dominion Agreement of May 4th, 1948, no mention was made of any requirements of water for this distributary although Khan Bahadur Abdul Aziz, Chief Engineer, Bahawalpur, was actually present at these meetings.*
We shall gladly discuss this matter either on a Dominion level or as between East Punjab Government on the one hand and West Punjab and Bahawalpur State on the other. You will appreciate that it is difficult for us to enter into any further commitments in view of Developments that have taken place since the Inter-Dominion Agreement of May 4th, 1948. It is desirable that all outstanding differences should be settled early in terms of that Agreement. The Bahawalpur matter to which you have referred could be included in such discussions.

* "No water is now being supplied to this distributary. We regret that we cannot enter into any further Commitments till the outstanding differences regarding the Inter-Dominion Agreement are settled." This paragraph does figure in the record of the Ministry of Irrigation and Power. It is found in the text published in Nehru’s collected works by Nehru Memorial Fund. Vol. 6 page. 69-70.

From Jawaharlal Nehru to Zafrullah Khan.

No. PRIMIN 1308

Your telegram No. 1973 of May 26th. I did not reply to this because of the proposed discussion in Delhi on June 5th. Now that this discussion has been postponed to June 15th, I must draw your attention again to serious consequences flowing from the digging of the new channel by West Punjab Government. I am glad to have your assurance that you fully intend to implement the Inter-Dominion Agreement of May 4th. But that Agreement itself laid down that any action taken by either West or East Punjab Government affecting the other Government should be after mutual consultation. Thus the unilateral decision by West Punjab to dig new channel is against letter and spirit of that Agreement and strikes at the very root of our common approach to these problems which concern the livelihood of millions of people on either side. This new channel endangers the safety of the Ferozepore Head-works and may lead to stoppage of supply of water to our canals taking off from these Head-works.

2. Your offer to obtain an undertaking from West Punjab Government that marginal embankment will not be cut until there is further stoppage of water does not help at all. This will not prevent mischief by flood waters operating through the new channel. There is also the possibility of mischievous elements deliberately damaging the embankment of the Ferozepore Head-works with a view to create difficulties between the two Dominions. The possibility of all this happening rather suddenly and thus causing enormous loss and misery to millions is one which no Government can view with equanimity. Inevitably it has to think of what you call precautionary measures against such a contingency. There is no end to this process of so-called precautionary measures on either side except a frank recognition that steps should not be taken without full consultation. We cannot therefore, agree with you that the digging of the new channel is an innocent precautionary measure. I must therefore again request you to direct that works on the new channel be stopped immediately with a view to create the necessary atmosphere for continuance of discussions between the two Dominions as envisaged in paragraph 6 of the Agreement of the 4th May 1948. Unless this is done, these discussion can hardly be fruitful.
3. We are advised that the possibility of supplying water through the new channel to the Dipalpur canal depends inter alia on the maintenance of the Ferozepore Head-works. We cannot, therefore, regard the new channel as an alternative source for supply of water to Dipalpur canal within the meaning of paragraph 4 of the Agreement of 4th May.

4. We would strongly urge you to direct stoppage of work on the link channel. Your Government or the West Punjab Government cannot suffer any prejudice by doing so as you have yourself admitted that your intention is not to utilize this channel until we commit a breach of the Agreement. We consider ourselves bound by the Agreement so long as it is observed by your Government and there is going to be no breach on our part if the terms of that Agreement are observed by both parties.

5. You will appreciate that the East Punjab Government cannot remain a passive witness of something that may cause their people grave injury. If the digging of this new channel by West Punjab continues, they will have seriously to consider what action they should take to protect their vital interests.
