3. The impression that I got was that Noon was being pressed both internally and externally to modify the policy regarding the regional pacts. The internal pressure comes from the Awami League, whose leader Maulana Bhushani declared at a public meeting held on September 15 at Dacca to congratulate Suhrwardy that they must abandon these pacts and follow a policy of non-alignment and neutrality. The external pressure is apparently been exercised from some of the Muslim countries such as Egypt and Saudi Arabia and to a small extent, by the Communist countries such as Soviet Union and China. As against these pressures, there is the pro-West attitude of the President, Iskandar Mirkza, as also his own inclinations, himself being an old stooge of the British in the good old days. Otherwise, I could not explain his outburst that it was our policy in Kashmir that was driving Pakistan into regional pacts like SEATO and Baghdad. When he mentioned that, I remarked, a little dryly, “I hope these pacts have helped you and are helping you to recover Kashmir from us”. There was of course an element of sarcasm in my remark.

4. As soon as I went into his room, I made him a present of the following four books:

1. Bound copy of the Second Five Year Plan as approved by Government.
2. 2500 years of Buddhism.

Noon told me that he appreciated the literature that I had been sending to him from time to time and that he read it all with very great interest. He had particularly studied the draft outline of our Second Five Year Plan, which I had sent him some months ago. He also said that he was looking for this book ‘2500 years of Buddhism’, and that he would read it as soon as possible. He looked over our publication ‘Kangra Valley Paintings’ and admired its get-up and its contents. These books make as fine a present to an intellectual as any that I can think of.

Letter from the High Commissioner CC Desai to Commonwealth Secretary M. J. Desai regarding Pakistan-China relations.

Karachi, October 4, 1956.

High Commission Of India
Karachi-5

D.O. No. HC/39/56 October 4, 1956

My dear M.J.

Ratan Nehru informs me that sometime in March just before he left for India he had a long talk with Premier Chou En-lai who spoke to him, among other things, about China’s attitude to the Kashmir question and to the Indo-Pakistan relations in general. The record of the talk was sent to Delhi and Ratan tells me that P.M. had it circulated to members of the Foreign Affairs Committee. We have not received an extract from the letter and I was wondering whether you could ask the Director of the Eastern Division to take out the extract and to send it to us.

2. In the same letter Ratan goes on to say that he has often spoken to Premier Chou En-lai about the Pakistan Prime Minister’s visit and that on the last occasion towards the end of August Chou En-lai merely shook his head expressing agreement with what Ratan had said about lack of stability in Pakistan. At that time Chou En-lai was wondering whether Chaudhri Mohamad Ali would be going there or not. The idea of Prime Minister of Pakistan paying a visit to China has again been revived and apparently Suhrawardy does not propose to allow grass to grow under his feet. News is being put out that Suhrawardy might fly out to Peking direct from Dacca even before the end of the session of the National Assembly which meets there on October 8 and which is expected to remain in session for nearly two weeks. The provisional date for Suhrawardy’s departure is 16th or 17th of October from Dacca. Members of the Chinese Mission here are looking forward to this visit in view of a slight change in the foreign policy of Pakistan discernible over the Suez and in view of the possibility of detaching howsoever slightly may be, Pakistan from the Western powers because of the attitude of Bhashani, the leader of the Awami League. The Soviet Embassy in Karachi does not see possibility of any real or radical change in the foreign policy of Pakistan, particularly after the recent statement by Noon that Pakistan was solid as a rock behind the Baghdad Pact. Suhrawardy has also said on more than one occasion that there must be consistency in the foreign policy of the country and that previous agreements cannot be scrapped or abandoned. This was intended to be a reference to the continued association of Pakistan with regional pacts like SEATO and Baghdad Pact as also with the American-Pakistan Military Aid Agreement. However, the fact cannot be disputed that with Suhrawardy the possibility of influence by Soviet Union and China is greater than in the case of Chaudhri Mohamad All and, no doubt, these two countries would not let the opportunity slip until they find that they have come up against a solid front backed up by U.S.A. and United Kingdom.

With kindest regards.

0197. Cable from the Indian Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru to the Pakistan Prime Minister H. S. Suhrawardy regarding a statement made by the Foreign Minister of Pakistan.

New Delhi, October 5, 1956.

I should like to draw your attention to statement made by your Foreign Minister, Malik Feroz Khan Noon recently. This statement is rather unique in the annals of diplomacy and I can only conclude that Mr. Noon has made it through ignorance, both of facts and of diplomatic procedure.

2. I do not wish to discuss this statement in detail nor do I challenge the right of any member of the Pakistan Government to criticize the policies of the Government of India. But some parts of the statement are so extraordinary that I must draw your attention to them. One of those is the reference that in the matter of Algeria, India has struck some kind of a bargain with France. Mr. Noon evidently does not know that it is India’s Representative in the United Nations who has in the past played the leading part in regard to the Algerian issue in the United Nations and that we have continued to work for the freedom of Algeria through diplomatic and other ways. We have not subscribed to the recent attempt to inscribe this matter in the UN General Assembly’s agenda because we have felt at this stage this will not help the cause of Algeria and will also confuse the Suez Canal issue, which is the dominating issue today.
3. As for Kashmir, we have not mentioned this matter to France in any context.

4. Mr. Noon also refers to so-called massacres of Muslims taking place in India. I think we are entitled to expect a Foreign Minister to base his statements on facts. The present statement is not only not related to facts at all but is absurd on the face of it.

5. You are well aware of the tremendous and continuing exodus of people from East Pakistan to India, which is creating very grave problems for us and which must indicate that the position of these people in Pakistan is very unsatisfactory. We have welcomed your statement that you will do your utmost to stop this exodus and I hope that this will have some effect.

New Delhi, October 8, 1956.

Three days ago I ventured to draw your attention to a statement made by your Foreign Minister Mr. Feroz Khan Noon. I dislike troubling you by protests, but I feel that I must draw your attention when something is said or written which is not only wrong but is also likely to embitter relations between our two countries.

2. In its issue of October 6th, Dawn newspaper writes a leading article in which much is said which normally one does not expect responsible newspapers to say. I would like however to draw your particular attention to the honour done me by Dawn calling me “Delhi’s double crossing kafir”. I do not mind any epithet or abuse thrown at me, but unfortunately some other people react more strongly to this kind of thing. It is for this reason that I am taking the liberty to draw your attention to these extraordinary effusions.*

*On 6th October, Dawn criticized editorially, the Egyptians and some of the Arab countries for “pooh-poohing the idea of Islamic unity” for the cause of some other Muslim country but suddenly remembering Islam when an Egyptian cause was involved. It said: “They must learn their lesson the hard way at the hands of Delhi’s double crossing kafir.” The article entitled “Our misguided brothers” said that King Saud, Nasser and other Arab rulers knew about the friendly ties between India and Israel and “yet most of them appear to have thought it good diplomacy to adopt Delhi’s Hindu imperialist as their friend, philosopher and guide.”
Letter from the High Commissioner CC Desai to Commonwealth Secretary M. J. Desai regarding appointment of Malik Firoz Khan Noon as the Foreign Minister of Pakistan.

Karachi, October 11, 1956.

D.O. No. HC/56/5/1514 October 11, 1956

My dear M.J.,

The new Foreign Minister of Pakistan, Malik Firoz Khan Noon, K.C.S.I., K.C.I.E., K.B.Kt., is a man of bold imagination and fond illusion, which make up for lack of mature wisdom and knowledge of history as well as of current international affairs. He recently issued a policy statement on relations with India, the full text of which is herewith enclosed*. You have, of course, seen the statement in the Pakistan papers, but only short extracts have appeared in the Indian papers because press correspondents affiliated to Indian papers have tried to save the Foreign Minister from exposure by withholding some remarkable passages, such as “Pakistan saved Egypt during the recent Suez crisis,” “Egypt is bound to Pakistan by ties of blood whereas the ties between Pakistan and India are only those of water, etc.” Sir Firoz, never known for depth or knowledge, forgot that every one of the people in the Foreign Office surrounding him is related to an Indian by ties of blood and that too by the closest possible ties. For instance, his brother Anwar’s wife is the sister of our Azim Hussein. His own Foreign Secretary, M.S.A. Baig, has his mother who is an Indian national who stays at Panchgani and who refuses to come to Pakistan. M.S.A, Baig’s brother, our Rashid Ali Baig, is a prominent member of the Indian Foreign Service, has held various important posts and is now a Joint Secretary at the Indian Foreign Office. Mohamad Ikramullah, the Doyen of the Civil Service of Pakistan, has both his brothers as Indian nationals in India, one of them Hidayatullah, occupying the important post of Chief Justice of the Madhya Pradesh High Court at Nagpur, while his other brother is an executive in a leading Indian firm in Bombay. B. S. Chhattari, a Deputy Secretary in the Pakistan Foreign Office, is the son of our Nawab of Chhatari, a distinguished Indian, a Member of Parliament and Pro-Chancellor of the Aligarh University. Another brother of Chhatari is an Indian national employed in an Indian firm in Calcutta. I. A. Khan, Chief Controller of Imports & Exports and connected with Pakistan’s foreign trade is the son of our Nawab Mohammad Ismail, at one time a leading Muslim Leaguer and now living a retired life at Meerut but one who would not leave his country and migrate to Pakistan where most of his children are now living, some of them occupying high Government offices. S. K. Dehlavi, the senior-most Joint Secretary in the Foreign Office, has a brother who is an Indian national, doing business in Bombay and refusing to escape from the land of persecution of Muslims. So far I have given you only examples of blood relationship between Sir Firoz Khan Noon’s immediate aides and their relations in India, where already the ruthless Government of India has exterminated no less than 10-million of Muslims out of the 40-million left when these devotees of Islam left in search of a homeland for the Muslims. What I have said of the Foreign Office applies with equal force to the whole Government of Pakistan and to the whole city of Karachi which is nothing but a city of refugees, a city of people many of whom, if they were given the opportunity to do so, would wish to go back to India without claiming restoration of property, houses or employment, some of them offering even to change their religion if that would facilitate their migration to the land of their forefathers which also happens to be the land of liberty, the land of secularity and the land of plenty and prosperity. So this whole argument of ‘blood being thicker than water’ is just senseless and ludicrous, unworthy of a Foreign Minister of any country.

* Not included here,

2. As someone remarked the other day, the true situation is that blood binds Pakistan with India whereas water divides Pakistan from Egypt. This is being said not with a view to any disparagement of the bond of religion between Pakistan and Egypt, but in exposition of the precise, physical fact which cannot be ignored howsoever blind or jaundiced one may be.

3. Their claim to be the saviour of Egypt during the Suez crisis had only to be mentioned for its absurdity to become obvious. What Egypt thinks of Pakistan was stated clearly and unambiguously in an interview given by President Nasser to Frank Moraes, Editor of the Times of India not a word of which has so far been denied, contradicted or even doubted. To make this letter and story complete, I attach a copy of that interview. Apparently, Egypt does not realise what it owes to this great country which saved it from being over-run by the armed forces of her friends and allies, United Kingdom, France and may be United States. Officers of the Egyptian Embassy, to whom this statement was referred, laughed and said that distortion could not go further and said that the statement was too contemptible to require notice. Even Goebbles would turn in his grave when he finds being so smartly outdone by the new Foreign Minister of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan!

4. The whole statement of Sir Firoz, who was a well known British stooge when both the Hindus and the Muslims were fighting shoulder to shoulder for the liberation of their homeland is puerile and stupid and that it is surprising that it should have been allowed to be made or that it should have been given such wide publicity in the Pakistani press. If they had any sense, they would have suppressed the statement for it must lead to more contempt than appreciation of Pakistan elsewhere in the world.

With kindest regards.

Yours ever

M.P. Delegation was received by Chairman MAO TSE-TUNG from midnight to 1.30 this morning. In course of talk with Delegation MAO TSE-TUNG referred to his meeting with SUHRAWARDY a few hours earlier.

2. MAO TSE-TUNG said he had asked SUHAWARDY why Pakistan had created tension with her neighbours by joining SEATO and Baghdad Pact? Was Pakistan afraid of aggression from China and Soviet Russia? SUHRAWARDY had replied “No but we are afraid of aggression from India”.
3. MAO TSE-TUNG said that SUHRAWARDY had told him that dispute with India could only be settled by arbitration or under U.N. auspices. MAO TSE-TUNG’s reply was that he disagrees with him and that dispute should be settled by direct talk with assistance of some friendly countries if necessary.

4. MAO TSE-TUNG told Delegation that General (Premier) CHOU EN-LAI would have further talk with SUHRAWARDY and same advice would be given to SUHRAWARDY again. Finally MAO TSE-TUNG said there is nothing in our talks with Pakistan Delegation which cannot be made public.

SUHRAWARDY left Peking this morning on provincial tour. Joint Statement was issued last night. You must have seen this in newspapers.

2. We met SUHRAWARDY and members of his party on many occasions. Their attitude in public was cordial. FARUQUE in particular talked freely about progress India is making but both SUHRAWARDY and he were also impressed with China’s progress.

3. As regards private talks with Chinese there is little information apart from what MAO TSE-TUNG told us. Talks seem to have centred on Pakistan’s adherence to pact and tensions they have created. I questioned CHANG HANFU and his reply was “We cannot persuade them and they cannot persuade us”.
General CHOU EN LAI said in his speech last night “Although on some international questions our views are different still there are many common points between us”.

4. I asked SUHRAWDY about his speech on joint electorates. He gave me some details and said “The Mulas are after my blood …..I will remain Prime Minister”.

5. Generally speaking reception accorded to Pakistanis lacked warmth in spite of SUHRAWDY’S speech on friendship with China etc. I understand a trade delegation may be coming from Pakistan. General CHOU EN LAI has also announced that he has accepted Pakistan’s invitation.

SECRET
Letter from High Commissioner CC Desai to Commonwealth Secretary M. J. Desai regarding Suhrawardy’s China visit.

Karachi, November 24, 1956.

High Commission of India
Karachi-5

My dear M.J.,

I called on the Chinese Ambassador yesterday after-noon primarily with a view to finding out what talks took place between the Chinese Prime Minister and H.S. Suhrawardy during the latter’s recent visit to China. The Ambassador himself volunteered the information and asked me if I would like to know what happened in Peking and of course I agreed readily.

2. The Ambassador told me that Suhrawardy met the Chairman Mao twice and the Prime Minister Chou-en-lai four times and had long discussions with them. He spoke chiefly on 2 points, namely relations with India and participation in military pacts. Suhrawardy started off by saying that India was hostile to Pakistan, that India had invaded Pakistan during the Kashmir dispute and that Pakistan was living in perpetual fear of India. He referred to India’s intransigence over Kashmir and continued refusal to carry out the obligations under the Security Council’s resolutions on the Kashmir dispute. Chou-en-lai told Suhrawardy that the Kashmir dispute was a legacy of the past left by Britain to use it as an irritant between the two countries and that the problem should be settled by direct talks between the two countries without inviting the intervention or interference by a third party including even the United Nations. Chou-en-lai went on to advise Pakistan to adopt the following 4 methods of conciliation in her relations with India:

1. Play down the hate campaign and avoid propaganda against each other through press, radio and otherwise.

2. Frequent exchanges between top leaders of the two countries with a view to creating friendlier atmosphere.

3. Conclusion of a non-aggression pact between the two countries.

Suhrawardy’s reply was that conclusion of a no-war agreement in the present context would be the maintenance of status quo, which was unthinkable so long as the Kashmir dispute remains unsolved. Suhrawardy criticized the principle of co-existence which meant that India should be in a position to retain the fruits of her aggression. He wound up by saying that if India did not change her attitude and agree to a plebiscite before the end of December, Pakistan would be compelled to refer the case back to the Security Council and the United Nations.

3. Talking next about the general Foreign Policy and military pacts like SEATO, Baghdad and American Military aid, Suhrawardy told Chou-en-lai that two new imperialist countries viz. India and Egypt had come into existence and that these two imperialisms were even worse than one older imperialisms of Britain, France and the European countries. Suhrawardy told the Chinese Prime Minister that Pakistan had entered into these alliances because of the fear of India and that these alliances were directed against India and not against communist countries or even against communism. Suhrawardy sought to define the scope of these Agreements as defensive and protective. Chou-en-lai pointed out that the western countries and especially America had bases all over the world and referring specifically to the Pacific region, America had bases in Japan, South Vietnam, Philippines, Korea and Pacific Islands. How could such bases be described or regarded as protective or defensive, Chou-En-lai argued. He further asked as to what Pakistan would feel if China had or tried to have a similar chain of bases in Korea, Indo-China, Singapore and even Pakistan and Suhrawardy's reply was that this would be regarded as aggression and offensive. Chou-En-lai pointed out that there was no difference between the two and that bases in both cases would be aggressive, offensive and objectionable. Suhrawardy added that the additional objective is to check the spread of communism. Chou-En-lai argued that the American attitude was far from pacific and was clearly colonial. He particularly referred to America occupying Chinese territory of Taiwan.

4. In all these discussions there was no agreement and both sides maintained their own points of view. The Chinese Ambassador said that their main objective was to pull Pakistan out of the Western bloc and to bring her nearer to Bandung line even if this was a slow and gradual process. The Chinese authorities thought that they had some success with Suhrawardy but he has again slipped back into his original fold according to the Chinese Ambassador. The Ambassador referred to a Chinese proverb which says “you may take a pig to a clean place, but as soon as it is free it gets back to its native filth”. The Ambassador said that Suhrawardy was all the time defending American foreign policy and secondly that he had no sympathy at all for Egypt in the Suez dispute.

5. I remember that when I first met Suhrawardy on his return from China at a reception at the German Embassy he told me that he did his best to do harm to India during his visit to China and I had told him that I hoped he met with some success as it must have been a rather difficult task and therefore worthy of his steel.

6. It may be interesting to tell our friends in the western countries as to what Suhrawardy has been saying about the objectives underlining the American Aid Agreement as also the Regional Pacts like BAGHDAD and SEATO, about which they have been assuring us from the housetops that they are not designed against India and that they would not be permitted to be used against India. The recent experience of use of NATO equipment by France in Algeria and by Britain and France in Egypt demonstrates the unreliability of such assurances, once another country gets physical possession of wanted weapons. Noon has given out his mind openly and publicly and Chaudhri Mohamad Ali and Iskandar Mirza did the same when they met Mikoyan early this year and how the performance has been repeated by Suhrawardy in China, as also, I believe, in his recent discussions in Tehran and Baghdad. The only redeeming feature is that these views of Suhrawardy are not supported by his own party in East Bengal and even by

My dear M.J.,

Please refer to the correspondence resting with my letter No. HC/56/S-1822 dated November 24, 1956 on the subject of the talks which H.S Suhrawardy had with Chou En-lai and the Chinese authorities during the visit of the Pakistan Prime Minister to China last month. I met the Soviet Ambassador, Ivan F. Shpedko, yesterday and he gave me a fuller account of what transpired between the Pakistan and the Chinese teams. Here is a summary of what he said. This information was volunteered by him and it was not necessary for me to raise the subject with him.

2. Suhrawardy talked most about the Kashmir dispute between Pakistan and India and to some extent, about the American attitude in international relations. Speaking about India Suhrawardy told Chou En-lai that Pakistan’s adherence to SEATO and Baghdad Pact and entry into the American Military Aid Agreement was not motivate by hostility either to China or to Soviet Union and, although he did not specifically name India, he made it quite clear that his country was pushed into these alliances by the hostile and intransigent attitude of India, especially in the Kashmir dispute. He then tried to draw a parallel between the Chinese feelings in regard to Kashmir (Taiwan?) and asked the Chinese leaders to mediate with India on behalf of Pakistan so as to persuade the Indian Government to hold a plebiscite in Kashmir. Chou En-lai pointed out that there was no parallel between Taiwan and Kashmir, that Taiwan belonged to China from time immemorial while Kashmir was a legacy of the British and further Kashmir had lawfully acceded to India and her people had in the Legislative Assembly confirmed that accession to India. Furthermore, Chou En-lai told Suhrawardy that China was not in need of Pakistan's support for the settlement of the Taiwan dispute, that there could be no question of mediation by China except at the instance of India and that, in any case, Pakistan was not in a position to offer any effective mediation for the settlement of the Taiwan question. As regards the Military Pacts, the Chinese leaders disputed the Pakistan's proposition that they were defensive pacts and that they were not directed against China or Soviet Union. All the information, they said, was to the contrary and that the sponsor of the pacts had left no doubt that the pacts were intended against the communist countries. When Suhrawardy met Mao Tse-tung, most of the talking was done by Suhrawardy who was defending the regional pacts and the American policy. The Soviet Ambassador told me that Mao Tse-tung was so angry that he did not wish to see him anymore, but that further meetings were arranged solely at the instance of Suhrawardy. No talks took place on the question of trade or cultural exchanges as Suhrawardy was talking all along about political matters and showed no interest or took no initiative in regard to other matters. The Chinese leaders decided that matters relating to trade and economic affairs should be pursued through normal diplomatic channels and that they should not become a subject of discussion with the Pakistan Prime Minister in the absence of any indication of such a desire on the part of the Pakistan. Prime Minister. Suhrawardy's defence of the American policy in relation to China carried no conviction. Suhrawardy was trying to point out that America wanted peace and that America had no animus against China or, her communist regime. The Chinese leaders were left with the impression that Suhrawardy was a stooge of the Western powers and that nothing could be expected from him in the direction of Asian-African cooperation against Western domination or Western colonialism. The Chinese leaders told Suhrawardy that they would forward a complete record of this discussion to the Indian Prime Minister for his information.

3. The Soviet Ambassador also told me that the Chinese Embassy here is having difficulties with the Pakistan Foreign Office over the detailed programme of Chou En-lai's visit to Pakistan. I was told that the entire programme was crowded up with receptions and visits to industrial concerns leaving very little time for discussion and that no provision had been made for broadcast by Chou Ea-lai on Radio Pakistan or the issue of a communiqué at the end of the visit. Pakistan Government wants Chou En-lai to visit Peshawar and the Khyber Pass, but the Chinese are not in favour of it and are hoping to wriggle out of the suggestion. They consider that part of the Frontier is in dispute between Pakistan and Afghanistan and that it would not be right on their part to visit the disputed territory. Moreover, they are not interested in just going to the Khyber Pass and seeing the bare hills or the military Cantonments on the way.

NOTES HANDED OVER TO THE U.S AMBASSADOR

Note dated April 16, 1957.

The Ministry of External Affairs present their compliments to the Embassy of the United States of America and have the honour to invite reference to the text of a statement on Kashmir made by His Excellency the Secretary of State John Foster Dulles on Tuesday, January 29, 1957, before a hearing of the sub-committee of the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives. A transcript of this statement was released to the press on April 7, 1957.

The Government of India are grieved and distressed by this statement which is not in conformity with the facts and coming as it does from the Secretary of State of the United States with whom we have close and friendly relations.

* Only Note relating to item (2) enclosed here.
The views of the Government of India on the issue of Jammu and Kashmir are well known. They have been repeatedly stated in the Security Council and placed before its Commission and the United Nations Representatives on various occasions ever since the Government of India brought their complaint of aggression by Pakistan over nine years ago.

Jammu & Kashmir is a constituent part of the Union of India and has been so since the date of the execution of the Instrument of Accession in accordance with lawful procedures on October 27, 1947.

All the relevant Resolutions of the UNITED NATIONS COMMISSION FOR INDIA AND PAKISTAN to which not only the Governments of India and Pakistan but also the United Nations are parties, are based upon the basis and unquestioned assumption that Pakistan has no rights whatsoever in Jammu and Kashmir. This is so ever in respect of a plebiscite which the Resolutions contemplate may be arranged, when and after the Commission has reported that all the preconditions as in the Resolution are satisfied. The status of Jammu & Kashmir as existing at the time was not altered and was not to be altered. The sovereignty of Jammu & Kashmir Government over the whole territory and the rights and obligations of the Union of India for external, defence and internal law and order are recognized and provided for in the Resolutions themselves. The Government of India agreed to the Resolutions on that basis and have at no time departed from this position which is unalterable.

The Government of India are therefore extremely surprised to find that the Secretary of State should have referred to the “annexation of Kashmir” by India. Virtual annexation of part of the territory of the Union of India in Jammu & Kashmir has taken place; but the annexation has been by the Government of Pakistan who have no locus standi in Kashmir except that of an aggressor. As was stated by the representative of the Government of India at the recent meetings of the Security Council on Kashmir, it is the Government of Pakistan who continue not only to occupy the territory of the Union of India but have recently by provisions in their Constitution treated these territories as annexed to Pakistan. The Government of India desire to point out that the reference to “annexations” in relation to India is not only uncalled for but untimely in view of the matter pending before the Security Council. It is both unjust and contrary to facts recognized by the United Nations Commission itself.

The Government of India regret this statement all the more as it comes from the United States of America, a friendly country and a permanent member of the Security Council.

This statement can is no way help in the solution of the situation which is the subject of India’s complaint before the Security Council. It is unwarranted and contrary to all the facts and the evidence established by the UNITED NATIONS COMMISSION FOR INDIA AND PAKISTAN and is gravely prejudicial to the Government of India who are the party against whom aggression has been committed and whose territory is under Pakistan occupation.

The Ministry of External Affairs take this opportunity to renew to the Embassy of the United States of America the assurances of their highest esteem and consideration.

PRIME MINISTER OF PAKISTAN.

Born at Midnapur in 1893. Got his B.Sc. Degree from St. Xavier’s College, Calcutta and M.A., B.C.L. Degree from Oxford. He was called to the Bar from Gray’s Inn.
Throughout his stay in Calcutta, Suhrawardy was associated with Labour Organizations, was Secretary of the Khilafat Committee and a Deputy Mayor of the Calcutta Corporation during the mayoralty of Mr. C.R. Das. Before he became a Minister he was a brief-less lawyer — acting mainly for goondas and smugglers among whom was the notorious Meena Peshawari. He came into lot of money through illicit business in collaboration with R.P. Saha. He was an elected member of the Bengal Legislative Council from 1921 to 1947—was for a long time Secretary of the Bengal Provincial Muslim League. He organized the Muslim League Election Campaign of 1945 after which East Bengal declared in favour of Pakistan. He served in the (undivided) Bengal Cabinet as a Minister and held the portfolios of Commerce, Labour, Finance, Public Health etc. In August, 1946 he became the Chief Minister of (undivided) Bengal. It was during this period that he engineered the mass killing of Hindus in Calcutta — he personally led the Muslim goondas and was responsible for the plotting and supervision of the plan. He put most of the 24 Police Station of Calcutta under the charge of Muslim station House Officers and was known to direct the operations personally from the Control Room. It is for this reason that the Hindus of East Bengal hate him and are not prepared ever to put their trust in him. These killings ended on the 14th of August, 1947. Suhrawardy took asylum in the Ashram of Gandhi Ji who protected him from those who, in revenge, might have otherwise tried to kill him. He remained in the Ashram for 6-7 months.

Suhrawardy crossed over to Dacca after the Partition and made efforts to become the Leader of the Muslim League Party of East Bengal. He failed (Jinnah let him down) and Khwaja Nazimuddin was elected as Leader. Suhrawardy returned to Calcutta. Here he was faced with the problem of the payment of a huge sum of money on account of income tax arrears (arrears of war-time assessments) which he had evaded for a long time. He made strenuous efforts to secure exemptions and even approached Pandit Nehru. Finding, however, that no exemptions were likely to be allowed, he finally migrated to Pakistan in March, 1948. His property is said to have been confiscated towards the payment of income tax dues. This, however, remains to be confirmed. He did not have any large properties.

Since the Muslim League refused to elect him as its Leader, Suhrawardy became a strong opponent of the League. Liaquat Ali Khan never trusted him. Mohd Ali Jinnah also had a very poor opinion of Suhrawardy’s integrity.

Being fed up with the arbitrary rule of Jinnah, Suhrawardy’s thoughts centered round the formation of an Independent State in East Bengal and with this in view he started securing support from the students and the leftist parties of East Bengal. In the middle of 1948, Suhrawardy paid a short visit to India on a goodwill mission, but on his return he was suspected of making attempts to reunite the West and East Bengals. He was also unseated from the Membership of the Constituent Assembly in 1948 on the ground that he had not taken up the nationality of Pakistan within the prescribed period. He again contested the elections for the same seat but was defeated by a candidate from a rival group.

In the beginning of 1950, Suhrawardy along with about 50 politicians of Pakistan expressed open dissatisfaction with the Pakistan Muslim League which they alleged had become camp followers of Government and announced their decision to form a new political party. Subsequently, a party under the name of Awami Muslim League was brought into existence with Suhrawardy as its President. Suhrawardy also asserted that Liaquat Ali Khan and his colleagues were after establishing dictatorship in Pakistan and charged the Centre for grossly neglecting East Pakistan. In the beginning of 1951, Suhrawardy became the chief organizer of the Jinnah Awami Muslim League. This new Organization was formed after the merger of the Awami Muslim League and the Jinnah Muslim League. In his capacity as Organizer of the new Party, Suhrawardy put up a charter of 60 demands which amongst other items included repeal of Public Safety Acts, release of all detenus and severance of Pakistan ties with the Commonwealth. (In October 1955, at the Annual Conference of the East Pakistan Awami Muslim League, the doors of the League were opened to non-Muslims - the name of the Organization was changed to Pakistan Awami League).

On the 16th of October, 1951, Liaquat Ali Khan was assassinated at Rawalpindi. Suhrawardy became bolder and by the end of 1952, he had undertaken a whirlwind tour in East Pakistan. He bitterly criticized the Government pointing out its failure to deliver the goods; at some meetings, apart from demanding dissolution of the Constituent Assembly, he also raised the language question advocating Urdu and Bengali as two State languages and favouring the principle of joint electorate. He also expressed his views in favour of Pakistan maintaining neutrally as alignment with any Power Bloc was dangerous.

In December, 1953, at the time of general elections in East Pakistan, Suhrawardy and Fazlul Haq joined hands and formed a United Front, amalgamating various political parties with the main object of defeating the Muslim League. In spite of repressive measures adopted by the Ruling Party with Nurul Amin as the Chief Minister, in an Assembly of 309 members, the united front captured as many as 223 seats.

Suhrawardy got very ill in the beginning of 1954 and had to leave for Zurich (Switzerland) in June 1954 for medical treatment. Although the Muslim League was routed from the East Bengal, its representatives continued to sit in the Constitution Assembly which was deliberating on the Basic Principles of the Constitution and later in framing the Constitution. Suhrawardy was elected to the Constituent Assembly on Awami League ticket in 1954 and joined in the demand for the dissolution of the Constituent Assembly (the Muslim League members of which, especially from East Bengal did not represent East Bengal - those who sent them to the Constituent Assembly having been wiped out of the Provincial legislature). After the departure of Suhrawardy from Karachi for medical treatment, important developments took place in Pakistan. Those on whom the Governor-General (Ghulam Mohd) had been counting started conspiring against him. Muslim Leaguers with the connivance of Khwaja Nazimuddin, Fazlur Rahaman, Mohd Ali of Bogra and even Iskander Mirza, it is said, decided to reduce the G.G. to a non-entity. From his sick-bed at Zurich, Suhrawardy reiterated his demand for the dissolution of Constituent Assembly and through Ata-ur-Rahaman (a staunch Awami Leaguer and a supporter of Suhrawardy) who was sent to Zurich on a mission of persuasion from G.G., he proclaimed a State of Emergency and dissolved the Constituent Assembly. After recovering from his illness, Suhrawardy visited Paris and London and at both these places he bitterly denounced the corruption, nepotism and intrigue of the Muslim League Leaders. He returned to Karachi on the 12the of December, 1954 and within a week of his arrival was appointed as Law Minister in the Central Cabinet (20.12.1954). The Governor—General (Ghulam Mohd) in his eagerness to counteract the growing influence of the Muslim League Group in which were included Mohd. Ali of Bogra and Iskander Mirza wanted to install Suhrawardy as Prime Minister but found himself unable to do so owing to the stern opposition from the said Group. At the time of his appointment, Suhrawardy had made it clear that he did not represent any political Party in the Cabinet. This declaration (or unconditional acceptance of office in the Central Cabinet) cost him the confidence of East Bengali people - his relations with Fazlu Haq became very strained and ultimately he was expelled from the United Front Party along with Ata-ur-Rahman, Mujib-ur-Rahaman and others. When the Parliamentary Rule was restored in East Pakistan, Suhrawardy's Group was by-passed. In the meantime, the Governor-General (Ghulam Mohd) became very ill and proceeded on leave from which he never returned. Suhrawardy demanded Prime Ministership as the price for his support to the Muslim League and was out-witted by Fazlul Haq who agreed to back Chaudhri Mohammed Ali. The assumption of the Office of Prime Minister by Ch: Mohd Ali on 11.8.55 threw Suhrawardy out of office.

As Leader of the Opposition, Suhrawardy opposed both the ONE UNIT Plan and the Constitution which he had himself drafted as Law Minister. So long as Suhrawardy was in Office, he had supported the ONE UNIT Plan, calling it a boom for the people if it materialized. When, however, he lost all hopes of becoming the Prime Minister of Pakistan, he declared that his Party would oppose the bill. Finally, however, when the Bill was passed he stated that since it was a measure that had passed through the Parliament, it should be given a trial. Similarly, Suhrawardy, as Leader of the Opposition, stated that the draft Constitution would not bring political stability to the country nor would it help in bringing back the lost international prestige or establish democracy in Pakistan.

On the Kashmir issue also, Suhrawardy who was originally of the view that such disputes could be solved in an atmosphere of good will, later declared that Kashmir should belong to Pakistan by rights. When Chaudhri Mohammed Ali called the All Parties Conference on Kashmir in October, 1955, a sub Committee was formed to take charge of the future policy on this question.
This Sub Committee was composed of Ch: Mohammed Ali, Suhrawardy and Sheikh Din Mohad. Condemning the utterances of the Russian Leaders over Kashmir, Suhrawardy stated at a big public meeting at Chittagong on the 9th December, 1955 that the day was not far off when Kashmir would be an integral part of Pakistan. Suhrawardy has all along identified himself with the Revolutionary Group in Azad Kashmir and had promised to support general elections or at least District Board Elections in the Area. Out of the two important Leaders of Azad Kashmir viz: Chaudhri Ghulam Abbas and Sardar Mohd Ibrahim, Suhrawardy has been favouring Sardar Mohd Ibrahim (while Ch.
Ghulam Abbas was a favourite of Ch: Mohd Ali). Suhrawardy has also been backing the other mal-contents in Azad Kashmir who did not like the foisting of a Pakistan-sponsored Government to rule Azad Kashmir. The Leaders of this Group, such as Nur Hussin, ex-Minister, Abdul Khaliq, Advocate, etc. etc. have continued to meet Suhrawardy. The present Government in Azad Kashmir which was brought into being in September, 1956 has never been to the liking of Suhrawardy and he at one time promised the Yatu Group that it would be changed. Suhrawardy has quite a number of the discontented elements in Azad Kashmir in close touch if not under his complete control. He is therefore, in a position to stage some sort of a ‘show’ in Azad Kashmir whenever it may become necessary for him to do so.

On 8th October, 1955, Suhrawardy suddenly left for Goa in a mysterious manner without enlightening anybody about the object of his journey. Chaudhri Mohammed Ali said Suhrawardy had not been sent to Goa by Government.
This was correct, but Ch: Mohammed Ali knew that he was going and had actually asked him to submit a report to Government on his return. During his stay in Goa, Suhrawardy attended some public meetings and assured the people of Goa that Pakistan would extend all possible help to tide over the economic crisis. Before leaving Goa on October 10, 1955, he declared that he did not find any trace of colonialism and injustice in political, social or economic field in Goa. It is said that, besides wine and women in plenty, he was paid Rs.
50,000/- in cash by the Portuguese Government.
In March, 1956, as a delegate to the Inter Parliamentary Union meeting, he toured eight European countries. His visit to Lisbon was reported to be to induce the Portuguese Government to raise the Goa issue in the U.N. Security Council and to create difficulties for India. His intention was reported to be to utilize Goa as a second front in India in the event of aggression in Kashmir.

Suhrawardy has been trying his best to strengthen the Awami League in West Pakistan but has not succeed. He disaffiliated the N.W.F.P. Branch of the League for its opposition to the ONE UNIT. Subsequently he expelled Mahmudul Haq Usmani, Secretary General of the Awami League in Karachi. Mahmudul Haq Usmani and his followers and supporters held a convention in Lahore (on 17th & 18th February 1957) and passed a vote of no-confidence against Suhrawardy. So far as East Bengal is concerned, the real Leader of the Awami League is Mullah (Moulanna) Bhashani. There are serious differences between the two at the same time, both are complimentary to each other i.e. whereas Bhashani is capable of controlling the masses, Suhrawardy has the ability to run the administration and control the Parliamentary work. Suhrawardy has also been financing the East Bengal Party.

As Leader of the Opposition, Suhrawardy was never able to make things difficult for Chaudhri Mohammed Ali owing to the meager strength of his own Party (13 in a House of 80). It was, however, the insistence of Muslim League on the removal of Gurmani from the Governorship of West Pakistan and the formation of the Republican Party at the instance and with the support of Iskander Mirza that forced Chaudhri Mohammed Ali to resign and since Iskander Mirza was unable to find anyone else from the Republican Party who would be suitable, he was obliged to call upon Suhrawardy to form a Cabinet. He was sworn in as Prime Minister of Pakistan on the 10th September, 1956.

Suhrawardy is the Prime Minister of Pakistan today not because he is the Leader of the strongest or the largest political party but because the other political parties such as the Muslim League, the Republican Party and the Nationalist Party have no Leader who may be acceptable to Iskander Mirza, the President, who is virtually a Military Dictator of Pakistan having secured the backing of the present Military Chiefs with whom he has old personal contacts since his tenure of the post of Defence Secretary since 1947. Suhrawardy has so far subordinated himself to the wishes of Iskander Mirza and so long as he continues to do so, there is nothing to prevent him from holding the post of Prime Minister. It is clear that although the Awami League (as a Political Party) has definitely confirmed that it is against receiving military aid from U.S.A. and joining any Power Bloc, particularly the Baghdad Pact and the SEATO, Suhrawardy has declared that the foreign policy of the Coalition Government of which he is the Head is to align Pakistan with the Western Powers and to continue to be a member of these Pacts. It is unlikely that Mullah Bhashani will stage an open revolt. It is possible that the moment he does so, he will find himself behind the bars unless Bhashani is found to be of use, as least temporarily by Mirza Iskander.

In October, 1956, Suhrawardy toured China and his activities there included the inspection of the Units of Air Force and Army. He returned to Pakistan on 30.10.56. It was after his return from China that Pakistan voted against the inclusion of China into the U.N. Assembly. Commenting on this, the Charge D’ Affairs of the Chinese Embassy in Karachi remarked a pig was once taken to a pool of clean water and given a bath with the soap, etc. As soon as it came out, it again went into filth”. He added that China was not surprised on the conduct of Pakistan.

In early November, 1956, Suhrawardy attended a Conference of Baghdad Pact Powers where it was decided to support the Pact and not to scrap it. He, however, expressed his inability to attend the Colombo Powers Conference held in Delhi on 13th and 14th of November, 1956 under the pretext of pre-occupation with the Muslim countries - he declined to send to Delhi even some other Minister.

Suhrawardy’s brother, Hussain Shahid Suhrawardy (?) was appointed a Member of the Pakistan Public Service Commission immediately after the Partition and continued as such till 1954. Subsequently he was appointed Ambassador to Spain and is still serving as such. Begum Shaista Ikramullah, wife of Pakistan’s Ambassador at London who is also alternate Chairman of this year’s Pakistan Delegation to the UNO is closely related to Suhrawardy.

A short and stout man, Suhrawardy has always been fond of wine and women. Since his appointment as Prime Minister, he has given up drinking in public but the habit of dancing with pretty women continues and the later halves of all his social functions are generally reserved for dancing and merry-making. During the Karachi session of the Awami League Council meeting (6.2.1957), Suhrawardy stayed with Ranada Saha at Mirzapur. His name was linked with Badrunnisa, a woman member of the East Pakistan Provincial Assembly. She is reported to have spent a night with Suhrawardy. The scandal was openly discussed in political and journalistic circles. He is a widower and is known for his queer habits, sleeps generally in a room with two beds on one of the beds (when there is no mistress) are strewn his papers and files. He receives his intimate visitors in his bed room and often turns his back on them while talking; Changes quickly from intimacy to indifference and vice versa: most undependable.

Suhrwardy is quite a power to contend against both inside and outside the National Assembly. He is bold and always prepared to take risks—no body’s friend (except his own), but a formidable foe, clever and unscrupulous. It will now be difficult for Iskander Mirza to get rid of him. It cannot be said how long he will continue to be subservient to him. Much will depend upon the Muslim League—at present it is (inwardly) supporting Suhrwardy (at least not opposing him). The Muslim League Leadership sees that only Suhrwardy can oust Iskander Mirza from power or the position he now occupies although at one time Iskander Mirza did not hesitate to join the Muslim League, it is well known that he is bent upon finishing the Muslim League and Mullaism. If the Muslim League returns to power in the general elections (whenever they take place—‘March, 1957 has now been turned into ‘March, 1958’), the person to go will probably be Iskander Mirza and not Suhrwardy. If Iskander Mirza remains in power, Suhrwardy will continue as Prime Minister so long as he remains subservient or till Amjad Ali or some other minion of Mirza becomes “fully trained” to replace him. Nothing in Pakistan is predictable but it appears that Suhrwardy has come to stay for quite a considerable time—whether he is pro-British or pro-America, he is certainly pro-himself and pro-Iskander Mirza—and, what is more important, both U.K. and U.S.A. do not yet feel that he is ‘inconvenient’.

Calcutta, May 4, 1957.

Chief Secretary, West Bengal

D.O. No. 371-CRS

Calcutta, May 4, 1957

My dear Dutt,

Please refer to K.M. Kannampilly’s D.O.No. F.28 (26)/57-Pak—I dated April 4, 1957 regarding activities of Mr. H.S. Suhrwardy, Prime Minister of Pakistan, before he left India. I am enclosing a Note by the Deputy Inspector-General of Police, I.E., G.I.D., West Bengal.

As regards the immediate cause for Mr. Suhrwardy’a flight, I knew at the time that a firm called Victor Engineering, of which Mr. R.P. Saha of East Pakistan and Mr. Suhrwardy were partners, was assessed to a very heavy Income tax, or rather Mr. Suhrwardy was assessed to a heavy Income tax for the income from the Victor Engineering. The Income Tax Commissioner, Calcutta Region, is not willing to divulge anything unless he gets an order from the Central Board of Revenue. So, if you want any information, the Central Board of Revenue should obtain the same from the Income Tax Commissioner.

Mr. Suhrwardy has on more than one occasion asked Dr Roy if there were any warrants pending against him.

I am not very sure as to why the High Commissioner in Karachi wants this Information and the Note may be suitably edited before it is sent to Karachi, if at all you think it necessary to send the information required.

Yours sincerely
(S.N. Ray)

Shri S. Dutt, ICS.
Foreign Secretary to the Government of India,
Ministry of External Affairs,
New Delhi.

A note on the activities of H.S. Suhrwardy

Hasain Sahid Suhrwardy, M.A., B.L., Bar-at-Law, son of the late Sir Z.R.
Zahid Suhrwardy of 40, Theatre Road, Calcutta, and of Midnapore Town, District Midnapore, West Bengal, immediately before and after the partition until his migration to Pakistan.

Pre-Partition activities. A barrister by profession, a Muslim League stalwart in pre-partition years, an ex-President of the Calcutta Khilafat Committee and the Calcutta Dock Workers’ Union, he was the last Chief Minister of undivided Bengal and the hero of the great Calcutta Killing of 1946.

His plan on acceptance of the Partition. With the acceptance of the partition of Bengal in June, 1947, he planned to leave India and go over to Dacca as the Chief Minister in East Pakistan and with this end in view he saw Jinnah at Delhi early in July, 1947, and discussed matters with him.

On his return from Delhi, he started liquidating his affairs here. Sometime after he was informed by Liaquat Ali Khan that Khaja Nazimuddin had been insisting on an election for party leadership in Eastern Pakistan and that Jinnah had agreed to this. An election was therefore held on the 5th August, 1947, at the Hotel Biltmore, Calcutta. The result of the election, however, upset Suhrwardy’s plan. Contrary to his expectations, the verdict went in favour of Nazimuddin and he was elected the party leader and the Chief Minister of Eastern Pakistan. Suhrawardy was nominated to the Pakistan Constituent Assembly.

A new role — Decides to stay in India - Peace Mission
Suhrawardy then went to Karachi to attend the inauguration ceremony of Pakistan and had long talks with Jinnah. Jinnah told him then that it was better that he stayed on in India for by staying in India he could serve the interest of Pakistan better. This brought him back to Calcutta.

But Calcutta was then too hot a place for him. The atmosphere was hostile. The mob fury against him was very high and he felt insecure. Being an extremely clever man, he set out to play a deep game mainly for his own interest and in the interest of the Indian Muslims and also apparently for the purpose of helping Mr. Jinnah and Pakistan in their efforts for consolidating the Muslims in India against India’s interest. His own interest related to his attempt at escaping from litigations on account of his personal debts as also from threatened prosecution in connection with several cases involving his commitments in deals as the Chief Minister of Bengal. So he assumed the role of a devotee of Mahatma Gandhi who was then living in a riot-torn area (Beliaghata) in Calcutta on a mission for restoring peace and order. Taking shelter in Gandhiji’s camp he dedicated himself to a Peace Mission and went on showing an urge for organizing meetings and processions for establishing peace and goodwill among the Hindus and Muslims.

His allegiance to India
More than once he declared himself an Indian national through Press and platform and issued a Press statement asking the Indian Muslims to get themselves prepared for joining the Congress. He emphasized that the political conflict between the Muslims and the Hindus had come to an end with the partition of the country and as such nothing stood in the way of the Indian Muslims joining the Congress.

His activities as an Indian Muslim
At his instance a conference of the Muslims of the Indian Union was held in Calcutta on 9.11.47 when discussions were held regarding the future policy and programme of work for the Muslim League in India. In this meeting he proposed dissolution of the Muslim League in the Indian Union but this was not entertained by the delegates from Bombay, Madras, Malabar, etc. It was decided, however, that a select committee should be formed to go into the problems of the Indian Muslims and their views would be placed before the Muslim League Council to be held in Karachi shortly.

In December, 1947, he attended the meeting of the All India Muslim League Council at Karachi when he suggested the dissolution of the Muslim League both in Pakistan and India. The suggestion was resented to by the Pakistani leaders and Jinnah did not allow a discussion on this.
Income Tax dues and other financial liabilities— By then he managed to secure for himself a comparatively safe living in Calcutta no doubt, but the Income Tax authorities did not give up their chase. His income tax dues had accumulated since 1937. He did not pay any amount during these years. As he was in power all these years, he could get away without making any payment. The income tax authorities were now after him and they pressed for dues, but somehow he managed to keep the pursuing income tax authorities at bay for the time being.

Gandhiji’s death — Difficult days for Suhrawardy— But after the death of Gandhiji in January, 1948, Suhrawardy began feeling himself insecure again both politically and financially. His activities in India, his peace mission, etc., came up for severe criticism by the public and these were interpreted as a clever ruse to atone for his past misdeeds.

The Income Tax authorities also renewed their pressure on him. A number of persons whom Suhrawardy owed money and who were so long silent, filed money suits against him. To add to his misfortune Jinnah also died soon after and Liaquat Ali Khan, who was not well inclined towards Suhrawardy assumed all leadership of Pakistan. He then lost all protection in India. It was at the bidding of Jinnah that he stayed on in India. Now that both Gandhiji and Jinnah were dead, he thought of leaving India for good winding up all his business here.

But he could not do so all at once. All his eminence was lost. He therefore took up a new role to regain his former prominence through peace missions both in East and West Bengal and went on playing a double game until he considered the situation ripe for him to migrate permanently for Pakistan.

Again a new political ventures to revive his lost position both in India and Pakistan. He visited East Pakistan on several occasions in connection with the peace mission and addressed a few meetings. During his tours in East Bengal he asked the Muslim masses to live in peace and harmony with the Hindus in Pakistan, otherwise it would be impossible for them to be saved from economic collapse. He also pointed out that if the Muslims wanted the real good of Pakistan they must liquidate their separatist tendency and join hands with the Hindus.

He also kept himself interested in the affairs of Pakistan politics with an eye to build up his future career in Pakistan. He took a move to form a separate organization by taking in it the members of all the communities with the ulterior motive of dis-lodging Nazimuddin Ministry. In this venture leaders like Abdul Hamid Bhasani and others extended their help. He was also successful in creating a defection among the Muslim League members of East Pakistan. He appreciated the move of Mian Iftikheruddin (ex-President, West Punjab Muslim League) to reorganize the Muslim League on a democratic basis. He was reported to have been watching the situation to take up the leadership of the movement conveniently. The activities of Suhrawardy particularly in carrying on communal harmony propaganda in East Pakistan was not taken in a good light by Khwaza Nazimuddin, the then Chief Minister of East Bengal.

It was then reported that Mian Iftikheruddin of West Punjab during his visit to East Bengal in 1948 had contacted Suhrawardy several times at his Calcutta residence for inducing him to go over to Pakistan and stay there permanently.

In June, 1948 while Suhrawardy was touring East Bengal in connection with the communal harmony propaganda he was served with an order of externment from East Bengal. Following this he concentrated his activities in studying the condition of the Muslims of West Bengal. He also drew up a programme to tour the different places in West Bengal in order to discuss the problems of the minorities, but he had to postpone his tour in view of the political developments in Hyderabad.

His attention was drawn by the Muslim Leaders in Calcutta regarding a news item published in the press alleging that the Muslims were collecting funds for Hyderabad. At the request of the Muslim leaders in Calcutta he issued a press statement in July, 1948, contradicting the allegation against the West Bengal Muslims regarding the intended fifth column activities and their participation in collecting funds for Hyderabad. During this time he was requested by the Hindu workers of the Santi Sena to issue statements decrying the excesses committed by the Razakars in Hyderabad but he avoided the issue. He was also asked by his co-workers of the peace mission to visit East Bengal defying the ban on him in view of the deteriorating communal situation there, but he expressed his unwillingness to proceed to East Bengal.

He also supported the move of the late Sarat Chandra Bose for the re-union of Bengal and he conferred with Bose on several occasions to discuss about the advisability of starting an agitation on this issue.

In November, 1948, he was reported to have contacted the Prime Minister of India and expressed his desire to join the Congress but he was not welcome.

In January, 1949, he was asked by the President of the Pakistan Constituent Assembly to swear the oath of allegiance to Pakistan. As he failed to take the oath as a citizen of Pakistan his membership of the Pakistan Constituent Assembly was cancelled. He wrote a letter from Calcutta to Z.H. Lari of Allahabad (U.P.) requesting the latter to inform him of his views regarding the difficulties of the Muslims joining the Congress and also his opinion as to what Congress should do to enable the Muslims to join the Congress freely. He also decided to send a Memorandum to the Prime Minister of India narrating the various grievances of the Muslims and the treatment of the minorities in India.
Migration to Pakistan - Secret information indicates that since the early part of 1949 he was thinking to shift his field of activities to West Pakistan with the ultimate object of settling there. This had a very interesting reference to the negotiations that were conducted by Mian Iftikheruddin for setting up a powerful opposition group against the ruling party of Pakistan. He left Calcutta for Karachi by plane on 5.3.49 to stay there permanently with his elder brother, a member of the Public Service Commission, Pakistan.

Before he left he announced that he was not leaving India permanently and that he was going to Lahore to defend the Nawab of Mamdot who was involved in a case of corruption. He actually defended the Nawab (the case which was started in 1948 ended in 1953).

Occasional visits to Calcutta to settle up his dues In the meantime he came to Calcutta many times on his way to and back from Dacca. He tried to settle up matters with some of his creditors specially the Birlas whom he owed a personal debt of Rs. 1,42,000/-. An understanding was reported to have been reached between them according to which Suhrawardy could settle up with the Birlas for Rs. 1 lakh payable in Pakistan by cancellation of a debt due from one of their friends. What actually happened subsequently was, however, not known. But the fact remains that the Birlas obtained a judgement from the Calcutta High Court against Suhrawardy for Rs. 42,000/- only.

Financial liabilities, == money suits,== decrees,== attachment of properties, etc- The Income Tax authorities and other creditors were also not silent. In April, 1949, one Phool Chand Bhagat, a decree holder, applied to the first Sub-Judge’s Court, Alipore, for the execution of two decrees passed by the Calcutta High Court against Suhrawardy for over Rs. 3 lakhs. This Phool Chand Bhagat was a Manager of Messrs, Arthur Butler & Co. (Muzaffarpur) Ltd. in 1948. Messrs. Jubilee Agents, Ltd., 22, Canning Street, Calcutta, were the Managing Agents of Messrs Arthur Butler & Co. Bhagat is now reported to be attached to Messrs. Ispahan! Ltd., 51, Ezra Street, Calcutta.

In his application Phool Chand prayed for attachment and sale of the factory, land, buildings, machinery and plants of Maxim Machine Manufacturing and Foundry Works, Sukhchar, 24-Parganas of which Suhrawardy was the owner. The Court passed orders for attachment and sale of these properties in execution of the High Court decrees.

Bhagat, it appeared, had to take this course for realization of his dues from Suhrawardy, at the instance of the Income Tax authorities, to whom Bhagat also owed a huge amount and whom he assured of payment if they could help him attach the properties of Suhrawardy. The Income Tax authorities, it is reported, had agreed to this.
The Central Bank of India, another creditor of Suhrawardy having come to know that Bhagat had enforced the decrees only to satisfy the Income Tax authorities, applied for a stay order from the Calcutta High Court which was granted by Justice S.N. Banarji on the 29th April, 1949.

At the instance of Suhrawardy, the Central Bank had opened a cash credit account to the extent of Rs. 2 lakhs for which Suhrawardy executed a promisory note and deposited the title deeds of the property owned by him at Sodepur, 24-Parganas (The Victory Engineering & Co.).

Earlier Suhrawardy had hypothecated the Maxim Machinery and Plants to Hindusthan Co-operative Insurance Co. Ltd., in connection with a cash loan of Rs.50,000/-. The Bank and the Insurance Co. preferred claims in the Original side of the High Court in 1948 and both the suits were decreed on 29th September, 1948. On the 30th September, 1948, the Hindustan Insurance Co. assigned its claim to the Central Bank.

The Bank suit was decreed on certain terms of settlement filed by the parties and Suhrawardy was allowed to make the payments accordingly.

On the 3rd December, the Bank came to know that the Sodepur property of Suhrawardy had been attached by the Certificate officer, Income Tax Department, for Income Tax dues. They were also informed that the property was going to be sold on the 29th April, 1949. The Bank therefore filed an objection and a rule was issued. The matter has not yet been finally settled between the Central Bank and the Income Tax Department.

Phool Chand Bhagat, it may be mentioned, was able to collect for Suhrawardy a sum of about Rs. 25 lakhs owing to him (Suhrawardy) and he managed to smuggle a portion of the money to Pakistan through Mrs. Akhtar Sulaiman, Suhrawardy’s daughter, who stayed behind till 1953 and through other sources. As a reward he was given Suhrawardy’s Buick car, the owner-ship of which was changed to his daughter, Mrs. Sulaiman, in 1948.

What hastened his migration earlier than his scheduled plan. It would, thus be seen that Suhrawardy got himself entangled in extreme financial liabilities from various corners and this was the main reason of his hurried migration to Pakistan in 1949 much ahead of his scheduled plan of migration after he had revitalized his position there. He would have certainly gone to Pakistan to rebuild his political career but he might have waited for some time more for better conditions for him there but extreme financial liabilities expedited his migration earlier.

My dear High Commission,

Kindly refer to your D.O. No. HC/57/S-630, dated 1st April, 1957, regarding information on Suhrawardy for the period between the partition of India and his migration to Pakistan. I enclose herewith a note giving all the information that we have been able to collect from various sources.

Yours sincerely

(Edited version of the note which was sent to the High Commissioner)

NOTE ON H. S. SUHRAWARDY

On the partition of Bengal, Sugrawardy was confident of becoming the Chief Minister of East Bengal. But Liaqat Ali Khan informed him that on the insistence of Kwaja Nazimuddin. Jinnah had agreed to an election for the Muslim League party leadership in East Bagal. In the election held on 5th August, 1947, at the Hotel Biltmore, Calcutta, Nazimuddin was elected the party leader and Chief Minister of East Bagal. Suhrawardy was only nominated to the Pakistan Constituent Assembly.

2. He visited Karachi to attend the inauguration ceremony of Pakistan. It is believed that Jinnah then advised him to stay on in India and serve the interests of Pakistan thereby. Back in Calcutta he assumed the role of a devotee of Mahatma Gandhi and went on organizing meetings and processions for the avowed purpose of establishing peace and goodwill among the Hindus and Muslims. He declared himself more than once to be an Indian national, both through the press and from the platform, and issued a press statement asking the Indian Muslims to get themselves prepared for joining the Indian National Congress. By these activities he gradually overcame the fury of the non-Muslims in Calcutta who, however, continued to blame him as the man chiefly responsible for the Calcutta massacre.

3. However, the income-tax authorities began to worry him. His income-tax dues had accumulated since 1937, but since he had been in power continuously till partition, he had managed to get away without making any payment. With the death of Mahatmaji in January 1948, Suhrawardy began to feel insecure both politically and financially. In addition to the income-tax authorities, a number of persons to whom he owed money and who had remained silent so long, filled suits against him for recovery. To add to his misfortunes, Jinnah also died and Liaqat Ali Khan, who had never been very favourably inclined towards Suhrawardy, assumed leadership in Pakistan.

4. Suhrawardy then started a series of peace missions in East and West Bengal. He took the first steps to form a separate organization in East Bengal with the ulterior motive of assuming power. In this venture he had the support of people like Bhashani. In June, 1943, while he was touring East Bengal, he was served with an order of internment from East Bengal. In January 1949, he was asked by the President of the Pakistan Constituent Assembly to swear the oath of allegiance to Pakistan. As he failed to take the oath as a citizen of Pakistan, his membership of the Pakistan Constituent Assembly was cancelled.

5. It would appear that since early 1949 he was thinking to shift his field of activities to West Pakistan. Apparently, he was carrying on some sort of negotiations with Mian Iftikarrudin for setting up an Opposition group against the ruling party in Pakistan. He left for Karachi by plane on 5th March, 1949, announcing that he was not leaving India, permanently but was only going to Lahore to defend the Nawab of Mamdot who was involved in a case for corruption.

6. Since then he visited Calcutta a number of times on his way to and back from Dacca. During these occasional visits he tried to settle with some of his creditors. With the Birlas whom he owed a personal debt of Rs.1,42,000, it was said that an understanding was reached, according to which Suhrawardy settled for Rs.1 lakh payable in Pakistan by cancellation of a debt due from one of Birla’s friends. Whatever happened subsequently, the fact is that the Birlas obtained a judgement from the Calcutta High Court against Suhrawardy for only Rs.42,000. He had got himself involved in money suits, decrees for attachment of properties etc., with one Phool Chand Bhagat, the Central Bank of India and the Hindustan Cooperative Insurance Co., Ltd. It is quite possible, therefore, that Suhrawardy’s decision to migrate to West Pakistan early in 1949 was partly because of his entanglement in financial difficulties, though he would have anyway certainly gone to Pakistan to rebuild his political career, for which he had been planning ever since partition.
Letter from High Commissioner CC Desai to Commonwealth Secretary M. J. Desai regarding hostile propaganda.

Karachi, July 12, 1957.

My dear M.J.,

The DAWN has done it again. You must have seen the Editorial in the DAWN dated July 8, 1957. A cutting is enclosed for ease of reference. It is an Editorial and not merely a news item or a letter to the Editor. The DAWN is the doyen of Pakistani journalism. It is a paper founded by no less a person than the late Mohammad Ali Jinnah, the Father of the Pakistani Nation. Its Editor is the great Altaf Hussain who fancies himself to be the co-creator of Pakistan. What a subject to write an editorial on Subversion of Pakistan, inhabited by seventy million of the faithfuls, the sixth largest country in the world - subversion of such a country through films, saris and mangoes, by that arch-intriguer C.C. Desai of Ceylonese fame. What do you think of a country which’s worried about the distribution of a few saris and a few baskets of mangoes? The editorial has become the laughing stock not only in the Diplomatic Corps in Karachi but even with the man in the street notwithstanding his hostility to India over both Kashmir and Canal Waters. You would remember that it was sometime in November 1955 that the same paper had come out with a similar editorial in which they had referred to my showing Indian films at my house in the following terms:-

“These idolatrous, cow-worshipping primitive Hindus, whose hands are stained with the blood of innocent Muslim women and children, are showing films of a mythological nature. So our Begums beware, do not go and see these films at their houses”.

2. I have known from the very beginning that they do not like our giving film shows although they like to see our films. They smell a rat in our having these films show at our houses or under our auspices. Actually the 35 mm. feature films are not being sent to us by Government; but they are being arranged by me personally through my own influence and on my own initiative. I am grateful to the producers and distributors in Bombay and Calcutta for cooperating with me and for sending me really first-class films which the hungry Pakistanis are so anxious to see. I have shown them such classical pictures as ‘Anarkali’, Nagin, Jagriti, Munimjee, Mirza Ghalib, Pathar Panchali, Kabuliwalla and Jhanak Jhanak Payal Baje and the people have been just mad to see them. I have shown them films in both high-flown Urdu and in Bengali. Bengali films never come to Karachi and it is only at the house of the Indian High Commissioner that they can see a Bengali film. The guests who have seen Bengali films at my house have included H.S. Suhrawardy, Abul Mansoor Ahmad; Altaf Hussain—the Editor of DAWN himself; - Central Ministers; Bengali Members of Parliament; the Director of Intelligence Bureau, M.H. Khan; Inspector General of Police, Khondkar; diehard Chief Commissioner of Karachi, N.M. Khan; Bengali officers, high and low and their families and so on and so forth. In addition to seeing the film, they have also drinks and snacks. Not only have those films been seen at my house, but Central Ministers like Abul Mansoor Ahmad, who is today the Acting Prime Minister of the country and Dildar Ahmad have taken these films and arranged special shows at their own houses. Gurmani arranged a special show at Government House in Lahore of the Film “Jhanak Jhanak Payal Baje” and it was the common habit of the late Governor-General, Ghulam Mohammad, to send for the films and see them in the Government House in Karachi along with some friends and relatives of his. The most interesting part of it is that after writing the editorial in the DAWN Altaf Hussain himself came to the Film show and rang me up and asked if he could bring a few more guests of his! This is the character of the people who founded and who constitute the Islamic Republic of Pakistan.

3. It is said in the recent editorial that money for these purposes does not come from the pockets of Mr. C.C. Desai. While this is substantially true, it is not wholly true as some of these arrangements are made from our side with Government funds and Govt. assistance. It is, however, true that the bulk of it is from the funds provided by the Government of India but you know better than any-one else what the size of this fund is and how to say that we are spending lakhs of rupees in Pakistan over this kind of activity is so devoid of truth. But, of course, it is idle to expect truth, honesty, decency in the Islamic Republic of Pakistan whether from Government, from its leaders, from its Press and sometimes even from its people. (What a boon the Partition has been)! What would the world think of the stability of this country when it is afraid of subversion through saris and mangoes, through books and bananas! Sometime back you would remember that we were accused of importing 80 damsels for being served to the virtuous officers of this Islamic Republic! The same charge was repeated only a few days ago by one of the less-known papers published in Gujerati. These people do not realize that while they can expect their miserable people to believe that we may smuggle into Pakistan saris and mangoes, books and bananas, it is beyond the ingenuity of even the clever Bharati High Commissioner to import 80 pretty women without the visas being granted by their High Commissioner in India and without their entry being noticed by their Immigration authorities in Pakistan. But to them truth is of no concern and all that they like to do is just to throw mud at us. In this game of calumny and persecution, they, of course, are at their best. They pursue and catch hold of five of our officers, two of them being of the status of First Secretaries, keep them handcuffed for seven hours and march them handcuffed in the streets of Lahore in order to get them examined for drunkenness. They publish photographs of our cars parked somewhere and tell the public that here is yet another case of a car of a Bharati officer being parked at an authorized place, thus creating a problem for the traffic authorities of Karachi.

4. Only three days ago there was a film show at my house intended exclusively for the Diplomatic Corps when I showed the film on Gautama Buddha and Ajanta Frescos. There were so many policemen outside the house that my guests, all foreigners, were asking me what the matter was and why such far-reaching police arrangements had to be made. The Police had probably got sense of the fact that there was going to be a film show at the house and they had gathered in full strength to ascertain who were coming and which Pakistanis were patronising the Indian film. So life goes on and, I suppose, will continue to go on, especially as we do not believe in reciprocity or paying them back in their own coin or speaking to them in the only language which they understand. Thus they know that they can treat us with impunity and do their worst. If only those who serve in Pakistan who can appreciate what they go through and what it all means, morally, mentally and even physically.

5. This editorial in the ‘DAWN’ is obviously inspired by Government. Similar editorials and writings have occurred in some of the papers showing pre-planning and official sponsorship. I enclose cuttings from the Nai Roshni (Urdu) and the Millat (Gujerati) in support of my statement which is based upon inside knowledge. I at least hope that we would get every cooperation from the Ministry in continuing our activities which have received wrongly and maliciously adverse notice in the Pakistani Press. I know that our mangoes would still be accepted by them and that our saris would still be worn by their Begums. Our films shows would still be patronized by them, our books would still be read by them and our Pans will still be accepted by them. I do not suggest that we get much quid pro quo but also we do not spend much on these cordialities, friendly approaches and gestures. It is in this light that I view the proposals that I make from time to time about cultural shows in Pakistan. Again, they attract large crowds despite official disfavour; and not only do they provide this cultural background for founding more enduring friendship between the two countries but that they are also very useful in many ways. Believe me when I say that I hang on to the hard-earned money of the Indian Tax-payer to the last paisa. If I spend any money here I do so only after making sure that I get adequate return in some form or other. I may not always be able to show you what return I get but I hope that you would trust my judgement when I say that I am not a man to spend a rupee for nothing in this country.
6. The great fund of faith in goodwill, friendship, common destiny with which I started over two years ago is running out and I am becoming increasingly conscious of the imperative necessity of ensuring the security of our country not through arms but through diplomacy, not through guns but through butter, not through millions of dollars but through handfuls of rupees.

With kindest regards,

Yours ever

EDITORIAL IN THE DAWN JULY 8, 1957

A Matter of Shame

CLEVER are the means that are being adopted by the Bharati High Commission in this country to achieve New Delhi’s propaganda objectives. One of the various contact-making devices that is employed by them is their film shows. There are other Foreign Missions also that show films, but this Mission specializes in screening full length popular hits of the Bharati screen as against the documentaries and news shots shown by other Missions. To these shows, which have become disturbingly frequent, Pakistani young men and officials are invited in their hundreds. But this is not all. These films are also lent out to various societies. What is more, there are instances where senior officers of our Government have themselves requested these films from the Bharati High Commission to show them, at parties at their houses. Coupled with these is the regular flow of gifts, sometimes in the shape of saris and currently in the shape of Bharati mangoes, that flow to the houses of our Government servants and some other civilians. We pity the intelligence and sense of patriotism of those who go to the film shows of the Bharati High Commission and accept gifts from them.

There is no doubt that these activities of the Bharati High Commission and the willing acceptance of gifts and invitations by our people provide a cover for the Bharati authorities to keep in touch with their secret service agents in this country and also to collect information of various sorts. The lakhs that are being spent on such activities are not coming out of the pockets of Mr. C. C. Desai. It is the Bharati taxpayer’s money that is being spent in Pakistan. Is it for the love of Pakistan, or the Pakistanis or the Pakistani Government that the Bharati Government is allowing this expenditure to be incurred here, while the economy of their own country is going to pieces? No country spends money in another country without seeking advantage for itself. If America is giving us aid and spending money in this country, it is in its own enlightened self-interest and not entirely for the love of Pakistan. Their aim is to help us in developing our economy so that we do not fall victim to the hostile ideology of Communism. Let us take the case of the Federal Capital. Why should the Karachi Administration allow the films to be shown to Pakistani citizens without proper censorship or payment of entertainment tax? If it is to be argued that within the premises of Bharati High Commission they have no authority over these Pakistanis and their premises who borrow Bharati films from that country’s High Commission and show them at their own places. Why are those films not confiscated for being wrongly in their possession as they enter the country without any import licence or without payment of duties? The same is true in the case of saris and mangoes which are dutiable items. Is it not the lawful duty of the Bharati High Commission to pay duty on all the commodities they import into Pakistan for distribution among Pakistanis. The time has come when the Government of Pakistan must take serious notice of what Mr. C.C. Desai is doing under their very nose. We in all seriousness suggest the immediate issuance of a directive to all Government servants not to borrow films and accept gifts of any sort from the Bharati High Commission a country which is openly hostile to Pakistan.

No. 11337P. New Delhi, 19th November, 1957.

The High Commission for Pakistan in India presents its compliments to the Ministry of External Affairs and has the honour to invite the attention of the Ministry to a weekly magazine called Shankar’s Weekly. In its issue of 28th July, 1957, it has published a pen–portrait and an editorial captioned “The Man of the Week,” at pages 1 and 2 respectively. This editorial contains objectionable remarks against Mr. Suhrawardy, the then Prime Minister of Pakistan. The following passages are particularly objectionable:

“Suhrawardy has neither beliefs nor convictions. He came from a class of Asians that was taught by Europe to sell all its traditions for the price of a job. He knows only that jobs should be kept. Because the uncertain politics of communalism provided the easiest chances for jobs in undivided India, Hussain Shaheed Suhrawardy became a politician.

Indians who have watched his crawl to supreme power in Pakistan would have been surprised if he acknowledged fact and reported truth to his benefactors in America. The unashamed lies he has been pouring into the long ears of the anti–Indian part of the American press are not at all surprising.”

The High Commission takes serious view of such malicious, anti–Pakistan writings by an Indian magazine and trusts that the Government of India will take effective steps against it. The action taken by the Government of India may kindly be intimated to this High Commission, if there is no objection.

The High Commission avails itself of this opportunity to renew to the Ministry the assurances of its highest consideration.

No. 15 . 16-PAK-III/57 New Delhi, 24th July, 1958.

The Ministry of External Affairs present their compliments to the High Commission of Pakistan and with reference to its Note No. 11337P dated the 19th November, 1957, have the honour to state that the Ministry is unable to entertain this protest. The provocation for the article was provided by Mr. Shurawardy himself, and further the pen portrait is not particularly objectionable – Shankar’s Weekly often carries cartoons and caricatures of leading personalities of the world – and Indian journals were not alone in caricaturing Mr. Shurawardy at the time.

2. The excerpts quoted in High Commission’s note appeared at the time of Mr. Shurawardy’s visit to the U.S.A. During this visit Mr. Shurawardy in his capacity as the Prime Minister of Pakistan, which is a neighbouring country and is under agreement to promote friendly feelings with India, chose every means to vilify and malign India and her leaders. A few excerpts from Mr. Shurawardy’s speeches, as quoted by U.S. and Pakistani newspapers, are attached – Appendix I (not included here). This amounted to giving encouragement to Pakistani’s papers to step up even further their anti-Indian propaganda as becomes clear from the excerpts from the Pakistan Press at Appendix II (not included here). The High Commission will no doubt appreciate that such anti-Indian propaganda was bound to infuriates public opinion in India. It may be added that certain foreign papers also at the time wrote articles about Mr. Shurawardy. Parts of an article from “Washington Post” of July 10 are attached – Appendix III (not included here). It cannot, therefore, be said that the Indian press alone was caricaturing Mr. Shurawardy’s activities in the United States.

The Ministry of External Affairs avail themselves of this opportunity to renew to the High Commission of Pakistan the assurances of their highest consideration.

Karachi, January 5, 1958.

High Commission of India in Pakistan

No. F. 5(2)/57 – Genl. Karachi, the 5th January, 1958

The High Commission of India presents its compliments to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Commonwealth Relations, Government of Pakistan, and with reference to the correspondence resting with the Ministry’s Note No. I (I). 14/48/’56 dated the 1st November, 1957 has the honour to state that the Government of India are greatly perturbed at the continuing refusal of the Government of Pakistan to entertain protests in respect of propaganda which clearly falls within the scope of Agreements between the two countries. This attitude on the part of the Government of Pakistan in clear contravention of explicit commitments which have been affirmed on several occasions since the Inter–Dominion Conference of 1948.

2. The agreement reached at the Inter–Dominion Conference of December, 1948 was the out–come of the realization that the “whole hearted co–operation of the press is essential for creating a better atmosphere”. It therefore laid down that every effort should be made to ensure that the press in each Dominion did not:

(a) Indulge in propaganda against the other Dominion.

(b) Publish exaggerated versions of news of a character likely to inflame, or cause fear or alarm to, the population or a section of the population in either Dominion.

(c) Publish material likely to be construed as advocating a declaration of war by one Dominion against the other Dominion or suggesting the inevitability of war between the two Dominions.

3. To implement the above decisions an Inter – Dominion Information Consultative Committee was set up. This Committee met a number of times and made certain recommendations which have been accepted by both Governments. The following extracts from the minutes of the second and sixth meetings of the Indo – Pakistan Information Consultative Committee will illustrate and emphasize the importance attached to the need for maintaining an objective attitude with regard to the discussion of issues in dispute between the two countries:
(i) It was agreed that broadcasts of the kind pointed out in so far as they are found on examination to reveal these trends will be avoided. At the same time it was pointed out that this would not be construed to prevent either organization from (a) giving publicity to the point of view of its Government on matters in dispute between the two Governments, for example, the Kashmir issue or any infringement of an Agreement, and (b) treating reliable news reports and statements of important persons on their news value, provided there was no “mud – slinging” and good taste and decorum were observed.

(ii) The sixth meeting of the Committee held in Karachi on the 8th and 9th March, 1951 re – affirmed these principles and further elucidated their bearing on the discussions of disputed questions: -

(a) It took note of the following paragraph from the Resolution adopted by the Joint Press Committee in its meeting at Calcutta from 29th to 31st October, 1950: -

“The Joint Press Committee feels that even if some of the problems take time to resolve, comments in newspapers should be confined strictly to the merits of the problems or problems in dispute and it should in no case be made the basis of a general attack against the two Governments or a personal contumacious, or scurrilous, attack against the respected leaders of either country or the religion, culture and faith of the people of both countries”.

(b) Having cited the above paragraph the Committee went on to state that “it was necessary to reiterate the principles; in particular it was necessary to enjoin upon the Press that comments on problems in dispute between India and Pakistan should be discussed on their merits without introduction of matter arousing communal passion or attacking the territorial integrity of either country or advocating war or creating a war psychosis and should not be made the basis of contumacious, or scurrilous attacks against the religion, culture and faith of the people of either country or personal attacks against their respected leaders”.

4. In the note under reference the Pakistan Government have stated that matters in dispute between the two countries stand on a special footing as far as publicity is concerned and that, for this reason, protests made by this High Commission with regard to false and malicious propaganda on disputed questions cannot be entertained. In support of this contention the Government of Pakistan have quoted the extract from the minutes of the Second meeting of the Inter-Dominion Information Consultative Committee which has been reproduced at para. 3(i) above. The High Commission has been instructed to point out once again that the decision embodied in this extract cannot be construed as permitting the use of violent and abusive language. The Consultative Committee drew a clear distinction between bonafide publicity of an objective character on the one hand and scurrilous propaganda on the other; publicity was permitted and scurrilous propaganda was prohibited. The Government of Pakistan now appear to be taking the view that no restraint or decorum need be observed and that all cannons of accuracy and propriety may be disregarded in cases where the subject matter is one on which there is a dispute between the two countries. This position is totally unacceptable to the Government of India.

5. The Government of Pakistan are fully aware that it was for the express purpose of imposing checks on unrestrained publicity with regard to controversial issues that the various agreements already cited were devised. Further elaboration of this point is unnecessary but it will be useful to invite attention to the Joint Communique issued to the Press on August 20, 1953 by the Prime Ministers of India and Pakistan. An extract from this Communique is reproduced below:

"The Prime Ministers deprecate any propaganda or attacks on one country by the other in the Press, by Radio, or by speeches and statements made by responsible men and women of either country. They trust, therefore, that all organs and responsible leaders of public opinion will direct themselves to this great task of promoting goodwill between the countries and thus help in solving all problems and disputes that might exist between them. The Prime Ministers attach the greatest importance to this friendly approach and to the avoidance of words and actions which promote discord between the two countries."

6. It will be seen from the above that the Government of Pakistan have accepted certain definite obligations with regard to the type of propaganda that should be permitted on controversial questions. In view of the repeated refusals of the Government of Pakistan even to entertain protests arising out of unrestrained propaganda on such issues the Government of India have no option but to conclude that the Government of Pakistan have now repudiated all the agreements entered into between the two countries on this question.

7. Apart from the above agreements, so far as the Kashmir question is concerned, the Security Council’s resolution of 17th January, 1948 enjoins upon both Governments to take “all measures within their power (including public appeals to their people) calculated to improve the situation and to refrain from making any statements and from doing or causing to be done or permitting any acts which might aggravate the situation”. The attitude taken up by the Government of Pakistan in their note under reference not only violates the agreements between the two Governments referred to in paras 2 to 5 above but also the Security Council resolution referred to above. The Government of India particularly regret that Pakistan Government’s note under reference contends that the Government of Pakistan have no obligations either under the agreements between the two Governments or under the Security Council Resolution of 17th January, 1948.

8. The High Commission of India avails itself of this opportunity to renew to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Commonwealth Relations the assurances of its highest consideration.

0212. TOP SECRET/ PERSONAL

Letter from the Minister of Rehabilitation Mehr Chand Khanna to Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru regarding his meeting with Iskander Mirza.

My dear Panditji,

I had a fairly long talk with Iskander Mirza last evening. He appeared to be disgusted with the state of affairs in Pakistan. He remarked that while he was being dubbed a dictator, most of the politicians in Pakistan were dishonest, corrupt and thoroughly unscrupulous. During the 13 months that Suhrawardy was in office, he had made 4-6 crores of rupees; not only that, he had also brought disgrace to the name of Pakistan by his speeches in America. To gain their support, he had gone to the extreme limit of humiliation.
2. Iskander Mirza is also greatly annoyed with Dr. Khan Sahib. He said that he (Khan Sahib) had lost his mental balance. Though physically he may be 62(?), mentally he was 102. It was at his request and entreaties that he had dismissed Suhrawardy. Dr. Khan Sahib had given him an assurance that he and his party would give full support to Chundigar and Muslim League. On return from his foreign tour, he found to his amazement that Dr. Khan Sahib had fallen at the feet of Suhrawardy and made an alliance with him. He was keen to be a Prime Minister himself. He (Iskander Mirza) thwarted him by inviting Firoz Khan Noon to form the Government. Dr. Khan Sahib was playing in the hands of men like Abid Ali who were out to exploit him for their own ends.

3. I then referred to the recent statement of Firoz Khan Noon regarding throwing Indian nationals into concentration camps. Iskander was very emphatic. He said that Firoz Khan Noon did not have much intelligence; like a certain sect ..., he spoke first and thought afterwards. On Firoz Khan Noon’s return to Karachi from Dacca, he (Iskander Mirza) spoke to him in the matter and told him that it was a most foolish statement devoid of all international obligations. Firoz Khan Noon had assured him that he would be more cautious in future but he (Iskander Mirza) could not depend much on his utterances. His main difficulty, he said, was the lack of seasoned statesmen and leaders of repute.

At this stage, Begum Iskander Mirza came in. Her first words to me were that something must be done to bring about happy relations between India and Pakistan. If it were not done during our lifetime, things could never be straightened out in the time of our children. They would have no common ties and it would be a sad day both for India and Pakistan. I told her that we were at all times ready to help Pakistan but there were certain fundamental and basic issues involved. Her husband was in a strong position in Pakistan today and the best thing for him would be to go to Delhi to meet our Prime Minister and discuss matters. If they wanted, I would be glad to speak to you in this connection. Iskander said that he would think over the matter and write to me. I told him that if need be, I could come to Karachi at any time he wanted.

I than mentioned the case of our officer, Batra, who has been missing from Karachi all these days. He did not know anything about it but promised to have necessary enquiries made.

4. My general impression of my talk with Iskander Mirza is that due to political instability he is very unhappy. There is an undercurrent of dissatisfaction in Pakistan. The Sindhis and Pathans make no secret of their intentions to undo the One Unit. On the other hand, the Punjabis look with great disfavour on such a move. The whole political situation in Pakistan appears to be confused.

With kind regards,

Yours sincerely

(MEH CHAND KHANNA)

Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru,
Prime Minister of India,
New Delhi.

Subject: Exchange of Armed Personnel of Pakistan and India Who cross the cease-fire-line inadvertently.

Sir, I am directed to refer to your letter No. 5.No(47).F.5 (28). P. III/56, dated the 5th December, 1957, and to say that the Government of Pakistan have no objection to the extension of the agreement from 1st July, 1957 to 30th June, 1958, provided the Government of India agree to the following conditions:–

(a) Agreement may also be made regarding disposal of those Armed Forces/Police Personnel, who, whether in uniform or not, cross the Cease-Fire-Line and Jammu and Kashmir Border intentionally and do not want to be repatriated to their own country. (b) The immediate repatriation of those prisoners, civil and military in uniform or without, whose crossing of the Cease-Fire-Line or Jammu and Kashmir Border, is established to be ‘inadvertent’ or ‘by force’. In such cases, the verdict of the U.N. authorities will be accepted as correct and final. If according to the verdict of the U.N. authorities, such individuals were maltreated they should be given compensation to be determined by the U.N. officers.

(c) Individuals will be repatriated only with personal clothing and the rest of the articles will be confiscated by the respective Governments.

3. As regards Sepoy Nanak Singh S/O. Munshi Singh of Jammu and Kashmir State, I am directed to state that he was handed over to the authorities of D.A.V. College Hindu Camp, Lahore, on 25th July, 1957. The Hindu Camp as you are no doubt aware, was under the control of the Deputy High Commission for India in Pakistan at Lahore.

4. The Government of Pakistan shall be grateful for an early reply I the matter.

Yours sincerely

(S.A. Nabi)
0214. Proposal for an Islamic Bloc

************

A. TOP SECRET

Note from the Intelligence Bureau, Ministry of Home Affairs regarding rumblings of a Muslim Bloc of Iran, Pakistan, Turkey and Afghanistan.

New Delhi, April 22, 1958.

INTELLIGENCE BUREAU
(Ministry of Home Affairs)

Political alliances in West Asian Countries are very much in vogue. The formation of a Muslim (Non-Arabic) Bloc of Iran, Pakistan, Turkey and Afghanistan is now in the air. This idea is said to have been discussed in a private meeting between Iran and Pakistan during the Baghdad Pact Conference held at Ankara from the 27th to the 30th January 1958. Overtures to rope in Afghanistan have not evoked any favourable response from that country. The wooing of Afghanistan will, however, continue*.

The Pakistan Government are reported to have already sent the proposals to Iran and Turkey and are believed to be very keen for the formation of this non-Arab Bloc in the Middle East. The three countries are considering to adopt a common policy in the international and Middle East Affairs and settlement of disputes with other countries. The Iranian and Turkish delegates, it is learnt, are shortly visiting Karachi in this connection. The conference of Pakistan's Middle East envoys held at Karachi in the last week of March 1958 is also reported to have discussed the matter with a view to give it a practical shape.

The recent speech (April 2) of the new Pakistan Muslim League President Khan Abdul Qayyum Khan, in which he suggested a confederation of non-Arab Muslim States of Pakistan, Iran, Turkey and Afghanistan, may have been based on crumbs of information leaking out and Qayum wanting to be the first to give public expression to the same.

The Iranian Press also demanded a sympathetic consideration of this proposal "in order to stand against the daily increasing political difficulties now spreading in the Middle East". The leading Persian Daily Ittalt stated editorially in its issue of 11.2.1958 that Iran and Pakistan constituted one nation in view of their

This is in continuation of our U.O. No. 16/WA/58-(9) dated 22.4.58.

Recent happenings in West Asia and particularly Nasser’s growing popularity have accentuated the apprehension in the minds of the Non-Arab member-countries of the Baghdad Pact, that the Pact may not survive the impact of growing Arab Nationalism in West Asia.

2. Turkey is understood to be in favour of having a federation with Iran, Pakistan and Israel as a counterblast to Arab Nationalism. Turkey feels that Iran and Pakistan should have no moral or religious scruples in aligning themselves with Israel. To win over Iran to her viewpoint, Turkey is taking advantage of the friction between Iran and Arab States over the Persian Gulf Sheikdom of Bahrain.

3. The recent “softening” of Iran’s attitude towards Israel is taken to be a pointer of Iran’s willingness to join such a bloc. During the “Nauroz” holidays, some Iranian journalists (Editors of Post-e-Tehran, Dad and Tolco) were permitted to visit Israel and on their return wrote articles in their papers advocating friendly relations between Israel and Iran. Two out of the three visiting journalists are members of the Iranian Parliament. Moreover, the authorities permitted many Iranian Jews to participate in the celebrations of the Israeli Independence Day in Jerusalem. The Iranian authorities however have a scheme of their own. This scheme is based on the federation of Persian-speaking people, i.e. Iran, and Afghanistan and Pakistan under the leadership of Iran. There is a lurking hope in the minds of Iranian authorities that ultimately the Persian-speaking nations may win over the Persian speaking People in Russia as well. The pro-Government papers in Iran have hailed these proposals. Some of the papers suggested that initially Iran, Afghanistan and Pakistan should form a cultural federation which should then be extended to cover economic and political fields also. There is a general feeling of suspicion against the Arabs in Iran and Turkey also does not inspire real confidence.

4. Pakistan, has not reacted favourably to Turkey’s proposal. She believes that a federation with Israel would antagonize Muslim feeling in West Asia. She has plans of setting up a loose Islamic Federation of the non-Arab Muslim States of Baghdad Pact, i.e. Iran, Pakistan, and Turkey. According to Pakistan, such a Federation would have the initial advantage that it would maintain the same defence schemes which are already in existence for the Baghdad Pact. Pakistan does not want the actual participation of Western Powers in this Federation but would certainly seek their support. She is also not in favour of exhibiting open hostility towards the United Arab Republic. Iranian circles disclaim any official knowledge about these proposals but nevertheless maintain that Pakistan’s proposals are perhaps more acceptable than those of Turkey.

5. It is understood that nothing concerts will come out of these diverse proposals of Turkey, Iran and Pakistan before the next meeting of the Baghdad Pact countries which takes place in London in June, 1958. If this meeting weather’s the storm and Iraq continues to stick to the Baghdad Pact, the idea of ushering in other Federations may for the time being be dropped.

U.S. Ambassador CHAPIN said last night Shahinshah very set on union with Pakistan telling retired American Military Chief here that he wanted “real union” and that during whole day Shahinshah would spend in Karachi on 12th en route. Formosa matter would no doubt be pursued further with Pakistan President. CHAPIN obviously wanted to elicit India’s reactions. My comments very guarded but pointed out obvious impediments Shia/Sunni, Parliamentary/Monarchy and temperamental and ideological differences; that though ISKANDER MIRZA Shia himself and ambitious to introduce presidential or rather dictatorial Government in Pakistan doubtful whether Pakistani People would stomach it. Also pointed out danger to Iran of complete cleavage from and open hostility to Arab propaganda specifically directed towards them and that scheme unlikely to make much progress unless U.S.A. gave full support. CHAPIN personally discounted this adding that neither Turks nor British were too happy about it but Shahinshah was extremely eager in view of Arab Union and also Soviet pressure. Suggest take early opportunity before Shahinshah- EISENHOWER meeting to represent our views to State Department and observe carefully developments in Karachi.

D. Statement of Indonesian President Sukarno on the move to form an Islamic Bloc as reported by the Dawn of Karchi.

Jakarta, August 9, 1958.

Indonesian President Ahmed Soekarno said in a speech at Semarang, central Java, last night that attempts were being made by "certain elements" to form a new Islamic bloc "on the side of one of the two world Power blocs.

The territories involved, Dr Soekarno said, were Pakistan, Malaya, Sumatra, North Borneo and "Southern Philippines". Dr Soekarno said he had been warned of this move long ago but the idea had been revived after governments of this Power bloc saw their hopes for the Arab countries taking their side fade in views of the stand taken by Egypt and Syria.

Dr Soekarno said: "We must bring to an end our national revolution as soon as possible and take our place in the atomic age where things move very fast."

"We must end the Central Sumatra rebellion as soon as we can for we are racing against events."

E. Statement of Pakistan Prime Minister Malik Firoz Khan Noon on the Muslim Powers Confederation and on relations with India.

Karachi August 21, 1958.

The Pakistan Prime Minister, Mr. Feroze Khan Noon, said in Karachi that he was ready to accept any kind of confederation among Pakistan, Iran and Afghanistan. He added: "Pakistan will welcome any proposal for abolition of frontiers with Iran and Afghanistan or removal of visa system among these countries so as to have a joint defence and foreign policy with these countries."

All outstanding disputes with India, he hoped, would be ultimately resolved by peaceful means.

Mr. Noon said he was going to Delhi next month to discuss the border issues and was hopeful of an amicable settlement being arrived at.

* A Pakistan Foreign Office spokesman on April 10 categorically denied the statement attributed to the Indonesian President, Dr Soekarna that Pakistan was trying to form a new Muslim bloc "on the side of one of the two world power blocs".
Other disputes—canal waters and Kashmir—he said would have to be resolved peacefully.

Mr. Noon said there had been some discussion of canal waters dispute in London recently and further talks would be held in the near future.

The Prime Minister said that ten members of the Security Council had agreed with Pakistan’s views on Kashmir and only the Russian veto had stalled any solution of the problem. He hoped that a peaceful solution would be found for the problem.

Mr. Noon however added that no Government of Pakistan would accept the view that Pakistan was complete without Kashmir.

Mr. Noon said he wanted to maintain the best and friendliest of relations with India.

He deprecated speeches and statements by certain political leaders in the country propagating war with India. “No problem can be solved by war”, he said.

Pakistan, Mr. Noon said, had no intention of going to war against any country but was strong enough to defend herself and meet all eventualities.

Defending Pakistan’s foreign policy. Mr. Noon said the present Government was following the same policy the previous Governments had followed during the past few years.

Mr. Noon said such of the leaders who talked of war and changing foreign policy were doing so to earn applause from the gullible public.

0215. Gwadur Gifted to Pakistan

A. Statement by the Pakistan Prime Minister in the National Assembly regarding Gwadur becoming part of Pakistan.

Karachi, September 8, 1958

[The Prime Minister, Malik Firez Khan Noon, made the following statement in the National Assembly on Gwadur]

The Government of Pakistan have just now issued a communiqué stating that the administration of the Part of Gwadur and its hinterland, which had been in the possession of His Highness The Sultan of Muscat and Oman since 1784 was today taken over by Pakistan with full sovereign rights. The people of Gwadur have joined the people of Pakistan and the whole of Gwadur now forms part of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan. I know that people all over Pakistan including those residing in Gwadur have received this announcement with feelings of great joy. I welcome the residents of Gwadur into the Republic of Pakistan and I would like to assure that they will enjoy equal rights and privileges along with other Pakistan nationals, irrespective of considerations of religion, casts or creed. They will have their full of share in the glory and prosperity of the Republic to which they now belong. The residents of Gwadur, most of whom are members of the brave Baluch community have close racial and cultural links with the people of Pakistan, and joining the Republic of Pakistan represents the natural culmination of their political aspiration.

I should like to take this opportunity to thank on behalf of the people and the Government of Pakistan Her Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom for their assistance and help in bringing to a successful conclusion our negotiations with His Highness the Sultan of Muscat and Oman for the transfer of his rights in Gwadur. The negotiations were pursued with great vigour during the last six months and at every stage we received valuable advice from Her Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom. I should like to congratulate and thank His Highness the Sultan of Muscat and Oman on his wise and statesmanlike decision which has endeared him to the people of Pakistan.

The success of these negotiations and the return of Gwadur to Pakistan should help to illustrate that international disputes can be resolved in a peaceful and satisfactory manner provided that the parties to a dispute are prepared to approach the problem in a spirit of fairness and justice without allowing their emotions or prejudices to get the better of their judgment. I have been advocating this course during the last six months and I am happy that the present Government has been able to establish the validity and effectiveness of this policy in a convincing manner. Gwadur is the first fruit of this policy of good will and cooperation. I fervently hope and pray that it would be possible for us to resolve our other international disputes in an equally peaceful and reasonable manner. Pakistan Zindabad."
B. Aide Memoire of the Government of India to the Pakistan Government requesting continuance of facilities to the Indians living in Gwadur.

New Delhi, December 3, 1958.

Indian nationals, including their dependents, resident in Gwadur at present number about 275. They are mostly engaged in business and hold considerable assets. It has been a matter of satisfaction to the Government of India that the Government of Pakistan have assured the Indian residents of Gwadur that their interest would be fully safeguarded. In this connection, the Government of India wish to bring to the notice of the Government of Pakistan the following matters for their consideration:-

(i) Indian resident in Gwardur had enjoyed, under the rule of the Sultan of Muscat & Oman, certain visa facilities which ensured that they could reside in Gwadur indefinitely. They were also provided with “no objection to return” certificates whenever they went on a visit to India or to some other country. During discussions between the Deputy High Commissioner for India and Agha Abdul Hamid, an assurance was given that non-Pakistan residents of Gwardur could remain there as long as they wished, provided they got the proper visas. As regards the Indian residents, Agha Abdul Hamid stated that they would be given some kind of permanent visas to remain in Gwadur if they so wished, and that the matter was under examination of the Government of Pakistan.

The Government of India would suggest that Indian residents in Gwadur may be granted, at least for 10 years, the same visa facilities as were given to them by the Sultan of Muscat & Oman prior to cession of Gwardur to Pakistan i.e. visas valid for indefinite stay, with facilities for “no objection to return” certificate whenever they leave to visit India or some other country. Indian nationals at present at Gwardur have, for all practical purposes, been permanently domiciled there, and it would be only equitable if they could look forward to the same facilities for the next 10 years at least, if they wished to stay on.

(ii) Mr. Arshad Hussain, Acting Foreign Secretary of Pakistan, had stated to the Acting High Commissioner for India that Indian merchants need not fear that their property would be treated as evacuee property. He had further said that those who wanted to leave Gwardur would have complete freedom to do so and to transfer their assets to any other country, and that they would have the same rights as they enjoyed under the Muscat regime in regard to transfer of property. It is requested that this may be confirmed.
(iii) Some of the Indian nationals at Gwadur, in the changed conditions, may wish to leave the place. Government of India would suggest that such persons should be granted facilities to export all their household goods and personal effects and jewellery, etc., without restriction. They should also be granted facilities of foreign exchange to take out the money held by them in cash, and also the sale-proceeds of their properties and goods in Gwadur.

(iv) Before the 8th September, 1958, the date of cession of Gwadur, Indian traders in Gwadur had entered into certain firm commitments with regard to import of goods into Gwadur. They might have already received the goods for which payment had not been made or for which letters of credit had been established. Government of India would suggest that they may be provided with necessary foreign exchange facilities to meet those commitments.

(v) The protection of places of worship belonging to Hindus may be ensured, and no illegal occupation of these premises should be permitted. It would, of course, be for members of the Gwadur Hindu Panchayat to provide funds for the maintenance of these places of worship.

C. Aide Memoire from the High Commission of India in Karachi to the Pakistan Ministry of Foreign Affairs regarding facilities for Indians in Gwadur.

High Commission of India
Karachi-5

AIDE MEMOIRE

On the 4th December, 1958, the Deputy High Commissioner of India at Karachi saw Mr. M.S.A. Baig, Foreign Secretary, in connection with the provision of facilities and safeguards to Indian nationals residing in Gwadur consequent upon the cession of that territory to Pakistan and left with him an Aide Memoire on the subject. While conveying the satisfaction of the Government of India at the assurances given by the Government of Pakistan that the interests of Indian residents of Gwadur would be fully safeguarded, the Aide Memoire drew attention of the Government of Pakistan to the following points for their consideration:

i) In accordance with the facilities enjoyed by Indian nationals under be rule of the Sultan of Muscat & Oman whereby they could reside in Gwadur indefinitely and were provided with "no objection to return" certificate for purposes of visits outside Gwadur, the Government of Pakistan were requested that Indian residents of Gwadur may be granted, at least for 10 years, the same visa facilities as were given to them by the Sultan of Oman & Muscat.

ii) Pursuant to the assurance given by Mr. Arshad Hussain, Acting Foreign Secretary to the Acting High Commissioner of India that Indian nationals need not fear, that their properties would be treated as evacuee property and that those who wanted to leave Pakistan would have complete freedom to do so and to transfer their assets to any other country, the Government of Pakistan were requested to confirm these assurances.

iii) Since in the changed conditions, some of the Indian nationals may wish to leave Gwadur the Government of Pakistan were requested that such persons may be granted (a) facilities to export their household goods and personal effects, jewellery etc., without restrictions; and (b) necessary foreign exchange facilities to take out the money held by them in cash and also the sale proceeds of their properties and goods in Gwadur.

iv) In those case where before the cession of Gwadur to Pakistan, Indian nationals had entered into certain firm commitments with regard to the import of goods for which payments had not been made or for which letters of credit had been established, the Government of Pakistan were requested to provide them with necessary foreign exchange facilities to meet those commitments.

v) With regard to the protection of places of worship of Hindus, the Government of Pakistan were requested to ensure that no illegal occupation of these premises will be permitted.

During the course of the talk, the Foreign Secretary promised to look into the matter and assured the Deputy High Commissioner that the Government of Pakistan's reply to the points raised in the Aide Memoire would be sent to the High Commission as soon as possible. Although two months have since elapsed, the High Commission is still awaiting a reply.

3. The Government of India have since received representations from the Indian community residing in Gwadur that their trade stocks have been sealed by the local authorities resulting in almost a complete standstill in their normal life.
4. The High Commission, in this connection, would wish to recall the numerous assurances by the Pakistani authorities from time to time. In addition to the statement of the former Prime Minister, Malik Feroz Khan Noon, that non-Pakistanis could continue their trade and professions, the Acting Foreign Secretary, Mr. Arshad Hussain had assured the High Commissioner that the Indian merchants need not fear that their property would be treated as evacuee property, that those Indian who wanted to leave Gwardur would have complete freedom to do so and that they would have the same rights as they enjoyed under the Muscat regime in regard to transfer of property. The current reports received from the Indian merchants are, however, contrary to the assurances held out by the authorities in Pakistan as it is understood that after merger of Gwadur with Pakistan, the Indian nationals are now unable either to transact any business due to sealing of their stocks or to dispose of any property.

5. The High Commission would be grateful if the Government of Pakistan would issue urgent instructions to the authorities in Gwadur to permit Indian nationals to transact normal business to provide necessary facilities for transfer of assets to any other country of such Indian nationals as would wish to migrate and to extent necessary foreign exchange facilities to them to take out the money held by them in cash and also the sale proceeds of their goods and properties for the sale of which all restrictions should be removed. The High Commission would be grateful to be informed at an early date that necessary instructions in this behalf have been issued by the Government of Pakistan to the authorities concerned.

AIDE MEMOIRE

The various issues raised in the AIDE MEMOIREs presented on 4th December 1958 and 7th February 1959 on the subject of Indian residents in Gwadur have been examined and the position in regard to the various points raised is as follows:

(i) The provisions of the Indo-Pakistan Passport-cum-Visa Scheme will apply to Indians in Gwadur. Those who desire to remain in Gwadur and carry on their business may apply for ‘E’ or ‘F’ visas under this Scheme.

(ii) It is confirmed that the properties of Indian nationals residing in Gwadur will not be treated as evacuee property, and those who want to leave Pakistan will have complete freedom to do so in accordance with the laws and rules in force from time to time. However, the transfer of assets by the Indian nationals to other countries will be subject to the normal foreign exchange regulations and custom restrictions.

(iii) (a) It is regretted that unrestricted facilities to export household goods, personal effects, and jewellery etc., cannot be granted. Exports of personal effects of whatever description of Indian nationals who desire to leave Gwadur permanently will be subject to the laws and regulations in force from time to time. The Government of Pakistan is, however, prepared to allow Indian residents desiring to leave Gwadur permanently the same baggage concessions which are granted to migrants from Pakistan to India.

(b) Repatriation of cash and of sale proceeds of properties and goods would also be subject to the Foreign Exchange Regulations in force at the time.

(iv) A separate communication in this regard will follow.

(v) The apprehension of the High Commission about places of worship is not understood, as the High Commission is well aware that the avowed policy of the Government of Pakistan has always been to preserve their sanctity.
2. The allegation made in para. 5 of the AIDE MBMOIRE, dated the 7th February 1959, has on enquiry, been found to be baseless as it is understood that no goods of Indian traders have been sealed at Gwadur. This was also confirmed to Mr. A.S.Chib in d.o. letter No. 1(111)-17/92/58, dated the 22nd/23rd July 1959.

Subject: Facilities to Indian nationals at Gwadur in the matter of repatriation of sale proceeds of their properties.

The High Commission of India in Pakistan presents its compliments to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Commonwealth Relations, Government of Pakistan, and has the honour to refer to the D.O. letter No. HC/35/60, dated the 19th February, 1960, from the High Commissioner to the Foreign Secretary, forwarding a note setting out the problems facing Indian nationals in Gwadur.

2. In the Ministry’s Note No. I(III)-17/92/58-S.O. I(IV), dated the 21st March, 1960, it has been stated that there is no restriction on the sale by Indian nationals of their properties at Gwadur. The High commission would, while welcoming this decision, point out that it would confer no benefit on the Indian nationals in Gwadur unless they are also permitted to remit the sale proceeds out of the country.

3. As the Ministry is aware, the case of Indian nationals in Gwadur is on a different footing from other Indian nationals owing business in Pakistan. The normal facilities available under the exchange regulations of the Pakistan Government for the transfer of sale proceeds of properties are hardly applicable to them. It is, therefore, necessary that special provisions should be made in their case after taking into consideration the privileges enjoyed by them under the Sultanate, and the assurances given by the Ministry themselves on several occasions, as detailed in the note attached to the High Commissioner’s letter of the 19th February 1960, referred to above. The High Commission hopes that the Government of Pakistan would be agreeable to such a course.
4. It is also requested that early orders may be issued allowing the Indian nationals in Gwadur to remit money for the maintenance of their families in India.

5. The High Commission avails itself of this opportunity to renew to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Commonwealth Relations the assurances of its highest consideration.

The Government of Pakistan continues to accept the obligations contained in the Charter of the United Nations and declares itself able and willing to carry out these obligations.

SECRET

Telegram of the Ministry of External Affairs to its Missions regarding the developments in Pakistan.

New Delhi, October 9, 1958.

IMMEDIATE

No. 30477-Circular October 9, 1958.

You must have seen the proclamation issued by the Pakistan President with its emphasis on taking the country to sanity by peaceful revolution to stop the damage caused by political adventurers and exploiters and to prevent further disillusionment and disappointment amongst the people of Pakistan who are becoming dangerously resentful of the manner in which they are exploited. The abrogation of the Constitution and the other measures taken by the President amount to establishment of a military dictatorship.

2. The President has expressed his intention to devise a new Constitution more suitable to the genius of the Muslim public in future and, when ready, submit it to referendum of the people at the appropriate time.

3. AYUB KHAN, Supreme Commander of the Pakistan Forces, has been appointed Chief Martial Law Administrator. An Advisory Council of Secretaries of various Ministries, with AZIZ AHMED as Secretary-General, has been established. AZIZ AHMED will also be Deputy Martial Law Administrator.

4. We are watching developments, but our provisional appreciation is:-
   (i) The President has taken over as he has found that the comparatively moderate elements under FIROZ KHAN NOON cannot run the Pakistan Government and the alternatives are SUHRAWARDY and QAYYUM both of whom are sworn enemies of the President
   (ii) AZIZ AHMED is bitterly anti-Indian and his appointment as Secretary-General and Deputy Martial Law Administrator does not augur well for Indo-Pakistan relations. President MIRZA and AYUB KHAN are, however, level-headed and practical and we do not think that the change in regime is directed against India.
   (iii) In the foreign policy declaration made in the proclamation the President has mentioned the desire of Pakistan to have friendly relations with all nations. A lot will depend on the extent to which the new regime is able to secure internal stability. If there are internal troubles, temptation to divert attention from internal affairs by some sort of an adventurous move against India cannot be ruled out.
(iv) Scanty reports available so far show that there has been no trouble in any part of Pakistan. The dispersal of effort, consequent on the Army taking over, should, at least for the next few weeks, rule out any adventure against India.

Letter from the Indian Ambassador in Berne M. K. Vellodi to the Foreign Secretary Subimal Dutt regarding the appointment of new Foreign Secretary for Pakistan.

Berne, October 9, 1958.

Dear Dutt,

Ikramullah was here a few days ago and called on me while he was here. He told me that he would be leaving London for Karachi in the New Year to assume the office of Foreign Secretary. He also said that the present Foreign Secretary Baig would be coming to Berne as Ambassador.

I have known Ikramullah for years and have never been able to like him. During the two or three hours that he spent with me at the Embassy, he recounted the various efforts made by him during the partition days to ease the tension and induce among the leaders on both sides a desire for cooperation. He told me that, at a meeting presided over by Lord Mountbatten and attended by the Ruling Princes and others including himself, one of the Ruling Princes asked Lord Mountbatten what the future of Kashmir was. Apparently, according to Ikramullah, Lord Mountbatten turned to him and asked whether it had not been decided that Kashmir should go to Pakistan, and he replied that that was the understanding that he had after discussion with Mr. Jinnah. Ikramullah went on to say that, on many subsequent occasions, he had pointed out to our Prime Minister how completely wrong he was in the position that he had taken regarding Kashmir, and so on and so forth. In the old pre-partition days, I used to regard Ikramullah as a stooge of Zafrullah and Ramaswami Mudaliar. I do not think his appointment as Foreign Secretary is going to make your work easier. Equally, I am sorry that Baig may be coming here. In spite of what Padmanabhan has written about Malik, I found him on the whole a harmless chap, pleasant to meet and fairly sensible in his behaviour. I have not met Baig, but from all accounts, he is a nasty piece of work.

I trust this letter will not be seen by Baig’s brother*, the Inspector.

Yours sincerely

I met Chiefs-of-Staff at 11.30 A.M. to-day and gave them certain background information on the latest developments in Pakistan to supplement circular telegram No. 30477, dated 9th October, sent to our principal Missions abroad.

Prevalence of discontent among junior officers in the Services, particularly those in the age group of 40 and below:

These young officers were about 20 years old in 1938 and either directly participated or were influenced by the revolutionary fervor among Muslim Leaguers when the League, which was on oligarchic conservative organization, started its mass movements and demonstrations, including formation of Muslim League National Guards. They naturally hoped to live in a political heaven when Pakistan became a reality. Discontent in this group increased as with the passage of time it became clear, because of the corruption and inefficiency of politicians in power that their dream of a Pakistan flowing with milk and honey was not likely to be realized. Older elements in the Services, being more experienced, were naturally inclined to be cautious. In 1951 there was a slight eruption when Major-General Akbar Khan and some other army officers were arrested for conspiring against the State. In recent years, discontent among junior officers in the Services increased considerably.

Political rivalries and struggle for domination in Pakistan:

Ghulam Mohammed did make an effort to assume absolute powers, within the Constitution, as Governor-General. His illness stopped this trend and subsequent governments suffered from one weakness or other- Chaudhri Mohammed Ali, for example, had ability and experience of a seasoned civil servant but not the aggressive courage of an adventurous politician, Suhrawardy had both but was completely devoid of any principles and was disliked and distrusted by most people in Pakistan. Noon represented moderates in Pakistan and President Mirza hoped that this moderate element would succeed not only in keeping Suhrawardy and Qayyum out of power but later in winning the elections and running the government under his guidance. President Mirza desired that Suhrawardy and Qayyum should weaken each other by involving themselves in a campaign of accusations and counter accusations. Both should be kept out effectively and Noon or his type should continue in power. President Mirza wanted to make sure that Noon and the Republican party and Suhrawardy did not get too close though he allowed the minimum Awami League-Republican co-operation necessary to contain the Muslim League so long as Suhrawardy did not gain any strength from this arrangement. While political conditions deteriorated in Pakistan, President Mirza assisted by the armed forces evidently thought of the need for taking action some time and began to make preparations for complete assumption of power when a suitable opportunity came. It was thus no accident that towards the end of last year the Indo-Pakistan border in the east was sealed and the army was entrusted with the responsibility of stopping smuggling. The real object of this exercise was to get the army mostly West Pakistani in composition – to familiarize itself with conditions in East Pakistan where one day it might have to control the administration.

The Latest violent incidents in East Pakistan Assembly and the aggressiveness of the Muslim League, combined with Suhrawardy’s pressure on Noon to take Awami League Ministers at the Centre, convinced Mirza that there was no chance of the moderate group continuing to run the government under his guidance and that he must act now as the choice was only between Suhrawardy and Qayyum, both of whom were his sworn enemies. Mirza has always had the support of the Service Chiefs and senior officers and they were no longer hesitant as they knew of the pressure from their junior and middle ranks who were anxious for a change.

The new regime that has emerged involves the interplay of these personalities-Mirza, Ayub Khan and Aziz Ahmed. Mirza’s background is that of an aristocrat, cultured and educated, and capable of taking a broad and constructive view.
He is a ‘Shia’ and is not a bigoted Muslim. He is fond of power and having reached the pinnacle would like to stay there. Under the new regime, however, he is entirely dependent upon Army’s support and the Army is controlled by Ayub Khan. If the two do not get on for any reason, it is Mirza who will have to go. Ayub Khan, from the assessment of his Army colleagues here, is a good Muslim but not a zealot. He is a good soldier and has been Commander-in-Chief of Pakistan for about 9 years. He is a great friend of Mirza and while not brilliant, power may go to his head, though he has no serious complexes. Aziz Ahmed, on the other hand, is a bigoted Muslim and a rabid anti-Indian. Hindu baiting is his basic philosophy and as Chief Secretary in East Pakistan up to 1952, he was he one man most responsible for large-scale migration of the minority community from East Pakistan into India. He is a competent officer, conceited and arrogant, and considers himself the equal of any other person in Pakistan. Since Suhrawardy became Prime Minister, Aziz Ahmed has been pushed about from his post of Cabinet Secretary where he practically ran the entire Government of Pakistan, and has had several posts in the last three years, ending up in his last post as Secretary, Rehabilitation Ministry. Aziz Ahmed has been appointed as Secretary-General of the Advisory Council of Secretaries of various Ministries and also designated as Deputy Chief Martial Law Administrator. He is bound to resent his subordination to General Ayub Khan. (This has been confirmed separately by a casual remark made by U.K. High Commissioner who told me that the U.K. High Commissioner in Karachi reported last night that Mirza had a lot of difficulty in getting Aziz to agree to be Deputy Chief Martial Law Administrator.)

The future course of this regime will depend on the interplay of these three personalities. If Mirza and General Ayub Khan do not pay much heed to Aziz Ahmed’s beliefs and philosophy, and concentrate on establishing a stable regime, Indo-Pakistan relations may improve in future. If, on the other hand, Aziz Ahmed has his way and the new regime adopts anti-Indian policies or starts Hindu baiting in East Pakistan, things may become difficult, particularly for the Hindu minority in East Pakistan, who may migrate to India in large numbers and create a serious problem for us. It is also likely that Aziz Ahmed, resenting the superior position of General Ayub Khan and the special place given to the Army, may, in the name of greater experience of administration, ask Mirza to put General Ayub Khan and the Army in their proper place and start a clash. Mirza will be in no position to support any move against General Ayub Khan as the only sanction behind the new regime is the Army as Supreme Commander. If any clash of this type starts, Aziz may have to go. This may be a more hopeful development so far as Indo-Pakistan relations are concerned.

We will also have trouble if the new regime is, for any reason, not able to consolidate its authority internally. It is likely that the new regime may have trouble in East Pakistan where Suhrawardy and his Awami League and Bhashani and his National Awami party politically dominate 3/4ths of the field. If any trouble starts in East Pakistan particularly through the activities of Bhashani and his followers, or Suhrawardy’s followers, the goonda element amongst the East Pakistan Muslims will naturally turn against the Hindu minority and the Martial Law Administration would do nothing to protect them. This may start an exodus of the minority community into India. We have no knowledge as to what is going on in Baluchistan and the frontier areas. The Kalat Ruler’s challenge, 10 years after his accession, would indicate that there is a lot of discontent and unrest in these regions. Here again, if the new regime is not able to control these regions effectively, it may, in its weakness, try to divert attention by some sort of adventure in Kashmir. This may be unofficially headed by somebody, e.g. General Akbar Khan, with the blessings of the regime, the discontented elements in the frontier regions being drafted into this movement in the name of Islam and jihad.

In these circumstances, while it is obvious that we must be vigilant and alert, it is important to avoid doing anything which might be interpreted in Pakistan as an attempt by India to take advantage of Pakistan’s weakness at this stage. This does not mean that in Kashmir or elsewhere, we should turn the other cheek; but we should, in our communications to Pakistan authorities and in our discussions with them and also in such action that we may consider necessary to take in the border regions, avoid giving Pakistan authorities the impression that India is suddenly getting tough with them.

Dacca, October 10, 1958.

[The following message dated 10-10-1958 from the Deputy High Commissioner at Dacca, for the Commonwealth Secretary in the Ministry of External Affairs was received through the Intelligence Bureau Office (Ministry of Home Affairs) in Calcutta]

“A. Imposition of Martial Law a complete surprise in East Pakistan. It is too early to get detailed reaction. Following immediate reaction available:-

(i) Newspapers carried banner headlines without any editorial under general ban.

(ii) Awami League most affected. Cabinet Ministers being forced to vacate houses and close party offices.

(iii) Minister Dhirendra Nath Dutt and General Secretary, Awami League Mujibur Rahman arrived this morning from Karachi unaware of imposition of Martial Law. Ataur Rahman confined to hospital, Karachi.

(iv) Bhasani in Mirzapur. Some N.A.P. members and communist members reported gone underground.

(v) Krishak Praja Party pleased with Martial Law as an answer to Awami League lawlessness in East Pakistan.

(vi) Muslim League and Nizam-e-Islam also pleased as they had no bright prospects in election and most army personnel from West Pakistan are known to have communal sympathy.

(vii) British reaction is that a strong determined action overdue. Mirza after stabilizing situation may need a brain trust of non-involved eminent persons to advise and formulate future constitution. Awami League condemned but not Suhrawardy.

(viii) American reaction. This is De Gaulism. Strong and stable leadership may solve many problems. Martial Law confirmed previous rumours of Mirza encouraging K.S.P. in East Pakistan and Muslim League in West Pakistan to create grounds for martial Law. When Noon and Suhrawardy bridged difference, Mirza struck American displeasure due Mirza mentioning in proclamation better relations with U.A. R. and U.S.S.R.
"B. Situation normal, no chance of any demonstration or opposition. So far Army controlling Airport, Radio, Posts, Telegraphs and other Government set-up. General public attitude indifferent. Most feel Martial may improve corrupt, inefficient civil administration.

"C. General Umrao Khan, Military Administrator, East Pakistan issued orders banning publication of news or comments relating Martial Law as also against Government and different classes or sects. Violation punishable 10 years. Setting up Summary or Special Military Courts to function as far as possible.

"D. Informed sources indicate referendum of Constitution within six months followed by election on separate electorate basis within a year.

"E. Appointment notorious Aziz Ahmad as Secretary General to General Ayub Khan considered ominous in relation to minority community. Large scale migration later not ruled out.

"F. No code or enclaire telegram or trunk call permitted to India in order to isolate East Pakistan.

"G. Special report follows by bag."

Letter from the Acting High Commissioner S. N. Maitra to the Commonwealth Secretary M. J. Desai regarding his talk with the American Ambassador in Karachi.

Karachi, October 11, 1958.

High Commission of India
Karachi-5

No. HC/2/TS/58 October 11, 1958

Dear Mr. Desai,

I enclose for your reading a note I recorded yesterday after an interview with the American Ambassador Mr. Langley which, I trust, you will find of some interest. Apart from the half-a-dozen or so principal actors in the recent drama, Mr. Langley is one of the best informed persons as to what went on. Mr. Langley is a fairly straightforward man and I think that most of what he told me is true to fact. The only point on which I doubt his veracity is that the Americans had no previous intimation of what was coming. I cannot believe that President Mirza would have taken a leap in the dark without an assurance of support from the Anglo-Americans. So long he was playing one party against the other; now he has dropped all parties and the only support on which he relies is the Army. Although a titular General, Mirza is not an Army man. He has to have some other support beside the Army to keep himself in power. The manner in which the take-over has been smoothened by US and UK not raising the thorny question of recognition lends support to the theory of previous knowledge and approval. I think Mirza’s main line of argument was something like this - “If you don’t like me and the Army taking over, something worse will come up soon”.

The general view in American and British circles, both official and non-official, is that the “present setup is a civilian administration with a military underpinning. Their general attitude is “Business as usual”.

With kind regards,

Yours sincerely

(S.N. Maitra)

Shri M.J. Desai, ICS,
Commonwealth Secretary,
Ministry of External Affairs, New Delhi.
A note on conversation with Mr. James M. Langley, U.S. Ambassador at Karachi, held on 10-10-1958.

I called on Mr. Langley, U.S. Ambassador, today and talked with him about an hour, mostly on the current situation in Pakistan. Mr. Langley had been away to the States for consultations and returned to Karachi only on the 26th of September. He said that he was taken by surprise by President Mirza’s move, like most other people he knew. He had been away for some time but he had a large staff at Karachi and said that none of his people told him on return that such a move was imminent. Of course, he had read about the unseemly happenings in the East Pakistan legislature and thought that “something might snap.” Parliamentary government, in Mr. Langley view, depended to a large extent upon proper respect for forms and procedures. He said that when he first came to Pakistan a year ago, he had attended a session of the National Assembly at Karachi and was poorly impressed by the lack of decorum of members, as well as the low level of ability. In particular, he mentioned the curious sight of the Deputy Speaker having wordy battles from his Member’s seat with the Speaker in the Speaker’s chair. According to Mr. Langley, it was the obvious break-down of parliamentary government in East Pakistan that precipitated the crisis. He went on to say that president Mirza had never concealed his opinion that democracy in Pakistan was a failure and it should be replaced by some other form of government. But this dictatorial take over had been talked about so often that it had become like the cry of “wolf, wolf”. He agreed with me that the General Elections programme had gone over so many hurdles, and that so little time remained before it was actually held, that it had become almost a certainty. Mr. Langley was in a communicative mood and told me that the day after he arrived he went to see President Mirza to deliver him some small articles he had brought for him from the States - a purely personal call. He was very tired and had not gone there to talk politics, but President Mirza detained him for a quarter of an hour. During this time he held forth on his favourite theme of failure of parliamentary government and ended with what Mr. Langley said he had often heard from him, “I must take over”. Looking back, Mr. Langley said that at that time, president Mirza must have tried to get across the idea that he was about to take over, but he failed to catch the hint.

2. On the night of 7th October, Mr. Langley went to bed with a heavy cold. He was woken up by a telephone call from President’s House at about 11 P.M. and went there. He was met on arrival by President Mirza, who told him that he had proclaimed Martial Law and had taken over the administration. In addition to himself, the following Heads of Mission were present: Sir Alexander Symon, High Commissioner for U.K., the Ambassadors of Turkey, Iran and Afghanistan. He understood that quite a few other Heads of Mission, including the Malayan High Commissioner, had been rung up but could not be contacted.

His impression was that envoys of Baghdad Pact countries and those of S.E.A.T.O. were particularly asked to come. The presence of the Afghan Ambassador and the call for the Malayan High Commissioner did not, to my mind, fit in with this proposition. To continue with the story President Mirza showed the envoys of U.S. and U.K. his long proclamation. They asked for copies, but he said that he had given other copies to press and told one of his staff to type out some more. While they were waiting for these, Messrs Langley and Symon questioned President Mirza on various aspects of the takeover. President Mirza gave them the impression that while the Constitution had been abrogated, laws of the land would be maintained. Turning to Sir Alexander Symon, he jokingly remarked that Pakistan had now become like the U.K. where laws were obeyed, though the Constitution was unwritten.

They received the impression that the takeover was an orderly process and President Mirza was in command of it. A personal message from President Mirza to President Eisenhower was handed over to Mr. Langley. This was taken out from a sheaf of similar papers which made him think that personal messages were being sent to Heads of other States also. President Mirza was anxious that foreign Governments should continue to recognize the Government of Pakistan notwithstanding the change, and that relations with them should remain unaffected. He was also anxious to impress upon those present that there was no hiatus and no question of recognition or fresh accreditation was involved. I pointed out to Mr. Langley the contradiction between the statement made to the press yesterday by President Mirza that he derived his authority from “Revolution” and the note handed over by the Foreign Office to all Heads of Missions (including myself which I have forwarded to the Government of India), describing himself as the President of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan. Mr. Langley agreed that with the abrogation of the Constitution, he could no longer remain President by virtue of it, and went on to say that President Mirza was more secular in outlook than other Pakistanis, and preferred the title Pakistan to Islamic Republic of Pakistan. In spite of the legal difficulty involved, Mr. Langley felt that there was force in President Mirza’s contention that he was the Head of the State and continues to remain so. The American Embassy in Karachi is working on that basis that there was no need for fresh accreditation, but they had formally referred this matter to the State Department, whose decision had not yet been received. He, however, thought it unlikely that the State Department would hold a different view.
3. On the subject of the new set up, Mr. Langley was cautiously optimistic. He felt that President Mirza was firmly in the saddle and would not be easily dislodged. Mr. Langley’s view was that the present move came equally from President Mirza and the top Army leadership, actuated by similar motives to prevent a complete breakdown. He said that a strong bond of loyalty existed between President Mirza and some of the top Army leaders although he was not sure how far down the scale it reached below the rank of Brigadier. About General Ayub, Mr. Langley’s reading was that he was a steady and somewhat cautious man. He did not believe what General Ayub had said in his radio talk that in Mr. Ghulam Mohammed’s time he had been asked to take over the Government repeatedly, but had not. He felt that this was self-advertisement. All the same, he thought that General Ayub was not particularly ambitious and probably he felt it safer and more rewarding, as Mr. Langley put it, “to play the part of King-maker rather than be the King. He, however, admitted that the present set up was a dnomvirate or rather a triumvirate if Mr. Aziz Ahmed is included. Mr. Langley felt that Aziz Ahmed was a thoroughly bad choice. He said that he had been obstructive in the case of several American aid programmes and he had to speak very plainly to him on occasions. In fact, Mr. Langley volunteered that it was on account of his complaint to Premier Noon that Mr. Aziz Ahmed had been transferred from the Commerce to Rehabilitation Ministry. But somehow President Mirza was very attached to Mr. Aziz Ahmed and has brought him back as Secretary-General; Mr. Langley laughingly said that if he had known what was coming, he would have strongly backed Mr. Aziz Ahmed’s candidature for UNESCO Director-Generalship instead of turning it down. President Mirza had confided to Mr. Langley that it is his wish gradually to upgrade the present Advisory Council, which now consists only of Departmental Secretaries, by the addition of public men who would be of the status of Ministers but would be called Advisers. He was thinking immediately of taking two Advisers for Finance and Food & Agriculture Departments. Mr. Langley anticipated that Mr. Amjad Ali would be inducted to the post of Finance Adviser. I asked him whether once having tasted power the Army would not oust the civilian element as they had done in Egypt. Mr. Langley conceded the theoretical possibility but thought that in the conditions prevailing in Pakistan it was improbable. For one thing, he said there had been no revolt by the Army.

4. I told Mr. Langley that the efficient manner in which the changeover had taken place with such little show of force spoke very well of staff work. He agreed to this, but did not agree with the further suggestion that I made that the plan must have matured quite some time ago. His impression was that the outline of the plan had been kept a well-guarded secret by President and a handful of Generals for some time, but its detailed work-out had been done quickly before the actual events. He agreed that none of the Ministers knew anything about it. Regarding the former Defence Minister Khuhro, I was surprised to hear that the Army distrusted him completely and shared none of its secrets with him. It only extended to him formal courtesies like guard of honour etc.

5. I mentioned to Mr. Langley about USS Greenwich Bay, the flagship of U.S. Commander-in-Chief in the Middle East, which was expected on the day following the takeover. He said the date of arrival of the ship was a coincidence and had been countermanded by the State Department as soon as they were apprised of the political change in Pakistan. He added that at that time, the State Department might well have anticipated bloodshed and disorder, and naturally did not like any U.S. naval ship to be near the scene which might be misinterpreted.

TOP SECRET

Letter from the Indian Deputy High Commissioner in Dacca to Commonwealth Secretary M. J. Desai regarding political situation in the wake of promulgation of Martial Law.

Dacca, October 13, 1958.

Deputy High Commissioner For India in Eastern Pakistan Dacca

No. F. 1(2)PS/58 13th October, 1958.

My dear Sir,

The Military Administration in East Pakistan under General Umrao Khan is in the process of settling down.

2. The Administration through pressure and threat is getting complete cooperation from the press. The Administrator and his colleagues are often making press statements. The whole emphasis of these statements is to bring forcefully before the people the fact that the civil administration run by inefficient and corrupt civil servants and led by equally corrupt and unscrupulous politicians have done incurable harm to the people. The Administration, therefore, is out to eradicate all corruption and malpractices etc.
3. To follow up this policy the Administration in East Pakistan have arrested yesterday top politicians from Awami League, KSP and NAP. Bhasani, the NAP leader has been detained under Security Act while he was in hospital in Mirzapur and has been brought to Dacca jail early this morning. Awami League leaders like Abul Mansoor Ahmed, Mujibur Rahman, Abdul Khaleque, Nuruddin Ahmed, MPA, Qurban Ali, MPA, Abdul Hamid Choudhury, ex-MPA, were arrested yesterday under anti-corruption Act and Ordinance.

4. A number of top civil servants like Asghar Ali Shah, former ICS, and a very close associate and handy man of Suhrawardy, the Chief Engineer Jabbar, and other officials were arrested under anti-corruption act. The bail petitions for them all were rejected. The Inspector General of Police Ismail was forced to go on leave from yesterday afternoon and his place has been taken over by Kazi Anwarul Huq. Indications are that more arrests would be made in next few days. So far the leaders of the minority community, most of whom have gone back to their respective villages, have not been touched.

5. Yesterday from a very reliable source it was gathered that;

(a) Defence Minister Khuroo had a plan for Coup d'etat with the help of top military officials like General Reza in Karachi and complete a palace revolution by either placing under arrest or executing Mirza and other top officials. Unfortunately for them they were delayed by 12 hours. Mirza struck first.

(b) It is gathered further that in East Pakistan Awami League and NAP leaders were also planning to take over the administration with the help of armed police and ansar and to declare East Pakistan as a separate independent nation. The leaders of this clan among others were Mujibur Rahman, Dildar Ahmed, Nurul Rahman, Safruddin Choudhury of Sylhet and others. As there was no understanding nor coordination between the East and the West Wing in this matter, the leaders were completely taken by surprise when Mirza took over completely and abrogated the Constitution in Karachi.

(c) Bhasani, Mujibur Rahman and others have already been arrested. They may however send one or two emissaries to India.

(d) This morning, therefore, when the newspapers published a statement purported to have been made by the Prime Minister at a press conference stating that India would recognize on de-facto basis the new Government of Pakistan, some of these leaders sent word to us expressing their disappointment. They thought perhaps that non-recognition by India may help them indirectly in their efforts. In this connection they feel that the present Administration in Pakistan is not only un-constitutional but illegal in view of the fact that when Pakistan was created, the power was transferred to the people and a Constituent Assembly was the competent body to give or to change any pattern of Government.

6. I personally feel that the present leadership in East Pakistan is neither strong nor dependable enough to carry out a plan like this. They were first shocked, now terrified and therefore naturally trying to look to India for their support. The type of mass contact they have, if at all, would hardly offer a positive leadership for a revolution. It is, however, for the Government of India to decide as to what attitude we should take in this regard if further approach is made from that quarter.

Yours sincerely

or members of the Awami League or indeed of any political or other groups in Pakistan, East or West. Our representatives have to deal with the functioning Government in Pakistan, including that in East Pakistan. We just deal with them as a functioning Government and do not interfere with the internal affairs of the country.

4. We would, therefore, advise you not to get involved with these Awani Leaguers or any other group in any way.

0225. PRIVATE & CONFIDENTIAL

Letter from British Member of Parliament and former Foreign Secretary in the Labour Government of Attlee, A. Bevan to M. O. Mathai Prime Minister’s aide.

House of Commons,

22nd October, 1958.

My dear Mac,

What is happening to you? Jennie and I have not heard from you for ages. Have you gone into purdah? Why don’t you take aside one of your innumerable secretaries and dictate a letter to us, telling us in particular what is happening to yourself and, if you are inclined to do so, tell us about what is happening in India. I would be very much obliged if you would let me know your views about events in Pakistan and put me in touch with someone, if you would be so good, who could tell me from time to time how things are developing there.

I look upon the situation in Pakistan as of profound importance, not only for S.E. Asia, but particularly for the future of India. I don’t know whether you read what I write, but some time ago I was pointing out that there are all kinds of currents inside the Muslim League which would prevent it from developing into a complete homogeneity. In the past, the Muslim world has been kept atomized by the intrigues and often the bribery of the Western powers. That phase is coming to an end, but it is followed by another much more potent because it is indigenous. This is the conflict of interest that is bound to grow between the claims of Egypt and the other members of the League. The latter will not be disposed to substitute what they regard as Egyptian imperialism for Western domination.

There is very little possibility that Pakistan will be able to find, in identification with her Muslim brothers, any compensation for the situation at home. In these circumstances, I do not put it beyond possibility that Nehru might yet play an important, if not decisive part, in the future of Pakistan. I admit that at the moment this seems almost as remote as to be crazy, but I am sure that in Pakistan there exists a very great admiration for Nehru. It is therefore of the utmost importance that we become intimately acquainted with developments in Pakistan so that at some decisive time we might be able to guide them.

Please give my affectionate regards to Nehru and, of course, to Indira.

Jennie sends her love. We have both missed you very much and look forward to seeing you soon.

Yours affectionately,

Auerien Bevan

Mr. M.O. Mathai,
Prime Minister’s House,
New Delhi, INDIA.

Note by the Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru

PRIME MINISTER’S SECRETARIAT

I have dictated a note which you can send to Nye Bevan, in addition to such other papers as you are sending. Shri M.J. Desai’s note can be sent, though it is slightly out of date.

You can send a copy of my note to Shri M.J. Desai. If he cares to revise his old note, he may do so. If not, it does not much matter.

My name of course should not be mentioned by you or by anyone else in this connection; nor should the note I have written be published. The note should be treated as background information and anything mentioned in it can be used.

(J. Nehru)
NOTE BY PRIME MINISTER NEHRU

The situation in Pakistan changes from day to day and what may be written today may not be applicable some time later. Only this morning came news of the practical elimination of President Iskander Mirza and General Ayub Khan becoming the sole Dictator and Marshal Law Administrator. It appears that Iskander Mirza has, for the present at least, completely gone out of the picture. There is in Pakistan now a more naked form of autocracy or authoritarian Government than perhaps in any other country.

The coup d’etat which led to the abrogation of the Constitution came as a surprise because of the form it took. It was clear however for some time past that both politically and economically Pakistan was rapidly deteriorating and almost disintegrating. Something had to happen. The politicians were completely discredited, the civil servants had some power and authority, but in effect the Army was the only strong and organized force in the country. Political parties were unprincipled and, except to some extent in East Pakistan, had no popular backing. Ex-President Iskander Mirza in a statement at the time of the coup d’etat described these political parties in language which could hardly be exceeded in virulence and contempt. One thing however he forgot to mention. He himself was by no means above or away from politics. He was constantly playing the political game and in fact was chiefly instrumental in the formation of the Republican Party. He was playing one group against another and usually succeeding. When this game could be played no longer and some kind of elections loomed in the near future, there was no other way left except to put an end to the Constitution itself as well as the political parties. In fact, a vacuum had been gradually created in Pakistan. It could only be filled by the Army or with the assistance of the Army.

President Iskander Mirza had no direct party of his own, although he had helped in starting the Republican Party and was helping it. But this Party itself was in process of disintegration. Members of the parties changed over from one to another repeatedly without any question of principle arising. Mirza’ strength lay not in a party and not in popular backing. It was derived partly from the support of the senior members of the Civil Service and more so from the support he received form the senior officers in the Army and especially General Ayub Khan. So long as he had this support, he could play about with the others.

Later, two personalities arose which fell out with Mirza and played their own game. These were Suhrawardy and Abdul Qayum Khan, President of the Muslim League. The possible approach of the elections increased party maneuvering and attacks on the existing Government, whatever it may be, as well as to some extent on President Mirza. Abdual Qayum Khan was not very important, but Suhrawady was completely unscrupulous and very clever, and Mirza was determined to crush him. He did succeed in removing him from the Prime Ministership. Suhrawardy thereafter quietly worked to strengthen his position for the elections. Soon after Suhrawardy was dismissed from the Prime Ministership, Mirza remarked that Suhrawardy had managed to collect through corrupt practices a large sum of money which he mentioned to be about five million pounds. Whether Suhrawardy did this or not, cannot be ascertained, but there can be no doubt that he is corrupt and was capable of doing it.

Although the political situation was disintegrating fast and the economic situation was equally bad, it is possible that no coup d’état might have come just at this stage, but for the fear of elections. It seems that the idea of a coup was present in Mirza’s mind for some months previously and undoubtedly he must have consulted and relied on General Ayub Khan’s support. Without that support, he could do nothing.

It should be remembered that it is hardly true to say that democracy was ended by the coup. Democracy never existed in Pakistan. There had been no elections ever since partition and the pre-independence rump of an Assembly continued in some form or other. To begin with, the Muslim League, which had been largely instrumental in bringing about partition naturally assumed power. But it had really no political or economic programme and no popular basis except its communalism and strong anti-India bias. It had therefore inevitably to continue the old anti-India policy to divert people’s attention from the real problems of the country. The Muslim League derived its strength from certain big landlords and people in the Civil Service who had helped in bringing about the Partition. On the social plane it was reactionary and dared not even tackle the most important problem of Pakistan, that is, land reform. In fact, politics in Pakistan were essentially clan-politics and leading politicians were big landlords with a personal following. The Services helped these clans. The military did not play an obvious part in politics, but on some occasions when there was trouble, the military had to be called in to preserve order. Gradually the military began to look down with great contempt on the civilian apparatus. These civil services as well as the politicians were very corrupt. The military was not above this either, but this was not so obvious to the public. The result was that both the politicians and the civil service were generally looked down upon by the people while the military retained some prestige.

After partition and independence, new problems arose in Pakistan, but the policy pursued was a continuation of the old policy of the Muslim League which had no relation to these problems. Even on the nationalist plane, the country did not take root. The policy of the Muslim League Government being essentially a pseudo-religious policy, could not base itself on nationalism. There was constant talk of Pan-Islamism and union of Islamic countries. Thus Pakistan took no roots even on the nationalist plane and much less on the economic or political. It played about with slogans about the unity of Islam in spite of the obvious conflicts among Islamic or political. It played about with slogans about the unity of Islam in spite of the obvious conflicts among Islamic countries and it was driven to take refuge in various pacts and alliances like SEATO and Baghdad Pacts and the military help from the U.S.A. In fact it became a protégé of the United States. Both the U.S. and the U.K. Governments patted it on the back and praised it. For some time the Pakistan Government tried to make out that it is playing an important part in world affairs through SEATO and Baghdad Pacts. In doing so, it fell out with some of the Islamic countries, especially Egypt. All this weakened its position among its own people, where there is considerable admiration for Nasser and his policy.

Apart from other disintegrating forces at work, there was the strong pull in East Pakistan against what they call the domination of West Pakistan.

Thus Pakistan, which came into existence on an unreal issue, never succeeded in finding any realistic basis. It carried on because of substantial help received from the United States. For a long time past President Iskander Mirza made it known that he did not approve of the type of democracy that Pakistan had or at any rate that the people of Pakistan were not suited to it. He said something about “Controlled democracy”, probably thinking in terms of presidential rule, to some extent modeled after the U.S.

Thus some kind of coup d'etat was inevitable. The exact shape it took was somewhat unexpected. Two persons emerged – President Mirza and Genral Ayub Khan. It was clear from the beginning that Ayub Khan was the real boss. When Mirza took some steps, such as the formation of an Advisory Council etc., General Ayub Khan evidently thought that even this minor divergence should not be tolerated. Thereafter Mirza had to quit as there was no other refuge for him in the governmental apparatus. Now Ayub Khan has declared in favour of what he calls Presidential Rule, he himself being the President. He nominates his advisers or Cabinet, but the sole authority is Ayub Khan himself.

There was some discontent in the Navy and the Air Force as they had been left out of the picture. Ayub Khan has however brought them in by appointing the Chiefs of Staff as Deputy Marshal Law Administrators. He has dropped Aziz Ahmed. Thus, the Civil Services have definitely been made to realize that they have to carry out orders and not to give them.

It is difficult to measure public opinion when there is total suppression and the death penalty has been fixed for a multitude of even secondary offences. The newspapers in Pakistan have fallen in line with amazing speed and they print eulogies of General Ayub Khan. It would appear that the coup d'etat was largely welcomed by the public to begin with. They were fed up with the politicians and others and the general corruption of the regime. Also marshal Law directives, which had to be obeyed on point of severe penalties, brought down prices of consumer goods especially articles of food. This was popular, but of course this kind of thing cannot last long. Shops were crowded with buyers and their apparent stocks were exhausted fairly soon. It may be that some goods went underground.

It was interesting to note how the press in the U.K. and the U.S.A., while mildly expressing regret at the collapse of “democracy” in Pakistan, praised Iskander Mirza and Ayub Khan and made them out to be champions of democracy who had been forced to take some steps against their innermost wishes. Iskander Mirza was specially made a hero. The hero has now gone and only Ayub Khan remains. It will be interesting to know what the press in the U.K. and U.S.A. say now.

We have no knowledge that any pressure was brought on Pakistan by an outside country in favour of the coup d'etat. Probably no active pressure was brought, but it seems unlikely that such a step was taken without some kind of reference to the United States representatives. The U.S. has been functioning as the chief protector of Pakistan and even Mirza and Ayub Khan would hardly have dared to do something which they thought might be disapproved by the U.S. Possibly the talk of a Presidential form of Government pleased some of the authorities in the U.S. Of course the Pakistan variety of the Presidential form of Government is entirely different from the American.

Another very significant fact has been the recent visit of the American Secretary of Defence to Karachi. He came after the coup and it was announced that American military aid would continue to flow into Pakistan and might even be expedited. To make known this fact soon after the coup would be generally interpreted as an approval of what had happened in Pakistan and a desire to help the dictatorial regime.

In India the Government and people were naturally greatly interested and concerned at these developments in Pakistan. But comment has been very restrained. The PM of India made it clear that this was the business of the people of Pakistan and he did not wish to interfere. Behind this restraint had been the desire to see how things developed there and at the same time to avoid doing something in India which might give a handle to this new regime in Pakistan. But there is a measure of anxiety as to how these dictators may function and there is certainly a risk that the sole dictator now, after the manner of his kind, might indulge in adventures.

It is difficult to forecast what will happen in the future in Pakistan. General Ayub Khan has made it clear that the dictatorial regime will continue for some time. In fact he is stabilizing it and called it a Presidential regime. There is no alternative to it at present and there is little chance of any upheaval. The two areas which are probably the most discontented are East Pakistan and the old Frontier Province in the North West.

The departure of Iskander Mirza, though inevitable, is not a good sign. He might have functioned as a restraining influence especially in so far as India is concerned.

It is of importance now what attitude the U.K. and U.S. Government take up. If they go on encouraging the present dictatorial regime in Pakistan, this may well mean an encouragement to any adventurous action that Ayub Khan might think of. In particular, the continuation of American military aid to Pakistan in these circumstances is dangerous from India’s point of view and highly objectionable from any point of view.

Letter from the Acting High Commissioner S. N. Maitra to Commonwealth Secretary M. J. Desai regarding his call on President Iskender Mirza.
Karachi, October 23, 1958.

High Commission of India
Karachi

Dear Mr. Desai,

Since the emergency most of the Heads of Diplomatic Missions including High Commissioners of Commonwealth countries, at Karachi had called on the President. Wishing not to be conspicuous, I followed suit and paid a brief courtesy call on President Mirza today. The President was nice and affable to me. After the preliminary exchanges of politeness, President Mirza went into defence of his own action and said “I had to do it”. He repeated the old story how everybody was corrupt and Government was running down. He mentioned the case of the smuggler, Qasim Bhatti, who he said, was a dock labourer a few years ago earning is 100/- per month and was now a multi- millionaire. He said he had arrested him when he was Interior Minister, but Bhatti was released soon after. He went on to say that the Awami League had a planned system of corruption which could only ruin the country, and particularly mentioned Mujibur Rahman in this connection. Striking a personal note, President Mirza said that he had not taken the extreme step for personal ends. If he could do nothing, he would have quit.

2. This resume took a couple of minutes and then president Mirza eagerly asked me about the reaction in India. I told him that on the whole the press and public have taken a sympathetic attitude towards the events in Pakistan, and have not displayed any tendency to gloat over her difficulties. I added that most of the opinion expressed about himself agreed that he had shown patience and acted from patriotic motives. He seemed pleased and asked me to send him press reports containing the Indian reaction. I told president Mirza that the tone of Indian thinking had been set by our Prime Minister’s statement on the emergency in Pakistan. President Mirza said that our Prime Minister’s views were wise and sound and he appreciated them. Here, he asked me to convey a personal message from him to our Prime Minister. So far as I can remember, the following were his actual words:-

“Personally, it would be the happiest day of my life when India and Pakistan could live on the best of terms as friends and neighbours. Of course, unfortunately, there were serious differences between the two countries, not made by them, but arising out of the forces of history, I sincerely hope that these differences would be removed, and we would be on the closest terms of friendship and cooperation. Pakistan wishes India to be strong and prosperous, and I have no doubt that India has the same wishes about Pakistan”.

I made no comment beyond saying that I appreciated the sentiments and would convey them to our Prime Minister, I would be glad if this is done.

3. Our talk veered round to East Pakistan. The President said that a serious problem, both for India and Pakistan, has been created by the bumper jute crop. He said that whereas politicians had been shouting of serious loss of crop due to drought and asking for crores of rupees from the Centre by way of relief, it has now turned out that there has actually been a bumper crop of something like 75 lakh bales of jute. He asked me whether communism was not a serious menace in West Bengal. I told him that what with unemployment and a large refugee population, communism had made some advance, it was not yet a serious menace, and our Government was firmly in control of the situation.

4. My interview lasted for about fifteen minutes and at 12,30 p.m., the Supreme Commander, General Ayub was announced. General Ayub had just returned from his East Pakistan trip and had come to see the President straight from the airport. As I came out, I met his at the corridor and shook him by the hand. He said that he had just returned from Dacca and would be glad to see me some time. Behind him was a large following of red-tabs, among whom I recognized General Sher Bahadur, the Karachi Commander, with whom I exchanged a few words.

With kind regards,

Yours sincerely

New Delhi, October 24, 1958.

My dear Vellodi,

Thank you for your letter No. 10-POL/58 of October 9 on your talk with Ikramullah. In view of the recent changes in Pakistan I am not sure that Ikramullah will be brought back to the Foreign Office as Secretary. It is very likely however that Sikander Baig will go if only for the reason that Ayub and Aziz Ahmad may wish to get rid of such an arrogant person who is none too able. Pakistan seems to have specialized in producing perfect models of arrogance and conceit. I doubt whether any country in the world is capable of producing an Aziz Ahmed and a Sikander Baig. In a sense I feel sorry for you. The best course however would be to keep Baig at arm's length. He is a very obnoxious person. I have heard it said very reliably that he left a dinner party immediately on arrival when he saw a member of the Indian High Commission among the guests. “How dare you invite an Indian to a party to which you have asked me!” These were his only words to his host.

Yours sincerely

Letter from the Acting High Commissioner S. N. Maitra to Commonwealth Secretary M. J. Desai regarding meeting between Deputy High Commissioner and the Yugoslav Official.

Karachi, October 24, 1958.

High Commission of India
Karachi

Dear Mr. Desai,

We have at Karachi the Yugoslav Minister, Vlahov. He is rather outspoken. The other day he had the President to dinner at his house and subjected him to a number of straight questions on the current situation in Pakistan, rather in the manner of a newspaper correspondent. The results are interesting. Our Deputy High Commissioner, Padmanabhan, got the whole story from Vlahov and I enclose a copy of it. The main points are:

(i) Mirza is the No. 1 man.
(ii) The coup was planned at Nathiagali, where Mirza went in June.
(iii) A ‘rebel radio’ is operating somewhere on the Pak-Afghan border, attacking the present regime,
(iv) The regime has no clear-cut economic policy and is not serious about land reforms.
(v) The initiative taken by Noon to settle Indo-Pak border problems would be continued.
(vi) Suhrawardy might go abroad.
(vii) Mirza’ a step-daughter might marry Amjad Ali’s son.

With kind regards,

Yours sincerely

Shri M. J. Desai, ICS,
Commonwealth Secretary,
Ministry of External Affairs,

NOTE OF THE MEETING BETWEEN INDIAN DEPUTY HIGH COMMISSIONER AND THE YUGOSLAV MINISTER

Mr. Vlahov, the Yugoslav Minister had President Mirza and wife to dinner at his house on the 21st instant. After dinner, Mr. Vlahov drew out the President for a walk on the lawns, when he had a fairly long talk with him.

Mr. Vlahov started by saying that he was new to Pakistan, was almost alone in his Mission and wished to know more about the latest developments. He apologized for his meager knowledge of English and begged the President's pardon in advance if his questions appeared to be blunt. The President said that he did not mind blunt questions.

He first asked the President about his relation-ship with General Ayub, and in particular as to who was in overall charge of the country. President said that Ayub was a soldier and not a diplomat. Their relations were friendly and he had no reason to believe that Ayub would go against his wishes. He made Mr. Vlahov understand that he was very much the number one man in Pakistan. Mr. Vlahov believes that this is so at the present moment and that the President would try to keep himself in power by (i) playing the Army against the Air Force and the Navy, (ii) creating groups within the Army itself and (iii) supporting the civilians against the Military group. Mr. Vlahov confirmed the current rumours about the Air Force Chief’s reported opposition to the coup d’etat and the Navy’s reluctance to be involved too much in the administration. In his view, inter-Services jealousy and rivalry is bound to develop as time goes on.

Mr. Vlahov then gave the President his own reading as to how the so-called “revolution” was planned, which was as follows. First of all, there was the “operation closed door” in East Pakistan, which enabled large number of troops to be sent to that Province and to keep it “safe” for an emergency. In March 1958, at the time of the Lahore Horse Show the President sounded General Ayub about a possible coup. (Mr. Vlahov was present at the function). Ayub showed hesitation then. Later, the President brought up the subject again at Nathiagali where he was able to convince the General and both waited for a favourable opportunity. The Ordinance against semi-military organizations for political purposes followed. The abject collapse of the Muslim League agitation against the Ordinance was an eye-opener. It convinced the Presi-dent that there would be no serious opposition to his taking over power. (The President intervened here to say, that when the Karachi Police exploded tear gas shells the Muslim League stalwarts behaved “like women”.)Then followed the incidents in the East Pakistan Assembly culminating in the death in the Chair of the Deputy Speaker and the wrangling over the Cabinet portfolios in Karachi”.

When Mr. Vlahov finished this narration Mirza's comment was "if the politicians in Pakistan had analyzed the situation as cogently as you have done, Excellency, things would have been more difficult." The President then paid a compliment to the West Pakistan Governor Akhtar Hussain saying that he was a pillar of strength in West Pakistan. This remark Mr. Vlahov interprets as indicating that even as early as two years ago when he appointed Mr. Akhtar Hussain then Defence Secretary and his right-hand man as Governor of West Pakistan, President Mirza was contemplating an eventual coup d'état.

Mr. Vlahov's third question was about East Pakistan. He asked the President how he could reconcile his proposed unitary system of Government with regional autonomy in East Pakistan. The President said that East Pakistan would be autonomous except in regard to three subjects: Foreign Affairs, Defence and Finance. Mr. Vlahov immediately interjected to say that this was identical to the demands made by the N.A.P. The President replied vaguely: "may be; this is our present intention." This led Mr. Vlahov to enquire why Khan Abdul Ghaffar Khan, Bhashani and others have been arrested. The President replied that Ghaffar Khan and his party-men had spoken against the interests of the State and that such speeches could not be tolerated. Mr. Vlahov pointed but that impugned speeches were made before the establishment of the new regime and not after; but Mirza maintained his position.

He then asked the President whether he was aware that there was a "rebel" radio operating somewhere on the Pak-Afghanistan border attacking the present regime. The President confirmed this and complained that Afghanistan had suddenly become hostile towards Pakistan, despite Pakistan's friendly attitude.

The Yugoslav Minister's next question was about the economic policy which the new regime proposed to follow. He told the President that mere reduction in prices will not produce the desired results, unless adequate supplies are made available. He pointed out that the price reductions were made without considerations of economic factors and that very soon the country will face bankruptcy. The President only repeated vaguely that they are going to introduce (a) rationing, (b) increase supplies and (c) advise people to cultivate austerity. Mr. Vlahov told him that even in Western countries where people are disciplined such methods did not work and that they would be much less ineffective in Pakistan where there was so much illiteracy, poverty and indiscipline.

As regards land reforms, President told him that his intention was to proceed on two broad lines-(a) fix a limit for maximum land holding and nationalize the rest of the land and (b) levy a very high land tax which would compel the present land-owners to sell their lands to cultivators. As regards (a) Mirza anticipated difficulty as sufficient funds may not be available to pay compensation. He had not considered the possibility of issuing State bonds.
payable over a period of years. Regarding (b) also, he could not tell Mr. Vlahov how the poor cultivator would find the money to buy the land which will be sold to him. Mr. Vlahov told the President that the only way to tackle the land problem was to nationalize the entire land and to give bonds to the landowners as compensation. The President said that he would be glad to discuss the matter further with the Yugoslav Minister. Here also Mr. Vlahov felt that no serious thinking has been devoted to the matter by the Pakistanis.

The next question was about Pakistan's relations with India. Mr. Vlahov pointedly asked whether the initiative taken by Firoz Khan Noon in settling the border problems would be continued. The President answered in the affirmative and said that he wanted to maintain friendly relations with India. He did not expand this thesis any further. (Mr. Vlahov told me that the speech made by General Ayub at Dacca on Kashmir and Canal waters did not indicate that Pakistan's attitude towards India has changed for the better).

He then brought up the subject of Suhrawardy. He drew the President's attention to the report that Suhrawardy was learning bridge (a favourite pastime of Mirza). The President's only comment was that he did not know that Suhrawardy knew bridge. Since, it is known that Mirza had played bridge with Suhrawardy before, this reply is interpreted by Mr. Vlahov to indicate that there has been no reconciliation between the two, despite reported U.S. intervention on behalf of Suhrawardy. His feeling is that the President may allow Suhrawardy to go abroad ostensibly for medical treatment. As regards Firoz Khan Noon the President said he was a “good and decent man”.

The next question was very personal, and had reference to a current rumour that Mr. Amjad Ali’s son is going to marry the President’s step-daughter. When asked about this, Mirza confirmed that there was something in it. Mr. Vlahov had earlier got similar confirmation from Mr. Amjad Ali.

His talk with the President has convinced Mr. Vlahov that what we have just witnessed in Pakistan is not a “revolution” but a coup d’etat. In other words, President has succeeded in his plans to take over power. For the present, the Yugoslav Minister thinks, Pakistan is muddling through without any fixed objectives or considered plans for development.

Mr. Vlahov is of the view that the American Ambassador was in the know before the coup took place. He thought it impossible that Mirza would have moved without informing U. S. authorities. “In any case, the US Embassy, with its vast personnel, would have certainly sensed what was happening”, he added. He believes that the Americans are not happy about the development, since they would like at least the façade of democracy to be kept up because of public opinion in U.S.A. According to him, US will put pressure on Mirza to terminate the Martial Law administration as early as possible. Whether Mirza would be able to achieve this or whether the Army will dig their toes in, is anybody’s guess. The situation is dangerous as rival groups in the Army may eventually fight it out. He thought that the future was rather somber for Pakistan.

My dear Maitra,

Thank you for your letters Nos. HC/734/58 and BC/735/58 dated 23rd and 24th October, 1958, respectively.

2. I am showing your letters to P.M. Ayub’s statement vis-à-vis India in Dacca and his demand that Kashmir and Canal Waters Questions should be settled peacefully but to the satisfaction of Pakistan and that if those are not settled peacefully and other measures have to be taken, the fault will lie with India, are not consistent with the friendly message sent by Iskander Mirza. May be, Ayub was following the normal pattern of behavior that prospective Pakistan Prime Ministers have always adopted. We will, however, have to keep a close watch on developments.

Second coup 27th night removed MIRZA. General AYUB has declared himself President. Actual texts of declarations by both being sent by bag. The formation of new Cabinet with 4 Generals and unknown civilians as well as several promotions in top army ranks announced yesterday indicated that army was on the move. The picture not yet clear but it appears that MIRZA took strong position and tried to brow-beat AYUB. AYUB’s reply was dismissal. Whether AYUB did this on his own or by pressure from below not yet clear.

2. Last night’s coup was carried out by army officers. It was not known to civilian Cabinet Ministers sworn in yesterday. They were informed of fait accompli by AYUB about 2300 hours. No force was used except threat. MIRZA and family still occupying President’s House. His future movements not yet known. AYUB is in Prime Minister’s House. There is no concentration of troops in the city and Karachi is superficially normal except that there is a hushed silence. Lines of communication are working. Newspapers have reported the latest move in headlines and no doubt acclaim it.

3. AYUB attending Prime Minister’s Office as usual today and telling visitors the old story that he had to do it and there is no change. Actually the position is uncertain. Further changes may well be expected. When MIRZA cut himself off from all political support by coup of 7th October he put himself entirely at army’s mercy the possibility of his sudden departure at army’s behest was always there. Timing however was unforeseen. I shall watch and report further changes.

From DAYAL

I had a talk with Assistant Secretary of State ROUNTREE today about affairs in Pakistan. He indicated that United States had no precise foreknowledge but said that neither the initial take over by MIRZA and AYUB nor MIRZA’s later removal shocked or surprised them. What the State Department knows of AYUB as a soldier is “entirely favourable” and reports so far received showed that changes have been well received by the people. New administration’s efforts to bring down prices and put an end to hoarding had so far been successful and had a beneficial effect on economy. There was every indication that army was firmly in control and in case of disagreement with civil service army would prevail.

2. ROUNTREE expressed satisfaction at relatively small number of arrests so far and mentioned that most politicians (naming especially SUHRAWARDY) were still free. He thought MIRZA would be allowed to leave the country. He said that army had been able to take over smoothly without mass arrests because it was strong and popular with the people. In this respect he contrasted the situation in Iraq. He expressed appreciation of calm reaction in India and mentioned particularly Prime Minister’s “constructive and helpful” comments. Change in regime would not in his opinion involve any change in Pakistan’s external relations and might even result in improvement in relations with India.

3. He said Americans were dealing with new Government on de facto basis and would accord recognition if formal action in that regard was necessary.

4. My assessment of American official reaction is as follows. Americans express formal regret at failure of pseudo-democratic institutions in Pakistan. They were however becoming disillusioned with Pakistan politicians. Successive Prime Ministers whom they backed had failed and Pakistan’s pro-western foreign policy was coming under increasing attack. They are therefore pleased at eclipse of politicians (who according to ROUNTREE are now “as quiet as mice”) and are content for the present to see the army in control under leaders friendly to United States. They do not appear to be clear as to the future but will no doubt maintain a cautious watch on developments.
5. Some Pakistanis here seem less confident; SHOAIB Ex-Director on World Bank who has been appointed Finance Minister has shown hesitation to leave Washington as well as doubts as to whether his appointment stands after MIRZA’s departure.

DAYAL from DESAI.

Your telegram 551 of 29th October.

I have discussed the developments in Pakistan in some detail with BUNKER* this morning, BUNKER showed greater concern with these developments than expressed by ROUNTREE to you. He quoted LANGLEY#, their Ambassador in Karachi, about the summary dismissal of MIRZA and how unceremoniously MIRZA was pushed out of Karachi in the early hours of the morning. BUNKER also said that it was extremely difficult to forecast which way AYUB will go as a totalitarian regime of this type can easily get off the rails.

2. BUNKER appreciated our concern at these developments and the aggressive attitude adopted by AYUB in his press conference yesterday. He said that US authorities will do everything they can to get the new regime to exercise restraint and moderation. He said that in view of our discussions this morning, he will work on this problem and make some suggestions to State Department as to what could be done to reinforce LINGLEY’s influence in Karachi, which has been, to a certain extent, damaged by his being too close to MIRZA. BUNKER was thinking in terms of visit by someone from State Department on some excuse to Burma, India and Pakistan, both to see how things are shaping in Karachi and to do whatever was possible to get the new regime to exercise restraint and moderation.

* U. S. Ambassador
U. S. Ambassador in Pakistan
Dear Mr. Desai,

The story of the second coup on the 27th October is difficult to make out. It was even more of a Palace Revolution than the one of 7th October, with even fewer persons in the know of things. It caused surprise not only to observers like ourselves, but even to the person principally affected, namely, General Mirza. He had social engagements for the following week, and nearly to the end was his usual cocky and assured self. On the 26th evening I was at the Iranian National Day party, where Generals Mirza and Ayub were seen chatting with each other, apparently on good terms. General Mirza had people to lunch on the 27th. The two men gave a joint interview for T.V. to a young American correspondent which lasted till about 5 p.m. You might have seen the brief report on it in the papers. I do not think General Mirza had any clear idea of what was coming to him. After the T.V. interview, General Ayub stayed for a little while at President’s House, and then went off to attend a cabinet meeting with the new ministers which lasted till about 8 p.m. The cabinet discussed routine economic matters. The drama took place between 8 p.m. and midnight. Our knowledge of facts is not complete and there are several gaps. Shortly after 8 p.m., the uniformed police guards inside the President’s House were withdrawn and replaced by army sentries, but not in large numbers. About 10 O’clock Generals Azam, Sheikh and Burki of the ruling junta entered President’s House and asked for an immediate interview. They told General Mirza that they had been sent by General Ayub and presented a typed-written paper for him to sign. It contained the announcement of General Mirza’s abdication in favour of General Ayub. There were no arguments. After he had recovered from his shock, General Mirza signed the paper, adding a line in which he wished General Ayub well. It was the same announcement that appeared in the papers. Between 11 and 12 the newly sworn-in cabinet ministers were hurriedly called to the Prime Minister’s House, as well as Heads of Missions of the following countries: U.S.A., Commonwealth countries (except India), Baghdad Pact countries, and Afghanistan. General Ayub read over the statements about General Mirza’s abdication and about his own assumption of power. The drill was the same as that on the night of the 7th October, but there was a difference about the atmosphere. This time the U.S. Ambassador, U.K. Deputy High Commissioner (the High Commissioner was out on tour) and the Australian High Commissioner were dumb with surprise, and... of the confidential talk and friendly banter of the last occasion. US Ambassador Langley, after he had found his voice, asked where General Mirza was. General Ayub said that he was well and in his house, and would be flown out to Quetta next morning. Australian High Commissioner Cawthorn then said that he was an old friend of General Mirza and asked permission if he could see him off. After a little hesitation, this was granted by General Ayub. Ambassador Langley also asked for the same privilege and it was granted. The meeting then broke up. Thereafter the proclamations were given to the press, and the world came to know that Pakistan has again changed hands for the second time in three weeks. One is not sure whether there was any meeting between General Mirza and General Ayub on the fateful night. General and Begum Mirza left Mauripur airport by a military plane in the early hours of the following morning, and were seen off by few people which included Ambassador Langley. They are staying at Government House in Quetta where their movements are somewhat restricted.

2. If it is difficult to describe how the second coup happened, it is even more difficult to answer the question why it happened. The declaration of abdication in itself gives some clue. It mentions: “Efforts to evolve an effective structure for the future administration of this country”. As reported previously, General Mirza was trying to bring in politicians from his National Council. His idea was to end Martial law and revert to normal civil government as soon as possible. This neither General Ayub nor the Army would have. You will have noticed that immediately after General Mirza had made the statement that Martial law would be withdrawn in shortest time he was contradicted openly by General Ayub. There is some reason to believe that, at that time a deputation of officers saw General Ayub and told him that the Martial law could not be withdrawn. The Army also held very strong views about politicians and insisted that they should be excluded. General Mirza’s idea was to have one or two Generals in the National Council and manage it mostly with the help of safe and old timer Republicans and Muslim Leaguers. The crucial point was General Ayub’s tour of East Pakistan. From his reading of the situation there and what the Army officers told him, he came back on the 23rd with the firm conviction that there should be substantial number of senior Generals in the new government set up, and also that politicians should be rigidly excluded. In some ways Army officers in East Pakistan have been more vocal. They have been engaged, since last year, in the so-called “Operation Closed-Door” which, in a way, was a dress rehearsal of the Army’s take-over of Government. When the Provincial Government restricted the Army’s power of search and seizure by an amendment to the Sea Customs Act, there were loud protests by local Army officers which reached the ears of the GHQ. On the 23rd, General Ayub returned from Dacca and came to see General Mirza straight from the airport. What transpired at the meeting, one does not know, but within 24 hours orders were out appointing a new cabinet of 4 Generals and 8 scarcely known civilians. Obviously the Army had over-ruled the President.

3. The subsequent moves are even more obscure. On the 27th, several important promotions in the senior Army ranks were announced to fill the gaps made by the appointment of Generals Ayub, Azam and Sheikh in the new Government. General Musa was appointed Commander-in-Chief of the Army, and three other Generals were promoted to the rank of Lt.-Generals. General Ayub remained the Supreme Commander of all armed forces. The exact significance of these moves is not clear, but it is possible that these promotions represented a compromise. General Musa is regarded as a favourite of General Mirza. His elevation to the Army command was counter-balanced by the retention of supreme command by General Ayub, and promotion of some of the officers he wanted to higher ranks. This also removed the bottle-neck created by the repeated extensions of the tenure of General Ayub as Commander-in-Chief. Two things now happened. The new regime had taken over to cleanse corruption, but it was being widely said that the most corrupt person was General Mirza himself. There is reason to believe that the notorious smuggler Qasim Bhatti, during the course of investigation, had stated that he worked closely with General Mirza and that he had recently made a gift of a necklace to Begum Mirza worth several lakhs. All this came to General Ayub's ears, and there is one story that he asked General Mirza to make a declaration of his assets, which the latter refused. This took place on the 26th. The army was also feeling that President Mirza was too much mixed up with politicians, and was indeed a leading member of the Old Gang. There is reason to believe that the Cabinet Generals told General Ayub on the 27th that he must remove General Mirza at once. It is said that the General Sheikh was the most insistent. Here the obscurity deepens. When he dismissed all political parties on the 7th October, General Mirza had taken a great risk. He had now only the Army to depend upon. He had probably banked on creating differences in the armed forces. He had ostentatiously left the Navy and the Air Force out. But these were comparatively smaller organizations. In the Army itself he had hoped to work through his favourite General Musa. It is possible that, one the evening of the 27th, General Mirza had some inkling of what was going on and tried to use General Musa, but Musa did not play. He had now achieved his ambition of being the Commander-in-Chief and now saw that Mirza's time was up. The result was the letter of abdication which Mirza quietly signed and stepped aside.

4. In a coup like this a question is inevitably asked whether any foreign power had intervened. So far as I can see the Representatives of the USA and UK were taken completely by surprise. They had no knowledge. But in Pakistan a large U.S. Military Assistance Advisory Group functions at Karachi, GHQ, Rawalpindi and at several other centers. The possibility of the later being in the know cannot be altogether excluded. Pentagon does not always march in step with the State Department.

With kind regards,

Yours sincerely

Note recorded by Commonwealth Secretary on his meeting with the U. S. Ambassador Ellsworth Bunker.

New Delhi, October 31, 1958.

Ministry of External Affairs

I had a long talk this morning with Ambassador Bunker about the latest developments in Pakistan. I had talked to him earlier after the first coup on the 7th. I mentioned to Bunker that the sudden developments on the night of the 27th came as a surprise to us. We felt, after the change of regime on the 7th, that there may be personal differences between Mirza and Ayub and as Mirza was solely dependent upon the Army, in case of difference of opinion, Mirza will have to give in to Ayub. We, however, understood - and this was also confirmed by Dillon, Under Secretary of State for Economic Affairs, when he saw me on 8th October - that Mirza and Ayub were close to each other and there was a fairly good chance of the team working together and settling down. When the Cabinet of 12 was announced on the 26th, we felt that things were settling down and the regime was getting a little more broad-based. The discussions that U.S. Secretary of Defence, McElroy, had with the Pakistan Defence Chiefs between 24th and 26th and the continuance of aid that was promised also showed that the United States authorities did not expect any sudden developments. Actually, Mr. McElroy left Karachi on 27th morning for Tehran and the change in the regime, which meant summary and unceremonious dismissal of Mirza, occurred on 27th night.

2. I told the Ambassador that, apart from other things, Mirza probably had to go because of certain Muslim League affiliations that General Ayub seems to have and the Muslim League's hostility to Mirza. I mentioned the following in this connection:-

(i) When General Ayub went to Dacca last week, ex-Prime Minister Nazimuddin of the Muslim League was the first to receive him at the airport at Dacca, the local Governor and the local Commander Umrao Khan came next.

(ii) General Ayub also has won Miss Jinnah's favour who had been openly hostile to President Mirza.

(iii) General Ayub's brother, Bahadur Khan, has been an important member of the Muslim League and Qayyum, the Muslim League President, went to stay with Bahadur Khan after the political Parties were dissolved on 7th October when Mirza and Ayub took over.

3. I told Bunker that these developments and the aggressive attitude taken by Ayub in the press conference yesterday are a matter of some concern to us.

4. Bunker said that he himself was rather worried. He said that the reports that he got from Langley from Karachi showed how callous Ayub's treatment of Mirza had been. Langley and one or two heads of missions were summoned by Ayub on the mid-night of 27th and told about the change-over. Mirza and his wife were bundled off at 5 O'clock on the morning of 28th and sent away to Quetta. Langley was the only diplomat who saw Mirza off. From the Pakistan Government, there were only a few minor officials who came to see Mirza off. None of the Ministers or Generals were at the airport when Mirza and Mrs. Mirza left.

5. Bunker went on and stated that it is difficult to forecast which way a totalitarian regime of this type will go. He said that the assessment of Ayub that they have got from Langley was not particularly favourable. Ayub, in Langley's view, was rather a vain and conceited man, not very capable and power may easily go to his head. He said that, so far as the U.S. authorities are concerned, they will do everything possible to exercise a moderating and restraining influence on the new regime. He admitted, however, that Langley's influence in Karachi has been damaged to some extent because of his being too close to Mirza and the new regime may not pay the same attention to his views on account of his previous connection with Mirza.

6. Bunker told me that, in view of our talk this morning, he is going to work on this problem and make some suggestions to the State Department. He was

No. HC/750/58 November 1, 1958

Dear Mr. Desai,

The authorized version of the second coup has now been given. As usual, it was at a conference of foreign press correspondents. I enclose a cutting of the report of the conference held by General Ayub on the 30th of October*, as it was carried in the Pakistani papers. The fact that British and American correspondents were called in and this important story was given to them only, has caused much heart-burning among those who were excluded. You will be amused to learn that not only Indian correspondents were excluded but also Pakistanis, even the semi-official Associated Press of Pakistan. Two Japanese correspondents also failed to join the interview. Apparently, it is not enough to be pro-Western - you have to be a Pucca Sahib. This matter, small in itself, gives an insight into the minds of the governing Junta. Needless to mention that the authorized version does not give the whole truth. Little is said of the background, of how the decision to remove Mirza was taken. I have reason to believe that even the narration of the story is not altogether correct. For instance, there was a considerable lapse of time between the presentation of the ultimatum and General Mirza’s signature. I have already sent you my own report on the subject based on information collected from different sources.

2. The parts of the General’s statement which would attract most attention to an Indian would be those dealing with the disputed points with India, namely, Kashmir and Canal Waters. On both these issues, the General took a high line. About Canal waters he said that projects to supply alternative water to the areas threatened would take 10 to 15 years and until then India should supply water. India should also pay for the construction. Regarding Kashmir, the General said: “We must have a satisfactory solution. It affects our security and our whole existence. Should we be forced to adopt extreme measures, the responsibility will be that of India”. Asked if he meant “war”, he said: “Yes, certainly”. This was sword rattling. There was nothing new except that the person who was using the threat was the Supreme Commander and might have been expected to be a little more restrained. I had occasion to meet one of the foreign correspondents who conducted the interview. He told me that the reports in the papers were quite faithful.

3. The point of interest now is to find out the real facts of the continuing coup, who planned and executed it. It now seems that when General Ayub came to Karachi on the fateful day of 7th October from Rawalpindi, he was accompanied by three key staff officers, namely, Major General Yahaya, Chief of the General Staff, Major-General Hamid Khan, Director-General of Military Training, and Brig. Pirzada, Director of Military Operations. These three officers had just gone back to Rawalpindi - the Army Headquarters. Before they left, our Military Adviser met two of them at a social gathering. Although not much was said, he received the distinct impression that these officers had come down with some kind of a plan and were now returning after the whole of it had been executed. I had this impression corroborated from an independent source. Perhaps we might hear more later on of these military master-minds. You might be interested to see what they look like, when General Ayub gave his first press conference on the 10th October, they sat behind him and their pictures appeared in the newspapers I enclose a cutting.

Yours sincerely,

Letter from the Acting High Commissioner to Commonwealth Secretary M. J. Desai on his interview with the U. S. Ambassador Langley.

No. HS/5/TS/58 November 4, 1958

Dear Mr. Desai,

Yesterday I had a talk with the American Ambassador Hr. Langley mainly about the second coup since the American Ambassador in Pakistan is very well informed about what goes on here. I send you a note on the talk recorded by me. You will see that Mr. Langley’s attitude towards General Ayub was much more guarded than it was towards General Mirza. I have reported previous conversation with Mr. Langley in my letter No. HC/2/TS/58 of the 11th October. He feels that the new regime will be more Islamic, He, of course, denied that United States had anything to do with any of the coups.

With kind regards,

Yours sincerely

Shri M.J. Desai, ICS,
Commonwealth Secretary,
Ministry of External Affairs,
New Delhi.

A note on conversation with Mr. James M. Langley, U.S. Ambassador, held on 3-11-1958.

Mr. Langley had flown to Kabul on the 31st and had returned last evening (2nd). He said that he would have liked to meet ex-President Mirza when he passed through Karachi yesterday but it was too late for doing so. He confirmed that he had seen off General Mirza and his wife when they were taken off to Quetta. He said that at that time they were under arrest and had only a couple of suitcases with them. He could not talk very much at the airport because General Sher Bahadur was standing guard. He could only ask General Miraa when he came to know of the events, and the answer was 10 p.m. He did not put further questions as that might embarrass General Mirza. Mr. Langley said that General Mirza's personal effects and private papers had been carefully searched by the military authorities since, of course, he did not know whether anything incriminating has been found. He had the impression that General Mirza owed the comparatively lenient treatment which he had was due to solicitude felt for him in foreign countries. He had himself enquired about him on the very night of the coup (27th), as also the Australian High Commissioner Gen. Cawthorn. The latter had missed coming to the airport in time because he had heard the time wrong. Mr. Langley said that on the night of the 27th, he along with several other Heads of Missions had been called to General Ayub's office shortly after 11 p.m. They were kept waiting there for over an hour. During this time General Ayub's proclamation that he has assumed the powers of President was being drafted.

2. Regarding the question of recognition of General Ayub's Government, Mr. Langley said that his Mission was continuing to work with it, and was unlikely to raise any question of recognition. So far the Pakistan Government had not raised the question. I pointed out to him that, on the previous occasion, it was being said that as General Mirza continued to be the Head of the State, there had been no change for the purposes of recognition or accreditation, but this time the Head of the State had changed, Mr. Langley agreed that the proclamation of assumption by General Ayub did not quite fit in with the statement of General Mirza that he had stepped aside.

3. Mr. Langley said that he was quite surprised that the break between General Mirza and General Ayub had come so quickly. He had thought that the two will continue to work at least for some time. He felt that General Mirza's experience would have been helpful to the new regime. He was not sure how the break came, but did not think it was due to difference on any specific issue. The main reason was that General Ayub wanted to push General Mirza out. Here Mr. Langley thought that General Ayub had been forced to take action rather than done it on his own. He was not sure, but his surmise was (that the move came not so much from the three cabinet Generals but from some officers junior to them. He said that his facts were not precise and he would not give details. He seemed to doubt whether the three military officers who delivered the ultimatum to General Mirza were the three Cabinet Generals. Mr. Langley had some interesting light to throw on some of the top Generals. He said that he knew General Ayub fairly well. He was a good soldier, with personal charm, but rather impatient and short tempered. I was surprised to learn that the last extension given to General Ayub, a few months back, was done against General Mirza's recommendation. Mr. Langley said that he had discussed this matter with General Mirza at that time, and the latter had definitely stated that he was against an officer holding the post of C-in-C for two 4-year terms. He preferred that the post should be filled by General Sheikh, but his recommendation was not accepted by the Cabinet who made a compromise by reducing General Ayub's term from 4 years to 2 years. At that time General Ayub had cultivated the friendship of Messrs Noon and Suhrawardy. It was the Noon Government which gave him the extension. General Ayub could play politics, when necessary. I asked Mr. Langley whether General Musa was not a favourite of General Mirza? He did not think so. He said that just because General Musa was a Shia like General Mirza, too much was assumed.

4. About the present set up, Mr. Langley thought that it contained some fairly competent men like Mr. Qadir and Mr. Shoab but he agreed that power rested with the Army, and that the civilian ministers did not represent anybody but themselves. About the future, Mr. Langley thought that there would be a change under General Ayub from what was envisaged by General Mirza, for one thing General Mirza was in favour of a secular State. Mr. Langley thought that under General Ayub there might be an Islamic bias. He saw much significance in General Ayub's calling on Miss Jinnah who was, so to say, the patron saint of the Muslim League. So far as he knew, no Prime Minister since Mr. Nazimuddin had done so. I volunteered the information that General Ayub was the brother of Sardar Bahadur Khan, the Muslim League leader. Mr. Langley was aware of it, and also that the two brothers were not on good terms. He went on to say that during General Ayub's visit to East Pakistan, great prominence had been given to Mr. Nazimuddin. Mr. Langley thought that it would not be improbable if the new regime in Pakistan headed towards a one-party State. That party would be the Muslim League, although its name might be changed to something else.

5. While discussing the impression created by the new regime in foreign countries, I told Mr. Langley that the recent utterances of General Ayub of possibility of war with India had created an unfavourable impression in that country. I showed him a copy of the "Statesman" of 2nd November, which I had with me and, which had highlighted this aspect and also connected the United States with it. Mr. Langley read the article and said that it was all wrong, and that United States was always accused whether it did anything or not. The article in question from the Political Correspondent, in his opinion, was really a comment and not news. Mr. Langley tried to minimize what General Ayub had said by saying that it was difficult for him as newspaper correspondents asked leading questions, and that General Ayub was inexperienced and did not realize that now that he was the Head of the State, each word of what he said was taken very seriously. He went on to say that even more experienced people like President Eisenhower and Mr. Dulles were caught saying wrong things at press conferences. I pointed out to Mr. Langley that General Ayub had been saying these things consistently, and what he has now said about war to the foreign correspondents was the same what he had told the Pakistani correspondents on the 22nd at Dacca. I knew the Dacca correspondents, and I am sure they were not trying to embarrass General Ayub. Mr. Langley thought that General Ayub would gather experience, and that he would take friendly advice even from members of the Diplomatic Corps. He had, however, a little doubt on account of General Ayub's quick temper. Mr. Langley hoped that I would advise my Government to be patient. I told him that we in India, both the people and the Government, are always patient, and pointed out that after the initial coup on the 7th October, our reaction had been very sympathetic. He said that he had seen some of the Indian papers on the subject.

HIGH COMMISSION OF INDIA, KARACHI

Dear Mr. Desai,

Iskander Mirza and wife have reached London. You will find the details from report of London Correspondent of the Morning News which I attach*. Somehow I have the feeling that we have not heard the last of Iskander Mirza. You will notice that he was received by Col. Hugo, Protocol Officer of the Commonwealth Relations Office. Mirza has influential friends in London. From my talks with British and American diplomats here, I understand that their people will contact Mirza in London. I know it for a fact that it was due to the sympathy of Anglo-Americans that Mirza got off so lightly. That is why the Army did not lay rough hands on him. As I have already reported, the Army has been rummaging through his books and papers, but Mirza is very clever and it is probable that he had already sent away much of his valuables as well as important papers.

* Not included here.
I have it from a personal friend of Nahid Mirza that she was packing her things shortly after the first coup. An elderly English man by the name of Col. Friend was to be seen in Mirza's entourage. This man left Pakistan quietly some time after the 15th of October. It is possible that Mirza's valuables and papers were carried by him. It may be that the Army failed to find enough material to impeach Mirza. Mirza has been playing politics for a long time and has many friends among politicians, civil servants and army officers. He is an ambitious and scheming person. He will not reconcile himself easily to retirement in quiet private life. It might be useful for us to keep in touch with Mirza, discreetly, in London.

With kind regards,

Yours sincerely

My dear Maitra,

2. On reading through the report of your conversation with Ambassador Langley on 3rd November, I find it difficult to decide whether Ambassador Langley gave all this information on his own or whether he was briefed by his counterpart in Delhi following a conversation I had with the American Ambassador here on 31st October, and played up a particular line to meet our interpretation of and concern at the second coup in Pakistan.

3. I enclose herewith for your information copy of a note* I recorded on 31st October after my talk with the American Ambassador. I regret I could not send it to you earlier as I left that afternoon on tour. Copies had, however, been addressed to our representatives in London and Washington for their information.

4. I will be grateful if, after reading through my note of 31st October and your note of 3rd November, you could frankly give me your view as to the sincerity and frankness of Ambassador Langley in the way he talked to you. You are in a better position to judge as you know him and have talked to him before. I have naturally a suspicious temperament in matters of this sort and hence would be grateful for your views as to whether we should interpret Ambassador Langley’s views as confirming our own or take it that they were specially put on for our benefit in view of his knowledge about our own views on the second coup in Pakistan.

No. 574. November 12, 1958

I called today on ROUNTREE to ask about significance of announcement made here that U.S. is entering into fresh Military and Economic agreements with Pakistan and other Baghdad Pact countries. I pointed out that this announcement coming in the wake of jingoistic statements by AYUB was likely to cause concern in India. He replied exactly as I had expected. He said that U.S. entered into declaration of cooperation under Article 1 of Baghdad Pact last July as alternative to full membership of the Pact. It merely called upon the members to cooperate for mutual security etc. and to negotiate agreements to that end. Agreements now to be concluded were in implementation of July declaration and were covered by existing legislative authority. He added that U.S. already had several agreements with various countries under Mutual Security Act and other legislation.

2. I pointed out that I had previously been assured that declaration involved no new commitment (see my telegram 367 of July 30th and letter No. 116-A of August 4th to DUTT). Since military aid and other agreements already existed the need for further agreements was not apparent and conclusion would be drawn in India that this involves an enlarged programme of military assistance to Pakistan at a rather critical time. He did not question this interpretation but said that the declaration involved no new commitment. It did not however require the parties to enter into new agreements in implementation of it, and it would be wrong to read too much into these agreements. He agreed when I said that it would be equally wrong to read too little into them. He also deplored AYUB's reference to possibility of war with India.

3. These agreements will complete the process of making U.S. a member of Baghdad Pact in all but name. We cannot yet say whether they will enlarge the scope of existing military aid agreements.

No. HC/9 – TS/58. 12th November 1958

Dear Mr. Desai,

Please refer to your letter No. T. 1188/CS/58 of the 5th of November, regarding U.S. Ambassador Mr. Langley. Your conversation with Mr. Bunker took place on the 31st October (Friday), and I saw Mr. Langley on the morning of the 3rd November (Monday). From Friday to Sunday, Mr. Langley was away in Kabul. I do not think there is a daily courier service for letters between the U.S. Embassies at Delhi and Karachi. If Mr. Bunker had recorded a note of his conversation with you and sent a gist of it by telegram, it is possible that Mr. Langley could have seen it before I saw him on Monday morning at 10.00 A.M. So much for the mechanics of communication.

2. I have gone carefully through the records of your conversation with Mr. Bunker on the 31st and my talks with Mr. Langley on the 3rd. There are two important points Mr. Langley told me what you had said to Mr. Bunker, viz:

(a) the second coup was a surprise,

(b) General Ayub had Muslim League leanings.

About (a), from what I have been able to gather subsequently from different sources, I think, we may accept as true that the second coup came as a surprise to the Americans as much as it did to us. About (b), I feel a little doubtful that Mr. Langley should have stressed so much the point about Muslim League. But, going through the record of his talk with me after the first coup (page 3 of the enclosure to my letter No. HC/2/TS/58 of the 11th of October), I find that Mr. Langley had stressed the fact that President Mirza was non-Islamic. This time he was stressing that General Ayub was Islamic.

3. Although inclined to share some of your doubt, on balance, I think, Mr. Langley was, more or less, giving his own reading of the situation, although it is probable that this assessment was not identical with what he had given to his own Government. After all, we all change our wave-lengths to suit the hearer.

SECRET

Letter of the Acting High Commissioner to Commonwealth Secretary.

High Commission of India,
Karachi-5

No. HC/775/58. November 13, 1958

Dear Mr. Desai,

Our First Secretary M.L. Mehta, who saw you the other day in Delhi, tells me that you would like to get an assessment of Aziz Ahmad on the following points:

(a) Position of the Secretary-General

(b) His position vis-a-vis other Secretary, and also

(c) Position of Secretaries vis-a-vis Ministers.

A proper assessment will naturally take some time, but as the partial withdrawal of Martial Law has made the whole question one of topical interest, I am giving you my present reading, although it is somewhat inadequate.

(a). Basically, Aziz Ahmad is a creature of the Army Junta and wields such powers as he is allowed to by them. Although he represents the Civil Services, the latter have lost so much face that they really do not count. All the same, as the Army people are ignorant of the intricacies of civil government, the Army Junta has to depend upon the Civil Services. Aziz Ahmad has a forceful personality and is not believed to be corrupt. He, therefore, is somebody - so long as he does not come into conflict with the Army Junta on any basic matter. He is unpopular with the Americans but the British think well of him.

(b). The position of the Secretary-General in Pakistan is somewhat analogous to that of the Chief Secretary in an Indian State. On matters like Rules of Business, the Secretary-General does lay down the law. I enclose a cutting containing his "message" to the Civil Services. Also, as the Army is used to a graded chain of command, they prefer to work through one Secretary-General rather than a host of equal secretaries. That Aziz Ahmad has already acquired considerable power over different Ministries is seen from the fact that he is able to shift important officials in those Ministries. For instance, Dr. Zuberi, Educational Adviser, has been asked to go. I understand the reason is that recently he did not vote in favour of Aziz Ahmad who was a candidate for the top UNESCO post. Then there is the question of cliques. With the fall of Mirza, the Shia clique is out. Naqvi is under a cloud. The eclipse is shared by the U.P. Mohajer element. They are being scattered. For instance, Mr. Azfar has been sent out to Dacca as Chief Secretary and Qarni, Joint Secretary, Finance, is being pushed out somewhere abroad. Aziz Ahmad is the head of the panjabi clique which is now in the ascendant.

(c). The relationship between Ministers and their Secretaries has yet to crystallize after the second coup. The Ministers are too raw and the Secretaries too frightened. Again, Ministers are of two kinds, the military and non Military. Within their own spheres the military Ministers take and carry out decisions quickly and order their Secretaries about. The Secretaries themselves have a thin time. I am told that they receive curt orders to put up complicated cases within an hour. Moreover, the office hours are exacting, 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. - and often beyond. Secretaries also go round the Sections. They are under the all-watchful eye of the military and very often Secretaries and files are called up by General Ayub himself. Not only all this goes on at a fast pace, but the Secretaries (or for that matter, those lower down) feel quite insecure. Martial Law is not bound to respect Service Rules, and civil officials have ill-gotten wealth. As for the civilian Ministers, they have no standing. They are ordered about by General Ayub and sometimes by the other Generals. The civil Ministers tend to depend more on their Secretaries. This is natural. I understand that during the last few days, the business community has made representations about their difficulties to Mr. Zulfiqar Bhutto, the new Commerce Minister, whose stock reply has been “I shall have to discuss with my Secretary”.

With kind regards,

Yours sincerely

Colombo, November 13, 1958.

High Commission of India in Ceylon,
Colombo-3

D. O. No. PS – 45/58

November 13, 1958

The new regime in Pakistan

My dear M.J,

Many thanks for your comments on the subject in paragraph 2 of your demi-official letter No.653-CS/58 of November 7.

2. Peiris, Counselor in the Ministry of External Affairs, has showed me another letter from their High Commissioner in Karachi addressed to Mr. Bandaranaike. M.M. Maharoof, the Ceylon High Commissioner, reports in this letter that he went to pay a courtesy call on General Ayub Khan on 3rd November. The General told him point blank that he was most anxious to maintain peaceful relations with India or settle everything amicably, but if that was not possible they would not hesitate to go to war against India. “We were born in the struggle, we are continuing with the struggle and will continue to struggle for our just rights”, said the General. A canal water was a very important issue for Pakistan and if India did not give them the water, large areas of Pakistan would be converted into a desert, and they could not allow this to happen. The suggestion obviously was that if, for good or bad reasons, Pakistan did not get all the water that she wanted and if a peaceful solution was not forthcoming, they would go to war on the issue.

3. Maharoof’s letter (which is dated 10th November) says that General Ayub Khan ventured the opinion that, with language disputes and re-organization of the States, India was disintegrating. The disintegration of India was an advantage to Pakistan. He added that this would be an advantage to Ceylon also. The Ceylon High Commissioner thought that the General was thinking of Ceylon’s arguments with India over the plantation labour and etc.

4. The letter goes on to discuss American reactions and repeats what I reported earlier that the Americans, according to the High Commissioner, were neither very surprised nor unhappy at the first coup d’etat by Iskander Mirza, but they have been very disturbed at the second coup in which Mirza was dethroned by General Ayub. The Ceylon High Commissioner seems to think that even if Ayub Khan is not as one track pro-American as Iskander Mirza, he is likely to maintain just enough amicable relations with the USA in order to ensure a fair supply of arms, which he might eventually want against India.

5. Since I am writing about Pakistan, I might as well report what Sir Oliver Goonetilleke’s reactions are to the state of affairs in Karachi. When I saw him on 6th November (I was paying my first courtesy call on him after the Emergency), almost the first thing that Sir Oliver said was that he was prepared to take a bet that in ten years from now there would be a united India. When I asked him what he meant, he said “Wa-wa-wa-war, my dear fellow.” He seems to have quite made up his mind that Ayub Khan’s regime will not go very far to avoid war and they will attack India and, according to him, India will have to fight back and conquer Pakistan. I asked him what he knew of General Ayub Khan and he said that reports from an American, whom he knew very well, who had just returned from Karachi, suggested that the General was pompous and empty headed. He was not big, had not much brains and the Governor-General was not even sure if Ayub Khan was a good soldier. A pompous fool in authority and in the garb of an Army General was a very great danger to India, according to him. One, of course need no put much store by Sir Oliver Goonetilleke’s opinions, but he is about the best informed person in Ceylon on anything outside Ceylon—to say nothing of everything inside Ceylon also.
5. I will keep you informed if I come across anything of interest at this end.

With kind regards,

Yours sincerely

No. HC/783/58 November 14, 1958

Dear Mr. Desai,

You must have read in the papers about the partial withdrawal of Martial Law in Pakistan, soldiers have been withdrawn from the streets and Martial Law courts abolished. This is an important step. I link this with Musa’s speech at GHQ Rawalpindi on the 12th bidding farewell to Ayub. I send herewith a cutting of the entire speech*. It was more than a polite farewell speech. It was a policy declaration. The chief points made by Musa were:

(a) The Army should keep clear of politics.
(b) They should concentrate on their professional job and have nothing to do with Martial Law.
(c) The ultimate aim should be democracy.

I have marked those portions in red pencil. You will notice that, in scoring these hits, Musa had cleverly quoted Ayub’s own words. The point about democracy was spoken by Ayub in his first public statement on the 9th October after the first coup. He has been talking very differently after the second. To my mind, the mention of democracy in that particular context of an Army mess farewell dinner, soon after a military coup, was very significant. In talking about point (b), Musa was very cavalier. He was telling Ayub that while he (Ayub) was busy with the coup, Musa himself had ordered the Army to go on with its training and had not cared to tell Ayub of it till now. It was almost a notice that the Army and the military junta controlling government go their own ways. I do not say that the parting has come, but the question arises that if the Army, as its Commander-in-Chief says, is purely a professional body, what is the strength behind the present regime? In this connection, it may kindly be noted that at present, although Ayub is the Supreme Commander, he is not the Chairman of the Committee of the Chiefs of Staff, that is, Heads of the three Services, Army, Navy and Air Force, which deliberates on matters of higher military policy. The Chairman is Musa.

With kind regards,

Yours sincerely,

Note recorded by the Commonwealth Secretary after his meeting with the U. S. Ambassador.

New Delhi, November 14, 1958.

Ministry of External Affairs

The U.S. Ambassador saw me this afternoon to have what he called his periodic exchange of views with me on the developments in Pakistan.

2. The Ambassador began by reiterating what he had stated before that the U.S. authorities were taken completely by surprise by the coup d'état in Pakistan. He said that this was true of both the events, the one on 7th October and the other on 27th October. He gave details, particularly, regarding the latter coup and how Ambassador Langley was thoroughly disconcerted at these sudden developments.
3. The Ambassador said that his latest information from Karachi is that Mirza was removed suddenly because he was scheming to consolidate his position and keep General Ayub in nominal authority while keeping all the powers in his own hands. He said that the latest reports from Ambassador Langley show that the real driving force behind the second coup was not Ayub but the committee of Army officers which General Ayub had set up some months back at Rawalpindi as a sort of brain-trust for Defence planning. It was members of this committee who forced the issue about Mirza and not General Ayub or the three other Generals who are in Ayub’s Cabinet. He said that Ambassador Langley’s assessment is that Ayub is a dictator but is by no means a free agent.

4. According to Ambassador Langley, General Ayub is not a very brainy person, but General Musa, who is Commander-in-Chief, is a very competent commander. Ambassador Langley has since met the Foreign Minister Quadir and the latter struck the Ambassador as a very balanced and reasonable man, liberal in his views and extremely keen on the quickest possible restoration of democratic and constitutional processes. According to Langley’s assessment, Quadir has great influence with Ayub and the recent relaxations in the military regime in Pakistan may well have resulted from the impact of Quadir’s views on General Ayub.

5. The Ambassador stated that, according to his information from Karachi and the talks that he had with various U.S. officials who came from Karachi, General Musa and the Army officers are hard-headed practical people who are not likely to indulge in any adventures against India as they know fully well that such an adventure would be disastrous to Pakistan and immediately alienate the United States without whose aid Pakistan will be completely sunk.

6. I thanked the Ambassador for giving us this information, told him that we also thought that Quadir was a reasonable and level-headed person, but we felt rather concerned at the concentration of authority is a military dictatorship. Such dictatorships have, in the past, always resorted to adventures to consolidate their power at home. I also told the Ambassador that, since Ayub’s interview to the foreign press, in which he referred to war with India to settle the Kashmir and Canal Waters questions – I gave him the details of the incidents in the last fortnight – and also an increase of false and frivolous complaints from the Pakistan High Commissioner in Delhi. I said that people in India were rather concerned that in the context of these prevailing conditions, negotiations have started between the United States and the Pakistan authorities on further economic and defence aid agreements. I said that we would welcome any amount of economic aid to Pakistan as we want the people of Pakistan to be happy and contented because their well-being assures our well-being as well, but the starting of negotiations for further defence aid, particularly when the military dictator of Pakistan threatens war with India, naturally, causes serious public reactions in India. The Ambassador said that the whole position about these negotiations is rather vague and he has no definite information. He was, however, positive that there will be so increase in military aid granted to Pakistan and that all U.S. influence in Pakistan will be used for getting the Pakistan authorities to behave with restraint and moderation. The Ambassador added that the calmness and restraint, shown by the Government of India with reference to the developments in Pakistan, had been greatly appreciated by the United States authorities and the U.S. public.

7. I mentioned to the Ambassador that there are very strong reactions to these negotiations amongst the India public and this matter is bound to be agitated in various ways when the Parliament session starts next week*. The Ambassador said that he will get such information, as he can about these negotiations and will see me again. But he again assured me that there will be no increase in the military aid given to Pakistan and the total aid, in any case, will not be very significant.

* The Ambassador informed the Ministry subsequently that what the Iranian Foreign Minister had told the Senate in Tehran "the United States has not signed and will not sign any military agreement with any foreign power with aggressive aims" and confirmed that "This is also the attitude of the U.S. Government with regard to Pakistan."

Deputy High Commission for India
Dacca

No. F. 1(2) PS/58. 18th November, 1958.

My dear Lukose,

Last night I met Sir Alexander Symon, British High Commissioner in Pakistan who is now on a visit to Dacca at a dinner party given by the British Deputy High Commissioner, Greenhill.

2. I met Sir Alexander before at New York. At the party there were three British businessmen from Narayanganj and Chittagong representing top British firms and the American Consul-General with his wife. In the course of conversation Sir Alexander said that General Ayub’s statement regarding Kashmir and war was not properly interpreted in the press and understood especially in India. He said that it was his suggestion to General Ayub to meet the foreign press and speak to them. He said that General Ayub not having this type of experience fell into the press trap. He claimed that he knew General Ayub personally and was confident that a good General like him would never take his country to war. Everybody present started nodding their heads in agreement.

I told Sir Alexander that General Ayub may be a good General what about many bad generals under him who may not be able to give a correct interpretation for a speech like that. Sir Alexander agreed and said that before he left Karachi he had a discussion with General Ayub who is going be make a foreign policy statement in course of this week. This statement which is being prepared beforehand would reflect correctly Pakistan’s attitude to many international problems.

This is for your information.
With kind regards,

Yours sincerely

High Commission of India Karachi

No. HC-54/58 November 22, 1958

Dear Mr. Desai,

How long will President Ayub last is a question which is now being asked by many. No one credits him with much intelligence or ability, but what has come as a surprise is the report that his nearest rival, General Musa, is not credited either. This is confirmed by our own Military Adviser. He says that he has learned this from Pakistani Army circles. The struggle for power, if President Ayub is to go, will be between Musa and Azam. The later has a reputation of being an able and astute General.

2. The real power, however, is said to be in the hands of a military group or junta. This group is variously estimated from three to thirty officers, most of them of fairly junior rank. Some people call them “Young Colonels”. Begum Noon, who has been seen very much in Karachi lately, is said to have told certain diplomats that the supreme power is in the hands of three Army Officers, a General and two Colonels, who are responsible to a larger group. There is no indication as yet regarding the identity of the members of this triumvirate. The latest rumour about these military groups is that they are having second thoughts about the Army getting involved in civilian affairs. General Musa’s speech at Rawalpindi at the farewell dinner to President Ayub on the 12th November may have been a reflection of this point of view. Speaking at Quetta on the 20th November General Musa stated that the ‘Martial Law would be lifted only when things in the country were completely set right’. He also said that ‘the Army would continue giving cover for the smooth running of the civil administration.’ There seems to be no basic departure from his earlier statement about the Army’s intention of not getting deeply involved in the administration of the Martial Law.

3. Yesterday I had written to you about the reported postponement of the winter exercises of the Pakistan Army. The Burmese Military Attaché told us later that he had learnt from Pakistani sources that this decision was taken because of the delay in the transfer to the barracks of the troops on Martial Law duties. It is not quite clear whether President Ayub’s announcement of the 16th November that all troops will be withdrawn from Martial Law duties is being carried out effectively and promptly. The decision of the East Pakistan Government, announced two days later, to set up summary military courts in each district to try offences of smuggling and corruption has obviously been taken on second thoughts. Our information is that the brigade, which was stationed about 80 miles from Karachi shortly before the first coup, has not so far been moved. In Karachi itself, however there are very few military men to be seen in the streets and the day to day administration is mostly in civilian hands.

With kind regards,

Yours sincerely,

November 23, 1958.

Dear Mr. Desai,

Yesterday the Yugoslav Minister, Mr. Vlahov, spoke to me about his courtesy call on General General Ayub on the 19th November.

2. Ayub spoke to him particularly about Pakistan’s relations with India. Adopting an injured tone, he pointed out that India had put too much emphasis on the remarks he had made during his interview with some foreign correspondence on the 29th October, while no attention was paid to his speeches at Dacca and at Rawalpindi. He ended up with a warning that “this is the last chance for Mr. Nehru to settle these problems with me”, apparently meaning that the person or persons who may succeed him may be more extremist.

3. Talking about agrarian reforms, General Ayub told the Yugoslav Minister that he had advised big landlords that they should accept the recommendations of the Land Reforms Commission which is expected to submit its report soon. He had also told them that they could not expect to get such liberal terms when he is no longer at the helm of affairs.

4. Mr. Vlahov told me that he was quite intrigued at the repeated references by Ayub to the possibility of his not being at the top of the Administration. This led us to discuss further about the existence and strength of a so-called military junta at Rawalpindi. Mr. Vlahov firmly believes that such a Group exists. He had also heard that the group had given certain directions to General Ayub in regard to foreign policy. The moderation Ayub showed in his speech at Rawalpindi is attributed to the pressure from this Group. They are said to have counseled Ayub not to attend National Day functions at the capital and get generally mixed up with foreign diplomats. This is rather astonishing news and, if true, is a clear indication of the estimate the Army has of the President of Pakistan. I may recall, in this context, the speech made by General Ayub at the Turkish National Day on the 29th October i.e., a day after the assumption of power by him, where he made an impromptu speech referring to Turkey as the beacon light of Asia, to which Pakistan was looking up. He ended his speech by toasting the health of the Government of Turkey and not of President Bayar, as he should have. This speech provoked at least two Heads of Mission, the U.A.R. Ambassador and the Yugoslav Minister, to call at the Foreign Office and ask for certain clarifications.

5. Reverting to General Ayub’s remarks about India, there can be no doubt that they were made in the expectation that they would be conveyed to us. He must have, therefore, talked with a definite purpose to the Yugoslav Minister. When he met the Ceylonese High Commissioner a few days earlier, the General had taken a completely different line. He depicted India as being on the verge of collapse. He did not believe India was strong even militarily, as the Army was composed of different religious and linguistic elements. He referred to the regional rivalries and to the existence of widespread corruption. In his view the country was being held together by the personality of the Prime Minister and once he disappeared from the scene there would be utter chaos. He also appeared to be confident that Pakistan could defeat India easily if a war started. The Ceylon High Commissioner was so much rattled by this attitude that he did not actually tell us anything regarding this conversation. We, however, learned about this from a source close to him.
Pakistani propaganda about India being weak, etc., is not new. It has been a favourite theme with the Pak. Foreign Office people, from Mr. Baig downwards.

6. The latest complaint against our country, of which Foreign Minister Manzoor Qadir is the exponent, is that India is provoking Pakistan by intemperate statements and actions. They call this ‘Pakistan Baiting’. We may expect to hear more about this not only from Karachi but also from interested western capitals.

With kind regards.

Yours sincerely

TOP SECRET

Letter from Indian High Commission to Commonwealth Secretary.

Karachi, November 24, 1958.

Indian High Commission
Karachi

Dear Mr. Desai,

On Saturday I met Mr. Abdul Aziz Mirza, Registrar of the Pakistan Supreme Court, and had a long talk with him about the recent developments in Pakistan. Mr. Mirza is an old friend of mine. We were colleagues in the Indian Federal Court.

2. The main impression I got from this conversation is that Chief Justice Munir has been and is very closely connected with the present political developments. Mirza told me that he and the Chief Justice were in Karachi on the 8th of October, the day of the first coup. They returned to Lahore the same night.

3. The Supreme Court is now meeting in Karachi to hear some cases. This opportunity is being taken by General Ayub to have detailed discussions with the Chief Justice and some of the other Judges about the future constitutional set-up. Mirza confirmed our earlier information that Foreign Minister Marzoor Qadir is actually engaged in drafting parts of the new Constitution. It is to be of the Presidential type, but “with checks and balances”. The franchise will be limited. He said that in his view adult universal franchise was not suited to countries like Pakistan. He could not tell me how long the present Military Administration will last. He, however, gave no indication of Ayub’s own position being unstable in any way.

4. He then referred to the “cleaning up campaign” which the present regime was engaged in. He said that not only the officials but also the politicians will come under the proposed screening program. Various committees have been set up to undertake this vast investigation. The highest of these committees will be presided over by the Chief Justice with one or two Cabinet Ministers. (The names of Manzoor Qadir and General Sheikh are mentioned in this connection.) As regards Government Servants, the investigators will look into their suitability to hold their present jobs and their integrity. Officers of various grades will be screened by those holding superior positions in other Ministries or Departments. Thus, clerical and ministerial staff will be screened by a committee of Deputy Secretaries belonging to another Ministry, Under Secretaries by a committee of Joint Secretaries, and so on. Secretaries of Ministries will also have to undergo this screening process. Even Judges will not be immune from the probe.

5. He then vexed eloquent about the way in which the new regime is hammering Pakistan into a model state. He was praise for the measures Martial Law Administration has taken to bring down prices, stop smuggling, ensure payment of taxes and restore national self-respect. He even ventured a suggestion that it would be good for other countries, obviously meaning India, to have a similar cleansing process. I told him politely that all talk of there being corruption and mal-administration in India were grossly exaggerated and that such reports can be traced to some kind of wishful thinking on the part of India’s critics.

6. I hope to meet Mirza again in the course of the next few days

With kind regards,

Yours sincerely,

SECRET

Letter from High Commissioner Rajeshwar Dayal to the Commonwealth Secretary M. J. Desai regarding his meeting with the Foreign Minister of Pakistan.

Subject: Interview with the Foreign Minister of Pakistan.

My dear C. S.,

In accordance with the usual diplomatic protocol I arranged to pay a courtesy call on the Foreign Minister on the 26th November prior to the presentation of my Letters of credence. Although the Norwegian Prime Minister’s party was in Karachi, the call was arranged at short notice. The presentation of the Letters of Credence had been arranged for the 28th, immediately after the departure of the Norwegian party. On the plane of practical arrangements in connection with the commencement of my functions, I have received courtesy and attention.

2. My talk with the Foreign Minister, Mr. Manzoor Qadir, which as a courtesy call should normally have lasted a short while, went on for 2 hours and 45 minutes and it would have continued but for the fact that the Foreign Minister had to attend the Norwegian Minister’s Reception in honour of the visiting Prime Minister. On this occasion I let the Foreign Minister do most of the talking since I wished to listen, to his views and to get his measure. I however found myself in the position of having to interrupt his flow of words in order to mention aspects of the problems discussed so as to prevent the picture from becoming entirely one sided. I was naturally anxious to avoid polemics at this my first meeting with the Foreign Minister and I listened patiently while he unburdened himself of the Pakistani view on the entire gamut of the problems between our two countries.

3. Mr. Qadir received me warmly and said that he had been looking forward for a long time to meeting me and mentioned that he had met my wife when she was at Cambridge and that he looked forward to having good personal relations with us.

4. He then turned to the subject of Indo-Pakistan, relations and observed that there was a fund of goodwill between the two countries on which we should try to build the structure of our future relations. I said that I could not agree more and wished to hear his ideas on the subject. He thereupon launched on what I can only describe as a lawyer’s exposition of the Pakistani case and started from the very beginning, viz. the creation of Pakistan. He said that there was a strong feeling among sections of opinion in Pakistan that India had not been able to reconcile herself to the partition of the country. Therefore she did not wish to see Pakistan prosper and become stable. I assured him most solemnly that this was definitely not the case and that on the contrary, we were so linked together and our fortunes so inter-twined that in the stability and prosperity of the one, lay the best interests of the other. He said that he himself agreed with this viewpoint and he could not see on what rational grounds India’s views could be different; nevertheless, the fact remained that there was a section of opinion in Pakistan which had the feeling that he had described.

5. Mr. Qadir then launched on what seemed like an apologia for the present regime. He first described the wickedness and selfishness of the earlier governments and the mess which they had created. The present regime, he said, had one object alone, viz. to lift the country from the morass into which it had fallen and to improve the condition of the people. Furthermore, the regime had the support and approval of the people who had welcomed what it had been able to do for them. The desire was to build up workable political institutions in place of the shaky structure which had collapsed. It was therefore rather galling to find the present regime described in India as a “naked military dictatorship”. Mr. Qadir said that he had the greatest respect and admiration for Mr. Nehru whom he regarded as one of the world’s greatest statesmen. While it might be true in the purely constitutional sense that there was a dictatorship in Pakistan, since the normal checks and balances of a democracy were absent and power was wielded by a Cabinet of twelve, or by the President alone who had the power of appointing or removing Cabinet Ministers, the term “naked dictatorship” rather implied a regime which was interested only in the furtherance of the selfish interests of a single individual. That, said Mr. Qadir, was not the case in Pakistan and therefore Mr. Nehru’s remarks had caused hurt.

6. I interrupted at this stage to say that while the internal structure of Pakistan was her affair, nevertheless, as a next door neighbour, we could not disinterest ourselves in such far reaching changes as had occurred in Pakistan which would inevitably affect her policies and therefore react on our mutual relations. I reminded Mr. Qadir that after the first change in Government, we made no comment, but when at a Press Conference the President spoke of the possibility of war with India over the Kashmir and Canal waters questions, public opinion in India understandably felt a sense of concern. According to Mr. Qadir himself, the previous Governments used to act irresponsibly when making such threats against India. But when similar bellicose sentiments were expressed by a military regime in which power was concentrated in one person, we could not but take notice. India had a lively press and parliament and our democratic institutions were functioning effectively and when a question in regard to the nature of the new regime in Pakistan was specifically put at a press conference, it had to receive a reply, especially after the concern caused by General Ayub Khan’s statement.

7. Mr. Qadir explained at length the context in which the statement was made by General Ayub Khan and said that he had been drawn by his questioners and was therefore compelled to state rather bluntly the implication of the remark that the questions of Kashmir and waters were vital to Pakistan. "A vital question is one for which one is prepared to fight and die, and if the Canal Waters are cut off in 1962, as is threatened, involving death by starvation to millions, obviously we cannot take it lying down". Mr. Qadir went on to say that the subsequent statements made by the President in Rawalpindi and Dacca struck the right note and undue emphasis should not be placed on the earlier one.

8. I said that I had heard the explanation with interest, but I pointed out that we had to settle Indo-Pakistani problems in a peaceful way and that such ugly and dangerous expressions as “war” must be strictly eschewed. Mr. Qadir agreed and said that, the General as a soldier was somewhat blunt, nor did he have much experience in dealing with the press; he himself had been trying for moderation and restraint in regard to the President’s public utterances. Only the other day, the President was meeting B.B.C. correspondents, and he had hurried to the Presidential palace to ensure that nothing was said which might exacerbate the situation. So far as he himself was concerned, added Mr. Qadir, he had exercised the utmost restraint and had resisted the temptation to launch a formal protest against the remarks made in India about the present regime in Pakistan, since that would have served no useful purpose. In fact, he had the intention of making a statement of a pacificatory nature and he was ready to deliver it when came Mrs. Laxshmi Menon’s statement in the Indian Parliament. If he had then made his statement which had been already prepared, it might have been construed as a gesture of atonement or retreat. He asked whether it would not be possible for both sides to exercise restraint in the matter of making disparaging remarks about each other, since such self denial would help to improve the present atmosphere.

9. Mr. Qadir then referred to the statement made in the Indian Parliament on the 20th November and he said that as he understood it, it seemed to say, not only to India but to the world, “In Pakistan there is a naked military dictatorship; it should be declared an outcast and expelled from the Commonwealth and denied all foreign assistance and support." I said that that was certainly not the intention of the statement, which was a very balanced one and, that its most significant part referred to our desire to follow a policy of friendly approach and to develop good neighbourly relations with Pakistan. As for the question of foreign aid, Mr. Qadir no doubt knew our views about it, as we ourselves were not averse to accepting foreign aid for our economic plans. But when that aid was primarily military in nature and coupled with the existence of a military regime, which had used the threat of war against us, then the position was clearly different. Mr. Qadir, in reply used the familiar argument that while Pakistan got direct military aid, India got it indirectly by diverting her own resources for defence purposes. I said that the question of emphasis was vital; whereas we were trying to build up a stable economic and social structure on which vast sums were being spent, in Pakistan there had been considerable development in the military field to the neglect of other aspects of the nation's life. This imbalance was a cause of legitimate concern to us, and furthermore Pakistan's defence arrangements seemed to be a good deal more than purely defensive. Mr. Qadir did not contest the argument but he went on to assure me that any thought of war with India was out of the question since it would result in our mutual destruction. Nevertheless, an attitude of mutual fear and suspicion existed and whatever was said on one side or the other was apt to be misconstrued. We should therefore both try to build up an atmosphere of greater trust and confidence.

10. I agreed and said that without such an atmosphere it would be difficult to tackle any of the existing problems and I suggested that a start should be made with the press which was poisoning the atmosphere. Mr. Qadir agreed that one virtue of having a Martial Law regime was that any such excesses could be controlled and he was trying to do it. So far as what he described as "second class papers" in both West Pakistan and the Eastern Punjab were concerned, he said there was little to choose between them, but their impact was not of particular significance. He admitted, however, that the tone of the Indian press was generally better than that of the Pakistani, and he hoped to improve the latter.

11. Mr. Qadir went on to say that the present Government was determined to do its utmost to find a solution for the two burning issues which embittered our relations, viz. the questions of Canal Waters and Kashmir. He then gave a lawyer's exposition of the Pakistani side of the Canal Waters case.

12. I need not go into the details of what Mr. Qadir said about the Canal waters question since you are fully familiar with the Pakistani stand, and I shall confine myself to some salient points. Mr. Qadir said that, speaking as a lawyer, there are two ways of dealing with the problem: one is to stay put, and that is in the interest of the party in possession, and the other is to seek a way out by negotiation, and failing that, by arbitration. India was in possession both in Kashmir and in regard to Canal waters; as the upper riparian power. Therefore, it suited her put off a settlement.

13. I immediately contested this by saying that so far as the Canal waters question was concerned, we were extremely anxious to find a settlement since we had made vast investments on our irrigation projects in East Punjab and Rajasthan. As I understood the matter, both sides have accepted the Bank’s proposal, viz. that the waters of the three western rivers should go entirely to Pakistan and of the three Eastern rivers entirely to India, and there remained technical and financial questions to put this basic proposition into effect. If the problem was to be tackled on a realistic basis, obviously, the bill which India would be required to pay should not be unduly inflated. Besides, I understood that Pakistan had already carried out a number of large irrigation works and was in a position to meet a considerable proportion of the supply at present being received from the Indian side. If a reasonable attitude was adopted in regard to the question of link canals etc., then a solution could be found. Mr. Qadir could not contest this, and he then turned to the subject of Kashmir.

14. Here again I challenged his fundamental premise by pointing out that Pakistan was in possession of two-fifths of the territory. Our case was based upon the Instrument of Accession which nobody had challenged and upon subsequent developments in Kashmir; what however was Pakistan’s right to the territory which she had occupied? Mr. Qadir said that it might be true that on the legal and technical side the argument was in our favour, but Pakistan’s moral position was stronger. Agreements had been solemnly made to hold a plebiscite under the auspices of the United Nations and there remained the question of their implementation. If there was a dispute as to their interpretation, it should be referred to arbitration, but in any case there could be no withdrawal from the holding of a plebiscite to ascertain the people’s wishes. India had eleven years in which to win over the people of Kashmir and she should have no hesitation in agreeing to a plebiscite being held. He thought that the whole matter should be taken up from the stage at which it was left off by UNCIP. I said that he must be familiar with our stand, viz. that Pakistan’s aggression must be vacated and all the pre-conditions fulfilled, which had not been done and the so-called Azad forces continued their occupation as part and parcel of the regular Pakistani army. Mr. Qadir spoke about Junagadh. I countered by pointing out that the principle of geographical contiguity had been violated and that the people had revolted whereupon the British Dewan invited the Indian authorities to enter and restore order. Thereafter the wishes of the people were ascertained in regard to the question of accession. Mr. Qadir said that so far as he was concerned, although he could not speak for his Cabinet colleagues, he was even prepared to take the question of Kashmir’s Instrument of Accession to the International Court. I said nothing, although I was a little surprised at this since I believe UNCIP went deeply into the question and came to the conclusion that the Instrument of Accession could not be challenged. Mr. Qadir seemed to imply that whereas the question of Kashmir was vital to Pakistan, it was not so important for India; I hastened to disabuse him of this impression and I said that a solution to a problem such as this was not easy since blood had been shed and there were all kinds of political, economic, psychological and strategic considerations involved. Perhaps, if lesser problems could first be settled and a reasonable settlement arrived at on the Canal waters question, then an atmosphere could be created for dealing with the Kashmir question on a mutually acceptable basis. The Pakistan Government could greatly help in the process by adopting a reasonable stand at the forthcoming discussions on the Canal waters issue. The Kashmir question was left at that.

15. Turning to border incidents, Mr. Qadir said that whenever these occurred, the Indian and Pakistani versions were diametrically opposed to each other since the persons responsible for creating the incidents themselves reported about them. However, so far as the Pakistan side was concerned, they had not only issued the strictest orders to avoid all such incidents, but they had taken effective steps to ensure that the orders would be obeyed. He hoped that we could take similar steps on our side. I said that I was certain that we had already taken such steps, but I would refer the matter to my Government.

16. I then mentioned the Iyer incident which I said was a particularly ugly and unpleasant affair and it had caused a good deal of anger in India. Mr. Qadir hastened to express regret for it and he offered me an unconditional apology. I thanked him for it but added that the explanation the Jamadar had given was clearly false and added insult to injury. Mr. Qadir said that he fully agreed with me, that he had rejected the explanation and had asked for severe punishment to be meted out to the Jamadar and to several others besides. I said that this seemed satisfactory so far as it went, but I hoped that no further incidents would take place.

17. Mr. Qadir said that an Indian radio station broadcasting to East Pakistan was taking the line that the province was no more than a colony of West Pakistan and was using disparaging language about the present martial law administration. He asked if we could refrain from making such broadcasts and requested me to look into the matter. I told him that I knew nothing about this, but that I would try to ascertain the position. Mr. Qadir added that if the press on both sides could avoid making direct attacks on the other country and especially refrain from attacking personalities the atmosphere will improve. This vicious circle of attack and counterattack must, he felt, be broken on all fronts. I agreed and hope that he would be successful in dealing with the Pakistani Press, which he had himself admitted as the principal offender.

18. Discussing the manner in which the problems could be tackled, I ventured the opinion that some progress would be possible if we could deal with a stable regime, which has to take decisions and was in a position to carry out its promises. Earlier Mr. Qadir himself had said that previous governments were weak and concerned principally with their selfish interests and that they depended for their existence on slogan-mongering. Mr. Qadir said that so far as the present Government was concerned, it was dedicated to its purposes and it would function very differently.

19. In summing up the conversation, I said to Mr. Qadir that I understood that we had agreed that everything possible should be done to avoid border incidents and that he would see to it that the tone of the Pakistani press in regard to Indian affairs improved. Furthermore, if some progress could be made towards the final settlement of the Canal waters issue shortly coming up for discussion in Washington, it would help improve the atmosphere all round. Mr. Qadir appeared to agree and he added that we should continue our conversations and try to find a way out of the impasse.

Yours sincerely

SECRET
Letter from the High Commissioner Rajeshwar Dayal to Commonwealth Secretary reporting on the Credentials Ceremony.

HIGH COMMISSIONER FOR INDIA KARACHI

No. HC/796/58.  28th November, 1958

My dear C.S.,

I have just presented my credentials to president Ayub Khan. The President received me in an informal and friendly manner, and he disregarded the protocol instructions. When I entered the hall, the president came forward exclaiming “I am very happy to see you after all this time” and shook me by the hand, after which he greeted Mr. Padmanabhan who was accompanying me. He asked me a number of questions about my family. I had to snatch an opportunity to say a few formal words and to present my Letters. I then sat next to him, and the conversation continued on a personal plane. It was not my intention to mention the fact of our association in Mathura in 1940 when I was District Magistrate there and the President was an Indian Army Captain. But the president himself spoke about it and told the Foreign Minister, who was present.

The subsequent luncheon continued in this informal vein with the President in a good humour, and he regaled us with anecdotes, to which I responded in similar fashion. Turning to more serious matters, Ayub asked me about my impressions of my stay in Russia and Yugoslavia and said that he thought that Yugoslavia had made considerable progress. He also spoke of China and her problems. He did not display much knowledge or understanding about these matters.

After luncheon I had a serious talk with the President, with the Foreign Minister adding a word or two here and there. I sought an opening by remarking how well the President looked in spite of his heavy responsibilities, whereupon he said “We did not want to undertake these responsibilities, but they were forced on us, and there was no other way of saving our country”. He said how much luckier we were in India under our leadership; the Congress party had its difficulties, but it was still functioning well. Both the President and Mr. Qadir added that they wished our good fortune to continue. The President said that we must make a real effort to settle our problems. He added that there had been a lot of talk; about a statement he made, adding the further comment that any of war between our two countries would be suicidal. He said that we were both spending too much of our resources on defence which we could hardly afford. He agreed when I said that something should be done to dispel the present atmosphere of mutual suspicion and distrust and that there were no problems, however intractable to which solutions could not be found, given time and patience, by peaceful negotiation.

The President went on to say that if we could not build up our friendship, we should at least agree to co-exist peacefully. He added that while he would welcome an attitude of generosity on our part, the least we could do was recognize and accept the fact of Pakistan’s existence. I assured him that so far as we were concerned our minds were clear; we wished Pakistan well not only as our neighbour, but also because our interests were in many respects common and inter-linked. The President spoke about mutual tolerance and attitude of patience and understanding towards one another. I added that a little exercise of restraint and the development of understanding would help to create a proper atmosphere in which we could hope to deal with the problems confronting us; these were real and difficult enough, without being made more so by unnecessary irritants. The President and Foreign Minister both agreed.

The President then remarked that actually there were only two outstanding problems, both of which affected Pakistan’s interests vitally, viz. Kashmir and Canal waters. The Canal waters question affected Pakistan’s very livelihood, while the Kashmir question was a matter of Pakistan’s security and “other things besides”. If Pakistan felt cornered and desperate in regard to these vital questions, “anything could happen”. This was said not as a threat but to imply that the situation would be out of control. I remarked that so far as the first question was concerned, a meeting was due to take place shortly and I hoped that the technical and financial matters could be satisfactorily settled since I understood that there was a basic agreement on the question of principle. Both the President and the Foreign Minister hoped that some settlement would be reached.

There followed some talk of the need for avoiding mutual irritants so that the proper atmosphere could be built up for tackling the various problems step by step. The President said “You are a sensible person and understand these things”. He added that he had no doubt that the Indian leaders wished to find peaceful solutions, but he added, “There are mischievous people – badmashes (bad characters) --on both sides who try to create trouble.” I told him that everything depended upon the leadership in the two countries and that such elements as he had mentioned did not matter so far as India at least was concerned.

The president observed that Russia and China were huge powers and both our countries could jointly defend themselves against any expansionist tendencies exhibited by them. He added that our countries were poor and over-populated and that unlike the white races, we had no possibility of off-loading our excess population in other parts of the world. "Should we then go at each other's throats or should we live together peacefully"? he asked. My reply to the question was obvious, but I enquired if he really felt that there was any danger to our security from the quarters he had mentioned, adding that our real enemy lay within, viz. poverty ignorance, and disease. He agreed and said that in both our countries our principal responsibility was to improve the condition of the people and that so far as Pakistan was concerned, conditions extremely were extremely bad.

Mr. Manzoor Qadir told the President that he had discussed the question of our mutual relations at length and he hoped to have further talks with me. The President said that he would have a pleasant and successful stay in Karachi after which I took my leave.

My general impression about General Ayub Khan is that temperamentally he is still very much the hearty and bluff Pathan officer whom I knew in 1940. There is nothing particularly subtle about him and he is impatient with things unless simply presented. Mr. Qadir was always careful to speak down to his President's level and was, indeed, quite deferential to him. On Indo-Pakistan problems, the President has a certain one-sided knowledge, but everything was over-simplified. Things are either black or white, and there are no nuances. On international matters, the approach is rudimentary and smacking of British army messes.

But autocrat though he is, I noticed a sense of caution, in contrast to the hearty abandon with which he talked on other matters, when it came to speaking about our mutual problems. The General appeared to be feeling his way, searching for words and turning constantly to Mr. Qadir for prompting. Perhaps the manner in which his earlier remarks had been received in India had been a lesson to him and he was anxious not to say the wrong thing while putting forward the Pakistani point of view.

Difficult and unpredictable though the situation here is, I felt somewhat encouraged by the personal consideration shown to me by the President, although of course one should not read too much into it. People here seem to have heard of my previous association with the President, and in this kind of authoritarian set-up, that makes some difference to their personal attitudes. One could at least expect is to be treated with ordinary courtesy, something which has often been lacking in the past. When, however, it comes to dealing with our mutual problems, one might encounter a certain military rigidity. But if any specific promises are made, in regard to comparatively minor matters, I have the feeling that they might well be kept. This might not amount to much in itself, but it may arrest any further deterioration in our relations, and if it could relate to the border incidents which have been causing so much trouble and tension, it could be definitely useful. It might seem somewhat rash on my part to attempt this preliminary estimate so soon after my arrival, but I feel I should let you have my first impressions for what they are worth.

Yours sincerely

0251. TOP SECRET

Letter from the High Commission of India to the Ministry of External Affairs regarding rumours of split in the Presidential Cabinet.

High Commission of India
Karachi– 5

No HC/54/58 December 6, 1958.

My dear Lukose,

Though many people think that General Ayub is well in the saddle, rumours of a split in the Presidential cabinet, persist. General Azam Khan is said to be dissatisfied with the way things are going.

2. Difference of opinion seem to have arisen between Generals Azam and Sheikh. General Sheikh is the right-hand man of General Ayub who had picked him specially to be in-charge of the Ministry of Interior. He is known to be very ambitious. Apparently, he is rather upset about the publicity Azam is getting as Minister for Rehabilitation: the newspapers are full of Azam’s speeches and photographs. Azam is also known to be very popular with the armed forces.

3. How far this rivalry between the two men will lead to an open break, it is too early to judge. Even the US Embassy sources admit that there are “cracks” in the Presidential cabinet. According to Ashiq Ahmed, the Statesman correspondent, US Ambassador Langley had told him, only last week, that “Ayub may not last more than six months”. A vague story like this is gradually spreading in the Capital. It is also current in the higher business circles, but has not become a bazaar rumour.

4. Mr. Petoukhov, Charge’d’Affaires of the USSR Embassy, told me that one of their officers, who had recently been to East Pakistan, has reported that conditions there are not taking a favourable turn as far as the new regime is concerned. He did not think that General Umrao Khan would remain in charge of East Pakistan for long.

TOP SECRET
Letter from the Deputy High Commissioner for India in East Pakistan to the Ministry of External Affairs giving political situation in East Pakistan.

Dacca, December 19, 1958.

Deputy High Commissioner for India in Pakistan Dacca

My dear Lukose,

The American sources indicate that General Ayub Khan who is due to arrive here on or about 27th December, 1958 in connection with the Scout Jamboree to be held in Chittagong would take this opportunity of “tying up the loose ends” in East Pakistan. This source further indicates that there is growing tension between the civil and the military sectors of the administration and between East and West Pakistani officials. Another aspect is the growing rift between General Umrao Khan and Governor Zakir Hussain. Both, as you knew, are Ayub men. The Chief Secretary is not particularly fond of the Governor. In fact he is backing Umrao Khan. The reason is partly administrative and partly personal. When Chief Secretary Azfar was Home Secretary in East Pakistan Government before he went to Karachi, Zakir Hussain was Inspector General of Police under direct control of the Home Secretary.

2. Zakir Hussain is so far sure of his position because when Ayub Khan was G.O.C. East Pakistan, Zakir Hussain, Ayub and N.M. Khan were the three musketeers. They shared in many a common adventures. One of their favourite rendezvous was at Mirzapur – Rai Bahadur Rana Prasad Saha as the host.

3. I have a feeling that the Americans are not very happy about Umrao Khan. I reported to you earlier that he is expected to be shifted from East Pakistan. Whether he would go on transfer or retire, nobody knows. The names mentioned to take his place are those of a Brigadier, Military Adviser, Pakistan Embassy, Washington, and Major General Bakhtiar Rana, now in West Pakistan. Umrao Khan was due to go this month but so far there is no indication that he is going. It appears, therefore, that if Ayub is unable to bridge the differences between the Chief Martial Law Administrator in East Pakistan and the East Pakistan Governor, they both may be shifted. This source also indicates the possibility of having an Advisory Committee in East Pakistan to co-ordinate the work between the Martial Law Administrator and the Governor.

4. There is another interesting trend I notice here. It appears that the British influence is increasing in East Pakistan. This is not very much appreciated by the Americans. The jute policy is still being influenced by the British interest in East Pakistan. You may recall in this connection as to how the problem regarding recruitment of Pakistanis for Joint Steamer Coy, was solved. I reported to you in my letter No. F. 6 (2) PS/58 dated 16th November, 1958. Recently there was an order issued which decreased the maximum for remitting from Pakistan to foreign countries from 50% to 25%. Further this order required details of expenditure from each foreign national, excluding, of course Indians. I am told that under the pressure of British interest this order was withdrawn and the foreign nationals are again permitted to remit 50% of their total emoluments. How this trend develops, I will keep an eye quietly and report to you from time to time.

With kind regards,

Yours sincerely

SECRET
Letter from the High Commissioner Rajeshwar Dayal to the Commonwealth Secretary M. J. Desai reporting on the situation after two months of Ayub’s take over.
High Commissioner for India
Karachi
No. HC/809/58 December 25, 1958.
My dear C.S.,
General Ayub Khan who is completing, in a couple of days, two months of his accession to power is facing formidable difficulties due to a deteriorating economic situation and mounting dissension amongst his collaborators, both in West and East Pakistan.
2. The difficulties on the economic side are mainly due to the absence of any coherent policy. Various Martial Law orders have been issued and these too have been chopped and changed from time to time. The scarcity in the supply of essential goods is increasing. What is more ominous is that this business community has no longer any incentive to trade. Many textile mills are said to have slowed down production as the finished goods are not being lifted from the godowns both because prices have not been fixed and because of a state of nervousness among the business community. There are already loud complaints about the shortages. The entire distribution machinery has slowed down and has been thrown out of gear.
3. The business community is highly critical of the Government’s handling of economic affairs. The Government in turn is accusing it of sabotage. The arrest of Mr. Rangoonwalla and others are desperate measures intended to inspire fear in the hope of bringing the industrialists to heel. The Government’s handling of economic affairs on the basis of threats and arbitrary orders is based upon a policy of “trial and terror”. The Government has been disappointed in regard to the surrenders of foreign holdings, the last date for which expires on 31st December. They have persuaded a group of businessmen to issue a Joint appeal urging people to declare such holdings before the last date. It is doubtful whether these measures would have the desired result. People are afraid that the Government would not only seize such holdings, but also proceed against them under the arbitrary martial law decrees. Businessmen are losing faith in the Government, which had promised earlier that there would be no witch-hunts. Furthermore, a Pakistani might well feel that he might at least hold on to his savings abroad, to compensate him for the loss of his civil rights!

4. Reports about General Azam Khan’s growing popularity continue to pile up. His so-called rival, General Sheikh, is very much in the shade these days. The presence in Karachi of Commander-in-Chief Musa has given rise to rumours about impending changes in the hierarchy of the Generals at the top. Finance Minister Shoaib is said to be highly dissatisfied with the way his cabinet colleagues, Azam and Burki, have been spending money for their pet projects in the Rehabilitation and Health sectors, respectively. Azam is reported to have asked for an immediate allotment of Rs. 23 crores for building houses for refugees.

5. Among the civilian Ministers, Manzur Qadir is easily the most prominent and nearest to the President. In a recent Order of Precedence issued by the Pakistan Government, he ranks only next to General Azam Khan. The latest reports reveal that Manzur Qadir is heading an influential civilian group who are urging that some form of constitutional facade be set up. According to one source, there is strong pressure that Ayub should make an announcement of a new constitutional set-up at the public meeting to celebrate Jinnah’s Birthday. The presence of some of the leading Muslim Leaguers in Karachi is said to be in connection with this anticipated announcement. General Ayub is known to have seen Miss Jinnah about four or five days ago in the same context. I would not rule out the possibility of some kind of liberalization of the administration as a camouflage, in order to meet increasing, criticism abroad about the “naked military dictatorship”. Such an announcement would greatly please U.S. opinion and that would count for much with the present set up in Pakistan.

6. But General Ayub’s biggest headache is in regard to East Pakistan, where the Martial Law Administrator, General Umrao Khan, and the Governor, Zakir Hussain, are, according to all accounts, at logger heads. The President is leaving tomorrow (26th) for East Pakistan on a short tour. He is taking with him two Ministers, Messrs Bhutto (Commerce) and Hafizur Rahman (Food and Agriculture), the Secretary-General, Mr. Aziz Ahmed, and Mr. N.M. Khan the Chief Commissioner of Karachi. Aziz Ahmed and N.M. Khan have both served as Chief Secretaries in East Pakistan and are known to be experts on the region. Ayub himself was commanding in the region at the time. The President is going for an on-the-spot study of the East Pakistan situation. He would, no doubt, look into the present wrangle between the Martial Law Administrator and the Governor. The scales seem to be tipped in favour of Zakir Hussain, who, according to local reports, is said to be the President’s man (though Mirza’s nominee). It should be noted that it is Zakir Hussain who would be touring East Pakistan with the President and not General Umrao Khan. According to U.S.S.R. Embassy sources, General Umrao Khan has been toying with the idea of declaring himself independent of the Central Government in case he is recalled in disgrace! His future is likely to be decided in the course of the next few days. The presence of General Azam Khan in East Pakistan at this juncture is also significant; Habibur Rahman, the Education Minister is already there.

7. On account of the spate of rumours, there is a certain amount of nervousness in Karachi. We have had some reports that some junior military officials are asking their friends to send their families away during January to March which they say may be a critical period for the administration. For the present I am inclined to characterize these reports as alarmist, but there is no doubt that there is an under-current of insecurity and fear among the thinking people.

Note by the High Commission of India on the press conference held by Pakistan Foreign Minister Manzur Qadir at the Karachi Press Club on January 17, 1959.

The Foreign Minister, Manzoor Qadir, spent nearly three hours in the Karachi Press Club on Saturday the 17th January, 1959 when he had a talk with journalists during the course of which he touched on several topics. It was an off the record chat. Though member of the Press Club I did not attend this meeting to avoid embarrassment to local journalists and not to give room for any misunderstanding. On enquiry I understand that barring B.I. Kluev, Second Secretary of the Russian Embassy no other representative from by diplomatic mission was present on the occasion though Press Attachés of all the foreign missions here are members of the Karachi Press Club.

Originally, this meeting was intended to be a regular Press conference. However, Manzoor Qadir decided at the last minute to make it an off the record talk. He has not so far allowed himself to be quoted for any statement coming out for the Foreign Office though he has been interviewed by a number of journalists. This seems to be the result of a distrust on his part of all journalists operating in Karachi and due to suspicion that they will either misquote him or put stories which are likely to misinterpret his statements.

The following points were made by Manzoor Qadir according any information which has been gathered by talking to a number of journalists:-

1. Pakistani foreign Policy:

Manzoor Qadir said that although much could be said against the internal policies pursued by previous Governments during the course of the last ten years there was nothing wrong with the foreign policy at all. He said that if he had the chance to shape Pakistan's Foreign policy he would do exactly what the previous Governments did. He strongly defended Pakistan's alliance with the Western Bloc and membership in the Baghdad and SEATO Pacts. Manzoor Qadir maintained that Pakistan cannot be neutralist or unaligned and that it has to be with one or the other of the two Power Blocs and it could not but be with the Anglo-American Bloc.

2. Indo-Pakistan relations:

Manzoor Qadir said that Indo-Pakistan issues will have to be dealt with on a rational and not on an emotional basis. He said that he had great deal of respect for India's Prime Minister and Foreign Minister but maintained that he was completely wrong in so far as his Kashmir policy was concerned. He said that he could prove convincingly before any forum that Pakistan’s case was just and that India was in the wrong, he went on to say that the present impasse was due to bungling by Pakistan and India’s intransigence.

Manaoor Qadir pointed out that India’s policy of neutralism cannot endure and will have to be given up sooner or later. He said that this policy was being followed for the purpose of obtaining money from both the power blocs. He said that India had appointed M.C. Chagla as Ambassador in Washington just for the sake of showing before the American public the secular nature of the country. He went on to say that India was picking out some of the ablest Muslims and appointing them as Ambassadors with the same end in view. He admitted that Mr. Chagla is a very able man and that Pakistan is greatly concerned about what he is saying in the U.S.A. about Pakistan. He then said that the Government was not at all happy with the manner in which Mr. Mohammad Ali had reacted to Mr. Chagla’s recent talk and that the procedure adopted by him by convening a Press conference to reply to Mr. Chagla was inappropriate. He said that the subject matter should have been dealt with in the appropriate forum though he did not mention what the forum was. Perhaps he was thinking of a protest to the State Department.

Manzoor Qadir chided local newspapers for calling India “Bharat” and referring to Indians as Bharatis. He said that this was a cheap way of gibing at India. Some newspaper men defended the use of the word “Bharat” by pointing out that this was the name found in the Constitution of India and that vernacular papers were using the words “Hindustan” and “Bharat” in place of India, Manzoor Qadir said that this was all right so far as the vernacular paper were concerned and that the use of the word “Bharat” in English newspapers was obviously meant to express contempt and that this was not the manner in which the newspapers should behave.

3. America:

Manzoor Qadir said that American was a great country and thanked the U.S.A. for the help and assistance it was rendering to Pakistan. However, he was critical of America, particularly in the context of the U.S. Pakistan Military agreement. He said that America did not define the word “aggression” and left it very vague. This, he said, was most unsatisfactory from the Pakistan point of view which wanted that the U.S.A. must specifically give guarantees to Pakistan against aggression from India and Afghanistan. He went on to say that although the draft of the proposed agreement had been received from Washington, this was still being examined and said that it may take some time before the agreement was concluded. He created the impression that the signing may not take place immediately or during the meeting of the Baghdad Pact Council but at some later date. He was very critical of the assurances given to India by Ellsworth Bunker. He went on to say that even though the U.S.A. was still an “observer” in the Baghdad Pact it was the most important component of the Baghdad Pact and exercised the greatest amount of influence and pull.

4. Baghdad Pact:

As has been stated earlier, he defended fully Pakistan’s membership of the Baghdad Pact. He added that Iran wanted the strengthening of the Baghdad Pact considerably because of her fear of Russia, Afghanistan and Iraq.

5. Pakistan Constitution;

Manzoor Qadir said that the work of drafting the Constitution was in progress and that he was taking an active part in it. He pointed out that the President and the Members of the Cabinet held different views on the subject. He indicated that the President was strongly in favour of a constitution that will give considerable powers to the President. He said that he himself was in favour of having some kind of representative Government though he had his own views in regard to franchise. He said he was against universal adult franchise and wanted this to be of a very restricted nature. He also said that other Members of the Cabinet had their own views in the matter though he did not say what they were. In other words he created the impression that there were strong differences of opinion among the Members of the Cabinet regarding the future Constitution of the country. He pointed out that work in this connection was in progress. Constitution may be ready in a few months time.

During his talks, I understand, he spoke without any trace of emotion and dealt with every topic as a lawyer arguing a case, emphasize in the importance of correct an unambiguous language.

The Karachi journalists are divided into two camps. The Karachi Press Club which consists very largely of the younger group of journalists is opposed by the National Union of Journalists which is supported principally by Altaf Hussain and his followers which includes Zuberi of the EVENING STAR and Qutubuddin Aziz of the United Press of Pakistan. This body did not participate in the opening ceremony of the Club which was performed a few days ago by Lt. General Azam Khan.

The Karachi Press Club is attempting to popularize itself and gain some kind of official favour and for this purpose it is endeavouring to bring into its premises leading people. It was in this connection that Manzoor Qadir was asked to give his Press conference at the Karachi Press Club instead of, as is customary, in the Pakistan Information Department.

It was after his having come to know about the split in the ranks of the local journalists that Manzoor Qadir decided, at the last moment, not to hold a Press Conference but to have an off the record talk.

Letter from High Commissioner Rajeshwar Dayal to Commonwealth Secretary regarding positive response by the Pakistani Foreign Office to references to Pakistan in the speeches of the Indian leaders.

New Delhi, January 20, 1959.

High Commission For India
Karachi

No. HC/28/59 January 20, 1959

My dear C.S.,

You must have seen the news agencies’ reports about the Pakistan Foreign Office’s positive reactions to the very friendly references made by the Prime Minister, the Congress President, the Home Minister and others to Indo-Pakistan relations at the recent Congress session. Baig told me that the reaction here was immediate; according to the Americans, it was Manzur Qadir who was responsible for the friendly tone of the Foreign Office statement. This was followed by some diminution in the hostile tone of the Pakistan press, and only the Pakistan Times, somewhat surprisingly, reacted critically; yesterday the Civil & Military Gazette, not to be outdone, carried an editorial in similar vein. But while it may be too much to expect, in this climate, for more positive reactions from the Pakistani press, its silence could be regarded as a not un-encouraging sign, denoting an unusual degree of restraint. There was also some reason to hope that the Foreign Office statement would be followed, when opportunity arose, by the public expression of reciprocal sentiments by people in authority here.

2. This hopeful trend was unfortunately upset by the succession of statements made by our Ambassador in Washington which were regarded here as a direct and open attack against Pakistan. The first statement was received without too much excitement, but when it was followed by the second, the floodgates of vituperation were released, the first target being our Ambassador himself. The good effects of the statements made at Nagpur* were unfortunately dissipated before they had time to crystallize. It was said that we spoke with two voices and that the statements made at Nagpur were not seriously intended. Indeed, some of my colleagues here, who had greatly welcomed the Prime Minister’s statement, of which the full text was requested by many of them, were greatly puzzled at the utterances of our envoy, which contrasted so sharply in tone and content with the forthright and conciliatory expressions of goodwill coming from Nagpur.

3. While it is not for me to raise questions regarding the propriety or otherwise of our envoy entering into polemics publicly in regard to matters concerning our relations with third countries, or making statements sharply conflicting with policy declarations made by the highest political and public personalities in India, I must point but the adverse effects of such statements on the activities of the envoy entrusted with the conduct of our relations with the country concerned. Manzur Qadir here has taken Mr. Mohd Ali Bogra to task for holding a press conference to reply to our envoy’s remarks as he considered this an inappropriate way of dealing with the matter. Perhaps the lesson to be drawn from this episode is that there is still some merit in the art of quiet diplomacy, particularly in regard to delicate questions concerning relations with third countries.

Yours sincerely

Letter from High Commissioner to Commonwealth Secretary M. J. Desai on the latest situation in Pakistani politics.

Karachi, January 22, 1959.

High Commissioner for India,
Karachi

No. HC/2/TS/59 January 22, 1959.

My dear C.S.,

The Foreign Minister Mr. Manzur Qadir, had an off-the-record talk with journalists a few days ago at which two of our Indian Correspondents were present. Our Public Relations Officer has prepared a note of what transpired on the basis of the information which he has gathered from different sources; his note can therefore be treated as an authentic version of the talk.

2. On reading through the note one can see that Qadir was cautious in his treatment of Indo-Pakistani problems. His emphasis on a rational as opposed to an emotional approach reflects the line which he has always taken with me. One can only hope that it will meet with some response from his own colleagues and compatriots.

3. The reference to Mr. Chagla is interesting. There is great respect here for his ability and it is being said that India acted shrewdly in sending an eminent Muslim to be her Ambassador, thus impressing on the American India's policy of secularism. It is recognized here that Mr. Mohamed Ali Bogra is no match for Mr. Chagla and I have it from reliable sources that Mr. Bogra's recall is imminent. The latest rumour is that Mr. Brohi has been approached to accept the Ambassadorship in Washington.

4. Incidentally, a big reshuffle in Pakistan's foreign representation is in the offing and I am told that only a handful of non-officials will be retained. It is also rumoured that a couple of Generals will, for reasons of convenience, be sent out as Ambassador. M.S.A. Baig does not conceal the fact that he has been insisting on a foreign posting, but he cannot be released at present because of the change in Government. When he does go, Akhtar Hussain, who is now in Moscow, is likely to replace him. I was told by a high Foreign Office official that Foreign Service officers had earlier objected to Ikramullah's posting as Foreign Secretary, as he has already had a five year term in that office. If Ikramullah is sent to India and Mian Ziauddin's recall is a certainty - my informant felt that he would do well provided his heart was in the job, about which my informant was by no means certain. Mian Ziauddin apparently has aspirations to be posted to London, but in this he may well be disappointed.

5. As regards the U.S. – Pakistan bilateral agreement, there is considerable dissatisfaction here as to its terms. But the Americans are adamant in their refusal to extend their commitments and Pakistan will have no option but to take it or leave it. Although the Russians here are greatly apprehensive about the possibility of the inclusion of secret clauses in the various bilateral agreements, the general feeling among my colleagues is that the meeting of the Council will not set the Indus on fire. To-day's news is that even the Iranian Prime Minister is not coming and that the delegation will be led by the Foreign Minister. As the Pakistani delegation will be led by the Foreign Minister, Mr. Menderes too might have second thoughts regarding his attendance. The whole gathering therefore has undergone a steady process of deflation.

6. I have heard from a reliable source that it is planned to associate some kind of an Advisory Council with the dictatorship in order to give it a representational facade. This is meeting with resistance on the part of those called upon to serve on that nebulous body. One of the persons so selected, a man of little substance but reputed to be a friend of the President, recently visited me and discussed the issue at length. He thought that any form of popular participation in a dictatorship was a contradiction in terms. If an Advisory Council were to be set up, party and territorial representation would be insisted upon, and the body would not be able to function at all because of basic disagreements arising from differences in approach. What this gentleman advocated was the appointment of a Chief Adviser who would have under him a panel of experts, three representing industrial interests, two economists, a representative of the Defence Services, etc. All proposals made by the Ministers would be submitted to the Chief Adviser, who, after consulting the appropriate expert, would give his advice to the President. This advice the President would be bound to accept since he lacked experience in Government and in view of his open admission that “he knew nothing about economics”. The President’s function would be to see that the decisions so taken would be enforced through the military and civilian machinery. In other words, this would appear to be a tandem arrangement with a military and a civilian boss running the country. My informant likened the Chief Adviser to the American Presidential Assistant, with the significant exception that the Chief Adviser would not be over-ruled by the President as he lacked the competence to do so. My informant was quite contemptuous of the so called Presidential Cabinet, which he described as nothing but a collection of functionaries. The Chief Adviser, under this weird arrangement, would have to be an omniscient superman, a phenomenon which certainly cannot be found in Pakistan, although my informant seemed clearly of the opinion that he himself was destined for that role.

Yours sincerely

Letter from the Deputy High Commissioner of India in Dacca to the High Commissioner in Karachi regarding conditions of the Anglo-Indian community in East Pakistan.

Karachi, January 22, 1959.

D.O.No. F6/2/PS/59 January 22, 1959

My dear Mr. Dayal,

Mr. Gibbon, leader of the Anglo-Indian community, came to see me yesterday afternoon.

2. He appeared to be a little worried about the future of Anglo-Indian community in Pakistan. He said that Pakistan Government was deliberately squeezing out members of Anglo-Indian community from their agricultural lands and villages. This is being done for the purpose of re-allotting agricultural lands to the refugees. According to him, out of the total number of about 7 lakhs, already about 2 lakhs have been pushed out. He said that all his efforts to have this policy revised had failed. He said further that the condition of the minority communities in Pakistan, and in particular Anglo-Indian community, never was very satisfactory even before the Marital Law Administration. But since the inception of Pakistan there always had been, according to him, either a public forum or legislative forum where their difficulties and the grievances of the minority communities had a chance to receive attention and sometimes remedial response. He said that unless persons like Prime Minister Nehru and others from the neighbouring countries started hammering the need for some sort of representative government in Pakistan, the condition of minority communities would soon reach a past cure stage. He added further in this regard that the foreign embassies also should be told.

I heard the above with great respect and attention, but did not offer any comments.

Mr. Gibbon asked me about the condition of the members of the minority communities, in particular Hindus, in East Pakistan. In reply I told him that the condition of the Hindus in East Pakistan continued to be the same like before. I deliberately refrained from discussing in details, because this was the first time I met Mr. Gibbon, and I thought that guarded statement from me would not be inappropriate.

Lastly Mr. Gibbon said that he was trying to bring pressure on Pakistan Government through the Church. His attempt to contact the foreign embassies in Karachi was without any success. This is for your information.

With kindest regards,

Yours sincerely

Letter from the Commonwealth Secretary to the High Commissioner in Karachi Rajeshwar Dayal regarding statement of the Indian Ambassador in Washington.

New Delhi, January 22, 1959.

No. D. O. No. 71 – CS/59 January 22, 1959 / Magha 2, 1880 (Saka).

My dear Dayal,

Thank you for your letter No. HC/28/59 dated 20th January, 1959. I have shown the letter to P.M.

2. What our Ambassador in Washington* said was not due to any special direction from us. He did this on his own initiative because of our general approach to these problems which he knows well. We can hardly criticize him for his forthright statements.

3. Ups and downs in Indo-Pakistan relations have been a normal feature during the last eleven years and none of us need get unnecessarily worried if frankness and directness, on occasions, on questions which we regard as matters of principle, result in Pakistan authorities being irritated. Our approach to Indo-Pakistan problems has been two fold: always to be friendly and courteous in our talks with Pakistan or in our references to Pakistan, and, at the same time, to make our position quite clear is regard to certain important matters of principle. Naturally, you should, as our envoy accredited to Pakistan, do your best to cultivate good relations with the Pakistan authorities.

With kind regards,

Yours sincerely

Letter from the High Commissioner Rajeshwar Dayal to Commonwealth Secretary M. J. Desai regarding Republic Day celebrations in Karachi.

High Commission for India
Karachi

HC/42/59 January 28, 1959

My dear C.S.,

Our Republic Day function this year, apart from the solemnity of the anniversary itself, assumed a certain political aspect; I invited the President at rather short notice after consulting the Foreign Minister, and he readily accepted. Although we have no record here in this Mission, I am told that this was practically the only occasion when Pakistan's Head of State has attended a function at India House. In any case, even if he has attended at all, the event has been so rare as to have been forgotten. The President's attendance at our party has been widely commented on, and the press, which hardly notices this Mission, came out with an account of the function and some papers even carried pictures. The gathering was a record one—easily over a thousand attended—and the dignity and elegance of the function received many appreciative comments. The Pakistan Navy band was in attendance. The Delhi sweets, Benarsi pan and flowers and garlands brought from Delhi and Bombay were much appreciated.

2. We had also sent invitations to the Heads and members of delegations attending the Baghdad Pact Ministerial Council meetings. The Prime Minister of Iran accompanied by his Defence Minister and other officials turned up, somewhat to our surprise. Loy Henderson also came together with some of his colleagues, as did the British Parliamentary Secretary, Allport. Allport told me that he was pleasantly surprised to see such a large gathering—he thought at first that they were Indian nationals and he remarked on the cordial and friendly atmosphere which prevailed. He said he had thought he would find an atmosphere of strain and tension but he was encouraged to find so much goodwill. I told him of the large number of applicants for visas for India, and he expressed astonishment at the figures. Loy Henderson said that he had attended our first Republic Day function and was glad of the opportunity to attend the ninth. The Prime Minister of Iran offered his personal felicitations on the occasion.

3. Three of the Pakistani Ministers - Messrs Qadir, Shoaib and Ibrahim-turned up, but none of the military ministers, although Air Marshal Asghar Khan and several officers of Brigadier’s rank were present. Many ex-Ministers such as Chundrigar, Amjad Ali, Brohi, Guzdar, Aleem attended, and most of the leading business magnates. A large number of Secretaries to Government and other high officials and their wives also responded to our invitation, including M.S.A. Baig and Mrs. Osman Ali Baig, wife of the new Secretary General of the Baghdad Pact Organization. We were gratified to have such a large and representative gathering despite the pre-occupation of the officials with the Baghdad Pact meetings.

4. The President stayed for three quarters of an hour, and was friendly and relaxed. He told my wife and myself of his experiences during the war and subsequently. He said he had to assume responsibility for the Government of the country to save it from the mess which it had got into. He greatly hoped that our two countries would build up close and friendly relations, “for we are brothers after all”. He asked my views about the land reforms in Pakistan, and the progress which we had made in India in the matter.

5. The Resident said he understood from Qadir that he was up at Cambridge at the same time as my wife and that their two families knew each other well. He then went on to praise Qadir in very high terms, commenting on his brilliance and devotion to duty. “He has come at a big sacrifice only from a sense of duty as he has no use for power, and I am very lucky to have him”. This remark further confirms the impression which I have gathered that Qadir’s influence and prestige have grown rapidly and that he has the fullest confidence of the President.

6. The function has, to some extent, brought in a thaw in our day-to-day relations with the Pakistan.

With kind regards,

Yours sincerely,

(Rajeshwar Dayal)

AZIZ AHMAD’s impending ouster from the post of Secretary General and Deputy Chief Martial Law Administrator and translation to Washington is a step which removes a serious obstacle in the way of a better atmosphere between our two countries. The post itself is being abolished and a new Cabinet Secretary N.A. FARUQUI, of U.P. origin, has been appointed. With AZIZ AHMAD’s departure the influence of fanatic and corrupt Punjabi official clique will appreciably diminish. FARUQUI has reputation of honesty and moderation while AZIZ AHMAD’s hauteur was too much even for his Cabinet superiors.

TOP SECRET

Letter from the Deputy High Commissioner of India K. V. Padmanabhan to the Commonwealth Secretary M. J. Desai regarding Pakistan Day celebrations.

Karachi, March 26, 1959.

High Commission of India
Karachi

No. DHC-TS-19/59 26th March, 1959/ Caitra 5, 1881 SAKA

My dear Commonwealth Secretary,

The Pakistan Day was celebrated in Karachi on the 23rd March in a rather unostentatious and quiet way. There was a ceremonial parade in the morning and a Reception in the evening at the President’s House. Important buildings were gracefully illuminated. No public meeting was held or processions taken out as on December 5 last, when Quaid-i-Azam’s birthday was celebrated.
2. The parade, according to those who had attended earlier ones, was on a bigger scale and better organized this year. Previously, only the defence forces in and around Karachi have been utilized for this parade. On this occasion troops and weapons were brought from outstations. For the first time, Pakistan showed her light tanks, the radar-fitted anti aircraft guns and 8" howitzers. Our Military Adviser says that there were no surprises, though this is the first time that Pakistan had brought them and for the public to see. He has, however, noted some "formation signs" which he said were interesting. He is submitting a special report to the Defence Ministry.

3. At the parade Ayub Khan came in his six horse-drawn resplendent coach. Begum Ayub Khan had preceded him in a limousine. He inspected the parade in a jeep and waved to the crowd. There was some applause, but not quite spontaneous, as was observed by many.

4. The Reception was an austere affair where only non-alcoholic drinks and a few eatables were served. Austerity seems to be the pattern of a Pakistani official entertainment these days. As could be expected, there was quite a large number of defence personnel. Non-official attendance was, on the other hand, limited. Perhaps very few were invited. Among the old politicians who attended were: Khwaja Nazimuddin and Messrs Chundrigar, Amjad Ali, Fazlur Rahman and Hasan Mahmood (ex-Minister of West Pakistan). The President attended the function along with Begum Ayub Khan. He stayed for nearly an hour and moved about freely among the guests. Mr. Manzur Qadir was in an unusually subdued mood. President Ayub Khan made a brief address at the parade and in the evening broadcast a message to the nation (please see cutting). There was nothing new in either of these utterances. He has repeated that a Constitutional Commission will be appointed when the "mess" is cleared up and the development plans "get going". He has also promised that the draft Constitution will be put to the vote of the people in a "suitable manner". Speaking about foreign relations he has made pious observations about maintaining "good and friendly relations with our neighbours". His references to India and Afghanistan are couched in mild and friendly terms. For once, he has not used any strong or threatening language.

5. I enclose herewith a report by one of our officers on a talk he had with a close associate of Miss Jinnah. President Ayub Khan was apparently anxious that she should attend the Reception but she declined. I am told that she has not been attending such functions for some years.

6. According to this report, Miss Jinnah is not satisfied with the policy of the new regime. On the other hand, there are fresh rumours that one or two Muslim League politicians may be inducted into the Cabinet in the near future. The names of Chundrigar from West Pakistan and Nurul Amin from East Pakistan are mentioned. According to the same source, Chaudhry Mohd. Ali is not favoured since he had left the folds of the Muslim League.

7. Reports emanating from Lahore indicate that Daultana is trying to form some kind of a group which could be brought into action when occasion demands. This group is said to be against Khan Abdul Qayyum Khan and is doing its best to oust him from the ruling circle of the old Muslim League party. Daultana had, it will be recalled, declined the offer of High Commissionership in London. He is said to be biding his time.

With kindest regards

Yours sincerely,

(K.V. Padmanabhan)

Shri M.J. Desai, ICS, Commonwealth Secretary, Ministry of External Affairs, New Delhi.

SOURCE REPORT

One of our casual contacts, who is closely associated with Miss Jinnah, gave us to understand that the latter purposely did not attend the Pakistan Day Reception held on 23rd March, 1959, at the President’s House. By remaining conspicuously absent on this occasion, in spite of the fact that she was specially approached by an emissary of Ayub, she wanted Ayub to realize that she was by no means happy over his procrastination in associating politicians with the governance of the country. It was stated that Ayub had more often than not assured Miss Jinnah that he had no intention of sticking to power by himself or running the government on an emergency basis and that he was quite agreeable to the early introduction of a representative form of government in an acceptable manner.

2. Somehow Miss Jinnah had reason to feel that Ayub had already resiled from his earlier promise to usher in shortly a constituent assembly with the old provincial legislative assemblies constituting the electoral college. She also seems to think that while Ayub has of late started exploiting the name of Quaid-e-Azam, he has done nothing to uphold his (Jinnah’s) ideology of the two-nation theory. On the other hand by omitting the word “Islamic” from the “Islamic Republic of Pakistan”, Ayub has given enough proof, if that was wanted, of his pro-secular bias. She also appeared to be most disappointed with Ayub’s Republic Day broadcast and characterized it as most ambiguous one and deceitful. While she did not know precisely what type of constitution Ayub had in mind, she did not believe for a moment that it could be in any way Islamic of Jinnah’s concept. She had her own apprehensions about it and I thought that it would be nothing else but a device to ensure Ayub’s continuance as a dictator and had no doubt that the Constitution Commission, which is going to be set up, would be a hotchpotch selection of Ayub’s yes men.

3. According to the source, Miss Jinnah also could not understand how this proposed draft Constitution could be put to a referendum to those very people whom Ayub and his advisers have all along denounced as being incapable of taking a right decision to elect their representatives for want of proper education and political knowledge. Quite likely, the draft will be circulated to selected persons and their concurrence obtained under official pressure and no wonder that the unwanted politicians would have, by that time been either put behind the bars or else disqualified from taking part in such elections.

4. Miss Jinnah appeared to feel that while she was not particularly keen for the return of the discredited Muslim Leaguers, she would very much like to see a single, nationwide organization emerge so that the professional rivalry which had led to the political bankruptcy was eliminated as far as possible. She thought there was no dearth of un-controverted men to take the reigns of the government or to be associated at least for the time being with the government.

5. She also could not reconcile to the idea how a demand for plebiscite in Kashmir could be stepped up and made effective when such a concession was being denied to the Pakistan citizens themselves. She is thus feeling very sore about the way things are appearing in the country but does not propose to come out in open criticism unless she has consulted the Muslim League elders in this behalf.

Letter from the Indian Ambassador in Tehran T. N. Kaul to the Commonwealth Secretary M. J. Desai regarding some assessment of the political situation in Pakistan.

Tehran, March 31, 1959.

Ambassador of India
Tehran

No. AF-/295/26 31st March 1959

My dear Commonwealth Secretary,

I enclose a copy of a brief note recorded by the Third Secretary on his conversation with the First Secretary of the American Embassy here.

2. I had occasion to meet an old Pakistani friend of mine, Colonel Arif Khan, who is a member of the Boundary Commission – He was with me in Fategarh, U.P., in 1941. He is a Pathan from the NWFP and rather frank and outspoken. He knows Generals Thimmaya and Cariapa very well. I invited him to dinner alone and mention below some of the main points made by him:

(1) Pakistan cannot and will not go to war with India on any issue - not even on the Kashmir issue.

(2) The Canal Waters dispute is bound to be settled, but a settlement of the Kashmir dispute seems more difficult. Feelings in Pakistan about Kashmir are very strong. When I told him that feelings in India were even stronger and more justified and we would not give an inch on Kashmir, he did not argue further. He appeared to me to be less fanatic than most of the Pakistanis on the Kashmir issue.

(3) General Ayub Khan has made a good impression, but his success will depend on the implementation of the land, education and legal reforms and last, but not least, the economic reforms. He did not think that there was likely to be a change of Government or rift among the higher military set-up in Pakistan.

(4) When I asked him about Khan Abdul Ghaffar Khan, he said the Pathan leader had definitely intended to separate Pushtoonistan from Pakistan and was, therefore, not half as popular in Pakistan as before. He seemed to think that Khan Abdul Ghaffar Khan had not much of a future in Pakistan.
INFORMATION SERVICE OF INDIA, TEHRAN

I met Mr. John Bowling, First Secretary (Political) of the American Embassy yesterday at lunch. We were talking of today's political reporting by Missions as a source of information for the diplomatic historians of tomorrow. Somehow the conversation drifted to Pakistan affairs and Bowling told me that immediately after General Ayub's taking over charge of affairs the reports from the American Embassy in Karachi were rather pessimistic. It was felt that the stepping in of the army was, despite its being inevitable, a retrograde step. A little later, however, American reports from Karachi showed buoyancy as the Generals seemed to have taken control of affairs in a sober and constructive spirit. However, the American Embassy kept on wondering as to who was taking the political decisions for the military leaders, whom they did not credit with much thinking power or political acumen. Bowling added that he happened to know some of the Army Leaders now in charge of affairs since his assignment there from 1949 to 52. For example he said that General Musa was a close personal friend of his and while he credited Musa with sound commonsense and a refreshingly realistic approach to things, he could not believe Musa capable of politically mature decisions or farsightedness. He was therefore, himself quite agreeably surprised at some of the politically sound decisions made by the military regime in Pakistan. He said that while it was true that the military leaders of Pakistan were suspicious of the Civil Service he knew it for a fact that some of the senior Civil Servants of Pakistan were clever enough to make the Generals take correct decisions and at the same time to persuade them to think that these decisions were their own.

2. Lately, however, he said, a strange tone of apprehension had crept into the reports from their Embassy in Karachi. The promises made by the Military regime despite their trying their hardest, were not being fulfilled as speedily as the people would like. Therefore criticism of a present regime had started. It is interesting to note that this criticism is not the result of any relaxation of the Martial Law regulations but in spite of it. What is even worse, within the Army itself some younger officers who are hot-headed of the same type as ex-major General Akbar Khan had started talking loosely and critically about the present regime. If these younger elements within the Army try and organize themselves and generate and exploit the more popular criticism of the regime, it will be the beginning of the end of Pakistan. The Americans, he said, are convinced that the present regime is the last dam between Pakistan and complete chaos and ruination. He could not help adding that this would be a very dangerous development from India’s point of view too. He wanted me to say if I knew anything about this trend. I pleaded ignorance but promised to tell him if anything came to my notice.

For Ambassador's present information.

TOP SECRET

Karachi, April 8, 1959.

I had a talk lasting over an hour and a half with U.S. Ambassador Langley last evening. Langley said that his Deputy Chief of Mission would be leaving some time in June and be himself would be going in August, on the completion of his two years. He was prepared to have continued till the autumn but as a chain of postings was involved, he is being relieved earlier. His family is preceding him on July, the 11th. He hopes to get back to his farm in New Hampshire and to his newspaper and has no intention of taking another foreign assignment. Knight will be succeeded by William Hall, Deputy Assistant Secretary in the Treasury. The new Ambassador is likely to be “a strongly political” personality to balance his Deputy who is an economist. Langley said that his successor, whom he did not name, would arrive within a fortnight of his departure as it was not desirable to keep the post vacant for long. This confirms our impression that the premature recall of the Ambassador and his Deputy is an expression of the State Department’s displeasure of their understanding and handling of the situation in Pakistan and of Indo-Pakistan relations generally. Langley referred to his impending departure with a sense of relief and it was evident that he had not enjoyed this post for he added rather caustically that he had seen two Presidents and four Prime Ministers in Pakistan and that was more than enough for him. He is basically a somewhat reserved though an honest man; and the tortuous ways of Pakistani diplomacy seemed to have been too much for him. Knight, on the other hand is a little too clever and that seems to have been his undoing. From certain remarks which Langley made it seemed clear to me that he was taken by surprise by events in Pakistan and his judgment of the personalities and the situation here was somewhat variable and uneven. His rather straightforward approach could not keep pace with the twisted and complex characters and situations with which he has had to deal.

2. I spoke to Langley about my impressions of the East Pakistan situation and the steps which we were trying to take to evolve procedures for dealing with then. I was now awaiting the Government’s reactions to our suggestions; if we could evolve a common formula, the next thing would be to see that it was properly applied by Pakistan. Langley said that the repeated incidents could not be so lightly dismissed as the Pakistanis seem inclined to do since they had wide repercussions and could be dangerous. He had been urging restraint and would try to use his influence to bring about a more constructive approach. If demarcation could be hurried up, it would reduce the points of friction. He asked about the strength and composition of the EPR (East Pakistan Rifles) and our impressions seemed to tally, except that Langley thought that while the officers were largely westerners, the rank and file was not. I informed him that I understood that the intention was to have a mixed force by doubling its present strength of 3000 by local recruitment. The Pakistan frontier was in charge of a Para military force whereas ours was largely a local police force and it was thinly scattered in the proportion of one to four per mile of frontier.

3. We then discussed other aspects of Indo-Pakistan relations and I mentioned the efforts we had been making to develop trade. Langley said that there was no sense in Pakistan getting coal from China and Poland when it could be had from India and he asked me what we could import in return. He especially asked if we could take hides and skins and more jute. I gave him my impressions on the state of affairs at Narayangang which I had visited and the harassment to which the old Indian and other business houses were being subjected. Even British jute interests were pulling out. Langley said that he was aware of this and thought that some remedial action was overdue.

4. Langley then mentioned the unhelpful attitude of Pakistani officials who were hopelessly caught up in a rut. He mentioned that when his Mission undertakes any negotiations at secretariat level, there is all kinds of haggling, the main issues being obscured, but when he sees the Ministers, things are straightened out without much difficulty. He asked who was in charge of the India Desk at the Foreign Office and whether we were experiencing similar difficulties. Mazur Qadir was very badly served by his chief adviser Sikander Baig whose difficult attitude, he had heard, was due to the fact that he now regrets not having stayed on in India and suffers from some form of guilt complex. His heart is not in his job and both he and his wife are extremely unhappy. He hoped there would be an improvement when the new Foreign Secretary came and also if the India Desk got a new team. I told him that he could well imagine our difficulties with the present official set-up.

5. Langley said that the worst among the officials was Aziz Ahmed. Last year he had to pull him up severely in the presence of the then Prime Minister Noon and Finance Minister Rashid. The result was that Aziz Ahmed was demoted from the post of Cabinet Secretary which he took very such to heart and he went around blaming the USSR for it. Such is Aziz Ahmed's mentality. Langley exclaimed, adding that he is “an unreliable twister”. He tried to explain Aziz Ahmed’s psychology by referring to some remarks regarding his childhood, made by his wife to the effect that Aziz Ahmed as a boy had always strained himself to catch up with his two elder brothers but now, said she, “he is a bigger man than they are”. Aziz Ahmed was, in Langley’s opinion, quite unfitted to be the Head of the Civil Service and Deputy Chief Martial Law administrator; “he was carrying on a regular racket and taking the name of his President in vain” in dealing with Ministers and others. He is a highly ambitious and unscrupulous man and it is good that he has been shipped away but Langley greatly doubted his suitability for the Washington post. “He is too intense and has a one track mind”, said Langley and he hoped that he would not clash with the Indian Ambassador Chagla. Only an extrovert could get on with the Americans. Both Aziz Ahmed and his wife are the reverse of extroverts. Langley said that he thought Aziz Ahmed was not only strongly anti-Indian but also anti-American. His disappearance from the scene is definitely a demotion and it will however be good for Indo-Pakistan relations.

6. The conversation next turned to the President and his cabinet. Langley said that Ayub had undoubtedly grown in stature during the last few months; he showed an unexpected political maturity and restraint and had increased in self confidence. He mentioned that recently in Lahore, the press put a number of embarrassing questions to Ayub to which he gave very mature answers. Even in the handling of his Cabinet, Ayub was showing a great deal of horse sense. All this had come to him as a welcome surprise as he had initially doubted whether Ayub could hold the country together. There is nobody that one can think of who can take his place. Azam is in Langley’s opinion, just a “top Sergeant”, a description with which Ayub heartily agrees. Azam can get a job done if he is told what is to be done but he is completely devoid of ideas and imagination. Shaikh is “something of a mystery-man” while Burki is a genial enough person but fundamentally nothing more than a doctor. But Langley has been rather disappointed in Manzur Qadir, who though a likeable man is now beginning to play politics. Qadir is very much of a lawyer; he feels that he has been briefed to defend the present regime which he does “in all sorts of twisty ways”. Langley did not think that a man of Qadir’s background would have any basic sympathy with a regime like the present one but he misses no opportunity to justify it and some of his utterances have been rather disappointing. Qadir has no executive capacity; all his training and experience are confined to argumentation and not to execution. In Langley’s view, Shoaib is perhaps the best of the lot. He is a careful financier, perhaps too conservative, but he is a quiet and reliable man and can get things done. Bhutto is definitely a liability and is causing embarrassment to the regime. Ayub has the intention of getting him out but the difficulty is to find a replacement. Ayub therefore is wisely not hurrying to make any changes - since Pakistan has had enough already - but Bhutto has been thoroughly sat upon by his colleagues, and so has been rendered ineffective. But he is bound to go before long. As for the other Ministers, and here Langley shrugged his shoulders, they count for nothing at all.

7. I was rather surprised at this very outspoken and detailed estimate made by Langley of Ayub and his colleagues and I got the impression that Langley had discussed his impressions of the Ministers with Ayub who agreed with his views. These are exactly the estimates that we have made and I felt encouraged to find collaboration from one who is obviously in the know.

8. Describing the present regime as “dictatorship by consent”. Langley said that Ayub, though shrewd and sober, is rather vain and ambitious. Langley was sure that he intended to continue in office for another 15 years or so. Ayub has prepared a top secret memorandum regarding his plans to change the character of the regime which he has shared only with his military colleagues and perhaps also with Qadir. In answer to a direct question, Langley said that he had seen the document which was eloquent of Ayub’s own character. It began by saying that Ayub would like to become internationally known and to be to Pakistan what Nehru is to India. However, Langley added, “Nehru is a very great man with high intellectual and moral qualities”, but Ayub is probably the best that Pakistan has got. It is Ayub’s intention to have some kind of a Presidential constitution unlike what India is developing - where supreme power would rest with the President. Ayub’s ideas in the matter are somewhat original but they might work.

9. He felt that Ayub took a realistic view of Indo-Pakistan relations and that the situation would improve with his handling. As the background is too recent and although Ayub is a dictator, he cannot move too fast. At present he was too absorbed in dealing with Pakistan’s own obstinate problems. I asked if Ayub realized that at every step and in every sphere those problems were affected by Indo-Pakistan relations and that without putting those relations on a normal basis it would be difficult for Ayub to deal with his problems. Langley agreed that that was the case and he thought that Ayub realised it too, but he had to carry the people, who had been conditioned in a different way with him. So far as the USA was concerned, Langley said, it would be easier to deal with Ayub than with the previous Prime Ministers who occasionally were very difficult although Iskander Mirza was not.

10. In conclusion, Langley said that the USA had always been urging Pakistan to come to settlement with India and he would continue to exercise whatever influence he had in this direction. Langley said that it was at his instance that Pakistan had provided transit facilities, etc. to Afghanistan. He said that the Canal waters question now seemed within sight of a settlement. He appreciated the point which I raised regarding the importance of the time factor and the question of costs, adding that he had no doubt that Mr. Black (World Bank President) would take care of the financial aspect. The interests of the two countries were complementary and not contradictory. He hoped that the present difficulties would be sorted out step by step, given a little good-will on both sides.

11. Langley, who is normally a somewhat reticent man, seemed to have unburdened himself of all the impressions which he had gathered during his tenure of office in Pakistan. He spoke frankly and in a straightforward manner and gave me a deeper insight into the workings of his mind in relation to his functions here which I had not tried to get or had even expected.

12. The talk clearly reveals the key position which the U.S. Embassy occupies here, and its all-pervading influence, even in matters of purely domestic concern. It is amazing that a foreign envoy can bring about changes even among civil servants, as in the case of Aziz Ahmad.

Letter from High Commissioner Rajeshwar Dayal to the Commonwealth Secretary M. J. Desai regarding shooting down of Indian Air Force Canberra.

Karachi, May 1, 1959.

High Commissioner for India
Karachi

No. HC/212/59 May 1, 1959/ Vaisakha 11, 1881 Saka

My dear C.S.,

Last evening, at the Japanese reception in honour of the Emperor’s birthday, I met President Ayub Khan who greeted me with his usual warmth. He asked how I was and how things were getting on. I replied that I was all right but to my regret, the shot, which brought down our Canberra*, had brought down a great deal else with it besides. Ayub replied, “I know. It was most unfortunate-most unfortunate.” He said that he had not lost heart or faith and that he is determined to keep on trying to bring about a new approach and a change of heart. He added that he would like to assure me, on the word of a soldier, that he sincerely meant what he said. At the same time he would ask me to keep on trying. I replied that that had been my endeavour throughout, but feelings had been greatly aroused in India over the incident and incalculable harm had been done to our relations. Ayub said that Pakistani opinion had also been agitated; adding that a few days ago a Pakistani, passenger aircraft on its way to East Pakistan had been buzzed by an Indian fighter plane. I told him that I had heard nothing about this, but there have been a great many violations of our air space about which, we were greatly concerned. Ayub replied, “We must change all this. We should no longer keep on looking inwards and at each other, but outwards, to face the dangers from the north.” At this point the Foreign Minister, Manzur Qadir, interrupted to say that the guests were waiting for the President to leave before they could do the same. I thereupon took leave of the President.

2. I do not know how far the report about a Pakistani civil aircraft being buzzed over Indian territory is correct; but if it is, it should bring home forcefully to the trigger-happy Pakistanis the awkward fact of Pakistan’s geography and thus induce a certain measure of restraint on their actions.

3. At the same party, various other ministers including Generals Shaikh and Burki, greeted me. The gist of their talk was that we should allow bygones to be bygones. I made it clear that the damage done to our relations could not be so easily repaired without proper amends.

4. Manzur Qadir, recently returned from his wanderings in South East Asia, then came up to me saying that he was hoping to have a long talk with me. I replied that I had already taken up a great deal of his time and I did not wish to trouble him unless there was something specific to discuss. He replied that our talks had been most valuable and he would like to continue them. I repeated to him what I had told the President and Qadir replied, “I know. We have to start again from scratch. The edifice that we had so patiently been building up, has suddenly crashed to the ground. It will be a little more difficult now, but we must start again.” I pointed to the vicious tone of the Press and Pakistan Radio’s poisonous broadcasts. Qadir said that he was unhappy to have noted the reversion to the old pattern and added that he was determined to put things right again. He added, “When my back was turned for a few weeks, they reverted to their old tricks, but I am going to put my foot down.” Qadir said that he would telephone me one of these days to come over for a discussion to take stock of the position.

5. It is evident that the people at the top are not happy over the Canberra incident, and its aftermath, although they have perforce to back up their erring pilot and defend his action to the end. But they are not so blind as not to realize the great harm that this incident has done, not only to their relations with India, but also to their international reputation. The military regime is under trial in the eyes of the world and its one stock-in-trade is to depict itself as a benevolent, law abiding regime, with a greater sense of responsibility than its predecessors. The use of force against an unarmed plane of a neighbouring country has, therefore, not redounded to its international reputation. The Australian High Commissioner Cutler told me that he had a “none too friendly” interview with Mazur Qadir who was greatly concerned about the highly critical comments in the Australian Press about the shooting down of the Canberra. Qadir tried vainly to plead the Pakistani case, but Cutler refused to budge from his position that whatever may have been the circumstances, the shooting down of the plane of a fellow-member of the commonwealth was absolutely indefensible.

6. Responsible Pakistanis also are most distressed over the Canberra incident as they were beginning to hope that relations with India would improve. They greatly regret the attitude of the lunatic fringe in acclaiming the Sabre pilots as heroes, who should, instead, have been cashiered. In this connection, a report from a reliable source will be of interest. The film of the shooting, apparently taken by the Sabre jet, indicates that no warning whatsoever was given to the Canberra and that indiscriminate firing was resorted to. The fact that the Canberra was hit was not evidence of good marksmanship but rather of wild and frenzied shooting.

7. There is no doubt that the Americans have been urging caution on the Pakistanis in the use of their gifted war material. The fact has not been lost on them that the use of an American plane in such a manner has fully justified India's earlier protests and that this is not likely to pass unnoticed by Asian and world public opinion. The result is that the Americans are going to tighten their control over the handling and use of the war material supplied by them, and they will insist on a greater degree of supervision, thus reducing Pakistan's possibility of taking independent action. This aspect of the matter is also regarded by responsible Pakistani opinion with misgiving, as they see the American octopus spreading its tentacles still more tightly around this country. And tighter control is not likely to be confined to military matters.

8. You will recall my report of my long talk with Langley of the 12th April, when he had spared no words in criticizing Manzur Qadir. Now the latest information is that Qadir will be leaving the Foreign Office to take up the law portfolio. While it is said that Qadir himself would like this transition because of his preoccupation with the Constitution and his reputed flair for drafting, it is clear evidence of his fall from grace. The difficulty will be to find a successor and it is thought that some career man - who is yet to be selected - will be given the job. The position of Qadir within the Cabinet seems to have weakened, and opposition in the Cabinet is building up against him; his three weeks' absence has only worsened his position while the military members have been forging ahead. Only Shoaib seems to be holding his ground. As regards foreign affairs, it is said that since the policy is decided at the top, the foreign Minister is, at best, merely its executant. Therefore, an official functionary could very well hold charge of the Foreign Office. Qadir's likely departure from the Foreign Office is to be regretted, for whatever his faults and failings, and however mistaken his advocacy, he was at least a man of goodwill and not un-amenable to reason, and one with whom it was possible to argue. An official functionary would be entirely lacking in initiative and unable to take decisions and things might revert to the pattern when M.S.A. Baig was all-in-all at the Foreign Office.

9. An example of the extent of American interference in, and control of, the inner workings of this country is provided by a recent conversation with a Mr. Watson, who is supposedly running an organization known as "the Friends of the Middle East", which is really a cover job for the local representative of the Central Intelligence Agency. This gentleman mentioning the scathing editorial in the Manchester Guardian about the suppression of the Pakistan Times observed that the only answer would be to have a really independent editor to run the paper, and he mentioned Mr. Frank Moraes name in this connection. He said that he would talk to "Manzur" and "Habib" (the Information Minister) and get them to agree, but if they were afraid to take a decision on such a delicate and far-reaching matter, he was quite prepared to take it up with "Ayub". I asked him if he was aware of the considerable risks that were involved as Moraes was not a hack who would be prepared to toe a particular line merely for the sake of pecuniary advantage. Watson remarked that he knew of the dangers and difficulties, but he thought that a man of Moraes' "international repute" would give respectability to the action that had been taken against the Pakistan Times. Watson did not deny that the so-called Bureau of National Reconstruction would have liked to make use of the paper for its own ends; he admitted that "thought control" was part of the likely functions or the Bureau. He added, however, that the Bureau was still rather ineffective, "but six months later things might be different". Watson went on to say that the Americans were deeply committed in Pakistan, which was a test case whereby their policies would be judged in the whole of Asia and beyond and it was essential for them to ensure that the country was not again derailed. He said he was rather worried by developments and could not quite foresee how things would shape. He mentioned with some alarm the state of panic which prevailed among the Parsis since the recent arrest of a prominent and wealthy member of that community. The Bohras and Memons too were jittery since the loss of their export-import business.

10. In the light of this strange conversation, today's news that S.M. Ikram, the Information Secretary, has been thrown out and that Brigadier F.R. Khan, the head of the Bureau of National Reconstruction, is to take his place, assumes an added and sinister significance. As I have previously reported, this organization may well become another Gestapo. General Azam Khan is now touring West Germany and visiting refugee camps, where he is no doubt being regaled with anti-Communist stories. The impressions which he gathers and the lessons which he learns in the course of his peregrinations will no doubt be used in developing the activity of the Bureau of Rational Reconstruction.

11. It is the view of several of my discerning colleagues here, which I share, that Pakistan may be moving towards some form of Fascism. All the elements are there - absolute and unfettered power, a tightly controlled Press, the absence of any kind of political activity, the overthrow of the rule of law, the denial of the rights of the citizens, combined with an all-powerful executive and an ever-growing military machine. The system of education is under revision in directions which may well be foreseen. The development of various types of Para-military organizations is within the realm of possibility. There is a spirit of chauvinism in the air and ministers have been heard to talk about the "4000-year old history" of Pakistan and how little it has to learn from other countries. Shaikh has been talking about eliminating Communism, root and branch, by which he no doubt means all liberal thought and tendencies. However indistinct may be the outlines of the new philosophy which the regime is trying to develop, it has an unsustainable likeness to the early beginnings of Fascism. The exhortations towards more austere living, the much publicized solicitude for the masses, the torrent of pronouncements and proclamations, the single-track minds and slogan-mongering, are all reminiscent of the attributes of a Fascist dictatorship.
This is a sinister development which will need constant watchfulness and vigilance.

With kindest regards.

Yours sincerely

0265. LETTER

SECRET

Letter from Commonwealth Secretary M. J. Desai to High Commissioner Rajeshwar Dayal regarding buzzing of a Pakistani plane over Indian territory.

New Delhi, May 2, 1959.

D.O. No. 378 /CS/59 May 2, 1959/ Vaisakha 12, 1881(Saka)

My dear Dayal,

Thank you for year letter No. HC/212/59 dated 1st May.

2. I am showing the letter to PM who has just returned from tour this morning.

3. The story about the buzzing of the Pakistani passenger aircraft by Indian fighter plane is true to a certain extent. Our Observers on the ground saw a plane which, they felt, was flying outside the corridor prescribed and an IAF fighter plane did go up to check up the course of the flight of the P.I.A. plane.
No pressure of any kind, however, was brought upon the P.I.A. plane. As you know our fighter planes have guns in position but these guns are never loaded.
There are strict instructions on this subject.

4. I agree with you that the military regime in Pakistan is well on the way to Fascism. Our American friends and others do not seem to see the obvious danger despite the experience of East Germany and Iraq. The Russians are more practical and far-sighted and while sending strong notes to Pakistan must be chuckling inwardly at the first stage is the transition from so-called democracy of the western type to a well controlled People’s democracy.

With kind regards,

Yours sincerely

Shri R. Dayal,
High Commissioner for India
Karachi

0266. Statement by the Deputy Minister of External Affairs Mrs. Lakshmi Menon in the Rajya Sabha on the shooting down of IAF Canberra aircraft by Pakistan.

New Delhi, May 6, 1959.

In a note dated 11th April, 1959, the Pakistan High Commission in New Delhi alleged 2 violations of Pakistan air space by Indian Air Force Canberra bombers at 0730 hours and 0930 hours respectively on the 10th April. In regard to the first allegation it was stated that Pakistan Air Force interceptors approached “a twin engine jet aircraft” while it was heading for Rawalpindi, and later instructed the pilot to accompany them and land; that the aircraft ignored these instructions and “maneuvered as if about to indulge in hostility against the interceptors”; that one of the interceptors fired a warning burst of tracer bullets, but that the aircraft still continued maneuvering in a hostile manner; and that in the action that followed the aircraft was shot down and that from the wreckage it had been identified as an I.A.F. Canberra bomber.

In a not sent to the Pakistan Government by the India High Commission in Karachi on April 30, the Government of India have lodged an emphatic protest against the hostile act of the Pakistani authorities in shooting down an unarmed
Canberra aircraft of the Indian Air Force which had strayed into Pakistan territory by navigational error on the 10th April, and in circumstances which prove conclusively that the act was planned and pre-meditated. In this note full details were given of the circumstances attending the incident proving beyond any doubt that no warning was given to the aircraft before it was shot down; that this armed aircraft could not by any stretch of imagination be said to have taken any hostile action against the Pakistani interceptors; that the Pakistan authorities were in no doubt at the time of shooting down that the aircraft belonged to the Indian Air Force; and that the alleged confessions by the Indian airmen were fabricated so as to mislead public opinion both at home and abroad.

It was also pointed out that Pakistan's action was in flagrant violation of all norms of international behavior as also a deliberate breach of reciprocity of relations in this regard between Pakistan and India.

The Government of India have pointed out that this hostile act has done incalculable harm to good neighbourly relations between India and Pakistan and have pressed upon the Government of Pakistan the urgency of taking immediately all remedial measures necessary to undo the harm done, to express their regret for this act of grievous injury and to agree to the payment of full compensation for the loss of the aircraft and for the injuries sustained by the Indian airmen.

The Government of Pakistan was also informed that their allegation about a second I.A.F. Canberra aircraft has been thoroughly investigated and found to be utterly groundless.

Letter from the High Commissioner Rajeshwar Dayal to the Commonwealth Secretary regarding his meeting with the Chief Secretary of East Pakistan.

High Commissioner for India
Karachi

No. HC/236/59 May 27, 1959/ Jyaistha 6, 1881 Saka

My dear C.S.,

I saw Chief Secretary Afzar, accompanied by the Deputy High Commissioner, on May 9. Afzar hails from East U.P. and was nominated to the ICS. We had our probation together at Oxford. Afzar belongs to the Bihar and Orissa cadre and is not a particularly distinguished official. He also suffers from all kinds of complexes.

2. Just returned from the high-level conference at Karachi, where he had accompanied the Governor, Afzar began by saying that there should be a new approach to our mutual problems. We should eliminate all sorts of mutual irritants to begin with, leaving larger issues like the Canal Waters question, Kashmir, and minority problems for later settlement. Prospects for agreement would improve if minor matters were to be out of the way. This new approach should be at the highest level, finding reflection all the way down.

3. Afzar expressed concern regarding the situation in West Bengal and the growth of Communist influence there, which was having its inevitable impact on East Pakistan. Indeed, developments in the two Bengals could not be divorced from each other. I corrected Afzar’s impressions and told him that we could take care of the situation in West Bengal, whatever it was, and it was for his Government to look after the affairs of East Pakistan.

4. Afzar went on to say that Pakistan now had a personality who is in a position to take decisions, unlike in the past, without having to worry about public opinion, but in India the press, Parliament and public opinion must be taken into account and so the task there was more difficult. But the Prime Minister is an outstanding personality and these two personalities, between them, could settle the differences. Otherwise matters would keep on festering and future prospects would be gloomy.

5. The new approach should be aimed at exploring points of agreement and achieving the greatest common measure of understanding, while there must be an avoidance of post mortems and bickering. Regular meetings at Chief Secretaries’ level were suggested. An assessment should be made of all the outstanding disputes by both sides and the easier problems should be taken up first in a spirit of mutual accommodation.

6. Afzar said that he was aware that Berubari had caused us difficulties and embarrassment, but he could foresee a situation arising when Pakistan would be willing to forego its claim in order to smoothen matters for India. That should be the spirit which should animate both sides, rather than one of scoring points off each other and insisting on one’s pound of flesh. Afzar recounted his own experience in dealing with S.N. Ray and how he was able to reach agreements, unlike the time when Aziz Ahmed was Chief Secretary. Afzar said that if the aim was to score points, the Indians would always beat them at the game.

7. While the Press in Pakistan was controlled, it might help to improve the tone of the Indian Press if visits by Indian correspondents to East Pakistan could be arranged. Afzar personally would favour such a course, as the correspondents could see for themselves the condition of the minority community, and if they noticed any difficulties or disabilities, they could point them out and make the East Pakistan authorities “start thinking”. This would also react favourably on the position of the minorities in India. At this point I intervened to disabuse Afzar of the misconception which he seemed to be harbouring, regarding the recent communal disturbances in some parts of India. He did not attempt to contest my arguments. In reply to my question, Afzar said that officials belonging to the minority community had mostly opted for India. There was however a proposal to reserve 23 per cent of the posts for them in Government service. He added that there was one District Magistrate, some Inspector’s of Police and Sub-Inspectors, Civil Surgeons, Army Doctors and “some in the Navy” from the minority community.

8. The Chief Secretaries’ conference could discuss matters such as border incidents, border trade, fishing problems, river navigation, etc. Afzar said that the position in the Patharia area was obscure and asked why not have demarcation along the existing line of possession. I pointed out that this must be linked to the Pakistani withdrawal from Tukergram. Afzar could not recollect that the Nehru-Noon agreement provided for such a link up of the two matters and suggested demarcation on the basis of de facto possession everywhere until formal demarcation could be completed. Afzar was not in favour of the revival of the Indo-Pakistan Information Consultative Committee, as this would only lead to mutual bickering.

9. Financial problems of one kind or another could also be tackled at the Chief Secretaries’ conference.

10. Afzar suggested that it might be useful to have a branch in the Foreign Offices of the two countries devoting itself solely to finding solutions to Indo-Pakistan problems, exploring where irritants could be removed and where mutual accommodation was possible. The exchange of notes and protests was a fruitless exercise. If any officials were found to be uncooperative, they should be transferred.

11. As regards border incidents, the proposal to have ground rules was discussed, to which Afzar agreed in principle. The details could be worked out at the Chief Secretaries’ conference.

12. In conclusion, Afzar spoke of the waste of energies on both sides which was causing more harm to Pakistan, the smaller country. He appealed for an end to the “cold war” between our two countries and for the opening of a new chapter in our relations.

13. General Umarao Khan, whom I saw earlier, also spoke about the imperative need to stop the border incidents and — no doubt under the inspiration of General Sheikh - raised the question of working out common ground rules. He also spoke about the security of the minorities in both countries contributing to better mutual relations.

14. Emphasizing the need for a new approach, he said that the army authorities approached the problems in a direct fashion. The army was in a position to have its orders implemented and Ayub can deliver the goods. He emphasized the need for restraint in the Press and for improving the general atmosphere.

15. These conversations undoubtedly reflect the new policy line on Indo-Pakistan problems, the possibility of an accord on the Canal Waters question should provide a favourable opportunity to put it to the test. Afzar’s presentation, which was previously somewhat cantankerous and argumentative, now exhibited a greater sense of realism and a spirit of accommodation. He has been the most negative element hitherto, and if he has really changed his tune, we may expect less stonewalling from him. I propose to take up the question of holding a Chief Secretaries’ conference with the authorities in Karachi as soon as possible. I have already spoken about it to the President.

With kind regards,

Yours sincerely,

Note Verbale from the Indian High Commission in Pakistan to the Pakistan Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Commonwealth Relations regarding agreements between India and Pakistan on press code.

Karachi, June 16, 1959.

High Commissioner for India
Karachi

No. F. 5 (14)/58-29/6
Karachi, June 16, 1959

The High Commission of India presents its compliments to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Commonwealth Relations and has the honour to refer to the Ministry’s Note No.1 (I)—14/48/56 of 3rd January, 1959. The High Commission has been instructed to state that the Government of India note with concern that notwithstanding the explanation in detail of the terms of the various agreements between the Government of India and the Government of Pakistan on the subject of propaganda against each other, set out in the High Commission’s Note No. F.5 (2)/57—Genl. of 15th January, 1958, the Government of Pakistan have continued to take the view that the agreements in question are not applicable to matters in dispute between the two Governments, and that such applicability is a matter of ‘interpretation’ of the Government of India. The Ministry have taken a stand on part of the agreement reached at the IPICC meeting held on the 1st and 2nd August, 1948. The High Commission would wish to state that it is not a matter of ‘interpretation’ to point out, in the first place, that this very agreement, which envisaged the right of either Government to give publicity to its own point of view in matters of dispute between the two Governments and of treating reliable news reports and statements of important persons on their news value, contained a proviso that there was to be no mudslinging and that good taste and decorum were to be observed. Secondly, that on a review of the working of the arrangements, the IPICC at its later meeting on 8th and 9th March 1951, clarified the position as to propaganda on questions in dispute between the two Governments as follows:

"The Joint Press Committee feels that even if some of the problems take time to resolve, comments in newspapers should be confined strictly to the merits of the problems or problems in dispute, and it should in no case be made the basis of a general attack against the two Governments or a personal, contumacious, or scurrilous, attack against the respected leaders of either country, or the religion, culture and faith of the people of both countries",

“It was necessary to reiterate the principles; in particular, it was necessary to enjoin upon the Press that comments on problems in dispute between India and Pakistan should be discussed on their merits without introduction of matters arousing communal passion, or attacking the territorial integrity of either country, or advocating war or creating a war psychosis, and should not be made the basis of contumacious or scurrilous attacks against the religion, culture, and faith of the people of either country or personal attacks against their respected leaders”.

2. The obligations in respect of propaganda on disputed matters undertaken by the two Governments by virtue of these agreements are explicit and require no ‘interpretation’. Mud-slinging is to be avoided, and good taste and decorum are to be observed; questions in dispute are to be discussed on merits without introducing matters arousing communal passion or attacking the territorial integrity of either country, or advocating war, or without being made the basis of contumacious or scurrilous attacks against the religion, culture and faith of the people of either country or personal attacks against their respected leaders.

3. The High Commission would point out that if these agreements are to be ‘interpreted; as has been done by the Government of Pakistan, as enabling that Government to permit scurrilous propaganda against India and its leaders whether the writings bear any real or only a fanciful connection with matters in dispute as exemplified in recent cases brought to the notice of the Pakistan Government, this can only be in deliberate disregard of the provisions of the agreement reached at the IPICC meeting in August 1949 and subsequent agreements as set out above. It has in any case nothing to do with any ‘interpretation’ by the Government of India, which, having regard to the very terms of the agreements, is superfluous.

4. Quite apart from the nature of the exact terms of these agreements, it is inconceivable that agreements on propaganda should not provide adequately for propaganda on disputed matters, since it is precisely propaganda on these subjects that can be expected to constitute ground fertile for excesses, leading to ill-feeling and tension between the two countries. If the agreements reached between the Governments are to be regarded in the light suggested by the Government of Pakistan, there would be no escape from the conclusion that they do not touch upon the essence of the problem, and were therefore futile ab initio. The absurdity of such a conclusion is so patent that it is not necessary to pursue the reasoning further.

5. The High Commission would also bring to notice that the attitude of the Pakistani authorities in previous instances conformed to a correct understanding of the agreements as explained above, and that Indian authorities have been informed in several cases of corrective action on Pakistani newspapers taken by Pakistani authorities on account of writings objectionable in the light of these agreements. A few examples are cited in the enclosure to this Note.

6. The foregoing makes it clear that the present attitude of the Government of Pakistan to these agreements is tantamount to a unilateral repudiation of these agreements, and is also not in keeping with its own earlier view in the matter. As stated in the High Commission’s Note No. 52/57 – Genl. of 15.1.1958, it is also, so far as the Kashmir question is concerned, a breach of the Security Council’s resolution dated 17th January, 1948.

7. As regards the various references to Kashmir made in para 2 of the Ministry’s Note under reply, India’s complaint against Pakistan aggression on the Indian Union territory of Kashmir is pending before the Security Council, and the present is hardly the occasion for dealing with the matter.

8. The High Commission expresses the hope that the Government of Pakistan will, in the light of the foregoing, reconsider their position as regards the agreements. The High Commission requests that they may be favoured with an early reply, so as to enable the Government of India to draw the necessary conclusions regarding the present status of these agreements.

9. The High Commission takes this opportunity to renew to the Ministry the assurances of its highest consideration.

The Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Commonwealth Relations, Government of Pakistan, Karachi.

My dear Commonwealth Secretary,

The Raja of Mahmoodabad who a big taluqdar in the district of Sitapur, U.P., and migrated to Pakistan at the time of partition was in Tehran recently. He told our Press Attaché, V.A. Kidwai, whom he knew well before that he would like to see me on some important matter. I knew the Raja slightly when I first joined service in Sitapur in U.P, I mention below in brief the main points made by the Raja:

1. At the time of partition he was a fanatic Muslim and believed that only Muslims had the right to exist in the world. Later on, as a result of his travels, he came to the conclusion that the essentials of all religions are the same while religious dogmas and priesthood are the bane of all religions. He therefore started taking interest in the settlement of Indo-Pakistan disputes.

2. He told me he had met Panditji sometime ago and explained to him the various possibilities of a settlement of all Indo-Pakistan disputes. He had similarly spoken to the Pakistan authorities very frequently on the subject. According to him, the main obstacle in the mind of Panditji was that there was no authority in Pakistan who could deliver the goods. This difficulty had now been overcome as any decision of the present Government of Pakistan would not be questioned by the people. He admitted the present Government was a military dictatorship and said it came to power as a result of a coup d'état and not a revolution; all the same it was better than any previous government and in a position to deliver the goods.

3. The refugee question and the Canal Water dispute were almost solved and the main stumbling block in Indo-Pakistan relations was the Kashmir dispute. The present stalemate could not last for long. It had either to be settled peacefully or by war; even a settlement by war one way or the other would be better than the present stalemate, otherwise the danger was that Kashmir would become another Kerala and Communism might spread in both parts of Kashmir -- the Indian side and the Pakistan side.
(4) When I asked him on what basis the Kashmir dispute could be solved, he said, the first essential was to create an atmosphere of peace and goodwill between the two countries. For this purpose a meeting between top-men on both sides and frequent exchanges of leaders of various cultural, sports and other circles could help. He mentioned that during the time when Gaznafar Ali Khan was Pakistan's High Commissioner in Delhi, relations between the two countries were better and the atmosphere was more friendly.

(5) I told him that India had done everything to create a good atmosphere, but it was the Pakistan press and the bellicose statements of important Pakistan leaders including General Ayub, the shooting down of the Indian Canberra, the frequent violation of the Indian border etc., that were spoiling the atmosphere. I asked him again what concrete steps, apart from the creation of a better atmosphere, he had in mind about the solution of the Kashmir dispute. He replied that in his opinion some kind of a plebiscite should be held under which an option should be given to the people of Kashmir to decide whether they wanted to accede to India, Pakistan or remain independent. Even if Kashmir decided to become independent it would have to remain in friendly alliance with both India and Pakistan both of which could guarantee its integrity. This might lead to a joint policy for the defence of the whole sub-continent. (He mentioned that Dr Syed Mahmoud, ex-Minister of State in the Ministry of External Affairs, had come to see him in Pakistan sometime ago and had made proposals in this direction. He was somewhat vague about the nature of these proposals and said they related to joint defence).

(6) I told him that legally and constitutionally Pakistan had no locus standi in Kashmir apart from that of an aggressor and it hardly lay in the mouth of Pakistan to ask for a plebiscite in Kashmir when they themselves had not had proper elections so far. Apart from legal and constitutional considerations even from the practical point of view a plebiscite was unthinkable after the lapse of 12 years. Whatever the result of the plebiscite, neither India nor Pakistan could afford to upset the existing pattern that had been established. The repercussions of any such upset would be disastrous for both.

(7) The Raja then mooted the idea of some kind of a confederation as was being proposed between the two parts in Germany and Viet Nam. I told him that I had no authority to talk on behalf of Government but to my mind it appeared a theoretical solution which would perhaps not be possible to implement in practice. If, however, the Government of Pakistan was serious about this proposal they could say so. He immediately replied that he was not speaking for the Government of Pakistan but only for himself.

2. In the end I told him that while some years ago it might have been possible to arrive at a solution on the basis of the existing cease fire line, Pakistan had unwisely rejected that possibility. He showed some interest and said, if Government of India still believed in this possibility it would be desirable for them to make such a proposal to Pakistan directly or indirectly, I asked him if Pakistan was prepared to accept such a proposal, why did not they suggest it directly or indirectly. He kept quiet and then changed the topic.

3. Among other things he revealed that the present purge of high civilian officers in Pakistan was aimed at ousting those who had been in league with Suhrawardy and other political leaders. He predicted there would be a similar purge in the military set up also but opined that Ayub’s position would become stronger rather than weaker as a result of these purges.

4. My general impression was that although the Raja was speaking entirely for himself he may have been asked by the Pakistan Government to sound various possibilities of a solution of the Kashmir dispute. I suggested to him that he should talk things over with the Pakistan Government first, then if they had any concrete proposals to make he might go to Delhi to discuss them. He said he was hoping to go to Delhi after about two months’ time to see Panditji. He added that he was leaving for Meshed the next day and would see me on his way back after ten or fifteen days.

5. I should be grateful to know whether you wish me to sound the Raja further or merely to listen to what he has to say.

With kindest regards,

Yours sincerely

No. 229. (First of two parts) July 9, 1959

PRIME MINISTER from RAJESHWAR DAYAL. Personal.
1. I have just called at the Foreign Office in response to IKRAMULLAH’s urgent request. IKRAMULLAH said he wished to tell me about a proposition which he and MANZUR QADIR had been discussing regarding possibility of President AYUB KHAN making a brief halt at Delhi in order to pay a courtesy call on you when he visits Dacca towards the end of this month. IKRAMULLAH immediately thereafter took me to QADIR who explained his ideas more fully.

2. QADIR said that the President was sincerely anxious to develop good relations with India and had for sometime been considering the possibility of meeting the Prime Minister and had asked Qadir to suggest a suitable opportunity. I had occurred to QADIR and IKRAMULLAH that such an opportunity could be provided by a stopover at Delhi to enable Prime Minister and President to meet. QADIR said the President was most anxious to make a gesture of friendliness, which he hoped would pave the way for better relations. QADIR said that he had not yet mentioned this idea to the President, but he was certain that he would agree to anything that was arranged in view of his anxiety to meet the Prime Minister. The visit could be in the nature of a courtesy call.

3. I said the question of timing was an important one, and I mentioned the recrudescence of border incidents and the recent unfortunate statement by the President. QADIR explained that the President had to make it for internal consumption as he could not entirely break away from public sentiments in the matter, but he thought that fewer statements were now being made and their tone also was more moderate. I expressed a different view, but QADIR insisted that a direct meeting would.

Your telegram No. 229 has reached me in Simla.

President AYUB KHAN’s visit to Delhi, however brief and casual, would naturally lead to a great deal of surmise. You have yourself pointed out some of the difficulties including that of timing. Lok Sabha is meeting on August 3rd and Members will probably demand full statement and explanations. However, as you say, we cannot refuse a request by him to pay a courtesy call. But it would have to be made clear that initiative came from him for such a visit.

My own programme is as follows: Return to Delhi 19th July, leave Delhi early morning on 23rd July for 3 day tour in Andhra Pradesh, then probably 3 days in Mysore for Conferences on Community Development and Co-operation. Thus, I am likely to be away from Delhi from 23rd to 29th after-noon.

* Meanwhile the President postponed his visit to East Pakistan and therefore the idea of stop over in Delhi got also dropped.

No. HC/35/TS/59. 15th July, 1959

My dear Prime Minister,

Following the sudden and unexpected proposal made by Foreign Minister Qadir, backed by Ikramullah, on July 9, regarding President Ayub Khan’s desire to pay a brief courtesy call on you during his proposed visit to East Pakistan towards the end of this month, I saw Ikramullah at his residence on the evening of 13th July. Both Qadir and Ikramullah had asked me to give careful thought to the matter and to obtain our preliminary reactions as soon as possible.

2. When I saw Ikramullah, I had the benefit of your reply to my telegram of the 9th July and my talk was on its basis, without disclosing the source. Ikramullah said that he had given the matter very careful thought over the week-end in the light of the points which I had raised and he was still convinced that a direct meeting would do nothing but good. If it caused any embarrassment to us it was a different matter. He said that after Liaquat Ali Khan, there was now someone in Pakistan who could take decisions and who had the authority to implement them; now therefore was the time to make a real effort to solve some of our mutual problems. He recalled that in the time of Liaquat Ali Khan there was frequent correspondence between the two Prime Ministers and these contacts were reflected at other levels also. Now, however, there was a comparative absence of direct contacts and problems frequently assumed large proportions because of this unfortunate circumstance. Of great importance was the need to improve the general atmosphere and in this context, the question of personalities was relevant. He hoped that once the ice was broken, the way would be opened for future exchange.

3. As regards the date of the meeting, in the light of the Prime Minister’s programme, it could be on the President’s return journey, subject to the Prime minister’s convenience. He wondered however, whether there would be any harm if it fell during the session of the Indian Parliament. He thought that what the President had in mind was a meeting at the airport, which would be free from protocol; otherwise, a call on the President of India would become necessary and the informal nature of the visit would no longer be possible. He added that he would have a further word with Qadir, who would also like to see.

4. I called at the Foreign Office yesterday and was taken to see Qadir by Ikramullah. Qadir said that he had a further talk with Ikramullah and he felt reinforced in his view that it would be a very good thing if the proposed meeting could be arranged. He appreciated the point that some statement and explanation in Parliament would be necessary. He did not wish to suggest that the correct facts should not be disclosed, viz. that the initiative had come from the Pakistan Government for the courtesy visit in order to enable the President and the Prime Minister to make each other’s acquaintance. Qadir added that in fact, Pakistan would welcome a statement to the effect that it had made such a gesture. As some preliminary preparations would be necessary, the fact that the visit was to take place would become known and it could not be kept secret. To allay speculation, perhaps an announcement could be made two or three days before the date of the visit.

5. Qadir said that the intention was that the meeting should take place at the airport and it could last an hour or two. Qadir added that there would be little time for substantive discussion, but as the President would be returning from East Pakistan, perhaps border questions could be touched upon in a general way as also the wider question of Indo-Pakistan relations.

6. Qadir said that he would immediately contact the President who was at Nathigali, by telephone, to obtain his general reactions to the proposed arrangements. The President was making his own programme for East Pakistan had advanced his date of departure from July 26 to July 24. He did not know what commitments the President had would be flying by Viscount from Rawalpindi via Lahore. Qadir requested me in the meantime to inform the Prime Minister about the proposal. I asked if it would not be better to obtain the President’s reply first, but Qadir insisted that I should immediately contact the Prime Minister as he was certain that the President would agree to whatever arrangements were proposed should the Prime Minister be pleased to give his consent. Qadir repeated that if the meeting came off, it would help to break the ice and would pave the way for better relations.

7. An hour or so later, just as I was about to dispatch my telegram, Ikramullah telephoned to say that the President had been contacted but he had suddenly changed his programme to go to East Pakistan because of the serious flood situation. The proposal for a visit to Delhi, he suggested, may therefore be held over for time being until another suitable opportunity occurs.
8. Last evening when my wife and I were dining with the Qadirs, I had a word about the matter with the Foreign Minister. He said that the President had taken a sudden decision to cancel his programme for East Pakistan not only because of the serious flood situation in West Pakistan but also because he had been informed by Governor Zakir Hussain that many of the places which he had intended to visit in East Pakistan were flooded. He hoped that the visit which he had proposed could take place in the near future, and he was glad that there had been a preliminary exchange of views in the matter. He said that the President would be coming to Karachi on the 18th for a brief stay.

9. I would be grateful to have any further instructions, should the President himself wish to raise this matter with me.

Yours sincerely

Letter from High Commissioner Rajeshwar Dayal to Secretary General, Ministry of External Affairs N. R. Pillai regarding possibilities of some changes at the top in Pakistan.

High Commissioner for India

No. HC-37/75/59 20th July, 1959

My dear S.G.,

There are uneasy rumours that something is brewing in the military set-up, but nobody knows exactly what. Colleagues and even some Pakistanis speak of sensing something, but there is an air of mystery about it all. Even the retiring U.S. Ambassador, Langley, said the other day somewhat light-heartedly that he had seen two Presidents and five governments during his two years or so here, and he did not wish to see yet another! Incidentally, Langley said that he was leaving behind few friends here, and both he and his wife broadly hinted at their differences with the British. The Americans are involved to the hilt in Pakistani affairs; the British are playing their own insidious game, and the interests of the two are frequently divergent.

General Azam Khan, since his return, has been bull-dozing his way back into the public eye, and is very much in evidence. It is rumoured that General Moosa, the Army C-in-C, whose departure to a foreign assignment sooner or later is generally assumed here, is trying to build himself up with his own headquarters and the junior ranks. A possible tie-up between him and Azam is being talked about. It is even thought that another disgruntled General, Umrao Khan, the proconsul in East Pakistan, is in league with Moosa. If such a combination were to be brought about, it could be dangerous for the Ayub-Sheikh axis. Sheikh, however, is a dark horse who avoids any open alignments; but his rivalry with Azam in the inner counsels of the ruling military junta cannot be concealed.

In this Byzantine atmosphere of dark and silent intrigue, it is difficult to lay hold of anything tangible. But with the paralysis of the press and the absence of any public opinion, or means of expressing it, one cannot disregard these furtive whisperings and rumours, and I am reporting then to you for what they are worth.

Yours sincerely

No. HC/38/75/59 20\textsuperscript{th} July, 1959

My dear S.G.,

You must have seen my telegram and a D.O. letter to the Prime Minister regarding an interesting proposal by Qadir to enable President Ayub Khan to pay a courtesy call on the Prime Minister on his way to or from Dacca. At the last minute, Ayub cancelled or postponed his trip which was projected for July 24 or 26.

Although the reason given was the flood situation in both wings, it seems that the President is reluctant to go to East Pakistan, for this is the second time that he was suddenly called off an announced visit. It may be that the President does not wish to face the difficult flood and general economic situation in East Pakistan, and the prevailing discontent there.

Perhaps the President is reluctant to be away for any length of time from the Western wing, and particularly from Army Headquarters and his military colleagues. His anxiety to stay on in Natniagali, far from the capital, but next door to Rawalpindi, is evidence of this. The unpopular proposal to shift the capital on which he seems to be embarked regardless of administrative convenience of financial considerations, also points in the same direction.

It is now thought that the President may be going to East Pakistan in September, but from past experience, one can hardly take this as a firm intention. Ikramullah, however, told me a day or two ago that the President welcomed Qadir’s proposal for a brief stop-over in New Delhi, and that he would be happy if the arrangements discussed could be brought into effect when he next visits East Pakistan. What Ayub would like best, of course, is for an invitation to issue from New Delhi; that however is neither possible nor desirable at present. Ayub may even wish to invite himself, but he will have to carry his army set up with him, and that he may find difficult.
I shall of course not revert to this matter either with Qadir or with Ikramullah; they took the initiative and it is for them to raise it again should they wish to do so.

With kind regards.

Yours sincerely

High Commission of India
Karachi

No. HC/46/TS/59 July 30, 1959/Sravana 8, 1881 Saka

My dear C.S.,

2. You have asked for my personal assessment of Ikramullah. Actually my experience of working with him is confined to the few weeks that he has been in office as Foreign Secretary. I am sure that there are many in Delhi who know him well as a colleague, and Shrimati Vijayalakshmi Pandit’s views may also be well worth having.

3. We knew Ikramullah and his wife in a purely social way before partition and we have run into them off and on in Canada and London. They have both been quite friendly and our wives have exchanged visits. Ikramullah has also been over to our house on two or three occasions.
4. My first impressions on the basis of these as well as official contacts with Ikramullah are that he is an undoubted improvement on his predecessor, who had the manner of a Sergeant-Major with little interest in his work or knowledge about our mutual problems. His rabid views about India resulted in an uniformly negative attitude on all questions, however insignificant. Ikramullah’s approach is much more serious and responsible as well as better informed. He was the creator of Pakistan’s Foreign Service and was the inspiration behind Pakistan’s foreign policy in the days when it was yet unaligned, and he wishes to convey the impression of having a sense of mission. While I do not for a moment believe that he could influence Pakistan’s foreign policy basically, so far as Indo-Pakistan affairs are concerned, his approach is more flexible though adroit. In place of Baig’s uniform stone-walling, we may expect greater subtlety in tactics. As Ikramullah is rather suave and not consumed by phobias, his attitude could also be constructive. As the most senior member of the Service and as one who knows his country’s foreign policy in its different phases other than anyone else in Pakistan, he is not afraid to take initiatives. By way of example is his recent suggestion for unconditional ban on border firing. I also think that he had a good deal to do with the proposal for a courtesy call by the President.

5. As Manzur Qadir will be moving to Rawalpindi leaving Ikramullah for the time being at any rate, to deal with the foreign missions here, the latter will undoubtedly enjoy a good deal of authority, which I think he will exercise with a sense of responsibility.

6. As far as influence in the inner counsels of the Government is concerned, I know that Ikramullah has had recently long conferences with the President, who probably regards him as an experienced technician, as Qadir has many irons in the fire, the chances are that Ikramullah will gradually build up his influence in the Foreign Office. The other day he said to us, “What is there that the Foreign Minister can do that I can’t do”. It remains to be seen if this rather confident claim will be borne out in practice.

With kind regards,

Yours sincerely

Record of the Conversation of the High Commissioner with the former Secretary General of the Muslim League

Qazi Mohammad Isa, former Secretary-General of the Muslim League had a long talk with me at my house yesterday. I have known Isa for many years and in fact had attended his wedding in Jhansi with the daughter of Khan Bahadur Hamid Hussain, Officiating Executive Engineer, in the year 1936. He has since divorced his first wife and married her sister.

2. Isa said that things were not going too well with the military regime. There were conflicts within it. The regime by its very nature is unstable, as what one General can do, so could another. The move to shift the capital to the north had only one object, viz., to be close to Army Headquarters, but that will not put off the day of reckoning. Azam Khan though ambitious lacks the capacity, but Sheikh is the man to watch. However the real danger is from General
Habibullah Khan, who is to succeed General Musa as the Commander-in-Chief. Although Ayab’s son, Gohar, is engaged to Habibullah’s daughter, this will not deter Habibullah Khan from prosecuting his ambitions. He is known for his infinite capacity for intrigue and is extremely unscrupulous. For is he not the son of the late Khan Bahadur Quli Khan, about whom it was said that every fibre in his body was crooked.

3. The relations between the Muslim League and the present Government are not at all friendly. Qayum Khan was in Karachi recently, but he refused to see the President. Bahadur Khan is also rather browned off and as for Miss Jinnah, she is very angry. How long would it be possible for the military regime to function in a vacuum?

4. The regime is its own worst propagandist. First it condemned all the former politicians (and this must include both Jinnah and Liaquat Ali Khan) as corrupt and unscrupulous. Then it named all the capitalists as scoundrels, while the landlords were described as corrupt and tyrannical, and, lastly, the services have been weeded out on grounds of inefficiency and misconduct. Where will the axe next fall? The regime has proclaimed to the world that all the leading elements in Pakistan are worthless and corrupt and this is surely the worst possible propaganda that the country could have.

5. American influence has never been greater or more insidious than it is today and ill-qualified American “advisers” are swarming all over the country and bossing it out over senior and competent Pakistani officers. Even American missionaries are very active; they have reconstructed at great expense the Methodist Church in Quetta which was damaged in the earthquake. The dollar is an accursed currency - wherever it goes it spreads a blight. Pakistan will never be able to escape from its clutches.

6. The Bureau of National Reconstruction is a sinister organization and its Chief, Brigadier F.H. Khan, is a dangerous man,

7. The people of Pakistan first welcomed the new regime, as they liked to have their excitement every six months, but now they are getting fed up and are wondering when the incubus of Martial Law will be removed. Only the other day, when the army ordered the demo-lition of some refugee shops, there were shouts of “Azam Khan murdabad” and “Iskander Mirza zindabad”. What can one think of a country where the man who was hounded out only a few months ago, is again being regarded as a possible savior? It shows that things can change again.

8. The trouble in Kalat State was serious and people in Quetta were astonished after seeing the story in the Times of India, which was basically correct, to read the complete denial issued by the Pakistan Government. Could lying go further? The Afghans have been playing their cards very badly, for they kept quiet while the trouble in Kalat was brewing. Conditions along the frontier are also by no means quiet.

9. East Pakistan can as well be written off, as the estrangement between it and the regime is growing.

10. Looking at the picture as a whole, the prospects are gloomy. The people are sullen and discontented and anything could happen.

0277. TOP SECRET
Letter from High Commissioner Rajeshwar Dayal to Commonwealth Secretary M. J. Desai recalling his meeting with President Ayub Khan.

Karachi, August 10, 1959.

High Commissioner for India
Karachi

No. HC/48/TS/59. 10th August, 1959

My dear C.S.,
I was received in a very friendly and cordial manner by President Ayub Khan when I went to call on him this morning. He asked how my wife was and how I had been keeping. I said I was glad to see him looking very well, as indeed he was. He was in a cheerful mood and he was throughout relaxed and friendly although one could have expected a cloud on his visage considering the manifold problems which he has to face from day to day.

The President had last evening given a Press Conference at which he had expressed optimism about the development of relations with India and the view that during the last few months they had shown an improvement. The President began by saying that he meant every word of what he had said as it was his firm belief that there was no problem outstanding between our two countries which was not susceptible of solution given the necessary goodwill and determination. There have been positive developments in our relations recently and this process must be kept up. It was good to talk to know each other’s point of view at first hand. In that way progress towards solutions was possible. I mentioned the recent trade and financial talks, and the President said that no one could have expected that solutions would be found at the very first meeting, but a good beginning had been made and further exchanges would help in the process of arriving at mutually just solutions. Any contacts made and agreements arrived at would stimulate the process of the building up of our relations. The President added that as he had told me repeatedly, this was his aim and he intended to persevere with it.

Referring to border incidents, the President said that these were bothering him greatly. He could not understand how they were going on and he wondered if I had any views about what could be done to stop them. I said that the reports appearing in the Pakistani papers gave an entirely one-sided version of the affairs and they did not correspond to the facts. I said, for example, that it was inconceivable that our people would wantonly resort to firing in the Dawki area where we were in a very exposed position as the President must know from his intimate knowledge of East Pakistan. I then related the correct facts in that area. The President remarked that his own reports from military sources were very different. He had been told that at the insistence of the Assam Government, one brigade had been sent to the Dawki area and another further east to back up some claim about a piece of land belonging to an Indian national. The Central Government of India had however, urged restraint, and the forces had not actually been used. I expressed astonishment at the reports and said that they had no oasis whatsoever in fact. It was inconceivable that two brigades could have moved into the area considering our total strategic strength and commitments in Assam and its frontier areas. The President said that he himself could not understand the reports and had considered bringing them to my notice earlier, for as if correct, they could have led to very serious bloodshed and other grave consequences. “Surely we do not want to resort to such methods over trifles”, he said and laughed, adding “questions like these could be settled at an hour’s meeting and should not require any show of force”. The President led me up to a map to show the location where these imaginary brigades were supposed to have been posted, I again insisted that the reports were entirely incorrect, and I could not for a moment believe that any such military dispositions had been made. The President replied: “I can hardly believe it myself, but you should check up, old boy.” I replied that I would do so but I wished to reassure him that it was not our method to employ force — least of all, force of such magnitude as was reported — to deal with minor infractions. That is why we had been pressing for conferences at Chief Secretaries’ and other levels to settle these matters before they assumed the dimensions of inter-state disputes.
The President then asked what I would suggest to put a stop to these incidents once and for all. I said that the meeting of Chief Secretaries which is to be held shortly should be able to deal with these matters. The question of evolving ground rules so that necessary restraints could be imposed on the man behind the gun would also help the objective in view. The President said that both these were positive suggestions, but he would like to place the responsibility on the officers concerned for any breaches of the peace. He mentioned that very satisfactory arrangements had been worked out between General Sheikh and Thapar after the Nekowal incident which were working very well and perhaps something on the same lines could be evolved along the East Pakistan border areas as well.

The conversation next turned to the discussions on the question of Canal Waters and the President expressed feelings of optimism as to their outcome. He said that he was determined to get rid of negative attitudes on the part of his officials which stood in the way of settlements, and he had actually to sack a Superintending Engineer who was creating difficulties. “All questions can be settled in this manner if the approach is right, and it is no good always harping on the past. One must have a forward looking approach, he added. I said that I agreed with him entirely; indeed that was exactly how we viewed our problems with Pakistan, and on that common basis further improvements would be possible. The President said that one good result of the Canal Waters settlement would be that the annual floods in West Pakistan would be prevented as the surplus water would be stored. He said that on our side also, we had been afflicted by floods and that the agreement would similarly help to control them. He then asked about the flood situation in other parts of the country and I mentioned what had been done to control the Kosi river and to develop the Damodar Valley. He said he had noticed the works in progress over the Damodar valley during his flights to East Pakistani but he thought that floods still occurred in that area. I informed him that they would be fully controlled once the complex of dams on that shifting river were completed. Regarding East Pakistan the President said that there was no means of controlling the mighty Brahmaputra and he agreed when I said that we both have to accept the occurrence of floods in one part or another of our countries, but we must be prepared to deal with them when they occur and not merely to resort to improvising measures when it was too late.

The conversation then turned to the President’s next visit to East Pakistan and he said that he hoped to go there on September the 1st. He was aware of the talks which had taken place between the Foreign Minister and myself regarding the proposal to pay a courtesy call on the Prime Minister. He had greatly welcomed the idea as he would be happy to have the opportunity of meeting the Prime canister since there was no substitute for personal contacts. He however did not wish to cause us any embarrassment. A stop-over at Delhi would be possible on September the 1st on his way out to Dacca. On the return journey, he would fly back direct by the regular P.I.A. service. I informed the President that I had already conveyed to the Foreign Minister our general reactions to the proposal when it was first made, and that I would make fresh enquiries in the light of his proposed programme and would inform him. (Ikramullah, probably unaware of my talk with the President later made a telephone call to give me the date and said that the President would be very pleased if the visit could be arranged. I told him that I had already taken up the matter).

The President asked about the situation in Kerala and I said that matters there had come to a head. There was a mass upsurge and central intervention came as a relief to all concerned. The situation there was now quiet, but the issues which it had raised had excited a great deal of interest throughout the country. The President wanted to know whether there was any genuine belief in Communism in Kerala or whether the slender success of the Communists at the polls was due to other factors. I said that there was no doubt that an important factor was the failure of the previous Congress and P.S.P. Ministries to satisfy popular expectations.

The President enquired about the situation in West Bengal, and the Communist movement there. I replied in a general way to the effect that wherever there is economic distress, there exists fertile ground for movements demanding a radical change, with which sentiment the President agreed. He added that there were so many pressing problems in our countries which would brook of no delay that something had to be done to improve conditions. I said our countries were faced with a crisis of rising expectations and our Government could not afford to slacken in their efforts to improve the wretched condition of the people. The President observed that under-developed countries needed strong and firm Governments capable of giving a lead and of taking decisions.

Referring to the decision to shift the capital, I said that it had created a lot of difficulties for the diplomatic missions. The President immediately interjected “I am very sorry about that and I know that you have just built a large new chancery. How can we compensate you?”. I said that there was no question of compensation, but it would be difficult for us to maintain the necessary degree of contact with the Government from this distance. The President replied that he appreciated the difficulty, but the Foreign Office would continue to function here for a considerable time and so would the diplomatic missions. It would however be useful to have a place in Murree — since no accommodation whatsoever was available in Rawalpindi — while the President himself and his Ministers would be coming down to Karachi frequently. It was also proposed to provide temporary accommodation for a few days at a time to heads of mission coming to Rawalpindi on business. The President said that the move would cause a good deal of dislocation in his own Government as well, but he thought that in the end things would work out all right. The decision about the location of the capital had to be taken, and once taken there was no point in delaying its execution, and so they had decided to go ahead.

Before leaving, I invited the President and his Begum to dinner on behalf of my wife and myself. The President immediately replied that he would be very glad to come, adding “Remember, you are my friend”. The dinner party has since been arranged for August the 25th.

The President was extremely affable and friendly throughout the interview. He avoided raising any controversial points and constantly stressed the need to come to agreements emphasizing that our problems were all susceptible of solution, given the will and the time, his approach I was glad to find, was positive and constructive and he recognized that time and patience were necessary to sort out problems which had got entangled over the years. There was no attempt to cast blame and there was a presumption of goodwill on both sides. Even the matter about the Dawki affair was raised incidentally while on the issue of border firing the President was willing to concede that there were two sides to the question, I have the firm impression that if the proposed courtesy call does take place, it would well mark the beginning of a welcome change in our relations, it would help to relax the psychological tensions in Pakistan and would stimulate the process of positive exchanges leading ultimately to the development of more normal relations.

Yours sincerely

Letter from High Commissioner Rajeshwar Dayal to Commonwealth Secretary M. J. Desai regarding proposed visit of President Ayub Khan to Delhi.

Karachi, August 14, 1959.

High Commissioner for India
Karachi

My dear C.S.,

I had a talk with Foreign Minister Qadir last evening when I informed him that our Prime Minister will gladly meet President Ayub Khan at the Delhi airport when he is passing through on his way to East Pakistan on 1st September. Qadir expressed great pleasure on receiving the information and said that he would inform the President. I asked him to let me know well in advance the time of arrival of the President’s plane at Palam and other necessary details. He promised to let me know in a few days, but added that he thought that the President would leave here at about 8 or 8.30 A.M. and would reach Palam at about 10.30 or 11 A.M. Qadir would be accompanying the President. As soon as I obtain confirmation of the arrangements I shall let you know.

2. I presume that the arrangements for the visit which were conveyed in my Secret/Personal D.O.No.HC/35/TS/59 of 15th July, 1959 to the Prime Minister will stand. I should add however that when I saw the President the other day, he asked whether it was really necessary to make an announcement of the visit two or three days earlier. I replied that the President’s call on the Prime Minister could hardly be kept secret as necessary arrangements would have to be made in advance. The President thereupon did not insist on his point. I assume that Manzur Qadir when I meet him next to finalize the arrangements will adhere to the arrangements previously agreed upon. If there are any suggestions which you would like me to make, I shall be grateful to have the necessary instructions at your earliest convenience.

3. Qadir again said he was an optimist and he was convinced that the meeting would be very useful indeed. He thought that there was some improvement in our relations already which he hoped would be maintained and even accelerated.

4. Incidentally, Qadir would be leading the Pakistan delegation to the U.N. and on his return from East Pakistan; he will almost immediately thereafter leave for New York via London. After the Baghdad Pact Council meeting he will return to Pakistan as he cannot be away longer. Commerce Minister Bhutto will join him in Washington for the Baghdad Pact meeting and thereafter lead the delegation. It is thought that M.S.A. Baig, will join the delegation from his post in Berne, and as usual Itaat Hussain will function as the Secretary-General.

With kind regards,

Letter from Commonwealth Secretary M. J. Desai to High Commissioner Rajeshwar Dayal regarding President Ayub Khan’s transit visit to New Delhi.

New Delhi, August 18, 1959.

No.D.O. No. 797/CS/59. August 18. 1959/ Sravana 27, 1881 (Saka)

My dear Dayal,

Please refer to your letter No. HC/49/TS/59, dated 14th August. I have consulted P.M.

2. As this is a halt during transit to Dacca, there will be no protocol formalities but we will make all arrangements which the occasion may require. There will be no escort, gun salute or Guard of Honour, nor will any diplomats be invited to come to the airport. Some diplomats may, however, turn up on their own, that will be their own affairs. We would make necessary arrangements for breakfast or light refreshments according to the hour of arrival and the period of halt at Palam. We would like to know the exact time of arrival here and the period of halt at Palam.

3. Some sort of announcement in connection with this brief halt in Delhi on the way to Dacca will have to be made two or three days before 1st September. The final shape of the announcement will depend on the developments that take place in the next couple of weeks but we feel that the announcement might run as follows:-

“His Excellency General Ayub Khan, President of Pakistan, accompanied by the Pakistan Foreign Minister, His Excellency Mr. Manzur Qadir, will be proceeding from Karachi to Dacca on the 1st September. On their way they will stop at Palam airport for about an hour. The Prime Minister will meet the President and his party at Palam.”

4. We do not have any particular suggestions to make but will be glad to have the definite time of arrival and the period of halt at Delhi to enable us to make necessary arrangements.

With kind regards,

Yours sincerely

No. HC/50/TS/59 August 19, 1959/ Sravana 28. 1881 Sake

My dear C.S.,

I have had confirmation that President Ayub will be reaching Palam between 10-30 A.M. and 11 A.M. on the 1st September*.

2. Incidentally Ikramullah told me yesterday that he had received an enquiry from the Acting High Commissioner of Pakistan, Mr. Durrani, about the

* Meanwhile the High Commissioner was informed by New Delhi that Prime Minister’s general instructions were that the visit should be treated as a casual visit though “we should show all courtesies. As the President is halting only for an hour or so and there would be no serious talks of any kind, we should not like to give an unnecessary buildup to this visit.”
President’s intended visit since he had heard about it for the first time from General Cariappa. According to Ikramullah, General Cariappa had addressed a letter to President Ayub Khan and Ikramullah had prepared a reply to it. Apparently Cariappa saw the Prime Minister, perhaps with the correspondence, and learnt about the President’s intended visit. He is later said to have seen Durrani, and much to the latter’s surprise, had mentioned the matter to him. I am passing this information on to you for what it is worth.

If there are any points on which you desire information regarding the President’s visit, would you kindly let me know immediately?

TOP SECRET

Letter from High Commissioner Rajeshwar Dayal to Commonwealth Secretary M. J. Desai reporting on his talks with Foreign Minister Manzur Qadir.

High Commissioner for India
Karachi

My dear C.S.,

The other day we had an Informal tea party at which the Qadir and Ikramullahs were present.

2. Manzur Qadir said how happy he was that the President’s visit had been arranged. A direct meeting between the two Heads of Government would make for better understanding and improve the atmosphere. He hoped that the momentum which the meeting would generate would not be lost and that it would be followed up by positive action on both sides. In the press statements which the two Heads of Government might make at the end of the meeting, it might be useful if stress were laid on the positive aspects of the meeting, holding out perspectives for the amicable settlement of disputes and the development of good-neighbourly relations. Such a general enunciation might provide a key-note for future exchanges and for the handling of specific issues at all levels. Qadir thought that the time would be too short for any substantive discussions but a general review of Indo-Pakistan relations could well take place, which could provide an opportu-nity for both sides to evolve a common approach to their mutual problems.

3. Qadir next raised the question of the Canal Waters’ talks. Noticing that the discussions in London would not conclude by the end of August as was anticipated, he had asked for a report from Mueenuddin, from which he learnt that certain snags had developed. What caused him some concern was the fact that according to his information, our delegation did not wish the future uses of the waters of the Jhelum below Wular lake and before they entered Pakistan territory to be defined. A similar stand was taken in regard to the waters of the Chenab from a point above Ramban to the Pakistan border. When everything else was being defined and laid down, this omission might create difficulties in the future. While there could be no objection to hydel constructions as such, storage might be undertaken at a time when Pakistan needed additional water. Also in the event of hostilities - although this was a very remote possibility - the water could be cut off. Qadir was convinced that the present Government of India would not adopt such an attitude, but who could say of the future? The whole basis of the agreement was the exclusive allocation of the three western rivers to Pakistan and the three eastern rivers to India. He also argued Pakistan’s legal position on the already familiar lines. He added that future engineering techniques may make with-drawals for irrigation uses possible, especially from the Chenab, by means of a tunnel.

4. Fortified by the detailed information which you were good enough to convey to me recently, I was able to deal with all these arguments. I told Qadir specifically that no new points had been raised by us which were not based upon previous understandings between us and the Bank authorities and were not all along known to the Pakistani delegation. I said that his fears were imaginary and progress towards a settlement had been made not on the basis of any legal formulae, but because we had gone to the limit of making concessions in order to find a practical solution to the problem. We would not be prepared to accept any further whittling down of our sovereign rights over the rivers in our own territory. Qadir said that he wanted to inform me of the position as he saw it and hoped that a solution could be found. Today’s Pakistani newspapers carry optimistic accounts of the progress of the London talks and there is no longer any mention of difficulties. Perhaps matters have been smoothed over, or Qadir’s information has proved to be inaccurate. At any rate, neither he nor the President raised the question with me at our dinner party last night.
With kind regards,

Yours sincerely

0282. TOP SECRET

Letter from High Commissioner Rajeshwar Dayal to Commonwealth Secretary M. J. Desai Reporting on the Dinner hosted by the High Commissioner for President Ayub Khan.

Karachi, August 26, 1959.

High Commissioner for India
Karachi

HC/56/TS/59 August 26, 1959/Bhadra 4, 1881 Saka

My dear C.S.,

We had a very successful dinner party for the President and Begum Ayub Khan last night. Among the guests were General Azam Khan and Manzur Qadir with their wives, Shoaib and Bhutto, the Ikramullahs and senior officers from our Mission. The President and Begum were in a relaxed and friendly mood and seemed to enjoy the occasion. The President had a long talk with me and unburdened himself of some of his ideas. He said he was looking forward very much to meeting the Prime Minister, who was a very great man while he himself was a simple soldier. He mentioned that there was opposition among some of his people to the visit on the ground that he was lowering the dignity of the office of the President of Pakistan by asking to see the Prime Minister. But he was convinced that personal contacts were essential; therefore “he did not give a damn for the critics”.

2. The President said that two big errors and miscalculations had been made in both countries at the time of partition. When it was decided to split up the country “for better or for worse”, it was thought that independence and the withdrawal of the British, would automatically solve all problems. Actually, however, the real problems only came afterwards; this had certainly not been realized in Pakistan. Partition was perhaps a good thing, “for imagine the horrible mess we would have been in had there been no partition. Now, the problems have been split up between the two countries and each can deal with them as best it can”.

3. The second great mistake was that at the time of partition, no policy had been decided as to the relationship which should exist between the two countries and things had been allowed to drift. This dangerous policy of drift had landed us in our present difficulties. There were only two alternatives; one was to live in terms of friendship and cooperation and the other in terms of hostility. The latter course, however, would be ruled out by all reasonable people as it was suicidal; besides, there were too many common interests, associations and emotional entanglements for the two countries ever to remain perpetually hostile to each other. Within our separate political frameworks there was every reason, given the necessary understanding and goodwill on both, sides, for close and friendly relations. These were the ideas which he wished to put by frankly to the Prime Minister and seek his views.

4. The President went on to say that looking back at the lessons of history, internal strife and rivalries in the sub-continent were a constant source of temptation to the invader. The present state of relations between India and Pakistan continued that weakness. “Look at the situation in Tibet today and in Afghanistan where the Russians are building motor roads, which will provide easy access to the sub-continent”. He did not necessarily mean that there was any immediate military threat, “but our bickerings weaken both of us, and offer temptation to the outsider”.

5. The President then went on to speak of conditions in the two Bengals. He was seriously concerned with the situation in East Pakistan where the Communists were getting increasingly active, and he understood that the situation was somewhat similar in West Bengal. “If this goes on, we will not be able to hold East Pakistan, and the two Bengals might well join together and break apart from us”. The President said he was not speaking as an alarmist, but as a realist who saw how things could possibly develop, if left unchecked. In cooperation, the two countries could act together to stem such negative trends; in opposition, there would only be disruption and chaos.

6. The President then went on to speak about his plans for the Sind desert. He had asked his engineers to flood the desert so that grasses and shrubs might grow, making the land fit for cultivation. He repeated what he had once told me that when the Gudu Barrage is completed, Pakistan would be glad to supply Rajasthan with water during the monsoon months enabling at least one crop to be raised there. He hoped that the land contours would permit this to be done and turned to Shoaib for his opinion. Shoaib thought that this might be possible since engineering techniques were now so advanced.

7. The President said he hoped to see me in Delhi on September 1st. When I said that I was doubtful, he remarked that he would greatly appreciate my presence there. Earlier, Qadir asked about my programme and he repeatedly requested me to be present in Delhi during the visit, for neither the President nor he had met any of our people before, and my presence would therefore be doubly useful.

8. The dinner party which was intended as no more than a friendly gesture when I first invited the President, turned out to be somewhat of a political event. Even the Dawn has chosen to notice it on its front page and all the other papers have followed suit, with photographs.

With kind regards,

Yours sincerely

Letter from Commonwealth Secretary M. J. Desai to Deputy High Commissioner K. V. Padmanabhan regarding President Ayub Khan’s visit.

D.O. No. 572 CS/59. August 29, 1959/ Bhadra 7. 1881 (Saka)

My dear Padmanahhan,

You would have seen the exchange of telegrams on President Ayub’s halt at Palam on 1st September. We are awaiting a reply to our telegram No. 24668 of today. As Dayal would be leaving Karachi sometime today, I am writing this letter to you to give you fuller background so that you can talk to the Pakistan Foreign Office on Monday in suitable terms.
2. The suggestion about a joint statement to the Press, after the meeting, by P.M. and President Ayub is, in our view, not a practical proposition. A joint statement by two Heads of Governments can only be issued after full-fledged discussions on certain matters of common interest and we, on our part, do not favour any vague general statement as a joint statement, by the two Heads of Governments. As I have indicated in my telegram, President Ayub may say a few words to the Press before leaving for Dacca (about the nature of the meeting and but) the limited time available would hardly justify any joint statement. As a matter of fact, any attempt at a joint statement would embarrass both Governments as there will be little that would have been discussed in any detail. Being an informal halt en route, it is best that the visiting guest say a few words and there is no attempt at a formal or informal joint statement.

3. We do not know what exactly the final time schedule would be. Dayal’s telegram No. 294 dated 28th August, 1959, received this morning, indicates 10 to 12, 15 as the period of the halt. If the final time schedule permits, and the Pakistan President is prepared to drop all protocol. I have suggested to P.M. and he has provisionally agreed, that the best arrangement would be that the President and a couple of his colleagues are taken away by P.M. from the airport to his house and have a talk there and also have informal lunch at P.M’s house and come back to the airport. The rest of the President’s party could have lunch at the airport. This, in our view, is the best arrangement instead of the President and Prime Minister having to stay on at the airport for a couple of hours. I shall send you a telegram about this matter some time tomorrow after we know the final schedule of the halt and have an opportunity to talk to Dayal who will be here. You may then put it to the Pakistan Foreign Office and if they agree, we will make arrangements accordingly.

With kind regards,

Yours sincerely

No. F. 31/248/NGO 31st August, 1959

We have seen reports in some foreign newspapers somehow connecting President AYUB’s stop at Palam air port on the 1st September for a brief talk with our Prime Minister with our recent difficulties with the Chinese Government. This suggestion is entirely without any basis. President AYUB, who is flying to Dacca, will be stopping at Palam for an hour or so at his own request. He wished to see the Prime Minister and this request could not be refused. This has nothing to do with any particular development in India’s relations with foreign countries.

Note recorded by Commonwealth Secretary on the proposed meeting between Prime Minister and Pakistan’s President on September 1, 1959 and possible subjects for discussion.

New Delhi, August 31, 1959.

Ministry of External Affairs

Subject: President Mohammed Ayub Khan’s visit.

Various views are held about the purposes underlying this friendly advance by Pakistan. Our High Commissioner is of the view that this is a genuine move based on Ayub’s practical views and the needs of the situation. He genuinely desires to break with the past and adopt a policy of developing friendly and neighbourly relations and to attempt settlement of various Indo-Pakistan problems by negotiation. It is also said that he is able to do this now because he is firmly in the saddle. He could not take this line earlier as he had first to establish his position at home. Another view is that this move is inspired by sheer opportunism to improve his own position at home as well as abroad and there is no desire to settle anything or give up any of the fancy Pakistan claims. Supporters of this theory point to difficulties being raised over Canal Waters negotiations, the demand that U.S.A. should press India to give Kashmir to Pakistan and constant border firing in the East despite professions to the contrary. A third view is that Pakistan does not want to adopt any new policy but has been compelled by U.S. pressure to go through the motions to please U.S.A. and that nothing will come out of it. It is likely that all these views are partly correct and the new move is motivated by a mixture of all these considerations. Recently an article by Marcelle Hitschmann was published in the Pakistan Times, a government controlled paper and the views advanced therein which must have been allowed to be published with government’s knowledge if not with their specific approval, perhaps provide the best explanation of the Pakistan move.

2. Whatever may be Pakistan motive in making this move; we should welcome it and see how far it can be used for getting constructive results.

3. According to our High Commissioner, Pakistan President would not raise any specific questions but propose generally that India and Pakistan should forget past animosities and take up settlement of Indo-Pakistan problems on the basis that our two countries should develop normal friendly and co-operative relationships in various spheres as sovereign and independent countries seeking good neighborly relations. P.M. has motioned several times in Parliament and elsewhere that this has been our policy. He can refer to it and say that he entirely agrees and will reiterate this policy and continue to act on that basis.

4. P.M. will not want to raise any controversial issues. If the Pakistan President, however, raises any specific questions, P.M. may find it possible to refer to the following in the light of the way the talks develop:-

   (1) India and Pakistan instead of judging question on basis of the merits of the case and their interests take opposite sides. Who profits? Illustrate with reference to India Office Library case. Also Embassy building in Kabul and several other buildings where ownership is that of India and Pakistan but U.K. enjoys the properties.

   (2) Minorities: a constructive approach instead of propagandist approach- Trivedi’s letter regarding East Pakistan – Revival of Boards. Instead, exaggerated accounts of communal riots and circulation by Pakistan of blood curdling accounts at home and abroad. Improve by consultation and exchange of information. Not for blaming or condemning but to settled conditions.

   (3) Border incidents: Both sides charge the other with starting these and claim not fired at all or fired in self-defence - Queer. Surely, we should know what our men on the border are doing even if we continue to support them for prestige reasons. Should correct and control them. In any case, how can Pakistan forces claim firing in self-defence when shooting freely into populated areas on harmless civilians? Karimganj and Dawki towns – chronic examples. Hope agreements at Chief Secretaries’ meetings will be acted upon.

(4) Border Disputes – Demarcation: Discussed several times. Those that cannot be settled refer to an independent tribunal. No use trying to be smart or slick and trying to get propaganda advantage or to get advantageous positions by quoting authorities which suit the particular claim and brushing aside all other evidence.

(5) Canal Waters – Hope will be settled. Have gone to the farthest limit but mixing up with Kashmir or trying to get an advantage indirectly hardly constructive. Uses on Western rivers in India for limited irrigation and non-irrigation purposes have been our basic position since March 1954. Attempts to nibble away at this only prolong the negotiations where the two teams spend month after month in Europe or America and waste much needed foreign exchange with no benefit to either country. Broadly, problem in the regions of the head reaches of the Western rivers in India, one of drainage and flood control not of irrigation. So fear of diversion of any substantial quantity of water groundless. Also such limited uses as may be there or be developed in future will consume very little water. Most of it will drain back in the rivers and, in any case, water used will be insignificant compared to 30 or more million acre feet that will continue to go to the sea even after all contemplated developments in Pakistan have been completed.

(6) Financial settlements and Economic and Trade Exchanges: Hope these will be followed up by constructive developments. We will response whole-heartedly.

(7) Lakhimpur and Tukergram: All claims and counter-claims apart, it is clear and admitted by Pakistan authorities that these areas were taken by force in violation of various agreements not to disturb the status quo by force. The principle is always accepted but action is taken exactly the other way about. Recent illustration developments at Dawki last month and even after Deputy Commissioners agreement on 9th of last month.

Commonwealth Secretary from PADMANABHAN.

Your telegram No.24668 of 29th August and letter No. 572 of same date. President AYUB KHAN’s visit.

Met IKRAMULLAH at 1230 hours today. He confirmed that President will arrive at 1100 hours and leave at 1200 hours I.S.T.

Regarding press arrangement, he said that President is in favour of a brief and informal joint announcement being read out to the press after the talks. Not being used to Press Conferences, President wished to avoid inconvenient or embarrassing questions. There was a risk of fresh controversies being raised by the replies given. IKRAMULLAH suggested that after the talk the two High Commissioners could prepare a short agreed announcement which would merely state (a) that the two personalities met (b) discussed matters of mutual interest and (c) that the talks were friendly and cordial. Both he and Foreign Minister had spoken to our High Commissioner about advantages of such a course and he hoped that Government of India would agree.

New Delhi, September 1, 1959.

The President of Pakistan and the Prime Minister of India met informally in a very cordial atmosphere at Palam airport this morning (September 1).

Matters of mutual interest were discussed. They agreed that there was need to conduct their relations with each other on a rational and planned basis, and not according to the day to day exigencies as they arose, and that their outstanding issues and other problems should, in mutual interest, be settled in accordance with justice and fair play in a spirit of friendliness, co-operation and good neighbourliness.
They were glad to have had this opportunity of an informal exchange of views and they agreed to keep in touch with each other to further their common objectives.

SECRET

Circular Letter from Commonwealth Secretary to all the Indian Heads of Mission abroad about Nehru – Ayub talks.

New Delhi, September 4, 1959.

D. O. No. F. 31/248/NGO September 4, 1959/Bhadra 13, 1881 (Saka)

Subject: Ayub-Nehru meeting on 1st September, 1959.

My dear Ambassador/High Commissioner etc..

There have been indications, during the last three months, of the desire of the Pakistan authorities to make a gesture towards co-operative relations with India. As you know, during the first six months after the new regime came to power, several provocative and aggressive statements were made by the Pakistan President and other Pakistan leaders and there was a general increase in tension on the Indo-Pakistan borders, particularly in the east. Pakistan authorities, however, have been considering a peaceful approach to India during the last two or three months. This may be due to internal reasons or external pressure, particularly the prevailing opinion in the United States, but the suggestion for a meeting for an hour or so at the air port came from Pakistan authorities and we naturally reciprocated and welcomed it.

2. We have been pressing the Pakistan authorities since some months for Chief Secretaries’ meeting in the Eastern Zone to resolve various matters which are responsible for border incidents and the tension in the Eastern Zone. We have been sending various notes on this subject since March onwards. It was only towards the end of July that the Pakistan authorities agreed to a Chief Secretaries’ meeting at Calcutta to deal with these questions. This meeting was held on 17th and 18th August.

3. The proceedings of the Chief Secretaries’ meeting made it clear that the East Pakistan authorities had instructions to play along in a general way without making any specific concessions. It will be seen from the Joint Communiqué issued after the Chief Secretaries’ Conference that the East Pakistan Chief Secretary agreed to look into certain matters and give redress where possible and also agreed to certain procedures to minimize border tension but refused to take any attitude on specific questions which we had raised with the Pakistan Government in various notes presented in the last six months and which were to be dealt with at the Chief Secretaries’ meeting. The East Pakistan Chief Secretary also refused to accept the suggestion of our Chief Secretaries that the Chief Secretaries should make recommendations to the respective Central Governments for solution of the various questions on certain lines. These unresolved questions which have been left for the Central Governments to settle are:

a) Navigation facilities along the rivers for nationals of both countries.

b) Rational arrangements to facilitate fishing by nationals of both countries,

c) Grant of facilities to travelers in accordance with the current customs and currency regulations,

d) Facilitating trade between East Pakistan and our eastern States in poultry, eggs, fish, vegetables etc.

e) Facilities to be given to migrants to remit their provident fund dues, security deposits etc.

f) Immediate release of persons prosecuted by Martial Law authorities for no fault other than unintentional trespass into Pakistan territory.

Even on matters where the East Pakistan authorities agreed to be conciliatory, certain promises to look into the difficulties were made but future implementation will show to what extent these promises will be fulfilled.

4. The only result of the Chief Secretaries’ Conference was the revival of the Chief Secretaries’ Conference as an institution after three years. Future conferences of this type would, to a certain extent, help in remedying local grievances. It is obvious that, so far as the Pakistan authorities were concerned, the Chief Secretaries’ meeting was only a sop to make it possible to arrange a brief meeting between P.M. and the Pakistan President which they had been planning for some time. The proposal that President Ayub may stop at the air port for an hour or so on 1st September, 1959, was made immediately after the Chief Secretaries’ meeting. During the brief meeting at the air port there was no time to discuss any problem in detail. You must have seen the Joint Communiqué and the statement made by P.M. today and Press reports of statements made by President Ayub Khan on this meeting.
5. We naturally welcome the desire expressed by Pakistan President to deal with Indo-Pakistan questions in a rational, co-operative and constructive spirit. This may have been meant for international consumption but we would try and work on it to see whether the new approach is implemented in dealing with at least some of the minor problems which can be settled by negotiation. We will also follow up the proposal for a high level meeting to deal with Indo-Pakistan border troubles in the east.

7. President Ayub himself appeared to be practical and cooperative as shown by his ready response to the proposal for a joint approach by India and Pakistan to U.K. on the question of transferring the ownership and possession of the India Office Library. In matters where he had been briefed by his advisers, however, the approach was the same as under previous regimes. For example, President Ayub glibly repeated Noon’s previous request that India should accept Bagge Award No. IV as interpreted by them. When it was mentioned that the partition took place in 1947 and that the boundaries cannot be drawn on the basis of police than boundaries shown in a 1937 map, he turned to other general matters.

8. In brief, the new Pakistani approach is not, in any way, different from the approaches made by previous Pakistani leaders like Noon and Mohammed Ali Bogra. President Ayub Khan, left to him, may have an approach similar to the approach of Ghulam Mohammed when he was Governor-General but it is too much to hope that Ayub would either be allowed to function freely or would have the courage to function independently of his advisers. We would, on our part, try and follow up the Pakistani promises and see whether any concrete settlements can be reached at least on some of the minor problems which cause irritation and conflict.

With kind regards.

Yours sincerely

No. DHC-S-391/59 September 7, 1959/ Bhadra 16, 1881(saka)

My dear Commonwealth Secretary,

The brief meeting at Palam between our Prime Minister and President Ayub Khan has had an excellent coverage in the Pakistani press. The general comment was that a “good beginning” was made.

2. The man in the street has welcomed this move enthusiastically so also the business circles. It is on occasions like this that one is able to gauge the extent of goodwill that exists for India in this country.

3. Diplomatic Missions all share this mood of “cautious optimism”. Many Heads of Missions have asked me to convey their felicitations to Shri Dayal for this happy development.

4. Mr. Ikramullah appears to be reasonably pleased with the results of the meeting. He is claiming full credit for having brought about the high-level meeting. He told one Ambassador that it was he who briefed the President about giving an historical touch to the warning that disunity in the face of external danger will bring disaster to both countries. Despite these protestations many diplomats believe that the Americans, were behind Ayub Khan’s initiative to have a “Parley at Palam”.

5. There is a growing awareness in responsible circles that the talks, if they are to lead to fruitful results, should not be linked up with the trouble which has flared up on our northern border. I enclose herewith a cutting from the Karachi evening paper LEADER which gives expression to this welcome trend.

6. A development which was being keenly watched in Karachi was whether there would be a return visit by our Prime Minister in the near future. Pakistani newspapers had confidently predicted that the Prime Minister would stop over either at Lahore or at Karachi when flying to or returning from his forthcoming trip to Afghanistan and Iran. Actually the Political Counselor of the U.S. Embassy had called on me a few days before Ayub Khan’s visit to enquire specifically whether the Pakistan Government had suggested such a return visit. I told him that we had received no such request and that what had appeared in the press was mere kite flying. There have been similar enquiries from diplomats and others since then. Now that P.M. has stated in Parliament that he has no plans of “stopping over” in Karachi in the near future, there is bound to be an adverse reaction in Pakistan. An impression is being created that India has not responded to the generous action of President Ayub Khan. A newspaper Editor told me that he did not expect such a statement from our P.M. Anti-Indian elements are bound to exploit this issue. The chagrin felt by the Pakistanis is understandable. A visit by our Prime Minister will be a tremendous morale booster for the present regime. You may have noticed how eagerly the Pakistani Press awaits news of possible visits by prominent Heads of State., President Nasser or President Eisenhower.

7. Another topic regarding which there was considerable speculation was the Kashmir issue. Several rumours were current. The German Embassy received a report that an agreement was reached between the two countries under which Indian troops in Kashmir could be diverted to the NEFA area. The proposal made by Shri C.C. Desai* in a statement which he issued to the Press on the eve of the New Delhi talks also evoked much interest. Some wondered whether it had any official backing. Strangely, Shri Desai’s suggestion for a settlement of the Kashmir dispute based on the cease-fire line, subject to minor adjustments, has not received any adverse criticism in the Pakistani Press. According to Mr. Gibbon, the authorities have asked the papers not to comment on the solution offered by Shri Desai. However this may be, there is increasing evidence that responsible Pakistanis are also thinking on similar lines. Shri Dayal must have already mentioned this to you. I had confirmation regarding this trend subsequently from the Yugoslav Ambassador.

8. Further developments will be reported. Meanwhile, I write to thank you for your circular letter No. F.31/248/NGO dated 4th September, 1959.

Yours sincerely

(K. V. Padmanabhan)

No. D.O. No. 136/JS(E)/59 September 10, 1959

My dear Rajeshwar,

We have been informed that restriction have been placed by the Government of Pakistan on the visit of Indian nationals to some of their areas/installations, as would be clear from a report, a copy of which I attach herewith*. The Joint Intelligence Committee has been asked to examine whether we should also take some reciprocal action. You will remember my mentioning this matter to you when we met during your recent visit to Delhi. The Joint Intelligence Committee, which considered this matter in a preliminary meeting the other day, agreed that in principle reciprocal action is usually desirable in such matters. We are proceeding to examine what legal and procedural action would have to be taken, if it is decided to impose similar restrictions on Pakistanis in India. We would be very grateful to have your views in this matter, as these would be of great help to us in making a definite recommendation on this subject.

It was grand meeting you here recently: only wish we could have seen more of each other.

Yours sincerely

SECRET

Letter from Commonwealth Secretary M. J. Desai to High Commissioner Rajeshwar Dayal about follow-up action to the visit of Pakistani President.

New Delhi, September 12, 1959.

D.O. No. 600/CS/59.

My dear Dayal,

You must have seen P.M.’s views expressed at the Press Conference yesterday on the Nehru-Ayub meeting and the question of relaxing the visa procedures on a reciprocal basis not merely for press correspondents but for others as well. As we discussed when you were here last week, we would reciprocate any liberalization in the visa policy that the Pakistanis may agree to implement. You would let us know Pakistan views on this matter after you have had an opportunity to talk over things informally with the Foreign Office officials concerned.

2. I have discussed with P.M. the various suggestions you made about returning the courtesy visit paid by President Ayub Khan. Though it is possible, even at some inconvenience, for P.M. to break journey at Karachi or Lahore on the return journey from Tehran for an hour or so, we felt that such casual visit, so soon after the visit of the Pakistan President, may not be desirable. One casual visit, like the Pakistan President’s, does well but to repeat that kind of thing within a fortnight or three weeks without any other purpose, might, to some extent, have the opposite effect. We have, therefore, decided against the casual visit on the return journey from Tehran. I have, however, mentioned to P.M. that it may be a good idea, perhaps a month or two later, to pay a brief return visit to Karachi. This could follow after the results of the Minister-level meeting on eastern border problems have been known. The two Heads of Governments can meet thereafter to deal with disputes which have not been settled at the Minister-level meeting and also announce the settlements reached at the Minister-level meeting plus such further settlements or methods of resolving the remaining disputes that may be agreed to at the meeting between the Pakistan President and the Indian Prime Minister. I also suggested that another occasion for such a meeting might be the singing of the Heads of Agreement in connection with the Canal Waters question. P.M. is keeping these points in view and desires that we should take the initiative in ascertaining the ideas of Pakistan Government about the Minister-level meeting and the dates and the place suitable to them for the meeting. I have already written to you about this matter yesterday (D.O. No. 595-CS/59).
3. As you know, the Pakistan President was very keen on having this Minister-level meeting as quickly as possible. Though the Pakistan Foreign Minister and the Pakistan Foreign Secretary are away, there may be some advantage in having a meeting with somebody like General Sheikh to represent Pakistani side. While he would not give away anything, his desire to show that he can get settlement of some of these questions might itself be a good incentive to the Pakistan delegation to be reasonable in their approach to these problems. As I told you, Manzur Qadir, though an able intellectual and extremely courteous and polite, has a lawyer’s approach and it may be a good idea to have these problems tackled by somebody more practical and keen, for personal reasons, to get the credit for settling some of these matters. After all, no settlement is possible unless President Ayub Khan gives a directive towards a constructive approach to arrive at a settlement and that is the only thing that matters. On our side, as I stated in my letter yesterday, we will nominate a minister of Central Government who will be assisted by me, Chief Secretaries of the eastern States and a senior Military officers dealing with border questions in the eastern region. This will also give General Umrao Khan full opportunity to show his realistic approach. I see from Trivedi’s latest communicates that General Umrao Khan is again gaining influence and the Pakistan President’s insistence on having a senior Military officer to assist the Minister-level meeting may well mean that he wants General Umrao Khan to deal with the border problems in the eastern areas.

With kind regards,

Yours sincerely

Letter from High Commissioner Rajeshwar Dayal to Commonwealth Secretary M. J. Desai suggesting possibilities of Nehru – Ayub Meeting.

High Commissioner for India
Karachi

No. HC/61/TS/59 September 22, 1959/ Bhadra 31, 1881 (Saka)

My dear C.S.

6. During my talk, I sensed a feeling in the mind of the President that the Prime Minister was somewhat hesitant to visit Karachi. I therefore considered it necessary to clear up the matter so as not to leave any residue behind. I said that a refuelling halt was not something which could bear repetition, and a top-level meeting would be really useful after some time had elapsed, when the decisions taken at Palam had had a chance of implementation. Perhaps a date sometime after the ministerial meeting would be suitable; by then one could hope that the Heads of Agreement to the Canal Waters’ question would also have been finalised. That would be a suitable opportunity for a top-level meeting. The President said that he was glad to note that the Canal Waters’ talks were going well and he hoped that the snags about the definition of “consumptive uses” would be cleared up soon. He added that settlement of this vast human problem, which also had important political, connotations, would have a very good all-round effect on our relations. It would be a very good thing if the meeting with the Prime Minister could take place following the satisfactory completion of the Heads of Agreement, and he would be glad publicly to thank the Prime Minister for helping to bring about that happy result. The matter had been too long in the hands of technicians and experts and it would be in the fitness of things if the political leaders gave the weight of their authority to the Heads of Agreement. Thereafter the task of framing a treaty would not present serious difficulties and could be left to the legal experts.

7. The President said that he would be very happy to invite the Prime Minister and hoped that his invitation would not be rejected, as that would make it awkward for him. The Prime Minister could be sure of a very warm and friendly welcome, and he thought that Lahore might be a good place for the meeting. I left matters at that. Today I was surprised to see an APP report in the newspapers to the effect that the Prime Minister might make a brief halt in Karachi on his way back from Teharan. The Chief of Protocol actually telephoned me to enquire if the news was correct. The anxiety of the Pakistanis to receive the Prime Minister here is very great indeed, and there is no doubt that they would feel highly flattered to receive a visit from him. In fact the new American Ambassador, Rountree, told me the other day that the Prime Minister could be sure of a rousing welcome when he comes to Pakistan.

8. My general impression after the talk was that the President is anxious to take early and positive action to follow up the goodwill generated at the Palm: meeting. That is also the general expectation here and there is feeling of disappointment that things have not moved faster. There is also very great anxiety regarding the Prime Minister’s return visit to Pakistan and I could sense a feeling of diffidence in the President and General Shaikh regarding this. I think however that I succeeded in reassuring the President about it, there is no doubt that the Prime Minister will receive a very warm and respectful welcome when he comes. The President’s suggestion that the ministerial level meeting be first convened in New Delhi seems also intended to maintain contact with the Prime Minister, as well as Pandit Pant*: and that might be a good occasion on which to broach the question of a return visit. It would be unfortunate if the erroneous impression were to grow here that all the gestures have been made by Pakistan.

Yours sincerely

Karachi, September 24, 1959.

High Commissioner for India
Karachi

No. HC/62/TS/59
September 24, 1959

My dear,

Please refer to your D.O. No.136/JS (E)/59. Dated 10th September 1959, regarding the restrictions reported to have been placed by the Pakistan Government on the visit of Indian national to certain areas/installations in West Pakistan.

2. Though we had known that there were such restrictions in force in Pakistan, we were not aware that they were so extensive in their operation, as has now been indicated in the enclosure to your letter. We notice, for instance, that the entire districts of Sialkot and Gujarat have been declared prohibited areas.

3. So far as this Mission is concerned, we have experienced no difficulty in regard to our officers with diplomatic passports; since their visas enable them to visit all parts of Pakistan accept, perhaps, the part of Kashmir which is under Pakistani occupation. Of course, prior intimation has to be given to the Pakistan Foreign Office before I myself or any of our officers go on tour. In the case of our Defense Advisers, they too submit their tour programme for prior approval to the Defence Headquarters.

4. The case is different so far as our non-diplomatic staff is concerned. They are given visas for Karachi only and if they wish to visit other places in Pakistan, permission has to be sought from the Pakistan Government. I am told that there were cases where the Pakistani authorities had arrested some members of our old office in Lahore who had strayed unauthorized into the Lahore Cantt. area.

5. As regards reciprocal action we should make a careful assessment if considerations of security would necessitate such a step. This should however be viewed against the desire expressed on both sides to bring about some liberalization in their visa policies and the reduction of the restraints imposed on visitors. This matter is currently under discussion with the Pakistan Government. However, it would be useful to verify how far the Pakistanis are enforcing the alleged restrictions on visits to certain areas and installations. This can only be done by sponsoring test cases for visits to the areas in question. Action in this behalf may be initiated at your end. We shall also institute a scrutiny of the passports of Indian nationals which pass through our hands to see whether any of the prohibited areas are mentioned in the Pakistani visas issued to them.

With kind regards,

Letter from Commonwealth Secretary M. J. Desai to High Commissioner Rajeshwar Dayal regarding possibility of Prime Minister’s visit to Pakistan.

New Delhi, September 24, 1959.

My dear Dayal,

Please refer to my letter No. 628CS/39 dated 21st September, 1959.

2. P.M. saw your letter No. HC/378/59 of 19th September and my reply of 21st September after he returned from tour on 22nd September. I am reproducing below, for your personal information. P.M.’s comments on these two letters:

“I entirely agree with the reply you have sent to our High Commissioner in Karachi. I think he is rather too precipitate in trying to fix up a visit by me to Karachi in November. I have absolutely no idea when such a visit can take place, and it will not be at all right for any hint to be given about such a visit at this stage or till the situation is clearer. As a matter of fact, November is a very full month for me here. In the first half of November, I have many engagements, and in the second half, Parliament will be meeting.”

“The recent articles in the Pakistan Press about my statement concerning the report of what President Ayub Khan spoke to me at Palam, are a bad omen. Why they should have gone out of their way to criticize me for my statement is odd. I had said that the report was incorrect. To the best of my recollection, much of what President Ayub Khan is reported to have said to me, was not said by him. Part of it was certainly said. It is conceivable that he had all this in mind and only some of it came out. This kind of thing may create a wrong impression.”

“Anyhow, it was improper for such a so-called verbatim account to be given of a private conversation, without any reference to me. Any such account should have been passed by me and my reply also given. The account is given by the President's Secretary who was not present. The inference is that it was dictated by the President himself.”

With kind regards.

My dear C.S.

I have your letter No. 628-CS/59 of September 21, 1959*.

2. I did not intend in my letter on the subject of the opening of the Chancery building to raise points of substance, but merely of procedure. Such assumptions as were made were conditional, depending on many imponderable factors. My object in thinking aloud was merely to elicit reactions as to the possibilities, assuming that events take a certain shape, which of course was in itself extremely problematical. I realise however, that the printed (or typed) word appears immutable, and such matters are better discussed verbally than written about.

3. However, what is clear from your reply is that the opening of the chancery will not be related to its physical completion, but to the programme - as it may or may not develop - of the exchange of visits, which is itself a political issue of considerable difficulty and delicacy. We are therefore not at this stage making any plans or preparations, and shall await further developments.

4. Before concluding, I should add that I agree that one cannot afford to be either optimistic or pessimistic in so far as Indo-Pakistan relations are concerned. We here in Karachi, who have to deal with the Pakistanis from day to day, and who have the air of Pakistan constantly in our nostrils, are the last persons to have any illusions on the subject. That however, is no reason for neglecting to plan in advance regarding such matters as the opening of the

It was in order to determine at what point on the spectrum we should pitch our plans for the opening of the Chancery, that I was impelled to write to you on the subject, The upshot of our correspondence is that that point cannot be determined at the moment, and that is sufficient indication for our administrative staff so far as the ceremony of the opening of the Chancery is concerned.

Letter from High Commissioner Rajeshwar Dayal to Commonwealth Secretary M. J. Desai regarding premature retirement of Lt. Genl. Mohd. Habibullah Khan, the Chief - of – Staff.

Karachi, October 8, 1959.

High Commissioner for India
karachi

No. HC/71/TS/59 October 9 1959. Asvina 16, 1881(Saka)

My dear C.S.,

We have been making careful enquiries at various levels about the premature retirement of Lt. Genl. Mohd. Habibullah Khan. I enclose copies of notes* recorded by Padmanabhan and Col. Chadda regarding some very interesting information which they have gathered. I have also made enquiries from various sources including a talk with the U.S. Ambassador which was not very informative, another with General Walter, head of the American Military Assistance Group, with the Afghan Ambassador and various colleagues. The Pakistanis of course are extremely reticent about saying anything even if they have any information on the subject.

* Not included

2. It is clear that Habibullah Khan’s displacement is not the end of the story, but it could be the beginning of a rift in the higher ranks of the Army and indeed in the Presidential Cabinet itself. What is particularly ominous is that General Shaikh’s hand has been behind Habibullah Khan’s ouster, which will undoubtedly affect the balance of power within the Presidential Cabinet and react on the President’s own position, depending on how Shaikh plays his cards.

3. It appears that while Habibullah was away for some three weeks to attend the Conference of Commonwealth Defence Chiefs, enquiries were launched and some damaging information against him was laid before the President. The decision to retire him was taken even before Habibullah Khan’s return; General Musa was here about that time when matters were no doubt pressed to a decision. What was the nature of the information which made it impossible for the President to resist the demand for the General’s removal? The latest information that we have, and of this I have some confirmation from independent sources, is that the General was accused of having some contacts with the leaders of the Pakhtoonistan movement. This information was apparently of a particularly damaging nature, especially coming at a time when the Fakir of Ipi’s revived participation had resulted in the intensification of the movement. The clash of personalities and of interests between the Commander-in-Chief and his deputy was already there and Habibullah Khan’s ouster which served General Musa’s purposes was thus encompassed.

4. General Shaikh is head of the Punjabi group. The Secret Police is his weapon and he has also the assistance of the Inter-Services Intelligence outfit which is here linked with the D.I.B. The actual enquiry against the late Chief of Staff was no doubt carried out by Shaikh’s agents. By ousting an undoubtedly able Pathan officer who was known to have been engaged in pushing up fellow Pathans in the Army, General Shaikh has asserted Punjabi supremacy. To what extent this weakens the President’s position by the removal of his protege remains to be seen. Although Musa comes from an Afghan family, I was surprised to learn from the Afghan Ambassador, that he was bitterly anti-Pathan. The reason is that his family was exiled from Afghanistan by Amir Abdur Rahman since when it has nurtured a grudge against the Pathans. An alliance between Musa and Shaikh to oust Habibullah Khan therefore suited the interests of both.

5. Habibullah is known to be a scheming and ambitious man and he has bitterly resented his disgrace. There is a fanatic fellow-feeling among the Pathans and the Pathan element in the Army is not likely to forgive or forget the unceremonious expulsion of their chief. Habibullah belongs to the influential and numerous Khattak tribes which is known for its restlessness.

6. These are the principal elements that we have so far been able to unearth in the secret drama which has recently been enacted. Rountree took the official line, namely that as there was a clash of personalities, the junior man had to go. But General Walter was more candid. He frankly said that Pakistan could not afford to lose its top leadership and he hoped that this incident, the seriousness of which he did not try to minimize, would not affect the morale of the officers, or start a Pathan-Punjabi feud. He felt that serious consequences could follow, but he hoped that Habibullah Khan had the necessary spirit of restraint and self-denial to retire quietly to his farm. General Walter further volunteered the information that he considered Lt. Genl. Umrao Khan, in view of his good work in East Pakistan, to be deserving of the honour of promotion. If, however, his services were not adequately recognized, there might be trouble, he said. The next man for the post was Lt. Genl. Bakhtiar Rana, while Maj. Genl. Altaf Qadir would also be able to fill the bill. He thought however that in any case it would be difficult to transfer the present Martial Law Administrators from their responsible offices.

7. With this new assurance of his power, Shaikh will soon be going to Delhi to conduct delicate negotiations. A great deal will depend so far as future developments are concerned, upon how these negotiations fare. How would the recent changes here react on Shaikh's attitude as a negotiator at Delhi? Would he try to achieve results in order to demonstrate his abilities, or would he attempt to neutralize the positive trends that the President had initiated at Palam?

8. Little is known about Shaikh's real views about Indo-Pakistani relations, beyond his echoing in general terms the President's expressed desire to bring about an all-round improvement. Qadir, despite his volubility and forensic approach, is known to be a man of goodwill. The President too, seems to be sincere in his desire to improve relations, if for no other reason than that an improvement is in Pakistan's own best interests. But Shaikh is taciturn and does not easily reveal his mind. He is intelligent and scheming, and careful in his expression. In conversation, he avoids giving an impression or unreasonableness, but he has the capacity of decision, and can be stubborn and ruthless if pressed, here he is more feared than admired, and there is a revival of the rumours about his translation to the West Pakistan Governorship, no doubt an index of the disquiet which is being felt at his growing power.

9. Whatever may be Shaikh's innermost views, his personal position will be heavily involved in the negotiations and calculations of cold self-interest are bound to play an important part in his attitude. With the recent accretion to his strength, it is possible that to some extent the analysis attempted in my letter: to. HC/68/TS/59 of 5th October may need some modification.

10. But while it will be more than ever necessary for us to be on guard during the negotiations, we should adhere to our policy of reasonableness and good sense. If we encounter obduracy from Shaikh - which is by no means certain - we can counter it with positive and irresistible initiatives. If, on the other hand, Sheikh's attitude is constructive, considerable progress can be made. Therefore, whether the negotiations succeed or fail, or achieve qualified success, if our approach is constant and based upon our traditional policy of conciliation and compromise, our position will be assured. Failure would then only reflect on Shaikh, while success would serve our best interests. In either case, we shall have given support and encouragement to the more positive forces working in Pakistan for a detente in our mutual rela-tions.

With kind regards,

Yours sincerely

Tehran, October 20, 1959.

I asked him about the significance of President Ayub Khan's visit and he replied, looking to his right and left, "strictly between ourselves, I don't attach any importance to his visit; all the talks and discussions that had to be held were President Ayub’s visit to Iran is merely meant to give a boost up to Iran against the resurgence of Soviet propaganda attacks against the Shah and his Govt. I do not expect anything solid or substantial to come out of his visit”.

2. The Turkish Ambassador told me it was possible that either President Ayub would go to Turkey or some important members of the Turkish Cabinet would come to Iran during his visit to Tehran. He said that it was possible that they might discuss the formation of a Customs Union. But, Amouzegar, when I asked him, contradicted this. It is, however, possible that Iran may enter into a Trade and Transit Agreement with Pakistan.

My dear C.S.,

I enclose for your information copy of a Top Secret source report which is of unusual interest. It confirms not only what we have heard from other reliable sources, but also what the President and his Ministers have been repeatedly emphasizing in their talks with me.

2. Our day-to-day dealings with the Foreign Office have become easier and the replies to our letters, even where they do not concede anything, are more courteous. Actually there is a greater disposition to consider our letters on their merits. In some cases at any rate, a fairly reasonable attitude has been shown.

3. We cannot of course expect changes overnight, but the present trends are hopeful and are to be welcomed.

TOP SECRET

SOURCE REPORT

The President has issued a clear directive to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Commonwealth Relations to the effect that all efforts, consistent with Pakistan's national prestige, should be made in establishing friendly relations with all countries in general and neighbouring countries in particular. In pursuance of this directive, the Foreign Office have started making re-appraisal of Pakistan's foreign policy and the means to be adopted for strengthening ties with countries like Burma, Malaya, Philippines, Indonesia, Japan, Ceylon, Jordan, Lebanon and more importantly with the Arab States of U.A.R. and Saudi Arabia in addition to Iran and Iraq with whom Pakistan already enjoys excellent relations. India and Afghanistan are being treated as a class by themselves and whereas it has been decided that vis-à-vis Afghanistan, Pakistan will have to follow, for quite some time to come and much against her wishes, a tough line in view of the unreasonable and aggressive attitude of Afghanistan, a stage has been reached when Pakistan’s relations with India could be placed firmly on rational and realistic basis. As far as Afghanistan is concerned Pakistan Government are not going to relax their stiff attitude unless she shows signs of repentance. As a matter of fact Government of Pakistan is going to launch a propaganda counter offensive which may be followed by retaliatory measures. Necessary security arrangements in the affected regions are already under way; and all those suspected of sympathies for Afghanistan or Pakhtoonistan are being thoroughly investigated and those attracting even the slightest suspicion are proposed to be dealt with severely and summarily.

2. The permanent Foreign Minister, Mr. Manzoor Qadir, is said to have been given detailed instructions by the President in this behalf. These instructions stipulate that even if Pakistan has to compromise in respect of some of her traditional claims against India which have purely sentimental value, Pakistan should, in a spirit of give and take, unhesitatingly do so. It is learnt that the Acting Foreign Minister was aware of this overriding directive of the President when he compromised his delegation’s stand on Tukergram even without feeling the necessity of referring the matter home. The desire of the President to establish friendly relations with India on a firm and permanent footing is genuine and without any reservations though the urgency behind this is due to various factors - the most important being that normalization of relations with India would enable the Regime (particularly the President) to devote itself with single-minded attention to the task of stabilizing itself at home. Several pressing problems demand immediate solution and the President is aware of the fact that delay in this respect would jeopardize the very existence of the Regime.

3. Persons like Brig. F.R. Khan who to begin with were not quite happy with the new policy towards India and had the backing of a section of the Civil Services and the Armed Forces, have now come to realize that the President means ‘business’. They have therefore now thrown themselves with full zeal in the task of carrying out the ‘new policy’. The resolve of the Regime finds itself reflected in the firm instructions given to the Dawn to desist from unnecessary unfriendly references to India. The word ‘Bharat’ which Dawn has been using all these thirteen years has now been replaced by ‘India’. A similar whip is being given to other newspapers also who are being told that whereas they are at liberty to criticize the policies and activities of the Government of India, the Government of Pakistan would take a very serious view of the attempts made to malign India unnecessarily and thereby undo the efforts of the Regime in bettering the relations with that country. The warning seems to have already gone home and yielded quick results.

4. The President seems to have disclosed his mind to the Foreign Minister and other important Ministers in the Cabinet with regard to securing Indian Prime Minister’s visit to Pakistan. An enthusiastic reception on a grand scale would await Prime Minister Nehru in this country as and when he decides to come.

5. The Government of Pakistan has viewed with great alarm the acts of aggression committed by China on India territory; and the current thinking in the Foreign Office is that at this time nothing should be done which would embarrass India. On the contrary, Pakistan should do all that she can to relieve India of the anxiety of India-Pakistan border disputes so that she can combat with single-minded devotion the ‘Red Menace’ on her northern and north-eastern frontiers.

6. Another country with which Pakistan is very keen to normalize relations is United Arab Republic, which has shown in the recent past some evidence of her changed attitude towards Pakistan. On her part, Pakistan has reciprocated these small gestures and has assured the U.A.R. of her deep desire to establish friendly relations with her.
7. Regarding General Habibullah the source categorically stated that his removal, though unexpected, was necessitated by purely ‘internal pressures’ apart from the well-known fact that Habibullah never got on well with General Musa. President Ayub had come to suspect that Habibullah was engaging himself in building up his following in the N.W.F.P. and that such a build-up could create serious danger for him (President Ayub) at a not too distant date. He therefore decided to clip his wings and ambitions in one swift stroke before he could get out of control. No evidence of General Habibullah’s collusion with Afghanistan, according to the source, had come to the notice of the Government.

8. The Cabinet today stands dwarfed by the personality of the President and no individual or group of individuals is in a position to stand up against him. General Shaikh’s stock has gone very high as a result of his successful handling of the recent negotiations with India and to that extent Mr. Manzur Qadir is rather morose though that has not in any way affected his (Manzur Qadir’s) loyalty or allegiance to the President. For once the whole cabinet is working as a team and is inspired by a strong sense of devotion to the President. Group rivalries have started showing signs of dying away and if they do exist they certainly do not interfere with the smooth working of this highest organ of the Government machinery.

9. The immediate task before the Government at home is to prepare the ground for ‘Basic Democracies’ and to popularize them to the masses. Government have decided at the highest level to spare no efforts in popularizing the concept of Basic Democracies by way of propaganda or otherwise and everyone from the highest down would be engaged for quite some time to come in this task.

10. Pakistan Government is anxious to replace their High Commissioner in New Delhi at the earliest opportunity by a suitable person possessing the requisite seniority and experience for this important post. The search for a suitable individual continues and presently there is none in view. The Government are none too happy with the Deputy High Commissioner either but the real problem that baffles them is that of finding suitable substitutes. Mr. Akhtar Husain who was offered the New Delhi assignment has managed to wriggle himself out of it and Government are now on the look-out for some other person.
Letter from High Commissioner Rajeshwar Dayal to Commonwealth Secretary M. J. Desai regarding the current political situation in Pakistan.

Karachi, November 6, 1959.

High Commissioner for India
Karachi

D. O. No. HC/75/TS/59. 6th November, 1959

My dear C.S.,

When news of General Habibullah Khan’s sudden removal was first heard, there were all kinds of gloomy forebodings as to its possible consequences. It was thought that the President’s personal position might be affected, that the struggle for power within the Presidential Cabinet might be intensified, that there could be dissatisfaction within the Army, and that the Pathan–Punjabi feud might be sparked. So far however, things are quiet and no repercussions are visible above the surface. It may be that discontent is brewing underground and that it will take time to reveal itself in some form or other. At any rate, the President and his colleagues who have returned to Karachi in strength show no signs of any lack of confidence or of tension; in fact they appear to be more self-confident and relaxed than before.

2. It is curious that so soon after the exodus to Rawalpindi the President should be back again in Karachi with Generals Azam, Burki and Shaikh, and with Manzur Qadir, Abul Kasem Khan and Habibur Rahaman. Bhutto is away in the United States so that Rawalpindi is again quite deserted and one wonders how any government business is being transacted. Perhaps it may be dawning on the government that Rawalpindi is after all not the political or strategic epicenter of Pakistan. From odd remarks heard from the Ministers and some officials who happened to be here, one gathers the impression that there is a good deal of confusion in Rawalpindi and that it will take some time to settle down. I imagine that this process will be rather prolonged, and it is bound to affect efficiency, which was never very high, for some time to come.

3. One hears very little about Habibullah Khan or what he is doing. He is said to have visited Karachi recently, but his presence seems to have gone unnoticed. The fact that he President is going off on tour accompanied by General Shaikh and will be away for a fortnight or so, also denotes a high degree of self assurance. General Shaikh’s stature has undoubtedly risen after his success at the Border Conference for which he has no doubt been rewarded by a trip with the President. It may even be that the President thought it wiser to take Shaikh along with him. Perhaps Shaikh who is believed to have been more cautious in his approach to India is now converted in favour of the President’s line as a result or his own experience in Delhi. Certainly he spares no opportunity to speak in high praise of the Indian leaders and of the spirit which animated the conference. It might therefore be his success which has brought him closer to the President. If this is correct, then it might denote greater stability within the government and a better team spirit. It might also mean a lessening of the influence of the intransigent elements which had reservations about a rapprochement between India and Pakistan.

4. In this context I was interested to read the observations in paragraph 6 of your secret circular letter No.684-CS/59 of October 25, regarding the recent conference. Here, we have no indication whatsoever that the Americans had anything to do with Habibullah Khan’s ouster, or that the General was in anyway anti-American. In fact, our impression was that the Americans regarded him as more suitable for the post of Commander-in-Chief of a modern army of the size of Pakistan than General Musa. There was genuine dismay at Habibullah Khan’s unceremonious removal and our information is that the State Department was greatly exercised over this development. If, however, your information regarding Habibullah Khan’s supposed anti-American bias is correct, it would be necessary for us to reorient our thinking on the subject, which is not yet a closed one. If Habibullah Khan’s removal was in fact not the result of the interplay of forces in the top military and governmental set-up, and therefore essentially a domestic matter as we believe it to have been, but was encompassed by foreign intervention, then the situation assumes an added significance. This is a matter of considerable consequence which needs clarification. I would therefore be grateful if you would afford us further enlightenment on the views contained in paragraph 6 of your circular letter.

With kind regards,

Yours sincerely

Shri M.J. Desai, ICS,
Commonwealth Secretary,
Ministry of External Affairs, New Delhi
For the past several weeks, I have been anxiously concerned with the India-China situation in Ladakh and the impact it can have on our position regarding Kashmir. I noticed in the press that, during an airport interview, you were asked a question regarding this situation and you replied to the effect that it was India’s problem. I do not know what exactly was the wording of your statement and whether it was accurately reported in the press.

However, even taking it as reported, your statement was, of course, correct, both factually and from a military point of view, and I have no doubt that our friends will read it in that light. At the same time, however, it is possible that, on another occasion, India and its friends will construe, and probably use, a statement of this kind in an altogether different sense.

I would go even further and say that, in fact, it is a question not only of the statement we have made but of the entire attitude we are going to evince in the matter. The dangers that lie in our attitude as so far shown can be spelled out as follows:

(a) We can be taken to have tacitly recognized India’s authority over that part of Kashmir which she controls at present. After all, it is by virtue of the present partition of Kashmir that India controls Ladakh and is in a position to declare that China’s encroachment on Ladakh is an encroachment on India itself.

(b) The present situation can be cited by India as justifying any augmentation of forces that she might effect in Jammu and Kashmir, the contrary provisions of the UNCIP resolution notwithstanding. This augmentation of forces will include any tightening of control over Kashmir, any building of roads and airports and, in fact, any other measures that she might undertake.

(c) We can be deemed to be stopped from saying in future that the responsibility for the preservation of the territory of Jammu and Kashmir is not that of India but of the Security Council. We have so far always taken the stand that Jammu and Kashmir is not Indian Territory and, therefore, the question of its external defence is a matter for the Security Council, and the Council alone, to consider. We can now be taken to have virtually abandoned that stand.
In my humble but emphatic opinion, it seems to me that we must make some kind of an authoritative pronouncement which would effectively safeguard us against these dangers. A draft letter to the Security Council, if that is going to be the means of making this pronouncement, is under preparation in the Mission here and will be soon submitted to you.

I can assure you that, in making this suggestion, I am not at all unmindful of the complexity of the present situation and the delicacy of our relationship with China. With as much anxious and careful thought as I am able to give to the matter, I feel that a statement, which clearly declares our stake in Kashmir, will not necessarily embroil us with China. On the contrary, it may even be that China will not react adversely to a statement from Pakistan questioning the very basis of the stand taken by India regarding Ladakh . . .

I am taking the liberty of making this suggestion to you because, in my consultations here, I have found a great anxiety lest the present India-China situation allows the impression to settle that Pakistan no longer feels itself concerned with Jammu and Kashmir. This, of course, is only one aspect of the matter and it is for you to view it in the larger perspective which will take into account the attitude of the United States. At the present moment, however, this aspect seems to be quite important in it. I do hope that you will not mind my taking an opportunity to make this suggestion to you.

Letter from Commonwealth Secretary M. J. Desai to High Commissioner Rajeshwar Dayal regarding ‘Source Report’.

Karachi, November 11, 1959.

D. O. No. T.1111 – CS/59

November 11, 1959/Kartika 20, 1881 (Saka)

My dear Dayal,

Thank you for your letter No. HC/TS/74/59, dated 6th November.

2. I have read your source report with great interest. I agree with you that President Ayub is taking a co-operative and constructive line in Indo-Pakistan relations. I also agree that the Pakistan administrative machinery is being pressed to adopt a more co-operative attitude to Indo-Pakistan question.

3. It is difficult to say how far this attitude of President Ayub is based on his own appreciation of the internal and external situation and how far pressures from within and without. As I mentioned to you after the Conference, the Americans have been pressing the Pakistan authorities to adopt a more reasonable attitude towards India since over a year and this pressure had been increased since the developments in Tibet and the further estrangement between India and China. In any case, I agree with you that we should take advantage of the new mood of Pakistan to solve as many as possible of our problems with that country.

4. I have also seen your letters No. HC/438/59, dated 5th November, and No. HC/440/59, dated 6th November. I whole-heartedly agree with the concluding portion of Para 15 of your letter of 5th November, though I am not quite sure that all these preliminaries and the reasonableness of Pakistan in border conferences in only a preparation for the conference on Kashmir to have that question settled to the satisfaction of Pakistan. We can, however, deal with it when the time comes. Meanwhile, we should make the best of the new mood.

With kind regards,

Yours sincerely

Letter from Indian Ambassador in Tehran T. N. Kaul to the Commonwealth Secretary M. J. Desai regarding the visit of President Ayub Khan to Tehran,

Tehran, November 11, 1959.

EMBASSY OF INDIA, TEHRAN

No. AC 9/59/59 11th November 1959.

My dear Commonwealth Secretary,

President Ayub Khan of Pakistan has been in Tehran for the last 2 days and from what I have seen and heard of his reception and speeches, my preliminary reaction is as follows:

2. Judging from the 9-day programme which has been prepared with great care, the things that leap most to the eye are the ceremonial, protocol, military reviews and inspections. So far Ayub Khan has appeared everywhere in his newly acquired Field Marshal’s uniform, except at Tehran University, where he wisely put on a civilian suit to receive the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws. The Shah has also been present in most of the functions in his military uniform. As the British Ambassador remarked to me and the American Ambassador on the arrival of Ayub Khan at the airport “Doesn’t he look a replica of a British Field Marshal?” The British Ambassador probably meant this as compliment to Ayub Khan and to his British education, but the American Ambassador did not take it so; he told me later “the only difference is that Ayub Khan look a little more intelligent.” On the whole, Ayub Khan has given the impression to most diplomats and others he has met so far of being a blunt, outspoken, honest, straightforward and simple soldier. For instance, he asked the Soviet Ambassador at the airport “which country do you represent?” The UAR Ambassador remarked to me in an aside “Has he come to inspect us on parade that he should ask us which countries we represent or what our names are?” I told the UAR Ambassador that it was not President Ayub Khan’s fault but that of the Protocol Department not to have introduced him to every one correctly. I was also very surprised when Ayub Khan asked me, after I was introduced to him at the airport “what is your name.” but I told him smilingly what my name was.

3. Next morning (10.11.59) a ceremony was held at Ayub Khan’s temporary Presidential Palace to introduce the various Heads of Missions to him. Here again he passed round shaking hands with each and asking them in a very abrupt military manner “How long have you been here?” At this function it was somewhat significant that the Pakistan Ambassador, setting aside all seniority among Heads of Missions, first asked the British Ambassador to have a chat with Ayub and then the American Ambassador, and since I happened to be between the two in seniority, then he asked me, while more senior Ambassadors were left to the last.

4. At this function, the American Ambassador and I were talking to Ayub for a few minutes and Ayub addressing himself half to me and half to the American Ambassador said “I have done all I could to improve relations with India; it is now up to India to do its bit. For the last 12 years we have been quarrelling and fighting and slinging mud on each other with great harm to both of us. We must, therefore, settle our various disputes first, then perhaps we can think of other things”. The American Ambassador did not say anything, but I told Ayub “with goodwill and a sincere desire for a peaceful settlement of various problems, there is no doubt that relations between our two countries can be further improved”. The American Ambassador praised the friendly people for Iran and Ayub very enthusiastically replied “they are our kith and kin; we belong to the same culture, race and religion”.

5. Ayub has made two important speeches so far- one in the joint session of the Senate and the Majlis and the other at the Tehran University. A copy of the speech made in the joint session is enclosed. A copy of the speech made at the Tehran University will be sent to you shortly. He read out both the speeches like a typical Pakistani soldier, who seemed to be in a hurry to get it over with and did not seem really to care much for their contents. They were written for him, I understand, by his Secretary Shahab, and possibly given finishing touches by the Foreign Secretary Ikramullah, who is accompanying him. The reception of the speech by the Iranian Members of the Parliament and the intellectuals at the University appears to be somewhat cool. In contrast with the impromptu speech of our Prime Minister at Tehran University, Ayub Khan’s speeches were not applauded while he was reading them, but were cheered only at the end. However, the following points from his speech at the Senate are worth noting:

(1) “Your enemies are our enemies”. This was apparently aimed at the Soviet Union. I hope that Iran will not be equally rash in saying similar things to Pakistan in Public.

(2) His defence of regional pacts, when he said “those who do not plan our enslavement should have no cause of anxiety from these purely defensive arrangement. But the chorus of condemnation we hear against these defensive alliances only makes us suspicious of the motives of our detractors”. This might have been aimed partly at India and Afghanistan but mainly against the Soviet Union.

(3) His hit at the Soviet propaganda against Iran, when he said “Your own nation and its gallant sovereign have in recent times been the target of most provocative and subversive propaganda attacks, which we condemn whole-heartedly. This campaign has been an object lesson in how one nation may try to browbeat another by resort to such methods”.

(4) His plea for the greater unity and cooperation of the Muslim world. He praised the Shahinshah and his late father very highly and also explained the various measures he was taking in Pakistan to improve social, economic and political conditions.

6. His speech at the Tehran University was also significant. He recounted the various reforms introduced in Pakistan and recited a verse from Iqbal wherein the poet said that when Tehran became the Geneva of the Orient there would be peace and stability in Asia. This was hardly in conformity with the plea of for regional pacts he had made in the Iranian Parliament the same morning. Many people remarked “In order to convert Tehran into Geneva, Iran will have to first adopt a neutral policy.”

7. From a private conversation with an Indian who attended a function on the first evening of Ayub’s visit, it was gathered that Ayub was overwhelmed with the reception he got in Tehran and was genuinely impressed with the Shah and his Government’s policy and described them as “a most enlightened monarch and a most progressive Government”. On the other hand, General Sheikh seemed to be more subdued and cautious. I also noticed in the morning reception at which Heads of Mission were received that General Sheikh was keeping a little aloof. I am not jumping to any conclusions, but it seems he did not share Ayub’s over-enthusiasm about things in Iran. I had a chat with General Sheikh at this reception and he told me how pleased he had been at the friendly cooperation and sincerely warm welcome he had received from the Government and people of India, and in particular, the warmth and kindness he received during the 3 interviews with our Prime Minister. He complimented Rajeshwar Dayal and said “He was our midwife and very anxious about the safe delivery and felt greatly relieved at the results of the recent conference about Indo-Pakistan border. We hope that a delegation from India will now come to Pakistan early in the new Year”.

8. My general impression so far is that the Government of Iran is going all out to show its esteem, affection and brotherhood to Pakistan; the Shah, the Government and its officials are making strenuous efforts to impress President Ayub Khan and seem to have succeeded. The people at large however seem to be indifferent in contrast to their enthusiasm at the time of the visit of our Prime Minister. My previous hunch that the visit of Ayub Khan is meant primarily to give a boost to the Shah and his Government seems to be confirmed by the events so far.

9. I am sending a copy of this letter to Rajeshwar Dayal for his information.

With kindest regards

Yours sincerely

TOP SECRET

Letter from the Indian Ambassador in Tehran T. N. Kaul to Commonwealth Secretary M. J. Desai on the visit of Pakistan President Ayub Khan to Tehran.

Tehran, November 17, 1959.

EMBASSY OF INDIA, TEHRAN

My dear Commonwealth Secretary,

I have gathered a few more details about President Ayub Khan’s visit to Iran and am mentioning them below for your information. Judging from the various functions that have been held so far, the following points are noteworthy:

(1) The Shah has taken special pains to accompany President Ayub Khan to all the places and all the functions that were held in his honour. The Shah has not done this for any other visitor so far and he seems to be going all out to befriend President Ayub in particular and Pakistan in general. This is not due to any brotherly emotion or sentiment but mainly with a view to secure Pakistan’s wholehearted support against the Soviet Union and any possible opposition elements inside the country. The Shah also seems to be anxious to secure Pakistan’s — as well as Turkey’s — support in her existing disputes with Afghanistan and Iraq. I have been told by 2 members of the Cabinet that this is the main object of the Shah in going all out to impress Ayub Khan. Also perhaps the Shah did not want to let loose Ayub and party lest they should see and smell internal discontent, weakness and instability in Iran. The visit of Menderes and Zorlu to Tehran during President Ayub’s State visit is meant to strengthen Iran’s morale, bolster the tottering structure of the CENTO and put up some kind of a united stand before President Eisenhower during his forthcoming visit.

(2) President Ayub himself seems to have been genuinely overwhelmed by the organized hospitality, cordiality and enthusiasm which he has mistaken for the “spontaneous warmth and friendship” of the Iranian people. Actually public enthusiasm has been singularly lacking in contrast with the visit of our Prime Minister, but there is no doubt that the official welcome is much greater. For instance, in the function held at Amjadieh Stadium on 11th November, the crowd consisted entirely of the police, the Army, school girls and the officials and diplomatic corps. Members of the public were not allowed free access nor would they, I believe, have responded very enthusiastically if they had been allowed to come freely. Naturally, the Stadium was almost full to its capacity of 14,000 but the speech of President Ayub Khan, which he delivered in English and which was then translated into Persian, evoked no applause from the audience except at the end when cheer leaders started it. At the time of our Prime Minister’s speech at the Stadium, although the audience was only 8,000, almost every sentence of his speech was punctuated with loud cheers because the audience consisted mainly of the members of the public who had come at very short notice and despite official discouragement.

(3) This is probably President Ayub’s first State visit to a foreign country and he seems to be quite conscious of it. His outward behavior is, I think, more like that of a military conqueror who has come to boast about his victories to a friendly country than that of a neighbourly State. The main emphasis in his speeches has been on the following points:

(i) the achievements of the military Government in Pakistan which he has compared with the reforms introduced by the late Rosa Shah the Great of Iran;

(ii) his explanation of the slow progress of democratic reforms in Pakistan and his efforts to set up “basic democracies”;

(iii) his emphasis on Muslim solidarity and the greatness of Islam and Islamic culture;
(iv) his unconcealed hatred of Communism and Communist tactic and methods of subversion;

(v) his defence of regional military pacts and his indirect condemnation of “neutralism”.

(4) In his speech yesterday at the Irano-Pakistan Association he also made an indirect reference to Kashmir when he said “the impact of Iranian culture on the land of Kashmir, which is so near and dear to Pakistan, has turned it into another Iran -- popularly known as ‘Little Iran’.” This is the only public reference he has made to Kashmir so far, but it did not seem to evoke any enthusiasm in the audience or among the Iranian officials whom I met afterwards. I do not think Iran will be as rash or foolish as to change her policy of neutrality on the Kashmir issue and I believe that Ayub Khan’s efforts to win over Muslim world opinion in favour of Pakistan on this issue will not be very successful. All the same, it is not inconceivable that he may make a dent on Muslim opinion in general and the Governments of Iran and Turkey in particular on this issue. I am however, somewhat intrigued by Shahab (Ayub’s Secretary) who more than once told me that the present time is the most suitable for settling this ticklish problem and that President Ayub is very keen to settle it amicably and peacefully. Whether he reflects the views of his boss, I do not know, but it does seem to me that Pakistan seems anxious to take advantage of our present dispute with China to have a settlement on Kashmir in her favour.

(5) I do not think president Ayub has made any impression on the intellectuals, the students or the masses of Iran. I heard from a member of the University and a Senator that they had opposed the conferment of the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws on President Ayub because they said he had violated and shown scant respect for the law and constitution of Pakistan. It was however, on the insistence of the Pakistan Ambassador that President Ayub should receive the same honorary degree as Prime Minister Nehru that they had to give in.

(6) The five-hour so-called “Tehran Conference” of the three Muslim members of CENTO ended yesterday with a joint communiqué which is even more hallow than was expected. A copy is enclosed. General Shaikh’s Press Conference was also a tame affair. The only point worth noting seemed his anxiety to impress the Pressmen that Pakistan had “no border differences with China despite the fact that we have a common border which has not yet been demarcated. We will be very happy to start negotiations for the demarcation of the border”. He also referred to the large number of Russian technicians in Afghanistan and the violations by Afghan aircraft of Pakistan territory. He added, however, “We have friendly relations with the Soviet Union.” A copy of the full text is sent when it is published.

Yours sincerely

0304. TOP SECRET

Letter from Indian Ambassador in Tehran T. N. Kaul to the Commonwealth Secretary M. J. Desai regarding conversation with Secretary to the President of Pakistan Shahab.

Tehran, November 18, 1959.

EMBASSY OF INDIA, TEHRAN

No. AC 9/62/59  18th November 1959

My dear Commonwealth Secretary,

Shahab, Secretary to the Pakistan President, had a quiet dinner with me at my house last night and talked to me for over 3 hours. The only other persons present were the new Third Secretary, M. Dubey, and his wife. Shahab did most of the talking. What he said was purely, as he put it, his personal view, but, all the same, it is very interesting and revealing. It is likely that you probably know all this already, but I am mentioning it all the same. Following are some of the main point he made:

IRAN: (1) The present visit of President Ayub Khan was fixed soon after the Shah’s return from England in June this year. The Shah was keen that the President should visit Iran before the announcement of his engagement. On the other hand, Ayub’s visit to Turkey and the visit of Menderes and Zorlu to Tehran during Ayub’s presence here were fixed after the announcement about President Eisenhower’s forthcoming tour to the Middle East and South Asia.
The Shah was keen to have Ayub in Tehran in order to discuss some of his differences with the Americans. It appeared that the Americans were not trusting the Shah completely and he probably wanted the help and Menders to straighten out things for him.

(2) Although Manzur Qadir, the Pakistan Foreign Minister had advised Ayub to be moderate in his statements and not to go as far as saying “your enemies are our enemies”, Ayub did not wish to mince his words and decided that if he gave support to the Shah he should give it wholeheartedly. I conclude, by implication, that that was one of the reasons why Manzur Qadir did not accompany President Ayub on his present visit.

(3) Although Shahab did not expressly say so, I gathered the impression both from him and from reliable disquieting reports about the precarious position of the Shah and his Government in Iran and wanted to find out the truth for themselves and to devise ways and means of propping up this weak pillar in the CENTO structure. It is also likely that all the 3 Muslim members of CENTO are not satisfied with the economic and military aid America has promised them this time and want to put up a concerted fight for more. Although they have denied any desire to interfere in Iraq, there is no doubt that the situation in Iraq has been one of the main topics for discussion in the “Tehran Conference” between Iran, Turkey and Pakistan. Judging from the various speeches delivered by Ayub, it seems to me that the 3 Muslim Powers are also trying to woo other Muslim Powers for an alternative platform in case of the further weakening of CENTO.

(4) Shahab said he had told the Pakistan Ambassador that the Pakistan party had been taken round the country by the Shah and his Master of Ceremonies acting like ‘ring masters in a circus’. They had seen very little of the real country and hardly come in contact with the people. Shahah’s impression was that the present day situation in Iran was very similar to the situation in Iraq 1½ years ago when Nurii-el-Said was in power there - it was unrealistic and disturbingly quiet on the surface.

Pakistan: Shahab revealed some interesting facts about the revolution in Pakistan and its aftermath. I am mentioning only some of the important points in brief:

(1) Shahab had been in his present position as Secretary to the President since 1953 and therefore could speak with some authority. He said the Americans were not very much liked in Pakistan before the revolution because of their overbearing and haughty manners. For instance, the American Ambassador would ring up Shahab at 11 in the morning and say he wanted to see the President at 12 noon. If Shahab said that the President was not free, the Ambassador would reply "I am coming anyway at 12 noon" and no one could stop him from seeing the President. This had, however, changed since after the revolution and the Americans had been put in their proper place. The American Ambassador was the most aggrieved person when Iskandar Mirza was removed and had insisted on seeing him. He had been allowed to see Iskandar Mirza and had offered him asylum in the United States. It was not true that Iskandar Mirza's foreign bank accounts had been frozen. An attempt had been made but the Swiss Banks had refused to divulge the accounts. According to Shahab, Iskandar Mirza had over 10 lakhs rupees worth of foreign capital in various foreign banks. He also had an "open account" in the various hotels in London where he could entertain free of charge.

(2) Ghulam Mohammad had in 1954 asked Ayub to become the Martial Law Administrator and was prepared to declare Marshal Law but Ayub had very wisely refused to accept the offer then because he wanted that all available politicians should be tried out first. Ayub had at that time written a paper on "the advantages and disadvantages of a military take over in Pakistan", which Shahab had preserved as he wanted to write about it one day. Ayub had analyzed the various possibilities very carefully and bided his time until he found a suitable opportunity last year. Iskander Mirza had realized the dangers of a military take over but had still hoped that he would be maintained in his position by the Army out of sheer necessity. Ayub had been kind and generous to Mirza who did not deserve any kindness.

(3) Miss Fatima Jinnah was more or less a spent force but she showed the usual irritations of an old spinster. Ayub had handed over all the money for the Qaid-i-Azam mausoleum to her and she was busy rejecting various designs for it. Her strength lay formerly in her appeal to the masses but Ayub had taken the wind out of her sails.

(4) Ayub was anxious to have a proper Constitution as he did not wish another military coup like his own – in fact he was scared of it. He had, therefore, retired all such military officers who might have had such an ambition. Although General Habibullah's daughter is going to be married to Ayub's son, Ayub had to remove Habibullah from the post of Chief of Staff because Habibullah and the Chief of the Army, General Musa, had come to loggerheads. To avoid personal embarrassment, Ayub had to get rid of the better man. Musa was a pure and simple soldier while Habibullah had other ambitions as well. If habibullah had not been related to Ayub, it was possible that Ayub would not have removed him from office. Ayub had also taken the precaution of filling all the military courts with duds while sending all the efficient soldiers to look after the training of the Army and to keep away from politics. Duds in the military courts did not matter very much because there were two appeals from their decisions – the first one to the Military Commander of each Area and the second to the President. Shahab said “the Military Commanders usually upheld the sentences of the Military Court but we, on behalf of the President, usually reduce 10 years to 3 years; 3 years to 1 year and acquit those who are convicted to one year only. This is a rough and ready rule which seems to meet the ends of justice”.

(5) I asked Shahab who, he thought, was a possible successor to Ayub and he replied “I have a feeling there will be a scramble for power after Ayub. We have a very brilliant young soldier called Brigadier R.H. Khan, who is in charge of rehabilitation. A possible alternative might be General Shaikh, but it is difficult to tell”. He thought, however, Ayub had established his position fairly strongly and was anxious to stabilize conditions and set up a civil government as soon as possible.

(6) Manzur Qadir had originally refused to join the Government but had been persuaded to come in after Iskandar Mirza’s departure. He was a stabilizing force in the Cabinet and was the one man who insisted on having a legal Constitution and a civil government. He was also pressing for a friendly settlement with India on the various outstanding problems.

RELATIONS WITH INDIA: Shahab repeated what he told me in our last meeting that the present atmosphere was the most suitable for the settlement of all outstanding disputes between India and Pakistan. Both Ayub and Manzur Qadir were very anxious for it, especially Ayub, and this opportunity would not come again. The Eastern border had been settled and the Western border was also likely to be settled soon. A settlement of the canal waters dispute was in sight. The only remaining problem was Kashmir and this could also be settled with mutual goodwill on both sides. He personally thought that while Jammu and Ladakh could go to India and Gilgit and areas across the cease fire line to Pakistan, the valley should be made into an independent State as a tourists’ paradise like Switzerland. He realized, however, that neither India nor Pakistan would agree to this solution, especially in view of the recent threats from China. He also realized that the face of both India and Pakistan had to be saved. He had, therefore, reluctantly come to the conclusion that the only workable solution was possibly along the existing cease fire line with some variations for the sake of homogeneity and saving face. When I asked him whether this was also the views held by Ayub and his Government, he seemed to indicate agreement, at least so far as Ayub is concerned.

With kindest regards,

Yours sincerely

No. HC/TS/80/59
November 30, 1959

My dear

I am grateful to you for copies of your very interesting reports to the Commonwealth Secretary of your talks with Shahab and your impressions of President Ayub's visit to Iran. Many of the things that Shahb told you confirm the information that we have ourselves collected. For example, it is quite correct that despite Pakistan's utter dependence upon the U.S.A., Ayub has not allowed the same liberties to the American Ambassador in regard to visits, etc., as was the case in Iskander Mirza's time. In fact, in order to break the American Ambassador's habit of seeing the President whenever he wanted to, a circular letter was issued by the Foreign Office requiring that such requests should be sent through them.

2. The information about Miss Fatima Jinnah being a spent force, at any rate so far as the present regime is concerned is quite correct.

3. What Shahab told you about the ouster of General Habibullah Khan is very revealing and lends confirmation to our own opinion. Ayub probably hoped that he could buy Habibullah Khan’s loyalty by means of an alliance and no doubt discovered that that would not quench Habibullah’s ambitions but might even stimulate them.

4. As regards Shahab’s views concerning Manzur Qadir, we also believe that he is pressing for the regime to clothe itself with some semblance of legality; that is why he has been the main driving force behind the so-called “basic democracies” and the plans for devising a Constitution. Manzur Qadir realizes the need for promoting better relations with India, and despite his somewhat legalistic approach, his influence in regard to the present positive developments is by no means inconsiderable.

5. It is indeed surprising that Shahab should have unburdened himself to you about his ideas in regard to a settlement in Kashmir. Despite occasional public utterances to the contrary, the feeling is no doubt growing that any peaceful settlement in Kashmir must take into account the factual situation and there can be little hope of a settlement unless the cease-fire line is taken as the basis.

With kind regards,

Yours sincerely

Letter from High Commissioner Rajeshwar Dayal to Commonwealth Secretary M. J. Desai regarding the appointment of Pakistan’s new High Commissioner in India.

New Delhi, December 1, 1959.

High Commissioner for India
Karachi

My dear C.S.,

Yesterday I sent a wire about A.K. Bohi’s appointment as Pakistan’s High Commissioner to India. I must say that I was agreeably surprised to learn that the President had chosen a man like Brohi, and that Brohi had, despite the heavy personal and financial sacrifice involved, been persuaded to accept the appointment. Brohi is too well known to need any introduction; even the present regime has not branded him along with the condemned tribe of Pakistan politicians.

2. You will recall that Qadir told me recently that the Pakistan Government was anxious to find someone for Delhi who is really friendly to India. I think Brohi fits the description. We have come to know him and his family rather well and have been impressed by his sincerity, integrity and regard for spiritual values. He used to be interested in theosophy and is still very interested in Vedanta. He is a good friend of Shri Jayaprakash Narayan and, I believe, is also known to the Prime Minister. The fact that Brohi has accepted the appointment shows that he believes that President Ayub Khan is sincere in his desire to improve relations with India, and he would be failing in his duty were he to fail to respond to the call.

3. As a liberal in thought and outlook, he can hardly favour the suppression of democracy in Pakistan. But like many thinking and earnest Pakistanis, he feels that the present rulers are honest and well-meaning, and therefore deserving of support. Brohi is a big enough man not to shirk his duty as an envoy to report truthfully and to advise honestly, without fear or favour. I hope to have a long talk with Brohi on his return to Karachi next week.

4. Malik has been informed about Brohi’s appointment and of the rejection of his own insistent requests for an extension. Durrani is also being recalled as he is considered to be inadequate. Ikramullah said that with Brohi and Shafqat in Delhi, the two High Commissions would be “more evenly balanced”.

5. I enclose a copy of the curriculum vitae of Brohi received from the Foreign Office.

TOP SECRET

Letter from High Commissioner Rajeshwar Dayal to Commonwealth Secretary M. J. Desai about the visit of President Eisenhower to Pakistan.

No. HC/TS/83/59 December 3, 1959,

Subject; President Eisenhower’s visit to Pakistan —— Indo-Pakistan relations

My dear C.S.,

As President Eisenhower’s visit approaches, the energies of the Pakistan Government have been focused on the arrangements for the visit and an examination of the issues to be raised in conversation between the two Presidents. It will therefore be opportune to attempt an analysis of the matters likely to be brought up by President Ayub Kahn and the ideas that may be canvassed.

2. From all accounts, it appears that President Eisenhower will not himself take the initiative in raising any questions, but he will no doubt be prepared to discuss any matters that may be raised. While disavowing the role of a mediator or even that of good offices, the U.S. President could yet act as a catalyst in smoothing out rough edges in relationships, thus facilitating the processes of reconciliation. Strenuous preparation has therefore gone into the task of sifting the matters to be raised with President Eisenhower, and elaborate briefs have been prepared. In the short time available for the talks, it is thought that there will first be preliminary exchanges of views between the two Presidents followed by more detailed meetings at which General Shaikh will be present throughout. On matters involving foreign affairs, Manzur Qadir will also participate while on those relating to economic problems, Shoaib will be present. The Principle Secretaries will accompany the President and his Cabinet to Karachi for the visit, and will be available in case of need.

3. What will be the overall Pakistani approach to the problems to be discussed? In view of the gradual thaw in the cold war, a chauvinistic or bellicose approach is not likely to carry conviction. The accent will therefore be on reasonableness and conciliation, the hidden purposes being enveloped in the soothing balm of realism and practical good-sense. President Ayub Khan has been trying assiduously to build himself up as a man of peace and goodwill who is anxious to forgive and forget the past and to build up an area of peace around Pakistan. Speaking as a soldier to another soldier, he will not doubt assume his familiar direct and disingenuous manner which is his greatest diplomatic asset. Speaking in simple but forceful language oozing with sincerity, he will expound his well-worn theories on the hard facts of the political life of the area. A modest role will be becoming to the occasion and the exposition will be made with the aim of inviting an answering echo from his listener. Ayub may attempt the technique of driving home a few points, grafted to the broad American approach to the problems of Asia, in the hope of making the greatest possible impact. He may hope to demonstrate that the global aims of U.S. Policy are best served in the area by heeding the Pakistani suggestions—which would incidentally also advance Pakistan’s interests and purposes.

4. In view of the fact that President Eisenhower, in the meridian of his authority and prestige, is striving genuinely to bring about a world-wide detente, President Ayub Khan’s language of “peace through strength” may to some extent, strike a responsive chord. By contrast with some of the U.S.A’s western allies, such as the tough-dealing General de Gaulle, the Pakistani dictator’s approach may well come as a pleasant surprise. Ayub Khan could point to the improvement in relations with India, his recent overtures to Afghanistan and his attempt to strengthen the CENTO organization as evidence of his basic desire for peace and friendship in the area. Nevertheless, as a military man, he would regard it as his duty to draw attention to the dangers that loom ahead. In this context, Chinese expansionism as demonstrated by the treatment of India, and Russian penetration into Afghanistan would be used as a portent of the dangers from which the area must be safeguarded. Ayub Khan has previously said that within five years time, the sub-continent will be thrown open to any adventurer from the north-west when the system of Russian-built roads in Afghanistan is complete. Along the northern and north-eastern borders of the sub-continent the Chinese are already poised to threaten the whole of... south Asia. To meet this combined danger, concerted political, military and economic measures will be necessary.

5. Politically, U.S. good offices will be sought to be invoked to repair the relations between Pakistan on the one hand and Afghanistan and India on the other. The problems of Kashmir and Pakhtoonistan will figure prominently in this context. Militarily, it may be argued that in view of the present dangerous portents in the area, the quality and quantum of military aid to countries like Pakistan, should be increased, and not decreased as is being mistakenly demanded by some circles in the U.S. Congress. Further, it may be argued that the CENTO organization should be provided with some teeth in the shape of a joint command and full US membership. As regards the economic angle, it will no doubt be urged that economic aid of all kinds should be stepped up to strengthen the economic infra-structure of an ally like Pakistan. Countries which hold themselves aloof from the ring of alliances are getting aid from all sides and Soviet aid has been used effectively to advance Soviet influence in the area. By contrast, countries firmly allied with the West find themselves at a disadvantage in resisting the economic overtures of the Soviet bloc. The only way to counteract such pressures is to demonstrate that American aid is more generous and more worthwhile. The Pakistanis, who are utterly dependent upon I.C.A. funds, feel strongly about the decision to divert these funds to the Development Loan Fund account, which also involves a “Buy American” injunction, thus practically halving the value of the aid in terms of goods. The I.C.A. Administration here feels strongly that Pakistan has reached the limit of performance within the present frame-work of its economic policy and ICA aid; a radical breakaway is therefore essential if the country is to be extricated from the economic morass in which it is floundering.

6. These are broad lines of approach to the various matters which the Pakistani President is likely to take up with his American guest. A more detailed analysis of the issues which can be safely forecast, follows. These are:-

(1) Indo-Pakistani relations, with special reference to Kashmir.
(2) Pakistan-Afghan relations.
(3) Strengthening of the CENTO organization.
(4) The Communist threat to the general area.
(5) Pakistan’s achievements under the present regime and its difficulties, with special emphasis on increased economic/military aid.

7. General

On Indo-Pakistani relations, the general theory held by President Ayub Khan is that the two countries are so inextricably bound together that they must either live in peace and understanding or else be faced with the prospect of being “defeated in detail”. Neither country can hope to destroy the other or aspire for the reversal of the partition. The only sane and rational approach therefore is to attempt to solve the existing problems on a basis of justice and equal benefit. Ayub Khan will claim that Pakistan has been making repeated overtures to India, and though the response has been somewhat tardy, certain hopeful trends have at last been set in motion. For his part, he will keep on striving in the hope that there will be a fuller response. Pakistan desires more trade with India on an equitable basis, more exchanges at all levels (including Heads of Government) and an early settlement of the Canal Waters problem but, above all, just solution of the Kashmir problem. Once a settlement of these problems is reached, a fund of goodwill and understanding will be created between the two countries despite their differing foreign policies and it will thereafter be possible for them to cooperate with each other in all fields. In accordance with this line of thought, Ayub Khan may try to convince President Eisenhower of his own sincerity and anxiety to improve Indo-Pakistani relations and of the need for a greater measure of responsiveness and trust on India’s part. We could, of course, counter all this by pointing to our consistency in seeking settlements with Pakistan throughout the years, our efforts unfortunately being rendered unavailing by the transitoriness of a succession of weak Pakistani Governments. We have all along been prepared and indeed anxious to settle all our problems by negotiation and have made great sacrifices to achieve agreements, as in the case of the Canal Waters’ question and the Eastern border issues, and shall continue to be responsive to peaceful approaches.

8. Joint Defence

This concept has no doubt been fathered by the Americans but its parentage has been enthusiastically assumed by the Pakistanis. There has, however, been a modification in Pakistani thinking since the President first raised the slogan. Publicly, it is said that once the problems which keep the two countries apart are settled, especially the Kashmir problem, there will be nothing but friendship between them and they could then join together for the defence of the sub-continent instead of frittering away their energies in mutual opposition. In numerous expositions to me, however, the President has omitted all reference to a solution of the pending disputes as an essential pre-condition. He has explained his concept as merely implying that instead of the two armies facing each other in mutual hostility across the ceasefire line and in the two Punjabs, they should pay heed to the real danger which threatens from the north and northwest. In my last talk with the President, reported in my letter No. HC/438/59, of 5th November, he went so far as to imply that if some of our forces from the western border were to be diverted to meet the Chinese peril, Pakistan would not take advantage of the situation. The implication no doubt was that with a similar tacit assurance from our side, Pakistan should correspondingly feel free to take adequate steps to guard the border of Gilgit and Baltistan and strengthen its military posture in the tribal areas which have recently been erupting.

9. Such a concept of “joint defence” is a very loose one as it merely involves an assessment of the relative degree of danger affecting the security of the two countries from different directions. Certainly it does not presume any joint understanding, still less any joint planning or command. Each side would be free to make its own arrangements on the basis of its own estimation of the imminence or otherwise of the danger from the other side. The term “joint defence” is of course a misnomer. India has repeatedly said that she would not use force for the settlement of any of her pending disputes and has repeatedly offered Pakistan a “No War” declaration as a proof of her pacific intentions. Even though Pakistan has declined to subscribe to a formal declaration of the kind, it is open to her to remove all doubt as to her real intentions by publicly eschewing the use of force as an instrument of policy. This however, she has not so far done, although references to Kashmir have been progressively in less bellicose vein, the emphasis now having shifted to a fair and just solution by negotiation.

10. There is already a cease-fire agreement in Kashmir; nevertheless, military forces are deployed on both sides of the cease-fire line because of the element of mistrust which dominates the situation and which has not been helped by Pakistan’s sabotage activities. Pakistan therefore still has an opportunity to prove its bona fides by agreeing to our standing offer of a “No War” declaration or “non-aggression” pact. In that event, President Ayub Khan’s privately expressed concept of “joint defence” could automatically come into operation, without any formal agreement or even understanding. There are of course inherent difficulties in devising any joint security arrangements between two countries following such widely differing foreign policies, quite apart from India’s justified aversion to such military groupings.

11. In this context, it would be as well to recall that although the Dawn has poured cold water on Shri Jayaprakash Naraya’s suggestion for a confederation between the two countries – a suggestion which is plainly Utopian in the present state of relationships – nevertheless, the idea has attracted some attention here, primarily in the context of the Kashmir dispute, and secondarily in that of “joint defence”.

12. One hopes that a closer examination of the empty slogan of “joint defence’ will reveal to the Americans its inherent impracticability; if, however, they could be persuaded about the solid advantages attending a “No War’ declaration, a very useful purpose would have been served particularly if they, in turn, could induce their Pakistani ally to adopt the idea. While from may determine content, the converse is not always true; the Americans, who unfortunately are too prone to political dogmatism, may yet be persuaded to prefer the substance to the shadow.

13. Kashmir

It is believed that Governor Akhter Hussain, aided by the loquacious Khurshid, “President’ of the so-called Azad Kashmir Government, has been commissioned to prepare a brief on Kashmir. The brief will naturally follow the familiar pattern of insistence on a plebiscite in conformity with the U.N. Security Council Resolutions. It should, however, be evident to the Pakistanis that such an approach would be self-stultifying. Preening themselves on their sense of realism as they are wont to do, they should realise that any useful approach must be based on the factual situation as it exists in Kashmir today. This would rule out all previous approaches including Sir Owen Dixson’s partition-cum-plebiscite proposal and Dr. Graham’s last cumbersome efforts. Equally to be ruled out would be any idea of independence or of a condominium, which Selwyn Lloyd had mentioned to me in Belgrade over two years ago although he seems to have passed it on the Americans since. The only negotiable position would therefore be on the basis of the status quo with a view to achieving if not a permanent solution, at least some form of modus vivendi.

14. The question therefore is, would Pakistan be prepared to open discussions on the basis of the status quo? As I have reported earlier, there have been some indications of dawning awareness that a new approach alone can be expected to yield any fruitful results. The “package deal” concept could possibly play a part in Pakistani appraisal of the problem. Such an approach has paid dividends when applied to the eastern border problems and it may well inspire the forthcoming western border talks as well. Used as they are to thinking in terms of their military jargon, the present rulers of Pakistan are concerned about the proximity of their new capital of Rawalpindi, and the nerve centre of their military installations, to the cease-fire line. We have heard of their anxiety about a widening of the salient in that sector, which incidentally would provide them with much-needed forested areas. I may here recall the revealing talk which T.N. Kaul had with the Pakistani President’s Secretary, Shahab in Tehran recently, when Shahab spoke of Pakistani preparedness to negotiate on the basis of the cease-fire line with necessary adjustments. Could the re-alignment of our position in the Patharia area be used as some kind of a paralled for some modifications along the south-western angle of the cease-fire line in Kashmir?

15. In this context it might be recalled that the statements by General Cariappa and C.C. Desai referring to the possibility of a solution of the Kashmir question on the basis of the ceasefire line have been published here without any comment, although one might have expected a spate of vituperation. It was only recently that the Dawn pointed out that no settlement in Kashmir was possible on this basis, but its words seemed intended more for the record than to serve as a warning.

16. Ikramullah hinted the other day that after the settlement of the Canal Waters question, the Pakistani Government would expect talks to commence on the Kashmir issue. Eisenhower is bound to arrive in Delhi with his ears ringing with the Pakistani case in Kashmir; one cannot say if he will merely be a polite listener or whether he will try to ascertain the minimum negotiating position which the Pakistanis are prepared to accept. President Ayub Khan is believed to have said that he has a practical solution for the Kashmir question; would he disclose it to the American President in the hope of provoking American interest in and our reactions to it? What that solution is, we do not know, but it should approximate to what Shahab told T.N. Kaul, then some foundation will have been laid for possible negotiations.

(This sections of my letter should be read in continuation of my note* on the Kashmir problem left with you on September 3, 1959.)

OTHER PROBLEMS

17. Referring to other problems between the two countries, the Pakistanis need only point to the beginnings made, the results already achieved and the schedule of talks proposed. A settlement of the Canal Waters question is in the offing and the Pakistan may expect some assurances as to who will meet and how, the heavy expenditure involved. For his part, the American President may well suggest that the last round of the negotiations be speeded up so that the water treaty is signed, sealed and delivered, perhaps at the level of Heads of Government, as soon as possible. This should take care of any hurdles which the Pakistani delegation may still be raising. On the financial issues between the two countries and also in regard to trade relations, the Pakistanis may plead for more generosity on the part of India. On the whole, the Pakistani attempt will be to impress their guests with their initiatives and the sincerity of their desire to repair Indo-Pakistani relations. Such a development would be in conformity with the global aims of American foreign policy. The over-worked argument about the vulnerability of the area to Communist influence if the disputes between the two countries were to continue, will no doubt fall on receptive ears. Pakistan's modest ambition to play Canada to India's United States will be reiterated in the hope of creating an impact on the mind of the President regarding Pakistani goodwill and sense of statesmanship, before he has an opportunity of hearing the other side of the story.

* Note available here

18. Pakistan-Afghan relations

We have already reported fully about the present state of these relations which have recently been at an extremely low ebb. In place of the former hostile statements against Afghanistan, there is a sudden and not very convincing switchover to a more peaceful approach. But President Ayub Khan's self-assumed role as the protector of Afghanistan's political integrity and Islamic religion has further irritated the Afghans, besides showing a surprising lack of political sense and judgement.

19. Attempts will no doubt be made to convince President Eisenhower that in attempting to hug the Russian bear, not only will the Afghans themselves be crushed, but they will also imperil their neighbours, particularly India, which is the real prize. At the same time the Pakistanis would like the American President to use his influence with the Afghans to lower the present tempo of their campaign for Pakhtoonistan and to come to a working settlement with Pakistan. The Afghans, who have been skilful enough to preserve their independence despite the clash of rival empires, may well turn the tables on the Pakistan by getting more American aid but without making any commitments. They may also succeed in making their second life-line through Karachi more secure while retaining that with the Soviet Union.

20. Strengthening of the CENTO ORGANISATION

The main lines of the Pakistani approach to this question have already been indicated in our earlier letters on the subject, and I do not wish to encumber this note by repetition. If the principal aim of the Eisenhower tour is to strengthen the understanding with India and other non-aligned countries in the area, the Americans are not likely to fall into the trap of full membership of the ineffective CENTO set-up. They have already been heavily subsidising the three Muslim members and in view of their own balance of payment difficulties and global commitments, they are not likely to increase their existing obligations.

21. The Communist threat to the general area

The Pakistanis who sought American military aid in order to speak to India in the language of force are now taking the credit of hind-sight in view of Chinese expansionism and growing Soviet influence in Afghanistan. They may also point out to Communist activities in the two Bengals about which President Ayub Khan has often expressed some concern.

22. In regard to the Chinese threat, we have already reported on the Pakistani reactions. Although they tend to minimise it, there is no doubt that they feel apprehensive lest the hot breath of the Chinese may next blow their necks. There are reports of Chinese patrols having been seen near the Baltistan border and shepherds being captured and later released. Ikramullah told me that he had asked the retiring Chinese ambassador to agree to the demarcation of the border and the matter had also been taken up orally with the Chinese Foreign Office. Perhaps the Pakistanis feel that the winter having set in, they may have a few months’ respite. But in view of the state of their relations, they can hardly expect that Chinese treatment of them will be any more considerate than it has been towards India. In the polemics between India and China, their private sympathies have been heavily on India’s side while publicly they have as a matter of self-protection, kept aloof. They have not said or done anything to embarrass India in any way at this juncture and the Prime Minister’s strong statement in Parliament has evoked spontaneous admiration and applause.

23. Pakistan’s achievements under the present regime

Increased aid: Broadly speaking, President Eisenhower’s visit here is being regarded as an opportunity to state the Pakistani case in an attempt to show that Pakistan is a worthwhile ally deserving of continued if not increased support, and every effort will be made to counteract the pressures building up in the US Congress for a reduction in commitments to Pakistan. They would try to demonstrate that continued help to Pakistan, both military and economic, would not in any way come in the way of improvement in relations with India.

24. To overcome the allergy of responsible American public opinion towards military dictatorships, the fraudulent system of “basic democracies” will be presented as an earnest of the regime’s desire for a speedy return to constitutional legality and representational government. Increased support of Pakistan would therefore not mean the buttressing up of a dictatorship but the strengthening of genuine democracy in Pakistan in conformity with the genius of the People.

CONCLUSION

25. In conclusion, the Pakistani endeavour will be to dress up the present regime, its basic structure and its external and internal policies, in the most glowing colours in the hope that the impressions which President Eisenhower gathers in India will not appreciably dim his view of Pakistan. It is realized that the central purpose of the President’s visit is to deepen Indo-American understanding and friendship. In the process, there is a fear that Pakistan will suffer by comparison. Therefore every effort will be made to convince the Americans that continued support of Pakistan will by no means defeat their central purpose, but would in fact advance it.

With kind regards.

Yours sincerely

TELEGRAM

From : Hicomind, Karachi.
To : Foreign, New Delhi.

IMMEDIATE

No. 441. December 8, 1959

Desai from Rajeshwar Dayal.

Preliminary reactions to EISENHOWER'S visit and results achieved are as follows:

The visit was more of a pageant than a serious political occasion. Little time was allowed in crowded programme for talks which were confined to some 75 minutes this morning and later during lunch.

As expected, Indo-Pak relations figured prominently on the Pakistani agenda and credit was sought to be taken for the recent initiatives. The Kashmir issue was pressed hard in the vain hope of getting commitments. President EISENHOWER is however believed to have held firmly to his position of non-interference and HAGERTY later stated that it was not the practice of U.S.A. to intervene in disputes to which it was not a party. Minister BROWNE told me that this was not the time to take up Kashmir issue. Only significant reference in Joint Communiqué is to “urgent desirability of finding solutions to existing disputes” among nations of the area. The disappointment in Pakistani circles will no doubt be in proportion to their inflated expectations.

The Communique contains the usual platitudes about collective defence arrangements and recognition of the need for continued cooperation between the two countries. It is however pitched at a much lower key than President EISENHOWER’S somewhat fulsome speech at public meeting.

Arrangements for the visit were well organized and large but mostly silent crowds were assembled.

I conveyed greetings to the President who said how much he looked forward to his visit to India although he realized that the time was too short to acquaint himself adequately with the country. I also had a talk with MURPHY and other members of the entourage. My general impression is that while the Americans are gratified with their welcome in Pakistan they are wondering whether it has been altogether worthwhile considering the frustrated hopes they are leaving behind.

Detailed report follows by bag.

0309. TOP SECRET
Letter from High Commissioner Rajeshwar Dayal to Commonwealth Secretary M. J. Desai on President Eisenhower’s visit to Pakistan.

No. HC/TS/85/59 December 10, 1959.

Subject: President Eisenhower’s visit to Pakistan.

My dear C.S.,

President Eisenhower’s fleeting visit to Pakistan has come and gone, and there is some wonderment as to what it betokened, beyond a very general and no doubt sincere, expression of goodwill. The reception was arranged with military efficiency; Karachi received a much-needed face lift; the public holiday drew large but somewhat undemonstrative crowds to the streets; there were the usual dinners and receptions; a display of horsemanship and of Khattak dances; and in order to demonstrate the “popularity” of the regime, a public meeting at which, surprisingly, there was a wilderness of empty chairs which was not compensated for by the contrived applause led by well-trained cheer leaders.
Although the controlled press had been playing up the visit as a momentous and historic event, it had more the aspect of a pageant than a serious political occasion.

2. In the final reckoning, what has the visit achieved, is a question that is being asked not only by the diplomatists but by the Pakistani public, and indeed by the Americans themselves. If the visit had been limited to its declared purpose, viz., to spread understanding and goodwill and to widen the circle of personal contact, it could have been adduced a success. But the Pakistani Government, through its leader-writers had tried to build it up into a great political event, at which powerful American support would be pledged to further Pakistan interests in her current disputes with her neighbours. On the Kashmir issue, in particular, the hope was entertained that if the American aim was to promote understanding and cooperation in the area, a settlement of the Kashmir question no doubt to Pakistan’s advantage was a necessary precondition. To that end, it was hoped that the U.S. President would interest himself in the problem to the extent of exercising his good offices, if not mediation, in search of a solution on the broad lines of the Pakistani president’s expose. It was a misreading of the purpose of President Eisenhower’s tour to imagine that he would get himself so directly involved in regional disputes, thus defeating the very purpose of his mission. The Pakistani sense of disappointment is therefore in proportion to their frustrated expectations.

3. As the programme shows, comparatively little time was given to serious discussions. There was a formal meeting lasting some 75 minutes on the morning of December 8th followed by talks at a luncheon at the President’s House. There may also have been other snatches of conversation in between the numerous engagements. The Pakistani views on their problems were fortified by voluminous memoranda, which will no doubt engage the attention of the army of white House advisers. President Eisenhower seems to have confined himself to giving a polite ear to the Pakistani case, while replying in terms of generalities and soothing expressions of goodwill.

4. The topics discussed, and, as far as we have been able to ascertain, the general approach, approximated to that indicated in my previous letters on the subject.

5. Indo-Pakistani questions, as expected, took up a substantial portion of the time, not only because of their intrinsic importance to Pakistan but also because of their connection, howsoever indirect, with the questions of Pakistani-Afghan relations and the threat from the north. The American attitude was to express satisfaction at recent improvement in Pakistan’s relations with India and to lend encouragement to the continuance of the process of negotiation.
The Americans stressed the importance of the early conclusion of the canal waters’ talks. This was confirmed when I asked Shoaib last evening as to how the Washington talks were progressing. He replied that his information was that good progress was being made and that attention is now being given to the drafting of the treaty. When asked if Pakistan had introduced any new proposals in regard to the three western rivers, Shoaib said that greater precision concerning future uses was sought without raising any new points of substance. Winthrop Brown who had come up Karachi from Delhi for the occasion, said that any attempt to lay down in detail what could not be accurately forecast would raise more problems than it would solve, and he thought that the Indus Waters’ Commission could take care of any new situations which might arise. I gathered the impression that American influence was being exercised in the direction of speeding up the process of completing the draft of the treaty. The Australian High Commissioner thought that the Pakistanis had no alternative except to drop or modify their last ditch positions, so as not to delay the final accords.

6. On the Kashmir question, I have already indicated the American attitude at the talks. One of the American correspondents accompanying the President expressed to me his sense of surprise at the Pakistani mis-judgment of the purpose of President Eisenhower’s visit if they expected that he would get involved in the Kashmir question beyond the expression of general sentiments about the desirability of seeking a friendly solution. In fact Winthrop Brown went further when he told me that the present handling of Indo-Pakistani problems is best calculated to produce the desired results. This step by step process, after consolidation of the ground, is better by far than any precipitate attempt to jump the fences. He emphasized the need to take up each issue as it came so that the momentum generated would facilitate further progress. He strongly stressed that this was not the time to take up the Kashmir question. By this I gathered that the remark bore reference not only to the step by step procedure but also to the situation along the northern border. The U.S. President has already expressed his sympathy and concern over that situation, which might well be a protracted one. In that case the American view seems to point to the need for keeping the question dormant for the time being. This would imply not only an easing off of the propaganda barrage, but also a cessation of Pakistan’s sabotage activities as well as the exercise of general restraint. At the same time it could imply the consideration of arrangements to soften the respective positions with a view to promoting an ultimate solution, by allowing trade across the cease-fire line and possibly also controlled tourism. Even between East and West Germany, where the situation is fraught with grave consequences to world peace, the flow of trade is now very considerable and there is a substantial exchange of visitors, besides other forms of contact. This example may have some influence on American thinking.

7. On the Kashmir question specifically, the joint communiqué of the two Presidents is silent and the nearest that it approaches to it is in the reference to “the urgent desirability of finding solutions to the existing disputes” in the area.

8. Although Pakistani correspondents tried hard to draw out Mr. Hagerty on the Kashmir question, he only provided a corrective to the exaggerated suggestions made by his opposite number, Brig. F.R. Khan. We understand that Hagerty later pulled up the Brigadier sharply for offering interpretations which were completely at variance with the correct American position.

9. All that President Ayub Khan could disclose on the subject was that his distinguished guest “wished well” for the settlement of the Kashmir problem, adding that President Eisenhower’s visit to New Delhi “may help in the settlement of the question”. He did not however reveal whether any proposals had been put forward. “How could any proposals be put forward unless the other party was prepared to talk?” he added.

10. This is all that the Pakistanis could get out of the Americans on the Kashmir question and they may well be wondering whether the effort was worth while. It should have been clear to them from the start that they were engaged on a vain errand. All that they did succeed in doing was to compel the Americans to destroy all Pakistani illusions on the subject, so that no impressions might remain which would defeat the central purpose of the visit, namely, to develop a closer and friendlier understanding with India.

11. One may hope, therefore, that in regard to Indo-Pakistani relations, the U.S. President’s firm handling would induce in the Pakistanis a mood of greater realism and sobriety. Frustrated in their aim to their American ally to intervene, they have no option but to accept the US President’s advice, namely, to seek direct settlements with India. This is a tremendous contribution which the US President has made towards promoting better Indo-Pakistan relations.

12. To compensate for the Americans’ lack of responsiveness to the Pakistani overtures on Indo-Pakistani problems, the Pakistanis have been offered some consolation in other directions. On the question of economic aid, we understand, impressed by Shoaib’s lucid and convincing exposition of the Pakistani economic situation, the need has been recognized for continuing, if not increasing, the present scale of US aid. This would denote more active steps by the Administration to back up their aid proposals in the US Congress than have been made in the past. On the question of military aid also, the Pakistani position seems to have been strengthened because of the Chinese threat and growing Russian influence in Afghanistan. If any addition to the existing scale of military aid is made, the Americans would perhaps like to reassure India by offering her the sale at concession rates of any war material that she might ask for.

13. President Ayub Khan’s thesis on the growing military vulnerability of the sub-continent as a result of Soviet road building and other activities, is believed to have fallen on receptive ears as it is in line with America’s own policy of “containment”. As regards the Pakhtoonistan issue, the Americans would no doubt wish it to be kept quiescent, as part of their general policy of maintaining the status quo in the area, unless it is changed by voluntary agreement between the parties concerned. It will however not be easy to persuade the stubborn Afghans to retract from their position, their attitude being no doubt influenced as well by their internal situation. It may indeed be discovered that the difficulties with the Afghans are more intractable than those with India. This would incidentally also demonstrate to the Americans how illusory is the bond of religion, a concept on which their policies in West Asia have been largely based, which has been crumbling from year to year.

14. On the question of the Chinese threat from the north, Pakistan’s “practical” approach has met with approval. To the Americans it must have been obvious that to strengthen Pakistan’s defence in the north, some thinning out along the cease-fire line and the Indian frontier would be inevitable. This in turn would be dependent upon some softening of the Kashmir issue. In the face of the grave common danger from the north which casts its shadow over the security and integrity of both countries, the Indo-Pakistan differences, which are not of so basic and insoluble a nature, should be sorted out and peacefully resolved, or else kept in abeyance until the proper time. The existence of this common danger might in fact, itself act as a solvent of the more stubborn disputes. This was the broad view advanced by the Americans in response to President Ayub Khan’s thesis.

15. On “joint defence” the communiqué has been discreetly silent. The Pakistani President no doubt expatiated on his ideas, whose basic inconsistencies have been sufficiently exposed by Indian public utterances. To clear their own minds, the Americans probably asked for clarifications and after their talks in New Delhi, their perspective will receive the necessary correction.

16. The reference to CENTO and SEATO in the communiqué did not exceed expectations, except those of the Pakistan, who found their ally as reluctant as ever to agree to full membership of the former.
17. As regard Pakistan’s internal political structure, the Americans listened politely to Qadir’s disquisition on the so-called “Basic Democracies” and Pakistan’s plans to frame a Constitution. It must have been clear to them how far Pakistan was from any form of representational Government; this is reflected in the carefully non-committal reference to the subject in the joint communiqué. All that the Americans could concede was that here was a regime struggling against tremendous odds, with an unenviable legacy, trying in all sincerity to keep the country afloat. But Pakistan could hardly be regarded as a bulwark of democracy or as an example for other Asian countries to follow.

18. To sum up, President Eisenhower’s visit to Pakistan will shatter many illusions, and will force Pakistan in the direction of greater realism based upon her intrinsic worth and strength, and may induce a revision of values. From India’s point of view, the visit must be welcomed as it will serve to highlight the tremendous contrast between the two countries; and reveal in sharp focus the relative importance and stature of each, both internally and internationally. The largest democracy in the world will overshadow the struggling military dictatorship, thus counteracting the tendency to create unrealistic political understanding will be generated in the American mind, which will further the cause of regional reconciliation and international understanding, and thus promote the common aim of building a stable and lasting peace in the world.

With kind regards,

Yours sincerely

Record of a talk between President Eisenhower and Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru.

New Delhi, December 10, 1959.

The Prime Minister and the President had a talk between themselves for about three quarters of an hour. They then sent for their respective advisers - Mr. Murphy and Ambassador Bunker on the US side and Secretary-General, Ambassador Chagla and me (Foreign Secretary) on our side. The following is a brief record of the talk which took place in our presence.

Prime Minister said that India had no direct interest in the world problems except insofar as these problems affected India.

President Eisenhower spoke about a rapprochement between India and Pakistan so that neither side wasted its limited resources. They should not also be engaged in looking at each other across the cease fire line. He added that there was much in common between India and Pakistan. He instanced the relations between the United States and Canada. They are two friendly neighbours and the frontier between the two countries presents no problem. India and Pakistan, he said, should not use force to settle their disputes but negotiate.

Prime Minister agreed. He said that in many ways India and Pakistan were even closer than U.S.A. and Canada. The old bitterness between the people on two sides is now almost gone. It is possible for politicians to rouse feelings again. There are senior officers in Pakistan who have close relatives in high positions in the Government of India.

President Eisenhower said that he was not trying to mediate between the two countries. He does believe, however, that satisfactory arrangements can be reached through diplomatic means and not by public men on both sides, shouting at each other. In Pakistan, thinking is too much in public. President Ayub had asked President Eisenhower’s advice. The people of Pakistan are excitable.

Prime Minister said that some satisfactory agreement regarding the border problems is possible to achieve. In fact, as agreement it has been reached in regard to the Eastern border. Since then there has been no trouble there. In January the problems of the Western border will be discussed. Financial issues were also under discussion. In regard to the Canal Waters, an agreement had practically been reached. Pakistan has, however, raised entirely new points. In the earlier discussions, an agreement had been reached that the transitional period would be limited to ten years. Pakistan now wanted the period to be extended indefinitely. Pakistan, Prime Minister remarked, had no urge for settling the Canal Waters issue because they could continue to get water from India.

President Eisenhower said that President Ayub was genuinely anxious to reach an agreement. Prime Minister said that apart from these unforeseen difficulties, it would have been a big thing if an agreement on Canal Waters could be reached.

Prime Minister then said that he wanted to be quite frank. He wanted to be fully assured that Pakistan would not stab India in the back while India was engaged in dealing with China.

President Eisenhower said that he would be in office for another 14 months. “I give you guarantee that we would not allow Pakistan to do so. I have told Ayub that anybody using our arms will have us on the other side”. Mr. Murphy added that Ayub had scoffed at the idea of using American arms against India.

Prime Minister then referred to Ayub’s objection to India’s dealing with China in regard to Ladakh and referred in this context to Pakistanis note to Secretary-General. President Eisenhower stated that his impression was that Ayub was a pro-gressive and forward looking person. President added that he could assure the Prime Minister that no US Government will forsake the present policy. Pakistan had only 10-day supply of ammunition. They could not get any ammunition from us if they took aggressive action against India. Pakistan, President added, would accept any reasonable settlement. The Pakistan Government had not complained to him that Indians were unreasonable and selfish.

Discussion then turned on Afghanistan. Pakistan said two or three years ago that two or three brigades of Pakistan could take Afghanistan. It would be a sort of police operation. President Eisenhower said that he had the impression that a feudal family was running Afghanistan. Prime Minister’s impression was that King Zahir was a progressively inclined person. For the first time, women have come out of seclusion. President Eisenhower said that in Turkey he saw veiled women this time.

Prime Minister then referred to Khrushchev’s message which the Soviet Ambassador delivered to him on the eve of President’s visit. Khrushchev, he found, was anxious for peace and a summit meeting. He also laid stress on disarmament and abolition of nuclear tests, the Soviet Union was strong, Prime Minister added, but knew that if she can destroy others she cannot escape destruction. Hence, her urge for peace. President Eisenhower said that a summit meeting could not solve all the problems. At the summit, only general principles could be laid down, the President would not have time to discuss details at the summit and without detailed discussion no firm agreement is possible. All the same, he had agreed to a summit meeting for two reasons - (1) To test how sincere was Khrushchev about peace and settlement, and (2) There is hope and belief in many countries that a summit meeting would settle the international problems. The President did not want to disappoint these hopes.

Khrushchev told Eisenhower that the principles of Marxism were immutable, but the Soviet Union had to take account of changed times. The President believed that the Soviet objective of world domination still remained. But for 10 or 15 years they certainly wanted peace. Eisenhower then referred to his talk with Khrushchev. Whenever Stalin's name came up, Khrushchev attributed all past mistakes to him. Khrushchev told the President that they (the Soviet Government) did no longer send people, with whom they disagreed, to camps in Siberia. Such people were either sent to do useful jobs where they could not do any harm or they were pensioned off. Thus, Zukhov had been given a pension. He was now writing a book on fishing. Khrushchev talked in very general terms, but when it came to discussion of details, no meeting ground could be found.

Note by Commonwealth Secretary to the Prime Minister about the possibility of Prime Minister's visit to Pakistan.

New Delhi, January 15, 1960.

Ministry of External Affairs

1. I do not know whether P.M. has seen the articles written by the Indian Pressmen who went on a tour of West Pakistan with the Pakistan President. I am placing below three articles written by Rangaswami of the Hindu and two written by Khushwant Singh.

2. Apart from the various points made by the Pakistan authorities to visiting Pressmen, P.M. must have learnt from Minister Swaran Singh that the Pakistan leaders, while stressing their desire to improve Indo-Pakistan relations, frequently mentioned that they have taken the initiative and gone more than half way and that it is for India to respond to their gesture. When Minister Swaran Singh called on President Ayub Khan, the latter did not specifically mention this point though he suggested in various round about ways about the importance of a meeting between him and P.M. P.M. must have seen from the Foreign Press Reviews that this point is constantly harped upon by the foreign press and the diplomats. Rajeshwar Dayal had mentioned this point in his various letters in the past and we have told him to explain to the Pakistan authorities that we have to wait for a suitable opportunity for a meeting between the Prime Minister of India and the President of Pakistan as another ‘fuel’ halt of the type of 1st September, 1959, would hardly be a proper response.

3. A meeting between the Pakistan President and P.M. could be informal, semi-formal or formal with specific agenda for discussion. As informal meeting could be a fuel halt en route or a visit during an informal occasion like the Horse Show Week in February. A semi-formal meeting could be a meeting to sign the Canal Waters Treaty or some Indo-Pakistan Agreement of sufficient importance. A formal meeting would have to have a specific agenda and some indication as to the questions to be discussed. The latter would inevitably include Kashmir.

4. During the last few days, various informal approaches have been made to Rajeshwar Dayal, to me and, I believe, also to Minister Swaran Singh about the desire of Pakistan authorities to invite some VIPs from India to the Horse Show at Lahore in February. We have generally indicated that none of the Ministers can easily leave during February as Parliament will be in session and, so far as a visit to the Horse Show is concerned, it will be more suitable to invite people who are interested in Polo or who are intimately connected with horse breeding and horse racing. It is clear however, that the Pakistan authorities will be only too glad to invite P.M. if he can spare a day or a day and a half to visit Lahore during the Horse Show Week.

5. I would request P.M. to consider the suggestion to visit Lahore and Rawalpindi for a day some time during the Horse Show. This will be purely an informal visit during a sports week which would redress the grievance of Pakistan authorities about response from our side to President Ayub's gesture of September 1, 1959, and yet avoid any exaggerated expectations regarding any serious political discussions. The Horse Show Week is from February 17 to February 25, 1960, and if P.M. considers the suggestions worth pursuing, I could easily drop a hint to the Pakistan authorities through Rajeshwar Dayal.

PRIME MINISTER’S SECRETARIAT

I am not quite sure about the dates of visiting dignitaries to Delhi. You might make sure who are coming in the third or fourth week of February. That time is rather a difficult one because of our Budget Session of Parliament. The most I could do is to go for a day, say on Sunday, 21st February, returning by the 22nd evening. If you think this is worthwhile, you any mention this to Rajeshwar Dayal.

My dear C.S.,

As a President Ayub Khan had just arrived in Karachi for a brief stay prior to his departure for East Pakistan on a week’s tour, I took advantage of the opportunity to call on him last evening. The President expressed his happiness at the outcome of the border conference and he offered his congratulations on its success. He immediately added, “What about the last question?” I replied that it would not doubt be taken up when the time came and we left it at that. This confirms my belief that immediately on the conclusion of the Canal Waters’ negotiations; Pakistan would make approaches for talks on the Kashmir question.

2. Regarding the recent talks, President Ayub said that he had been pleased to meet Sardar Swaran Singh, who has impressed him by his practical and straightforward approach. As desired by Sardar Swaran Singh, I mentioned to the President that his offer of Sui gas and surplus water from the Giddu Barrage had been much appreciated in New Delhi and the matter was under consideration. The President said that so far as Sui gas was concerned, its supply would present no great problem, but he was not sure about the gradients in the Jaisalmer area and if it would be possible for water from the Indus to be taken by gravity flow where it was required. He thought however that a solution could be found and that one crop could be enabled to grow in the Jaisalmer area, where the rainfall was negligible. He suggested that a working party be appointed to examine the matter from the technical viewpoint.

3. The President said that he would be glad if some members of Pakistan’s Capital Commission could be allowed to visit Chandigarh at our convenience, so that they may learn something from our experience. I told him that we had already received a letter from the Foreign Office about this and had referred the matter to Delhi. I said that we would be glad to share our experience with the Pakistan Government. Sardar Swaran Singh had made this offer to General Shaikh when he took the Pakistani delegation to Chandigarh during the recent border talks. The Pakistanis have certainly acted with speed in following up that offer.
4. I mentioned to the President that Sardar Swaran Singh had told General Shaikh that we would welcome a group of senior Pakistani ministers visiting some of our development projects, to which the President replied that he appreciated our gesture and that he would keep it in mind.

5. Our talk next turned to the Canal Waters' question and the President observed that things seemed to be going all right and that the matter should be settled within the next month or two. At present the lawyers were engaged on examination of the draft. He shared the view that a settlement of this question would benefit millions of people on both sides. In view of its intrinsic importance, it 'deserved formal signature at the highest level', he observed. I said that was also our view and that when the time came, we could take up the matter. This indicates that the President is also thinking in terms of a summit meet for the purpose of signing the Canal Waters' treaty.

6. As regards the financial talks, the President said that they had been going well enough apart from a difference of opinion regarding tax arrears and defence stores accounts. He had heard that our Finance Minister would be free to meet Mr. Shoaib about the middle of March; I offered confirmation with the remark that I hoped that by that time some understanding would have been arrived at in regard to the matters which the President had mentioned.

7. On the question of visa policy, I mentioned that there was a common expectation that travel between the two countries would become easier. The President said that while he appreciated this, there were certain difficulties for Pakistan, particularly in regard to foreign exchange. He thought that visits by persons of consequence had a good effect and that these should be encouraged. Of course there were many Muslim Pakistani's who had their families on the other side and it was natural for them to want to visit them. The East Pakistani Hindus were similarly situated. While this human problem could not be ignored, unrestricted travel would be difficult considering the state of Pakistan's finances. Nevertheless, unnecessary harassment in reporting to the police, etc., served no useful purpose and such vexations should be removed. The President suggested that I have a word with General Shaikh and Shoaib. I said that I would do so, but I was already in contact with the Foreign Office for a preliminary exchange of views and was waiting to hear from them as to when they would be ready with their proposals. I gathered the impression that there is some reluctance to liberalise the visa rules and the delay by the Foreign Office to enter into discussions is therefore not fortuitous.

8. The President was well-informed on the matters that were discussed and no words were wasted on either side by way of explanation. I felt however that he entertained some reservations regarding the response from our side, although he did not make any direct comment. What the Pakistanis are anxiously awaiting is some indication regarding a summit meeting; some speculation in this regard appeared in the Pakistani press a couple of days ago to which a denial was rather pointedly issued. Although the resolution passed by the All India Congress Committee welcoming the improvement in relations with Pakistan has received appreciative notice here, there is a feeling that the exchange between the two countries will be more equally balanced only by a top-level meeting.

With kind regards,

Yours sincerely

D.No.76-CS/60 18 January, 1960/Pausa 28,1881 Saka

My dear Dayal,

I hope you are feeling better now and the strain of the previous week, which brought on giddiness on the last day when you were in my room, has gone.

2. You will remember the enthusiasm with which Shafqat and others were pressing invitations on us for the Horse Show Week. I believe I mentioned to you that the guest they really want to invite is the Prime Minister. I enclose, in this connection, copy of a note I submitted to P.M. on 15th January and P.M.’s orders thereon.

3. I have ascertained that, despite the numerous dignitaries who descent on Delhi at this time of the year and the rigors of the Parliament Budget Session, it is possible for P.M. to go to Lahore for a day, leaving some time on Sunday, 21st February and returning on 22nd evening.

4. I would leave it to you to deal with the matter further is your inimitable style so that, like the September 1, 1959, meeting at the airport, the Pakistanis can adopt the idea as their own brain wave and seek your cooperation in getting this through.

5. I understand that several foreign dignitaries will be in Lahore during the Horse Show. The names I have heard are the Turkish President or Prime Minister and the Shah of Persia and his new wife. There may be others. The fact that there are other foreign visitors would suit us very well because, apart from the informal nature of the visit to a sports function, the presence of other foreign visitors would eliminate any exaggerated political expectations from this informal contact between Prime Minister and President Ayub Khan.

With kind regards,

Your sincerely

SECRET
Letter from High Commissioner Rajeshwar Dayal to Commonwealth Secretary M. J. Desai.

High Commissioner for India
Karachi

No. HC/8/60

My dear C.S.,

Yesterday when I went to see Ikramullah on a routine visit, he referred to the speculation in the Pakistani and Indian press regarding a possible meeting between President Ayub Khan and our Prime Minister sometime before the Commonwealth Prime Ministers’ conference. Ikramullah said that although the Foreign Office had to issue a formal denial, the general approach to the question appeared to be a positive one. Speaking off the record, he thought that the signature of the Canal Waters’ treaty should be at the highest level and this would provide a good occasion for a top-level meeting. He added that he would take up the matter with Manzur Qadir on his arrival here in a few days so that preliminary soundings may be made. Assuming that some such arrangement may be acceptable in principle, the question of timing of the visit is of importance. Knowing the Prime Minister’s preoccupations with parliament and elsewhere during the likely months, the best time would perhaps be over a week-end.

2. The line that I took was in accordance with the talk you had with me on the 13th January, just before I left Delhi. It seems evident that Manzur Qadir may wish to discuss this matter with me. I would therefore be grateful if you would send me immediate instructions for my guidance in case the matter is raised on the lines indicated by Ikramullah.

3. It is also for consideration whether in view of the fact that President Ayub Khan’s Palam visit was only in the nature of a courtesy call, the pattern set by the recent border conferences for an immediate return visit may be followed. This would have certain advantage, for, apart from meeting the requirements of protocol, it would generate a considerable amount of goodwill in both countries.

4. Qadir is due in Karachi from Dacca on the 24th January. He will be present at our Republic Day function and for the formal opening of the Chancery, and will leave for Rawalpindi on the 27th January.

With kind regards,

Yours sincerely

(Rajeshwar Dayal)

Shri M. J. Desai,
Commonwealth Secretary,
Ministry of External Affairs,
New Delhi.
Letter from High Commissioner Rajeshwar Dayal to Commonwealth Secretary M. J. Desai.

Karachi, January 24, 1960.

No. HC/TS/2/60

My dear C.S.,

I am grateful to you for your letters No. 26/CS/60 of 18/20 January and No. 27 CS/60 of 20 January regarding the question of a return visit by the Prime Minister to Pakistan, to which I have given very careful thought.

2. There has been no indication here that the Foreign Office has been thinking in terms of inviting the Prime Minister to Lahore on the occasion of the Horse Show. At my recent meeting with Ikramullah, when he raised the question of the Prime Minister's visit in view of the spate of press speculation, he never hinted at the possibility of the Horse Show being utilized for the purpose. I do not know, therefore, on what basis Shafqat was throwing out his feelers although I shared your feeling that he was angling for something. The President mentioned to me that General Thimayya and some others had been asked but he too did not hint at the possibility of an invitation at a higher level.

3. The Horse Show week is going to be a gala occasion at which the principal performers will be Pakistan's CENTO allies, namely, the Shah of Iran and his new bride, who are coming on an official visit, and the Turkish President whose visit has been described as unofficial. I myself wonder if it would be advisable for our Prime Minister to be mixed up with this somewhat motley crowd. His presence, however brief, along with the Heads of the three Muslim partners of CENTO might conceivably give rise to all kinds of unhealthy speculation. Then there would also be protocol difficulties since the Shah and the Turkish President are Heads of States. The star attraction at the Horse Show is likely to be the Shah's young Queen who no doubt will receive all the plaudits of the crowd.

4. I further doubt if the Pakistani authorities will be able to make the necessary arrangements on that occasion on a scale befitting our Prime Minister. President Ayub Khan told me that accommodation in Lahore will be very short during the time and he thought that guests would have to double up in hotel rooms, etc. Moreover, the Week runs from February 22nd to 27th, and the dates mentioned by you would not apply. A visit to Lahore during Horse Show Week would therefore be both awkward and impracticable.
5. All this points to the signature of the Canal Waters treaty as the best possible occasion for a summit meeting. The fact that the ceremony is to take place in Lahore would emphasize to the world the tremendous sacrifices which India is making in order to achieve a settlement. It would also follow the pattern set in 1948 when the Prime Minister signed an agreement on the distribution of Canal Waters with Liaquat Ali Khan. It would further demonstrate that the settlement is the result of a voluntary understanding between the two countries, and not the product of outside prompting, persuasion or pressure.

6. The Pakistani public are waiting for an opportunity to display their respect and admiration for our Prime Minister and they would not like the welcome to be diluted in any way as would be the case if the visit were to be combined with that of the Iranian and Turkish dignitaries.

7. From the point of view of our interests also, a visit to Lahore for the final settlement of the Canal Waters question would pay rich dividends in creating an upsurge of goodwill in this country. That would in itself help to take some of the sting out of the Kashmir question.

8. The Lahore visit could, as suggested by Ikramullah, be confined to a brief week-end. At the same time, I would favour an immediate return visit by President Ayub Khan, not so much to equalize the score as to demonstrate to him the magnanimity and goodwill of India’s leaders and people towards Pakistan. Here we would be adopting the useful pattern set by the two border talks.

9. So far as the Kashmir question is concerned, we could take it that however brief may be any meeting between President and Prime Minister, and whatever the occasion, it will be raised in some form or other by the Pakistanis. And, during the Commonwealth Prime Ministers’ Conference again, it is sure to be raised. Substantive discussions need not take place on those occasions, and they could be postponed to a later date, say, in July or August. It may even by thought desirable to have a preliminary exchange of views between the Pakistani Foreign Minister and perhaps the Home Minister on our side. That would give us some indication if a negotiable position has developed on the Pakistani side based upon the factual situation.

10. Although I recognize the merit of your suggestion in meeting the Pakistani clamour for a return visit, there are other factors which would supervene. I would therefore request you to give them urgent consideration, and if it is felt nevertheless, that the suggestion should be pursued, I would be grateful to have immediate telegraphic confirmation. Manzur Qadir will be here from January 24th to the 27th, which would provide me with the necessary opportunity of making appropriate soundings.
With kind regards,                      Yours sincerely,

(Rajeshwar Dayal)

New Delhi, January 25, 1960.

No. T.69 – CS/60 January 25, 1960/Magha 5, 1881 (Saka)

My dear Dayal,

Please refer to your letters No. HC/8/60 dated 21st January and No. HC/TS/2/60 dated 24th January, 1960.

2. I have sent you a telegram on the points raised in both the letters.

3. As regards the meeting between P.M. and President Ayub Khan to sign the Canal Waters treaty, P.M. though heavily occupied, will try to find a couple of days and visit Lahore or Rawalpindi, as the case may be, to sign the treaty. From all indications, however, it appears that the treaty will not be ready for signature till some time in April, 1960 or a little later. In view of the Commonwealth Prime Ministers’ Conference scheduled to start on 3rd May the signing of the treaty may well be after the Commonwealth Prime Ministers’ Conference. It was for this reason that we thought of getting the return courtesy visit out of the way earlier but, in view of the complications created by the presence of the Shah of Iran and others during the Horse Show Week, we have accepted your advice and dropped the plan of a return visit during the Horse Show Week.

4. You have, both in your letter of 21st and of 24th January, stressed that the visit by P.M. to Lahore should be immediately followed by a return visit by President Ayub Khan to Delhi on the pattern set by the two border talks. The pattern of border talks, which were held partly in one capital and partly in the other, is hardly relevant to a meeting between Prime Minister and President Ayub Khan. As a matter of fact, P.M. would prefer that there should be a decent interval between his visit to Lahore or Rawalpindi and another visit by the Pakistan President as the nature of the problems that they would discuss at their level does not admit of a rush solution within a fixed time schedule which we deliberately adopted for the border talks.

With kind regards,

Yours sincerely

My dear C.S.,

2. I had long talks with Manzur Qadir on the 25th and 26th January on various matters, and yesterday again, at his and Ikramullah’s request, at the Foreign Office. As anticipated, Qadir raised the question of an official visit by the Prime Minister to Pakistan. Qadir said that his Government were very anxious to invite the Prime Minister on any date convenient to him in March or April, before the Commonwealth Prime Ministers’ conference, and he wished to sound me about the prospects. I informed him that the indication which I had from my talks with the President was that the settlement of the Canal Waters’ question could provide a possible occasion for such a visit. Both Qadir and Ikramullah, who was present, agreed with the reasons which would make a visit particularly desired on that occasion. Qadir said that so far as the Pakistan Government were concerned, they were in any case anxious to invite the Prime Minister. If linking the invitation to the Canal Waters’ settlement would suit us better, he would equally welcome it. I asked when he thought the agreement would be ready for signature, as I had noticed that he had mentioned at a press conference that the negotiations would conclude before the middle of the year. Qadir replied that he had mentioned the time off hand in answer to a question, but he was himself hopeful that the question would be sorted out possibly by March. He explained that, apart from the points still under discussion, many of the clauses of the treaty had been drafted and were under examination. He added that if any points continued to remain unresolved, he would be prepared to suggest a ministerial level meeting here or in Delhi to clear them.

3. Qadir mentioned that from the point of view of protocol, he did not know if the President could or should sign the treaty, since, in the absence of a Parliament, he was the sole ratifying authority in Pakistan. However, he would get this point examined, but, in any case, whether the treaty was signed by the President and the Prime Minister or by Ministers from either side, the two heads of Government could be present at the ceremony to lend the full weight of their authority to the agreement.

4. Qadir said that on having our reactions, even on a tentative basis, the matter could be taken a stage further. Qadir has left for Rawalpindi, but will be back here on February 7th, when he will probably expect me to give him our reactions.

5. I learn from Ikramullah that Brohi has been asked to convey an invitation to the Prime Minister from the President.

With kind regards,

Yours sincerely

My dear C.S.,

During the three or four hours that we were in Rawalpindi on the 17th February in connection with the President's swearing in ceremony, I managed to have fairly useful talks with the President, with many of his Ministers and the two Governors, as well as with various officials.

2. President Ayub Khan looked very satisfied with himself and was inclined to be somewhat pompous unlike his very informal manner in private. But he showed me special friendliness and thanked me profusely when I was among the first to go up to him after the ceremony to congratulate him. Later, during the buffet luncheon, I had a few minutes' talk with him. He expressed satisfaction at the way in which our relations were developing and the progress that had been made in various directions. Regarding a possible summit meeting, he had been informed by Manzur Qadir of our talks. I got the impression however that he seemed skeptical of any real desire on our part for a meeting. He mentioned that he did not wish to cause any difficulties or embarrassment and would understand if there was any disinclination on our part to agree to such a meeting. I made the appropriate noises in order to reassure him....

No. HC/TS/27/60 April 14, 1960

My dear C.S.,

The news of General Azam Khan’s translation to East Pakistan has created something of a sensation here. We had heard some days ago about the strenuous efforts being made to send him there and of his vigorous resistance to the move. As in the case of General Shaikh, who was at one time being pressed into the West Pakistan gubernatorial gaddi (royal seat), one could not have been certain if the efforts would succeed. Now Azam has had to give in where Shaikh was able successfully to resist. From this certain clear conclusions can be drawn.

2. Azam has been regarded as the main contender against Ayub for the Presidential stakes. One reason for Ayub deciding to attend the Commonwealth Prime Ministers’ Conference was to keep Azam out. And by Azam’s transfer to the eastern satrapate, he will be kept out of acting charge of the office of President as well.

3. Azam’s ambitions are as great as his capacity is limited. His activities have been aimed mostly at capturing the popular imagination. The Korangi refugee colony was a propaganda success but a practical failure. Azam has a weakness for making public utterances which contain more sound than sense. And he, unlike some of his other vocal colleagues, rather pointedly avoids showering praise on the all-powerful President. His bulldozing methods have not won him friends in the Presidential Cabinet. He did however represent the Pathan element in the Cabinet, but he has been outmaneuvered by the Punjabis. His ouster from the inner circle of government clearly represents a triumph of the Punjabi clique, led by Shaikh. Shaikh’s supremacy is now unchallenged, and the Shaikh – Manzur Qadir axis, stronger than ever.

4. Akhtar Husain’s replacement by the Nawab of Kalabagh will mean virtual domination of the military as the Nawab Sahib is little more than a good farmer. Perhaps, Chief Secretary Khurshid’s influence will also increase, as it is well known that he was not hitting it off well with the assertive Akhtar Husain. But the Civil services will regret Akhtar’s departure as he, the senior most Civil Servant in Pakistan, always stood up for the interests of his fraternity, without of course imperiling his own.
5. Zakir Husain’s administration of East Pakistan has come in for a good deal of criticism. The services there are disgruntled, there have been ugly incidents in Tippera district, and Zakir’s differences with Umrao Khan are common knowledge. Now both Umrao and Zakir are leaving. Strangely enough, Umrao, who is equal in seniority to Gen. Musa, has not been promoted Lieut. General. It was thought that Zakir was on his way out of government service – he has had a long enough innings and for a policeman, has done extraordinarily well for himself – but Ayub likes him because of their past association.

6. I am somewhat apprehensive about the future of the East Bengalis in general and the Hindus of East Pakistan in particular with Azam’s transfer there. He is heavy-handed and having the mentality of a sergeant-major, will carry out his mandate to keep the Bengalis in their place in a manner that will drive discontent deeper underground. He has shown little interest in promoting Indo-Pakistan relations, and as Minister for Rehabilitation, was most unresponsive to the grievances of the Hindus.

7. The fact that two Pathans will now rule over East Bengal although Major-General Abdul Rahim Khan is too junior to be effective against General Azam shows that all pretence of consideration for Bengali sentiment has been thrown to the winds. This again reflects the triumph of Shaikh’s views, who when once asked by the previous U.S. Ambassador if a particular measure would be acceptable to the Bengalis, exclaimed “They will bloody well have to lump it”.

8. The recently announced changes also show that despite the outer façade of discipline and unity in the higher echelons of the governmental set up, all is not well within. Some Pakistanis have expressed their concern to me at these developments, as they doubt if Azam will quietly accept his ouster.

9. In the Foreign Office here, Qadir and Ikramullah too have had disagreements and Ikramullah has told me in confidence that he will retire as soon as he can get his family settled. He has the offer of a job in London which he will accept as soon as he can get away. He is keeping extremely bad health, and with the Government away in Rawalpindi, and with a weak staff, the pressure on him is enormous.

With kind regards,

Yours sincerely

My dear C.S.,

Ikramullah told me on the 16th April about the Prime Minister accepting an invitation to dine with the Pakistani High Commissioner in the U.K., General Yusuf, when President Ayub Khan will also be present. That would provide the two leaders with a fine opportunity to meet each other informally. Ikramullah said that it was a very generous gesture on the Prime Minister’s part, which he felt must be reciprocated.

2. As I had previously reported, there has been a feeling here of a lack of adequate response on our part, which has also been evident from some of the remarks made by President Ayub Khan, and some kind of a gesture had been eagerly awaited. This attitude has to some extent conditioned recent Pakistani behaviour on some of the pending issues. Now that the gesture has been made, it may perhaps lead to some modification of Pakistani complexes.

3. Ikramullah said that he would seize this opportunity to press hard again for some relaxation in visa policy. He complained about the veto being exercised by general Shaikh over this matter and said that his hands had now been strengthened to enable him to return forcefully to the charge. On some other pending issues of smaller consequence also, Ikramullah hoped to bring about a change of attitude.

4. During the last few weeks Ikramullah has been somewhat depressed. He asked me in detail about the financial talks and listened silently to my exposition of the unreasonable attitude adopted by Shoaib and his team. On the question of canal waters also, I told him of my talk with Manzur Qadir and of the narrow legalistic approach adopted by him, which had brought the negotiations to the brink of a breakdown. Again, unlike his usual habit, Ikramullah did not seek to justify or defend his Government’s stand. He is undoubtedly depressed by the recent adverse trends and is hoping that the London meeting might provide the necessary corrective.

5. Ikramullah has confided to us that he might retire at any time, partly for health reasons and partly from a sense of frustration. Contrary to his... expectations, he has to refer a lot of matters to Rawalpindi where decisions are long delayed or wrong decisions are taken. In one or two cases the Minister had disagreed with his decisions after he had communicated them to the parties concerned. And what is more, Ikramullah is being summoned to Rawalpindi more and more often which he dislikes intensely both for health reasons, as well as because of the pressure of work in the Foreign Office which is badly staffed. The old Ikramullah of post-partition days has gone and in his place there is a sadly disillusioned man. His wife too has undergone a transformation, which has been added by the EBDO proceedings against her uncle, Suhrawardy. Both the Ikramullahs confide to us freely about their personal difficulties and frustrations. He still hopes, within the limits of his authority, to be able to put our relations on the right track before he leaves the service to take up the offer of some post in London. His presence at the Commonwealth Prime Ministers’ conference should, I think, be helpful from our point of view.

6. Qadir’s absence at the London conference is somewhat significant; for one thing, Ikramullah having been in London all these years, has much better contacts. Shaoib will also be accompanying the President, but I hope Ikramullah will be able to hold his own against him, as Shaoib has a somewhat tortuous mind.

With kind regards,

Yours sincerely

My dear C.S.,

I acknowledge with thanks the receipt of your letter No. T.521-CS/60 dated April 21, 1960.

2. While the Pakistanis have been taking the line, for which they have gained some sympathy in certain foreign quarters, and of course full support at home, that we have not reciprocated the Palam gesture, they have been secretive about the Pakistani High Commissioner’s luncheon in London on the 4th of May. Ikramullah described the Prime Minister’s acceptance as a very generous gesture on our part. Manzur Qadir the other day wondered whether it would provide an adequate opportunity to the two leaders to meet; I replied that it was certainly an improvement on the refueling stop at Palam. Perhaps the vigilant London press might get hold of the news so as to remove the wrong impression of lack of responsiveness on our part which has been sedulously fostered by the Pakistanis.

3. It is correct that the job which you have mentioned has been offered to Ikramullah. Here we have increasing evidence of friction between him and his Foreign Minister. He complained to me yesterday that Qadir does not pull his weight and is overruled on policy matters concerning relations with India by the Ministry of the Interior and others. He complains of over work and actually suggested to my wife that she mention to Qadir the need for supplying him with an additional Secretary with the removal of the Government to Rawalpindi, Ikramullah is getting more and more out of touch with their thinking and he questions me eagerly whenever I talk to Qadir or any of the Ministers in order to gather information. He is intriguing to prevent Qadir from attending on the President in London and I was surprised to hear from him yesterday that Qadir is himself not aware that a decision was subsequently taken to the effect that his presence was not required! Ikramullah said that Qadir’s intervention in the canal waters’ talks would not be helpful because of his legalistic approach and his habit of creating difficulties where there were none. He thought that it would not be difficult for the President and Prime Minister to agree to a simple workable formula without introducing the legal niceties which are so dear to Qadir’s heart.

4. I am seeing the President tomorrow at noon when I hope to get some insight into his thinking on the various pending problems.

Yours sincerely,

0322. TOP SECRET

Letter from High Commissioner Rajeshwar Dayal to Commonwealth Secretary M. J. Desai.

Karachi, April 25, 1960.

High Commissioner for India
Karachi

No. HC/TS/35/60 April 27, 1960/Vaisakha 7, 1882 (Saka)

My dear C.S.,

I called on President Ayub Khan yesterday on the eve of his departure to attend the Commonwealth Prime Ministers’ conference, when we discussed at length the relations between our two countries.

2. The President said that he was still trying his best to carry out the policy of achieving negotiated settlements with India, but things had not been going too well lately and he sought my views as to what could be done to regain the momentum.

3. I replied that while it would be unrealistic to expect a settlement of every problem in the first attempt, the cumulative result of the failure of the financial talks, the bogging down of the canal waters’ negotiations, the failure to hold talks on liberalization of visa policy, etc., had set a reverse trend in motion. In the present stage of our relations, a state of stable equilibrium was not possible; either we moved forward or we slipped back. This was exemplified by the recurrence of incidents along the eastern border and by a worsening in the tone of the press on both sides. Unless serious note was taken of these adverse developments and a determined effort made to reverse the present trend, it would be more difficult to deal with the problems which loomed ahead.

4. The President agreed generally, adding that the momentum generated after the Palam meeting was now petering out. Surprisingly enough, he sought to place the blame on lack of an adequate measure of responsiveness on our part. I expressed regret that he should hold such an opinion which was far removed from the facts. Indeed, the contrary impression prevailed in India. The President said that he must regretfully say that he had the feeling that India was not anxious to have an overall settlement with Pakistan. When I pressed him to enlighten me as to the basis for his opinion, he said that he felt that we were not prepared even to talk about the Kashmir issue. He added that without some understanding on the Kashmir issue there could be no real normalization of our relations.

5. At this point the President exclaimed: “Look at Mr. (Krishna) Menon’s recent speech in Parliament* we know full well that he always has his powder dry for Pakistan. We know too that he is under sharp attack at home and so has tried to win a few cheap cheers by attacking Pakistan, thereby also attempting to turn attention away from the Chinese menace”. I strongly contested all this, pointing out that we had a Parliament which was in session, where a motion on one aspect of the Kashmir issue had been raised to which the Government had to make a reply. I also pointed to the almost daily effusions of Khurshid, the so called Azad Kashmir “President”, remarking that the less propaganda on Kashmir the better. The President interjected drily: “But there is a great difference between Khurshid and a Cabinet Minister of the Government of India". Realizing that no amount of argument could change his views about the matter, I turned to the wider question which the President had raised.

6. I said that if the President still adhered to his view that there should be a rational and realistic approach to our problems, as declared at Palam, then we should continue to follow the method hitherto employed, namely, to isolate the various problems and to take them up one by one, with each solution generating its own momentum. The President did not dispute this, but he said that he was bound to inform me of the firm impression which he had regarding the inadequacy of our responses.

* Statement on April 23, 1960 in Lok Sabha on a Resolution demanding withdrawal of Kashmir case from the UN.
7. I attempted to controvert this by saying that, contrary to his impression, we had in fact gone out of our way to be helpful, in spite of disappointments. For example, the agreement in principle to allow some through passenger and goods traffic by rail through India was a big concession, as it would be of much greater advantage to Pakistan than any facilities which could be offered to us on the E.B.R. We had also agreed to allow two special trains for Hajis to pass through India from East Pakistan. These were gestures which I felt should not be lost on the President, especially as they were made at a time when we felt that Pakistan’s attitude had delayed or blocked progress in the canal waters’ and financial negotiations.

9. The President then referred to the canal waters’ negotiations and said that our figures disclosed a proposed withdrawal of something like 4.5 million acre feet of water from the three western rivers which he thought was excessive, considering that Pakistan had renounced all rights to the three eastern rivers. I quoted some figures to convince him that Pakistan would be securing an overwhelming advantage in regard to the waters of the Indus Basin and that in our common approach to the problem we should take a broad and statesman like view of the matter. The President hoped that the remaining points could be settled satisfactorily in the next round of talks. As regards article 10, he was hopeful of an acceptable formula being found which could insulate the settlement from the Kashmir issue. I asked his views as regards the place of signature of the treaty and he said that he would still welcome the understandings previously reached in this regard.

10. The President then went on to say that a settlement of the canal waters’ question would impose a staggering burden on Pakistan and for ten long years they would be breaking their backs and straining their human and material resources in implementing the agreement. He said that it was not fully realized what a tremendous task this would entail and the multifarious problems which it would create for Pakistan. They would not only have to deal with the increased menace of water logging in the Punjab but also with the gigantic task of irrigating the desert which provided the only hope of Pakistan’s future economic progress. I said that the task was no doubt a formidable one, but Pakistan would be receiving a million dollars worth of aid and we would be glad to supply cement and other materials to facilitate construction.

11. The Pakistanis are now beginning to realize that such intensive development of their water resources would not be an unmixed blessing. Inflation, which is already high, is bound to increase further. The Pakistanis lack engineering skills and the essential materials and they would be hard put to it to secure them. Ghulam Faruque had asked whether we would be able to help with cement, steel, machines, etc., and also with technical assistance. As the construction programme will have to be carried out according to a fixed schedule, it will certainly impose a tremendous strain on Pakistan’s rickety administrative machinery and economy. With 9 million acres of land water logged, the new canals before they reach the desert are bound to create further havoc in the north.

12. The President went on to say that our countries had a great opportunity now of getting together. The history of the sub-continent, he said, had shown that invaders had always been attracted by internal differences and the same could well happen again. Said he: “What if I, out of a sense of frustration, were to invite the Communists; there would be an immediate danger to India. Or, if there was a breakdown here or in India, the Communists could march straight in”, he said that he had refrained scrupulously from taking any advantage of India’s difficulties with the Chinese and added: “If there had been an unscrupulous man in my place, what would have been there to prevent him from taking the fullest advantage of India’s difficulties?”. I said that while we appreciated his restraint, he must realize that if the Chinese were breathing down India’s neck now, they might be doing the same to Pakistan tomorrow.
Ayub replied that showed that we must make common cause to keep off intruders from the sub-continent. He then went on to expatiate on his theory about the menace from the north. The Russians have been trying to push their way south; first they brought pressure to bear on Greece and having been foiled there, they turned to Turkey, demanding the provinces of Kars and Ardahan. Their next target was Iran which is unfortunately still in a bad way internally. Now the Russians are pressing down on Afghanistan and increasing their influence there hoping to work their way down to the Persian Gulf and the Arabian Sea areas. Their next targets could well be Pakistan and India. On the other side, the Chinese, whose population is growing unchecked, are casting covetous eyes on the rich and sparsely populated lands of Indo-China, Thailand and Burma. Within ten years’ time, this pincer movement might well develop and gain irresistible force, and then we would both be completely cut off. The President said that the trouble with our countries was that our leaders had “never been under fire” – which he repeated several times and we could therefore not appreciate the dangers which loomed ahead. Western statesmen were more fortunate, as they had been through the ordeal of fire and could take a realistic view of the situation. If our countries realized the unhappy fate which awaited us if we continued squabbling with each other, then we would adopt a more generous approach in regard to our mutual problems which after all, in the context of the potential dangers, were of no great intrinsic consequence.

13. I listened to the President’s theses with sole comment that irrespective of our different approaches to the problems on which the President had expounded, we regarded the attainment of just and fair settlements with Pakistan as an objective worthy in itself.

14. I asked the President about his travel plans; he said that he was anxious to return on the 13th May as he had a lot of work to do here, and he could not understand why the Commonwealth Prime Ministers’ conference had been spun out to eleven days. His Begum would be accompanying him for a medical check up, and his son-in-law and daughter for a “jaunt”. He said that he would be moving up to Murree in June and hoped to see us there. I wished him bon voyage and took my leave.

15. The President spoke very frankly and earnestly and without bitterness, but sometimes almost with a sense of resignation. I did what I could to dispel his imaginary doubts and fears. His alarmist views as regards the impending doom which awaits the sub-continent, might receive a corrective when he meets the Prime Minister in London. Although he assured me that he was an optimist and would keep on trying to improve our relations, he left me in no doubt that he strongly felt that it was Pakistan that was being called upon to make all the concessions and approaches. This seems to be almost an obsession with him, and Brohi confirmed that the President stuck ruggedly to this view, presumably despite his attempts to correct it. The talk showed that Ayub Khan’s general attitude has hardened, though with some exceptions, his approach to individual questions seemed flexible enough.

16. I am sending two copies of this letter in case you would like to forward one to the Prime Minister.

With kind regards,

Yours sincerely

0323. Record of the recommendations of the Meeting of the Indo–Pakistan Information Consultative Committee.

Mr. Z. A. Bhutto, Minister of National Reconstruction and Information Leader

Mr. Afzal Iqbal
Member

Mr. Zain – ul Abedin
Member

Mr. Rashid Ahmed Adviser

Mr. Abdus Salam
Representative of the Press
In the inaugural session on the 27th of April, 1960, the Leader of the Indian Delegation while welcoming the Leader and Members of the Pakistan Delegation underlined the useful work that had been done earlier by the IPICC. He expressed appreciation of the distinct improvement that had marked the relations between the two countries since President Mohd. Ayub came to power. He commended for the consideration of the Committee an examination of some specific problems such as banning of books and newspapers, prevention of personal and scurrilous attacks on national leaders, facilities granted to agencies and correspondents to enable free flow of news.

2. The Leader of the Pakistan Delegation in reciprocating the sentiments expressed by the Leader of the Indian Delegation stated that there was ground for agreement and common thinking. He thought it was high time that the two countries turned their backs to some of the petty troubles and tried to bring about a mutual sense of harmony and cordiality.

3. The Leaders of the two Delegations asked the Committee to explore ways and means of ensuring greater and continued improvement in the relations between the Press, Radio and other media of mass communication in the two countries so that they could contribute to the solution of outstanding problems.
4. At the meeting held on the 28th April the Committee considered the recommendations of the Sub – Committees on Press, and Radio, Films and Publications. The reports were adopted.

5. It was agreed to release a joint communiqué simultaneously from Delhi and Rawalpindi.

6. Press

(1) The Committee emphasized the important role of the Press in the promotion of better understanding and cordial relations between India and Pakistan. It noted certain trends in a section of the Press in both countries which were not in consonance with the spirit of the Indo – Pakistan Agreements of 1948 and 1950. The Committee agreed that in view of the change in the approach to Indo – Pakistan matters it would not serve any useful purpose to make a detailed examination of the infringements of the Agreements.

(2) The Committee therefore felt that it would be more appropriate to make a fresh start by a detailed study of the provisions of the Joint Press Code adopted by the Press Organizations of the two countries in May 1950. It recommended adoption of the following resolution:

“The Indo – Pakistan Information Consultative Committee:
Noting the common desire of the Press of both countries to exercise restraint and to assist in the maintenance and promotion of friendly relations between India and Pakistan;
Recalling that an Indo – Pakistan Joint Press Code had been adopted in May 1950 to facilitate further implementation of the Indo – Pakistan Agreement;
Reiterates that the Press in both countries observe voluntary restraint in publishing matter concerning both countries: -

(a) By avoiding dissemination of news calculated to undermine relations between the majority and minority communities in the two countries;
(b) By refusing to give currency to mischievous opinion of individuals or organizations likely to rouse communal passions or create a sense of insecurity among members of the minority community;
(c) By excluding rigorously from the Press of each country opinion directed against the territorial sovereignty of the other or purporting to incite war;
(d) By seeking through normal Press channels or Government Agencies verification of news of communal incidents before it is published;

(e) By exercising due care and caution in publication of reports of communal incidents;

(f) By avoiding alarming headlines for reports of communal incidents;

(g) By avoiding publication of pictures, poems and cartoons likely to excite communal passions;

(h) By affording full facilities to Governments for correction or contradiction of published reports;

(i) By examining objectively outstanding problems between the two countries with a view to promoting just and amicable solutions;

(j) By confining comment to the merits of the problem or problems in dispute and not making such problem or problems the basis of a general attack on the two Governments;

(k) By eschewing personal, contumacious or scurrilous attacks on the respected leaders of either country or the religion, culture and faith of the people of both countries; and

(l) By avoiding historical controversies which may create or revive bitterness between the two countries.

(3) The Committee recommends:

(a) That the two Governments ensure the widest possible publicity for the Code, a copy of which should be made available to all newspapers and periodicals in both countries;

(b) That infringement of the Code by newspapers be brought to the notice of the newspaper concerned by appropriate newspaper associations or by Governments;

(c) That adequate facilities be provided to correspondents of both countries in respect of stay and movement for collecting and filing news; and

(d) That in order to review the working of the Agreements and the revised Press Code the Committee meet at six – monthly intervals or oftener, if necessary.”

(4) It was agreed that the Government of Pakistan would request the Government of East Pakistan to review the cases of Indian newspapers and periodicals which are banned entry. A list was provided to the Pakistan Delegation.

7. Radio, Films and Publications

(1) The Committee of officials set up at the General Meeting of the Indo – Pakistan Information Consultative Committee on April 27, 1960, held its meeting to consider the effect of broadcasting services, films and publications on the need to create and maintain a peaceful and friendly atmosphere, as required under the Indo – Pakistan Agreements of 1948 and 1950 and to suggest ways and means of securing that objective.

(2) The Committee re–affirmed the principles already enunciated in the Agreements, particularly those mentioned in para 4 (iii) (a) and (b) of Indo – Pakistan Agreement of 1948 and also sub – paragraphs 7 and 8 of Section C and Section D of the Indo – Pakistan Agreement of April 8, 1950.

(3) The Committee thought that the creation and maintenance of a peaceful and friendly climate of public opinion in both the countries was necessary in order to promote understanding of each other and also to help the Governments to resolve outstanding disputes in a peaceful and friendly manner. In that context, the treatment of various subjects through the mass communication media, e.g. radio, films, publications, etc. assumed special importance. The Committee felt that the common attitude of the two countries in this respect should be to promote and encourage objective and helpful treatment of material, particularly that relating to subjects in dispute, and also to ensure that presentation reflects the attitude of friendly countries resolved to remain friendly."

Broadcasting

(4) The Committee considered the problems arising out of broadcasting services. The two Delegations reviewed the trends of broadcasts and exchanged information about the measures recently taken to achieve the results envisaged under the Indo – Pakistan Agreements, and discussed at professional level various suggestions to effect further improvement.

Publications

(5) The Committee considered that each Government should take effective steps to discourage the production, circulation and sale of books and publications carrying matter which is calculated to undermine the provisions of the Agreements.
Films

(6) The Committee stressed the desirability of expeditious examination and issue of certificate of exhibition for official newsreels and documentaries.

8. The Committee came to the conclusion that the existing practice of exchanging formal notes detailing the alleged infringements of Indo – Pakistan Agreements needed reconsideration.

0324. Join Communique issued on the meeting of the Indo – Pakistan Information Consultative Committee.

New Delhi, April 28, 1960.

The Indo – Pakistan Information Consultative Committee met in New Delhi on April 27th and 28th, 1960. The Pakistan Delegation was led by the Minister for National Reconstruction and Information, Government of Pakistan, Mr. Z. A. Bhutto, while the Indian Delegation was led by Dr. B.V. Keskar, Minister for Information and Broadcasting, Government of India.

The Committee reviewed the working of the Indo – Pakistan Agreement of 1948 and the Prime Minister’s Agreement of 1950 in relation to the information media. The Committee recognized the vital role that the Press, Radio and other information media could play in promoting greater understanding and in helping the Governments concerned to resolve outstanding disputes in a peaceful and friendly manner.

The Committee felt that the common attitude of the two countries should be to promote and encourage objective and helpful treatment of material, particularly that relating to subjects in dispute and to ensure that presentation reflects the attitude of friendly countries resolved to remain friendly.

The Committee welcomed the distinct improvement and greater understanding that had come to mark the relations between the two countries since the assumption of office by President Mohammed Ayub Khan.

The Indo – Pakistan Information Consultative Committee, whose members include representatives of the Press of Pakistan and India, examined in detail the joint Press Code which was adopted by the All India Newspaper Editors Conference (AINEC) and the Pakistan Newspaper Editors Conference (P.N.E.C.) in 1950, and in view of the desire of the press in both countries to assist in the promotion and maintenance of friendly relations adopted the following resolution reaffirming and enlarging the principles governing the Press Code.

"Noting the common desire of the press of both countries to exercise restraint and to assist in the maintenance and promotion of friendly relations between India and Pakistan;

"Recalling that an Indo – Pakistan Joint Press Code had been adopted in May 1950 to facilitate further implementation of the Indo – Pakistan Agreement;

"Reiterates that the Press in both countries observe voluntary restraint in publishing matter concerning both countries:

(a) By avoiding dissemination of news calculated to undermine relations between the majority and minority communities in the two countries;

(b) By refusing to give currency to mischievous opinion of individuals or organizations likely to rouse communal passions or create a sense of insecurity among members of the minority community;

(c) Held by excluding rigorously from the Press of each country opinion directed against the territorial sovereignty of the other or purporting to incite war;

(d) By seeking through normal Press channels of Government Agencies verification of news of communal incidents before it is published;

(e) By exercising due care and caution in publication of reports of communal incidents;

(f) By avoiding alarming headlines for reports of communal incidents;

(g) By avoiding publication of pictures, poems and cartoons likely to excite communal passions;

(h) By affording full facilities to Governments for correction or contradiction of published reports;

(i) By examining objectively outstanding problems between the two countries with a view to promoting just and amicable solutions;

(j) By confining comment to the merits of the problem or problems in dispute and not making such problem or problems the basis of a general attack on the two Governments;
(k) By eschewing personal, contumacious or scurrilous attacks on the respected leaders of either country or the religion, culture and faith of the people of both countries; and

(l) By avoiding historical controversies which may create or revive bitterness between the two countries.

Letter from High Commissioner Rajeshwar Dayal to Commonwealth Secretary M. J. Desai.

High Commissioner for India
Karachi

No. HC/TS/45/60 May 17,1960/Vaisakha 27, 1882  (Saka)

My dear C.S.,

In this letter I would like to report on the repercussions to the U2 affair; these may set in motion a chain reaction which could have significant consequences.

2. The Pakistani apologia made in London by Ikramullah days after the incident and following consultations between Aziz Ahmed and the State Department, has invited general ridicule and disbelief. Soviet Ambassador Kapitsa told me yesterday that it was meaningless. In the face of the American confession, it is the best that the Pakistanis could do to exculpate themselves by indulging in this rigmarole.

3. The technical aspects of the flight are, I think, now clear enough. There is no doubt that the plane took off from an airfield near Peshawar, most probably Spinkai Deri. It had developed engine trouble which was taken care of by an American repair crew. The Pakistanis obviously have no say in the comings and goings of Americans military planes and it is possible that they did not know anything about the U2's highly secret equipment or its dangerous errand. The Russians discount this, no doubt because they do not wish Pakistan to evade its responsibility.

4. The somber fact is that there are aerodromes in and around Peshawar, notably Cherat and Spinkai Deri, which are under the exclusive control of the Americans and have been built by American personnel. Our information is that the Pakistanis are not allowed to enter the area except under strict control.

5. Some six months ago, there was a Pakistani gazette notification for the acquisition of some 200 sq. miles of land, some four miles south of Peshawar on the Kohat road in the area of Badhber. This acquisition was made for the purpose of construction of vast air installations including underground hangars, residences, stores and, perhaps, missile bases as well. Teams of American technicians have been pouring into the area for the last couple of months and the whole project is being handled on a "top secret" basis. It is thought that missile launching sites may already exist in Gilgit and Cherat; the new field would provide a third such site.

6. These facts could not be unknown to the Russians. Their charge that American bases exist in Pakistan, though contestable on purely technical grounds, is otherwise perfectly correct.

7. As regards the repercussions of the affair on the minds of the Pakistanis, there is no doubt that it has come as a rude shock. Instead of the American military alliance being a source of strength and security to Pakistan, it is suddenly discovered that it has brought with it dangers such as had never been contemplated. Krushchev’s stern warning that any further espionage incursions would be met by instant retaliation against the taking off base, has brought forcefully home to the Pakistanis the dangers to which they have exposed themselves.

8. To help allay the fears of the public, and perhaps also to soothe the Russians, stories have been appearing in the papers implying Pakistan’s willingness to consider offers of economic and technical assistance from the Soviet Union. In fact, Acting Foreign Minister Bhutto asked Kapitsa whether the USSR would be interested in helping Pakistan to set up a steel mill and to develop its oil resources. Kapitsa pointed out that Abul Kassem Khan, in the course of his recent round the world peregrinations, had been proclaiming aloud that Pakistan, true to its loyalty to the West, had spurned Soviet offers of aid. If the Pakistanis were serious, Kapitsa suggested that they should put in their request in writing in order to avoid any subsequent disavowal. He also said that he saw little possibility of economic co-operation so long as Pakistan’s policies remained hostile towards the Soviet Union, and held up the case of India as an example of a country following a wise and realistic foreign policy.

9. These grim developments are bound to occasion an anxious reappraisal of Pakistan’s policy towards the Soviet Union. If there is no basic change in content, because of the economic and military shackles which bind Pakistan to the Americans, there is bound to be a change in emphasis and approach.
Kapitsa resented Ayub Khan’s performance at the Commonwealth Conference where he set himself up as a champion of anti-Communism, and lost no opportunity of attacking the USSR. Perhaps the Pakistani President would now be more discreet in airing his tiresomely repeated views about the pressures from the north.

10. Another inevitable consequence will be the development of friction with the American military set-up here, which functions as a state within a state enjoying extra-territorial jurisdiction, as the Pakistanis are bound, to safeguard their own skins, to pry more closely into American military activities which the Americans are sure to resent. The Pakistani public also would be more watchful and increasingly critical of the omnipresence of the American military personnel and suspicious of its activities.

11. These trends will of course take time to mature and to be felt, but the rocket which brought down the U2 has also struck a blow at Pakistan’s foreign policy of sheer dependence upon a single great power which uses its weak and scattered allies to suit its own purposes, regardless of the dangers to which it exposes them.

With kind regards,

Yours sincerely

High Commissioner for India
Karachi

No. HC/TS/ 48/60

May 24, 1960/Jyaistha 3, 1882 (Saka)

My dear C.S.,

Will you please refer to your letter No. T.666.-CS/60 dated May 19, 1960, regarding the U2 affair?

2. I had previously reported that in my judgment the episode would create all kinds of pulls and pressures which would inevitably affect Pakistan’s foreign policy and relations. As days go by, evidence is gathering which supports this assessment.

3. Public opinion in Pakistan has become thoroughly alarmed at the dangers to which their Government’s foreign policy has suddenly exposed them. Far from being a source of strength and security, it is suddenly discovered that the American alliance has brought with it unknown dangers. In place of a protective umbrella of American military might, Pakistan suddenly and unwittingly finds itself exposed to retaliatory Soviet rockets. The cynicism with which the Americans had exposed their weak ally to Soviet fury, has left the Pakistani public aghast. The bitter truth has at last dawned that in the power struggle between the two Titans, Pakistan is nothing but a small tool. The people’s anxiety is reflected by the Urdu press which is full of scathing articles against the Americans. There is a renewed respect for India’s foreign policy which has kept her out of the line of fire and has, at the same time, brought considerable economic and political benefits in its wake.

4. The Pakistani Government has reacted to this situation by making friendly gestures towards the Russians. The Pakistanis are denying all complicity in the U2 affair and placing the entire blame on the Americans. The Russians have seized the opportunity to render the Pakistani bases ineffective by their threat of rocked retaliation. They may try further to breakdown the wall of mutual exclusiveness between the two countries to the discomfiture of the Americans. Now that Pakistan is right in the vortex of the cold war, its local manifestations will be interesting to watch from the side lines.

5. The U2 affair has brought about a vital change in Pakistan’s strategic situation. The Maginot line mentality, which American military aid had engendered, has collapsed overnight. It is suddenly discovered that instead of affording protection, American military aid has actually exposed Pakistan's frontiers to the wrath of the Russians. Unless the Russians get satisfaction, which is extremely unlikely, there is no doubt that trouble will develop for Pakistan in one form or another. The Pakhtoonistan issue, already on the boil, could easily erupt with a little Soviet prodding. Then the northern frontier with China, which has been fairly quiescent till now, could suddenly erupt now that the winter snows have melted in the mountain passes. The Chinese have lost no time in taking up the cry against the Americans and in their present mood, they might not like to miss an opportunity to create embarrassment for Pakistan in the Gilgit region where a missile base is said to exist and which they could regard as aimed against them. Pakistan's strategic position in the north-west frontier has become extremely vulnerable and exposed. In fact, facing two hostile world powers and the troublesome Afghans, Pakistan's position is infinitely worse than India's was last summer when the Chinese had activated India's northern border. Along that border a position of stalemate has been reached, which neither India nor China may wish to disturb for the time being at least. But along Pakistan's north-western border, the position is both fluid and agitated.

6. Just as we would have been embarrassed last summer if Pakistan had adopted a hostile attitude towards us, so now Pakistan would be in dire straits indeed if tension were to develop with India. As a result of these developments, Pakistan would now not only try to avoid doing anything to worsen its relations with India, but, on the contrary, it would have strong reasons to improve them.
Pakistan's rulers may therefore be more receptive now to our proposal for a "no war" declaration, which would reassure them about their frontiers with India and allow them to assume defensive postures along their north-western border.
Pakistan would also be extremely ill-advised to continue sabotage and subversion in Kashmir.

7. That a reappraisal in Pakistan thinking towards India is taking place is definite from various indications. Our general restraint regarding the U2 episode has been welcomed here and it has been noticed that no advantage has been sought to be derived from Pakistan's embarrassment. The papers credit India with the genuine feeling that we desire good neighbourly relations. It is even acknowledged that the threat from China has not influenced Indian opinion in this direction. It is at last recognized that India's bitter memories of partition have been forgotten and that the near-settlement of the canal waters' issue, as well as the elimination of the border problems and the development of trade relations, are contributing towards the development of friendly relations. An unsolicited testimonial has even been awarded to the diplomatic envoys of the two countries!
8. If the above analysis is correct, the U2 incident may provide a silver lining to our relations with Pakistan. Pakistan's basic strategic weakness has been rudely exposed, and there is a more realistic appreciation of the dangers which beset the country in place of the obstinately held hallucination about India. The President who prides himself as a military strategist and a man of vision, could hardly have failed to grasp the truth. The extent to which he has done so has to be ascertained when I have an opportunity of meeting him on the cool heights of Murree where one hopes the atmosphere will be conducive to calm and objective thought.

With kind regards,

Yours sincerely

New Delhi, May 26, 1960.

D. O. No. T696 – CS/60 May 26, 1960/Jyaistha 5, 1882 (Saka)

My dear Dayal,

2. Now that the President has returned, there should be concrete moves and these will show whether General Shaikh is being edged out.

3. As regards the U2 affair, I agree that the Pakistanis are rather rattled and the American efforts to re-assure them have been rather half-hearted. If there is any re-thinking in the higher quarters, the conclusion of the Canal Waters Agreement should give those in authority the necessary excuse for re-orientation of Pakistan’s policy towards India. Pakistan President’s petulant observations about our Prime Minister’s attitude, however, indicate that there is little re-thinking in the higher quarters so far. I agree with you that your contacts with President Ayub Khan and his Ministers during your Murree stay should prove extremely interesting.

With kind regards,

Yours sincerely

0328. TOP SECRET

Letter from High Commissioner Rajeshwar Dayal to Commonwealth Secretary M. J. Desai.

Murree, June 9, 1960

High Commissioner for India
Camp office: Hoti House, Murree

No. 1/HC/TS/60

June 9, 1960

My dear C.S.,

On the morning of the 6th June — immediately after our arrival here—my wife and I called on the President and Begum Ayub Khan to wish them Id Mubarak. We were very cordially received and the President was obviously happy to see us. He asked me whether we were comfortably installed and said that if there were any difficulties, I should not hesitate to inform him. He said he realized the inconvenience to which foreign missions had been put by the move to Rawalpindi but he hoped that there would be sufficient opportunities in Murree for informal meetings and conversations.

2. The President said that a lot has been happening in the world since our last meeting. He regretted that the cold war should have erupted again and that political differences between the great powers should have degenerated into an exchange of abuse. The fault, according to him, lay heavily at the doors of the Soviet Prime Minister. This was a time for great vigilance on the part of all countries in order to prevent the situation from taking a dangerous turn.

3. Commenting on the Turkish situation, the President observed that while he was staying overnight at Istanbul on his way to London, ex-President Celal Bayar who was there to meet him, received an urgent telephone call from Menderes who was in Ankara, informing him of the situation and of his intention to declare martial law. President Ayub tried to persuade Bayar to return to Ankara and to speak to Ismet Inonu and other opposition elements in an attempt to patch up the differences. He was, however, astonished to find that the President had already acquiesced with alacrity to the declaration of martial law. President Ayub thought that Bayar was even more unreasonable and uncompromising than Menderes and he, unbecoming to a President, openly took a partisan line in the controversy that was raging. Bayar and Menderes, by their rigidity and stubbornness, were asking for trouble and they got it in full measure.

4. President Ayub then went on to speak about the difficulties under which the common man was suffering in our countries and how much patience and forbearance he had shown. It was the task of governments to help to alleviate his lot, otherwise there would be trouble. The President was extremely critical of the role of the intelligentsia which kept itself aloof from responsibility but felt free to criticize. He was especially bitter about the lawyer class whose approach he described as essentially negative. While they were loud in their criticism, they did not have any constructive suggestions to offer. Unlike the older democracies of the west, the President regretted that political differences in Asian countries degenerated into personal vendettas which inevitably led to chaos and disorder.

5. The President undoubtedly had in mind the parallel between the situation in Turkey and Pakistan. The bitter criticism of the Pakistani regime offered by Chief Justice Kayani and Mr. Lari must have been on his mind. There is also much criticism of the EBDO proceedings which are steamrolling many a political career. Far from being a matter of opprobrium, to be EBDOed is now becoming almost a distinction.

6. The so-called basic democracies will, it is said, start functioning in July and nominations and appointments are going on. The ji-huzoor (Yes men) and landlord type is heavily represented and the Aman-Sabha (Peace Councils) character of these bodies is being widely remarked upon. The President told the Australian High Commissioner, Cutler, who saw him the other day that he hoped to get the top and bottom tiers of these bodies activated soon leaving the other two tiers to be completed subsequently. Cutler tried to prevail upon him that it would be wiser to start building from the ground up to the ceiling rather than to leave a gap in between. My own fear, however, is that when these so-called basic democracies are set in motion, they will present a ready-made organization for discontent to filter all the way down to village level. The appetite grows by what it feeds on, and the elected members, at any rate, will demand more in the way of power and authority. The impotence of these bodies will be fully exposed once they start functioning. This will increase the sense of frustration and disillusionment. The hope of the regime that these advisory bodies will give the people a sense of participation is doomed to disappointment from the start. Will the regime have the wisdom to keep ahead of popular discontentment or will it be pushed into making hasty measures?

7. The President must have had a lot on his mind when I saw him the other day. There have been rumours, centering around General Shaikh, regarding disagreements in the Presidential cabinet over the allocation of portfolios. It is said that Shaikh has offered resistance to being divested of the powerful Interior portfolio in favour of Zakir Husain and has preferred reversion to the army, which of course would be out of the question as he is senior to General Musa. It is said that he has tried to enlist the support of the top military brass which is believed to be against the displacement of Generals by civilians in the Presidential set-up. General Musa is thought to be of the view, no doubt keeping the Turkish situation in mind, that it is too early to replace the Generals by civilians. In view of the Soviet threats to bomb the bases from which hostile aircraft originate, Pakistan’s international horizon is heavily beclouded. This may be another reason why the military think it hazardous to change horses in mid stream. Umrao Khan is said to be backing General Shaikh while Bakhtiar Rana’s position is somewhat equivocal. This might well cause the President to reconsider any question of a Cabinet reshuffle at the present time.

8. The President did not raise the question of Indo-Pakistan relations with me. No doubt there will be sufficient opportunities for such discussions in the days ahead. I understood from Cutler however that there is some disappointment that the London meetings did not result in a greater measure of cordiality and personal understanding. However, the President is still believed to adhere to the view that the signature of the Canal Waters treaty as already planned would generate a powerful momentum for the further improvement of relations. The President told Cutler that he has given firm instructions to his negotiators at Washington to take a broad view of things and to desist from excessive legalism in completing the remaining clauses of the draft treaty. It is believed here that the negotiations would be successfully concluded by the end of the month, the treaty being ready for signature at the highest level soon thereafter.

9. The new dangers looming over Pakistan’s north and north-western frontiers seem to have introduced a sense of greater sobriety in the Pakistani approach to our mutual problems. This is therefore a good moment for positive initiatives. The President’s knowledge of military strategy must inexorably lead him to the conclusion that when Pakistan faces a grave threat on the north and north-west, it would be the part of statesmanship to lower the pressures along the east, so that Pakistan is not forced to face two political and military fronts at the same time. Pakistan’s difficulty is therefore India’s opportunity to strive for fair and mutually beneficial understandings.

With kind regards,

Yours sincerely

Letter from High Commissioner Rajeshwar Dayal to Commonwealth Secretary M. J. Desai.

Karachi, June 29, 1960.

High Commissioner of India
Camp Office: Hoti House, Murree

No. HC/TS/42/60 June 29, 1960

My dear C.S.,

I had a long talk with President Ayub Khan at a small reception which he gave on the 23rd June for the half a dozen Heads of Missions who are in Murree. The President greeted us with his usual cordiality and his Begum warmly embraced my wife, her daughters all coming up to greet their “Aunty”. My colleagues were rather surprised to see the way in which we were greeted as they were not aware of our personal relations with the President and his family.

2. Ayub took me aside and talked to me for most of the evening. I opened the conversation by remarking that he had a very busy time, what with Cabinet meetings and meetings of the Economic Council which had finalized the Second Five Year Plan. Ayub said that hard work was a categorical imperative for our countries as we have to make up for lost time and 200 years of colonial exploitation. He said that to view our problems correctly one had to look forward ten, twenty-five or fifty years in order to break away from the shackles of the past. The brunt of the responsibility devolved on the younger people and he felt that the pace was too much for some of his older Ministers.

3. Discussing the plan, I remarked that I had noticed that the President himself took the decision for the inclusion of two steel mills in the Plan, one for each wing. The President said that a beginning had to be made and the country could not wait indefinitely until the right quality of iron ore was discovered. The known deposits are of poor quality while some good grade ore which has been found in Chitral cannot be utilized because of lack of communications. Without even a very modest steel industry, not even simple machine tools could be produced and the country had to depend upon foreign sources for its basic requirements. He hoped that Pakistan would be able to obtain supplies of scrap or pig iron from India and elsewhere. A small steel industry would be useful in helping to develop the necessary skills and provide a basis for accelerated industrialization.

4. The President went on to say that he sometimes felt that he was forcing the pace a little too much, making it difficult for the people to catch up. But he said that it was good to turn people’s minds to constructive endeavour for without hard and sustained work no progress was possible. His principle was to let the people have what they wanted and more. For example, East Bengal wanted to make its own arrangements for the import of coal and when he gave them full permission, they came running back to the Central Government when they found themselves in difficulties. His solution for the Punjabi Suba agitation going on in India was to give the Sikhs their Suba, for within six months they would quarrel among themselves and beg for the restoration of the status quo.

5. Ayub said that the people must take a hand in working for their own welfare although the Government must help in shaping public opinion. I remarked that I supposed that the “Basic democracies” would be expected to fulfill this function whereupon Ayub changed the subject. I gathered that he did not consider it profitable to discuss with the representative of democratic India a specious scheme which he has managed to sell to his Western friends.

6. The conversation next turned to Indo-Pakistani relations and from the general trend of Ayub’s remarks I gathered the impression that he seemed fairly satisfied with the contacts established in London although there was a tinge of regret that no specific matters had been discussed. Yet a good basis had been laid for constructive thinking on both sides. Reverting to his familiar theme of the glowing presence of the colossi on the north, Ayub observed that this was the age of regionalism and our countries would be compelled by world developments to stand together. Referring to the European Common Market, he said that in Europe he had seen the spectacle of countries which had fought endless wars with each other, united to promote their common economic interests. The next step would be some form of political association. He felt that the countries of South Asia, under India’s leadership, must consider taking parallel action for there are so many common bonds between us including the experience of foreign domination. There have been no wars between these countries which have themselves been the victims of aggression. Even our culture and psychology are similar and we are much closer to each other in every way than are the E.C.M. partners. But India must take the lead if the concept is to materialize.

7. Turning to India’s role in the economic development of the region, Ayub said that she had lost a great opportunity in the past when she could have made Pakistan entirely dependent on her but Pakistan had been forced to develop a parallel economy and would soon be self-sufficient in the materials which India could have more easily supplied, such as cement. I said that while our interpretation of past events was different, India’s economy would continue to be complementary to that of her immediate neighbours in respect of various things like steel, machine tools and different kinds of manufactured goods.
mentioned our offer of railway wagons to Pakistan. The President agreed and said that India had developed new lines of industrial activity and in the field of oil exploration particularly, had been much luckier than Pakistan.

8. Remarking that in Sui gas Pakistan had a valuable asset, I informed the President that we were examining his offer of supply of Sui gas to Gujarat. The President said that he had in mind the extension of the pipeline to Multan and Lahore and he thought that Sui gas could be supplied in bulk to East Punjab as well. I mentioned that there had been some doubts, which I personally did not share, regarding the wisdom of dependence of a foreign country for fuel supplies which could be vulnerable to changes in political relations. Ayub immediately interjected with the retort that such fears should be immediately dispelled as Pakistan could never adopt such a suicidal policy. After all, whatever the relations between countries, trade went on unimpeded and he mentioned the example of the Western countries trading with the Soviet Union and even with China. I agreed with him and said that after all there had been no interruption in our supply of coal to Pakistan in the past despite the ups and downs in our political relations.

9. I next mentioned to the President the question of the supply of water from the Gudu Barrage to the Jaisalmer area and informed him that we were advised by our engineers that the gradient would render any such supply difficult. Ayub said that he had himself examined the proposition on a map and he wondered if there were any technical means of overcoming the difficulty. I said that as an alternative, the supply of water from the Kotri Barrage to the Gujarat area would be feasible. Ayub replied that he preferred to supply water to the Rajputs but he was not sure in any case as to how much would be available as the matter was still under examination.

10. The President did not raise any controversial issues and his whole approach seemed to be to explore avenues for mutual understanding and cooperation. His general view of the state of our relations is – and this has been confirmed by conversations with his Ministers as well – that they have been stabilized at a certain point and that further progress must await the conclusion of the Canal Waters’ talks. There is therefore a welcome disposition not to rush the fences but to take up each issue as it comes. This is also the general impression among the more informed of my colleagues.

11. As I have said previously, I feel that Ayub realizes that Pakistan would be dragged down unless it mends its fences with India and comes to practical settlements. On the other hand, every advance made in Indo-Pakistani relations would redound to the credit of the regime and strengthen its position in the country. American influence, which is paramount in the country, is fortunately also directed towards this end. The auguries are therefore favourable for the promotion of better mutual understanding and the settlement of outstanding issues. The fact that Ayub has long held positive views in regard to Indo-Pakistani relations is borne out by an interesting extract from a letter addressed by him to the Editor of the “India Cricket Souvenir” on 30th August 1952 on the occasion of a tour by a Pakistani cricket team to India, which I quote:-

“It may sound strange for a soldier to advocate friendship, understanding and peace between two countries, but a soldier worthy of his profession has to be a realist if nothing else. And realism demands that if Pakistan and India wish to retain their independence, so dearly won, the first thing they must do, and quickly, is to learn to live in peace with each other to meet jointly the impending dangers. Disunity between the two carries the seeds of self-destruction. These are not only my views but the views of all right thinking people at least in the two armies.

“ So far our approach to mutual problems, and there are many, has been based on emotions and passions. No wonder that the results have been negative, and how can they be anything else until we seek opportunities to create an atmosphere where the call of spirit, logic and sanity can prevail?”

12. Ayub’s views, as revealed in his conversations and supported by deeds, have not changed since that time. At this point I cannot help recalling the conversations which we used to have some twenty years ago in Mathura when Ayub was an Army Captain. One impression which has persisted through the years is of Ayub’s patriotism, generosity and sense of fair play. As the more senior among a handful of Indian officers in an artillery cantonment dominated by British officers, he resented the superiority complex of his British superiors and showed his independence, broadmindedness and patriotism on more than occasion.

13. Having closely studied the President in the course of my numerous meetings with him both formal and informal, I think it would be fair to say that he has not undergone any basic change in his psychology and thinking since that time. He fully realizes that settlements cannot be one sided and he told me recently that to achieve better relations he was prepared “to cut his losses”. But that does not mean that there will not be hard bargaining in the process.

14. Ayub occupies a position of preeminence in Pakistan and there is no sign of any challenge developing to his overriding authority. Should however a change take place – and it can only be from one military dictator to another – one thing is certain and that is that his successor will not be a man of the same breath of understanding and tolerance. Ayub’s position would be strengthened if he could show to the country that he has been able to achieve understandings with India in a matter of months on problems which had baffled solution for a whole decade.

15. It may be thought that this would only lead to the strengthening of a military dictatorship next door, a result which is abhorrent to a democratic country like ours. Pakistan’s internal structure is however a matter about which Pakistan alone is directly concerned; besides it is not unusual for democratic countries to have good relations with dictatorships of one brand or another, and Pakistan’s dictatorship is a benevolent one. Besides, the dictatorship here has given a standing promise to the country to conduct it back to the path of some form of democracy. That process would be eased if Pakistan’s external pressures were to relax and the internal situation were to improve. The military dictatorship came into existence as a direct result of grave internal and external difficulties; its hold would weaken were the conditions which brought it into existence to change.

16. It is axiomatic that settlements can be achieved only with a Government able and willing to deliver the goods. As there has never been nor is there likely to be in Pakistan in the near future, a democratic Government answering to the above description, the only alternative is a strong military dictatorship like the present one. While there cannot be any question whatsoever of compromising on principles or of sacrificing our rights, there could be occasions for making friendly or generous gestures which would, given the Pakistanis peculiar complexes, produce an immediate impact. These complexes have developed as a result of various factors which have collectively reduced Pakistan to the position of a dependency of the United States. The contrast between Pakistan’s position of subordination and India’s of preeminence has only accentuated the psychological complexes. Somewhere, the Pakistanis feel rather ashamed of themselves and there is a lurking feeling which I have found even in high placed, that they are looked down upon by their great and more successful neighbour. In this context any gesture of friendly recognition, any expression of equality or of sympathy and understanding falls on receptive soil, producing a rich harvest of goodwill.

17. There is of course very little that is new in all this, but since one is constantly encountering psychological hurdles in dealing with the Pakistanis, it is as well to remind oneself occasionally of what might appear to be so obvious. To sum up, as the recent talks with the President and his Ministers have disclosed, and in view of the increasingly held sentiment of the community of our interests, the present is perhaps the most opportune moment ever since partition for grappling seriously with our mutual problems. Our approach has of course been positive and constructive throughout; the fact that it is beginning to receive an answering echo is a fact of considerable significance and the best possible augury for the future.
With kind regards,

Yours sincerely

0330. SECRET/PERSONAL Letter from Deputy Minister for External Affairs to Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru.

New Delhi, July 15, 1960.

My dear Panditji,
On my way to Mogadishu, as well as on my homeward journey, Mr. A.R. Cutler, Australian High Commissioner for Pakistan was with me. In Mogadishu we were in the same hotel and I had opportunities of meeting him often. In the course of conversation, Mr. Cutler mentioned how very anxious President Ayub is to promote friendly relations with India and when I reminded him that the Prime Minister of India has been doing everything that is humanly possible to do that but the response from the other side has not been always gratifying, he remarked with a smile that India being a big country could be more tolerant and understanding etc. He was very keen that you should visit Pakistan in the near future. It is correctly believed in Pakistan that it was due to India’s (specially Prime Minister’s) patient endeavours that a settlement of a Canal Waters dispute has become possible and therefore your presence in Pakistan on an occasion which settles on the outstanding issues between the two countries, would help strengthen the goodwill already so widespread in Pakistan. The common people of Pakistan, he assured me, have nothing but admiration for the leadership of the Indian Prime Minister and regard him as the only means of bringing the two countries nearer. He also said that President Ayub is absolutely sincere in his desire for friendship with India and Mr. Cutler asked me if you would consider favourably an invitation to visit Pakistan. I mentioned to him that in the interest of peace, and depending of course on domestic demands, Prime Minister would not miss an opportunity of promoting friendliness between the two countries and, in my opinion he is likely to consider such an invitation favourably.

Mr. Cutler spoke very highly of the work done by the Dayals in Pakistan.

With kind regards,

Yours sincerely,

0331. Letter from High Commissioner Rajeshwar Dayal to Acting Commonwealth Secretary Y. D. Gundevia.

Karachi, July 18, 1960.

High Commissioner for India
Karachi

No. HC/TS/53/60 18th July, 1960/Ashada 27, 1882 Saka

My dear Yezdi,

Manzur Qadir dropped into see me at Murree on the 15th July to continue our previous conversation. He said that he had made some enquiries about my complaint of sabotage activities by Pakistani agents across the cease-fire line in Kashmir. He had however been given the usual story which was diametrically opposed to ours and he likened the situation to the complaints and counter-complaints which used to be heard about incidents along the East and West Pakistan borders before the border settlements were arrived at. I told him firmly that the situation along the cease-fire line was quite different and we had definite information that these wanton acts were the result of careful planning and preparation. I could not see what good they did even from Pakistan’s point of view; the danger was that a pattern of reprisals might develop. Qadir admitted that perhaps he had not been able to get to the bottom of the matter and said that the situation would be much easier if the “Azad Kashmir” area was not treated as an autonomous one, but under Pakistan’s full control. He tried to suggest that Khurshid was very sensitive about any interference and regretted that he should be making so many speeches. While sharing his regret, I said that I could hardly believe that the Pakistan Government could not stop the acts of lawlessness and provocative speeches if it had a mind to. Qadir said that in view of our concern, he would take a quiet trip down to Muzzafarabad and make personal enquiries. He agreed that if our information was correct, it did not help the situation in any way.

2. The conversation next turned to the canal waters’ question. Qadir said that unfortunately some unexpected snags had developed relating to transitional arrangements and he repeated Shoaib’s argument about the advisability of allowing the Bank to make suggestions to resolve the deadlock provided both sides agreed. He had the impression that we had no objection to this course. I immediately interrupted to express surprise at this impression which was wholly unwarranted. I told him that at no time had we given any indication whatsoever that such a course would be acceptable to us, nor was it warranted by the developments of which Qadir had the latest information. I added that we had taken an extremely generous view of the matter and I could not see how, if a realistic approach was made to our latest proposals, an agreement could be long deferred. Qadir did not press the matter, merely observing that there was great anxiety in Pakistan to see the negotiations come to a successful conclusion. The main difficulty, according to him, related to the April-May period, when the Pakistan canals would be short of water for sowing.

3. On the 10th July, Shoaib had also mentioned something to me on similar lines about the Bank being invited to make suggestions. I told him firmly and categorically that I could not understand on what such an impression was based, as I had communicated no such thing to General Shaikh. Shoaib did not attempt to obtain any clarification and did not press the matter. It was mentioned in such a casual way that I had the impression that Shoaib was either throwing out a feeler or that he had been misinformed about the gist of the message which I had communicated to General Shaikh, but when Qadir mentioned the matter, I felt that there was some attempt deliberately to misunderstand our position and I therefore took special care to dismiss the suggestion as being entirely unfounded. My impression is that Shoaib, who is not very straight in his methods, tried this rather weak approach, which cannot stand up to the position taken by our delegation in Washington and the reply given to Brohi by M.J. Desai, quite apart from what I have told the Pakistani Ministers. It is regrettable that the conciliatory message conveyed to General Shaikh should have been so misused.

4. I took the opportunity to speak to Qadir about the question of Umapati village and gave him a copy of our aids memoire. I emphasized the point that apart from the records which supported our case, the Pakistani demand for an enclave went against the entire spirit and purpose of the border settlements. Qadir promised to look into the matter.
5. Qadir said that he hoped that envoys would spend more and more time in Murree in the future, as it was possible that the Foreign Secretary may also move to ‘Pindi, leaving the Foreign Office in Karachi in charge of a Joint Secretary. I repeated to him the difficulties under which I had to work, but it seems that the question of Lahore Office has not yet reached point of decision.

With kind regards,

Yours sincerely,

Rajeshwar Dayal

TOP SECRET

Note by Commonwealth Secretary M. J. Desai to Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru regarding his programme of visit to Pakistan.

New Delhi, August 27, 1960.

Ministry of External Affairs

P.M. may see the letter from our High commissioner in Karachi, dated 25th August, received this afternoon.

2. It is satisfying that a garden party by the citizens of Karachi and a citizens’ reception at Shalimar Gandens at Lahore have been included in the programme. We will request our High Commission to secure copies of the addresses to be presented on both occasions, so that P.M. can see the Karachi one latest by lunch time on 19th and the Lahore one latest on arrival at Governor’s House, Lahore, on 22nd. We will try and get these copies of the addresses as much in advance as possible.

3. I feel P.M. should accept the present programme as it stands and not delay his departure from Lahore by 3 hours as suggested. Apart from the reluctance of the Air Force Headquarters to a night landing of a V.I.P. plane, there is little that one can see or do at Rawalpindi which is more a military garrison than anything else. P.M. would have met the various Pakistani Ministers before and there is not much point in meeting them and the Pakistan officials at President’s dinner at Rawalpindi. The present programme, which gives full 24 hours at Lahore with citizens’ reception on 22\textsuperscript{nd}, is more suitable as it will secure that P.M.’s visit will make its full impact on the citizens of Lahore who provide the only effective local public opinion under the present Pakistan regime.

4. I do not think it is desirable to rise the question of meeting Badshah Khan with President Ayub Khan.

5. The Pakistan Foreign Minister, Mr. Manzur Qadir, though a brilliant lawyer, does not have the breadth of vision of a mature politician. Like a clever criminal court lawyer, he thinks he might trade this small question of 5 border villages and Umapati Village in East Pakistan—the latter is only a hare raised by Pakistan—with the bigger question of Kashmir. Our High Commissioner told me that he has not touched the question of Kashmir with the Pakistanis. This may well mean that the views recorded by P.M. in his note of 20.6.60, particularly para 7, have not been put to Pakistan officials or Ministers at any time so far. Our High Commissioner is arriving here tomorrow evening and I will have a talk with him on this matter on Monday Morning.

6. It is obvious that the Pakistan President is keen on giving the Pakistan Finance Minister, Mr. Shoaib, an opportunity to speak on the financial problems to evolve, what he calls, a practical approach to the questions at issue. P.M. has already expressed his attitude on this point in a note recorded yesterday.

Prime Minster

Programme in Pakistan

I have no comments to make about Monday, the 19\textsuperscript{th} September.

2. 20\textsuperscript{th} September: The meeting with the President regarding financial matters. I think it should be made clear that I shall not be able to help in this at all. This subject is being dealt with by our Finance Minister. All I can do is, if required, to give them a note from our Finance Minister.

3. I hope that the lunch to be given by me on the 20\textsuperscript{th} September will be dropped for reasons which you have already given.

4. About the timing of my return on the 23\textsuperscript{rd} September, I must reach Delhi in daylight. That presumably means that I should leave Lahore at the latest at 1600 hours.

5. I do not mind what other changes are made in the programme for the 22\textsuperscript{nd} or 23\textsuperscript{rd}.
6. As for my meeting Badshah Khan, I have already stated that I would naturally like to meet an old friend and colleague, but, in the circumstances, I shall abide by the President's wishes in the matter. If this question is raised by the President or anyone else in Pakistan, this should be repeated. If this is mentioned when I am there, I shall certainly repeat it. It would be improper for me not to give expression to my wishes at least in this matter.

7. As for subjects for discussion, I have said that I am prepared to discuss anything within my competence. I cannot discuss financial matters or the question of drain of foreign exchange from East Pakistan to India or rather I cannot say anything worthwhile in regard to them. So far as the five border villages and Umapati villages are concerned, that is hardly a question for me to discuss with the President. I should, of course, like to have a note on these, which you can carry with you.

8. So far as financial matters are concerned, although I am not prepared to discuss them, we should nevertheless ask Finance Ministry to provide us with a general note on these subjects, including the question of drain of foreign exchange.

9. My note dated the 20th June contains my views on some of the matters that may come up for discussion.

Note by the Prime Minister of his talks with President Ayub Khan.

Murree, September 20, 1960.

Prime Minister's Secretariat

This morning, 20th September, I had my first serious talks with President Ayub Khan. They lasted about an hour and a half and were held in Karachi. Those present included, on the President's side:

1. Mr. Manzur Qadir (Foreign Minister),
2. Mr. Shoaib (Finance Minister),
3. Mr. A.K. Brohi (Pakistan High Commissioner in India)

And on our side:

4. Shri M.J. Desai (Commonwealth Secretary)
5. Shri K. Ram (PPS), and
6. Shri K.V. Padmanabhan (Acting High Commissioner)

2. Fairly full notes were taken, I think, on our side and PPS will give a more detailed account of these talks (next document). I am merely mentioning here some of the subjects discussed.

3. Mr. Shoaib began by telling us about the remaining differences on financial matters between India and Pakistan. He mentioned the three which have been given in our Finance Ministry's note and gave his own version. He suggested that officials or experts on both sides should examine such facts as are available and draw conclusions from them as to the dues on either side. I told him that I would pass on what he had said to our Finance Minister. I thought that these matters had been adequately examined as regards the facts during these past years, but if any further examination on an expert level was desired, presumably there would be no objection to this.

4. I referred to pending matters in regard to evacuee property, both movable and immovable. This concerned large numbers of people who had suffered because of the delay in deciding this. A joint committee had been formed to consider these questions but it had not met since 1958. I suggested that this committee might meet soon and take up, first of all, the movable properties and immediately afterwards the immovable ones. This was agreed to.
5. The question of visas was discussed and Mr. Shoaib pointed out their difficulties as this had led to large sums of money in foreign exchange being drawn out of Pakistan. They had already relaxed some of the conditions, but they did not want to take any step which might add to their foreign exchange difficulties. They would look into this matter again.

6. A reference was made to the charge made by India of discrimination in regard to the transfers of profits made by Indian-owned companies in Pakistan. Mr. Shoaib said that they had offered Indian securities, but this had not been accepted by India. I did not know the facts and all I could say was that this matter should be considered a fresh.

7. I referred to the offer made sometime ago by Pakistan to sell us their gas. I said that we were prepared to accept this offer and the matter might be gone into more fully, by the Ministries concerned on either side.

8. There was some talk of cooperation between the two countries in regard to scientific and technical matters as well as some schemes, hydro-electric or other, which might be common. I said that we would welcome cooperation wherever this was feasible.

9. I referred to the Banthra Farm near Lucknow where we had succeeded in treating usal saline land and making it cultivable within a short space of time and without much expenditure of money. Mr. Manzur Qadir was much interested in this. I said that might send experts to have a look at this Banthra Farm and what is being done there, and gave him the address of the Director of the National Botanical gardens in Lucknow, Dr. K.N. Kaul. It would be desirable to inform Professor Thacker of this who can send a message to Dr. Kaul.

10. Later, when I was driving up to Murree with President Ayub Khan, I referred to our North-West frontier and Chinese claims on it. President Ayub told me that they knew this past history about the territory claimed by the Mir of Hunza. That claim had no basis and recently he had told the Mir of Hunza that he should not get entangled in this matter and the Mir had said that he had waived his claims. All that he had there was grazing rights. I am writing a separate note on this subject.

President Ayub Khan started by saying that it gave him great pleasure to have the Prime Minister of India in Pakistan. He was happy that it had become possible to find solution to some of the outstanding problems between the two countries since their meeting at palam airport. Although small groups of vested interests in both the countries may be interested in keeping up tension, the people in both the countries by and large were keen on developing friendly relations. He pointed out, however, that even though decisions are reached at higher level, there are always difficulties in implementing those decisions at a lower level due to old habits of perversity though this is fast disappearing. He mentioned in particular that, after the two border conferences, both sides are taking care to implement the ground rules strictly. The large majority of people on both sides are for promoting understanding between our two countries. He said that he was keen that both India and Pakistan should get together, solve the problems between them, however complicated, and concentrate on their economic development.

2. The Prime Minister replied that it was fundamentally in the basic interests of the two countries to co-operate with each other. Not only basic interests but there is a great emotional upsurge on both sides to have better relations and get together.

3. The Finance Minister Mr. Shoaib was then called upon by the President to explain the financial issues. Mr. Shaoib referred to the correspondence he had with the Indian Finance Minister and said that he wanted to mention three points for P.M.’s information:-

I. Economic Co-operation: There was large scope for economic cooperation. He referred to the Water Treaty and emphasized the extent to which Pakistan would have to depend on India for implementation of the projects involved. He mentioned, in particular, steel, cement and other equipment. This will be to mutual advantage. Pakistan had to depend solely on two ports – Karachi and Chittagong- and will save these ports from congestion by procuring items like steel, cement etc. in greater quantities from India. From her side, Pakistan could supply India with jute, cotton, rock salt, etc.

II. Leak in foreign exchange: He then referred to the serious drain on their foreign exchange due to smuggling and illicit transfer of funds. According to him, families who have dependents in India, use devious methods to send money to India. According to information collected by them, nearly Rs.30 to Rs.40 crores were transferred out from Pakistan to India each year by these illicit methods. This affected both India and Pakistan. Not only did they escape payment of taxes on profits in Pakistan but by not showing the money in their books they evaded payment of taxes in India also. He suggested that the Central Banks of the two countries should get together and prevent this drain. The Prime Minister stressed that smuggling was definitely a matter for executive action. He stated, however, that according to the Indian Ministry of Finance, these estimates given by Mr. Shoaib were exaggerated. He did not have any sympathy with those indulging in these illicit activities and had no objection to the two Central Banks getting together to consider this matter.

III. The Finance Minister then spoke about the overall debt settlement between the two countries. He admitted that within the last few months, the two Delegations had settled the bulk of the outstanding issues but three major items remained for further consideration:

(a) Arrears of income-tax and excess profits: He explained that the estimates given by either side differed very much and suggested that since an agreement was not possible on an ad hoc basis, the best course was to ask a team of officers to examine the books in the income-tax departments of both the countries. In answer to a question by the Prime Minister, Mr. Shoaib explained that while the estimates on the Pakistani side were based on books in the income-tax department, estimates in India were based on the extent of tax evasion in each year, calculated on percentage figures. Though the Indian side had maintained that their estimates are correct, it is essential that the fact should be verified if the two sides are to proceed on a precise basis. He wanted the figures to be drawn up on either side just like a balance sheet. Prime Minister asked whether it was the Pakistan case that the estimated arrears given by them were realized by India. Mr. Shoaib said that it was so.

(b) Defence assets: Here also, the Finance Minister maintained that the facts should be verified as ad hoc figures arrived at the time of Partition were not dependable. He had discussed the matter with the Indian Finance Minister who was willing to make an adjustment but that was not enough. On the Pakistani side, the Military Engineering Works had made a complete estimate of the defence assets in Pakistan in 1948.

(c) Pensionary liabilities undertaken by two governments: There were two categories under this heading: (i) those who had already retired at the time of Partition, and (ii) those who retired later and moved to Pakistan. According to the Finance Minister, at the time of Partition, the civilian personnel were recruited on the basis of 25% Muslims and 75% other communities and, in the armed services, the ratio was 33. 1/3% Muslims, 66. 2/3% non Muslims. He suggested that the pensionary bill should be shared in these ratios, on the civilian and on the military side. He pointed out that while Pakistan’s share of the partition debt was fixed at 17.5%, her liability on account of pensions was at a much higher figure in view of these recruitment ratios given by him.

The Finance Minister then referred to certain transactions which took place after Partition: (i) transfer of Rs. 50 crores from the Reserve Fund of the Reserve Bank as Pakistan’s share, (ii) devaluation fund, (iii) Indian securities transferred to Pakistan at the time of Partition.

Mr. Shoaib estimated the total amount under these “current transactions” at Rs. 153 crores. According to him, the Indian side was willing to accept only Rs. 90 crores.

Mr. Shoaib said that the items enumerated above became due at specific dates. He wanted interest on these to be calculated at the international rate and the dues brought up to date till 1952 and deducted from the partition debt which had become payable from 15th August 1952 as originally contemplated. This method would enable both sides to estimate the net amount payable each year, after allowing for deduction for payments under “current transactions” to be made by India.

At this stage, the Prime Minister pointed out that the transactions mentioned could hardly be termed as current. The appropriate term, he thought, would be to consider them as “past current transactions”.

Summing up the discussion, the Finance Minister suggested that the two countries could have the good offices of an outsider like the World Bank to go into the question of facts involved under the various heads. The Prime Minister, while agreeing that the facts can be verified, said that he did not react favourably to the suggestion about good offices of a third party since such good offices tended to prolong the agony. While he did not reject the idea completely, he thought that the two sides should try to make further efforts to ascertain the facts themselves.

The Prime Minister then explained that he was not in a position to discuss the points raised by the Finance Minister with authority or knowledge. The Finance Minister Shri Morarji Desai had discussed the outstanding financial issues with him in a broad way only. He had also brought to his notice the three outstanding issues but the differences between the two countries were considerable. The Prime Minister agreed that the facts should be ascertained.
Mr. Shoaib then referred to certain reports which had appeared in the Indian papers that Indian concerns functioning in Pakistan were being discriminated against in the matter of remittance of their profits. The Finance Minister maintained that there was no basis for this allegation as there was no rule or regulation against such remittance.

The Prime Minister then asked for clarification as he had somehow got the impression that such discrimination did exist. Mr. Shoaib explained that after the Indian concerns had declared their profits and paid their taxes, they were offered Indian securities as a mode of transferring funds to India. In his view, the difficulty actually arose because of the refusal by the Reserve Bank of India to cash the securities so offered to Indian concerns. In this context, he referred to a letter he received from Mr. Dandaker, Managing Director of the A.C.C., according to which the A.C.C. had denied that any difficulty had arisen because of action from the Pakistani side. The Indian attitude, the Finance Minister said, stemmed from their view that the transfer of securities constituted a capital transaction and not a current transaction. He admitted that certain delays and difficulties did exist because of official procedures but reiterated that there was no discrimination whatsoever against Indian firms.

In answer to a question by P.M., the Finance Minister estimated the value of the securities in question at Rs. 25 crores. He said that these securities were convertible because India had taken over the Public Debt and the securities were a legitimate charge on Indian revenues.

When the Prime Minister said that he was totally ignorant of the controversy, Mr. Shoaib pointed out that the ‘first shot’ was fired from Delhi and added that on the facts published, it appeared that the information leaked from the Government sources at New Delhi.

At this stage, the President referred to the various attractive terms which were being offered to foreign firms to invest capital in Pakistan and mentioned in particular the ‘tax holiday scheme’ which the Government had announced. He said that these terms were applicable to all new foreign, including Indian investments but not to pre-partition Indian investments and to that extent there was discrimination.

The Commonwealth Secretary explained that according to the Indian Ministry of Finance, the question of securities was a part of the overall Partition Debt and other financial settlement between the two countries as they were related to the Public Debt taken over by India.
The President said that, on their side, they were prepared to accept payment for these securities in non-transferable Indian rupees and not claim sterling because of the difficult foreign exchange situation of India.

The Prime Minister pointed out that since he was not a financial expert, he can only say that he will bring these matters to the notice of his Finance Minister. He hoped to meet him on his forthcoming trip to USA and Mr. Shoaib will probably meet him earlier.

4. The Prime Minister then raised the issue of supply of gas from Pakistan to India. Mr. Shoaib explained that a foreign firm, M/S Campstock & co., had reported favourably about the possibility of exporting gas in liquid form. Mr. Shoaib stated that gas could be supplied by pipeline as it was cheaper and more convenient. He added that India could use her own pipes for the purpose.

5. The President pointed out that Pakistan was offering the gas at considerable sacrifice as it may be required for her own development purposes. At the present moment, the gas was being wasted by uneconomic utilization. The Prime Minister, while expressing thanks for Pakistan's consideration for making this offer, pointed out that oil has been found in large quantities in Cambay in Gujarat recently and that plans for making the supply available to Gujarat and Rajasthan were under examination. A refinery will be set up near Cambay next year. He also referred to the present glut in the world oil supply and to the possibility of oil prices being brought down further.

6. The President suggested that the question of Sui gas supply could be left for consideration by a team of experts from both sides and said he would welcome a delegation from India to discuss this matter further.

7. The Prime Minister then referred to the delay in the implementation of the Movable Property Agreement. He mentioned that even though a high-powered implementation committee had been set up under the agreement, no meeting of the committee had taken place after April 1958. He suggested that the committee should meet without further delay.

8. Mr. Manzur Qadir admitted that the working of the committee had got bogged down due to various reasons. He explained that General Azam, who was in charge of the rehabilitation work until recently, was much too busy in the resettlement of refugees but the Foreign Minister promised that steps would be taken to hold an early meeting of the implementation committee. In this context, he referred to the hardship caused by the delay in settling the claims of pensioners of local bodies, a matter in which General Shaikh was keenly interested.
9. At this point, the Finance Minister intervened to say that even though an agreement was reached at the last meeting of the Finance Ministers in regard to the payment of pensions through the respective High Commissions, no progress had been made despite several reminders from the Pakistan side.

10. Another matter raised by the Prime Minister was the desirability of improving the travel facilities between the two countries. He suggested that ways and means should be found to improve the situation.

11. The Foreign Minister, explaining the Pakistani position, sought to make a distinction between the situation in regard to (a) visas and (b) passports. While the Pakistan Government had issued instructions to remove the existing restrictions regarding registration with police, residential permits, etc., in the matter of issue of passports his Government was faced with serious difficulty on financial grounds. He explained at length the drain of foreign exchange arising out of the under-hand methods practiced by Pakistanis visiting Indian side to see their families. When the Prime Minister pointed out that there was a corresponding flow of funds from India to Pakistan, the Foreign Minister maintained that the loss on the Pakistani side was very much greater. According to Mr. Qadir, Pakistan had 11 lakhs passport holders who wanted to visit India. At this stage, the Commonwealth Secretary pointed out that only two lakhs visas were issued during 1959 and nothing like 11 lakhs were going to India.

12. The Prime Minister then drew attention to the fact that even though some money was allowed by the State Bank of Pakistan to Pakistani visitors to India, they were actually compelled to take back almost the entire amount. This, in his view, implied that far from spending any money on their own, they actually depended upon funds provided by their relatives and friends during their sojourn in India. In his view, there should be less restrictions on travel between the two countries and he referred to the old days when practically no passports or visas for travel were necessary except for visit to Czarist Russia.

13. The Prime Minister referred to exchange of experience of reclamation of water-logged lands and removal of salinity from the soil. He said that an interesting development had taken place in a place near Lucknow where the local experts, at a little cost, had been able to reclaim saline soil within seven or eight months with the help of some rapidly growing shrubs. The President of Pakistan said that they would welcome an opportunity for exchange of expert knowledge and experience in these matters as well as on other scientific matters.

14. The President referred to the need for co-operation on development of water resources and control of floods between East Pakistan and India. He said that a Minister level conference would be welcome to them to settle certain principles, so that developments in each country were coordinated and, where necessary, even the costs could be shared. He referred in this connection to the projected developments at the Teesta and the Indian project of the Farakha barrage. The Commonwealth Secretary mentioned that the engineers had met a couple of months back to exchange information about projects of interest to each other and were meeting again on 1st October, adding that it was better that data should be collected by experts and exchanged before a Minister level conference as suggested by President can take place. He mentioned, in this connection, the report of the Bank team in connection with India’s Third Plan where they specifically stress that Calcutta and the importance of saving the port by providing adequate flush to remove the silt should be attended to.

15. The President stressed that settlement of differences between India and Pakistan and increased cooperation between our two countries would not only benefit India and Pakistan but also contribute to the development of South-East Asia generally with India as the centre of all South East Asia. He said that the only obstacle to India becoming the main centre of South East Asia was the differences between India and Pakistan.

Note recorded by Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru of his meeting with the Pakistan President Ayub Khan.

Murree, September 21, 1960.

Prime Minister’s Secretariat

Last night President Ayub Khan mentioned that he wanted to talk to me about Kashmir this morning. I agreed. He asked me if I preferred talking to him alone or with Advisers present. I said that this was entirely for him to decide. It was then decided that to begin with President Ayub Khan and I should have a talk on Kashmir and later others might join in.

2. Accordingly, this morning I met the President. Our respective Advisers waited outside. As a matter of fact, these Advisers were not called in at all and the talk which lasted for over an hour took place between the President and me only.

3. The President began by laying stress on the importance and the urgency of a full settlement between the two countries of all our problems and, more particularly, that of Kashmir which had come in the way of good relations between the two countries. He spoke at some length on this subject and laid stress on as speedy a solution as possible partly because delay might worsen the situation and partly because if these problems were not settled between him and me while we functioned in our respective capacities, a settlement might become much more difficult or even impossible later on.

4. I entirely agreed on the desirability of good and cooperative relations between the two countries. That had always been our desire and policy and I was glad that we had made much progress in this direction. So far as I could judge, the people of both countries had friendly feelings towards each other and the old bitterness had gone. In dealing with Kashmir we had to take a realistic view of the situation. Not to do so would land us in greater difficulties. It would be most unfortunate for us to try to take a step which might create numerous upsets and emotional upheavals.

5. The President said that he had not been concerned with the past history of the Kashmir question and no doubt many mistakes had been made both on the part of Pakistan and of India. Pakistan had raised some issues which, the President thought, were not justifiable. Thus, there was the case of Hyderabad and Junagadh, etc. It was clear that these places could only go to India. They were surrounded by Indian territories and they could not separate themselves from it. These questions should have been settled easily without the necessity even of India taking action as in the case of Hyderabad. Evidently, the President was treating the case of Kashmir on a separate basis and indicating that Pakistan was justified in regard to her claim on Kashmir, though the President did not say so actually.

6. The President said that he did not want any upsets following an attempt at solution. There was no reason why there should be any such upsets if the parties agreed to it. He realized that there was emotion and passion on this issue on both sides. In Pakistan there was very strong feeling and probably there was some feeling in North India. But South India did not care about this. This might make it easy for me to raise this question in a practical form for solution. It was true that there were much more friendly feelings and relations among the people of both countries now, but some new development or some mischievous step taken by some politicians in Pakistan or India might create a new crisis and embitter our relations. I told him that he was not right in thinking that the feeling in India was not strong or was limited over this issue. Apart from feeling, there were other important aspects connected with it. The consequences of any marked change would not only have a great upsetting effect in Kashmir itself, but also in India. We had a large population of Muslims in India and on the whole they had been integrated. But any wrong step taken by us would affect them injuriously and prevent further integration. I gave also various other reasons and further pointed out that it was extraordinarily difficult for us to go through the various processes that might be required for any major change. I referred to the Berubari case which had been raised in Parliament and had to be referred to the Supreme Court. There was much excitement over this issue in Bengal especially. If this kind of thing happened over a small issue like Berubari, he could well imagine what great difficulties would be raised over any larger issue. The slightest change in territory involved our going to Parliament and changing our constitution, apart from convincing our people. Then again, according to our very Constitution, we could do nothing in regard to Kashmir without the consent of the Kashmir Assembly. Twice there had been elections in Kashmir for this Assembly. Next year we are going to have a third general election in which Kashmir would join.

7. This and much else I pointed out to him and also referred to the numerous changes that had come about during the last ten or twelve years in Kashmir and elsewhere. We could not go back on all this and it was beyond our capacity to get people to agree to any such thing. Indeed, the first step would be our agreeing ourselves which I found very difficult. But the other step would be far more difficult. It seemed to me that the only practicable and feasible course was to allow matters to rest where they were more or less and to accept the position as it was.

8. The President said that the present position was a result of military conflict and an ad hoc cease-fire line which had no real justification as a frontier. As such it could hardly be accepted and it was there only because armies stood on either side.

9. I said that was partly true and adjustments could be made to conform to geographical or like features, provided the basic position was accepted. Any other course was not practicable or feasible now and would lead to trouble and difficulty.

10. The President was not agreeable. He went on repeating what he had said previously and asked me to think about this. He did not want me to say yes or no at this stage. He knew that the question was a difficult one and every aspect of it had to be considered, consultations had to take place and public opinion gradually directed to certain ends. But he would like me to give full thought to this question and how to find a way out.

11. I told him that I had been considering this matter for the past dozen years and I would continue to give thought to it. But I could see no way out other than the one I had suggested. I tried to get the President to indicate what precise course of action he had in mind, but he did not do so. All that he said... and repeated was that we must give full thought to this question and try to find some way out. There were three parties to this question of Kashmir: India, Pakistan and the people of Kashmir. All must be satisfied.

12. I have said above briefly about the nature of the talk I had with the President this morning. As was inevitable, we were constantly repeating the same arguments and not getting anywhere. The talk was friendly and at no time was there any heat or excitement in it. The only result that came out of it was that we should keep this matter in mind and think again over it.

13. As I have said above, no one else was present at the time of this talk. It was when we had finished it that we invited the others to join us and soon after we left for Nathiagali.

14. In our long motor journeys I discussed many subjects with President Ayub Khan. These included international problems as well as the development schemes in our respective countries, education, agriculture, etc. all these talks were frank and on a friendly level. The President spoke with some knowledge of his own development schemes. His talks on international questions exhibited a somewhat limited outlook.

15. This evening, in the course of our talk (Mr. Manzur Qadir was present also), the President asked me about our settlement with the Nagas and how this was progressing. I told him about it and said that we hoped that this would be a success. I gave him a brief account of our recent troubles near the Burmese frontier. I also told him of what we had been doing in NEFA. The President asked me about Phizo also and I gave him some information about Phizo’s activities.

Murree, September 22, 1960.

Last night the President said to me that the transfer of territories between India and Pakistan which had been agreed upon, was to have taken place on the 1st of October, but now he had been informed on the part of India that this would be delayed. So far as Pakistan was concerned they had already transferred some of these small patches of territory.

2. I said that I did not know much about this. Our Commonwealth Secretary could tell us what the position was. Probably, the recent judgment of the Supreme Court of India had necessitated an amendment of our Constitution and because of this some delay was likely to take place.

3. We talked about Dr. Khan Sahib and Khan Abdul Ghaffar Khan. Dr. Khan’s name was mentioned by Mr. Manzur Qadir in connection with bridge playing to which Dr. Khan was addicted. I spoke of Dr. Khan during the days when he was my contemporary in England and related some stories concerning him. I said that he was a very fine and likable person.

4. The President himself then referred to Abdul Ghaffar Khan who he described, I think, as “your friend”. He said that Abdul Ghaffar Khan had many good qualities, but he was very rigid and this came in his way. I said that he was certainly rigid and firm about certain matters, but I admired him greatly. Mr. Manzur Qadir said that he wandered about in tribal areas in a jeep in the hot sun when younger people got tired. There was no doubt that people still felt drawn to him and he was in a measure popular.

Lahore, September 22, 1960.

I spoke to President Ayub Khan this evening about the Hyderabad money locked up in the Westminster Bank, London (Mr. Manzur Qadir was also present). This was originally (in 1948) over a million pound sterling. Since then a good deal of interest must have accumulated. All our efforts to get at this money on behalf of the old Hyderabad Government failed because of some technical plan of lack of jurisdiction of the court in England. The only possible way to get this money released is by coming to an agreement with Pakistan and presenting a joint application to the Bank or to a court.

I said to the President that this money was being wasted, and the only beneficiary being the Westminster Bank. He agreed and said that if the Nizam died, the money or a very large part of it would go to the UK Government. He would therefore agree to any proposal to get it out of the clutches of this bank, even if the entire sum went to India. I said that probably the best way to deal with it would be to create a trust for educational purposes for Indian, and, to some extent, Pakistani students studying in the UK. He said that he was agreeable to this or indeed to any proposal that we might suggest. We have therefore to put forward a proposal.

The money undoubtedly belonged to the old Hyderabad State and presumably should now go to the Andhra Pradesh Government. But I think it will be gracious of us to use it partly for Pakistani students. I suggest, therefore:

1. A trust should be created out of this money in the Westminster Bank, including the interest that may have accumulated.
2. The income from this trust should be used for scholarships to students in the UK from India and Pakistan, broadly in the ratio of three to one, that is, three-fourth of this money should go to Indian students and one-fourth to Pakistani students.
3. The Indian scholars chosen for this purpose should be from Andhra Pradesh and, more particularly, from that part of it which comprised the old Hyderabad State or Telangana.

The trustee should be:

1. High Commissioner of India in the UK;
2. High Commissioner of Pakistan in the UK;
3. A representative of the Andhra Pradesh Govt.

These are the broad proposals. Details can be worked.

Commonwealth Secretary might process this after consulting the Home Minister and the Finance Minister. Later, if necessary, we may consult the Cabinet. After that we can send our proposal to the Pakistan Government.

Additional note on Hyderabad money in Westminster Bank in London.

This morning President Ayub Khan referred to this matter again and expressed a wish that this should be expedited. Rather casually he mentioned that a trust fund should be created with the High commissioners of India and Pakistan as trustees and that the money should be used for educational scholarships in the UK. He also casually said that this might be done on the fifty-fifty basis.

2. We did not discuss this matter at all any further. The Pakistan Foreign Minister said that he would process it and communicate with us. I think that the sooner we process it ourselves in Delhi the better it would be. We ought to take the initiative in this matter.

3. In my previous note I had suggested that the money should be broadly used on a three to one basis i.e. India gets 3/4\textsuperscript{th} of the money for educational scholarships. It appears now that the President would like to have it on the fifty-fifty basis. I still think that we might adhere to my previous opinion even though we might, if necessary, go up to two to one. Apart from the legal rights etc. of the matter, the main consideration now appears to be to help people from the old Hyderabad State, whether they are in India or in Pakistan now. Obviously, the vast majority of them are in India in Andhra Pradesh. Therefore, even on that basis a much greater part of this fund should be utilized for helping them by educational scholarships.

The President of Pakistan and Prime Minister of India were convinced that the primary need of the two countries was the rapid development of their resources and the raising of the living standards of their people. The two leaders acknowledged that the settlement of the Indus Basin Waters question and the elimination of their border disputes presented to their two Governments an unparalleled opportunity to direct their policies towards the promotion of mutual understanding and friendly co-operation between their two countries. They agreed that their Governments and peoples should work for the promotion of friendly and co-operative relations between their two countries and eliminate old emotional strains and tension. They recognized that reduction in tension and development of friendly neighbourly co-operation relations will enable each of their countries to devote its energies to the achievement of their basic objectives of economic and social development.

7. There was a frank and friendly exchange of views between the Prime Minister and the President in regard to Kashmir. The talks were conducted in an atmosphere of cordiality. They came to the conclusion that this was a difficult question which required careful consideration of all aspects. The President and Prime Minister agreed to give further thought to this question with a view to finding a solution.

8. The President of Pakistan and the Prime Minister of India welcomed this opportunity of renewing their personal contact and of having friendly and fruitful discussions. They have agreed to keep in touch with each other in furtherance of their common objectives.

9. The Prime Minister of India had invited the President of Pakistan to visit India. The President of Pakistan has accepted the invitation.

My dear Commonwealth Secretary,

I called on the Pakistan Foreign Secretary this afternoon.

2. Mr. Ikramullah kept me with him for about 40 minutes. He was to exchange formally with the Swiss Charge d’Affairs the instruments of ratification of the Swiss - Pakistan treaty on Avoidance of Double Taxation at 1 p.m. and the Chief of Protocol dropped into his office twice to remind him that it was already a few minutes past the time and that everybody was waiting. Mr. Ikramullah however continued talking to me saying that I was an old friend from the Commerce Ministry and from London.

3. In the beginning Mr. Ikramullah talked of weather, particularly the unwholesome aspects of it in Dacca, his visit to Rawalpindi from where he had come the previous night, his wife’s miraculous escape from certain death and other time wasting topics of small consequence. He also asked me to apologise to Padmanaban for not being able to see him when he came to Foreign Office to say good bye a couple of days before his departure.

4. I then handed over to him your letter of the 7th of October (502 CS/60) regarding exchange of areas on the western border in adverse possession of the two countries. He said he was not somewhat embarrassed at the date suggested, particularly in view of the commitment he had already made to his President. He told me that he had discussed the matter with you during your last visit and he got the impression that the actual exchange could commence a week after the introduction of the requisite Bills in Parliament. To be on the safe side, however, he had suggested that the end of November be fixed as the appointed date. He had mentioned this earlier to his President, who had agreed that in view of the legislative processes that would be constitutionally necessary in India, Pakistan should agree to the suggested postponement from the 15th of October to the 30th of November.

5. During his discussion with you in Murree, you had stated that it would be prudent to fix 31st of December. Mr. Ikramullah said that he then offered a compromise and suggested 15th of December. You said you would write to him from Delhi but he got the impression that there would be no difficulty in agreeing to this date. He, therefore, went again to his President and got his approval to a second postponement to the 15th of December.

6. Mr. Ikramullah therefore asked me to write to you immediately and place his difficulties before you. He said that “Ayub was after all a dictator” and one could not go to him again and again on a matter of this kind. As it is, the President does not think much of civil servants and would be justifiably irritated with these changes. He might also get the impression that people on both sides were unnecessarily delaying the matter”.

7. I told him I had seen the draft Bills in Delhi and that they would be introduced in Parliament at its forthcoming session. This would be duly reported and every one in Pakistan would know that India was proceeding with the implementation of the agreement. Mr. Ikramullah said he appreciated this point but felt that he was still not sure that the President would not feel somewhat uneasy if he spoke to him again of a further formal postponement. He added on a personal basis that a fortnight here or there would hardly make any difference and that even if the agreed date of exchange were fixed at 15th of December and the legislative processes in India took a little longer, the people in Pakistan would not be perturbed if the actual exchange took place somewhat later. He was aware that no Government could say firmly that its Legislature would do something by a fixed date. The agreed date was therefore only an estimate. Mr. Ikramullah, therefore, asked me to request you to agree to the 15th of December.

8. I said I shall write to you and let him have your reply.

9. Having changed from weather to politics, Mr. Ikramullah continued to expostulate on his theories on Indo-Pakistan relations and his views on some pending issues. He talked of Mr. Jinnah and the Congress. He said that immediately after Partition, some people went to see the Quaid and told him that one Jinnah got them Pakistan but that even one hundred Jinnahs could not rehabilitate and develop Pakistan. After the deputationists had left, Mr. Jinnah told him (Mr. Ikramullah) that even one hundred Jinnahs could not have got Pakistan and that it was the narrow-mindedness of the Congress which was responsible for its creation. Mr. Ikramullah said that India could have “killed” Pakistan with kindness even after its establishment.

10. This led him to the issues still outstanding on the eastern border. He said he was prepared to let Assam have the five Patharia villages as well as Umapati provided that East Pakistan could have in return the Chhatak quarries.
East Pakistan was economically backward and had no indigenous raw materials for cement. Any kindness shown to East Pakistan, therefore, would be greatly appreciated. On the other hand, if India did not take a generous attitude, he, on his part, was going to be difficult. I said I was sorry to hear this, particularly as the position of Umapati was quite clear. If Pakistan raised this matter seriously, it would run counter to the entire approach and the intention of the two Governments in arriving at the border settlements at the October meetings.

Mr. Ikramullah said that as far as he was concerned, there were two approaches. One was mutual accommodation and the second was legalistic attitudes. If he did not get the quarries, he would be legalistic on Umapati. He added that he had told Padmanabhan very clearly that he would not get the quarries; he would be legalistic on Umapati. He added that he had told Padmanabhan very clearly that he would not agree to a settlement of their claim over Umapati except as part of a deal involving the Chhatak quarries.

11. I could have pointed out to him the obvious contradictions in the stand taken by him. I did not however wish to conduct a disputation with him at my first meeting. Having made my point, therefore, I kept quiet and let the Chief of Protocol conduct him to the conference room, the Swiss Charge d’ affaires and the press photographers.

12. I was somewhat disappointed at this approach at his first meeting with me despite his personal affability. I had known him in Delhi when he was Joint Secretary in the Ministry of Commerce before Partition and I was Deputy Secretary. At that time, he and his wife were busy achieving Pakistan for Mr. Jinnah. But I thought the passage of time might have sobered him.

With kind regards,

Yours sincerely

V.C. Trivedi

0340. Minutes of the meeting of Indo – Pakistan Information Consultative Committee.

The Indo – Pakistan Information Consultative Committee which reviewed trends in the Press, Radio, Films and Publications in India and Pakistan, appreciated the work being done in the two countries to implement the Indo – Pakistan agreements.

2. In the inaugural session on November 26th, the Leader of the Pakistan delegations, while welcoming the Leader and members of the Indian delegations, acknowledged the significant improvement that had taken place in the relationship between the two countries. He said the climate of friendship could be further improved if, in addition to observing voluntarily the Joint Press Code, some thought was given to the positive aspects of the problems, and the information media in both India and Pakistan stressed on the work being done in both countries in the field of economic and social development.

3. The Leader of Pakistan delegation emphasized the need for broad agreement on principles and a better approach to the problems. He pointed out that while there might be infringements here and there of an all embracing Code in both the countries, the Committee should concern itself more with flagrant violations that cause a sense of anger and animosity between the two peoples. He said that in order to create a more harmonious understanding personal attacks on national leaders should be avoided.

4. The Leader of the Indian delegations, reciprocated the sentiments of friendship and goodwill expressed by the Leader of the Pakistan delegation and said that the initiative taken by the President of Pakistan and the recent visit of the Indian Prime Minister to Pakistan as also instances of greater cooperation in economic and trade relations had done a lot to lessen the tensions between the two countries. There was now greater understanding of each other’s viewpoint. He agreed with the leader of Pakistan delegation that in addition to the observance the Joint Press Code, the Press in both the countries should strive to see the positive side of the work that is being done in India and Pakistan. As regards other media of information, the two Governments could take steps and evolve a procedure much more easily because they were under their control. He emphasized that these media could give the lead by avoiding attacks on the personalities of the leaders of both the countries.

5. In his view there was an all round improvement, but there was room for further improvement.
6. Both delegations agreed that the violation of the Joint Press Code should be looked at from the viewpoint of getting the broad picture in order to assess the progress made towards more friendly atmosphere and understanding.

7. In the field of the Press, the Committee reviewed the working of the Joint Press Code since its adoption last April and noted the steps taken to implement it. While the Committee was satisfied that the Press as a whole had tried its best to contribute towards friendly feelings between the two countries, it noted with regret that some newspapers in both the countries had not acted in consonance with the Joint Press Code.

8. It felt that the time had come when positive steps should be taken to promote a more cordial atmosphere by reporting on and reviewing constructive and developmental activities in both countries.

9. The Committee felt that efforts of the two Governments to promote friendly relations should be supplemented by the Press in both the countries collaborating to ensure implementation of the Joint Press Code.

10. The Committee held that better understanding between the two countries would be promoted by broadening the basis of facilities given to journalists for reporting on activities in each country. It held the present procedure to be unduly restrictive.

11. The Committee recommended for increased facilities for circulations of newspapers published in each country to promote better appreciation of the achievements of the two people.

12. The Committee was informed by the Pakistan representatives that the question of the removal of ban on the entry of three Indian newspapers into East Pakistan was under active consideration.

13. On broadcasting, films and publications, the Committee noted the distinct improvement in the tone and complexion of broadcasts of the two organizations and agreed that efforts to maintain this trend and to make further improvements should be continued.

14. In this connection the Committee discussed some specific broadcasts where selection of material and its editing and treatment called for further improvement. They exchanged views with regard to the ways and means of effecting this improvement.

15. The Committee also discussed and favoured the exchange of visits by personnel of the two broadcasting organizations and wherever possible the joint production of programs.
The Committee further recommended that there should be exchange of radio programs, documentary films and publications reflecting economic, social and cultural progress of the two countries.

London, March 16, 1961

7 He then said that the settlement about our boundary issues had created a very good impression. People in West Pakistan as well as in Indian Punjab had celebrated this and were happy after the change. In this way we should settle our other problems also. Very briefly he referred to Kashmir. He said that this was a great burden on our armies. If we could settle that, this burden would be far less and relations between Pakistan and India would be on a very friendly basis with no outstanding problems left. He realized that we attached value to the valley. Could we not make it a separate unit like Switzerland?

8. He further told me that he had seen Lord Mountbatten two or three days ago and pointed out to him how many of our present day troubles between India and Pakistan were due to the vague approach made by the Partition Authorities.

9. I did not say anything in reply to him about this matter. I merely listened. I told him, however, generally that I am always anxious to settle our problems.

0343. SECRET

Extract from a note recorded by Commonwealth Secretary M.J. Desai on the talks between the Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru and Pakistan President Ayub Khan.

4. After President and his Foreign Minister left, P.M. told me that the President had, apart from these questions of water arrangements in the East, mentioned that his letter about Berubari had been misunderstood, that he did not care at all for this small strip of territory and even now he was prepared to accept any suggestion that P.M. made. P.M. told him that we had got through the constitutional amendments and that the matter was now closed. President Ayub Khan also mentioned to P.M. that the boundary settlements had created satisfaction among the border populations on both sides, who were happy as the conditions were settled. He mentioned incidentally that even the bigger problem of Kashmir can be settled to mutual satisfaction and hinted that perhaps the matter may be taken up after the elections in India in 1962.

5. It appeared, particularly from the fact that the Pakistan High Commission had sent a Press Photographer to take picture of the meeting between President Ayub Khan and P.M., that the Pakistan President had come to make a gesture of good will to show to people here and to his own people that he is following up the earlier initiative to improve relations between India and Pakistan.

Extract from letter No. 48 PS/61 dated the 29th April, 1961 from J.N. Atal, Ambassador of India, Ankara to M.J. Desai, Foreign Secretary, Ministry of External Affairs, New Delhi.

Lord Mountbatten felt that the Kashmir problem was not insoluble given a certain amount of goodwill on both sides. He was of the opinion that there was this goodwill at the present moment and that there was also a genuine desire on both sides to settle this vexed issue. I asked him whether he had discussed Kashmir with President Ayub recently and Lord Mountbatten replied that during the Commonwealth Conference he had a very frank and interesting discussion with President Ayub. He had explained to President Ayub that plebiscite was out of the question and that the status quo should be accepted with minor adjustments here and there. He had suggested that perhaps it would be worthwhile trying for a sort of "neutral" valley of Kashmir with guarantees from both Pakistan and India. Ayub evidently listened to this attentively and did not in any way turn it down out of hand. Lord Mountbatten went on to say that before he threw out this "feeler" he had pointed out to Ayub that financially Kashmir was an enormous drain on India and that Pakistan would never, with her present resources, be in a position to spend such large amounts on development works in Kashmir.

I asked Lord Mountbatten whether he had mentioned this talk with Ayub to our Prime Minister and he replied that he had not done so. As this might be of some interest to you, I am reporting it. Only the British Ambassador was present during this conversation.

I wonder if Prime Minister had ever seen the Hindustan Times report of what Shrimati Lakshmi Menon had said in a speech in Hyderabad on about September 25, 1960. This is apparently, the speech of the Deputy Minister referred to by General Shaikh in his Press Conference the other day, which is said to have tipped the balance between amity and discord between India and Pakistan, after the good atmosphere created by the Indus Waters Treaty and the Prime Minister’s visit to Karachi, in September, 1960. Shrimati Menon tells me that the report is naturally a very abbreviated version of what she said; and she had pretty, fully stated India’s case on Kashmir. There was apparently some emphasis on the plebiscite not being possible, because the subject given to her was negative—“why no plebiscite in Kashmir?”

2. When things started going wrong after September, in my talks with Mr. Brohi, I had repeatedly asked him what India had done so soon after the Indus Waters Treaty, that had led to this mounting hate-India campaign, whereas we all in India certainly expected things to go smoother and better after the Prime Minister’s visit to Pakistan. Mr. Brohi had more than once told me that the Deputy Minister had made some statement immediately after the Prime Minister’s return from Pakistan, which his President and the President’s advisers had taken serious umbrage to. Till now I had never been able to lay hands on the report of the speech; and, at one time, I was under the impression that the Pakistan High Commissioner was, perhaps, referring to something said by the Deputy Minister in reply to a question in Parliament, perhaps, in answer to a supplementary question. It was only after General Shaikh’s recent Press Conference that we asked Shrimati Menon what General Shaikh could have referred to, and it was at her instance that we have been able to trace this otherwise unnoticed newspaper report. According to Mr. Brohi, this was followed by Prime Minister’s reference to Kashmir as the “Pandora’s Box”. And from then on, Mr. Brohi said, he “felt his job in India was over”. The Prime Minister will permit me to add that in a short speech I made, when we gave a farewell dinner to Mr. Brohi, I remember pointedly saying that Mr. Brohi seemed to be going away disappointed, but there were many amongst us, he was leaving behind in India who were equally dedicated to bringing about good relations. between India and Pakistan, and we would not abdicate easily – or words to that effect.

0346. SECRET
Letter from Acting High Commissioner V. C. Trivedi to Foreign Secretary M. J. Desai.

My dear Foreign Secretary,

The Kashmir obsession has now gripped the rulers of Rawalpindi with a virulence reminiscent of the fist-brandishing days of Liaquat Ali Khan. There are no longer any pretensions of goodwill or suggestions of peaceful solutions. The press had been directed to abuse, attack and misinform and the anti-Nehru, anti-Hindu, anti-India articles and editorials rival in their venom, the worst ever in Pakistan’s history.

2. The U.S. Vice President came to Karachi for a 24 hour stay and the official circles had hinted that there was to be a concerted attack on the American policy of friendship and assistance to India. The “independent” President of the Azad State of Jammu and Kashmir was summarily summoned to Karachi to be on hand if necessary. The Martial Law nominated President of the Karachi Municipality was given a speech to read at a civic reception and point out the explosive dangers of the Kashmir dispute.

3. The President took with him to Karachi not only Vice President but Foreign Minister Manzur Qadir, Finance Minister Shoaib and man of all trades Zulfikar Ali Bhutto as well. What had smarted Ayub was one of Harriman’s statements during his recent visit. Pakistani newspapers in the passion of their immaturity and the puppetry of their profession had plagued Harriman at every occasion with questions on Kashmir. In the end, Harriman’s patience could stand no more and he told a persistent Correspondent in Lahore that Kashmir was a local dispute between India and Pakistan, on which the U.S.A. would remain neutral. America did not wish, he added, to shed any American blood for their dispute. Even Vice President Johnson’s praise of our Prime Minister and his solicitude for India’s progress were galling to Ayub and his advisers.

4. Ayub talked with Johnson for four hours and talked mainly on Kashmir. It appears that the local American Ambassador had indicated to the Pakistanis that the best course to adopt was to attack Harriman’s indiscretion and to voice loudly Pakistan’s steadfast loyalty to armed alliances. For the last fortnight or so, American Embassy officials had been telling all who asked as well as those who did not ask that Harriman’s comment in Lahore was not in good taste.

5. The principal policy of the Pakistanis now is to malign India and denigrate her Prime Minister. Their supreme objective, however infantile it may sound, is to prevent the Americans from giving financial assistance to India. It does not matter if in the process, Pakistan herself receives less, for irrespective of consequences, it is imperative that the Indian face must be spited. I attach here with some editorials and articles which appeared recently in Pakistani press (not reproduced here).

6. All this is of course part of Ayub’s strategy to make a thorough nuisance of himself internationally so that the world may take notice. He wants to make Kashmir into a Congo or Algeria, Laos or Angola; and he wants the world to interfere.

7. You will remember Douglas Fell. He was in the I.C.S. in Bombay. Subsequently, he joined the Political Service and was for some time in Baroda. After partition, he became the Dewan to the Khan of Kalat and had a tiff with Jinnah which led to his expulsion from Pakistan and retirement from service. He is now a director of the International Correspondence School of London and visits India and Pakistan in that connection. He is a good friend of mine and he saw me a few days ago in Karachi. He told me that when the Khan of Kalat (or was it his son?) went to the U.S.A. in the early days of the Kashmir discussions before the Security Council, he saw an American Assistant Secretary of State. He thought his name was Martin. At any rate, this gentleman told the Khan that the U.S.A. and other countries would interfere in the dispute only if there were trouble in Kashmir. A disagreement between two neighbours, which did not involve bloodshed brought forth no intervention. That was, of course, in the days when the U.S.A. had exhibited clear partisanship for Pakistan.

8. Ayub has either heard of this remark or Rountree has given him similar advice. He is, therefore, bent on creating trouble in and around Kashmir.
9. And now I come to the principal purpose of my writing this letter to you. Khurshid has already started talking of receiving arms through Pakistan. Earlier he had hinted at getting them from China. I do now know whether in actual effect, he will get much beyond a few guns and bombs for sabotage in Kashmir and periodic forays across the cease-fire line. In any case, he will be asked to step up these activities, which will undoubtedly create a lot of trouble in the State.

10. In addition to these excursions of violence, I understand that the Kashmir Intelligence agencies of the Pakistan Ministry of Home Affairs have undertaken another project. They are now printing pamphlets and tracts attacking the Sikh activities of subversion and disloyalty in India. This literature will be written in the style of Milap and Pratap, i.e. in somewhat Hindi-ised Urdu, and is intended to rouse the anger of the Sikhs against the Hindus and the Praja Parishad, who would be described as authors of the pamphlets. I am told that similar pamphlets will be produced attacking the Muslims and Pakistan. Some literature will also be turned out attacking the Hindus and it would be made to appear that the local Sikhs and/or Muslims had written it. All this material would be smuggled across the cease-fire line and distributed widely in Kashmir so as to create hatred and inter-communal discord.

11. I also understand that Pakistan authorities will shortly rehabilitate Maj. Gen. Akbar Khan and his associates of Conspiracy. They would be utilized for such nefarious activities.

12. Pakistanis had done this kind of thing in 1953 before Abdullah’s dismissal. This had led to suspicions and bitterness and when the Praja Parishad had disowned authorship, Shaikh Abdullah had arrested many Hindu Katibs on suspicion of their having written the pamphlets in question. Pakistani intelligence officials feel that the time is now ripe for similar exploits and hope that introduction of such Trojan horses in the nature of pamphlets and bombs would create disorder and tension in Kashmir. Allied to Khurshid’s antics and Ayub’s speeches directed to the world, these alarms and excursions and consequent police action would prove to the world, they hope, that Kashmir is a threat to peace and needs international intervention.

13. You may perhaps like to warn the authorities concerned in Delhi as well as Srinagar of these moves, both with a view to ensuring a scrupulous check on entry of such material and to informing the public of the diabolical authorship of such subversion and attempted confusion if and when these pamphlets are discovered in Kashmir.

With kind regards,

Yours sincerely

V.C. TRIVEDI.

0347. Extract from the Joint Communiqué issued in Washington after talks between U. S. President John F. Kennedy and Paksitan President Ayub Khan.

President Kennedy and President Ayub Khan had a cordial and frank exchange of views over the past three days on topics of mutual interest to their Governments. The visit afforded a timely opportunity for the two Presidents to establish personal acquaintance and to carry forward the exchange of views which took place by correspondence in the past several months.

The two Presidents examined together the threats to the free people of the sub-continent of South-East Asia and agreed that this area was a primary target of international communism; that the integrity and independence of each country in this area depended heavily on friendship and cooperation among all of them; and that solutions of divisive issues, which call for farsighted statesmanship on all sides, were a clear and present need.

President Ayub Khan reaffirmed the desire and objective of his Government to maintain friendly relations with all neighbouring States based on mutual respect and the integrity of Pakistan borders.

He reviewed his Government's position on the Kashmir issue and stressed the great importance attached to this issue by the people of Pakistan. He stated that current developments in South-East Asia have made an early solution of this issue imperative. President Kennedy affirmed the desire of the United States to see a satisfactory solution of the Kashmir issue and expressed the hope that progress toward a settlement would be possible at an early date.

* * * * *

The leaders reaffirmed the solemn purpose of the bilateral agreements signed by the two Governments on March 5, 1959, which declared, among other things, that “the Government of the United States of America regards as vital to the national interest and to world peace the preservation of the independence and integrity of Pakistan...”. They also reaffirmed the value of existing collective security arrangements as an instrument of defence against aggression.

They reviewed the progress of the United States military assistance to Pakistan which was being extended in order to assist that nation to maintain forces for the preservation of its security.

The High Commission of India presents its compliments to the Ministry of External Affairs, Government of Pakistan, and has the honour to draw their attention to the book in Urdu, entitled “World’s Biggest Murder House of Innocent People – Bharati Slaughter House, where Muslims are Burnt Alive”. The author of this books is one M.M. Bashir (Alligi), and it has been published by the Milli Publishing Centre, 162/2 Behar Colony, Karachi.

2. The very title of the book, which begins with a dedication to “those thousands of innocent Muslim children who became victims to Nehruism”, is indicative of the highly objectionable nature of its contents.

3. The object of the book in question is clearly to sow the seeds of hatred and to vilify and malign the Government and people of India. In pursuance of this aim, the author has recklessly distorted facts, made wild allegations and maligned India and her Prime Minister. The theme of the book and the language in which it is couched are such that the High Commission considers that it is one of the most objectionable pieces of writing which has come to its notice during recent times.

4. The High Commission has been instructed to protest emphatically against the circulation of the book in Pakistan which is in gross violation of Indo – Pakistan Agreements on propaganda, and it is hoped that urgent steps will be taken to ban the book.

The High Commission avails itself of this opportunity to renew to the Ministry of External Affairs the assurances of its highest consideration.

Following points discussed with DEHLAVI (Foreign Secretary of Pakistan) today:-

(a) India Office Library. I handed over copy of revised terms of reference and urged appointment of members of Triplication Committee which was only fact finding body and not concerned with policy matters. Also suggested advisibility of agreed panel of three names of members of Judicial committee on the basis of agreement on our respective lists.

* For a brief period Pakistan Ministry of Foreign Affairs was renamed “Ministry of External Affairs.”
(b) Hyderabad funds in West Minister Bank. I urged acceptance for our mutual benefit and without unseemly haggling of our generous offer of 25%.

(c) Consular assets. Here again I urged common stand so that properties could be taken over from British control and shared by us. In all these matters I emphasized need for early agreement for our mutual benefit without which enjoyment of these valuable assets continues to be denied to us.

(d) Then followed a general discussion about decline in our relations and measures for improvement. DEHLAVI insisted that Pakistan President adheres to the view that every effort should continue to be made to arrive at settlement of all practical questions. DEHLAVE regretted public statements in Parliament and elsewhere, but I firmly referred him to background of organized anti-Indian campaign and the great restraint shown by India. DEHLAVI repeated his views about AYUB KHAN’S restraint in Washington and alleged Indian misunderstanding of his statements. Only on question of possible military aid to India did AYUB KHAN ask for differentiating between friends and others and certainly not in regard to economic aid. I have given him some clippings from Pakistan Press by way of illustration, which you could supplement from American Press as the general question of our overall relations is bound to be taken up in conversations with you. DEHLAVI finally said both sides should not harp on the past but explore avenues for future cooperation; but Kashmir question seems to present a road block. I reminded him of clause in last September’s Joint Communiqué on the subject and expressed general regret that better atmosphere which had been built up should have been so wantonly shattered.

(e) Finally I gave him clippings from Pakistan Press regarding TARA* SINGH’S fast with an oral protest regarding great harm that such false and mischievous writings did, accompanied by an aide memoire. DEHLAVI agreed and hoped that early meeting of IPICC would help to provide corrective.

2. You might like to follow up these and other pending matters including compensation for damage to Chancery.

* Sikh leader on the question of reorganization of Indian Punjab on linguistic basis.
Kashmir

In regard to Pakistan, we have had recently quite a good deal of speeches and declarations from responsible people in Pakistan in regard to India, in regard to Kashmir and these speeches and declarations have rather pained me - no doubt it must have pained others too - more especially in the context in which they came. I do not wish to enter into any argument here or at any other time. So far as the question of Kashmir is concerned, our position has been perfectly clear and it remains clear and if anyone in Pakistan thinks that complaining to other countries or trying to rouse other countries or attempting to bully our people will force us into some kind of decisions if they think so, then they have totally misunderstood what India stands for and how India reacts to these tactics. Our position in Kashmir is completely clear. Apart from all the 10 or 12 years of history, the basic facts remain, that Kashmir was invaded by raiders coming through Pakistan and that the Pakistani army followed them, that Kashmir joined legally the Indian Union. These are basic facts. When the U.N. Commission came here, they had accepted these facts. There is no doubt about it. Having accepted them, they made certain proposals. Even in these proposals, which we accepted, the first step was that Pakistan should withdraw from the Kashmir territory. They have never done so in the least. So I cannot understand how anyone in Pakistan, least of all responsible leaders, can go on harping back on this issue. We have shown the greatest tolerance, the greatest patience, because according to us, the whole of Kashmir must be freed of any illegal control as part of it is under Pakistani control. That is our right.

But we have also said that we are not going to take any military measures to push out the Pakistan Army or the controlling apparatus from that area. It is our right and we are prepared to consider that when the time comes, in a peaceful way. That is going pretty far, as the House will appreciate, when we say that we are not going to take any military steps in that area which is occupied by Pakistan. That, as I said, is a policy which exhibits a great deal of patience and tolerance on our side. As for talk of plebiscite, etc., we have had repeated general elections there. We have a kind of responsible government going on there. We have development plans functioning and changing the face of Kashmir. And on the other side which they have occupied, there is backwardness everywhere. Not only in that part, but in the whole of Pakistan, there is no question of any elections or anything of that type. For them to recommend a process in Kashmir which they have themselves discarded completely does seem to me rather odd. Anyhow, that is the position and we are not going to be pushed out or harried by this kind of tactics that some people are employing in Pakistan.

No. 409 August 26, 1961.

Gundevia from Rajeshwar Dayal.

I have just had a long and friendly talk with President AYUB KHAN during which he did not utter a harsh word and was relaxed and in a conciliatory mood throughout. He spoke with regret of the decline in our relations and frequently repeated his earnest desire for better relations. We covered a good deal of ground in the course of the review of our relations and I suggested reversion to the policies and attitudes of the previous two years which had enabled settlement of the boundary and Canal Water questions. When he mentioned Kashmir as a stumbling block and asked for “a little generosity” on our part I told him that it was unrealistic to imagine that a complex problem of this magnitude involving crucial territorial political and emotional considerations could be solved at one full swoop. The only approach was to strive for better all round relations which might enable the problem to be seen in its correct perspective and for its rough edges to be worn down. I also warned against the intrusion of China into the issue in the guise of border talks which would introduce a further grave complication from which only the Chinese would stand to benefit. I mentioned the keen disappointment caused in India by the campaign of denigration against India.

2. AYUB KHAN seemed to be aware that he had reached a dead end and appeared to be groping for a way out. He could give no coherent reason for the decline in relations since he could not have been expected to admit his responsibility for his badly advised moves. But he seemed willing to accept the wisdom of exercising moderation and restraint and of reverting to constructive approaches free from emotionalism. He complained of the subjective reporting of his diplomats which could be dangerously misleading. I think he had SHAFQAT’S reporting in mind.

3. The talk was frank and I hope constructive. I shall follow it up when I go to Murree next month. Full report being sent by bag.

0352. SECRET

Letter from High Commissioner Rajeshwar Dayal to Commonwealth Secretary Y. D. Gundevia reporting details of his talks with President Ayub Khan.

Karachi, August 26, 1961.

High Commission of India
Karachi

No.HC/212/02/61. August 26, 1961/Bhadra 4, 1883 (Saka)

My dear Yezdi,

I called on President Ayub Khan this morning and had half an hour with him.
He has been here on a couple of days’ visit which has been packed with miscellaneous engagements and is leaving for Rawalpindi this afternoon.

2. The President greeted me very warmly, asked how I had been keeping and if I had settled down and whether my wife had joined me. He then asked about the Congo and expressed appreciation for my efforts, which have succeeded in producing results despite the difficulty or the task. He said that criticism from various quarters was only to have been expected in an endeavour of that type. He appreciated the point that the United Nations must adhere firmly to principles against pressures from different quarters.

3. The President then remarked with regret that in my absence our relations had seriously declined. He has been anxious throughout to develop normal, if not friendly, relations with India but things seem to have reached a dead end.
He said he greatly appreciated my efforts and he wished to thank me personally for all that I had done. I replied that I had only been carrying out my instructions faithfully. I assured him that it was my government’s firm desire also to develop better relations and that the recent decline had caused much regret and genuine puzzlement as to its reasons. I said that the September visit had ended on a good and constructive note and that he had himself said that “a good start” had been made. What then was responsible for the present situation?

4. The President said that Kashmir was the stumbling block. Even on that issue, I reminded him that the communiqué recognized the difficulty of the problem, and held out the prospects of a further exchange of views after the		two leaders had given further thought to it. I understood also that there was to have been a return visit early in April when there would have been a further opportunity for discussions. I wished to draw him out in order to clinch the argument and his reply was illuminating.

5. The President replied that on the last day at Rawalpindi he had said to the Prime Minister, when asked about the return visit, that he should think over the Kashmir problem, and that if it would be possible to make some progress towards a solution, the visit would be worthwhile. Otherwise it would cause frustration both in Pakistan and in India. Later he had mentioned the matter in London, but got no reactions. And now there has been this unfortunate exchange of statements.

6. I reminded the President that nothing at all had been said from our side till the 18th July, and that too after months of attacks in the Pakistan and abroad, all sorts of false propaganda was put out about India’s alleged weaknesses and divisions, which had produced a sharp reaction. Indeed even the Indian press, some sections of which were leaning over backwards to applaud the President’s earlier efforts, felt disillusioned. The result was the present situation of stalemate. It was no good accusing each other and drifting apart if the mutual desire was to effect and improvement in relations.

7. The President took all this in good part and made no attempt to hit back.
He said that better relations with India were sincerely desired by him and indeed by the Pakistani public and he asked “where do we go from here?” I asked whether it was not possible to recreate the spirit of last August which was based on solid achievements. I said I agreed with him when he said yesterday in his speech at the Institute of International Affairs that the heart often disconnects with the mind and runs away with things, and I felt that emotionalism had created the present situation.

8. The President said he agreed that we should deal with our mutual problems calmly and objectively as “shouting does not help”. I interjected that perhaps it might be as well to impose a moratorium on public statements and on the excesses in the press. The President listened intently and seemed to agree.

9. The President went on to say that Pakistan’s friendship would be very worthwhile to India as Pakistan would prove to be a good friend. But the Kashmir question must be put out of the way since it would have to be settled some day. It was natural for India and Pakistan to be on good terms with each other and from this remark the talk turned to wider issues.

10. I said that our mutual approach to our problems which had produced useful results such as the solution of the vexed border problem, of the Canal Waters problem, the most important of all our problems and one which affected the welfare of tens of millions of people on both sides of the border – was to tackle the problems which we had inherited from the partition one by one and in a practical way, not to create fresh problems, and to explore all other areas of agreement. Ayub agreed and said that the border questions which were so troublesome had been easily settled and the border had been quiet; this had been greatly welcomed in both countries. He also agreed that the Canal Waters settlement was a big achievement and expressed appreciation for India's cooperation. He appreciated that this cooperation could be developed in the course of the implementation of the treaty.

11. The talk then turned to the origin of partition which was freely agreed to by both sides, in the hope that it would put an end to the disagreements between the Indian National Congress and the Muslim League. That hope however had not been fulfilled. Ayub said that the British had deliberately left behind unsolved problems so that the two countries should be “at each other’s throats”. He had told Mountbatten that while they had adopted democratic methods in dealing with the partition, in the case of the States they had left the destiny of their people in the hands of the rulers. He had told the Prime Minister that Hyderabad would have fallen, by reason of its geographical situation, only by the application of economic sanctions. I picked up the point and said that it was our duty to establish the conditions hoped for by our leaders and we should not allow ourselves to play into the hands of the British. This argument seemed to produce an impact on Ayub, who has always been acutely distrustful of the British since his days as a junior army officer.

12. Ayub asked what was the way out in regard to our future relations and especially in regard to Kashmir. I said that in my opinion we would be best advised to revert to the positive line which had been adopted earlier and which had produced concrete results. Kashmir was an exceedingly difficult problem involving territorial, political and emotional considerations and it was unrealistic to expect a quick settlement merely by sitting around a table. (I said this pointedly to answer Ayub’s plea about India showing “a little generosity”). Experience of similar international problems would show how difficult they were, and how much time and patience were needed to approach them. The only possible approach is to work for an all-round improvement in the atmosphere, to develop more relaxed relations, for then the sharp edges even of the most intractable problem would begin to wear down and things would be seen from new perspectives. Even so, experience also shows that such problems can only be slowly broken up, perhaps by stages, till they lose something of their acerbity. In Pakistan, the old politicians had only whipped up passions and exacerbated the problems; the President’s own experience would show that a rational, practical, moderate and restrained approach alone could produce results.

13. The President listened attentively and said that he feared that our minds were not open on some of these problems, especially Kashmir. I replied that as a military man he would appreciate that a frontal attack is not always the best method of approach and one could soften things in various ways. It was important not to keep doubting each other’s inventions, and to revert to the feelings of last summer when there were no such questionings.

14. At this point I said that I had been very concerned to hear of the approaches which had been made to China regarding the border with Kashmir. I warned the President that if China was no friend of ours, it was much less a friend of Pakistan’s. Bringing China into the Kashmir dispute would make the problem completely insoluble, for the Chinese would be playing only their own game. I reminded the President of what he had told me in November, 1959, that Pakistan would not take advantage of India’s difficulties with China and of his own views regarding China’s aggressiveness and expansionism. I added: “He who sups with the devil must have a long spoon”. I could see that Ayub was disturbed by this though he did not question me; it is generally believed here that Manzur Qadir’s lawyer’s brain has been responsible for the flirtations with China, about which the President may be having second thoughts. The Americans too have been expressing much concern.

15. Ayub went on to say that some of the reports of his diplomats had been worrying him. Either they were too black and gloomy, or under local influences, too rosy and optimistic. Such subjective reporting was very dangerous as a government had to depend upon its envoys for its information. I said that a diplomat had to make a deep study and to be ruthlessly objective; only then could he truly assist his government in the framing of concrete policies. Ayub agreed heartily and said that diplomacy was a highly skilled profession.

16. Before leaving, I said that we would be going up to Murree next month where I hoped to keep in touch with him. Ayub said he was very happy to hear it adding “you must come and look us up”. He asked me to convey his greetings to my wife and I reciprocated by asking that my respects be conveyed to the Begum Sahiba.

17. The talk was marked by warmth, friendliness and candour and the President’s approach was conciliatory throughout. He did not use a harsh word and his tone was one of regret and resignation and not of anger or complaint. He seemed to be at a dead end and in search of a way out. He repeated several times his sincere desire for better relations, which was the underlying note of the entire conversation. I took advantage of his mood to point to various errors, in reversing last year’s trends and in the flirtations with China and tried to point a constructive way out. Ayub’s remarks about the reporting by his diplomats are very revealing. Brohi told me that for the last four months of his stay in India (presumably since the Berubari muddle) he had practically stopped working and let Shafqat run things. Shafqat was playing his own game and I am glad that he is being recalled. I also think that it was Aziz Ahmad who was responsible for leading the President into the blunder of attacking the Americans and for the whole tone and tenor of the Washington visit. Now that the shouting is dying down, Ayub has perhaps had time for reflection. There is not doubt that Ayub is badly informed and worse advised and glimmerings of understanding may again be beginning to dawn. I hope also that he will ponder over my words; when I see him next in Murree or Rawalpindi, I hope to able to gauge better their impact.

17. Ayub has definitely shot his bolt in his maneuverings with the United States and with India. The Washington visit must have shown him the limits to which the Americans are prepared to accommodate him and where they firmly draw the line. Since the beginning of the rumblings over Berlin and the need of the Americans for bases and military facilities in Pakistan, the anti-American outburst here may have been intended to extract the utmost from the situation.
It is believed that all kinds of military facilities have already been accorded or promised to the Americans and that the propaganda barrage was intended as an elaborate camouflage. But in regard to India, there is little more that Pakistan can now say or do and there is likely to be a gradual retraction from the untenable positions which have been adopted. In this process, American influence could be of help, although Rountree is somewhat ineffective and Ayub has often exhibited a tendency to take the bit between his teeth. The surprise move to close down Consulates in Afghanistan might also result in a more moderate and sober policy towards India, for even Ayub and his advisers must see that Pakistan cannot afford to fight a political war on two fronts. In the context of these developments, my straight talk with Ayub was timely and I hope his provided him with food for thought.

With kind regards,

Yours sincerely,

0353. Extract from the Press Note of the Press Information Department of the Government of Pakistan reporting from the speech of President Ayub Khan at the mass rally pledging to free Kashmir.

Lahore, August 28, 1961.

President Ayub who was addressing the first public meeting in Lahore since his return from the United States, gave an account of his stewardship. He underlined the grave peril facing the country due to salinity and water-logging and pointed out that President Kennedy had promised to assist us in tackling this grave menace which in the course of 30 or 40 years might reduce West Pakistan to a desert.

* * * * *

PAKISTAN FOR PEACE

Referring to the international situation, he said that nuclear war would mean the decimation of mankind. He hoped and prayed that those who had the power would refrain from inflicting this horror on the world; there would be neither victor nor a vanquished. Therefore, Pakistan prayed for peace and understanding and worked indefatigably towards the achievement of this end.

* * * * *

He quoted as an example Pakistan’s attitude on the Kashmir issue. They had made repeated efforts during last two years to solve this in a peaceful manner. When Mr. Nehru visited Pakistan he was urged upon to find a peaceful and just solution of this problem. But Indian leadership had so far remained indifferent to the dangers inherent in the situation. An armed conflict, he added, would destroy both Pakistan and India. It was tragic, he said, that when Indians got their freedom and Pakistanis got their freedom, the Kashmiris got one hundred thousand armed soldiers on their necks.

Kashmir was vital to Pakistan because the fertility of West Pakistan depended upon the rivers which rose in the Kashmir mountains.

Owing to the vagaries of the monsoon, cultivation depended largely on irrigation. It was for this reason, said the President that the British Administration had built up a huge network of irrigation canals and under the agreement with India, it was necessary for us to build more link canals between the western rivers and huge reservoirs for the storage of water. This would take at least 10 years during which every Pakistani would have to make his contribution by hard and unflagging labour. But the President pointed out that most of the rivers which fed West Pakistan rose in Kashmir. It was therefore imperative that the implementation of the Canal Waters Treaty should go hand in hand with an amicable and just solution of the Kashmir issue. Pakistan was therefore determined to redeem its pledge to those who had been enslaved by the aggressor in Kashmir.

AFGHANS’ TERRITORIAL AMBITION

The President referred to the Afghans’ territorial ambitions on Pakistan’s territory which he said amidst laughter extended as far as the sea port of Kashmir. Government had decided to close down its consulates in Jalalabad and Kandhar because the Afghans had made it impossible for the Pakistanis to live there. They could not make purchases at shops; they could not keep servants; they could not have washer-men to wash their clothes. These were unfriendly and provocative acts and Government felt no purpose would be served by retaining these consulates. The President said amid loud applause that Pakistanis were determined to defend every inch of their territory.

No. 415.

Gundevia from Rajeshwar Dayal.

Last night at airport where we had assembled to meet Mrs. BANDARANAIKE General BURKI came up to me and said how much he regretted recent sharpening in relations between our countries. He said he would like to go India to meet Prime Minister to try and remove the misunderstandings which had been caused. He added that President AYUB KHAN was genuinely anxious to repair matters and hinted that AYUB KHAN had listened to bad counsels although his own heart was sound. He said he would undertake to “soften up” AYUB KHAN and begged me to do my best to restore last year’s hopeful trends. BURKI is known to be a moderating influence in the Cabinet but he admitted that the recent adverse developments had taken place without consultation with him. He spoke of the need for a little generosity, tolerance and patience on both sides. Our differences which were not irreconcilable created jubilations among others, and there was no reason why they could not be resolved or adjusted, he observed.

2. I said that we were baffled by the campaign of hostilities against India and had shown great patience and restraint. In our democracy we could not be expected forever to remain silent in the face of noisy provocations. It is evident that the sharpness of our relations has jerked the Pakistan rulers into a mood of greater sobriety.

3. It appears that President AYUB KHAN is beginning to realize the folly of his recent policies which have wantonly jettisoned the positive achievements of two years of efforts. BURKI was obviously asked to approach me because of his general reputation; he is one Minister who has not uttered a word against India.

4. DEHLAVI is full of praise for the spirit of cooperation and friendliness which animated the recent talks and the warmth of the hospitality received.

No.HC-221/61 September 2, 1961

My dear Yezdi,

I have already sent you a telegram about my talk with General Burki on August 29. Some comments on the present trends would now be appropriate. Burki’s attitude was on of regret and concern at the decline in our relations, but curiously enough, the strong feelings generated in India at Pakistani behaviour seemed to have come as a surprise to him and his colleagues. The Pakistani rulers appear to live in a world of their own and while they feel free to rampage at will, they pretend to be hurt when they receive a well-merited and long delayed retort. They are probably now beginning to realize the bankruptcy of their policy, for having fired off all their guns, there is nothing more that they can do except to listen to the echo.

2. Burki said he had many friends in India, and he felt that he could talk to the Prime Minister and convince him of Ayub’s genuine desire for an improvement in our relations. He thought the recent sharpening of relations was the result of misunderstandings on both sides which could be removed by the right approach. He pleaded for a little tolerance and patience. He hoped that it would be possible to arrange for him to visit India.

3. I told him quite frankly that we were appalled by the outburst against India and the spate of hostile speeches in Pakistan and abroad and the organized Press campaign. In the face of these provocations we had shown the utmost patience, for the first reply made from our side was as late as on the 18th July. In our democratic system, Parliament and the public were entitled to be kept informed of the situation and our reactions to the persistent campaign of denigration of India. Burki did not contest this, but pleaded that it was now time for the polemics to cease and to start rebuilding our damaged relations.

4. Burki was apologetic regarding the ill-advised remarks which the President made in the course of his foreign policy speech regarding my work in Pakistan, but he appreciated the point that I was the representative of my Government and my activities here were in accordance with their policies and instructions. He tried to excuse the President by saying that he felt unhappy at having to criticize India in my presence knowing how hard I had tried to improve relations. The effect of the President's remarks about my work here has been to negative the impact of the criticism leveled against India. Burki went on to say that Ayub had “affection and regard” for me and he urged me to do what I could to repair the breach. I said that while I would certainly do what I could, which would be in furtherance of my Government’s policy nothing was possible without Pakistani cooperation. Burki assured me that he, for his part, would do his utmost to “soften up” the President, adding that the President was a warm hearted man but sometimes given to acting on impulse, and he hinted that he had listened to bad counselors. He said that our differences were not irreconcilable and that the present unfortunate situation was giving pleasure only to those who were no friends of either country. I replied that previously we had approached our problems from the correct angle and had succeeded in solving two major problems and I could not understand why that approach had been unilaterally abandoned by Pakistan. Burki said that we must make a fresh start and he promised to give his full cooperation in the process.

5. It is evident that Burki, who was with the President during his last visit here, had been asked to follow up my conversation with the President. Yesterday
I received a message from Manzur Qadir asking me to lunch with him when he comes to Karachi on the 9th September. The peace offensive seems now to be on and we would be well advised not to allow the initiative to be taken over by Pakistan.

6. The best course would seem to be to attempt to restore the policies and approach which were being followed till Ayub disrupted them. This would imply renewed efforts to take up our various problems one by one in the spirit of the Joint Communiqués of September 1, 1959 and of September 23, 1960. This should be accompanied by an improvement in the tone of the Pakistani Press, while the Pakistani Foreign Office could be pressed for the removal of various irritants. In this context one could ask for the settlement of a number of minor questions on which little progress has been made for years. We could also press for a more cooperative approach to the questions on which little progress has been made for years. We could also press for a more cooperative approach to the questions of the Indian Office Library, the Hyderabad funds and consular assets. We could also take up anew the question of liberalisation of the visa policy, as Pakistan seems to be moving in a reverse direction. Then there is the hardly annual (sic) of discriminatory treatment against Indian businesses and businessmen. I am having a list drawn up of subjects which we can take up at different levels, and you might perhaps also like to give some thought to the matter so that I may be fully prepared when I meet Qadir on September 9.

7. The present appears to be a good psychological moment to press the Pakistanis diplomatically on various fronts. Relations with Afghanistan are at breaking point, while the Russians have stepped up their pressure on Pakistan since the publication of the CENTO documents. In the context of Pakistan’s extreme difficulties with its neighbours, it can hardly afford any further worsening of relations with India.

8. The above does not imply that we should go all out to take up the various pending issues with Pakistan, for it was Pakistan and not India which reversed last year’s hopeful trends. But since all these statements are being made about Pakistan’s desire to improve relations, we should seek opportunities to put their protestations to the test, the present situation being distinctly advantageous from our point of view. This would also be in line with our policy which has been consistent throughout to stand firmly for our rights but to seek peaceful settlements whenever and wherever possible.

9. In this process, the American attitude could be of crucial importance. Pakistan has maneuvered itself into the position where on two issues, it has run directly counter to American aims and interests. The first is Pakistan’s flirtation with China over the border issue. Rountree expressed great concern when I related the position to him in detail drawing the conclusion that it was China alone which would stand to benefit and that its intrusion into the Kashmir picture would make the problem still more intractable. Now in regard to Afghanistan, the Pakistanis have forced relations to the point of no return, contrary to President Kennedy's express warnings. Both these are matters over which the Americans, however anxious they may be to lean over backwards to oblige Pakistan, cannot be at all happy. If we therefore, seize this opportunity to take up various pending issues of a practical nature with Pakistan, there should be some expectation of American encouragement, if not support. Such an approach would also help to bypass the Kashmir question. Of course, there would be the usual noises by Khurshid and others but these we need not take too seriously.

10. You might like to give thought to the present trends and developments and let me have your general views as to the line that I should pursue here during the coming weeks when the approaches to me at different levels are bound to intensify.

With kind regards,

Yours sincerely,

Rajeshwar Dayal

SECRET

Letter from Foreign Secretary M. J. Desai to High Commissioner Rajeshwar Dayal.

New Delhi, September 6, 1961.

No. FS-663/61 6th September, 1961

My dear Dayal,

Please refer to your letter No. HC-221/61 dated 2nd September to Gundevia.

2. As Gundevia is on tour in Kashmir, I am giving my own thinking if it is any use to you for your meeting with Manzur Qadir on the 9th. Gundevia will send a fuller reply on his return from tour.

3. Frankly, all the agreeable noises that Pakistan makes, have one major objective, namely, to get us to change our stand on Kashmir. Once we get entangled and take tentative positions, they would reopen the whole matter and try to get what they could not in spite of their efforts in the Security Council, their Defence Pacts and alliances. I have not the slightest doubt that Ayub and the Pakistanis changed their tune on the afternoon of 23rd September 1960 when they found that there was no giving on Kashmir. The press conference that morning coupled with earlier discussions that Prime Minister and President Ayub had demonstrated to Pakistan clearly our firm determination not to budge on Kashmir. That is the real reason for their barrage of propaganda and as this does not seem to have worked with the Americans or the others and has only annoyed us, the game of making agreeable noises has started again.

4. If Burki wants to come to India, he would certainly be welcome. We agree with your suggestion in the concluding portion of paragraph 6 that you might have a list drawn up of subjects which we can take up at different levels to seek settlements in various minor matters. I doubt, however, whether Pakistanis will bite. They would want to negotiate on the major questions, namely, Kashmir and perhaps on the Farraka Barrage.

5. You would naturally let us know what line Manzur Qadir proposes. It may be that they want to be agreeable during the next two three months to prevent any hard hitting by us during this period and during the period of PM’s visit to the States. While I am all for peace and friendship, it will hardly be politic to soft-paddle our differences with Pakistan on Kashmir particularly, if a specific questions were to be put on the subject either in public or in private discussion.

With kind regards.
My dear Yezdi,

I had a long talk with Mr. Manzur Qadir at his request yesterday which related entirely to the catastrophic decline in our relations and future perspectives. Manzur Qadir began by saying that there had been an uncontrolled sliding back in our relations with one misunderstanding piling up on top of another, giving rise to the situation in which we find ourselves today. Reviewing the events since the Prime Minister’s visit, Manzur Qadir made the following points.

2. The Muzaffarabad statement of President Ayub Khan was misconstrued as implying that even if others forgot the Kashmir issue, the Pakistan Army would not, which was thought to contain a threat of military action. Qadir said that the real meaning was that the Army being the guardian of Pakistan’s security, would not be fulfilling its duty if this important security – and economic problem – remained unresolved. I remarked that what he described as a wrong impression was shared also by the Pakistani press and that perhaps the statement could have been differently worded to express its correct intention. Qadir then went on to refer to the Prime Minister’s television statement in which he had described the Kashmir question as a “Pandora’s box”, an expression which was taken to imply that the box would remain closed and consequently... charges of bad faith etc. came to be made. I expressed surprise that a casual remark made to a television audience should be given greater importance than the intimate talks held at Murree on the subject and the public statement of our respective positions in the joint communiqué.

3. As regards the American scene, Qadir slurried over the Press campaign which had started even before the elections, and referred to Lyndon Johnson’s visit and his refusal to express any views on the Kashmir question and his reported statement that he had asked the Prime Minister to assume the leadership in the South Asia area. Qadir said that the Pakistanis began to ask what benefit the country was deriving from joining in American sponsored anti-Communist military blocs (which it had done in order to “develop internal strength”) if the Americans made no distinction between their allies and others. I told Qadir that it was not for Lyndon Johnson or anyone else to cast the mantle of leadership on anyone and I proceeded to fill in the gaps in his story. The outcry in Pakistan was occasioned by the declared policies of the Kennedy Administration which were a sharp departure from the Dullesian approach. The new Administration never said that it would reduce its aid to Pakistan; all that it said was that it would increase its aid to India and the outcry was, therefore, aimed not at benefiting Pakistan but at harming India. Furthermore, consternation was created by the amendment of the Mutual Security Act which was wrongly taken to imply that India would accept gifts of military hardware. I made it clear that we did not believe in military aid from others but relied on our own resources to build up our strength.

4. Qadir then dealt at some length with the Berubari muddle. He expressed profound apologies for the mishandling of the whole affair which had caused us unnecessary hurt and said that Pakistan still adhered to the principle of not insisting on its pound of flesh and was prepared to make accommodations to suit our convenience. By way of example, he mentioned Pakistan’s willingness to accept some other area – viz. the limestone quarries in Assam – in place of the three villages in the Patharia area which fell to Pakistan as a result of the border agreement. Recounting the various steps, he said that Brohi had been approached by a Cabinet Minister with the suggestion that Pakistan should not insist upon Berubari but Brohi said that he would take up the matter only if requested to do so by the Prime Minister. Thereupon another Cabinet Minister saw him on behalf of the Prime Minister and repeated the request to which Brohi gave the same reply. Finally Brohi saw the Prime Minister who spoke to him frankly in the same sense. Without referring the matter to the Foreign Office, Brohi dashed off to Rawalpindi and saw the President who was about to leave on tour to Quetta, Qadir himself being at Karachi at the time. The various steps taken in the matter were reported by Brohi and the proposition as presented to the President was that Pakistan should state that they were not interested in the Berubari Union, leaving it to India to offer an alternative. Qadir came into the picture only after the President had himself reacted against this approach and he also advised against it. He thought that umbrage was taken by us at the tone of the President’s statement but he now realized that the whole method and approach were misconceived, as insistence upon a request by the Prime Minister would naturally give rise to the impression that Brohi had previously cleared the matter with his Government and that only the formalities remained. Qadir went on to say that the whole muddle was due to Brohi’s ego as he wished to take credit at the highest level and was not content to proceed in the normal diplomatic manner and by stages. Qadir said that he accepted full responsibility for the fiasco, was deeply sorry for what had occurred and offered his sincere apologies. I said that the President’s statement in Dacca had made matters worse and Qadir did not disagree adding that one thing led to another. We left the matter at that.

5. Qadir went on to say that the sharp references in Parliament to Ayub Khan’s visit to the United States had produced strong reactions in Pakistan but he had done his best to prevent any reply being made on a personal level. He expressed regret that personal references should have been made in the Indian Parliament. I corrected Qadir’s version by reminding him that during previous state visits as well, anti-Indian propaganda – sometimes at the personal level – had been carried out which was highly unusual for visit of that character. During the American visit, there was open propaganda against India and denigration of its respected leaders. All this had caused both surprise and annoyance in the country. I also mentioned the stoning of the Chancery and the orchestrated anti-Indian press campaign. All this had shattered the image of the new Pakistani regime which appeared to be following in the foot steps of its politician predecessors. I emphasized that a correct evaluation of the situation on the basis of a balanced approach alone could help in a diagnosis of the situation if an improvement was desired.

6. Qadir said that the present administration was as firmly convinced as ever that it was essential in the interests of both countries to settle their mutual problems step by step and he referred to the success achieved by this method in the past. He himself did not agree, at least so far as the present administration was concerned, that if the Kashmir question was out of the way, Pakistan would raise some other issue, but he could not say what any future administration would do. He lamented the fact that while the two leaders had got on well together previously, it would be much more difficult for them now to reverse the trends which had been created. He was anxious to try to find some new approach which would break through the present adverse trends. He said that no opportunity should be lost to prevent any further deterioration and new ways for developing cooperation should be explored. He fully realized that in the present surcharged atmosphere there was no question of making even a beginning with discussions on the Kashmir issue and he fully appreciated the need for a détente.

7. I said that it was much more difficult to retrieve a situation after it had been destroyed but felt that a beginning could be made by showing some accommodation in matters where our interests coincided, such as the questions of the India Office Library, the consular assets or the Hyderabadi funds. Qadir said that he would like to discuss the first issue later but on the question of Hyderabadi funds, instructions had been issued to agree to India’s proposal while on the third issue appropriate instructions to enable an agreement to be reached had been issued with the direction that in case of difficulty, discussions should not be broken off and that the matter should be referred back to him for instructions.

8. Qadir said that the difficulties which had arisen were largely psychological and the result of the absence of communication but while he could not himself immediately suggest a way out, he was hopeful that things would begin to sort themselves out again, promising full cooperation in the task. He said he hoped to come over to Murree to continue the discussion. He also hoped that I would keep in contact with the President.

9. Qadir’s approach to the problem was one of disappointment and regret, thought not of hopelessness. He kept harping on the theme of the need of pull things together, but made no positive suggestions. In reviewing the situation, he argued like a lawyer to a brief, and I felt it necessary, forcefully and at length, to correct the one-sided picture which he tried to present. I think there is a better understanding of our position now in Pakistani governmental quarters.
Whether they feel that their tactics over the past months have swung back on them, or whether, with the worsening of the world situation and the sharp decline in their relations with Afghanistan and the Soviet union, accompanied by American annoyance at their brusque handling of the Afghan issue, it is evident that they are beginning to realize that they cannot carry on a war of nerves on all fronts. Soothing noises in our direction will therefore continue to be made, and the question is how we should react to them.

In my opinion, we should try and draw out the Pakistanis as much as we can and see to what extent they are prepared to cooperate in the settlement of various comparatively small but vexatious problems some of which have been pending for years. We should not show any undue eagerness ourselves, for it is the Pakistanis who are responsible for the present impasse, but we should not at the same time, be unresponsive to positive approaches. I have adopted the attitude of not going out of my way to open discussions; my call on the President was in the nature of a courtesy visit on my return to my functions, although a substantive exchange of views developed, while General Burki and Manzur Qadir themselves approached me. And Mr. Bhutto has also expressed a desire for a long talk, and there is general satisfaction at our going up to Murree where contacts will be easier.

As I wrote to you in an earlier letter, now would be a good time to prepare a list of pending matters and to test Pakistani intentions by pressing for their settlement.

With kind regards,

Yours sincerely,

Rajeshwar Dayal

Letter from Commonwealth Secretary Y. D. Gundevia to High Commissioner Rajeshwar Dayal.

No. 909-CS/61

My dear

Will you please refer to your D.O. letter No: HC/228/61 dated September 11, 1961, on your talk with Manzur Qadir?

2. Manzur Qadir appears to have taken not a very different line with you from the one tried out by Burki. He apparently wants us to forget all that has been said and done ever since President Ayub Khan’s Muzaffarabad statement. Manzur Qadir has even gone on to offer “his sincere apologies” in regard to the President’s conduct on Berubari. May I dilate a little on this? The version which Brohi had given me, first hand, differs somewhat from Manzur Qadir’s. Brohi had told me, himself, that he had cleared the suggestion, that some other area like the limestone quarries in Assam may be exchanged for the southern half of Berubari, with others in the Government, before he went to the President.
And Brohi was, therefore, very surprised when the President brushed the proposition aside almost with a single sentence, saying that his "colleagues" would not hear of it. As you know, the President's rude letter to the Prime Minister on Berubari was written immediately after Brohi's interview with the President in Rawalpindi and delivered to the Prime Minister by Shafqat, post-haste, before Brohi could return to Delhi. Manzur Qadir is, therefore, not right when he says that the whole muddle was due to Brohi's ego, as he wished to take credit at the highest level for himself and was not content to proceed in the normal diplomatic manner, and by stages.

3. And yet, whatever else, we welcome these "soothing noises in our direction", because they are more pleasant than abuses. As I have said elsewhere, I am all for taking advantage of any gradual improvement in our relations and I agree that we should go ahead and try to resolve, one by one, the pending issues. We are preparing the list of these pending matters and on this I shall write to you separately.

4. I have placed your three letters, covering your talks with President Ayub Khan, Burki and Manzur Qadir, Nos. HC/212/61, HC-221/61 and HC/228/61 dated August 26, September 2 and September 11, respectively, before the Prime Minister.

Letter from Commonwealth Secretary to High Commissioner Rajeshwar Dayal.

New Delhi, September 14, 1961.

My dear

I am sorry I was not able to acknowledge your letter No: HC/212/61 dated August 26, 1961, in which you had reported on your talk with President Ayub Khan. I had called for some previous correspondence, particularly on the subject of Kashmir, but I could not go through this before I went away on my tour of Kashmir.

2. My first comment is that I am glad that you have established your personal contacts with the President, as well as the others in the Government. As I have said elsewhere, we have certainly suffered these last many months for want of these contacts, particularly with the President, in your absence from Pakistan these last many months.

3. Your recent letters, this one on your talk with Ayub Khan, as well as your subsequent letters on your discussions with Burki and Manzur Qadir, show that Pakistan is in a chastened mood, once again, after the long drawn out campaign of hate and venom against India, which preceded the President's visit to the United States. This may well be due to the realization that the much advertised visit to the States has not, after all, yielded the sort of results that were expected. I am all for taking advantage of any seeming improvement, to tackle and resolve, one by one, the pending problems. You have in your last letter No: HC/228/61 dated September 11, on your talk with Manzur Qadir, suggested that we might draw up a list of these pending issues. We will certainly do this and see where we get. We did not do badly on the recent conference on the revision of the Punjab Ground Rules, as you know, and we may succeed in other directions also.

4. And yet on Kashmir we have to proceed with extreme caution. We cannot afford to be vague or give anybody in Pakistan the impression that, given some time, we would be prepared to make concessions or that any concessions would be forthcoming. I have been reading the past correspondence on the subject and I would refer you to Prime Minister's letter No: 1448 PMH/59 dated July 2, 1959, and M.J. Desai's letter to you, No. 371 CS/60 dated June 21, 1960. The Prime Minister has stated in letter:
“So far as Kashmir is concerned, our attitude henceforth must be absolutely firm and unyielding. We should not allow anyone to imagine that we are going out of our way or that we are going to give up anything to please Pakistan in order to get a settlement”. If this line is consistently maintained, Pakistan is bound to come round, gradually.

5. We are glad of the little change for the better, but, concretely, I must tell you there is no improvement on the Kashmir front. The statistics of incidents, firing, casualties and sabotage, for the first five months of the current year were not too bad in comparison with the corresponding period of 1960. But June, July and August have been very bad, and the figures for the third quarter of the current year, I am afraid, will show only an intensification of these activities. In the Mendhar sector in Poonch, as you know, there has been constant firing, day after day, since the last week of June, and the sabotage activities all along the line have increased, and not decreased, these last three or four months. If there is to be any show of goodwill, we must hope for something concrete. When you get the opportunity, I hope you will press this on the powers that be in Pakistan.

Yours sincerely

No.HC/COM/18/61 September 28, 1961

My dear Yezdi,

A number of my colleagues have been on trips to Gilgit during the last week or so, including the Soviet Ambassador. Permits are issued on application to the Ministry for Kashmir Affairs and there are three or four flights daily by Dakota. The flight takes about an hour and a half and there are arrangements for stay overnight at a Rest House although the return trip can be made easily in one day.

2. I have had full accounts of the trip from my colleagues. For security reasons, they were not allowed to take photographs even of the mountains. Scenically, the flight is most impressive and surprisingly easy. Kapitsa who stayed overnight, told me that the airfield in Gilgit is surrounded by hills and the runway is long enough only to take a Dakota and definitely not a jet plane including fighters. There were no planes on the ground and he saw no installations at all. He mentioned seeing some Germans who had been trekking to Hunza and beyond ostensibly studying the languages of the region. He also noted from the Guest Book that a large number of Americans had been there as well as Imperial Defence College personnel. He said there was an indifferent jeepable road to Skardu and another to Hunza and a suspension bridge over the Indus for pedestrian traffic. He did not see any evidence of military preparations and seemed to have returned reassured. He was himself surprised that he had been given permission to visit the place.

3. My French colleague who made the trip yesterday also spoke about the scenic beauty and the likelihood of development of the area for purposes of tourism. He had been invited to dinner by Habihur Rahman who, I believe, was Netaji’s companion at the time of the fatal air crash and who is now the Political Officer in Gilgit. The French Ambassador witnessed a game of the type of polo that is played in the area. The Papal Internuncio who had accompanied him on the flight, has stayed on with the intention of visiting some other areas in the vicinity. A jeep containing a small party of Europeans had just returned after a perilous trip to Hunza.
4. The Dakota planes used on the flights have passenger seats for eight persons, the rest of the space being used for freight. There is apparently a track or a barely jeepable road to Gilgit and therefore supplies are mostly flown out by air.

5. I have had some hesitation in asking for permission to make the trip as I do not wish to invite a refusal. But I shall informally sound Manzur Qadir although because of the status of the territory I could understand if there is some hesitation. The trip should be interesting from many points of view as the plane flies over Muzaffarabad and the Kaghan Valley, and after skirting Nanga Parbat and Chilas reaches Gilgit.

With kind regards,

Yours sincerely

Letter from High Commissioner Rajeshwar Dayal to Commonwealth Secretary Y. D. Gundevia.

Karachi, October 5, 1961.

High Commission of India
Karachi

My dear Yezdi,

Mr. and Mrs. Manzur Qadir came over to tea with us at Murree on Sunday, the 1st October. Qadir seemed to be under great pressure and looked very tired. The President had given him till the 30th September for the conclusion of his report on the Constitution Commission’s proposals. The delicacy of the task and the race against time were no doubt responsible for his state of mind and health.
2. Qadir was apologetic that he did not have enough time during the past months to attend to foreign policy matters which had resulted in some disarray and lack of coordination. He said he was sorry about the furor created over the question of the Durand Line which seems now to have been satisfactorily settled. I said that I was surprised at the manner in which the matter was handled and how, without first asking for the text of the remarks, the Foreign Office took the serious step of making a formal protest and describing the remarks as a "hostile act". Surely, the respective envoys could have been asked to ascertain details or to furnish clarifications before lodging a formal protest. The whole affair had the aspects of a clumsy provocation and had died down as suddenly as it had erupted. Qadir merely expressed regret over yet another avoidable misunderstanding and remarked sadly on the public excitement and damage which Mansuri’s message had done.

3. Qadir referring to our previous conversation, said that he had not had enough time to consider how a new beginning could be made to improve matters. But he expressed his anxiety, as a first step, not to allow things to get any worse. While he still thought – as did Burki and Bhutto – that a meeting at the highest level could again help to set the right tone, he appreciated the fact that any premature step would be risky and that some intermediate action was necessary.

4. I said that there were certain pending matters of common interest whose solution we should immediately attempt on a cooperative basis. These are the Indian Office Library issue, the question of the consular assets and that of the Hyderabadi funds. As regards the first, I urged Qadir to appoint an officer to serve on the Triplication Committee and to give thought to the draft of the terms of references. He said that he would immediately send for the papers and try to expedite matters. On the question of selection of three Members of the Privy Council, he agreed that it would be advantageous to select three names ourselves, adding that he would welcome our list for discussion. Perhaps you will let me have our suggestions so that I could take them up with Qadir when I see him again in about ten days in Rawalpindi or Murree.

5. On the question of consular assets, Qadir said that he appreciated the need for joint action and would enquire where matters had got entangled. Regarding the Hyderabadi funds, Pakistan had been in touch with the Westminster Bank to enquire whether there could be exemption from estate duty in case the matter remained unresolved during the Nizam’s lifetime. He said that the Bank had made some suggestions but could not inform me of the details, which I shall try to ascertain from Dehlavi. He agreed that the points of difference had been greatly narrowed down and the aim should be to reach a speedy solution.
6. Qadir appreciated the need to achieve some positive results on these matters and that nothing should be neglected which could facilitate a rapprochement between the two countries. He felt a little accommodation on both sides would help to improve matters.

7. Acting on this cue, I mentioned to him Bhattacharya's case of which he had himself spoken at an earlier meeting. I asked what good he thought would come of the prosecution; the occasion of the conviction would, no doubt, be seized upon for a further propaganda campaign. The matter had excited much interest in India in general and in Bengal in particular. Judging from the way the trial was proceeding, the result appeared to be a foregone conclusion. Qadir explained at length his attitude when Trivedi took the matter up with him. He said that he had actually sent for the file from the Home Ministry a step which was not much appreciated in those quarters, and if he had intervened at that stage, it would have amounted to his questioning the competence of that Ministry. However, after examining the file, a prima facie case appeared to have been made out and there was no valid grounds on which he felt he could interfere. The trial, therefore, was proceeded with. I again asked Qadir to ponder over the consequences of a conviction accompanied possibly by a savage sentence. He appreciated the point and said that he would give thought to it and would like to discuss it with me again. While nothing tangible emerged from our talk, I think I succeeded in making some impression on Qadir regarding the harmful consequences of Bhattacharya being kept under imprisonment in Pakistan, mincing no words about the strong reactions in India. When I see him again, I shall try and drive the point home.

8. I expressed my surprise to Qadir at the Foreign Office spokesman's rather unusual utterances concerning Indian policy and asked whether he thought it proper for an official to make statements of the kind to which we have lately been regaled. Qadir said that as he himself was too busy, he had allowed Dehlavi to meet the Press in order to deal with the Afghanistan issue but Dehlavi had allowed himself to be drawn into other matters as well. Qadir said that he himself had been very circumspect in any references to India but Dehlavi had not shown the same caution or choice of expression. Qadir assured me that by the middle of November he would get back to work in the Foreign Office and hoped that things would improve then.

9. Begum Qadir told my wife that they were unhappy and hard pressed and that Qadir would like to resign if he could. He had made a lot of enemies and had lost heavily financially in the bargain. Qadir confided to me that people were "gunning" for him and he had to be very careful. He was greatly disturbed at the executions of the various Ministers in Turkey and South Korea for their only offence of carrying out their respective Government's policies. As the conscience keeper of the present rulers of Pakistan in regard to the framing of the Constitution, Qadir has certainly taken on a very onerous responsibility, for whatever happens, he is certain to be blamed by all parties. It is evident that the proposals will not be welcomed by the politicians or intelligentsia, and should public dissatisfaction develop, the President would also lay the blame at Qadir’s door. Meanwhile, Qadir has fallen foul of his professional colleagues and the judiciary. His position is, therefore, very unenviable indeed. I still feel, however, that despite his forensic approach, he means well so far as India-Pakistan problems are concerned, though he could have been far more effective.

With kind regards,

Yours sincerely

Desai from Rajeshwar Dayal

I asked DEHLAVI today regarding purpose of Chinese Ambassador’s visit to Rawalpindi. He said that sometime ago an appointment was requested which was turned down by Military Secretary to the President as it was not routed through Foreign Office. When correct procedure was followed appointment was duly given. DEHLAVI tried to explain that visit was normal and connected with question of Chinese representation. I can hardly believe his explanation as Chinese Ambassador spent over an hour with President. I warned DEHLAVI that Chinese might try to take advantage of India’s difficulties with Pakistan to further their own interest at the expense of both and that sympathies of all countries especially America were with India on the border issue.

DEHLAVI asked me about situation on Goa border and I tried to enlighten him on the basis of what has appeared in Indian papers. I reminded him of situation in Angola and nature of Portuguese Colonialism which even Americans have strongly condemned.

A report was prominently published by Dawn and Morning News today alleging that CHOWDHRY had been indulging in improper activities and that East Pakistan Government had sent a Note to Foreign Office about him. CHOWDHRY who is here was as surprised as we were. When I asked DEHLAVI he expressed both surprise and ignorance and SHAFQAT whom he contacted also professed innocence. I told DEHLAVI that I hope nothing had been falsely started against CHOWDHRY, who is popular in Dacca, merely as a riposte to proven charges made against Pakistan Assistant High Commissioner in Shillong.

Commonwealth Secretary from MEHTA (Deputy High Commissioner)

Austrian Ambassador called on me this afternoon to enquire about alarming news in today’s Karachi papers about India moving armoured units to the Indo-Pakistan border. Ambassador who is an experienced diplomat and particularly well disposed towards India said that his initial reaction was this was another Pakistani stunt but as there was considerable discussion yesterday evening amongst some Ambassadors who expressed concern about these developments he had come to me for information. He mentioned that the Canadian High Commissioner and other newly arrived Ambassadors were particularly taken in by Pakistan propaganda. After explaining to him that there had been only usual troop movements for training purposes in the month of November of which Pakistan was fully aware, I assured the Ambassador that there was absolutely no truth in these sensational reports which were no doubt an attempt to justify recent Pakistan propaganda against India on Goa and Kashmir.

2. Austrian Ambassador expressed satisfaction at my clarification but said that his colleagues expressed fear that this may be prelude to some rash action as in case of Afghanistan leading to break of diplomatic relations.

0364. Letter from Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru to the U. S. President John F. Kennedy.

New Delhi, January 27, 1962.

Dear Mr. President,

Thank you for your letter of 16th January. I hope you will forgive me for the delay in answering it.

2. Both my colleagues in the Government and I have been occupied with our election campaign. You will no doubt appreciate the burdens that these campaigns bring upon us. We have to tour about this large country and this is likely to continue during February. The subject on which you wrote to me was of considerable importance to us and I did not wish to send an answer to you before I had consulted my colleagues as well as the Government of Jammu and Kashmir State and considered your suggestion fully in all its aspects.

3. I can well understand your deep concern over relations between India and Pakistan and I share that concern. Indeed, I may say that there are few questions which affect India more. We have lived with this problem for over 14 years always hoping that our differences would be solved and result in happier and more co-operative relations between India and Pakistan. Fortunately there is very little ill-will now existing between the peoples of the two countries. But on the Government level the friction continues.

4. We had earnestly hoped when we agreed to partition and creation of Pakistan as an independent sovereign state that this would result in friendly relations between the two countries. Because of our geography, history and common culture as well as many other interests which we have in common, it seemed natural that we should cooperate. We in India were absorbed in our national development and in securing higher standards for our people. We did not want to divert our energy and our resources to a conflict with Pakistan.

5. It was, therefore, our constant endeavour to eliminate causes of friction and misunderstanding between India and Pakistan and, despite occasional setbacks, we have pursued this objective consistently throughout these past 14 years. I must confess to you that we have been grievously disappointed at the attitude of Pakistan which has throughout been negative and agitational and have come to the conclusion that it is a basic policy of that country’s Government to hate India and to keep up the tensions that exist between our two countries. This, I suppose, is a conscious continuation of the religious complex of the two nation theory which we all hoped would disappear with the creation of Pakistan. We in India have refused to accept that theory as a basis of political activity because to do so would mean a denial of the nationalism for which we stood. Even now, after the partition, there are 50 million Muslims living in India and we cannot entertain any obscurantist political theory of religion as the basis of the state.

6. Kashmir is supposed to be the principal problem between us. I think that Kashmir is rather the resultant of that ill-will than the cause of it. However, we have tried to solve the Kashmir problem to the best of our ability but without success thus far. It seemed to me on more than one occasion that we came fairly near some approach to solution, but then the approaches we made, even at the risk of having to face strong resentment of our people, did not meet with adequate response. We have had the feeling that a certain measure of support that Pakistan got from other countries made it much more rigid in this matter.

7. The history of the conflict over Kashmir is a long and complicated one.
But there are certain basic factors that have to be kept in view before we deal with this question. The United Nations and the Commission it appointed on Kashmir both proceeded on the basis that the sovereignty of the entire State vests with India; further that, as the Commission indicated, there had been aggression by Pakistan on Indian territory. The principle (Principal) resolutions passed by the United Nations Commission proceeded on the basis of vacation of Pakistan aggression and this was to be followed by a political settlement.
Pakistan aggression, however, continues and what is worse there is continuous trouble on the cease-fire line and hardly a few days pass without attempts on behalf of Pakistan to commit acts of sabotage in Kashmir. These are the basic facts.

8. During these past years the Jammu and Kashmir State has become an autonomous State of the Union of India. According to our Constitution the State has a large measure of autonomy with which we cannot interfere. Indeed it is stated in our Constitution that no change in Jammu and Kashmir State can take place without the approval of the elected Assembly of that State. The State has had two general elections since then under adult franchise and a third election will take place soon in common with the rest of India.

9. We have been anxious to settle this question and have made repeated attempts to do so keeping in view our Constitution and basic position. We went to the Security Council of the United Nations with a request to resolve the situation created by Pakistan aggression. Since then various eminent people have been appointed by the Security Council to find a way out of the difficulties that faced us. They failed in this endeavour and we became convinced that third parties would not be able to give any effective help in resolving our differences. The only way to solve them was by direct talks between the two countries. This may not be an easy matter but it seemed to us the only possible way.

10. I therefore, entirely agree with you that patient discussions and negotiations and the continuing search for a possibility of accommodation are the only effective ways of reaching an amicable settlement. We are as anxious as you are Mr. President to avoid public debate and recrimination and exploitation of controversy for its own sake. We have exercised and will continue to exercise moderation and restraint in our utterances so as not to prejudice the atmosphere for direct negotiations. We hope that Pakistan will do likewise.

11. We have considered the suggestion made by you with the care and attention that the importance of the subject and the esteem and regard which we have for your views, require. We have the highest regard for Mr. Black's personal qualities and we are grateful to him for his keen interest in our development plans and the substantial contribution he made in resolving the Canal Waters question. There is no lack of confidence in Mr. Black, but we have certain doubts and misgivings about your proposal.

12. Ever since this proposal became public through some leakage in Karachi or Washington it has been severely criticized in India and even those who do not agree with our Government's policy on many things have not approved of it. Indeed it can be said without any doubt that the public reaction to this proposal in India has been overwhelmingly adverse. The idea of a third party's intervention is strongly objected to and it is thought that such intervention will not be helpful. Indeed it might make matters worse. In view of the past history of this case and the admitted aggression that took place on the part of Pakistan we feel that putting both parties on the same footing would be wrong. Even though Mr. Black's good offices may be entirely informal this would be regarded as some kind of mediation or arbitration. Any such idea of mediation or arbitration would be strongly resented in India as past history has shown. I am convinced that the only effective way of arriving at a mutually satisfactory solution is to follow the method of direct negotiations and discussions. This method has produced results in the past and it is not too much to hope that it may be equally effective in regard to Kashmir.

13. A year and a half ago I invited President Ayub Khan to Delhi. I have again renewed that invitation. I hope we will be able to accept it. Any meeting or any other step will have to wait till the elections are over and a new Government has been formed in India. Ambassador Galbraith is in touch with us and we will gladly discuss with him any development that may arise and any avenue of fruitful negotiations that may offer itself.

14. I would like to thank you again Mr. President for your deep personal interest in matters that affect us so vitally. We are happy to have your understanding and sympathy.

With kind regards,

Yours sincerely,

Jawaharlal Nehru

0365. Extract from the China - Pakistan joint communiqué.

The Government of Pakistan and Government of Peoples' Republic of China after an exchange of views affirm that boundary between China's Sinkiang and contiguous areas defence of which is under actual control of Pakistan has never been formally delimited and demarcated in history. With a view to ensuring tranquility on border and developing good neighbouring relations between two countries, two sides have agreed to conduct negotiations so as to attain an agreed understanding of location and alignment of this boundary and to sign on this basis an agreement of a provisional nature. The two sides have further agreed that after settlement of dispute over Kashmir between Pakistan and India sovereign authorities concerned shall reopen negotiations with Chinese government regarding boundary of Kashmir so as to sign a formal boundary treaty to replace this provisional agreement.

0366. Note Verbale of the High Commission of Pakistan in New Delhi delivered to the Ministry of External Affairs seeking clarification of a statement made by the Defence Minister Krishna Menon.

New Delhi, June 23, 1962.

Office of the High Commissioner for Pakistan in India

New Delhi

No. F. 21(18)P/62 23 June, 1962

The High Commission for Pakistan in India presents its compliments to the Ministry of External Affairs, Government of India, and has the honour to state that according to the syndicated column of Mr. Durga Das which appeared in the Tribune of Ambala and some other Indian newspapers on 22nd May, 1962, the Defence Minister, Mr. Krishna Menon, is reported to have stated as follows at a meeting held at Sapru House on 17th May 1962, under the Presidentship of Mrs. Rajen Nehru, wife of the Secretary General of the Ministry:-

"...India would not be bound by the cease-fire agreement if Pakistan and China made any deal over the frontier or if Azad Kashmir was made an independent territory or if Pakistan-officered and Pakistan- armed forces of their puppet regime mounted an attack on Indian territory."

Other versions of the Defence Minister’s speech in other Indian newspapers have quoted him as saying that the “cease-fire agreement will not exist” if Pakistan “bartered away to China” India’s legal right over the territory “forcibly occupied” by Pakistan. (Statesman, May 18, 1962) and that Mr. Krishna Menon warned Pakistan that if she bartered away India’s sovereignty in any part of Jammu and Kashmir to China, “the cease-fire line will exist no longer.” India would also not tolerate any attempt to declare the so-called “Azad Kashmir” an independent State and added that “though India was a peace loving nation it had not abjured the use of force.” (Times of India, May 18, 1962)

2. The High Commission would be grateful to know whether the Defence Minister of India made these statements at the above meeting on the 17th May, 1962, if not the High Commission would appreciate if the Ministry could be kind enough to supply the correct version of the Defence Minister’s statement*.

The High Commission avails itself of this opportunity to renew to the Ministry the assurances of its highest consideration.

The Ministry of External Affairs
Government of India.
New Delhi.

* Replying to the above Note, the High Commission of India in Karachi informed the Pakistan Ministry of Foreign Affairs on August 13, 1962(No.D.2917/62/P) that the Defence Minister spoke extempore and no text was available. It however added that Mr. Menon’s speech was "only a reiteration of what he had already stated in the Security Council on May 3 and 4, 1962"
My dear Prakasa,

I have just read your article on “Kashmir and Indo-Pakistan Relations: A solution – II”. I have not read the previous article. This particular article was brought to me by Bakhshi Ghulam Mohammed who is rather upset about it. It has thus far not been published in the press but it is stated on the type-script which as shown to me, that it is not to be published before October 9, i.e. today.

I must confess to a feeling of surprise and great regret that you have written this article. I do not remember your mentioning to me your views as stated in this article. These views are, as you perhaps know, wholly opposed to the Government's views on the subject and your article will no doubt be used by the Pakistan authorities and press against us.

It is very far from true that Kashmir is de facto independent or nearly so or not fully a part of the Indian Union. I need not go into any details about this. The fact that there is a Prime Minister, there is a relic of the past and we have not thought it worth while to change it. The Supreme Court has authority there as elsewhere. Our Election Commission governs elections there. Our Parliament has authority to pass legislation governing it. There are some facts stated in the Constitution in which we do not choose to interfere. These are relatively minor things. The Governor is certainly appointed in a different way. But the appointment is by our President at the recommendations of the Kashmir Assembly.

I think it might have been wise for you to refer an article dealing with a very important issue of national and international significance to us before publication. I am afraid it is too late to do that now and your article is going to cause us any amount of difficulty and trouble with Pakistan as well as possibly with others. Whatever might have happened at the time of partition or soon after, the position is entirely different now.

I am writing to you in some haste and, therefore, I do not wish to lengthen this letter. But I felt that I must let you know how I felt about your article as soon as possible.

Yours affectionately

Jawaharlal Nehru

Shri Sri Prakasa,

0368. Statement by President Ayub Khan on the Sino-Indian conflict.

November 5, 1962.

I have held lengthy discussions with appropriate experts and advisers over the situation that has arisen through the recent conflict between our two neighbours, China and India, and its repercussions on our security and relationships.

I have also received communications on the subject from the President of the United States of America, the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom, and the Prime Minister of India. The replies to them are under preparation and will be sent in due course giving our view of the situation.

Broadly speaking, we are seriously disturbed that the differences between India and China have erupted into an armed conflict. However, we believe that the scope of this conflict, because of the terrain over which it is being waged, can perforce be limited. If it were otherwise, then the contestants would have started it with considerable campaigning period ahead of them. It was no time to start it in October when the weather conditions will progressively bring military operations to a halt.

However unfortunate this situation may be, we hope that our two neighbours will be able to settle their problem peacefully and amicably.

Our policy has been based on peace at large, specially peace with our neighbours. Unfortunately, we have so far failed to achieve this with our neighbour India through her unwillingness to reach an equitable and honourable settlement over Kashmir. Because of this, we are both wasting resources on military preparations. These resources are sorely needed for the amelioration of the conditions of our people. I hope it is still not too late for India to realize the virtues that will follow this settlement, and the resultant benefits that will accrue to both the countries. For one thing, we shall be free from anxiety from each other and that by itself will be a very big gain.

From all accounts, a large amount of military equipment is being rushed to India from the United States of America, United Kingdom and elsewhere. For one thing, it may have the effect of enlarging and prolonging the conflict between China and India, and secondly, add to serious concern already existing in the minds of our people that these weapons may well be used against them in the absence of an overall settlement with India.
0369. Text of message from Ayub Khan to Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru.

It is a matter of great regret to us that this dispute should have led to intensified military activities and induction of new war potential, thus endangering the peace and stability of the region in which Pakistan is vitally concerned.

I agree with you when you say that no efforts should be spared to eliminate and deceit force from international relations. In this respect I am constrained to point out that the various outstanding disputes between India and Pakistan can also be resolved amicably should the Government of India decide to apply these principles with sincerity and conviction.

0370. Extract from the Statement by Pakistan Foreign Minister Mohammad Ali in the National Assembly.

Karachi, November 22, 1962.

The President has summoned this Emergency Session of the National Assembly because Pakistan is face to face with a grave and critical situation. This is due to the fact that some of our Allies and friends in their wisdom have decided to rush arms, equipment and military aid to India posing a threat to our safety and security.

We are disturbed over the outbreak of hostilities between two of our neighbours, India and China. We feel that this conflict stems from India's unrealistic and fallacious foreign policy. Had India sincerely based its policies on the principles of peace and good neighbourly relations which she has been proclaiming to the whole world from house tops all these years, the present conflict could have been averted. Our sincere desire is that the present border conflict between India and China should be settled peacefully and by the internationally accepted methods of conciliation, mediation or arbitration rather than by resort to brute force. We would naturally be happy if there was no enlargement of this conflict and that was settled peacefully and as expeditiously as possible.

The rushing of large scale arms to India at an extraordinary speed instead of first exhausting all possible efforts to ensure a negotiated settlement is a matter of regret to us and we feel that this would aggravate the situation rather than alleviate it. I speak in anguish and not in anger when I have to say that one of our Allies had promised us that we would be consulted before any arms assistance is given to India. I regret to have to observe that this was not done. In so far as other friendly and allied countries are concerned their action in arming India to the teeth is bound to have the effect of encouraging India to engage in a major conflict. This is contrary to the principles and purposes of the Charter of the United Nations to which not only Pakistan but all the peace-loving nations adhere or ought to adhere…

Not only there was no declaration of war on the part of India against China or by China against India, but normal diplomatic relations continue to exist. The Embassies of both countries are still functioning. All this led us to the conviction that India was not engaged in any major conflict with China but the conflict was a localized one restricted to the area under dispute.

Mr. Speaker, it has been always our considered opinion that the conflict arose out of a border dispute and did not reflect a clash of political ideology as the Western countries appear to think. I am happy to say that our appreciation in this regard has been completely vindicated by China’s declaration of cessation of hostilities. I am also happy to say that this appreciation which the President conveyed to the United States and the United Kingdom has turned out to be correct in every sense. The Chinese have reaffirmed their willingness to withdraw 12 kilometres behind the line of actual control which existed on 7th November 1959. We cannot but applaud this action on the part of China. It is an act of great statesmanship on the part of the Chinese Prime Minister, Chou En Lai, and his associates and an evidence of their sincere desire to limit this conflict to the settlement of the border dispute. We sincerely and strongly feel that it is the bounden duty of all the peace-loving nations to encourage now the possibilities of a settlement and to ensure that the present boundary conflict is not permitted to enter a new phase as a result of a massive supply of arms now being rushed into India from outside. Without entering into the issue ourselves, it will be pertinent here to point out that in regard to the Chinese Government’s refusal to subscribe to the validity of the McMahon Line even the Kuomintang regime in Formosa is in complete agreement with the stand taken by the People’s Republic of China and has, therefore, protested to the Government of the United States when they announced their recognition of the McMahon Line.

While we have been advocating a peaceful and negotiated settlement between India and China and deprecating any extension of hostilities, we must however point out that by keeping the bulk of her Armed Forces poised against us on our borders India has adopted a strange method of resisting the Chinese. It was therefore crystal clear to us that India was making a mountain out a mole hill and was raising Cain in order to bamboozle the Anglo American Powers into giving her military supplies.

Mr. Speaker, we have reason to be alarmed, disturbed and seriously perturbed over the rapid build up of India’s military strength. In the absence of any concrete action or positive step on India’s part to resolve the outstanding disputes and differences between us it is but natural for us to apprehend that at any time Indian leadership might utilize her increased might to grab Azad Kashmir or some other part of our territory.

0371. Statement by Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru in Lok Sabha on the ‘Call Attention Notice’ on Proposed Indo-Pakistan Talks.

New Delhi, November 30, 1962.

As the House is aware, we have recently had visits from Mr. Duncan Sandys, Minister of Commonwealth Relations in the United Kingdom and Mr. Averell Harriman, Assistant Secretary of State in the United States. We had long discussions with them about the Chinese invasion of India and our need for various kinds of equipment required from the United States and the United Kingdom as well as some other friendly countries. I am grateful to these countries for the help they are giving us in this crisis that we have to face.

In the course of my talks with Mr. Duncan Sandys and Mr. Harriman the question of our relations with Pakistan was raised. I told them that it had always been our policy to have friendly and cooperative relations with Pakistan because this seemed to us essential not only because of geography, but because of our joint history, culture, language and the many bonds that had arisen between us during the long years. We had always aimed at that and we are sure that this is the only proper relationship that should subsist between two neighbouring countries and peoples which have had such close bonds in the past. The question of Kashmir was referred to and we explained to them our position in regard to it and pointed out that anything that involved an upset of the present arrangement would be very harmful to the people of Kashmir as well as to the future relations of India and Pakistan. We were, however, always ready to discuss this, as other matters, with representatives of the Pakistan Government at any level desired. In fact, we had suggested meetings at various levels in the course of the last few months, but no positive response had come from them.
Mr. Sandys and Mr. Harriman appreciated our position, but still suggested that a friendly discussion about these matters between India and Pakistan might be helpful. I was agreeable to this as indeed we have been ourselves suggesting some such meeting for sometime past. I explained to them again, however, our basic principles and how it was not possible for us to bypass or ignore them.

Mr. Sandys thereafter went to Pakistan and came back yesterday after consultation with President Ayub Khan suggesting that a joint statement should be issued on behalf of both the Governments stating that a renewed effort should be made to resolve the outstanding differences so as to enable India and Pakistan to live side by side in peace and friendship, further stating that discussions should be started at an early date initially at the ministerial level and later at an appropriate stage directly between the Heads of Government. We suggested some variations in the draft joint statement. These were largely agreed to. Ultimately, the following joint statement was issued on behalf of the Governments of India and Pakistan:

Joint Statement issued on November 29, 1962

The President of Pakistan and Prime Minister of India have agreed that a renewed effort should be made to resolve the outstanding differences between their two countries on Kashmir and other related matters, so as to enable India and Pakistan to live side by side in peace and friendship. In consequence, they have decided to start discussions at an early date with the object of reaching an honourable and equitable settlement.

These will be conducted initially at the ministerial level. At the appropriate stage direct talks will be held between Mr. Nehru and President Ayub.

0372. Speech by Head of the Indian Delegation Swaran Singh at Indo-Pakistan Ministerial Conference.

Rawalpindi, December 27, 1962.

I am very happy to be in Rawalpindi again and to take part in discussions envisaged in the joint statement issued by your distinguished President and my Prime Minister on November 29.

Great responsibility attaches to the honour of having been deputed for this duty. It helps me to bear that responsibility to know that Pakistan representatives with whom we have to conduct these meetings should be so distinguished and responsible as you, Sir, and your colleagues here, to all of whom I bring the greetings and good wishes of my government.

Nearly three years ago, it was my privilege to conduct negotiations with your government on what, till then, had been one of the most serious problems affecting our two countries, namely, the regulating of disputes along our borders; and it is encouraging to recall that, except for difficulties arising in regard to problems that were then left unsettled, the agreement reached at that time has been working well. I feel sure that frankness and mutual understanding which enabled these negotiations to succeed will characterize our present meetings.
May I also venture the hope that these will lead to an even more fruitful outcome?
I am also very conscious of difficulties that have to be faced. The magnitude of challenge to wisdom, patience and statesmanship of our respective governments is brought out by words in which the joint statement has set forth our purpose: ‘to make renewed effort to resolve outstanding differences between their two countries on Kashmir and other related matters so as to enable India and Pakistan to live side by side in peace and friendship’.

Mutually beneficial cooperation based on friendship and developed in peace should be the normal relationship of our two countries. This is what was hoped for 15 years ago when we realized our independence. Whatever our past and present differences, I am sure you will agree that such an idea was not unnatural considering our geography, our common historical experience and our many ties and close associations.

Unfortunately that hope was still to be realized and passage of time is not always a help. I hope and trust that unhappy memories are fading on your side as they are on ours but alas happy memories may also fade. What is more, old attitudes harden and new problems arise. I do not wish to enter into profitless analysis of who is responsible for all this; I readily agreed that there have been faults on both sides. But the realization that terms in which we may have thought about each other in the past have long ceased to apply may help us to view our problems in better perspective. Today Pakistan and India are two separate independent countries and must resolve their differences as do other mature sovereign states.

Our differences are, of course, real, important and difficult. Overshadowing all others is Kashmir but other major problems taken together would constitute a formidable list. There is a whole complex of problems restricting our trade and commerce to one fifth of what it was before partition. In addition, there are major border disputes: in particular, along Tripura and East Pakistan. There are obstacles faced by people who wish to visit each other’s country. There is still a live and painful dispute over the evacuee property and the thorny question of financial arrangements. Most of these are the old familiar controversies, too old and too familiar, that is the difficulty. The point to notice about them is that they are not just debating questions between the governments but problems which affect the daily lives of vast numbers of persons and through them our whole population. These problems have to be solved, now or later on, in the course of these talks as they are also major causes of tension between the two countries. Fundamentally what we have to do is to devise in each of these contexts and in a larger general way arrangements which will encourage our respective peoples to live with the minimum of friction or more positively with maximum of cooperation. The prerequisite for such cooperation is the desire for it and the realization of its advantages in effect, understanding and goodwill.

There have been occasions in the past fifteen years when it was readily seen that such understanding and goodwill were about to help us break through the vicious circle of mistrust and suspicion, charges and counter charges. But each time the promising trends were lost and we were left as we are now to start all over again. I do not at all want to get involved in a controversy over reasons for all these disappointments but I venture a diagnosis in the hope that we may this time find the cure.

I suggest that in the past the main reason for the disappointing end of the promising beginnings has been that goodwill and understanding necessary for success have not been sufficiently developed. I know it is frequently said that goodwill can only grow when problems are settled. But I also know that problems cannot be settled unless there is goodwill. I do not mean goodwill only between us present here or between the leaders of our two countries; what is needed is a deliberate sustained effort to encourage goodwill among the ever increasing sections of our society. The tragedy of our relationship is that instead of making such an effort we have been subject to contrary influences. While I do not wish to recriminate, I hope you will forgive me for mentioning that in the context of our present meeting, the recent press and public campaign against India in Pakistan has been, to say the least, disheartening. In the past few weeks my country has been trying to cope with the severest of crises. I do not wish to say too much here about the nature of our conflict with China because I know your government is on record as enjoying and valuing good relations with that country. We too at one time enjoyed and valued good relations with China; no government could have done more than mine to try and establish and develop such relations. In return we were first misled, then our territory was encroached upon surreptitiously and when we tried to protect ourselves, we were attacked in force and have been deprived of vast areas of our country. We had to prepare expeditiously to deal with this danger which, we believe, we shall have to face for a long time to come. It seems some people in Pakistan believe that there is no such danger; that is their privilege I can only say that not very long ago it was Pakistani leaders who drew attention to the threat that China posed to the sub-continent and the world. While we cannot help opposite views being held about the nature of our struggle with China, we cannot but regret and deplore the fact that our efforts to defend ourselves against China are misrepresented as preparations to attack Pakistan in the future. My Prime Minister has precisely and fully stated in public and in personal correspondence with your President, the reasons why we are trying to strengthen ourselves; he has categorically and repeatedly emphasized the policy of my government never to attack you. In this context, I would like to remind you of the significant passage in my Prime Minister’s letter of November 12, 1962, to your President where he said: the idea of any conflict with Pakistan is one which is repugnant to us and we on our part will never initiate it. I am convinced that the future of India and Pakistan lies in their friendship and cooperation for the benefit of both. Nevertheless we are accused far and wide in this country of intending to use our increased strength against Pakistan. Such a charge frankly surprises us and diatribes of this nature are not exactly calculated to create goodwill and understanding necessary for us to resolve our differences.

In spite of our heavy preoccupations and other discouraging circumstances my government sincerely welcomes the idea of these talks. You will remember we have in the past frequently suggested that the best way to resolve our differences on Kashmir is by having a frank discussion on all aspects of the question. Now we are at last come together and I cannot over emphasise the genuineness of the desire on India’s side to proceed in a constructive way. As I said earlier, the most important of all our problems is Kashmir and our utmost efforts are necessary to try and deal with it. With your permission I would like to set out few ideas on the subject.

The question of being familiar with the views of our respective governments if anyone is in any doubt there are innumerable volumes which can enlighten us without our having to spell it all out here. I would merely like to recall few basic facts which I hope may help us to see the problem in proper perspective.
So far as we are concerned Kashmir has become an integral part of the Republic of India by internationally accepted practices of law and of democracy. It is established and greatly valued part of our national life, symbolic of the secular ideal we are genuinely trying to realize. You are yourselves familiar with divisive forces of particularism and sectarianism that tend to disrupt the unity of newly independent countries and we in our multi-racial, multi-lingual and multi-religious society have to be particularly careful to guard against such disruption. What happens in and to Kashmir is therefore of vital importance to our whole nationhood. I am aware of course of the arguments advanced from your side to justify Pakistan’s claim to the territory which are based on your own concept of statehood. Our differences in regard to Kashmir have thus become a projection of our respective political philosophies, which have been in sharp conflict over the years and have tended to make the resolution of them increasingly difficult.

I submit, Sir that the only reason why we are anxious to explore with you the possibilities of reaching modus vivendi with you on Kashmir question is because we ardently wish to live in peace and friendship with Pakistan. I suggest that our approach should take into account the political realities in the subcontinent and developments that have taken place since both countries became independent. First of these is that the problem of Kashmir cannot be considered in isolation. It is argued that if Kashmir could be settled all other differences between the two countries could also be settled. That may well be true, but it is also true that none of the differences can be settled, especially Kashmir, unless a great deal of spadework first clears away the deep-rooted misunderstandings and mistrust between us. This is not a startling new formula that I am suggesting; we have both agreed on this point many times in the past. It has been stressed in the past agreements and there have been specific arrangements for evolving better atmosphere such as the joint press code. Unfortunately they have not proved effective; unless they do, goodwill essential for political settlements will be lacking. What we must do now is to make such arrangements come alive. I would go so far as to say that it should be the first task of our respective Governments to launch on a concerted effort to build up goodwill not only by preventing excesses that have marred public comments abut each other but by advocating more considerate attitudes and by highlighting good aspects of our relationship. We should, for example, have moratorium on criticism and abuse and organize instead a campaign of goodwill recommended under the high auspices in both countries. Simultaneously we could try and work with each other in practical fields of cooperation remove irritants along our borders and obstacles to freer physical movements of our people work out ways of sharing our natural resources, build up our trade and economic partnership. We might also consider ways and means of keeping open constant channels of direct understanding and dealing with problems as they arise. I feel sure that if we embark on such programme both our countries will be immeasurably benefited. By all these steps our political problems will become easier of solution. And these problems include Kashmir. Let me make it quite clear that the programme of friendly cooperation I have in mind will not be meaningful unless we first agree to settle Kashmir question. But I also wish to point out that settlement on Kashmir has meaning only in the context of such programme. If we try to bring about a settlement relating to Kashmir in terms of purely a territorial dispute our discussions will only repeat views that have been endlessly expressed in last fifteen years and lead to no result. I am quite sure you desire such an outcome as little as we do. What both our countries should seek now is a new approach designed to reach an honourable and equitable settlement.

To achieve such a fruitful outcome it is advisable to channel our discussions along the right lines avoiding unnecessary pitfalls and obstacles. We must steer clear of paths that lead away from the solution and at the same time look for guide posts which will help us on the true course. As our objective is the settlement of the Kashmir problem enabling India and Pakistan to live in peace and friendship, it follows that the solution must first of all be a peaceful one strengthening friendship between the peoples of India and Pakistan; secondly, it must not affect the stability and progress already achieved but must reinforce them; and thirdly, it must not leave over settlement of any major issue. In short it must be peaceful; it must be both realistic and constructive; and it must be comprehensive and final.

Just over three years ago after my Prime Minister came to this very city he and your President issued a notable joint communiqué in which:

‘They agreed that their Governments and peoples should work for the promotion of friendly and cooperative relations between their two countries and eliminate old emotional strains and tension. They recognized that reduction in tension and developments of friendly neighbourly cooperative relations will enable each of their countries to devote its energies to the achievement of their basic objectives of economic and social development’.

That was most statesmanlike approach and it has once again found expression in the joint statement of November 29. What we must ensure at all costs is that our two countries should not fall away from these high objectives. I have come here charged by my Government to make every possible efforts to sustain them and I know that you are similarly determined. The main difficulty in doing it is that the problems which we are going to deal within these talks have been discussed almost threadbare for years and consequently we tend to be resistant to arguments that are advanced. However, on this occasion we must endeavour to clear our minds of set notions and start afresh. I would like to think that we can do so and that what I have suggested may be appropriate and useful.
To sum up, therefore, I suggest our approach should be on the following lines:

1. We should start at once on a large scale programme to remove suspicion, mistrust and even ill will by appealing to our peoples and leaders of public opinion to reverse the unhappy trends of the past and by undertaking practical arrangements for encouraging a more sympathetic attitude towards each other.

2. We should also embody in the solemn agreement our desire ‘to live side by side in peace and friendship’ and to solve all our problems peacefully and to our mutual benefit.

3. We should proceed with utmost speed to resolve our ‘outstanding differences on Kashmir’ in a practical and realistic manner.

4. We should also consider ways and mean of removing major existing irritants and developing bias for practical cooperation.

And I realize that this is a large and comprehensive programme; but I believe it will help us solve all our disputes including Kashmir above all. If we can work out preliminary arrangements to implement this programme, I believe we will have brought about the most fruitful achievement.

Rawalpindi, December 29, 1962.

On November 29, 1962, the President of Pakistan and the Prime Minister of India agreed, in a joint statement, “to make a renewed effort to resolve the outstanding differences between their two countries on Kashmir and other related matters so as to enable India and Pakistan to live side by side in peace and friendship”.

In pursuance of this decision, Sardar Swaran Singh, India’s Minister for Railways, accompanied by his advisers, arrived in Rawalpindi on December 26 to initiate discussions with Mr. Zulfikar Ali Bhutto, Pakistan’s Minister for Industries, Natural Resources and Works, and his advisers.

On the afternoon of his arrival, Sardar Swaran Singh called on the President of Pakistan, the Foreign Minister and Mr. Bhutto.
The two Ministers and their advisers met in a formal session on the morning of the 27th December. The two Ministers held five meetings on the 27th, 28th and 29th of December, various aspects of the Kashmir problem were discussed. At the last meeting the Ministers were assisted by some of their advisers. The discussions were marked by a spirit of cordiality and understanding and there was a free and frank exchange of views.

Sardar Swaran Singh extended an invitation to Mr. Bhutto to visit New Delhi to continue the discussions initiated at Rawalpindi with a view to finding an equitable and honourable solution. The Pakistan Minister accepted the invitation and indicated that he might be expected to arrive in New Delhi on the 15th of January, 1963.

The Ministers agreed to make a joint appeal to the leaders, officials, the Press, radio, and other media of publicity in the two countries to help in creating a friendly atmosphere for resolving the outstanding differences on Kashmir and other related matters and to refrain from any statements, criticism or propaganda which might prejudice the success of these negotiations or tend to create discord between the two countries.

Sardar Swaran Singh left for New Delhi in the afternoon of the 29th of December.

Note of Commonwealth Secretary on the first round of INDO-PAKISTAN Talks at Rawalpindi December 26 to 29, 1962.

New Delhi, January 10, 1963.

In pursuance of the joint statement issued by the President of Pakistan and the Prime Minister of India on the 29th November, 1962, the first round of discussions on “Kashmir and other related matters” was held in Rawalpindi from 26th to 29th December, 1962.

2. We were anxious to ensure, from the start, that these talks should not break down, at any rate, in the early stages, and if there was a break, the blame should fall squarely on Pakistan. Our delegation, which was led by Sardar
Swaran Singh, Minister for Railways, was required to work on the following lines:

(i) We were to make it clear that irrespective of the past history of the case or the claims of either side, we were determined to have a settlement consistent with the stability and security of India and Pakistan;

(ii) A settlement of Kashmir and other related matters should emerge from the deliberations of the two parties, whose approach to the problem should be constructive and practical;

(iii) This settlement must be such as both the parties could recommend to their respective governments and one with which, both the peoples and Governments of India and Pakistan can live for all times;

(iv) Consideration of the problem should be resumed from the point where the last talks between the Prime Minister and President Ayub ended, in 1960, and Pakistan asked to give an indication of its thinking on the matter, its proposals to be judged in the light of the criteria mentioned above; and

(v) To create a friendly climate, the invitation to President Ayub to pay a State visit to India was to be renewed. We were to press that this invitation was being extended irrespective of the course and result of these joint talks and that his visit to India would make a psychological impact, which should help both the countries in coming closer together.

3. We further expected that at these discussions the Pakistan delegation would take their preliminary stand on the 1947/48 UNICEP resolutions and a plebiscite in Kashmir. After careful consideration, we had decided that we would not refuse to discuss anything in Rawalpindi; that if Pakistan insisted on discussing nothing else but Kashmir, even that should be agreed to; but that if other subjects could be introduced, then India would bring on to the agenda: infiltration into Assam and Tripura from East Pakistan; pending border disputes specially in the East; the question of evacuee property; and financial adjustments between India and Pakistan.

4. The afternoon of 26th December was spent on courtesy calls, by the Leader of the Indian Delegation on the Foreign Minister of Pakistan, the Leader of the Pakistan delegation Mr. Bhutto and the Pakistan President, in that order.

5. During the call on the President, the Indian Minister renewed the Prime Minister’s invitation and extended an invitation (verbally) from the President of India, to President Ayub, to visit India. President Ayub said that he would certainly be glad to come to India, but named no date. In regard to the conference, the President's advice was that there should be as much informal discussions as possible, and he was not enamoured of formal conferences. A point made by President Ayub during this meeting was about “the threat to the sub-continent” from the communist menace. He also spoke about India and Pakistan wasting their time and energy on maintaining armies against one another when all these resources could be better employed.

6. On the first night of the Indian delegation's stay in Rawalpindi, the Pakistan Foreign Office put out an announcement which said that Pakistan and the Peoples' Republic of China had reached “complete agreement in principle in regard to the alignment of the common borders of Chinese Sinkiang and the contiguous areas, the defence of which is the responsibility of Pakistan”. It was significant that no hint had been given to the Indian Minister of this impending announcement, although Sardar Swaran Singh had left President Ayub only at 8.30 p.m. The Indian delegation decided not to let this announcement interfere with the scheduled negotiations, and put out a brief statement expressing their “surprise and regret” at this development. It was also decided that the matter would be taken up vigorously with Mr. Bhutto the next day.

7. The full conference assembled at 10.30 a.m. on 27th December. Before the speeches on both sides had been concluded, the conference was interrupted with a special message from President Ayub that he wished to see the leaders of the two delegations, immediately. At this meeting at which the Foreign Minister was also present, the President was apologetic and tried to explain away the previous night's announcement by saying that their Ambassador in China had been authorized to finalise the agreement on certain broad lines and that since the Chinese had conceded more than what Pakistan had expected, an immediate announcement had been agreed to. In his reply, the Indian Minister said that having been aware of the position of India on the subject, the Pakistan Government should not be surprised if this development had unfortunate repercussions on the present Indo-Pakistan talks and also strengthened suspicion in India about possible secret China-Pakistan agreements.

The British High Commissioner and the American Ambassador in Pakistan who were both in Rawalpindi called on the Indian Minister to congratulate him on his patience and sober approach to this ill-timed provocation.

8. There was only one full dress session of the conference where the leaders of the two delegations made their formal speeches (which have been published in newspapers) and each then replied to the points made by the other. To Sardar Swaran Singh's plea for goodwill and a moratorium on all propaganda that might prejudice the success of the conference, Mr. Bhutto replied that goodwill “could not exist in a vacuum; it could only come after a solution of our differences. He also said that Kashmir was the problem of problems and none of the other problems really mattered. Sardar Swaran Singh was formulating his reply when the conference was interrupted with a message from President Ayub.

9. The interrupted formal conference never met again at all. A series of informal discussions followed instead, between Mr. Bhutto and Sardar Swaran Singh and these were quite effective. There were 5 such meetings in all, the last one on 29th morning at which, at a later stage, the Advisers from the two sides were called in.

10. At the first meeting, Mr. Bhutto said that while he and many others in Pakistan had been skeptical about India’s intentions, they were now impressed with India’s sincerity and seriousness in the matter and this had cleared the way for a possible understanding between the two countries. He, however, maintained Pakistan’s stand on the UNICEP resolutions and plebiscite and added that he would be prepared to discuss alternative solutions, but only after full consideration had been given to the question of plebiscite.

At this first discussion Sardar Swaran Singh reiterated his concern and regret about the Sino-Pakistan border agreement and expressed fears about its effects on Indian public opinion. Mr. Bhutto repeated the explanation offered earlier by President Ayub.

11. At the second meeting on the morning of 26th December, discussion was confined to UNICEP Resolution of 1947/1948 and India’s views on plebiscite and self-determination. Sardar Swaran Singh explained the secular character of Indian democracy and dwelt at length on the possible dangers that could arise if plebiscite was held, as indeed it would be on communal lines. He also pressed that Kashmir was an integral part of the Indian Union. In reply Mr. Bhutto was at pains to explain that Pakistan was no longer only “Islamic” State and said that safeguards could be provided against communal trouble during plebiscite.

12. On the afternoon of the 28th December, the Minister referred to some of the other subjects that might also be discussed (see para 3). Mr. Bhutto agreed and said that the subject of the Farrakka Barrage and the eastern waters could be added to the list, but discussion on these should be held after Kashmir had been discussed. The rest of the time was again taken up with repercussions arising from the announcements of the Sino-Pakistan border agreement and the objectionable statements being made by Pakistani officials, politicians and the Press on the Sino-Indian conflict. Sardar Swaran Singh said that the explanation offered by the President was in strange contrast to the views which were being expressed by officials. Mr. Bhutto pressed that the President’s explanation should be accepted and assured our Minister that there was no secret agreement with China.

13. At this stage, pressures began to build up to persuade the Indian delegation to put forward concrete proposals. Something on these lines was said by Mr. Bhutto to our High commissioner; it was suggested that since plebiscite seemed out of the question, the only alternative was a political settlement. On his side, the American Ambassador expressed the fear that Pakistan would very soon put pressure on Britain and the United States to suggest a suitable solution. Earlier, the Commonwealth Secretary had explained to the British High Commissioner that the Indian delegation was not in Rawalpindi to negotiate and give away any part of the valley on any account.

14. The Minister had his last informal talk with Mr. Bhutto on the morning of 29th December. After the two Ministers had talked for about an hour, the Advisers were called in. For the benefit of the Advisers Mr. Bhutto gave a summary of what had been discussed. He said that without giving up their stand on the general principle of self-determination, they would be prepared to consider the principles, which might govern a political settlement, leading to the delineation of an international boundary between India and Pakistan in Kashmir. Mr. Bhutto explained that what he meant by the principle of self-determination was that plebiscite was not necessarily the only way in which the wishes of the people could be ascertained. He said that the valley was the heart of the problem and it was their view that any international boundary on the basis of the present cease-fire line would be unacceptable to Pakistan.

15. One of the senior advisers in the Pakistan delegation said at this stage that the problem had been approached, concretely, on these lines in the past. He listed the Macnaughton proposals of 1949; the Dixon proposals of 1950; the discussion between Mr. Ghulam Mohammad and the Prime Minister in 1955; and the talks between the Prime Minister and President Ayub in 1960. It was agreed that all this could be gone into at the next meeting of two delegations in Delhi.

16. A joint Communiqué was agreed to after some discussion, the Pakistan delegation insisting on deleting any reference to the invitation to the Pakistan President to visit India.

17. The Pakistan Delegation is expected in New Delhi on January 15, and the talks are to be resumed from January 16. Pakistan’s suggestion is that this second round of talks might go on till January 19, 1963. There is considerable pressure from Pakistan on Britain and America to intervene and, perhaps, suggest a “solution”. Both countries have so far seemed to refrain from any active interference. Pakistan’s primary aim is to persuade Britain and America... to accept that India has no intention to come to any settlement on Kashmir and, on the pretext of this “phony war” with China, India is only obtaining massive military aid to eventually attack Pakistan, and the West should, therefore, not give India the arms aid that she is asking for. It is also being whispered that Pakistan expects concrete developments out of this second round of talks in Delhi and, if no demonstrative results are achieved, Pakistan will call off these negotiations. We propose to talk patiently, again, to Pakistan and, perhaps, try for a third round in Karachi; 0377. Reply speech of leader of the Pakistani Delegation Z.A. Bhutto at the start of the Indo – Pakistan Talks.

New Delhi, January 16, 1963.

Sardar Swaran Singh and distinguished representatives of India, may I at the outset take this opportunity of expressing to you, and through you to the Government of India, our sincere thanks for your words of cordial welcome and for all that has been done to make our stay in Delhi both comfortable and pleasant.

I have come with the members of my Delegation in response to your kind invitation extended to us in Rawalpindi towards the end of last month to continue the discussions initiated there with a view to finding an honourable and equitable solution of the Kashmir problem and related matters. Our discussions in Rawalpindi were marked by a spirit of cordiality and understanding. We exchanged views frankly and freely. We hope that this spirit will continue to characterize our talks here.

You and I made a joint appeal to the leaders, officials and the news media of India and Pakistan to help in creating a friendly atmosphere for resolving the outstanding differences on Kashmir and other related matters and refrain from criticism or propaganda which might prejudice the success of these negotiations or tend to create discord between the two countries.

In your speech of welcome extended to me and to the members of my Delegation, you Sir, referred to other matters which were touched upon by you in Rawalpindi. I do remember that we did discuss them and touch upon them, but I also recall that you very kindly said that without minimizing the importance of the Kashmir issue or giving the impression that an attempt is being made to detract from it we have to discuss the other related matters or we should discuss them at the appropriate time. I entirely agree with that, we will have to take up these other related matters at an appropriate time once we have come to grips with the Kashmir problem and have crossed this Himalayan issue.

In my opinion – and I expressed this at the very outset of our meeting in Rawalpindi – these other problems are but a shadow of Kashmir problem, and once we tackle this issue in a forthright, courageous manner, I am sure that with the combined goodwill existing both here and in Pakistan, it is not beyond the courage or the ingenuity of the leaders to arrive at an honorable and an equitable solution of the Kashmir problem, and it is my firm conviction that other issues would more or less resolve themselves out and it will not be difficult for us to overcome them.

The history of the recent past has shown that although we have settled important border problems, where you played such an important role, nonetheless, they have not played a decisive part in bringing about that degree of normality in relations which the circumstances of the present day warrant.

So, it is all the more necessary that, Kashmir having required a new meaning and a new emphasis, we come to grips with the realities of the situation and make some significant improvement in the solution of this problem during our discussions here, and I am confident that if we continue our discussion in this spirit in which we have undertaken them at Rawalpindi we should be able to make substantial progress.

The task before this meeting is to pick up the threads of our discussions on Kashmir at the point at which we left them at the end of our talks in Rawalpindi. My Delegation and I are ready to discuss the substance of the Kashmir problem, to identify the difficulties which have stood so long in the way of its solution and explore ways and means for their removal.

If we succeed in this task we would then have prepared the groundwork for a summit meeting between the leaders of our two nations for the decisive phase of the Kashmir negotiations.

I thank you very much.

Briefing given by the Commonwealth Secretary Y. D. Gundevia at the Coordination meeting of the Ministry of External Affairs.

New Delhi, February 21, 1963.

Ministry of External Affairs

Subject: Indo-Pakistan Talks

The Commonwealth Secretary began with a reference to the general statement, issued by the President of Pakistan and the Prime Minister of India on November 29, 1962. The statement called for renewed efforts to resolve outstanding differences between India and Pakistan on Kashmir and other related matters, so as to enable the two countries to live side by side in peace and friendship. Discussions were to begin at an early date, with the object of reaching an honourable and equitable settlement. Initially, the discussions were to be conducted at Ministerial level; and, at the appropriate stage, direct talks, it was felt, might be held between our Prime Minister and President Ayub Khan.

2. The first round of talks was held at Rawalpindi from December 26 to 29. the Commonwealth Secretary said that while our team was bent on working truly in the spirit of the joint statement, it was clear, from the start, that Pakistanis were behaving in an unfriendly manner.

3. The Rawalpindi discussions opened with our Railway Minister calling on the Pakistan President on December 26. President Ayub Khan was cordial, frank and business like in his talk with the Minister. The main point he emphasized was that the danger to the sub-continent was from the North, and it was unfortunate that India and Pakistan had spent the last 15 years wasting their energies, one against the other. There was no mention during this interview of any possible Sino-Pakistan boundary agreement.

4. About two hours after the interview with the President, Pakistan announced their so-called agreement, in principle, with China, on Kashmir’s border with Sinkiang. This naturally came as a shock to the Indian delegation; but after careful consideration, it was decided that we would proceed with the talks, the next morning, as originally scheduled.

5. On December 27, when the formal plenary session was in progress, the proceedings were interrupted by a message from the President, asking Mr. Bhutto to request Minister Swaran Singh to see him. The President, somewhat apologetically, explained that the timing of the announcement was some mistake; and he had not spoken about this to Minister Swaran Singh, the previous evening, because the telegram from Peking had arrived after his talk with the Minister had ended. The Minister expressed serious concern on behalf of the Government of India and reiterated our views which had been quite adequately intimated to the Government of Pakistan, before on the subject.

6. The Commonwealth Secretary said that the conference, so-called in Rawalpindi took a peculiar shape. After the first plenary session on December 27 morning, photographs and all, the two delegations never met again in full. We took advantage of President Ayub Khan’s suggestion that the discussions should be “informal” and, practical all the discussions in Rawalpindi, after the opening session, were conducted solely between Minister Swaran Singh and Mr. Bhutto, with none of the advisers present. On the last morning, however, (December 29), Mr. Bhutto suggested that it might be useful if the discussions could be “summarized” by the Ministers in the presence of 3 and 4 advisers from each side, and, to this, Minister Swaran Singh readily agreed.

7. The two days’ discussions in Rawalpindi between the Ministers had been, practically, confined to the pros and cons of a plebiscite – Pakistan’s contention that there was no other solution on Kashmir, except a plebiscite, and India’s stand, that in view of the changed conditions, so many years after, we were not prepared to hold a plebiscite, on any account. On the night of December 28, Mr. Bhutto, in a very informal talk with our High Commissioner, Shri G. Parthasarathi, mentioned the possibility of an alternative solution. He said that if a plebiscite seemed not possible, the only other alternative was a “political settlement”; with the two countries delineating an international boundary in Jammu and Kashmir. This was more or less what we wanted.

8. The next morning, in the discussions before the four advisers on each side, Mr. Bhutto mentioned this alternative of a “political settlement”. At this, the Pakistan advisers said that a political settlement between India and Pakistan had been considered on several occasions in the past and, may be, we might re-examine some of these older proposals, to see if they could in any way, assist in a solution, today. They mentioned Mr. Macnaghton’s proposals of 1949, Mr. Dixon’s proposals of 1950, and the talks between our Prime Minister and Mr. Ghulam Mohammad in 1955. The Rawalpindi talks ended on an understanding that these older proposals would be reconsidered in Delhi, in the second round of talks, from January 16 to 18, 1963.

9. In Delhi, several meetings were held between 4 or 5 advisers on each side, and the Dixon’s Proposals and Macnaughton’s proposals, in particular, covering both an overall plebiscite and a so-called regional plebiscite, were thrashed out in detail. The Commonwealth Secretary said that, in many ways, it was to our advantage to spend all this time “discussing the impossible”. But why Pakistan was bent on these discussions, it was more difficult to understand.
On the last day, again, as in Rawalpindi, we came to the alternative of a “political settlement”, with a boundary between India and Pakistan to be delineated in the state of Jammu and Kashmir.

10. We drew up a short memorandum on how a political settlement could be worked out. According to our draft, the settlement was to be practical, realistic and final. There would be an international boundary delineated between India and Pakistan in Jammu and Kashmir. The territorial readjustments would be on a rational basis, taking into account, geographic, administrative and other considerations, and involving “the least disturbance to the life and welfare of the people”. There would be disengagement of forces in and around Kashmir.
And if an agreement was reached on these points, measures to facilitate freer movement of persons, development of trade, etc., were to be considered. The settlement was also to embody a solemn declaration by the two countries “to live side by side in peace and friendship”, etc. etc.

11. Pakistan gave us a modification in the draft in which they pressed that there must be reference to their basic position with regard to plebiscite. Their second major contention was that the territorial division should take into account the composition of the population, control of rivers and requirement of defence.

12. In the final draft, which was agreed to on January 19, just before the Pak Delegation left – not without a show of crisis and threats of breakdown – we got them to drop all references to a plebiscite, though there was mention of their contention that the territorial division should eventually be “acceptable to the people of the State”. The operative paragraph on the criterion for the delineation of the international line in Jammu and Kashmir between India and Pakistan was a compromise and incorporated the point of view of both India and Pakistan. The Commonwealth Secretary emphasized there is no reference in these paragraphs to a plebiscite and this was the most important gain in the second round of talks in Delhi. The relevant paragraph ran as follows:

“The Pakistan delegation urged that the territorial division should take into account the composition of the population of the State, control of rivers, the requirements of defence, and other considerations relevant to the determination of an international boundary, and acceptable to the people of the State. The Indian delegation urged that territorial readjustments as may be considered necessary for this purpose should be on a rational basis, taking into account geographic, administrative and other considerations and involving the least disturbance to the life and welfare of the people”.

13. The third round of discussions in Karachi took place from February 7 to
11. Our expectation was that we would take quite some time to discuss the details of the final draft agreed to in New Delhi. The Pakistan delegation, on the other hand, seemed to have very little to say, and, almost in the first officers' level meeting, they asked if we were prepared to “draw lines on the map”. In the first phase of the discussion, we argued that Pakistan’s defence requirements did not give them any claims on Kashmir; and, as far as the control of rivers was concerned, this had been completely taken care of by the Indus Waters Treaty, which governs the entire uses of the waters of both the Jhelum and the Chenab and safeguards Pakistan against any possible hurt or damage by India. There was little left to be argued, since Pakistan, obviously, was not anxious to argue their own case.

14. On the second day, the two Ministers settled down to a discussion of a possible delineation of a boundary line. Minister Swaran Singh indicated certain areas west of the Valley and north of the Valley, and our readiness to concede in favour of Pakistan the rich forest areas in the north, on both sides of the Kishenganga river. After pretending that this was a “shock” to Pakistan. Mr. Bhutto indicated that, according to their criteria, only a little more than the Kathua district on the Punjab border, in the extreme south of Kashmir, could be given to India, Pakistan being entitled to the entire State of Jammu and Kashmir, right up to Ladakh in the north-east and including the Valley, as well as the southern areas, including Jammu, Udhampur, Aknur, Riasi, etc.

15. The Pakistani offer was, obviously, ridiculous; but in the two last discussions Mr. Bhutto kept saying that unless we “advanced on the map” and also agreed to discuss “the problem of the Valley” in isolation, there could not be further talks. We said that we were content; and perhaps, the best course would be to report the results to our respective Governments and then decide whether any further talks were possible. After this show of crisis, however, at midnight, on the 11th February, Mr. Bhutto persuaded himself to hold a further round of talks, now in Calcutta, from March 12 to 15.

16. This is as far as we have got in these talks with Pakistan. The Commonwealth Secretary said that he was not quite sure what shape the discussions would take in Calcutta. We had no intentions whatever of making any further advances on the map. We have indicated everything that we can concede to Pakistan, West and North of the Valley. If the Calcutta talks are to make any progress, Pakistan will have to make many moves forward on the map to meet us.

17. The Commonwealth Secretary emphasized that, whatever else, we are anxious that if there is to be a break, if should come from Pakistan's side. In the Western World, we have been given considerable credit for our patience and we do not want to lose this credit, at a time when we genuinely want Western assistance in our conflict with China. We lose nothing and gain something by continuing these talks.

18. Summing up, the Special Secretary said that the present rounds of talks are important not only from the point of view of the results they might yield but also for the process adopted. It was for the first time that India and Pakistan had met at the conference table to tackle the problem of Kashmir which Pakistan had magnified out of all proportion and clouded by slogans. If Pakistan needed defence in depth, so did India; and the Indus Waters Treaty has settled the question of the headwaters of the Jhelum and the Chenab. The unsolved problems between India and Pakistan were the legacy of partition. Pakistan has developed a psychological complex and no national ethos. She has not set for herself worthwhile national goals, does not know what she stands for, has only negative policies and reveals negative trends. Hate and Islam are the only cohesive forces in the State.

PAKISTAN DRAFT  19-1-1963

1. Without prejudice to the basic positions of the two parties with regard to a plebiscite in the State of Jammu and Kashmir, we should explore possibilities of a political settlement of the problem.

2. A political settlement must be just, equitable and final, and acceptable to the people of the State, taking into account the following factors:

i. India and Pakistan should seek the delineation of an international boundary in Jammu and Kashmir State.

ii. The territorial division should take into account the composition of the population of the State, control of rivers, the requirements of defence, and other considerations relevant to the determination of an international boundary.

iii. Disengagement of the forces of India and Pakistan in and around Kashmir with a view to removing all tensions should be an essential part of the settlement.

3. The settlement should also embody in a solemn declaration the determination of the two countries “to live side by side in peace and friendship” and to solve all their other problems peacefully and to their mutual benefit.

4. Ways and means of developing practical cooperation between the two countries and removing other major irritants should be considered.
INDIAN DRAFT  19-1-1963

1. Without prejudice to the basic stand of the two parties, we should explore possibilities of working out a political solution for the Kashmir problem.

   i. India and Pakistan should seek the delineation of the international boundary in Jammu and Kashmir State.

4. Ways and means of developing practical cooperation between the two countries and removing major existing irritants should be considered.

The China Pakistan Boundary Agreement of March 2, 1963

The Government of the People’s Republic of China and the Government of Pakistan;

Having agreed, with a view to ensuring the prevailing peace and tranquility on the border, to formally delimit and demarcate the boundary between China’s Sinkiang and the contiguous areas, the defence of which is under the actual control of Pakistan, in a spirit of fairness, reasonableness, mutual understanding and mutual accommodation, and on the basis of the ten principles as enunciated in the Bandung Conference;

Being convinced that this would not only give full expression to the desire of the peoples of China and Pakistan for the development of good neighbourly and friendly relations, but also help safeguard Asian and world peace;

Having resolved for this purpose to conclude the present agreement and have appointed as their respective plenipotentiaries the following:

For the Government of the People's Republic of China; Chen Yi, Minister of Foreign Affairs;

For the Government of Pakistan: Mr. Zulfikar Ali Bhutto, Minister of External Affairs;

Who, having mutually examined their full powers and found them to be in good and due form, have agreed upon the following:

Article 1

In view of the fact that the boundary between China’s Sinkiang and the contiguous areas, the defence of which is under the actual control of Pakistan, has never been formally delimited, two parties agree to delimit it on the basis of the traditional customary boundary line including natural features and in a spirit of equality, mutual benefit and friendly cooperation.

Article 2

One: In accordance with the principle expounded in Article 1 of the present agreement, the two parties have fixed, as follows the alignment of the entire boundary line between China’s Sinkiang and the contiguous areas, the defence of which is under the actual control of Pakistan:

1. Commencing from its north-western extremity at height 5,630 metres (a peak, the reference coordinates of which are approximately longitude 74 degrees 34 minutes east and latitude 37 degrees 03 minutes north), the boundary line runs generally eastward and then southeastward strictly along the main watershed between the tributaries of the Tashkurgan river of the Tarim river system on the one hand and the tributaries of the Hunza river of the Indus river system on the other hand, passing through the Kilik Daban (Dawan), the Mintake Daban (Pass the Kharchanai Daban (named on the Chinese map only), the Mutsjilga Daban (named on the Chinese map only,) and the Parpik Pass (named on the Pakistan map only), and reaches the Khunjerab (Yutr) Daban (Pass).

2. After passing through the Khunjerab (Yutr) Daban (Pass), the boundary line runs generally southward along the above mentioned main watershed up to a mountain top south of this Daban (Pass), where it leaves the main watershed to follow the crest of a spur lying generally in a southeasterly direction, which is the watershed between the Akjilga river (a nameless corresponding river on the Pakistan map) on the one hand, and the Taghumbash (Oprang) river and the sKoliman Su (Oprang Jilga) on the other hand.

According to the map of the Chinese side, the boundary line, after leaving the southeastern extremity of this spur, runs along a small section of the middle line of the bed of the Keliman Su to reach its confluence with the Elechin river. According to the map of the Pakistan side, the boundary line, after leaving the southeastern extremity of this spur, reaches the sharp bend of the Shaksgam or Muztagh river.

3. From the aforesaid point, the boundary line runs up the Kelechin river (Shaksgam or Muztagh river) along the middle line of its bed to its confluence (reference coordinates approximately longitude 76 degrees 02 minutes east and latitude 36 degrees 26 minutes north) with the Shorbulak Daria (Shimshal river or Braldu river).

4. From the confluence of the aforesaid two rivers the boundary line, according to the map of the Chinese side, ascends the crest of a spur and runs along it to join the Karakoram range main watershed at a mountain top (reference coordinates approximately longitude 75 degrees 54 minutes east and latitude 36 degrees 15 minutes north) which on this map is shown as belonging to the Shorgulak mountain. According to the map of the Pakistan side, the boundary line from the confluence of the above mentioned two rivers ascends the crest of a corresponding spur and runs along it, passing through height 6,520 metres 21, 390 feet till it joins the Karakoram range main watershed at a peak (reference coordinates approximately longitude 75 degrees 57 minutes east and latitude 36 degrees 03 minutes north.

5. Thence, the boundary line, running generally southward and then eastward, strictly follows the Karakoram range main watershed which separates the Tarim river drainage system from the Indus river drainage system, passing through the east Mustagh Pass (Muztagh Pass), the top of the chogri peak (K-2), the top of the broad peak, the top of the Gasherbrum mountain (8,068), the Indirakoli Pass (names on the Chinese maps only) and the top of the Teram Kankri peak, and reaches its southeastern extremity at the Karakoram Pass.

Two: The alignment of the entire boundary line as described in Section One of this article, has been drawn on the one millions scale map of the Chinese side in Chinese and the one million scale map of the Pakistan side in English which are signed and attached to the present agreement.

Three: In view of the fact that the maps of the two sides are not fully identical in their representation of topographical features, the two parties have agreed that the actual features on the ground shall prevail, so far as the location and alignment of the boundary described in Section One is concerned, and that they will be determined as far as possible by joint survey on the ground.

Article 3

The two parties have agreed that:

1. Wherever the boundary follows a river, the middle line of the river bed shall be the boundary line; and that

2. Wherever the boundary passes through a daban (pass), the water parting line thereof shall be the boundary line.

One: The two parties have agreed to set up, as soon as possible, a joint boundary demarcating commission. Each side will appoint a chairman, one or more members and a certain number of advisers and technical staff. The joint boundary demarcation commission is charged with the responsibility, in accordance with the provisions of the present agreement, to hold concrete discussions on and carry out the following tasks jointly.

1. To conduct necessary surveys of the boundary area on the ground, as stated in Article 2 of the present agreement, so as set up boundary markers at places considered to be appropriate by the two parties and to delineate the boundary line of the jointly prepared accurate maps.

2. To draft a protocol setting forth in detail the alignment of the entire boundary line and the location of all the boundary markers and prepare and get printed detailed maps, to be attached to the protocol, with the boundary line and the location of the boundary markers shown on them.

Two: The aforesaid protocol, upon being signed by the representatives of the Governments of the two countries, shall become an annex to the present agreement, and the detailed maps shall replace the maps attached to the present agreement.
Three: Upon the conclusion of the above-mentioned protocol, the tasks of the joint boundary demarcation commission shall be terminated.

Article 5

The two parties have agreed that any dispute concerning the boundary which may arise after the delimitation of the boundary line actually existing between the two countries shall be settled peacefully by the two parties through friendly consultations.

Article 6

The two parties have agreed that after the settlement of the Kashmir dispute between Pakistan and India, the sovereign authority concerned will reopen negotiations with the Government of the People’s Republic of China on the boundary, as described in Article 2 of the present agreement, so as to sign a formal boundary treaty to replace the present agreement, provided that in the event of that sovereign authority being Pakistan, the provisions of the present agreement and of the aforesaid protocol shall be maintained in the formal boundary treaty to be signed between the People’s Republic of China and Pakistan.

Article 7

The present agreement shall come into force on the date of its signature.

Done in duplicate in Peking on the second day of March, 1963, in the Chinese and English languages, both texts being equally authentic.

Foreign Minister Z.A. Bhutto, addressing a Press Conference said that Pakistan would make every effort towards cooperation with India to seek peace but repeated that Kashmir “is the primordial dispute between India and Pakistan.” He said that there was not enough debris in the whole of the sub-continent to bury it.

 Asked whether he was hopeful about outcome of the discussion on Kashmir, Mr. Bhutto said: “One should not be pessimistic”. He told another questioner that he believed there could be an element of normalization of relations with India but it must be alongside settlement of the essential dispute namely, Kashmir.

Reiterating Pakistan’s position on the Kashmir dispute. Mr. Bhutto said that Pakistan had always supported the right of self determination of the people of Jammu and Kashmir and would continue to do so. He said it was Pakistan’s duty to support the right of self determination of the people of Kashmir. It was a struggle to which Pakistan was committed. He said in doing so Pakistan was not trying to accentuate the conflict between the two countries but it was imperative for true and lasting peace in the sub continent.

He said Kashmir problem was a human problem. It affected the future of five million Kashmiris and Pakistan was bound to seek justice for them Proceeding further, he said Pakistan would cooperate with India for restoration of peace.

(The Press conference was attended by a number of Western correspondents who had come to cover the Ministerial talks.)

(The Foreign Secretary, Mr. Aziz Ahmad, Information Secretary, Mr. Altaf Gauhar, Director General of Foreign Office, Mr. M.A. Alvie, and Joint Secretary Ministry of Information. Mr. Qasim Rizavi, were also present at the Press Conference.)

Question: How would you describe the results of the talks?

Answer: It was the first Ministerial conference with the Indians after the September conflict. It has been productive in as much as it heightened the disputes and the causes of the disputes and the recognition of the need to settle the fundamental dispute from that point of view it has been a useful one.

Question: Would it be correct if I assume that only Kashmir was discussed?

Answer: Essentially you are correct.
Question: Sardar Swaran Singh said at the airport that if Pakistan raised the Kashmir dispute they will discuss it. Don’t you think that this “If” is redundant?

Answer: That has been our problem for the past 18 years. Kashmir would obviously be discussed in future meetings.

Q: Any probable date for the next meeting?

A: No date has been fixed.

Q: Will the meeting be with an agenda?

A: I would say so. A framework has been laid down, and there has been general agreement on the subjects to be discussed. We do not see any reason why the Indians will not follow it.

Q: Do you think that the Indians were genuinely interested in finding a solution of the Kashmir problem?

A: I cannot state for them. There has been some progress made but there have been no spectacular or sensational results. In the past the Indians have taken a rigid position. During this meeting we have moved forward.

Q: Are you prepared to discuss other subjects simultaneously?

A: We do not preclude discussions on other subject but we want meaningful discussions and visible movement for settlement of Kashmir dispute.

Q: Do you find difference between the public postures of the Indian leaders and their attitude during the meeting on Kashmiri dispute?

A: It is not fair for me to comment on that.

Q: Do you mean there can’t be normalization until there was visible movement towards a solution of the Kashmiri dispute?

A: It depends on how you define normalization. There can be normalization if the basic dispute was settled. If normalization has to be permanent feature you have to resolve the basic dispute. First thing must come first. All those things (trade, etc.) can be discussed in good time.
0381. Extract from the China-Pakistan joint communiqué after the signing of the Boundary Agreement.
March 4, 1963.

1. In the talks, the representatives of the two Governments reviewed the development of friendly relations between China and Pakistan since the establishment of diplomatic relations between them. They were particularly satisfied at the fact that the Governments of China and Pakistan, in the spirit of equality, cooperation, mutual understanding and mutual accommodation, have settled the question of the boundary actually existing between the two countries through friendly consultations and have signed the Boundary Agreement. This demonstrated that friendly consultation, on the basis of mutual respect and goodwill, is the effective way to settle boundary differences and other international issues. They expressed their conviction that the conclusion of the Boundary Agreement has a significant bearing on the consolidation and development of friendly and good neighbourly relations between China and Pakistan and has contributed to the consolidation of peace in Asia and in the world.

2. The representatives of the two Governments reaffirmed their belief in the national sovereignty and equality of all countries and in the basic right of all peoples to decide their own destinies in accordance with their free will. They expressed a common desire to promote cooperation between China and Pakistan on the basis of equality, and non interference in each other’s internal affairs.

3. With regard to the Kashmir dispute between Pakistan and India, the Pakistan Minister of External Affairs reiterated that Pakistan has consistently worked and will continue to strive for an equitable and honourable settlement of this dispute with India through peaceful negotiations. The Chinese Government expressed its appreciation of the attitude of the Pakistan Government in seeking a peaceful settlement of the Kashmir dispute and was of the belief that expeditious settlement of this question would be conducive to peace in Asia and in the world.

4. With regard to the Sino-Indian boundary dispute, the representatives of the two Governments expressed the hope that a fair and reasonable settlement would be achieved through direct negotiations between China and India. The Chinese Government reiterated that there would be no change in the Chinese Government’s determination to strive for a peaceful settlement of the Sino-Indian boundary question through negotiations.
Statement of Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru in the Lok Sabha while replying to the Call Attention Notice regarding the Sino-Pakistan border agreement.

New Delhi, March 5, 1963.

As the House is aware, the representatives of the Government of Pakistan and the People’s Republic of China have signed what has been described as an agreement regarding the alignment of the boundary between Sinkiang and that part of the Indian territory in Jammu and Kashmir which is under Pakistan’s illegal occupation. Details of the agreement have already appeared in the press. A copy of the agreement as released by the Government of Pakistan in Karachi is being laid on the Table of the House.

According to details released officially in Karachi, the Government of Pakistan first informally sounded China and then sent a diplomatic note on March 28, 1961, expressing the desire to negotiate demarcation of the boundary. The Chinese Government reacted formally to this offer, about a year later, that is in February 1962. On May 3, 1962 the Governments of Pakistan and China issued a joint communiqué, in which they agreed to conduct negotiations on the subject. We protested against this development to both Governments. In view of these developments, our representative in the Security Council stated our position, authoritatively, during the debates on Kashmir, on May 4 and June 22, 1962.

On the eve of the Indo-Pakistan talks on Kashmir and other related matters, the Governments of China and Pakistan announced an agreement, in principle, on the alignment of the border of the illegally occupied area of Kashmir with Sinkiang. Sardar Swaran Singh, Leader of the Indian Delegation, immediately made our position clear to President Ayub Khan and Mr. Bhutto in Rawalpindi, and again to Mr. Bhutto, later, when the talks were resumed in Delhi, in January last. On January 20 we lodged a protest with the Government of Pakistan against the decision announced in the joint communiqué issued by them on December 28, 1962. Another protest is being lodged with the Government of Pakistan against the signing of this Sino-Pakistan border alignment agreement in Peking.

It has been stated in Karachi that the difference between the Chinese claim line and the Pakistan claim line was 3,400 square miles. In the final agreement, Pakistan claims to have received 1,350 square miles, including 700 square miles of area which was in China’s possession. The Chinese have been given 2,050 square miles under the agreement.

According to the Survey of Pakistan maps, even those published in 1962, about 11,000 square miles of Sinkiang territory formed part of Kashmir. If one goes by these maps, Pakistan has obviously surrendered over 13,000 square miles of territory.

Although, according to the agreement, the parties have agreed to delimit the boundary on the basis of the traditional customary boundary line, including natural features, the boundary, as agreed to, does not do so. The Pakistan line of actual control, according to the map, which the Government of Pakistan had supplied to our High Commission, lay across the Kilik, Mintaka, Khunjerab Passes; but, thereafter, the line left the watershed and followed neither the Aghil Range, which is the traditional boundary, nor the Karakoram Range along which the alignment claimed by the Government of China lay. In fact, the Pakistan line of actual control ran along no definite natural features, but cut across the tributaries of the Shaksgam river and sometimes lay half way up the slopes. It then reached the Karakoram Pass. Running south of the traditional alignment, the Pakistan line of actual control surrendered about 1,600 square miles to China. The difference between the Pakistan and Chinese alignments was about 2,100 square miles.

The agreement claims to be provisional, and yet so much haste has been shown in concluding it. It is significant that it is not subject to ratification. Thus the National Assembly, the Press and the public of Pakistan have been given and will be given no opportunity to examine the terms of this agreement.

I have already stated in this House, that we are, naturally anxious to have a settlement with Pakistan; but I cannot help feeling that the joint announcement on December 26, the Pakistan Government's announcement on February 22, to sign the border agreement in Peking, and finally the signing of this agreement have been timed to prejudice the outcome of the joint talks on Kashmir and other related matters. However, as an earnest of our desire for an honourable and equitable settlement with Pakistan, we propose to continue with the talks in Calcutta. I have also stated that a settlement does not mean that we accept whatever is proposed by Pakistan - right or wrong. We cannot abandon the principles we have always valued.

The other party to the agreement, namely China, in spite of its professions that it has never involved itself in the dispute over Kashmir or its absurd claim that the boundary negotiations have promoted friendship between the Chinese and Pakistani peoples and are in the interests of Asia and world peace, is directly interfering in Indo-Pakistan relations. By doing this, China is seeking to exploit differences between India and Pakistan on the Kashmir question to further its own expansionist policy. The Government of India have made their position clear in a protest against this agreement which has been lodged with the Government of the People's Republic of China.

On the conclusion of the third round of the Indo-Pakistan talks on Kashmir and other related matters at Karachi, Sardar Swaran Singh, Indian Minister for Railways, invited Mr. Zulfikar Ali Bhutto, Pakistan Minister for External Affairs, to continue the discussions on Kashmir and other related matters at Calcutta in March, 1963.

Mr. Zulfikar Ali Bhutto accepted Sardar Swaran Singh’s invitation and arrived in Calcutta on March 12, 1963, with members of the Pakistan delegation from Dacca.

Soon after his arrival Mr. Bhutto called on the Governor of West Bengal, Miss Padmaja Naidu and Chief Minister, Mr. P.C. Sen.

The delegations of India and Pakistan met in a formal conference at Raj Bhavan on 12th March 1963. after brief speeches by leaders of the two delegations, it was decided that Sardar Swaran Singh and Mr. Zulfikar Ali Bhutto should meet separately to resume their discussions on Kashmir and other related matters.

Sardar Swaran Singh and Mr. Bhutto held several meetings on 12, 13 and 14 March. At some of these meetings they were assisted by their advisers.

Sardar Swaran Singh has accepted Mr. Zulfikar Ali Bhutto’s invitation for further discussion of Kashmir and other related matters at Karachi from April 21.

Mr. Zulfikar Ali Bhutto accompanied by his delegation left for Dacca on the morning of March 15, 1963.

0384. Excerpts from the Interview of Chinese Premier Chou En-lai with the correspondent of Associated Press of Pakistan.

March 31, 1963.

Living together for 14 years, China and Pakistan have established relations of peace and friendship. We both wanted to settle the boundary question and fix the boundary in the form of an agreement. When the question of the ownership of Kashmir is settled by India and Pakistan in future, China will sign a formal boundary treaty with the sovereign authority concerned...

The Pakistan Government did not go by MacDonald’s (?, MacMohan) territorial claim. This shows that Pakistan wishes to establish friendly relations with China. It has adopted an attitude of equality and fairness.

The Indian Government is trying to use a British imperialist claim to incite the Pakistan and Indian peoples to support its policy of taking over the legacy of expansionism of the British Empire. A comparison will show clearly who is assuming the unseemly position of an aggressor and expansionist...

Question: How do you look at the Sino-Pakistan relations in view of the suggestion made in the Press abroad that the Sino-Pakistan friendship is contradictory to Pakistan’s membership of the pacts, specially of the SEATO and because Pakistan receives aid from the United States?

Premier Chou En-lai: We do not deny that there is a certain contradiction. It is precisely for this reason that development of friendly relations between China and Pakistan has been a process of gradual accumulation. Shortly after the founding of new China, China and Pakistan established relations of mutual recognition. Later, through the efforts of Gen. Raza during his tenure of office as the first Pakistan Ambassador to China, a preliminary understanding was established between us. At the Bandung Conference, the Prime Ministers of the two countries met, and later they exchanged visits. The mutual understanding between our two countries was thus further enhanced. After the formation of SEATO in 1954, the Pakistan Government often declared to the Chinese Government that its participation in that organization was not for the purpose of being hostile to China and would not prejudice Pakistan’s friendship for China. Since President Mohammed Ayub Khan assumed leadership of your country as your President, facts have further proved that Pakistan’s policy towards China is one of friendship and not one of hostility.

Not long ago, in the United Nations, Pakistan cast its vote in support of restoration of new China’s rightful position in the United Nations, and did not support the US position of retaining the Chiang Kai-shek clique in the United Nations. The most striking proof is the conclusion of the Sino-Pakistan boundary agreement. In disregard of India’s position and US Pressure, Pakistan resolutely took the initiative to sign the boundary agreement with China. Thus, we have further understood that Pakistan is genuinely desirous of maintaining friendly and good neighbourly relations with China.

As for China’s desire for friendship with Pakistan, it has been consistent throughout the past 14 years. Even when we were on friendly terms with India, we took an attitude of non-involvement in the Kashmir issue. We have always cherished the hope that India and Pakistan would settle the Kashmir issue and other issues between them in a friendly way. We hope to see an independent and strong Pakistan. We are now on friendly terms with Pakistan, but we have not given up our desire for friendship with India. We also hope to see friendship between India and Pakistan.

The relations between the United States and India have undergone a great change since the South East Asian Treaty was signed. After the Geneva Conference on the Indo-China question, India still made a show of peace and neutrality. At that time, the United States chose Pakistan, Thailand and other countries to form SEATO, which parades as an anti-Communist and anti-China military alliance. But the facts in the past few years show that Pakistan has not acted in accordance with US wishes. Pakistan wishes to be friendly and not hostile to China. On the other hand, India’s so-called peace and neutrality are only a façade.

In substance, India has been displeased with China from the time of China’s peaceful liberation of Tibet. After that, in 1956-57 the Dalai Lama visited India, in 1959 Tibetan Serf owners launched a rebellion and the Dalai Lama ran away, and the Sino-Indian boundary question became tense. Beginning from 1959 India has taken the lead in the anti China campaign in South Asia. Particularly since the Sino-Indian border conflict broke out last year, the United States looked upon India, which keeps a cloak of non-alignment, as its best ally. Not counting the military aid given to it during the past half year, the United States has given India various aids adding up to 6.4 billion dollars, most of which was given to it after 1959. This massive aid is more than that received by any other country in Asia, Africa and Latin America from the United States.

The aid received by Pakistan cannot at all be compared with it. In my opinion, in the near future, US military assistance aid to India will definitely surpass that to Pakistan. Therefore, the situation has changed; it is now characterized by the fact that non-aligned India has become an aligned country, best appreciated by the United States in South Asia, while Pakistan, which is a US ally is regarded by the United States as a more or less non-aligned country. Of course, the United States will not yet give up Pakistan. It will still use Pakistan to check India. Looking at it from this angle, for a time the United States will not yet withdraw its aid to Pakistan…

No matter how we look at it, the relation between China and Pakistan will continue to develop. Our political, economic and cultural relations will all continue to develop. We particularly appreciate the fact that… the Pakistan Government has come to see that the national independence and economic development of a country depends mainly on its own efforts and not on foreign aid. It is all right to accept foreign aid on the basis of equality and mutual benefit. But one must not allow the aiding country to enjoy any special privileges, or any conditions interfering in the domestic affairs of the recipient to be attached. We note that the Pakistan people and Government have gradually made clear their stand on this point…

India wants to get arms from the United States to satisfy its expansionist ambitions. I am of the opinion that the more India relies on the United States and the more arms it gets, the more isolated will it be in Asia, Africa, Latin America and the whole world. To my mind, the Asian, African and Latin American countries and people will change their view about India and Pakistan. The steps taken by President Ayub to sign the boundary agreement with China has changed the view of many people in the world. Pakistan will make more and more friends in the future, while India will become more and more isolated.

China has many friends in Asia, Africa and Latin America, and the relations between the Western countries and China are also changing. The relations between China on the one hand and Japan, Britain and some other countries on the other hand are changing.

What they term our fourth difficulty is presumably the differences within the Socialist camp. India’s attempt to take advantage of these differences is futile. It is inconceivable that a socialist country would openly help India fight China when India should start an aggressive war against China. If it really does so, how could it still be considered a socialist country?

Karachi, April 25, 1963.

On the conclusion of the fourth round of the Indo-Pakistan talks on Kashmir and other related matters at Calcutta on March 15, 1963, Mr. Zulfikar Ali Bhutto, Pakistan Minister for External Affairs had invited Sardar Swaran Singh, Indian Minister for Railways, to continue the discussions at Karachi in April, 1963.

Sardar Swaran Singh accepted the invitation and arrived in Karachi on April 21, 1963, with members of the Indian Delegation.

The Delegations of India and Pakistan met in a formal session on the morning of April 22 at the State Bank of Pakistan. The two Ministers met in the afternoon, without advisers, and resumed the discussions. The two Ministers, assisted by their advisers, continued the talks on April 23, 24 and 25 and held five meetings at which various aspects of the Kashmir problem were discussed.

The leaders of the two Delegations agreed to continue the talks in New Delhi on May 15, 1963.

Extracts from the Statement made by Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru in the Lok Sabha/Rajya Sabha on India – Pakistan relations

New Delhi, May 7, 1963.

As the House is aware, the Government of India have always been anxious to reach a settlement on our various differences with Pakistan including those over Kashmir and to do everything possible to realize our main objective of having friendly and cooperative relations with Pakistan so that India and Pakistan can live side by side in peace and friendship. My colleagues, Sardar Swaran Singh, Minister for Railways, who has been leading the Indian delegation, has pursued this objective with admirable patience in the Indo-Pakistan Minister level talks that have been going on during the last few months. Despite difficulties caused by provocative statements on the Pakistan side, he has always conducted the talks with perfect calm and coolness and has not allowed occasional difficulties and set backs to interfere with our objective to do everything possible to promote friendly and cooperative relations with Pakistan. That the five rounds of talks should not have yielded any useful results and that our differences with Pakistan still remain is a matter of serious regret to us. We are, however, determined, despite set backs and difficulties, to continue our efforts to resolve our differences and to promote friendly and cooperative relations with Pakistan. I would in this connection like to draw the attention of the House to our repeated offers of a “No War” Declaration to Pakistan in pursuance of our sincere desire to have peaceful and friendly relations with them. These offers have so far met with no response. In my letter to President Ayub Khan last October, I had pointed out that we have to build up adequate defence potential to meet the Chinese threat but this new defence potential cannot and will not be used for any purpose other than effective resistance against Chinese aggression. I had also assured him in this letter that the idea of any conflict with Pakistan is one which is repugnant to us, and we on our part will never initiate it and expressed my conviction that the future of India and Pakistan lies in their friendship and cooperation for the benefit of both. I am sure the House fully supports me in my reiteration of these statements.

Lord Mountbatten had planned to visit us in October 1962. This visit was postponed because of the crisis in the Caribbean. We were glad to see an old friend and exchanged views with him on our mutual problems. As Chief of the U.K. Defence Staff, Lord Mountbatten has been in close touch with the problems of our defence requirements both in the way of equipment and machinery for defence production to build up our defence potential to meet the Chinese threat. He discussed these matters generally with me, with the Defence Minister and with various Service Chiefs. The Secretary of State for Commonwealth Relations, Mr. Dunchan Sandys, discussed with us the general question of our defence requirements, the progress of the Indo-Pakistan Minister level talks on Kashmir and other related matters and Indo-Pakistan relations generally. During the talks he made it clear that settlement on Kashmir is not a condition to the military aid from U.K. to meet the Chinese threat to India. He added, however, that a settlement of the differences between India and Pakistan will greatly ease the U.K.’s task and hoped that progress will be made in the talks between India and Pakistan to settle their difference.

I would like to take this opportunity of saying a few words on press reports about the grounding of I. A. F. planes for lack of supply of British spare parts that have appeared in the press as a result of a question asked in the UK Parliament on this subject. While some aircraft with flying units have temporarily become unserviceable, it is expected that this temporary difficulty will be soon overcome in view of the great interest taken in this matter by all concerned. Our requirements of spare parts for IAF planes of British manufacture are being dealt with the basis of priority. The main difficulty has been the availability of supply, with the Royal Air Force and with the British manufacturers. Difficulty arose as some of the types of British aircraft in service with the IAF have gone out of production.

In our talks with Secretary of State, Dean Rusk, which was in the nature of a tour d’ horizon of the problems in which both India and the United States are interested, Secretary of state, Dean Rusk, assured us of United States sympathy and support to India against the Chinese threat. He made it clear that there can be no question of compromising with the Chinese threat and that the question of U.S. aid to India was not linked with the settlement of Indo-Pakistan differences including those over Kashmir. He added that, so far as the U.S.A. were concerned, their view was that Chinese aggressive and expansionist policies posed a threat to the entire sub continent and, in that context, they were interested in promotion of friendly relations between India and Pakistan. I told Secretary of State Dean Rusk that geography, our common bonds of history and cultural and other ties made it inevitable that India and Pakistan should have cooperative and friendly relations. In resolving our current differences including those on Kashmir, however, care has to be taken to see that both the methods and the lines of settlement of differences that may be followed should secure the main objective not only of resolving the differences but of promoting friendly and cooperative relations between India and Pakistan. It is of the utmost importance, therefore, that no inadvertent step should be taken which may, instead of making improvement, worsen the climate between the two countries. It is in this context and in the context of the long term nature of the Chinese threat that we welcome the interest of U.S.A. and other friendly countries who are helping us in meeting the problems we are facing.

Supplementary questions asked/answered in th Rajya Sabha on May 7, 1963.

SHRI ATAL BIHARI VAJPAYEE: May I seek one clarification? I do not want to know the details of the Indo-Pakistan talks to be given but I should like to know whether any proposal has emanated from the United Kingdom and the United States of America for the joint control of the Kashmir Valley. There are all types of rumours and I want to know whether any proposal has been formally put forward before the Government of India and, if so, whether the United Kingdom and the United States of America have been told in plain terms that while we do want their long term military aid, we are not prepared to sacrifice Kashmir.

SHRI JAWAHARLAL NEHRU: There has been no proposal as such but in the course of the long talks all kinds of suggestions were put forward. I do not think, even amongst the suggestions there was any question of any joint control but there were various proposals which, to some extent, may be considered to involve some such thing, not joint control but some other facilities for the parties. This was not a proposal, as I said, but in considering the entire problem, various things were put forward. It was pointed out to them that this was, from many points of view, not at all a feasible or a desirable thing and we could not accept it.

SHRI BHUPESH GUPTA: May I seek one clarification in this connection? From the reports in the United States of America and also from some of the statements that have emanated from the official quarters there, it does appear that much attention has been paid to the specific question of Kashmir in the context of the Indo-Pakistan talks. Afterwards, after the fifth round of talks, Sardar Swaran Singh said in Karachi that the differences have widened. May I know, Sir, in that connection, after the four series of talks, exactly on what points, basically or broadly speaking, the differences have widened, as Sardar Swaran Singh has said, and whether in this connection a proposal has been made for internationalization of the State of Kashmir? In this connection, has the Government of India reiterated its basic stand in the Security Council as far as Kashmir is concerned, our general attitude, or whether there is some alteration of the position that we have taken all these years since the matter went to the Security Council?

SHRI JAWAHARLAL NEHRU: The hon. Member asks about some proposal for internationalization. I do not think any such proposal was made but as I have said in my answer to the hon. Mr. Vajpayee all kinds of suggestions were made, avenues explored, and naturally we gave them our viewpoint in clear terms but there was no suggestion even as far as I remember of internationalization put forward in the course of those talks. We did not repeat all our arguments of the Security Council – that is a long process – and the matter is more or less admitted, what the legal and constitutional basis is. So it was on that basis broadly that the matter was considered, apart from the legal and constitutional basis, what else was possible largely within that framework to settle this question which has given us so much trouble.

SHRI A.D. MANI: During the talks with the leaders who came here and during the discussions on the specific proposals that have been made for the solution of the Kashmir dispute, was it made clear on behalf of the Government of India that as far as the Kashmir question is concerned no decision can be taken without the consent of the Legislature of Kashmir and the Government of Kashmir?

SHRI JAWAHARLAL NEHRU: This has always been pointed out that whatever decision can be made can only be made according to our Constitution, well, obviously by Parliament and secondly with the approval of the Assembly in Kashmir.
SHRI B.D. AGADE: Mr. Dean Rusk before he departed from this country has told the reporters that they have reached some sort of understanding and agreement with the Government of India on certain problems. So I would like to know from the hon. Prime Minister on what problems they have reached this understanding and agreement; particularly, Sir, I would like to know from the hon. Prime Minister whether they have reached any understanding so far as the nature and extent of arms aid is concerned because I understand that Pakistan is entertaining certain fears that if more arms aid is given to this country it might tilt the balance of power in this sub-continent. In the context of this circumstance I would like to know from the hon. Prime Minister whether during these discussions we have been able to convince all the dignitaries that no balance of power will be tilted. Of course the hon. Prime Minister has already told that whatever arms aid we might get we will not use it against Pakistan but we will use it against China. But have we been able to convince these dignitaries and has there been any understanding on this point?

SHRI JAWAHARLAL NEHRU: I think that I have got the drift of the question but I am not quite sure about the precise nature of it. So I shall endeavour to reply as I understand the drift. So far as arms aid, etc., are concerned, these matters are being precisely dealt with by the team, the expert high level team, that has gone to the United States and to the United Kingdom and has just come back. They dealt with this matter in detail, not broadly, but in detail and precisely with their opposite numbers there. Generally their reception was very friendly. They are a very receptive people on the other side but they could not give a final reply as to what kind of things will be supplied by them and what not because that depends on other factors and may be ultimately upon the decision of the Congress there. But broadly speaking they had a very favourable reception there and as has been stated, my colleague, Mr. T.T. Krishnamachar, will be going there in a few days' time. We did not discuss with Mr. Dean Rusk here the quantum of aid or the quality of aid because that is a detailed and expert matter. We only discussed the general need for aid and that this should not be connected with the Indo-Pakistan question. As I have said, the Indo-Pakistan question is of greater importance to us than to the United States or the United Kingdom. It concerns us and we want very much a satisfactory settlement not only of the Kashmir issue but of all the issues that come up between India and Pakistan to bedevil our relations and we were assured by them that they did not make the aid contingent on these Kashmir or like issues. They pointed out at the same time that they were anxious to help settle these issues and it would facilitate them also in helping us to the best possible extent but they kept it separate.
0387. Statement of Pakistan Foreign Minister Z.A. Bhutto commenting on the statement of Prime Minister Nehru on Indo-Pakistan Talks.

Karachi, May 9, 1963

Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru's statement on Kashmir in the Indian Parliament on May 7 appears to confirm our genuine apprehensions that there has been no real desire on the part of India to reach an honourable and equitable settlement with us on Kashmir. He has referred in his statement to some proposals put forward by friendly countries to him to partition the Valley or of joint control over it by India and Pakistan. I would like to state categorically and without equivocation that we have been firmly opposed to any such ideas. We have, however, always been willing to examine any proposal or solution of the Kashmir problem in accordance with the internationally accepted principle of self determination. This India, under one pretext or another, has consistently denied to the people of Kashmir.

Within the framework of these principles we put out certain broad suggestions to the Indian delegation at the Ministerial level talks and, despite Mr. Nehru's statement in the Lok Sabha, we hoped that some concrete and realistic response would be forthcoming in the sixth round of the talks due to begin in Delhi on 15th instant. Unless such a positive and realistic response should be forthcoming, continuing these talks any further would become meaningless.

The Indian Prime Minister has thought it appropriate to accuse us of raising difficulties and making provocative statements. I wish he had exercised restraint and not forced us to say what we would have gladly avoided, that the Indian Prime Minister's performance has not been constructive and his very first statement following the publication of the joint communiqué very nearly resulted in the wrecking of the talks even before they could start.

It is extraordinary that the Indian Prime Minister should talk of a no-war pact with Pakistan while the people of Kashmir groan under military occupation and are the victims of Indian aggression and colonialism. India holds the people of Kashmir in bondage in violation of its oft-repeated pledges to permit them to exercise their inherent right to self-determination.

We, for our part, have pledged our support to the people of Kashmir to attain that right and we firmly desire a settlement of the Kashmir question in accordance with the principles of justice and equity.

It is for those compelling reasons that we decided to enter into bilateral negotiations despite the persistent intransigence of the Government of India.
We are anxious to establish and maintain peaceful, friendly and cooperative relations with India. It is only under these conditions that peace and stability in this region can be ensured. But, Prime Minister Nehru’s attitude appears to remain as fixed and rigid as ever.

0388. Joint Statement issued at the conclusion of Indo-Pakistan Talks on Kashmir.

New Delhi, May 16, 1963.

On November 29, 1962, the President of Pakistan and the Prime Minister of India issued a Joint Statement calling for renewed effort to be made to resolve the outstanding differences between their two countries on Kashmir and other related matters, so as to enable India and Pakistan to live side by side in peace and friendship. In that statement, the President of Pakistan and the Prime Minister of India agreed that discussions should be held at an early date, initially at the Ministerial level, with the object of reaching an honourable and equitable settlement.

In pursuance of this decision, Mr. Zulfikar Ali Bhutto, the Pakistan Minister for External Affairs and Sardar Swaran Singh, the Indian Minister for Railways, held a number of meetings, spread over six sessions between December 26, 1962 and May 16, 1963. These meetings were held at Rawalpindi, New Delhi, Calcutta and Karachi and were frank and cordial throughout.

At the end of the last meeting which concluded today, the two Ministers recorded with regret that no agreement could be reached on the settlement of the Kashmir dispute.

Mr. Zulfikar Ali Bhutto and his Advisers who had arrived in New Delhi on May 14, 1963 for these talks, left for Karachi on May 16, 1963.

India did not really fear Chinese aggression because India knew, as well as the rest of us, that the conflict with China was no more than a border clash brought upon by India’s own impetuosity. That being the situation, India actually wanted to augment its resources and strength, not so much against Communist China, but against the country which it has declared to be her enemy No.1. We are, therefore, today on the threshold of a very important and a very delicate period in our national life. How best we can maintain our security and national integrity is a matter which is seriously engaging the attention of the Government. But we know this much, and this much can be said, that, God forbid, if there was to be a clash, if India in her frustration turned her guns against Pakistan, the international situation is such today that Pakistan would not be alone in that conflict. That conflict does not involve Pakistan alone. An attack from India on Pakistan is no longer confined to the security and territorial integrity of Pakistan. An attack by India on Pakistan involves the territorial integrity and security of the largest State in Asia and, therefore, this new element and this new factor brought in the situation is a very important element and a very important factor. I would not at this stage like to elucidate any further on this matter, but suffice to say that the national interest of another State itself is involved in an attack on Pakistan because that State and other States have known India’s aggressive intentions, how India is readily capable of embarking on aggression against other countries. Therefore, a subjugated Pakistan or a defeated Pakistan is not only something which is inimical to the people of Pakistan, a question of annihilation for us; it also poses a serious threat to other countries in Asia and particularly to the largest State in Asia. So from that point of view, I think we can safely say that everything is being done to protect our national interest and territorial integrity.
Letter from High Commissioner G. Parthasarathy to Commonwealth Secretary Y. D. Gundevia on the political situation in Pakistan.

High Commissioner for India
Karachi

No. HC/TS/69/63  16th July 1963.

My dear Yezdi,

The confused and somewhat uneasy situation in Pakistan has been the subject of much speculation and rumour-mongering in the last few days. The impression that Ayub is losing ground is widespread and there is expectation that he might take dramatic steps to retrieve his position. In this context, a campaign has been whipped up by a section of the press for the formation of a national government “to meet the threat posed by Indian rearmament”. On the other hand, reports of dissatisfaction among the younger elements in the Army are persistent and rumours of a coup are again afloat. In this connection you might be interested to read the two enclosed reports: (a) copy of a letter from Col. Nagra, my Military Advisor to the DMI on anti-Ayub sentiments in the Armed Forces as given to him by a reliable source; (b) a political assessment by Shankar Bajpai following his visit to Rawalpindi.

With kind regards,

Yours sincerely

Colonel Gandharv Nagra

A couple of days ago, Lt. Col. G. R. MOHATTARAM (retired) came to see me. Col. Mohattaram is a reliable source of mine and has been working for me ever since my arrival. He revealed some interesting information about Ayub's position in the country and anti-Ayub activity in the Army. A gist of this important information is given in the succeeding paragraphs.

Ayub has become terribly unpopular both with the masses and the officers of the Pakistan Army due to the following reasons:--

(a) Ayub’s political activity, with particular reference to his joining the Conventionist Party.

(b) Ayub has been acquiring for himself and his family property, business interests, and wealth through shady deals e.g. sale of General Motors, Mack Trucks and the sale of RTC.

(c) Ayub’s shabby treatment of Gen. Azam.

The junior officers of the Army (Captain and Majors) are extremely unhappy and dissatisfied with Ayub and his Government due to the following main reasons:--

(a) While Ayub and the senior officers like Musa, Rana and Burki have done well in acquiring property, business interests and wealth for themselves, nothing has been done to improve their lot.

(b) Captains and Majors who are victims of the ‘promotion block’ in the Army compare themselves with people of their age and service groups in the CSP cadre and employed in business firms who have comparatively done very much better. A CSP officer with 10 – 12 years service in Pakistan become Commissioner of a Division while in the Army the officer with that much service are either Captain or junior Majors. This is a cause of considerable resentment amongst the junior officers of the Army.

(c) Ayub’s all out effort to keep himself in power.

He told me that an underground movement against Ayub has gained considerable strength and Ayub is bound to be removed from the scene within the next six months or so. He was quite emphatic about this statement and said that Ayub is bound to be murdered within the next six months or so unless he escapes from the country. This movement according to Colonel MOHATTARAM is controlled from UK and officers here have been receiving anti Ayub literature originating from UK. He assured me that he had himself seen one of these anti-Ayub pamphlets titled ‘SOLDIER TURNED TRAITOR’.

When I asked him as to who were the real brains behind this movement, MOHATTARAM told me that some politicians like Suhrawardy were also supporting this movement, but the real persons were Generals Sher Ali and Shahid Hamid, Mr. IKRAM Ullah and possibly ISKANDAR MIRZA. In case this movement succeeded, MOHATTARAM said, General Azam was likely to emerge as Ayub’s successor.

He also mentioned that recently there had been a meeting between ISKANDAR MIRZA and SUHRAWARDY at BEIRUT.

Apparently, even the Americans here are also in the know of this situation. The other day Col. THOMAS F. HOOPER, the new US Military Attaché, specially came to see me in my office and asked me if I had heard of any anti-Ayub movement in the Army circles and the circulation of anti-Ayub literature among the Army officers. Colonel HOOPER confirmed to me that Ayub’s position was very shaky and he would not be surprised if in the near future he was bumped off.

Yesterday the outgoing Austrian Ambassador, during his call on our High Commissioner, also mentioned that he had heard about anti-Ayub movement in the Army circles and the circulation of anti-Ayub literature amongst the Army officers.

From the above it is quite clear that Ayub’s position is very shaky and some underground movement, particularly in the Army is afoot to oust him. It however, is difficult to forecast as to when it is likely to take place and who will lead such a coup. I am personally inclined to accept Colonel MOHATTARAM’s suggestion that General Azam who is extremely popular with the East Pakistanis and has a reasonable following both in the Army circles and amongst the people of West Pakistan, is likely to be installed as Ayub’s successor. I have sent another retired officer to Rawalpindi and Lahore with a request to circulate amongst the officers in these places and see if he can get some definite information about this underground movement. I shall keep a very strict watch on this aspect and keep you informed.

In addition to the above, MOHATTARAM also told me the following:

(a) Ayub has taken Rs. 50,00,000/- in foreign exchange from the Party buying the KRTC (Karachi Road Transport Company). MOHATTARAM being the Administrative Officer of the KRTC these days, swore that he was absolutely certain of this.

(b) Sino-Pakistan relations were very much deeper and were likely to develop further. According to him the Chinese have assured Pakistan of all possible help against India. He said that the Chinese had also promised military aid; if fact, he heard some rumours that the Chinese had already handed over some ‘Launchers’ which had been located at KHARIAN. I personally do not believe that the Chinese have yet given any military equipment to the Pakistanis but am checking up and shall let you have.

(c) The moment Ayub begin to realize the nature of his desperate position he might start the so called ‘Jehad’ against India in the hope of consolidating his own position and he suggested that the Indians should therefore be prepared to meet such a situation.

(d) Over the issue of KASHMIR, every Pakistani including the junior officers of the Army were convinced that Kashmir rightfully belonged to Pakistan and were prepared to fight for that cause.

(e) The morale of the Pakistani Army was very low and both the leadership and state of training was very poor. The Army, according to MOHATTARAM did not therefore pose any real threat to India but it was the hordes of armed tribesmen who will willingly volunteer to participate in the ‘JEHAD’ against India.

I am sure you will put up this D.O immediately on receipt to the CGS for his information.

Signed,
Colonel GURDAS SINGH
DDMI
Army Headquarter,
New Delhi.

AYUB REGIME’S DIFFICULTIES

Though the general impression one got in Rawalpindi was of a government perfectly self-confident and indeed, self–satisfied, one also sensed that all sorts of undercurrents were at work which could undermine the stability of the Ayub regime. In Karachi there is even more palpable air of expectancy, as though some dramatic developments must take place before long. This is partially explicable in terms of the uncertainty inevitable in a country unused to normal constitutional processes, and specially in one in which the public likes it periodic drama and is moreover, exposed to a press which reaches such a sustained hysterical pitch as it has presently in regard to India. Certainly, there is nothing substantial by way of evidence at present, but two sets of speculation at which the rumour-mongering are at work should be noted:

(a) that the regime’s popularity has been waning so fast that a drastic fresh attempt will be made to broaden its political base; and
(b) that within the regime itself Ayub is losing support and will be replaced.

2. The factor common to these two versions is that Ayub's personal position has weakened and that much certainly seems to be true, though for different reasons in respect of different groups – he has been in power so long, he has been hard on the old politicians who are still active at the grass-roots, he has not been able to resolve any of the country's basic dilemmas, the Pathans are disappointed with him, the Sindhis want the Capital back, West Pakistan as a whole thinks he is the main obstacle to the undoing of its enforced union, while East Pakistan has a whole set of reasons of its own for disliking him. Above all, he is now openly accused of presiding over an administration no less corrupt than the one he took power to clean up – a corruption, it is now alleged, which extends to his own family feathering its nest. And as against this popular criticism, there are stories that the Army is unhappy, both at his political maneuverings and at his exposing himself to personal charge; the senior officers are further supposed to be distressed at the flirtation with China, while the younger ones are supposed to be resentful, on the one hand that they have not benefited in terms of office or conditions of service, as they should have from this regime, and on the other hand that modern social and economic thought is finding no echo in the Government's leadership. Ayub is thus under two contradictory pressures – either to satisfy demands that popular representation should be given free play in government or to revert to stricter control over the politicians.

3. It is fairly evident in Rawalpindi that the authoritarian instincts of the ruling hierarchy are all against any concessions to popular pressure which they not unjustifiably feel is primarily the pressure of disgruntled politicians. All Government supporters felt that they could manage affairs very well with the existing level of democracy and all they needed today was to exercise pressure themselves to gain wider support. They talked quite freely of what could be achieved by giving a licence here or cutting off water supplies there; and their stick-and-carrot policy certainly seems to be adequate for West Pakistan, even Altaf Husain's brief departure from hero worship having been rectified under pressure by today's fulsome praise of the President. As for the East Pakistanis, they are held to be incapable of doing anything more than shouting, no matter who is in power. Thus the senior Army and civil officers and most of Ayub's West Pakistani lieutenants, including above all Governor Kalabagh are urging a tough line with the politicians; the theory is that if Ayub does not listen to them, they will replace him, with the willing support of the younger officers, who have their own resentment. (M.A. has already reported that anti-Ayub pamphlets printed in London are circulating among these officers. Since last year a Committee for the Restoration of Democracy in Pakistan, consisting mostly of students, has been functioning in London, allegedly with the help exiled stalwarts like Iskander Mirza and Ikramullah. They publish pamphlets which may well have found their way into Army circles. The man inevitably mentioned as being likely to be put in is Azam; it is recognized that any reversion to strict authoritarianism will have particularly unsettling consequences in East Pakistan and General Azam’s popularity there is supposed to be the compensating factor. Azam was certainly praised a great deal by the East Pakistanis but they do not really expect him to be any kinder to them once in office, and certainly his taking over will not meet any of the complaints leveled against the present Government. It could be, however, that East Pakistan might be left to enjoy the comparatively lesser repression it suffers now while the new harshness is exercised chiefly in respect of West Pakistan. In other words, the change of regime would be determined by factors in West Pakistan, the repercussions in East Pakistan being faced as best they might.

4. The alternative possibility is that Ayub will manage to placate the Army to go further in his attempts to win public support. His joining the Conventionists’ League has not brought him much favour, but the entire Government machinery is now more actively employed than ever in winning such favours by any means possible, assisted by moneyed office-seekers. For Ayub’s Peshawar visit last month, for example, officials rounded up every one they could to attend his public address while local leaders provided over 200 trucks to bring people from neighbouring areas; the police are supposed to have estimated that 60,000 people came, but showed only a part of the enthusiasm attributed by the press to a crowd of over 100,000. However, the pressure for more democratic processes is primarily from East Pakistan, which is supposedly less susceptible to such devices and there Ayub would have to look more for the support of the representative leaders than to his own personal build-up. There are persistent reports, that he will add to the Cabinet (which is already short of two East Pakistanis) and to these are now added the recent stories of the need for a national government to face the “emergency” created by India. This demand gives the Opposition another plausible reason for claiming concessions from the Government while offering cooperation on patriotic grounds; the Government might also try and use it as an excuse for halting political development by claiming to create a national government with the help of a few big names – if they can find any to join them.

5. In this confusion, it is difficult to judge which way the cat will jump. It may stay just where it is, with periodic stunts to make it appear responsive to the public; prima facie this looks likeliest. But, whether artificial or natural, the air of political uncertainty has never been greater and with increasing sense of frustration in regard to India, a move towards either more or ostensibly less authoritarian to “rally the nation” cannot be ruled out, while the danger of another coup is eternally present. That being said, however, it must be recalled that the regime in Pindi presented a perfectly calm and confident façade.

No. T/ C.S-452/63

My dear G.P.,

2. I have read the enclosures with some concern. We have nothing concrete to go on, but diplomatic circles in Delhi are, quite genuinely, apprehensive that everything is going wrong, now a little too fast, in Pakistan. One cannot take a bet on how long Ayub’s regime can last. One can not get excited about what they do with themselves, but the only cause for anxiety is that they might make trouble for us across the Kashmir border as a diversion. You and your Officers must keep your ears very much to the ground on this, and watch out for every symptom.

3. I am leaving Delhi tomorrow, and I will be back on 12th August.

Yours sincerely

0392. \textbf{TOP SECRET}

Letter from High Commissioner G. Parthasarathy to Foreign Secretary M. J. Desai regarding foreign policy of Pakistan.

High Commissioner For India
Karachi

My dear Foreign Secretary,

Please refer to my letter No. HC 69/63 of July 18, 1963 to the Commonwealth Secretary in which I had commented briefly on Bhutto’s foreign policy statement in the National Assembly. Bhutto’s reference to the involvement of China in the event of an attack on Pakistan by India continues to be the subject of anxious speculation. No further light has been thrown on the inwardness of the Foreign Minister's startling statement, either in official circles or in the Press. It is possible that a clarification or explanation of what seems to have been a deliberately mystifying reference to Chinese support may be given by Bhutto in the debate that take place today and tomorrow in the National Assembly, but it is also likely that the Foreign Minister might not elaborate his statement for tactical reasons.

2. Meanwhile, the American Ambassador and the British High Commissioner have discussed this matter with the Foreign Minister. The American Ambassador, who called on me yesterday, gave me an account of his talk with Bhutto. He said he went up to Pindi to give advance intimation to the Pakistanis of the communiqué that was being issued yesterday on the joint air exercises we have agreed to. The Ambassador said that Bhutto had given them both “ringing assurances” that Pakistan had no secret agreement or understanding with China in regard to defence matters. Bhutto told them that this question had not come up in any form during his discussions in Peking. But Bhutto had let fall a remark that “a Chinese official had told a Pakistani” that China would support Pakistan in the event of an attack by India. The American Ambassador would not elaborate further, but the implication was that Bhutto must have had this statement of the “Chinese official” in mind when he made his pronouncement.

3. The American Ambassador himself seemed to be satisfied with the assurance given to him by Bhutto that there was no secret agreement between Pakistan and China. I remarked that whatever be the assurances given to the Anglo-Americans, we had profound misgivings and in the light of Bhutto’s statement in the National Assembly, we could only proceed to plan our defence on the basis that such Sino-Pakistan understanding existed. We could not rule out such opportunist Sino-Pakistani collaboration, without peril to our security. The Ambassador appreciated our concern, which was understandable. He remarked that Bhutto had no prepared text when he spoke in the Assembly. I said that might explain the ambiguity to an extent; it was also true that language often overpowers Bhutto who wants to make a mark as a brilliant and tough Foreign Minister. Nevertheless, it was my impression that Bhutto made the statement deliberately to raise a scare and put pressure on the West and us.

4. I asked the American Ambassador whether the Pakistanis were pressing for increased military aid, as demanded by Bhutto in his speech. The Ambassador said, “Not directly”, but the Pakistanis were always arguing that the “military balance” in this region should be maintained. I said we were all aware of this particular Pakistani contention, but what did it mean concretely? Did the Pakistanis demand parity with us in regard to military strength? The Ambassador said, “Not quite. They want restoration of the military balance between India and Pakistan, as it stood last October/November”.

5. I asked the Ambassador whether there had been any further discussions with the Pakistanis in regard to mediation. I drew his attention to a story attributed to official sources in which Pakistan was supposed to have insisted that she would agree to mediation only on two conditions: (a) that Western arms aid should be suspended pending the outcome of the mediatory efforts and (b) the Mediator should be empowered to advise on the quantum of military aid to be given to India. The Ambassador said that no such pre-conditions had been proposed by Bhutto, adding that the press stories to that effect must have been inspired by certain die-hard elements in the Foreign Office like Dehlavi. He added that the Anglo-Americans had prepared a draft formula on mediation which would be discussed with both India and Pakistan. I gathered that Ambassador Chester Bowles would take up the matter with us, after he had time to settle down.

6. During the course of conversation, the Ambassador said that anti-American sentiment in Pakistan was on the increase and he found a stiffening even in official dealings with the Pakistanis. He gave a number of instances where American attitudes were being maliciously misrepresented. And yet, he added, every day the Pakistani officials did not hesitate to come to the Americans for economic aid for projects. I remarked jocularly that the U.S. Government must have by now got accustomed to criticisms by recipient or even dependent Governments. He said that indeed they were used to such criticisms, as in South Vietnam or Korea, but Pakistan was the first case where American aid was being received in large measure and at the same time the Government was threatening “to go over to the Communists”.

7. We discussed briefly the charges of “evictions” from Assam and Tripura and I explained the position to him. The Ambassador said that the Pakistanis were trying to drag his Government into this controversy. They had told the Americans that India was organizing pogroms against Indian Muslims which were worse than what Hitler did to the Jews. Here was a case of violation of human rights and yet the American Government remained silent, so runs the Pakistani complaint.

8. I shall be grateful if this report of my conversation with the American Ambassador is kept confidential.

With kind regards,

Yours sincerely,

G. Parthasarathi.

TOP SECRET

Letter from Foreign Secretary M. J. Desai to High Commissioner G. Parathasarathi regarding Pakistan’s claim of Chinese support.

New Delhi, July 24, 1963.

No.1449-FS/T/63 24 July, 1963

My dear Parthasarathi,

Thank you for your letter No. HC/TS/84/63 dated 23rd July.

2. You will remember that the Chinese had informed the Colombo countries that they will maintain peace and will not take any action, even if India provokes them, without informing the Colombo countries. The Chinese gave a note on 18th July to the representatives of the Colombo countries in Peking alleging Indian intrusions and provocations. This would make it appear that the Chinese are nominally complying with their earlier undertaking given to the Colombo countries and freeing their hands for any aggressive action that they might think of taking against India. It was only a few days before 18 of July that Bhutto made his famous statement. These developments, combined with Chinese concentrations on our borders make us naturally anxious about Chinese and Pakistani intentions. I am enclosing herewith, for your information, a Note Verbale (not included here) which we have given to the representatives in the Colombo countries will be presenting to the Foreign Offices concerned today. We have also given copies to the representatives of the U.S.A., U.K. and the U.S.S.R. in Delhi and talked to them about these Pakistan-China aggressive postures against India.

3. The Americans and more so, the British are only too eager to believe anything in favour of Pakistan. Their explanation that Bhutto made the statement on the basis of a stray remark that "a Chinese official had told a Pakistani" is too facile. In any case, Chen Yi is not a minor Chinese official and this is what he said on 23rd at the U.A.R. National Day celebrations at Peking:

   "I wish to mention here that yesterday the Indian Government announced that U.S. and British Air Force units would join I.A.F. in holding joint maneuvers in India. This is a grave step taken by the Indian Government in closer collusion with imperialistic powers and is a deliberate attempt to create tension anew on the Sino-Indian border. The Chinese Government deems it necessary to draw the attention of the Colombo Conference nations to this fact. It should also be pointed out that this step taken by the Indian Government not only is directed against China but also constitutes a threat to India's other neighbours and particularly to Pakistan. The Chinese Government cannot but express its concern over this."

4. That there is understanding between the Pakistanis and the Chinese about joint aggressive pressure on India is abundantly clear. The Americans know what assistance they are giving to us. It is insignificant enough as it is. That the Chinese should interpret this assistance as a threat to Pakistan should be revealing enough.

With kind regards,

Yours sincerely

M.J. Desai

Shri G. Parthasarathi,
High commissioner of India,
Karachi.
Mr. Speaker, Sir, I am thankful to you and to the House for the kind indulgence that you have shown to me to address the House from my seat for the reasons that you have mentioned to the House. I would also like to apologize to those Members of the House whose speeches I have not been able to hear. It has not been out of discourtesy but because I could not attend the House to hear them as I had an attack of appendicitis last night. However, I have asked the Foreign Office to give me record of all that has been said by all the honourable Members of the House. So we are seized of the various observations that all the Members have made.

I do not know whether it would be appropriate or right for me to enter into the recriminations and counter recriminations that have gone on in this debate over the past 48 hours. I am undoubtedly, as a human being, to answer some of the unfounded and wholly incorrect personal allegations made by certain Members of this House. I, however, on further consideration desist from even answering these unfounded allegations because they are so hopelessly false that I think it would not be proper for me to even bother the House and waste its time by entering into personal recriminations.

Some of the points made in the foreign policy debate by the learned Members of the Opposition have been conflicting and contradictory even on fundamentals. On the one hand we were told that the Government had not come forward with forthright and positive foreign policy and that the Government had taken shelter behind the usual old phrases and apologies that had been mentioned for the last 15 years and that the House expected from the Government a new and bold pronouncement of foreign policy. In their part, they have not made any concrete suggestion to Government either. After all, they are the Members of the House, they are the representatives of the people and collectively we all represent 100 million people. If the Government has not, according to them, been able to make demonstration of the clear and bold pronouncement of the foreign policy warranted by circumstances and conditions, we were anxiously looking forward to the suggestions that could have been made by some of the eminent Members of the Opposition. However, they have not, according to us, been able to make any pronouncement by way of constructive reappraisal or change of foreign policy. On the other hand, we have been told that we go about begging for arms in such a manner that in the ordinary course of event, one would consider these beggars to be a public nuisance. Now I do admit that one is ashamed to beg. Even a beggar is ashamed to beg. But if one has to make sacrifices and beg even on behalf of one’s country, I think, one has to be proud of that performance. If the interest of the country demands that on occasion one has to beg, then I think, it is a matter of honour and pride to beg on behalf of the country.

IMPORTANCE OF PAKISTAN

However, the question of begging does not arise. The geo political position of Pakistan is so important and so valuable to the world and to the global strategy of the great powers that we do not get aid and assistance because we beg for it. On the contrary, we get aid and assistance because Pakistan is a nation of 100 million people and is very important as a geo-political factor. One half of it is in West Pakistan linked with the Middle East and vital centres in that region and the other half, with sensitive and vital aspects of South East Asia. Therefore, it is on a basis of reciprocity and basis of mutual interest and mutual interest alone that Pakistan is the recipient of assistance. It is because Pakistan has committed itself to a policy of defence alliance against aggression that we receive assistance and aid and we do not beg for it. We were told that India is being armed menacingly and that the arms that were being given to India by the Western powers would be used against no other country but Pakistan. But, on the other hand, the contradiction was so apparent that some eminent members said that under no circumstances could India be a threat to Pakistan because India was in a state of decomposition and degeneration. As a matter of fact, one member said that not only the process of degeneration was about to begin but that the disintegration and degeneration of India into a motley state had already begun and all the aid and assistance to India from any quarter could not really pose a threat to Pakistan.

AGGRESSOR INDIA

I would humbly submit, Mr. Speaker, through you to the House and to the nation that this is on inherent and basic contradiction. On the one hand, the members of the opposition, I think, agreed with Government that Pakistan’s security was menaced by an aggressor India and that the arms that are being provided to India will be undoubtedly turned against Pakistan. That is our contention and we believe that this is the public opinion in the country. Whereas the members of the Opposition, some of them occupying a very eminent and prominent position in the Opposition, have said that India is in such a process of decomposition and decay that this degenerating India is not capable of being a menace or a threat to Pakistan and we are also advised that Pakistan should not grudge this military assistance. See the other contradiction inherent in the very same sentence that Pakistan should not grudge the massive military assistance by the Western powers to India because it is in the global strategy of the western powers to give assistance to India. In other words, the members of the Opposition have reconciled themselves to the fact that it is in the global interest of the Western powers to give assistance to India and that we should not grudge it. Now, Sir, this is a very serious observation and if that is the true reflection of the country’s mood and thinking that 100 million people of Pakistan have accepted without any threat and alarm a massive assistance to India because it is in a state of degeneration as that assistance cannot be used against Pakistan and also because it is in the global strategy of the Western powers, therefore, Pakistan should not be agitated and concerned over it. If that is the true demonstration of the public opinion of Pakistan, then we would like them to abundantly prove it to this Government because if they can prove it to this Government that the people of Pakistan are happy or the people of Pakistan take with pleasure the new development, then we have no rancour against anyone. If in the universal opinion our people are satisfied then we will too accept the contention that it is in the global strategy and the global interest of the western powers to give military assistance to India and that we should not be concerned over it. If they could demonstrate that to us, we also would not be alarmed because that would be the unanimous opinion of this House and in other words, the unanimous opinion of the nation.

PAKISTAN RIGHTLY ALARMED

But I would beg to submit, Sir, that this is not the correct position. I would beg to submit that the people of Pakistan are very vitally concerned over the military assistance that is being given to India that is the genuine test based on experience. It is based on the fact that India has committed aggression against there countries principally against Pakistan on no less than five occasions in the last fifteen years and we have every cause to feel concerned, and that it is not truly, really and fundamentally in the global interest of the great powers to give this massive assistance to India to make another Chungking out of New Delhi to make another Kue-Min Tang out of New Delhi. We know the result of assistance that was given to Chiang Kai Shek because Chiang’s China was in a state of decay and decomposition. Similarly, assistance could not be utilized effectively if perhaps India is in a state of decay and degeneration. In that case the same aid pattern is being provided in India and it will flow in the cesspool.

Reference has also been made to our relations with Afghanistan. Afghanistan is a Muslim country and a neighbour of ours. We have the greatest respect for the people of Afghanistan and it was not of our choosing that relations broke between Pakistan and Afghanistan. I repeat it, it was not of our choosing that relations between Afghanistan and Pakistan broke. We are aware of the fantastic territorial claim that has been and was made by Afghanistan on Pakistan. I would not like to mention this aspect of the problem, because diplomatic relations have been restored and we would like to see a new chapter emerge, a new understanding emerge between the people of Pakistan and the people of Afghanistan. When I say that all that we have done is to restore diplomatic relations. That answers the question of my learned friend, the Leader of the Opposition. But we are hopeful that by a re-establishment of diplomatic contact, by association, by contacts at all levels we would be able to settle this, or any, that would affect us and Afghanistan or any other country with which Pakistan may have a dispute. This is exactly what we asked the Government of India - that in the interest of peace in the region they should settle the greatest divider between the people of India and the people of Pakistan – the question of Kashmir. It is in the same spirit that we have concluded all other agreements by the process of negotiations enjoined by the United Nations Charter. We are Member of the United Nations and we are committed to the peaceful settlement of disputes. My friends have said that Pakistan should not take credit for having good relations with other neighbours, such as, Nepal, Ceylon, Indonesia, Burma and Afghanistan. I did not mention our good relations with these countries with the object of taking any credit. On the contrary, it was only about India’s arrogance and intransigence in tackling problems that affected her relations with all countries and all her neighbours. This was meant to be more of an observation on India’s attitude and India’s approach of intolerance and inaccommodation (sic) in the settlement of disputes that she has with Pakistan, Ceylon, and China and yet she claims to be a peace loving state. The best way for her is to demonstrate her peaceful intentions and professions to settle her disputes not only with us but all other neighbours because we would like all countries in this region to live in peace and concord. But, unfortunately, India has been child in the world. India has been able to get away with all her machinations by some irrational explanations which the world readily accepts. The misfortune of this region is that these powers which are not familiar with India’s mentality and with India’s approach to international problems, have but too readily agreed to accept India’s approach and India’s mentality and psychological considerations and motivations in issues that affect the peace in this region and that affect the peace in the world.

KASHMIR NEGOTIATIONS

Now, Sir, it has been said that we made a mistake by entering into negotiations with India on Kashmir. I had previously mentioned that in the final and ultimate analysis when the stock had to be taken, we feel that we have gained by entering into negotiations with India. Our friends have criticized for having had talks with India without giving any real and good reasons. They have made assumptions which are not correct. They have said that we had compromised the right of self-determination by entering into negotiations with India over the question of Kashmir. I declare most categorically that under no circumstances we have compromised the right of self-determination of the people of Kashmir, in round after round - first round, second round, third round, fourth round and sixth round – this used to be our basis and it was our stand that the only proper course of the settlement of Kashmir would be through the right of self determination.

Now, Sir, I would like to mention how India, on the other hand, did not gain from these negotiations. You would recall that India has always, during the past years, taken the position on the Kashmir dispute, that the problem of Kashmir is a finished and settled problem, India asserts that the problem of Kashmir is a finished and settled problem; that the people of Kashmir are a part of India; that they are an integral part of the Indian Union as much as Maharashtra or Orissa, or Madras; that constitutionally, politically, economically, 社ocially, and in every other way, the people of Kashmir are a part and parcel and an inextricable part of the Indian Union; and that there is no such question as the Kashmir dispute. It takes two parties to have a dispute one must make a claim, and there must be a rejection of that claim. Well, in this case, they say, it is only Pakistan that is obsessed that there is such a thing called as the Kashmir problem. We do not accept that. We do not say that there is a Kashmir dispute. Therefore, there is no such thing as the Kashmir dispute. In this respect, Sir, I would like to quote from some important Indian statements :-

“Kashmir is the northern extremity of India, and the idea that this is in occupation, which is what has been represented to the Security Council, is a total misnomer. The right of accession does not exist in our federation. The Government of India cannot ever accept the idea that accession is anything but an indissoluble bond. When Kashmir acceded that matter was finished.

—Mr. Krishna Menon’s statement

Then again :-

“The accession of the State of Jammu and Kashmir on the 27th October was the full and final accession. So far as the sovereignty of Jammu and Kashmir is concerned, it has become the sovereignty of the Indian Union by the Act of Accession, by the treaty of the Maharaja with the British Crown. There is no such thing in our constitution as provisional accession.

—Mr. Krishna Menon in the Security
“We regard the accession of the State of Jammu and Kashmir to the Union of India as full complete, final and irrevocable, and what is more, perpetual. We shall not at any time submit this matter to what is called mediation or arbitration.

—Mr. Krishna Menon in the Security Council on the 4th May, 1962

“We have no dispute with regard to Kashmir. Our policy is very clear on this issue. Kashmir’s accession to India was full, complete and perpetual, and no power of this country can change the status. If we for ourselves go about saying that it is a dispute, it will be difficult to convince foreigners of our true status in the matter, because the issues of dispute is sheer propaganda.”

—Mr. Krishna Menon in the United Nations.

INDIA MADE TO ALTER HER STAND

Now, Sir, that is the position of the Government of India right up to May or June, 1962. On the basis of the fact that India refused to reopen the Kashmir problem and refused to recognize it as a dispute, it sought and got the support of the Soviet Union when Mr. Khrushchev visited India in, I think, 1953. It was at that time that the Soviet leaders were told that this was their final position; they would never intend to negotiation or never arrive at a settlement of the Kashmir dispute either through the United Nations or bilaterally, and it was for this reason that the Soviet Union lent its powerful support to India on the question of Kashmir. And today when negotiations were reopened and when they admitted that the Kashmir dispute existed, when they came to the negotiation table to settle what they called the Kashmir dispute on an equitable and honourable basis—these are the words of the words (sic) of the Joint Communiqué of November, 1962, as well as at the conclusion of the talks—when it was said that India and Pakistan sought to arrive at an honourable and equitable solution of the Kashmir dispute but were unable to do so.

Sir, this Government can take real and purposeful pride in jettisoning the Kashmir problem back in the eyes of the world as the most important problem that faces humanity today. But the Kashmir problem is not a problem of our creation. We did not make this Kashmir problem. We inherited this Kashmir problem. Who is responsible for the cease-fire? Who is responsible for stopping the fighting on the Kashmir front? Is this Government responsible for the way in which the Kashmir problem was messed up and the way in which the weakness and vacillation prevailed and triumphed because of the instability in the country, and because of the political weakness; we are not responsible for the creation of political weakness; we are not responsible for the creation of Kashmir dispute. If at all we are responsible for something, we are responsible for having made it alive again. Sir, we have made progress in the settlement of the Kashmir problem. We have brought back the Kashmir problem before the eyes of the world. We have again made it into a meaningful problem in which the interest of whole world is again now focused. The Kashmir problem today is recognized as the most important problem facing the international community, and for this we are responsible for having entered into negotiations.

SHORT SIGHTED APPROACH

Resuming after interruptions, Mr. Z.A. Bhutto said: Now Sir, it has been said that we missed a golden opportunity to settle the Kashmir issue when there was a clash between China and India. I think that is very irresponsible and short sighted approach. On the contrary, as I have said, by our constant effort and by our tireless endeavours, we have today brought forward movement in the Kashmir problem. We have again made it into a live problem. We have again brought it down from the shelf and made it the most urgent problem facing the international community. It is not just the conflict between India and Pakistan which was important in the solution of this problem. It is all the remote and the direct and concomitant aspects of this problem that are important. What has happened? As a result of the Sino-India conflict and because India, for her own interests, wants to exaggerate that crisis so that she can get arms for another purpose, she has created a war hysteria in India; she has brought about economic policies which go and hit the common man. She has brought about economic policies which go and hit people who earn 100 and 120 rupees a month. She has brought about policies which are impracticable, which are not capable of fulfillment, which have caused a sense of demoralization amongst the people of India, which have increased corruption and which have increased nepotism. As a result of the stringent measures that have been taken, people today feel that they are living in a society in which there is economic darkness and in which they have to suffer hardships and make sacrifices for a cause that they do not know and they do not understand. How long can India sustain this attitude of the people of India? After all the people of India are human; they do not have food, shelter and clothing like our people; they are denied most of these basic amenities and for such people who are living in poverty, in squalor and misery, to be called upon to make a perpetual sacrifice for a cause that does not exist, you will find a state of utter despondency existing in that society. Now if that is going to be the attitude and the outlook of the people of India, I will ask you, Sir, what is going to be the outlook and attitude of people of Kashmir who are not part of India and who have never regarded Kashmir a part of India? Why should they be made to make these privations and these sacrifices for a cause, which is not theirs, in which they are not participate and in which they have no stake, because Kashmir is a disputed territory and India, till recently has acknowledged and even today acknowledges that it is a disputed territory. Why should the people of Kashmir be called upon to make sacrifices for India? Are they or are they not in the colonial bondage? If they are, then India has no right to ask them to make sacrifice for a cause which is not theirs. This is one important consideration because in the past India used to say to the world; we are a secular state; Pakistan is a theocratic state and a medieval state where democracy does not exist; we have democratic institution; we have had three elections; we have steel mills and tremendous economic progress; our people are getting a better life. Surely, the people of Kashmir would like to be a part of India.

Can India tell the world that the people of Kashmir would want to be part of India where they are called upon to make sacrifice which they are unable to make; where they have to face a war? These are important considerations.

PLIGHT OF KASHMIRIS UNDER INDIA

If the people of Kashmir were today in Pakistan they would have been living like the rest of Azad Kashmir or Gilgit and Hunza: in peace and security with no conflict from the north and no possibility of annihilation. But because today they are in Indian bondage they have been made a battle ground of the Indian Union. They do not belong to India. India has made Kashmir, which has always known peace and serenity and security, the battle-ground of its war against the People’s Republic of China. These are important consideration in the settlement of the Kashmir dispute. First of all they have to bear privations and make sacrifices for the sake of the people of India in a way to which they are not a party. Secondly, the way gun and the armament and machinery of war have been thrown into their homes and hearths. This is the present situation and this situation cannot remain for long. India should know that she cannot keep Kashmir in subjugation and bondage for long. This state of affairs is bound to result in explosion. As soon as she settles the problem of Kashmir under equitable and honourable terms, Pakistan would be willing to live in peace and friendship, as Pakistan is living in peace and friendship with Cylon, Afghanistan, Iran, Burma, the People’s Republic of China and all our neighbours. We will welcome that development of events.

Sir we are a nation that do not believe in war and conflict. We have shown in the last 15 years that we have not resorted to force. On the contrary, we have exercised remarkable restraint in dealing with international problems. It is India that has always been arrogant. Time is running out for India. India is getting isolated – Pakistan is not getting isolated.

INDIA: A SUSPECT NATION

First things first. India must see what is her position in Asia today. In Asia today she is in a suspect-nation, in Asia today she is a nation which is not trusted. She is not trusted by her neighbours. She is not trusted by the People’s Republic of China. There is tension between her and Indonesia. There is absolute suspicion on the motive and conduct of India in Afro-Asian countries. How long can India persist in this folly and play the role on an isolated party? India is not big enough and great enough to play that role. Let India forsake that arrogant policy and let India come to terms with the people of Pakistan, and we would like to assure them of a great and glorious future for the people of the subcontinent with the rest of the World.

We want peace and friendship with India. But it is for India to extend the hand of cooperation and peace to Pakistan.

They have offered us a no-war pact. Is that the hand of friendship? This no-war pact is a sinister offer that can ever be made for a number of reasons. While there is Kashmir dispute in existence between India and Pakistan, it is inconceivable for a sovereign state to accept a no-war pact. The moment we accept that, cease-fire lines would be final. It would mean that we have no dispute; that would mean that we have no conflict; there is no cause for the armies of India and Pakistan to face each other; we must, therefore, accept the cease-fire line. A no war pact, under the present circumstances, would mean the settlement of the Kashmir problem and acceptance of the present cease-fire line which the people of Pakistan will never accept—now, tomorrow, or a hundred years from now, unless the problem of Kashmir is settled.

Furthermore, Sir, which states in history have made no-war pacts? Did not Nazi Germany conclude a no-war pact with the Soviet Union—the famous Ribbentrop–Molotov Pact. The ink was not dry on that agreement when Nazi Germany invaded the Soviet Union. This no-war pact can lull us into false sense of security and make us believe that India would not resort of force. And then, we can become easy victim of Indian aggression. In the last 15 years, five times India has committed aggression. A no-war pact would also mean that there is an estoppel on the settlement of the Kashmir problem because, as in the case of Indus Basin Treaty claiming estoppel on the rights of Pakistan on the Chenab, they would claim in the same sinister and illogical fashion that now that a no-war pact exist, that Pakistan has accepted the present cease-fire line and status quo remains. Besides that, both India and Pakistan are members of the United Nations and the United Nations enjoins on all member states to settle their problems by peaceful procedure—by negotiations, conciliation, arbitration, mediation under articles 33 of the United Nations charter. India is a member of the United Nations. Pakistan is a member of the United Nations. She should assume on our part that we will have peaceful intentions because of our membership of the United Nations and because of our conduct, and because of our performance on the international stage in the last 15 years which is an enviable record for any peace loving state. These are very vital considerations. Why India want to throw mud in the eyes of the world that we offered them a no-war pact and Pakistan refused and Pakistan is not cooperating. Under honourable and equitable basis we are willing to have a no-war pact with them the moment they settle the Kashmir problem. We are willing for economic collaboration with them the moment they bring an end to this dispute which is spreading poison between the people of India and Pakistan. And this dispute, I declare, will be settled and shall be settled because nobody can deny justice to the people of Kashmir. Justice shall always remain and equity shall always remain. Time and history will show that the people of Kashmir will not be denied their inalienable right of self-determination; a right which we pressed in all negotiations throughout the six rounds.

RELATIONS WITH WESTERN POWERS

Now, Sir, coming to our relations with the West Pakistan, (sic) there has been a distorted representation by the members of the Opposition. We do not say that we are new putting forward the scale of charity, saying that India is receiving so many arms, therefore, Pakistan should be receiving proportionate arms. This is a gross and unfortunate misrepresentation of what was said. We said that the present tension exists in the sub-continent because there is military imbalance. In the last fifteen years, we have made all the sacrifices to maintain the military balance: Because history has shown that only by a balance between states the temptation to resort to arms is avoided. Now, in the interest of peace and security we have maintained some sort of military balance with India. Today, the balance is being badly upset and we said it is for the West to realize that this military balance is being upset and it is for the west to realize that something should be done to maintain this military balance, if she wants to see peace and security in the sub-continent. That is all that we said. We did not say that we are pleading for additional arms. We have been comrades and associates of the West in the two defence alliances. We have been, through a period of crisis and over a period of success, with them and we have made sacrifices for the West in our association with them. We have made many sacrifices. When the U-2 was supposed to have taken off from Peshawar, Mr. Khrushchev did not say that India would be annihilated. He said Peshawar would be annihilated – Pakistan would be annihilated. In these defence alliances we have a great stake we have stake on our whole future. We have staked perhaps a nuclear war in the event of a clash between the two ideologies. And, today what is happening? We are being called in the words of unsophisticated “ditch”. But we would like to rehabilitate our relationship with the West; we have happy memories of our associations with them. It is for them to realize that Pakistan is the injured party in the difficulties that Pakistan is facing. It is not for us to keep on repeating them. This has reached nemesis. We would request them to appreciate the issues involved and to hold the line and to bring about a new year of goodwill and cooperation that has always existed between them and us, because we value their friendship. They have assisted us in many ways. They have made a valuable contribution to our economic growth and to our military security. We are not unmindful of these factors. We are not ungrateful nation. Whatever may be the faults and the follies of Pakistan, one thing you cannot say for the people of Pakistan that they are an ungrateful people. We know these thing. We are mindful of that. But at the same time all that we do is to ask the West to also appreciate the difficulties that we face and also appreciate that this augmentation of military strength of India can only be directed against Pakistan because India has repeatedly said that Pakistan is India’s enemy number one and it is India that has committed aggression thrice on us out of five occasions in which she has committed aggression. She has committed aggression against us in Junagadh, Hyderabad and Kashmir and twice – once in Goa and again in boundary conflict with China. Five times she has committed aggression. Out of these five times, we have been the victims thrice and the West should know these difficulties of sure. They must, therefore, do something to maintain this precarious balance of power. We, on our part, shall maintain our characteristic and traditional friendship with them because we have not been in any way found wanting. We want friendship with them; we want friendship with all the countries in the world. Why do we want friendship with the countries in the world? Because we do not want conflict in this world. If there is no conflict in this world, then the people have an opportunity to bring about some social, cultural and economic progress. All that we would like to see is to have that opportunity in this world, to have that opportunity to give our people a better life; to give our children better schools, better homes and hospitals as that we may have progress in our country, so that our people know that because they are born in poverty, that does not mean that they should live eternally in poverty. We want to face this challenge of poverty; we want to break the barrier of poverty and the only way we can do this is that if there is peace in the sub-continent. If there is peace in the region, if there is peace in Asia and for that reason we are anxious to have good, cordial and friendly relations with all the countries. But in this association everybody’s values are important and past association are important. We are happy to know that as far as Pakistan is concerned, we have always contributed to the promotion of peace. It is because we have contributed to the promotion of peace, that there has been a very successful boundary agreement between the People’s Republic of China and Pakistan, between the great neighbour of 650 million people and Pakistan. In the same way we would like to have an understanding of our problem with India and it is for India to take initiative, and moreover it is for these countries who now today feel that they have a stake in India, who are responsible for India's future security, to realize the difficult in which Pakistan is placed. When I speak today I do not speak as an individual, I do not speak as a Foreign Minister of Pakistan, and I do not speak as a spokesman of the Government of Pakistan. When President Ayub spoke today, he does not speak as the President of Pakistan. When we voice our concern, it is the one hundred million people of Pakistan who are involved in that concern over the threat to our security, the manner in which we are facing a very serious danger. As I have said, we shall face this danger. We shall face this danger because we have an assurance from our friends, and we give value to that assurance, that in the event of aggression they would come to our assistance. We have an assurance also from other countries that if India commits aggression against us, it will not only be against us but against them also. We will not be alone in this trouble. We can never be alone. But even if we are alone, even if Pakistan is alone, we shall surmount the crisis and if we have to, there should be a victory of the dying over the dead. We shall see that Pakistan's territorial integrity and independence is protected with the assistance of all the other countries who believe in peace and justice, who condemn aggression and those countries that condemn aggression are of both ideologies because you do not have to belong to one ideology or another to condemn aggression. Aggression is bad for any state; it is bad for any religion; it is bad for any people. So we know in our crisis we shall have the goodwill and the support of all the peace loving countries of the world, of all the states that believe in upholding the charter of the United Nations. But even if we are alone, we shall face the crisis and we shall surmount it.

My dear Foreign Secretary,

You may have seen the official text of Bhutto’s speech winding up the foreign affairs debate, which we sent by bag yesterday. I would also invite your attention to his opening speech which was forwarded with my letter No. HC 69/63 dated 18th July, and to the American Ambassador’s account of his subsequent meeting with Bhutto which I reported to you in my letter No.HC/ TS/ 84/63 dated 23rd July.

While there is nothing new in Bhutto’s final speech, it is significant for the way it deals with some of the feelers he originally put out. In his opening speech, Bhutto had said that the compulsion for a reshaping of Pakistan’s foreign policy had never been greater; in different places he mentioned three different points which he described as new elements in determining Pakistan’s policy:

(a) “that the circumstances and events have themselves placed Pakistan in such a unique position that its people must rally round… and reconsider how best they can safeguard Pakistan’s independence…”

(b) “Today India is in a position to augment its military strength in a formidable manner with the assistance of Western powers”;

(c) “An attack by India on Pakistan would involve the territorial integrity and security of the largest State in Asia…”.

While criticizing the new Western attitude towards India and dismissing as inadequate the assurances given by the Anglo - Americans that their arms would not be used against Pakistan, he had urged the need to maintain a military balance in the sub continent, adding that “it follows that it would be necessary also to correspondingly augment Pakistan’s military strength…”.

Emphasizing the customary charges of Indian arrogance and aggressiveness, Bhutto repeated that the new dangers facing Pakistan required reappraised of her foreign policy and that it was for the West to ensure that the past relationship was not broken. Inviting Assembly members to suggest what Pakistan should do, he had explained that the Government “have not as yet been able to establish a clear position”. It is interesting to find that in the end Bhutto did not pursue any of these points, and on the question of more arms aid for Pakistan actually modified his earlier position.

3. There is in the last speech no repetition of the need for a reappraisal of foreign policy, and this too despite the almost unanimous advocacy of a non-aligned international policy as the correct one for Pakistan. One of the most notable features of the debate was this support for non-alignment. One of the most notable features of the debate was this support for non-alignment. Speakers developed the argument for an independent foreign policy not merely in the context of criticizing the West but on general grounds also. Quite a number also approved of the idea of alliances with China, urging that it should be concluded forthwith if it was not already achieved. Support for close links with China is part of the current fashion, and allowance has to be made for the tendency of Pakistani orators to try and outdo each other in expressing the same opinion. But the demand for a policy of non-alignment expresses a more widespread tendency, which has been encouraged by the interest evoked in certain Afro-Asian countries by indications of a “new look” in Pakistani policy. However, it still lacks solid foundation based on a genuine urge as it is considered primarily as a new weapon in the fight against India, and not so much as a desirable policy in itself.

4. It is needless to point out that the regime is neither sincere nor capable of effecting a revolutionary change in policy. This is well brought out by Bhutto’s ignoring all the opportunities presented by the Opposition speakers to develop his arguments about a reappraisal; he said nothing, not only about non-alignment but about the reshaping of foreign policy. On the contrary, for all his criticisms of the West, and all the Opposition’s praise of non-alignment, Bhutto himself again kept the line open to the Western Powers. He adopted the tone of speaking more in sorrow than in anger and seemed almost to be pleading that Pakistan would like to remain a Western ally if only the west would let her. This contrasts not only with the constant refrain from Opposition speakers about non-alignment, but also with passing threats Bhutto himself has made in a number of earlier speeches that Pakistan might have to reconsider her Western alliances. The milder tone that he adopted is presumably in response to the Western representations on his opening speech and the consequent calmer reassessment of stark realities by the regime itself.

5. Similarly, Bhutto neither clarified nor repeated the reference made in his opening speech to “the largest State in Asia” becoming involved in the event of any Indian attack. Apart from the diplomatic enquiries of the Western envoys, Bhutto had been specifically asked to explain his reference by at least two Opposition members, but all he said was that “we have an assurance from our friends... that in the event of aggression they will come to our assistance. We have an assurance also from other countries that if India commits aggression against us, it will not only be against us, but against them also”. This phraseology seems to have been deliberately chosen to seem consistent with the private assurance given to the Western envoys that there was no understanding or agreement with China, while being sufficiently suggestive to keep the world guessing about the existence of such an understanding, and, incidentally, keeping up the impression created among the Pakistani public that Pakistan does not stand alone, that she has now the support of many countries, including “the largest State in Asia”. It is also significant that the summary of highlights of Bhutto’s speech, with which the official Press hand out giving the text of speech begins, states that “The Minister told the National Assembly that Pakistan had assurances from countries belonging both to the West and East they would come to the assistance of Pakistan in the case of Indian aggression”.

6. It is also interesting to note Bhutto’s references to India. While emphasizing that India was hostile, arrogant and aggressive and therefore an increasing danger particularly because of arms aid from the West, Bhutto himself failed to avoid the inconsistency against which he warned Opposition Members, namely, of describing India as being in decay; time and again when he referred to India, he spoke of the Indian situation being comparable with the China of Chiang Kai Shek, of war hysteria, of unbearable economic burdens, of demoralization, corruption, and external isolation. This is the current Pakistani propaganda line abroad, but it also raises hopes in the public at home that India was disintegrating; it is illustrative of the wishful thinking which is never far behind the more “realistic appraisal” of the foreign policy experts in Pakistan.

7. It is possible that Bhutto might have said more if he had not been ill, but the comparative restraint is more likely to be due to the Western representations. Till now Pakistanis have been counting on the Western Powers’ resentment of India’s non-alignment policy to make active their sympathy for Pakistan in regard to Kashmir. The realization that that resentment is no longer so compelling as the Western Powers’ interest in buttressing the sub-continent against China has left the Pakistanis searching for new ways to put pressure on us. The collusion with the Chinese is explicable partly as an effort not only to put pressure directly on us but also to blackmail the West into urging us to make greater concessions. The question is how far the Pakistanis are prepared to go in this collusion with Chinese. The dependence on Western assistance still undoubtedly holds them back; this accounts for the more restrained tone of Bhutto’s concluding speech. It is interesting to see that he has even gone so far as to deny that he was trying to extract more arms from the west: “We do not say...Pakistan should be receiving proportionate arms... We said it is for the west to realize that the military balance is being upset and...that something should be done to maintain this military balance”. Instead he indulges in an emotional peroration about how faithful a friend Pakistan has been and how much she had risked for the sake of the west; about the gratitude she feels for past help and the hope she cherishes for building up a better life etc.

8. While Bhutto has managed to avoid giving a forthright answer to the queries raised in the National Assembly and elsewhere as to whether there is any military understanding between Pakistan and China, so far as we are concerned we can only proceed on the basis that the two Governments are united in their hostility to India and are most likely to act in concert against us. Marshal Chen Yi has lost no time in deliberately fostering the impression of Sino-Pak identity of interests and mutual concern, by his remarks at the U.A.R. National Day reception in Peking. In this context it is interesting to note the comment in Jang, the leading Urdu paper here, which remarked editorially today that really there was no need for China and Pakistan to have a military alliance as the two countries “think alike”. It is indeed extraordinary how quickly the Pakistani Press and even the Foreign Minister are absorbing Chinese propagandist techniques and phraseology. Bhutto, for example, speaks of the solution of the Pak-Iranian border problem as having been “left over by history”. Again, the references to Afghanistan remind one of the language used by the Chinese in their earlier notes to us.

9. Since writing the above, I have received your Top Secret letter No. 1449/FS/T/63 of July 24, 1963. I fully appreciate the prompt diplomatic action that you have taken to lay bare Sino-Pak collusion and the threat that it poses to our security.

With kind regards,

Yours sincerely

G. Parthasarathi

Statement in the Lok Sabha by Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru on the India–Pakistan Talks on Kashmir and other related matters.

New Delhi, August 13, 1963.

These talks originated from a joint statement which the President of Pakistan and I issued on November 29, 1962, announcing our agreement to make a renewed effort to resolve the outstanding differences between India and Pakistan on Kashmir and other related matters, so as to enable the two countries to live side by side in peace and friendship. On the 30th November I made a statement in the House in regard to this joint statement and referred to the discussions which I had with Mr. Duncan Sandys, Minister for Commonwealth Relations of the U.K. and Mr. Averell Harriman, Assistant Secretary of State of the United States.

In pursuance of the joint statement our delegation led by Sardar Swaran Singh, Minister of Railways, participated in six rounds of talks. In all these six talks, spread over nearly five months, Pakistan showed no readiness to discuss anything apart from Kashmir.

As I have stated on many occasions previously, it has always been, and continues to be, India’s policy to seek friendly and cooperative relations with Pakistan. The lack of such friendly and cooperative relations between the two countries would not only be unfortunate but would do violence to the long standing ties of geography, history and culture between the two countries. We are convinced that the only proper course for the two countries to adopt is to develop cooperative and friendly relations and live as good neighbours. In the larger interests of the two countries, we have been anxious to bring about a settlement of all Indo-Pakistan differences, including Kashmir, on a rational and realistic basis. It was in this spirit that we agreed to have joint talks but, as the House is aware, in spite of every effort made by Sardar Swaran Singh to arrive at an equitable and honourable settlement, these talks ended in failure.

From the very beginning, the Pakistan Government took various steps which came in the way of a settlement. On the eve of the first round of talks in Rawalpindi, Pakistan announced its so-called “agreement in principle” with China on Kashmir’s border with Sinkiang. The timing of this statement was apparently intended to provoke India to refuse to start the talks the next morning. We felt that this was a bad augury for the future of the talks. Nevertheless, because of our earnest desire to arrive at some settlement, we decided to continue with the talks.

During the first plenary meeting, the Pakistan representative expressed his disinclination to discuss any of the Indo-Pakistan differences other than the Kashmir question which, he insisted, must be settled first. Sardar Swaran Singh in his opening speech listed various subjects which required to be discussed. But Mr. Bhutto insisted on confining himself to Kashmir only. Even on Kashmir, because of Pakistan's insistence, considerable time was spent in friendly but futile discussions on the old idea of plebiscite which, chiefly because of Pakistan's own acts of obstruction and non-implementation of the U.N. Commission's resolutions, had already proved to be impracticable, particularly in the light of irreversibly changed conditions in the last fifteen years.

This was followed by the signing of the Sino-Pakistan agreement under which Pakistan gave away as much as about two thousand square miles of our territory to China. The fact that this was done in the course of our talks indicated how little importance Pakistan attached to our talks. It was extraordinary that while these talks were taking place, Pakistan was busy handing over a large part of our territory to China which had invaded our country. The object apparently was to present us with a fait accompli in one part of our territory of Jammu and Kashmir, while keeping her hands free to negotiate for the remaining part of the State. We might have been justified in not proceeding with the talks at this stage. Nevertheless, we proceeded with them after recording our strong protest.

The Rawalpindi talks, despite Pakistan's preliminary agreement with China, had ended with the leaders of the two delegations issuing appeal for moderation in mutual criticism. The joint appeal had hardly been made by the leaders of the two delegations in December when Pakistan launched an unprecedented campaign of vilification against India not only in Pakistan, but also in the capitals of Europe through their responsible officers. Thus, it appeared clear from the beginning that Pakistan was interested not so much in a settlement of outstanding differences or even of the Kashmir problem, but only in making political capital out of the situation created by Chinese aggression against India.

When the Pakistan Delegation shifted from a futile discussion of plebiscite to the consideration of a possible political settlement, they began to put forward astonishing proposals. Pakistan claimed the catchment areas and the water sheds of the three Western rivers, the Chenab, the Jhelum and the Indus, in Jammu and Kashmir, on the ground that these rivers had been allotted to Pakistan under the Indus Water Treaty. Our delegation pointed out that the Indus Waters Treaty protected Pakistan's interests fully and gave her no ground to claim any territory in Jammu and Kashmir on the basis of the use and development of waters. If every lower riparian claimed the territory of the upper riparian on the pretext of its water requirements, the maps of many countries in the world would have to be drastically revised. By that argument, the lower riparian might even claim Tibet because the Indus and the Brahmaputra start in Tibet. No less absurd was another of Pakistan's claims to Jammu and Kashmir, namely, that they must have the State to protect their Grand Trunk Road and their railway line, the security of which, our delegation was told, was essential to ensure, what Pakistan called, its “defence in depth”. Finally, Pakistan claimed Kashmir on the basis of its Muslim majority. This was a vicious communal approach repugnant to the entire spirit animating our national struggle for independence, and contrary to our Constitution and to our whole attitude to the problem of relationship between the State and the individual.

Pakistan’s objective was obviously not a rational and realistic solution of the problem. They were just out to claim the entire State of Jammu and Kashmir, leaving to India, as it happened, in a forgotten moment of generosity, an insignificant area in the extreme south, roughly coinciding with the district of Kathua. Even more astonishing was the offer obviously induced by their awareness of India’s need for the defence of Ladakh against China, that Pakistan would be willing to agree to an interim arrangement in the Valley for a period of six months or a year, to enable India to deal with the Chinese. All that this could mean was that India might continue to commit its men and resources for the defence of Ladakh against the Chinese threat, but that once its effort and sacrifices had liberated Ladakh, India should abandon the State in favour of Pakistan. Another proposal was the so-called internationalization of the Valley, again for a period of six months, followed by some method of ascertaining the wishes of the people. This was the old and discarded idea of a plebiscite, without Pakistan having to implement the conditions laid down in the UNCIP Resolutions.

Faced with this deadlock, when a breakdown of the talks seemed inevitable on the last day, our delegation again offered a No - War agreement together with a practical and immediate disengagement of troops, thus hoping to reassure our neighbour that our efforts to strengthen our defence against the Chinese aggression constituted no threat to Pakistan. A No - War agreement, we said, could include a specific undertaking that the two countries should continue to seek peaceful solutions of the problem, because we did not want the problem frozen. Such an agreement could be registered with the United Nations to give it an international backing. Pakistan rejected this offer. Their delegation also refused to agree to remit the matter to the two Governments for a review and for considering other appropriate steps towards a peaceful settlement. Thus, Pakistan achieved what it had aimed at from the very beginning, that is, a non settlement and a deadlock on everything that should have been covered by the phrase “Kashmir and other related matters”. This is where the Ministerial level talks with Pakistan ended.

In the early part of May, Mr. Dean Rusk, U.S. Secretary of State, and Mr. Duncan Sandys paid a visit to India, Delhi. In the course of discussions, the question of Kashmir came up again. We assured them of our earnest desire to have a settlement provided this was fair and equitable. As an earnest of this desire of ours, we said that we would be prepared to have the good offices of a mutually accepted personality, even though previously we had declined a similar proposal. Pakistan, however, continued to make quite impossible demands. In the first week of June, the President of Pakistan said at Sargodha that no useful purpose would be served by the adoption of such procedure. Other Pakistan spokesmen have been suggesting impossible terms of reference. They wanted a time limit, suspension of arms supply to India during this period, etc.

We used to be told by many friends, even by leaders in Pakistan, that a settlement of the Kashmir issue was essential in the interest of joint defence of the two countries. At one time, Pakistan made a grievance of the fact that while she was offering joint defence to us, we were not willing to accept it. That the proposal of joint defence was no more than propaganda stunt, has now been made perfectly clear by the statements of Pakistan leaders. They have publicly declared that even if the Kashmir issue was settled amicably, Pakistan will not go either to the defence of India against China or change her friendly relations with Peking. On July 17th last, Mr. Bhutto is reported to have said in the Pakistan National Assembly that an “attack from India on Pakistan today is no longer confined to the security and territorial integrity of Pakistan”, but “involves the territorial integrity and security of the largest State in Asia”. He also said that if India were to turn her guns against Pakistan, the latter would not be alone in that conflict. He was obviously referring to China. The fact that India has no intention whatever of threatening the security of Pakistan or of turning any guns towards her, was ignored and the repeated offers of a No - War pact were forgotten. Pakistan today has only one object, and that is to malign India and to damage us in every way. They do not want to see us strong enough to stand up to China. They would like us to remain weak and helpless against the Chinese threat. They do not like to be told that the arms aid to India has nothing to do with Kashmir.

We have made it clear that while we are, and shall continue to be, anxious as ever on a settlement of our problems with Pakistan, based on rational and realistic considerations, there is no question of our considering any proposal for internationalizing or division of the Valley, or joint control of Kashmir, and the like. If and when a settlement is arrived at, it must obviously be a peaceful one, not affecting the stability and progress already achieved, and must strengthen the friendship between the peoples of India and Pakistan; without this, no settlement has any meaning.

During the talks, India not only exercised great patience and restraint, but also offered generous concessions, though in vain, in the hope of winning Pakistan's friendship and opening a new chapter of fruitful cooperation between the two countries. While we continue to cherish this hope, there is little possibility of a settlement so long as Pakistan persists in its irrational animus against India. The concessions which we offered to Pakistan are no longer open, and they must be treated as withdrawn. We do not wish our generosity and sincere desire for friendly relations with our neighbour to be treated by its Government as a jumping off ground for further claims. While the break in the talks is a matter of deep regret, we have to accept the facts, and we must wait for a more opportune moment for a settlement of all our differences with Pakistan.

0397. Extract from the Record of Conversation between the British Foreign Secretary and the Foreign Minister of Pakistan.

Mr. Bhutto, who was accompanied by Mr. Agha Hilaly, the High Commissioner for Pakistan, called on me on October 16 at the Foreign Office and after an exchange of courtesies in the course of which Mr. Bhutto enquired about the health of the Prime Minister, I asked about the Present state of Pakistan’s relations with China. Mr. Bhutto explained that Pakistan had recently concluded a Border Agreement, a Civil Aviation Agreement and a Barter Trade Agreement with China. However, the policies pursued by Pakistan over the past fifteen years had demonstrated that Pakistan had no illusions about Communism and Pakistan was not now closing her eyes to the threat posed by China. Nevertheless it was important for Pakistan to normalize her relations with China who was one of her neighbours. Mr. Bhutto added that the isolation of China benefited no one and that, while Pakistan intended to do nothing to stimulate Chinese ambitions, she hoped that the Chinese would in the course of time gradually become more moderate. I observed that, as a practical people, the Chinese must realize that neither America nor Russia would allow China to start a nuclear war and that the possibility existed that the two would make a common cause of this issue. However, the danger existed that China might decide to pursue an expansionist policy by conventional means.

2. I then asked whether Mr. Bhutto thought that the Chinese would again attack India. Mr. Bhutto replied that the Chinese attack had been provoked by the Indians who had not made any provision with the Chinese for the status quo on the border pending an agreement and had thus helped to create their own problem. They had moreover aggravated the position by moving up their troops in a manner which had provoked the Chinese to attack. Mr. Bhutto thought, however, that the Chinese would not attack again unless provoked and added that whether the Chinese attacked or not was in the hands of the Indians.

3. Mr. Bhutto went on to say that India in remaining non-aligned but at the same time receiving military aid from the West was having the best of both worlds. Her example provided a model which other countries might follow. He added that it was an illusion to think that India would become a bastion against Communism and a supporter of the West. India had recently begun to relax the measures taken during the emergency and it had been noted that the section of the Indian Communist Party which supported China was resuming its activities. Pakistan, on the other hand, had shown herself to be a good friend of the West and now required a quid pro quo to maintain military parity with India.

4. I said that an attack by India on Pakistan was inconceivable. Mr. Bhutto explained that fear of India was widespread among the people of Pakistan and that this factor could not be ignored. If there were no attack but if the military strength of India were increased disproportionately the Indians would then treat Pakistan as they have done certain of their smaller neighbours. It was necessary for Pakistan to speak to India from a position of strength.

5. I asked Mr. Bhutto about the prospects of reaching a settlement with India on the Kashmir problem and whether Pakistan had any plans to re-open the talks. Mr. Bhutto replied that he saw no prospect of a settlement being reached until Mr. Nehru was no longer in control of India. He went on to say that it was important to see that India took no further steps to integrate Kashmir with India, such as the recent changes of nomenclature adopted by India. There were signs that internal troubles might develop in Kashmir if such steps were taken. He pointed out that activity by India on the cease-fire line in Kashmir had increased recently and there were signs that India might intend to move in troops and clear Muslims from the border area. I asked if Pakistan intended to bring up the question of Kashmir at the United Nations. Mr. Bhutto, said that this would serve no useful purpose at this time. However, Pakistan was determined to maintain her military balance with India and would continue to press for justice.
Note Verbale from the Ministry of External Affairs of Pakistan to the High Commission of India in Pakistan regarding integration of Kashmir.

The Ministry of External Affairs of the Government of Pakistan presents its compliments to the High Commission for India in Pakistan and has the honour to say that, for some time past, the Government of India have been taking measures to evict the Muslim population residing on the Indian side of the Cease-Fire Line from their homes and push them into Pakistan. Protests to this effect were lodged with the Government of India on 19th November 1960, 10th December 1960, and 25th February 1961. The Government of India denied these allegations, but spasmodic eviction of the Muslim population was nevertheless continued ever since. By June 1961, some 2,000 Muslims from Indian-held Kashmir had crossed over to Azad Kashmir and by March 1963, another 503 families comprising 2787 members had been forced to flee their homes and take refuge in Azad Kashmir.

There are indications now that the Indian forces are planning to step up these operations. In particular, Indian armed patrols have been paying increasing attention to village CHAKNOT called CHANGNAR on the map – reference sq. 4295 MAP Sheet 43 J/5. On the 5th and 8th August, 1962, Indian armed patrols visited this village for the first time and ordered the villagers to sever their connection with the Azad Kashmir administration and to pay “arrears” of land revenue “due” for the last 15 years to India-held Kashmir authorities. This village, as also several other villages, have been administered by the Azad Kashmir authorities ever since the cease-fire in 1949, although they lie on the Indian side of the Cease Fire Line: the residents have been paying land revenue to the Azad Kashmir authorities and have been receiving Taccavi loans from those authorities ever since.

Latterly, Indian troops and police have stepped up their harassment of the people of Chaknot and adjoining hamlets, such as Malik Bela, Ring Pain and Ring Bela, and have resorts to killing of innocent people and criminal assaults on helpless women folk. Seven families, consisting of 44 people had to leave their homes in Ring Bela on account of such atrocities and moved into Azad Kashmir on 8th August 1963. The Government of Pakistan protested to the Indian High Commissioner on 2nd October 1963, against the Ring Bela outrage.

It now appears that the Indian authorities are planning to occupy village Chaknot. A mule track has been completed from Ring Pain to Long Ride which overlooks village Chaknot and the Indian authorities in the process of establishing an armed post on this Ridge, preparatory to moving their troops.
It will be recalled that on October 3, Bakshi Ghulam Mohammad, the then “Premier” of Indian held Kashmir stated that “a directive had been issued (by the Government of India) to bring Kashmir closer to the rest of India”. He added that “as a first step” it had been decided to replace the “Sadr-i-Riyaset” by a “Governor” and the “Prime Minister” of the State by a “Chief Minister” as part of a decision to integrate India-held Kashmir fully into the Indian Union and bring it in line with other Indian States.

The recent stepping up of the activities of Indian troops to clear the Cease fire Line of the Muslim population and to take over Chaknot is clearly part of this same design to “integrate” India-held Kashmir with the Indian Union. This action, as also other steps taken by India to alter radically the status of the State of Jammu and Kashmir and integrate India-held Kashmir with the Indian Union are being taken in defiance of the United Nations’ resolution on Cease fire and the disposition of the State by a free plebiscite, to which India is party.

The Government of Pakistan strongly protest against these moves of the Government of India to change the status quo in respect of the State of Jammu and Kashmir.

Furthermore, the Government of Pakistan trust the Indian Government will desist from proceeding with plans which clearly aim at a forcible seizure of Chaknot. Should, however, the Government of India try to go forward with such plans, the Azad Kashmir forces would be compelled to take whatever steps may be necessary to defend themselves and maintain the status quo.

The Ministry of External Affairs avails itself of this opportunity to renew to the High Commission of India in Pakistan the assurances of its highest consideration.

KASHMIR

In their first talk Mr. Bhutto informed the Secretary of State that the Pakistan Government felt obliged to send their troops across the cease-fire line to protect the villages which they had administered for many years, but which India had now decided to occupy with her troops.

2. The Secretary of State urged Mr. Bhutto to refrain from doing anything which would put Pakistan legally in the wrong and would make it difficult for her friends to defend her action.

3. In a talk just before Mr. Bhutto left London, he informed the Secretary of State that he had thought over his advice, with which he agreed, and had telegraphed to President Ayub urging great caution.

0400. Note Verbale from the Ministry of External Affairs to the Pakistan High Commission in India refuting Pakistani allegations of forcible occupation of Chaknot and eviction of Muslim population.

New Delhi, October 25, 1963.

The Ministry of External Affairs, Government of India, presents its compliments to the High Commission for Pakistan and has the honour to refer to the note of the Ministry of External Affairs, Government of Pakistan, dated October 16, 1963 about the alleged incidents at village Chaknot on the Indian side of the ceasefire line.

The Pakistan Government admits that the Government of India had denied certain allegations made by the Pakistan Government in para 1 of its note under reference, but goes on to allege that there has been spasmodic
The eviction of the Muslim population since 1961. The Government of India have no hesitation in saying that this fresh allegation is just as false and groundless as the previous allegations made by the Government of Pakistan. On the contrary over the past many years, tormented by oppression and hunger, refugees from that part of Jammu and Kashmir which continues to groan under the heel of Pakistan’s unlawful occupation, have been seeking security and opportunities for honourable living and employment in the area directly administered by the Jammu and Kashmir Government. These facts have been stated, time and again, on the floor of the Security Council by India’s representatives and are widely known to all those who are interested in facts rather than in propaganda.

In the context of these false and unfounded allegations by Pakistan of forcible eviction of Muslims, the Ministry is constrained to remind the Government of Pakistan of the discussion in Calcutta between the Foreign Minister of Pakistan Mr. Bhutto, and then Indian Railway Minister, Sardar Swaran Singh, on Kashmir and other related matters. The Government of India wants it placed on record that the Foreign Minister of Pakistan admitted in these discussions in Calcutta the Indian delegation’s charge that all the Hindus from the entire area in Kashmir in the forcible and unlawful occupation of Pakistan had migrated to India and there was not a single Hindu family now left in this area. With this as Pakistan’s record of treatment of minorities, the Government of India cannot but be surprised that the Government of Pakistan should, today, come forward and try to make out a case about the “spasmodic eviction” of Muslims from Kashmir, when the Muslims are a proud majority in the area. The Government of India firmly repudiate and deny the charge falsely leveled against them in para 1 of the Pakistan Government’s note in question.

There is no truth whatever even in the statements made by the Pakistan Government in para 2 of its note that the Indian forces have been planning to step up the eviction of Muslims. All the allegations regarding the village Chaknot detailed in the note are malicious and completely lacking in substance. It is significant that while some of the incidents, according to the Pakistan Government, are reported to have taken place on 5th and 8th August, 1962, the Pakistan Government admits, this village, as also all other villages named in the note, lie on the Indian side of the Cease-Fire Line. It is, therefore, meaningless to suggest that the Indian authorities were planning to “occupy” Chaknot. The assertions in the note that this and other villages are administered by the puppet authorities of the Pakistan Government in this area only prove that, in violation of the Cease-Fire Agreement, the Government of Pakistan is trying to spread out its unlawful tentacles across the Cease-Fire Line and indulge in subversive activities, thus disturbing the peace and tranquility of villages in these areas.
There is no truth in the assertion made in the note under reference, that the Indian authorities have set up an armed post in or near Chaknot of that Indian troops have increased their activities in this area. It is open to the Government of Pakistan to take up this matter with UN Observers, who are authorized to ascertain the facts by an enquiry on the spot. As the Pakistan move is motivated by their usual violent prejudices and animus against India, in order to create an atmosphere of crisis for their own political ends, the Government of India are not surprised that Pakistan troops are, on the contrary, being deployed in the Chaknot area on the Pakistan side of the Cease Fire Line, as well as in the vicinity of Mirpur and Tithwal. Pakistan aircraft also have been seen flying over these areas, these last several days. The Government of India wish it to be known that all these activities have been brought to the notice of the Chief Military Observer who will doubtless be able to ascertain the facts.

In paragraph 4 of the note, the Pakistan Government has referred to a certain statement of Bakshi Ghulam Mohammad, who was till recently the duly elected Premier of the State of Jammu and Kashmir. The Government of India see nothing wrong in this statement. Legally and constitutionally, Bakshi Ghulam Mohammad was completely entitled to say what he did, both, under the Jammu and Kashmir Constitution and under various provisions of the Constitution of India. Since Pakistan has no democratic Constitution, it is perhaps understandable that its Government should not be able to appreciate the normal functioning of democracy in any other country. As is well known, Jammu and Kashmir is a constituent state of the Indian Union and, therefore, Indian Union territory. Pakistan has no locus standi in this territory, having occupied a part of the territory by aggression. As stated, time and again, by India’s representatives in the Security Council, the legal and constitutional position of Jammu Kashmir as part of the Indian Union is the basis of the U.N. Commission resolutions, as well as the assurances given to the Prime Minister of India by the Chairman of the Commission. None of these resolutions has been implemented by the Government of Pakistan, and its aggression, now in collusion with the aggression of China, continuous in Jammu and Kashmir. By handing over about 2,000 square miles of the territory of the Indian Union territory of Jammu and Kashmir to China, Pakistan has deliberately and unilaterally destroyed all possibilities of implementing the U.N. Commission resolutions on Jammu and Kashmir. The Government of India are surprised that, despite this, the Pakistan Government’s note still refers to the “disposition of the State by a free plebiscite” in accordance with the United Nations resolutions. For this situation, the Government of Pakistan have to thank nobody but themselves.

In the penultimate paragraph of their note, the Government of Pakistan has held out a threat of force by the so called Azad Kashmir forces which, according to its own statement to the U.N. Commission, are under the operational control of the Pakistan Army. The Government of India deeply regret this threat from Pakistan, and they are constrained to say that they will naturally be compelled to exercise their right of self defence, should the Government of Pakistan embark upon such an irresponsible and dangerous course.

The Ministry of external Affairs avails itself of this opportunity to renew to the High Commission for Pakistan the assurances of its highest consideration.

0401. Note Verbale from the Ministry of External Affairs of the Government of Pakistan to the Indian High Commission in Pakistan asking for the winding up of the office of the Assistant High Commissioner of India in Rajshahi.

No. PIC-16/9/63

The Ministry of External Affairs presents its compliments to the High Commission for India and has the honour to state that the Government of Pakistan is constrained to request that the Office of the Assistant High Commissioner for India in Rajshahi completely wind up its affairs and cease to function by 15th December, 1963. The Government of Pakistan has been forced to take this decision for the following reasons:

The Assistant High Commission for India in Rajshahi was established in 1953 as a Sub-Mission; it was meant to function primarily as a passport and visa office. From its very inception, however, it has operated more as a centre of espionage, subversion and activities prejudicial to the security of Pakistan, than as a visa office or even as a normal diplomatic office.

The Assistant High Commission has also been continuously and persistently used as a centre for the dissemination of anti-Pakistan propaganda, the circulation of false allegations against the Government of Pakistan and concocted stories of imaginary occurrences. This has been pointed out to the High Commission for India on several occasions.
As recently as November 9, 1963, instances of dissemination of objectionable information by Rajshahi Office were furnished to the High Commission in this Ministry’s letter No. P(I)-17/6/60.

The Government of East Pakistan also, has on several occasions drawn the attention of the Assistant High Commissioner to the objectionable activities of that Mission, but these representations were completely ignored. At the request of the Government of East Pakistan, therefore, Mr. A.S. Shaikh a Director in this Ministry, was compelled to take up this matter with the Deputy High Commissioner for India in Karachi, Mr. V.C.V. Raghavan.

It is indeed a matter of regret that none of such warnings has been heeded. On the other hand, the tempo of the aforesaid objectionable activities on the part of the Rajshahi office has of late increased to such an extent that they have incensed the people of the area. The Rajshahi office has thus become a cause of further tension between the two countries.

The Government of Pakistan trusts that the Government of India appreciates the need for putting an end to objectionable activities of its Missions in Pakistan and will understand that the decision conveyed in this Note is motivated as much by a desire, on the part of the Government of Pakistan, to bring about an atmosphere conducive to the maintenance and promotion of good neighbourly relations, as by its resolve to root out subversion from its soil.

The Ministry of External Affairs avails itself of this opportunity to renew to the High Commission for India in Pakistan the assurances of its highest consideration.

0402. Note Verbale from the High Commission for India in Pakistan to the Ministry of External Affairs of the Government of Pakistan regarding winding up of the Office of the Assistant High Commissioner in Rajshahi in East Pakistan.

The High Commission for India in Pakistan presents its compliments to the Ministry of External Affairs of the Government of Pakistan and with reference to their Note No. PIC-16/9/63 dated November 27, 1963, demanding the closure of the office of the Assistant High Commissioner in Rajshahi, has the honour to state that the Government of India categorically repudiate as totally baseless the allegations advanced to justify the demand, which they earnestly hope that the Government of Pakistan will withdraw in the interest of amicable relations between the two countries.

The Government of India are astonished that on the basis of general and unsubstantiated charges, the Government of Pakistan should, without justification, take such an extreme step whose serious repercussions on Indo-Pakistan relations they are surely aware of. The Ministry’s Note of November 27 ostensibly bases the demand for closure on the following allegations:

(a) That the Rajasthani Office has been “a centre of espionage, subversion and activities prejudicial to the security of Pakistan” since its inception to 1953. The Government of India deny and protest against such unfounded charges. At no time has any member of their Mission in Rajshahi taken part in activities such as have been alleged. Nor has that office at any time operated as a centre of espionage and subversion. The Government of India find it incredible that the Government of Pakistan should now come forward with serious charges concerning the Mission’s work, after a lapse of ten years, without ever raising the matter during that period.

(b) That the Office has also been “a centre for the dissemination of anti Pakistan propaganda, the circulation of false allegations against the Government of Pakistan and concocted stories of imaginary occurrences”. The Note states that this has been pointed out several times to the Government of India and tries to suggest that the latest instance was on November 9, 1963. In fact, the Ministry’s letter of November 9 was in response to a specific request made by the High Commission for example of the material to which the Ministry had objected while leveling another general and unsubstantiated accusation... against the press releases and handouts of the High Commission. It is the first instance of such a complaint to the High Commission in respect of the Rajshahi Office and appears to be the only one, rather than the latest in a series, as the Ministry's Note seeks to represent it. In that Note there was no suggestion at all that the Government of Pakistan took such a serious view of the activities of the Mission at Rajshahi as a whole as to require its closure.

The Ministry further alleges that the attention of the Assistant High Commissioner in Rajshahi has been drawn, on several occasions, to the objectionable activities of the Rajshahi Mission but that these representa tions were ignored. The Government of India are not aware of any such representations to the Assistant High Commissioner, and note that the Ministry do not specify a single one. They are, moreover, surprised that the discussions between Mr. A.A. Shaikh and Shri V.C. Vijaya Raghavan should be referred to as though they were the culmination of a series of fruitless complaints. It will be recalled that those discussions were confined to the question of communications between the Assistant High Commissioner and the local authorities. The Pakistan Government's suggestions were that the Assistant High Commissioner should not even correspond with the District officials but should leave it to the Deputy High Commissioner for India in Dacca to take up issues directly with the East Pakistan Government. Again, there was not the slightest indication that the Government of Pakistan objected to any other aspect of the functioning of the Rajshahi Mission.

The High Commission can recall only one other occasion when the workings of the Rajshahi Mission have been referred to by the Government of Pakistan.
This was in 1962, when the Assistant High Commissioner's efforts to draw the attention of the district authorities to the violent danger to which the Hindu minority in the area was exposed, and to calm the resulting panic, were misrepresented as encouragement of migration to India. These allegations against the office in Rajshahi were immediately repudiated and were never again referred to by the Government of Pakistan.

In view of the facts stated above, the Government of India must point out that there can be no justification for the allegations, much less the demand for closure, contained in the Ministry's Note of November 27. If the Pakistan Government had any genuine complaints about the activities of the Government of India's officers in Rajshahi, it was open to them to take these up with the Government of India and ask for whatever remedial action they considered necessary. Instead, the Government of Pakistan have, for the second time in recent weeks, made abrupt and peremptory demands for the cessation of the normal activities of India Missions in Pakistan, while adding general accusations which do not bear the least scrutiny.
The Government of India find it as difficult to understand the motivation for these demands as to appreciate the arguments that they are designed to bring about “an atmosphere congenial to the maintenance and promotion of good neighbourly relations”. It must be evident to the Government of Pakistan that they have precisely the opposite effect. The Office of the Assistant High Commissioner for India in Rajshahi, like the office of the Assistant High Commissioner for Pakistan in Shillong was established to function strictly on the basis of reciprocity to serve the interest of the peoples of both countries. The Government of Pakistan will appreciate that if they insist on closing the office of Rajshahi, then, in accordance with the basis of reciprocity, the Government of India will be constrained to withdraw their consent to the continuation of the office in Shillong, and Pakistan’s action will only have succeeded in embittering feelings as well as inconveniencing peoples in both countries.

The Government of India are deeply convinced of the need to avoid any deterioration in relations between the two countries, and are determined to persevere in trying to improve those relations. They accordingly hope that the Government of Pakistan will reconsider the demand for the closure of the Office of the Assistant High Commissioner for India in Rajshahi and thereby cooperate in reducing tensions.

The High Commission of India takes this opportunity to renew to the Ministry of External Affairs of the Government of Pakistan the assurances of its highest consideration.

POLITICAL RELATIONS: 1955-1969

0403. Note Verbale of the Ministry of External Affairs of the Government of Pakistan to the High Commission for India in Pakistan regarding the closure of the Office of the Assistant High Commissioner in Rajshahi.

No. PIC – 16/9/63.

The Ministry of External Affairs presents its compliments to the High Commission for India and with reference to their Note dated 4th December, 1963 regarding the closure of the office of the Assistant High Commissioner for India in Rajshahi, have the honour to state that the afore-mentioned Note has been carefully considered.

2. The Ministry wish to reiterate the fact that the Government of Pakistan have in their possession sufficient evidence to justify the conclusion that the Assistant High Commission for India in Rajshahi was being used as a centre of espionage and subversion and for dissemination of anti Pakistan propaganda. The Government of Pakistan were, therefore, left with no alternative but to ask for the closure of that office. The decision of the Government of Pakistan to request the Government of India to close down their Assistant High Commission at Rajshahi, was taken after all its aspects had been given a most careful consideration.

3. The Government of Pakistan have always hoped that the Government of India’s actions would be directed towards promotion of good neighbourly relations with Pakistan and that they would avoid any action which would lead to a deterioration in the relations between the two countries. Unfortunately however, a number of recent actions of the Government of India have only contributed to the aggravation of tension between the two countries. It is earnestly hoped that the Government of India will appreciate the need for improving relations with Pakistan and help create an atmosphere conducive to the promotion of good neighbourly relations between the two countries.

4. The Ministry of External Affairs avails itself of this opportunity to renew to the High Commission for India the assurances of its highest consideration.

The High Commission for India in Pakistan,
Karachi.
My dear Yazdi,

The Soviet Ambassador came to see me yesterday for one of “our periodic consultations”, as he likes to refer to his talks with me. As I have told you before, he has good sources of information and is also acute in political analysis.

2. The Ambassador first spoke of the current visit of President Ayub to Ceylon, whose primary purpose, he said, was to forge a “united front” against India. Ayub would try to capitalize on such grievances as Ceylon might have against India and also raise the bogey of Indian rearmament being a threat to her neighbours. The Ambassador said that a brief had been prepared for Ayub which emphasized three points: (a) Pakistan should suggest to Ceylon mutual consultation in defence matters and offer military assistance. Pakistan could offer to train Ceylonese officers in her military establishments. Pakistan could also offer to give some military equipment from the stocks which she had built up with American aid. (b) Pakistan should urge the need for closer collaboration between China, Ceylon and Pakistan in the diplomatic and economic fields. (c) Pakistan should make a major effort to persuade the Ceylonese that an Afro-Asian Conference was urgently necessary and a meeting of non aligned powers would not meet the needs of the situation. In this respect, familiar arguments would be used to show that India was no longer neutral or non aligned, whereas, in the case of Pakistan, the old arguments that she was committed to the pacts were no longer valid.

3. I told the Ambassador that we were fully aware of Pakistani efforts to intrigue with our neighbours to our detriment. There were certain mischievous elements in Ceylon, but by and large we were confident that Mrs. Bandaranaike, the Governor General and large sections of public opinion were in rapport with our basic policy and would not fall a prey to such intrigues.

4. The Ambassador then referred to Chou En lai’s visit to U.A.R. He expected Chou En lai to make a major effort to convince President Nasser that Pakistan’s policies had changed, that she was no longer a Western stooge.
and that she was anxious to improve relations with U.A.R. Chou en lai would argue that Pakistan was no less non aligned than India was today. Chou En lai would also urge that in this changing situation in Afro Asia, particularly in view of Indian rearmament with Western help, a meeting of so-called nonaligned Powers would be unrealistic and it would be more fruitful to call a second Bandung Conference. According to the Ambassador, Dehlavi was already engaged in making Pakistan more acceptable to President Nasser and he has been instructed to collaborate actively with Chou En lai during the latter's visit to Cairo. The Ambassador emphasized that Pakistan and China were actively coordinating their diplomatic moves in this region.

5. The Ambassador said that President Johnson handled Bhutto more firmly than Kennedy had done in the past. Bhutto's report on his Washington visit was given to Ayub only on the eve of the President's departure to Ceylon and the Ambassador had no information regarding its contents. But the Pakistanis seemed to have come to the conclusion lately that they could not expect U.S. to stop its arms aid to India or hope that any fresh deliveries of military equipment would be made to Pakistan to redress the balance. In view of this assessment and on the basis of certain discussions which Ambassador Raza has had in Peking, some steps were being taken for collaboration in the defence field between Pakistan and China. Primarily, this would involve the Chinese giving advice and assistance in raising and training guerilla units in Pakistan. As far as the Ambassador was aware, one group of Chinese military officers had paid a visit to Pakistan, mainly to advise on technical details concerning the organization of a guerilla force – the size of guerilla detachments, the nature of arms to be used, techniques of operation etc. According to the Ambassador, the Chinese were also prepared to help in the local manufacture of arms required for equipping the “partisans”.

6. We discussed these aspects and possibilities at some length. I told the Ambassador that Pakistan was working on two parallel lines: (a) pressuring her Western allies, particularly the U.S., with a view to curtailing arms aid to India and trying to force, with Western diplomatic Intervention, a settlement on Kashmir in her favour; (b) developing closer links with China, so that in certain favourable circumstances, she could put military pressure on us. Pakistan was also succeeding to an extent in giving an impression that her foreign policy was now changed and was more in line with the dominant Afro-Asian sentiment. But she would never succeed wholly because of the basic contradiction in her policy which is compounded of utter dependence on the West on the one hand, and a liaison with China on the other. She is succeeding to an extent today primarily because India is in genuine difficulties and she can exploit them, by sowing doubts about our non alignment. But we were confident that we could deal with her mischievous efforts. What concerned us, however, was that Sino-Pak collusion might extend to the military field.

With kind regards,

Yours sincerely

G. Parthasarathi

Foreign Secretary,

0405. Note Verbale of the High Commission for India in Pakistan to the Pakistan Ministry of External Affairs regarding closure of the Office of the Indian Assistant High Commissioner in Rajshahi.

The High Commission for India in Pakistan presents its compliments to the Ministry of External Affairs of the Government of Pakistan and has the honour to refer to their Note No. PIC/16/9/63 dated the 7th December, 1963, rejecting the Government of India’s request for the withdrawal by the Government of Pakistan of their demand for the closure of the Office of the Assistant High Commissioner for India in Rajshahi.

2. The Government of India deeply regret that their sincere efforts to try to persuade the Government of Pakistan to refrain from further damaging relations between the two countries have evoked no other response than a repetition of sweeping allegations of ‘espionage’ and “subversion” against the Office of the Indian Assistant High Commissioner in Rajshahi, for which there is absolutely no foundation in fact. They note that the Government of Pakistan are maintaining their demand for closure without substantiating any of their charges, without answering specifically any of the points raised in the High Commission’s note of 4th December 1963 and with regard for the need to halt the campaign against India which, in recent weeks, has been exceeding even past levels of intensity. Instead, the Government of Pakistan have seen fit to go beyond their allegations in respect of the Rajshahi Office and to accuse the Government of India as a whole of aggravating tension. This is, in fact, the reverse of the true position, and the Government of India are astonished that the Government of Pakistan should level such an unspecified and totally unjustified charge while themselves persisting in provoking tension.

The Government of India once again reject the charges leveled by Pakistan against them, and in particular against their Office in Rajshahi, as totally unfounded. Since the Government of Pakistan insist that their decision was taken “after all its aspects had been given a most careful consideration”, the Government of India can only conclude that it is the deliberate intention of the Government of Pakistan to restrict normal and friendly contacts between the people of the two countries and to heighten tension by leveling false and unsubstantiated charges against the activities of their entire mission in Rajshahi.

However, since the Government of Pakistan insist that the Office in Rajshahi should be closed, in spite of the earnest efforts of the Government of India to secure a reconsideration of this decision, arrangements are being made to wind up the Office. Despite the physical difficulties involved in arranging the closure of a Mission at short notice, the Government of India are making every effort to try and do so by December 15, 1963, on which date their Office in Rajshahi will cease to function.

The High Commission of India avails itself of the opportunity to renew to the Ministry of External Affairs the assurances of its highest consideration.

No.PID-7/30/62.

The Ministry of External Affairs presents its compliments to the High Commission for India in Pakistan and has the honour to state that the Ministry has given careful consideration to the statement of the Prime Minister of India of 27th November, 1963, in the Lok Sabha, in regard to certain changes in the “constitutional status” of the State of Jammu and Kashmir which the Government of India propose to enact or get adopted. According to Indian press reports, the Prime Minister of India, in reply to a question, asserted that no protest had been made by Pakistan to India in that connection.

2. The High Commission for India is aware that the Ministry of External Affairs of the Government of Pakistan did, in fact, make a strong protest in its Note of 16th October 1963, to the High Commission in the following terms:

“It will be recalled that on October 3, Bakshi Ghulam Mohammad, the then “Premier” of Indian held Kashmir stated that “a directive had been issued (by the Government of India) to bring Kashmir closer to the rest of India.” He added that “as a first step”, it had been decided to replace the “Sadr-i-Riyasat” by a “Governor”, and the “Prime Minister” of the State by a “Chief Minister”, as part of a decision to integrate Indian held Kashmir fully into the Indian Union and bring it in line with other Indian States.

“The recent stepping up of the activities of Indian troops to clear the cease-fire line of the Muslim population and to take over Chaknot is clearly part of this same design to “integrate” Indian held Kashmir with the Indian Union. This action, as also other steps taken by India, to alter radically the status of the State of Jammu and Kashmir and integrate Indian held Kashmir with the Indian Union, are being taken in defiance of the United Nations’ Resolution on Cease fire and the disposition of the State by a free plebiscite, to which India is a party.

“The Government of Pakistan strongly protest against these moves of the Government of India to change the status quo in respect of the State of Jammu and Kashmir”.

3. In the light of this categorical protest against, inter alia, the unlawful decision of the Government of India to carry out further measures in order to alter the special status of the State of Jammu and Kashmir, the Ministry of External Affairs is constrained to express surprise at the Prime Minister of India’s denial that a protest had been lodged by Pakistan on this issue.

4. Not only did the Government of Pakistan protest strongly to the Government of India, it also expressed its grave concern to the Security Council of the United Nations in a letter addressed by the Permanent Representative of Pakistan (S/5437) on 9th October, 1963, to the President of the Council, against the reported Indian moves “to integrate” the disputed State “more fully into the Indian Union” as a gross breach of India’s commitments to the principles of the resolutions of the United Nations Commission and also of the Security Council, particularly those of 30 March, 1951 and 24 January, 1957.

5. The protest in the Note of the Ministry of External Affairs of 16 October, 1963, to the High Commission for India was in respect of the reported statement of Bakshi Ghulam Mohammed on 3rd October, 1963, referred to in paragraph 2 above of this Note. The statement of Indian Minister for Home Affairs, Mr.
Gulzarilal Nanda, in the Lok Sabha, on 27th November 1963, in answer to questions put to him by 19 members of the Indian Parliament, now makes it clear that the then puppet “Premier” was merely acting as the mouthpiece of the Government of India in their plan to “integrate” the state of Jammu and Kashmir with the Indian Union. Mr. Gulzarilal Nanda listed the following steps in the Government of India’s unfolding design:

(1) “An order of the President under article 370 of the Constitution was issued on the 25th September, 1963, applying to Jammu and Kashmir State entry 26 of the Concurrent List (List III) in the Seventh Schedule in respect of Legal and medical professions and other consequential provisions of the Constitution.

(2) “A proposal to apply to Jammu and Kashmir entry 24 of the Concurrent List, in so far as it relates to welfare of labour in the coal mining industry, is under consideration.

(3) “It has been decided that representatives of Jammu and Kashmir in the Lok Sabha should be chosen by direct election as in other States. Effect will be given to this after the termination of the present Emergency.

(4) “It has also been decided that the Sadr-i-Riyasat and Prime Minister of Jammu and Kashmir should be designated as Governor and Chief Minister respectively. Legislation to give effect to the proposal is expected to be taken up during the next session of the State Legislature.

(c) “Article 370 of the Constitution occurs in Part XXI of the Constitution which deals with temporary and transitional provisions. Since this Article was incorporated in the Constitution, many changes have been made which bring the State of Jammu and Kashmir in line with the rest of India. The State is fully integrated to the Union of India. Government are of opinion that they should not take any initiative now for the complete repeal of article 370. This will, no doubt be brought about by further changes in consultation with the Government and the Legislative Assembly of Jammu and Kashmir state. This process has continued in the last few years and may be allowed to continue in the same way.”

6. The above statement of the Indian Home Minister was in effect confirmed immediately afterwards by the Prime Minister of India in the Lok Sabha, as has been widely reported in the Indian press.

7. It is clear from the above official declaration that the Government of India is deliberately set on destroying the special status of Jammu and Kashmir as envisaged in the UNCIP resolutions of 13 August, 1948 and 5 January, 1949, by resorting to covert and devious tactics.

8. The Government of Pakistan has on a number of occasions in the past, made similar protests to the Government of India and to the Security Council of the United Nations against a whole series of breaches of faith committed by the Government of India in order to carry out its design of annexing the State of Jammu and Kashmir in flagrant disregard of the wishes of its people, by the use of military force.

9. The Security Council as well as the Government of Pakistan have repeatedly called upon the Government of India to respect the Security Council’s resolutions of 30 March, 1951 and 24 January, 1957 and to cease and desist from taking any action to determine the future shape and affiliation of the State except in accordance with the international agreement embodied in the United Nations Commission’s resolutions of 13 August, 1948 and January 1949. Under these resolutions, the final disposition of the State of Jammu and Kashmir must be made in accordance with the will of the people as expressed through the democratic method of a free and impartial plebiscite, conducted under the auspices of the United Nations.

10. The Government of India has, however, chosen to violate deliberately the findings and recommendations of the Security Council as well as to ignore the protests of the Government of Pakistan and to persist in a course of conduct which grossly violates the rules of international law governing the rights and duties of State.

11. The Government of Pakistan reaffirms its stand that whatever measures that the Government of India has taken or may take, whether constitutional, legislative, administrative or other, can have no legal force or effect so far as Pakistan or the United Nations are concerned, because they violate pre existing international legal obligations that India has accepted in the UNCIP resolutions in respect of the State of Jammu and Kashmir. These obligations cannot be negatived unilaterally by India through any device whatsoever, howsoever camouflaged.

12. The Government of Pakistan must again protest strongly to the Government of India against the unlawful measures designed to "integrate" the State of Jammu and Kashmir as announced or contemplated by the Indian Home Minister and the Prime Minister in their statements referred to in paragraphs 5 and 6 above.

13. The Ministry of External Affairs avails itself of this opportunity to renew to the High Commission for India the assurances of its highest consideration.

My dear Shankar,

Please refer to the Pakistan Government’s note No.PID 6/2/63 dated 2nd October, 1963, a copy of which had been sent to us by Ranganathan.

2. As you will recall, the allegations made in this note were repeated substantially in the Pakistan Government’s note of October 16, 1963, and in its letter dated October 9, 1963, to the President of the Security Council. The Pakistan note addressed to us was answered in our note dated October 25, 1963 which the Pakistan High Commission in Delhi returned to us after keeping it in its possession for several hours. The reply to the Pakistan Government’s letter to the President of the Security Council was sent by our Permanent Representative on November 12, 1963. Both our replies have been published in the Press.

3. This being the case, we do not consider it necessary to answer the Pakistan Government’s note under reference. The Foreign Office may, therefore, be informed that the subject matter of the note has already been dealt with by us in our two replies mentioned above.

With kindest regards,

Yours sincerely,

B.L. Sharma

First Secretary,
High Commission of India, Karachi.

No. P.V. 102(17)/63

The Ministry of External Affairs presents its compliments to the High Commission for Pakistan in India and has the honour to refer to the Government of Pakistan’s note No. PID/7/30/62 dated December 14, 1963.

2. The allegations made in the Pakistan note under reference were fully exposed as baseless by India’s Permanent Representative in the United Nations in his reply dated 12 November, 1963 (s/5454) to the Pakistan Permanent Representative’s letter dated 9 October, 1963 (s/5437).

3. The Ministry deeply regrets that the Government of Pakistan should have sent this note at all to the Government of India. The State of Jammu and Kashmir being an integral part of the Indian Union, there can be no question of integrating it “more fully” with the Indian Union. Any changes contemplated in the relations between the State and the Union Government would be in conformity with the law and constitution of India, and therefore a matter for India alone to decide. The note under reference is, under the circumstances, an unwarranted interference in the internal affairs of India, and the Ministry cannot but reject these unnecessary Pakistani protestations.

The Ministry of External Affairs avails itself of this opportunity to renew to the High Commission for Pakistan the assurances of its highest consideration.

SECRET

Note recorded by Officer on Special Duty in the Ministry of External Affairs, Government of India on his talks with the Deputy High Commissioner of Pakistan.

New Delhi, January 3, 1964.

Ministry of External Affairs

I summoned Mr. M. Rahman, Pakistan Deputy High Commissioner, today and handed over two copies of our reply to the Pakistan Government’s note No. PID/7/30/62 dated December 14, 1963, to him.

2. He said he was under the impression that there was an agreement between India and Pakistan under which both parties were required to maintain the status quo and that this agreement was concluded some time in 1950. I told him that the only agreement he could possibly have in mind was the Security Council resolution of January 17, 1948, under which the parties were required to report any material change in the situation to the Security Council. It was this resolution which was violated by Pakistan which, according to its subsequent admission, sent its forces into Jammu and Kashmir in the early part of May 1948. He then enquired whether on the strength of the Pakistan Government having violated this resolution India had taken the position that it was no longer bound by it. I said that it was Pakistan, which violated this as well as the UN Commission resolutions and that India had not violated it. Obviously Pakistan could not violate the resolutions and at the same time insist on India being bound by them.

3. He then asked what the solution of the problem could possibly be. He said if this issue was not resolved, it would bedevil the lives of our children and the relations between the new generations would be much more bitter. I said I was not prepared to accept the assumption that there was widespread bitterness between the people of India and the people of Pakistan. We had experienced no such bitterness during our short visits to Rawalpindi and Karachi. The Pakistan delegation had a similar experience during its visits to Delhi and Calcutta. However, it was true that the bitterness was confined to and perhaps deliberately cultivated by the civil servants and politicians in Pakistan. I told him that he would surely admit that Pakistan was not an obsession with us and was not played up day after day either in our Parliament or in our newspapers. In Pakistan, on the other hand, India appeared to be an obsession with the officials, politicians and newspapers.

4. Mr. Rahman thought that the newspapers of West Bengal were pretty bad, while many newspapers in East Pakistan wrote favourably about India. I admitted that there were exceptions but, by and large, one could see that while we were not indulging in any crusade against Pakistan, the Pakistan authorities and newspapers appeared to have had nothing much to think against except India.

5. As for settling the Kashmir issue, I told him that we had done our very best during the joint talks but very soon it became obvious that Pakistan was not interested in any settlement. I referred to some of the absurd arguments which the Pakistan delegation had put forward. He enquired whether it was not true that all that we had offered was a settlement along with the cease fire line with some minor modifications, a view which subsequently the Prime Minister of India had reiterated. I said that whatever we had offered to Pakistan was on Pakistan Government’s record. We had made a generous offer and if Pakistan rejected it, there was nothing further that we could do about the matter. He said that there could never be a settlement along the cease fire line and that if that was India’s view, the issue would go on from year to year. I replied that if this was so, it was just too bad and that we have to learn to live with it.

6. I shall send a copy of this note to our High Commissioner in Karachi, together with a copy of our reply to Pakistan Government’s note.

Foreign Secretary
Record of the conversation between Minister without Portfolio Lal Bahadur Shastri and US Assistant Secretary of State Phillips Talbot.

New Delhi, March 9, 1964.

Ministry of External Affairs

The U.S. Assistant Secretary of State, Mr. Phillips Talbot, accompanied by U.S. Ambassador, called on Shri Lal Bahadur Shastri, Minister without Portfolio at 5 p.m. on Monday, the 9th March, 1964.

2. Mr. Talbot began by recalling his experiences in India as an accredited foreign correspondent during the troubled days of 1946-47. He remarked that in his personal estimation, the vicious circle of communal strife, at that time, was prevented from spreading to the rest of India largely through the strong and effective action taken by the Government in Uttar Pradesh when the late Pandit Pant was the Chief Minister and Shri Lal Bahadur Shastri, the Home Minister. The Minister remarked that it was indeed a trying time but fortunately they were able to deal with the situation effectively.

3. Mr. Talbot then spoke of the present situation of strained relations between India and Pakistan which seemed to baffle all attempts at solution. He remarked that Gandhiji was known to have believed in applying the 'healing touch', when problems became particularly difficult and he, therefore, wondered that the Minister thought would be the best way of applying this remedy to the present situation between India and Pakistan. The Minister said that one thing was clear, that the present moment with thousands of refugees pouring into India from East Pakistan, and Pakistan openly siding with China in her aggressive designs towards India, hardly produced an atmosphere conducive for discussion of the Kashmir question. Nor would it help if India is pressurized in the Security Council over Kashmir, again and again. He, therefore, felt that countries like the United States and Britain who had a stake and an interest in the future of this sub continent, must counsel Pakistan to reverse the present hostile trend.

4. Ambassador Bowles said that he could not agree more that the present trend had to be reversed, but friends of the United States must realize that her influence to force other countries to do certain things was much less now than it is generally estimated. He said that it was a curious fact that after the Cuban crisis, the general relaxation between the U.S.A. and the Soviet Union, prompted by the common realization that nuclear warfare is futile, had loosened up military alliances in both blocs, encouraging these countries to act independently. He then mentioned the attraction of newly independent African countries to the idea of self determination and said that U.S.A. is not attached to this idea so much. It even fought a war of independence, opposing the idea, but Pakistan is able to exploit the attachment of African and Latin American countries to this idea, in the Security Council, against India.

5. The Minister remarked that if the Americans were interested in the ‘healing touch’, they have to find ways and means of applying it in the best manner and he was sure that with their wisdom and experience, they would be able to persuade Pakistan to stop its minorities from migrating to India, by trying to restore confidence in them. If they wanted to discuss this matter at the Home Ministers level between the two countries, or through officials, and if they wanted India to discuss the question of evacuees from Assam, all this would be possible. Of course, it has to be realized that there have been no evictions from Tripura for over six months, as these were stopped when he was Home Minister, at the instance of the Prime Minister. He added, the trouble with Pakistan is that it refused to discuss these problems, even though they were quite important for bringing about better relations between the two countries. The Kashmir question cannot be discussed in isolation. Sardar Swaran Singh had, during his series of talks with Pakistan, agreed to reverse the order by discussing Kashmir first and other related matters later, but Pakistan refused to discuss these matters at all. Now there was no doubt that the continuing influx of refugees from East Pakistan and the problems it posed for India need to be tackled first. Ambassador Bowles remarked that as he understood our views on the subject, what needs to be done now was, first to begin with a discussion on the minorities problems between the two countries with particular reference to the influx of refugees from East Pakistan into India and the question of evacuees from Assam, and if this produced a relaxation of tensions between the two countries, then to tackle the Kashmir question.

6. Mr. Talbot then said that if by these steps a more relaxed atmosphere were to prevail, the question arises how to tackle the Kashmir problem in a more effective manner. He recalled that during the Canal Waters negotiations, according to their estimation, some of the most important hurdles were crossed through secret negotiations which were allowed to continue between the officials of India and Pakistan with the help of the good offices of the World Bank in Washington, far off from the two countries. He wondered, therefore, if such a possibility could not be applied to the Kashmir dispute. The minister said that speaking purely in a personal capacity, he was not against exploring other possibilities of settling the Kashmir dispute, but as he had mentioned earlier consideration of such possibilities at this stage is neither realistic nor practicable. As long as Pakistan continued driving out its minorities through persecution and force, in order to create communal strife in India and as long as that country openly befriended China in her aggressive policies against India, the question of considering other ways and means of solving Kashmir dispute became meaningless. He also emphasized that it was essential while discussing the Kashmir question that the Government should have the support of public opinion in the country. In this context, especially it was important for the United States to appreciate that if the impression is aroused in India, as had happened after the last debate in the Security Council, that India is being pressurized into giving up territory in Kashmir, it would naturally produce an adverse reaction. In this context, the United State’s position has to be different from that of Britain. The British partitioned India on a communal basis and they feel the same principle should apply to Kashmir, without regard to the legal or other implications.

7. The American Ambassador said that he appreciated the sentiments expressed by the Minister and he wanted to emphasise that the United States only wanted to help India and Pakistan to solve these problems. Over the last 15 years they have invested, a large amount of money by way of military and economic aid to both countries and their problem is to find out the possibility of bridging the rift between the two countries. He said the question of asserting any kind of pressure against one country or the other, does not arise as there is considerable opinion in the U.S.A. that economic and political policies should be kept as far apart as possible, excepting in an obvious case like that of Indonesia where Soekarno is constantly trying to misuse economic aid, does nothing to put his house in order, and is threatening war against the neighbouring countries. Mr. Talbot expressed the view that the relationship that has developed over the years between India and the United States, of understanding and respect for each other’s point of view, provides hope for the future. He added that they were now hoping to work out, a plan for providing India with long term aid over a period of five years or so, to meet her Economic, as well as Defence needs.

0411.  Note Verbale from the Pakistan Ministry of Foreign Affairs to the Indian High Commission in Pakistan regarding re-designation of the Head of State and Head of Government of Jammu and Kashmir State.

Karachi, April 11, 1964.

Ministry of Foreign Affairs
Karachi

No. PID – 7/21/64 the 1st April, 1964

The Ministry of Foreign Affairs Presents its compliments to the High Commission for India in Pakistan and has the honour to state that, according to reports appearing in the press, a bill seeking to re-designate the Head of the disputed State of Jammu and Kashmir as “Governor” and the Head of the Government as “Chief Minister” was introduced in the so-called State Assembly at Srinagar on 9th March, 1964. The bill also provides for the replacement of the State flag by the flag of the Indian Union. Though the bill has been moved by a member of the opposition, the Revenue Minister of the so-called Government of Kashmir is reported to have stated that the Government would not oppose the bill.

2. The afore-mentioned move is yet another link in the chain of steps being deliberately taken by the Government of India to destroy the special status of the disputed State of Jammu and Kashmir as envisaged in the resolutions of the UNCIP of the 13th August 1948 and 5th January 1949. It may be recalled that the Government of Pakistan has on a number of occasions in the past, protested to the Government of India as well as to the Security Council of the United Nations against the repeated breaches of faith committed by the government of India in order to further “integrate” the disputed State of Jammu and Kashmir to the Indian Union.

3. The Security Council as well as the Government of Pakistan have repeatedly stressed upon the Government of India the need to respect the resolutions of the Security Council of 30th March, 1951 and 24th January, 1957 and to refrain from acting in flagrant violation of the above resolutions. It is needless to mention that under these resolutions, the final disposition of the State must be made in accordance with the will of the people of Jammu and Kashmir as expressed through the democratic method of a free and impartial plebiscite conducted under the auspices of the United Nations.

4. The Government of Pakistan reaffirms its stand that whatever measures the Government of India has taken or might take, have no legal force or effect as far as Pakistan and the United Nations are concerned, and that they are in flagrant violation of the international obligations that India has accepted under the above mentioned resolutions of the United Nations in respect of the future disposition for the disputed State of Jammu and Kashmir. These obligations cannot be revoked or side-tracked unilaterally by India through any device, however camouflaged.

5. The fact that the Government of India has chosen to take the steps mentioned in para 1 above at a time when the Kashmir issue is the subject of deliberation by the Security Council of the United Nations indicates the respect and importance the Government of India attaches to that august body, and makes it evident that the Government of India has no desire, whatsoever, to find a peaceful and an honourable settlement of the question which would be in conformity with the wishes of the people of the State of Jammu and Kashmir. It is a matter of deep regret that the Government of India remains set on a course of action which deliberately ignores and flouts the decisions of the Security Council of the United Nations.

6. In view of the foregoing, the Government of Pakistan is constrained once again to protest strongly to the Government of India against the aforementioned unilateral measures to further “integrate” the State of Jammu and Kashmir to the Indian Union.

The Ministry avails itself of this opportunity to renew to the High Commission for India the assurances of its highest consideration.

* The High Commission for India in Pakistan in replying to this Note reminded the Foreign Ministry of Pakistan that “The baseless allegations made in the Note have been repeatedly exposed in the past by the Government of India and its Representatives in the Security Council. The matter was fully dealt with in the Security Council on 5 February, 1964, by India’s Education Minister, Shri M.C. Chagla” and rejected the Pakistani note terming it “as an uncalled for interference with the domestic affairs of the Indian union.”
Note Verbale of the Pakistan Ministry of Foreign Affairs to the High Commission for India in Pakistan regarding the speech of Lal Bahadur Shastri in the Lok Sabha on February 19, 1964.

No. B-1308-PID/64 April 4, 1964

The Ministry of Foreign Affairs presents its compliments to the High Commission for India in Pakistan and has the honour to state that a statement made on the floor of the Lok Sabha on 19 February by Mr. Lal Bahadur Shastri, Minister without Portfolio, to the effect that “the Security Council had themselves declared Pakistan an aggressor in Kashmir” has come to the notice of the Government of Pakistan. It is a matter of regret that a responsible minister of the Government of India has chosen to deliberately distort and misrepresent facts on the floor of the Lok Sabha.

2. The Government of India cannot be unaware of the fact that on no occasion the Security Council has ever given a finding even faintly resembling the statement made by Mr. Lal Bahadur Shastri. On the contrary, it is common knowledge that numerous attempts made by the Government of India from time to time to have Pakistan branded as an “aggressor” have been rejected by the Security Council.

3. It is, therefore, evident that the statement made by Mr. Lal Bahadur Shastri is not substantiated by facts and that the allegation made therein is completely false.

4. The Government of Pakistan reiterate the fact that the resolutions of the UNCIP of 13 August 1948 and 5 January 1949 and the resolution of the Security Council of 30 March 1951 as further reaffirmed in its resolution of 24 January 1957 clearly envisage that the final disposition of the State of Jammu and Kashmir will be made in accordance with the will of the people expressed through the democratic method of a free and impartial plebiscite conducted under the auspices of the United Nations.

5. The Government of Pakistan strongly protests against the miss statement of facts by Mr. Lal Bahadur Shastri and trusts that in future the Government of India will desist from acts and utterances likely to further aggravate tension between the two countries.

6. The Ministry avails itself of this opportunity to renew to the High Commission the assurances of its highest consideration.

0413. Protest Note by the Ministry of External Affairs handed over to the Embassy of Indonesia regarding reference of Kashmir in the Joint Communiqué issued by the Foreign Ministers of Indonesia and Pakistan on April 17, 1964.

New Delhi, May 16, 1964.

Ministry of External Affairs

The Ministry of External Affairs presents its compliments to the Embassy of the Republic of Indonesia in New Delhi and has the honour to invite its attention to the joint communiqué issued by the Foreign Ministers of Indonesia and Pakistan on April 17, 1964. In this communiqué it is stated: “They (foreign ministers) agreed that this dispute involved the question of fundamental rights of the people of Kashmir and that this dispute impaired the growth of friendly relations between Pakistan and India, affecting also the development of Asian - African solidarity. The two Foreign Ministers, therefore, called for an early solution of this dispute in accordance with the wishes of the people of the State and other provisions as envisaged in the Security Council resolutions which were accepted by both India and Pakistan”.

2. The Government of India deeply regret the Government of Indonesia’s decision to associate themselves with such an unfair and partisan view of the Kashmir question. The joint Communiqué completely ignores Pakistan’s continuing aggression on the Indian Union territory of Jammu and Kashmir, two fifths of the area of which Pakistan has occupied by force and in violation of the Charter of the United Nations. The fact that Pakistan by its failure to withdraw its troops from Kashmir has violated the United Nations resolutions and thereby rendered them inapplicable, seems to have been forgotten. The communiqué also ignores the surrender of over 2,000 square miles of Indian Union territory by Pakistan to the People’s Republic of China, when Pakistan has no common border with that country and no legal rights, whatsoever, to part with territory which is not Pakistan territory.

3. In the Joint Communiqué solicitude has been expressed for the development of Asian and African solidarity. This is an objective to which Government of India are completely dedicated and for the attainment of which, as the Government of Indonesia are aware, they have worked, unceasingly, within and outside the United Nations, ever since their independence. By now taking sides on this long standing issue, instead of maintaining a non partisan attitude, which Indonesia had adopted for the last 16 years, the Government of Indonesia have done little to further the cause of Asian and African solidarity.
4. The Government of India note with surprise the references in the joint communiqué to the fundamental rights of the people of Kashmir. The dignitaries who signed the communiqué could not have been unaware of the fact that the people of India, including the people of Jammu and Kashmir who are part of the Indian Union, enjoy human rights and fundamental freedoms to an extent enjoyed by the people of few other countries in the world. The Government of India must reject any attempt to separate the people of Jammu and Kashmir on the ground of religion, as a people distinct and separate from the people of the rest of India. To the Government of India, it seems somewhat ironic that while the Pakistan Government has made itself a self appointed champion of fundamental rights of the people of Jammu and Kashmir, it has resolutely denied of these to its own people, has refused to hold any elections on the basis of universal adult suffrage and has suppressed by force the demand for self determination by the people of Baluchistan and Pakhtoonistan and denied adult franchise to its own people, despite the special clamour for this in East Pakistan in particular.

5. The Government and people of India have had the friendliest feelings towards the Government and the people of Indonesia. They recall the strong support given by India to the movement for freedom and independence by the Indonesian people and the vigorous support which India gave to Indonesia on the West Irian question at the United Nation. The Government of India are, therefore, disappointed that the Government of Indonesia have now chosen to identify themselves with Pakistan on the Kashmir question.

The Ministry of External Affairs avails itself of this opportunity to renew to the Embassy of the Republic of Indonesia the assurances of its highest consideration.

0414. Note Verbale from the Embassy of Indonesia in reply to the Note of the Ministry of External Affairs regarding Kashmir.

New Delhi, June 2, 1964.

Embassy of the Republic of Indonesia In India
New Delhi

No. 1452/k/SD/64 June 2nd, 1964

The Embassy of the Republic of Indonesia in India presents its compliments to the Ministry of External Affairs, Government of India and with reference to the Ministry’s Note dated May 16, 1964 without number, has the honour to state as follows:

1. Indonesia has always considered both India and Pakistan as sister Asian nations with whom it equally maintains the most cordial and friendly relations. It is the Government of Indonesia’s firm conviction that for the sake of Asian solidarity it is imperative that between Pakistan and India as two important pillars of that solidarity the best possible relations must exist. In this context the Government of Indonesia has noted with the gravest concern that the continuing ill effects of the unsolved Kashmir problem have made the development of good neighbourliness between these two countries difficult.

2. Aware of the highly complicated nature of the Kashmir problem, the Government of Indonesia cannot do otherwise than observe strict impartiality in the dispute. The Indonesian Embassy wishes to assure the Ministry of External Affairs that the Government of Indonesia has always maintained this position. However, this should not be construed as indifference on Indonesian part vis-a-vis the grave consequence that might result from recent developments of the Kashmir problem in the relation between India and Pakistan. The Foreign Minister of Indonesia indeed has seized the occasion of issuance of a joint communiqué with the Foreign Minister of Pakistan to express the measure of Indonesian concern with regard to the state of affairs in the dispute. It is in this context that the statement of Indonesia’s Foreign Minister on the Kashmir problem must be viewed.

3. As far as the position of the Government of Indonesia is concerned, in the profound desire to see that the dispute be solved through musjawarah so that friendly relations between Pakistan and India can be fully restored, it has felt persuaded to offer through the statement of the Indonesian Foreign Minister a prudent suggestion as to what possible approach towards finding a solution of the Kashmir problem could be fruitfully explored. It need be stated that in so doing the Indonesian Government has not considered the issue from a position associating itself with views advocated by either of the parties, or as a matter of taking sides or not taking sides. Indonesian guiding consideration has been her conviction that in situations similar to that of the Kashmir problem the efficacy of applying the principle of self determination exercised by the people concerned is indisputable. It is on the basis of the above and previously mentioned considerations solely and exclusively that the statement of the two Foreign Ministers must be viewed. It would, therefore, be doing less than justice to take said statement as an indication of Indonesia having associated itself with “an unfair and partisan view of the Kashmir question”. For that matter the Embassy of the Republic of Indonesia can not accept as valid the opinion of the Government of India concerning the Indonesian Foreign Minister’s statement as “unfair and partisan”.

The Embassy of the Republic of Indonesia avails itself of this opportunity to renew to the Ministry of External Affairs, Government of India, the assurances of its highest consideration.

Ministry of External Affairs,
New Delhi.

０４１５．Letter from the Prime Minister Lal Bahadur Shastri to Pakistan President Ayub Khan.

New Delhi, July 5, 1964.

Dear Mr. President,
I have had to submit to medical advice and to cancel my visit to London for the Commonwealth Prime Ministers’ Conference. I had been greatly looking forward to the opportunity of making the acquaintance of Heads of Government of fellow Commonwealth countries. I was specially looking forward to the pleasure of meeting and talking over with you how best to build up friendly and cooperative relations between India and Pakistan. It is my profound regret that I shall now be unable to do so.

You have given expression, in your broadcasts of the 1st June and 1st July 1964, to your keen desire for establishing friendly relations between India and Pakistan. I greatly welcome the sentiments expressed by you. I have myself on a number of occasions in recent weeks and in my letter to you of June 11, 1964, reaffirmed our sincere desire to begin a new era of harmony and understanding between our countries, in place of the acrimony and bitterness which have hitherto bedeviled our relations. This is a task well worth striving for, since on the fulfillment of it depends the happiness and prosperity of our peoples. I do agree that we should take an early opportunity to meet and discuss our problems.

This letter is being carried by my friend and colleague, Shri TT. Krishnamachari, whom I hope you will be kind enough to receive.

With warm regards and best wishes,

Yours sincerely

Lal Bahadur

His Excellency
Field Marshal Mohammad Ayub Khan, N. PK., H.J., President of Pakistan,
Rawalpindi.

0416. Letter from Pakistan President Ayub Khan to Prime Minister Lal Bahadur Shastri.

Dear Mr. Prime Minister,

Thank you very much for your letter of the 5th July, 1964, I was disappointed to learn that you had to cancel your visit to London. I hope you will soon regain full health and feel your old self again. I look forward with pleasure to our meeting in the near future.

2. It is so important for both of us to move along with the times and not to let the dead past continue to poison our relations. I have always believed that a time would come when those in charge of the destinies of our two countries would have to get together to resolve their differences if any to avoid mutual ruin. I think that moment has now arrived. Under your able leadership in India it should be possible for our two countries to cooperate in order to settle our disputes. I assure you we will welcome and fully reciprocate every move that you make towards finding ways and means to settle our unhappy differences. Personally I am sure that nothing is more important to you, as it is to me, than to end the present tragic, and bitter state of our present relations.
3. Please accept my very best wishes for your rapid and complete recovery.

With kindest regards,

Yours sincerely,

Mohammad Ayub Khan

His Excellency,
Lal Bahadur Shastri
Prime Minister of India,
New Delhi.

“As you know there have been some discussions about the desirability of an early meeting between our President and your Prime Minister. It occurs to me that a prior meeting between you and me would be helpful in paving the way for the proposed summit meeting. I should therefore be very happy if you could visit Rawalpindi as early as possible. On hearing that you can do so we would fix a mutually convenient date for this purpose.

In this connection I would like to recall the conversation that Mr. T. T. Krishnamachari had with our President in London at the time of the recent Commonwealth Conference. While discussing how Kashmir dispute may be settled, our President informed Mr. Krishnamachari that since every one of the draft solutions put forward by the UN Representative had been accepted by Pakistan and rejected by India, it was now for India to suggest an equitable solution. I hope that when you come it will be possible to discuss the specific manner in which this dispute may be resolved so that we can carry this question forward and prepare the ground for a meeting between our President and your Prime Minister.”

Begins.

“I thank you for your message which was conveyed through His Excellency the High Commissioner for Pakistan in New Delhi.

2. I would be delighted to visit Pakistan and to have the opportunity of meeting you and of paying my respects to His Excellency the President of Pakistan. I agree that anything that you and I can do to promote understanding and create a favourable atmosphere for summit talks would be very welcome. I would be happy to discuss with you during my visit the whole range of Indo-Pakistan relations and the ways and means of resolving all our differences, so that India and Pakistan should live together.

3. My visit to Pakistan at your invitation could only be fruitful and serve the purposes which both you and I have in view, if there is a forward looking approach to the solution of the problems between our two countries. As you are aware, it is our earnest hope and desire to establish friendly and cooperative relations with Pakistan and to resolve all our differences in a spirit of friendly understanding and good neighbourliness. Eloquent expression to this desire has been given in the public statements by my Prime Minister and your President has expressed identical sentiments. The translation of such sentiments into practice will require a sincere search for equitable solutions by both our Governments. The responsibility for finding such solutions for the Kashmir situation as well as for other problems between us rests on both of us. On my part I shall look forward to our meeting and exchange of views in this spirit.

4. Because of my immediate parliamentary and other preoccupations and the Cairo Conference of non aligned States next month, I am not in a position at present to indicate when I may be able to visit Pakistan. I have mentioned this to Your High Commissioner and shall get in touch with him again later about finding a mutually convenient date.”

Ends.

Protest Note of the Ministry of External Affairs handed over to High Commission for Pakistan in India.

New Delhi, September 9, 1964.

1. The Ministry of External Affairs presents its compliments to the High Commission for Pakistan in India and has the honour to bring to their notice the following report which appeared in the HINDUSTAN TIMES on 9 September 1964:

   "The AZAD Kashmir flag on the President’s house in Muzaffarabad, headquarters of Pak occupied Kashmir, has been hauled down and replaced by the Pakistan flag, according to reports reaching here.

   Similarly the ‘Azad’ standard has given place to the Pakistan flag on all government buildings in Muzaffarabad according to these reports."

2. As this report has not been contradicted by the Government of Pakistan, it is presumed to be correct. The Ministry is surprised that the Government of Pakistan should have taken a step which is a blatant infringement of the sovereignty of India and a further act of aggression on its territory. The Government of Pakistan will recall that the United Nations Commission at its 29th meeting held on 5 August 1948, decided that "it should avoid any action which might be interpreted as signifying de facto or de jure recognition of the ‘Azad Kashmir Government’." (S/1100, para. 69) The United Nations Commission also recorded that the Government of Pakistan itself had not granted recognition to the so called Azad Kashmir Government, “in view of the implications which might ensue”. (S/1100, para 132). It now appears that let alone recognizing an unlawful authority called the Azad Kashmir Government, the Government of Pakistan itself has taken the place of that authority.

3. In other words, the Government of Pakistan which is required to vacate aggression on the Indian Union territory of Jammu and Kashmir has now chosen to incorporate it into Pakistan in violation of the Security Council resolution of 17 January 1948, and the assurances which the Government of Pakistan gave to the United Nations Commission, the Security Council and its representatives. The Government of India strongly protest against the high handed and unlawful seizure and appropriation of Indian territory and would like to make it clear that the Government of India can never accept such a blatant infringement of Indian sovereignty.

The Ministry of External Affairs avails itself of this opportunity to renew to the High Commission for Pakistan the assurances of its highest consideration.

0420. Note Verbale of the Indian Ministry of External Affairs to the Foreign and Commonwealth Missions stationed in New Delhi regarding distribution of bulletins, literature etc by them in contravention of the procedure laid down.

New Delhi, November 10. 1964.

No.DII-451(18/62)/64. November 10, 1964

The Ministry of External Affairs present their compliments to Foreign and Commonwealth Missions in India and, in inviting their attention to this Ministry’s communications No.F.32/9-XPP/58 dated 28th August, 1958 and No.E.25/53-XPP/61 dated 21st September, 1961, have the honour to say that it has come to the notice of the Government of India that there is continuing distribution by some Missions of bulletins, pamphlets, publications and other literature in contravention of the procedure set down in the communications referred to above.

2. Foreign and Commonwealth Missions in India are aware that the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations, 1961, lays down that the functions of diplomatic missions consist inter alia of “promoting friendly relations between the sending and receiving States.” The Convention also agrees that diplomatic missions have a duty not to interfere in the internal affairs of the receiving State. The raison d’être of the privileges and immunities enjoyed by diplomatic missions is that the receiving State should give every facility for the efficient performance of the functions of a diplomatic mission. These privileges and immunities cannot, however, be used to injure the interests of the receiving State, internally or in its relations with other friendly States.

3. The Ministry of External Affairs wish to draw the attention of Foreign and Commonwealth Missions in India to the requirements of the procedure laid down in the communications referred to in paragraph 1 above. While the Ministry do not wish in any way to interfere with the dissemination of information and legitimate publicity material by Foreign and Commonwealth Missions, they are unable to permit the dissemination or distribution of any publicity material, through whatever media, which -

(a) Is clearly in contravention of the internal laws of India;

(b) Is hostile or unfriendly to India or which has the effect of creating illwill against the Government or people of India;

(c) Is likely to promote ill-feeling between different sections of the people in India; and
(d) Is designed to or may have the effect of creating ill-feeling against a third country, with which India has friendly relations.

4. The Ministry requests the cooperation of Foreign and Commonwealth Missions in India in regard to the observance of the principles set down in the preceding paragraph, and compliance with the procedure detailed in the circulars referred to in paragraph 1.

5. The Ministry takes this opportunity to renew to all the Foreign Missions in India the assurances of their highest consideration.

All Foreign & Commonwealth Diplomatic Missions in India, New Delhi.

* The note was issued after it was found that Pakistan was consistently flouting the rules in this regard. Several notes were exchanged between India and Pakistan calling upon Pakistan to desist from anti-Indian propaganda but to no avail.
From: Hicomind, Karachi

Reptd – Hicomind, London (for Commonwealth Secretary) (who was in London)

Foreign Minister from Parthasarthi.

Reference para 5 of JHA’s telegram 14 dated 8th January to you. I have given my views in my letter HC-2/65 January 6 to JHA copy of which has been sent to GUNDEVIA.

2 Judging from viciousness of anti-Indian campaign during the elections and Pakistan’s consistent policy of maximizing pressure on us we have every reason to conclude that Pakistan is not interested in talks with us for settlements but only for propaganda. I feel therefore that we should proceed with caution in taking the initiative for talks while maintaining our present posture of seeking friendly relations with Pakistan.

3. I had thirty minutes talk with BHUTTO in which I tried to probe his mind. I asked him what his ideas were in regard to resumption of talk with India. (He had told me on 1st December last that we could discuss this after the elections). BHUTTO said that he had visualized a serious effort to resolve our difference particularly on Kashmir in the spirit of the SHASTRIJI-AYUB talk but the situation has changed because of the steps we had taken since to integrate Kashmir more firmly. This step he asserted indicated clearly that we were not interested in a friendly solution. He proceeded to say that Pakistan seemed to be up “against a wall” as India was closing the door in a negotiated settlement. I expressed regret at what he said and added that we should strive for peaceful settlements as the alternatives were conflict and misery to millions of people. I pointed out that the constitutional changes we had made in regard to Kashmir were normal processes in the interest of good government and maintenance of security; they were in no way different from internal measures taken in the past and should not come in the way of talks between us. I added that Pakistan’s step two years ago in illegally disposing of Kashmir territory in its boundary agreement with China had been a basic alteration in the status quo and yet we had continued talks with them. I concluded by saying that the only approach towards a peaceful solution was discussion without prejudice to basic positions of both countries.
4. BHUTTO then asked me what the position was in regard to your acceptance of the invitation to visit Pakistan. I said that I had communicated his idea that the visit could take place early in February adding that you had discussed the matter with ARSHAD HUSSAIN. I stressed that you were quite willing to pay a goodwill visit to Pakistan. BHUTTO said February seemed a crowded month because of foreign visitors. I said you had also a busy schedule and our budget session would be starting in middle February but expressed the hope that a mutually acceptable date could be worked out.

5. As regard the two meetings which were postponed BHUTTO said the talks on cease fire line incidents concerned the Foreign Office and the Defence Ministry and he would have to hold consultation on this subject after his return to Pakistan on 27th January. He indicated that he would get into touch with me after his return but gave no commitment as to possible dates. As for the Home Ministers’ meeting on “evictions and migrants”, he said there should be no difficulty in fixing a date in consultation with his Home Minister.

6. As I was leaving BHUTTO said that he was glad to have this general talk with me adding “we have not taken our bearings yet after the elections”. I think this last remark sums up the position. From other information available to us also it seems no decision has yet been taken about an immediate reference of the Kashmir issue to the U.N. No doubt it will be finalized after BHUTTO takes soundings in Moscow London and New York.

7. In his talks with foreign governments BHUTTO will make much of the constitutional changes we have made in Kashmir as a clear indication that India has closed the door on friendly negotiations and that we do not desire a settlement with Pakistan. We have already taken steps to counter this propaganda by stating the correct position particularly the facts that it is Pakistan’s hostile activities in the cease fire line and in Kashmir which are largely responsible for our taking protective measures. We have also repeatedly affirmed as Prime Minister and you have said often in public that we earnestly desire to resolve our differences with Pakistan and live in friendship with her. (I drew BHUTTO’s attention yesterday to the passage in Congress President’s address regarding Pakistan.).

8. As regards the revival of the two postponed meeting the ball is really in Pakistan’s court as it was at her request that the conferences were put off. We have put ourselves in a good position for the record by again expressing our desire to start talks as has been clearly stated by the Commonwealth Secretary to AZIZ AHMED in London. I feel that no further initiative is called for from us in this respect. It is significant that while BHUTTO evaded any commitment regards the cease fire line talks he seemed to consider that a Home Ministers’ meeting could be arranged at an early date. The Pakistanis evidently wish to give priority to such meetings where they feel the propaganda advantage lies within them.
9. Post-election trends in Pakistan are intricate and it is not clear whether or not AYUB will follow a policy of conciliation internally and externally. Picture may not be clearer for some weeks as the regime has still to face the Assembly elections. We have to watch trends carefully before making a final assessment. Until some definite indications become available that the post-electoral regime is willing to cooperate in constructive efforts in search of settlements our own policy must take account of the more propagandist aims Pakistan seems to be pursuing. I therefore feel we should work on the following lines:

(a) persist with further representations to foreign governments regards the evidence revealed by the elections here and by hostile activity along the cease fire line that Pakistan is only interested in keeping up tensions with us,

(b) Press for talks on the cease fire line after BHUTTO’s return,

(c) Avoid expressing any further interest in a Home Ministers’ conference unless Pakistan approaches us in which case we can consider our position,

(d) Indicate informally the dates which might be convenient for you to come on a goodwill visit to Pakistan if possible in February. I feel such a visit could be extremely important both because it would enable you to probe the minds of the Pakistani leaders and because it could be presented as further proof of our earnestness in developing friendly relations. It seems to me that the steps suggested within the above limits would be helpful as preparations either for further discussions or for a contest in propaganda depending in which way Pakistan goes.
Letter from Indian Deputy High Commissioner in Dacca A. K. Ray to High Commissioner G. Parthasarathy regarding President Ayub Khan's visit to East Pakistan.

Dacca, February 9, 1965.

No. DAC (POL)/101/1/5 February 8, 1965.

Subject: President Ayub Khan’s visit to East Pakistan: January 15 – 25, 1965.

My dear Sir,

President Ayub Khan has come and gone. He arrived in the 15th January, 1965 and left on the 25th January, 1965. In between, he visited Cox’s Bazar, Kaptai and Chittagong, and apart from taking part in a few official functions, did what he could in the nature of political fence-mending, intrigue, and planning for the forthcoming Assembly elections. It had been let out in the Press before his arrival that he planned to visit a number of districts in East Pakistan, personally to take the Basic Democrats who had voted for him, but no such program materialized in fact. His activities or at least, as much of them as could be gleaned from the press are given in brief in the Annexure to this letter (not included here).

2. It was in fact a political visit and not an official one. The Diplomatic and the Consular Corps were not invited to be present either at the arrival or at his departure. They were, however, invited to a few of the public functions arranged on his account. The only direct contact between the President and the Diplomatic and the consular Corps was through his wife at a dinner given in her honour by Begum Monem Khan, the Governor’s wife. It was, of course, noticed very carefully that this was the first time Begum Ayub khan came to this part of Pakistan, and not only she, but also the President’s daughter Mrs. Nasim Aurangzab, and Son Akhtar Ayub, and two grand-children. This zenana (ladies) dinner at which Begum Monem Khan presided in a sort of ‘purdah-ed’ immobility was a rather mismanaged affair which could have been worse but for the valiant efforts of the wife of Monem Khan’s Military Secretary and the grown-up females among the Governor’s fifteen children. The ‘zenana’ of the Presidential line created generally a good impression among the guest.

3. The first public function arranged for the President was a Civic Reception given by the Dacca Municipal Corporation (or more accurately, by its nominated Chairman who apparently had not kept his colleagues informed of his plans) at Ramna Maidan on January 17. It was a rather poorly attended function, and there was no sign at all of any great public enthusiasm. Attendance was by invitation only, and there could have been more than 1200 persons present including a fair sprinkling of the riff-raff. The security precautions were, of course, too strong to remain unobtrusive. The interesting part of the function was reading of the welcome address when audible comments of an adverse nature on its contents could be heard all around. You may recall that in one part of the maidan there is a smallish pavilion—a cross between a mediaval Bengal Hindu temple, and a mosque. This structure had been draped with multi-coloured transparent nylon drapery billowing in the breeze. In front was a silver-gilt chair—something like and economy-style throne. Ayub came in this brown suit and Jinnah cap and sat there—very much like the sun-tanned viceroy.

4. There were only three points of note in the speech he delivered there:-

(i) He wanted the people to strengthen his hands by sending honest, sincere and patriotic persons to the National and the provincial assemblies, who would help in fulfill the promises he had made;

(ii) He hoped that all controversy over the Constitution would now rest; and

(iii) He asserted that political opposition there has to be, but political enmity will not be permitted.

He repeated the same theme at the public reception given by the Convention Muslim League party. At the function arranged for him by the East Pakistan Sports Federation, he talked about the need for adequate scope for the youth to participate in games and sports, and about ensuring parity between the two wings of Pakistan in the field of sports. This was the extent of the President’s meeting the people at the capital. He attended another civic reception at Cox’s Bazar on January, 21.

5. That the visit of the President was entirely of political nature in borne out by the fact that the Convention Muslim League Party’s executive met in Dacca at the same time and produced the famous recommendations including the one about taking appropriate punitive action against some local dailies who had shown “disloyalty” during the election campaign. (Please see M.K. Roy’s letter No. DAC (POL)/102/2/65, dated February 2, 1965 to Bajpal). It was also significant that the Muslim League Parliamentary Party met him at his house in Dacca on January 16, and that of all people it was Abd-Allah Zaheeruddin who gave a banquet in his honour. Even the banquet given by the Governor was also a political one and not the usual official one.

6. You had already enquired about the minorities’ delegation which met Ayub on January 20 (Vide Kaul’s telegram No.40, dated January 21, 1965 and our reply thereto). A few more details about that meeting are now available. It is quite true that Minister Bhawani Biswas engineered the whole affair, and having secured an audience with the august personage for his chosen associate, he found himself unable to resist the demands others, like Jnan Dutta and Rasaraj Mandal for inclusion. The trouble then arose over who should introduce the delegates to the President and who should act as the spokesman. In his own opinion, Bhawani Biswas himself was, of course, the obvious choice, but, as he himself said, he did not want to be associated with any ‘nonsense’ that some of the delegates might talk in front of the President. As it turned out, by remaining in the back row and leaving the delegates to introduce themselves, Biswas had shown, not a sense of delicacy, but a flair for saving his own neck.

7. Bhawani Biswas said, and I am inclined to believe him, that it was Jnan Dutta who started with the complaint about the lack of adequate representation for Hindus not only in the legislatures, but also in the services etc., the difficulties faced by the Hindus in business etc. And Ayub reportedly choked him off saying, “have I not told you repeatedly to form a committee, sit down, work out your problems, and then discuss them with the Governor and my officers?” That was apparently the end of Jhan Dutta’s recital of the woes of the Hindus. Mandal then opened up about the need for preferential voting and proportional representation so that the minorities could get adequate representation in the legislature. Ayub pointed out that Pakistan did not have a parliamentary system, and therefore these ideas were irrelevant. As Mandal continued to explain how even the Basic Democracy system could operate on preferential voting provided there were multi-member constituencies etc. Ayub flared up and said, “My dear friend, you are talking damned nonsense!” After this, the meeting between the so-called minorities’ delegation and the President petered out into polite leave-taking. Bhawani Biswas felt very happy that both Jnan Dutta and Rasaraj Mandal were so discomfited, and saw his way clear to canvassing with the President his pet notion of the nomination of one Hindu from each district of East Pakistan to the provincial assembly. In his opinion the Hindus have no option but to be entirely for the regime and this is the line that he had taken during the Presidential election and is also likely to take during the election to the legislature. In this connection, I may also refer to my letters Nos. DAC (POL) 290/1/65, dated February 2, and 3, 1965.

8. There is little doubt about Ayub’s lack of concern over the fate of the minorities in East Pakistan. In terms of his own power and its future, they do not count. In the elections to the National Assembly the proportion of the votes of the Muslims and Hindus is about 19:1 and as regards election to the East Pakistan Assembly it is 10:1 or so. Ayub does not, apparently need minority votes except to secure an overwhelming majority for his own party in the East Pakistan Assembly. In this context it is quite significant that he has been advising that the Hindus should take their problems to Gauleiter Monem Khan.

9. In terms of internal politics, the President’s visit has produced interesting developments. I had already reported that for quite sometime there has been a talk of Monem being replaced. Ayub had the need for an obedient thug (tough character) in East Pakistan and Monem has served him well in that capacity. Monem naturally expected that he would have some say in the choice of the successor - a least to see that it was not Waheeduzzaman’s man that Ayub chose. In this he banked on his political and other alliances with Sabur Khan. Ayub took a leaf out of the books of the Mughals and gave patient hearing to pleas from various sides, cast his necknazar (benign look) around, and his by now succeeded in creating an intense throat-cutting competition in the pro-regime coterie here. Disregarding the claims of Sabur Khan, Wahiduzzaman was made a member of the P.M.L. Parliamentary Board. Sabur felt so slighted that he did no attend Governor’s banquet for Ayub, although he was in Dacca and in good health. He has now completely fallen out with Monem Khan. Kazi Abdul Kader, an ambitious man, is an enemy of Monem’s. Wahiduzzaman is also the same. Seeing the way the political wind is blowing, Hasan Askari has also deserted Monem Khan, with the result that the incumbent Governor is now politically alone. Apparently, in his expectation of something or the other, Shamsuddoha has resigned his present appointment in the Public Service Commission. Ambassador Habibur Rahman has also come home from Switzerland. And, of course, every aspirant to the Governor’s gaddi (chair) says that the President has spoken personally etc. How this medieval intrigue will end eventually, one does not know. If I am to believe a report that has reached us, Monem Khan has written to Ayub asking to be relieved on grounds of ill health: Now the competition will be in earnest.

10. I have a feeling that all this does not bode well for East Pakistan. It will be an unmitigated disaster for all but a few should Shamsudoha be appointed Governor. Habibur Rahman, I am told is a man of strew, and will easily bend with the wind. And Kazi Abdul Kader is concerned only with the fulfillment of his own ambitions.

11. A question that arises is what impression or understanding of East Pakistan Ayub carried back with him. Ayub has three distinct sources of information: his political organization in the civil government, the Armed forces, and Central Intelligence. It is not certain that these three corroborate one another. The member of his civil government, I hear, try to insulate him from the unpleasant fact of life in East Pakistan. On the other hand, the armed forces see much more of the actual trend and furnish him with some unpleasant details, and probably also, in their own way, try to be assimilated into East Pakistan life. Of the latter, we saw a good example at the Armed Forces Day celebrations on January 10, where three fourths of the programme were meant to appeal directly to East Pakistani sentiments. What the Central Intelligence purveys to the President we do not know? Yet, there were ugly stories circulating during Ayub’s visit, and they do have an importance in as much as they tend to reflect at least the wishful thinking of persons’ awake enough to be concerned with the state of the country. Here are some samples.

12. Although the crowd to welcome Ayub at the airport this time was far larger that the previous one, the city itself was somewhat tense and glum. There was no sign of public rejoicing except for a few ordinary decorative gates erected along the route. Ayub felt the atmosphere of Dacca to be hostile and suffocating; so much so, that he felt he had to leave Dacca for a while. This is said to be the reason for the hurriedly arranged trip to Cox’s Bazar which had not originally been included in his programme. In the same context, it is said that the main reason for his dropping the idea of touring these districts now was that such a visit now might once again turn the latent opposition to his regime into violent outbursts which could then be utilized by the Opposition.

13. There was also another story that since the alleged attempt on his life (when someone took pot-shots at him in his Rawalpindi residence sometime ago- the reference is to the ‘minor operation’ he underwent), he has been appearing in public, with a bullet-proof vest under his shirt, and that he is concerned about the possibility of his life being in danger in East Pakistan. Does Ayub then really see in the popular opposition to him the legacy of the terrorist movement in this part of Bengal? It is known now that he was really afraid that he would lose in East Pakistan, and the Armed Forces had been alerted to organise a take-over in case the civil government failed to handle the chaos that could result from a COP victory here.

14. Yet another tale said that the Armed Forces did not like the way he ‘politicked’ in East Pakistan. It was unseemly for a Field Marshal to beg people for votes. He should have, they felt, put the issue straight to the BD’s with the mailed first prominently brandished. One does not really know if Ayub now finds East Pakistan beyond his depth. At least one significant example of his alleged uncertainty was the rather faltering speech he delivered at the Ramna Maidan Civic Reception. It was not, as I felt, a strong forthright personality who has won his second term, but a faltering alien who was not sure if he was saying the right thing. Round every bend, was the “I” which meat Pakistan, and yet all this was delivered with a stutter that was somewhat more pronounced than the Sandhurst copyright.

15. Members of Ayub’s entourage have been talking about his increasing intolerance of people and affairs. They were saying that Ayub is becoming increasingly short-tempered and unwilling to listen to anything that is not entirely pleasant. Ayub has his own vision about becoming a new Nehru – a different Nehru, for the Afro-Asian world, and can neither stand nor understand a setback, however small, to this ambition, and genuinely believed that in electing him, the B.Ds have saved Pakistan.

16. If all this, or even a large part of all this, is true, Ayub shows the ominous signs for the kind dictator who not only rules through his police and his army, behind the façade of pseudo-democracy, but also has visions about himself. To such a dictator, his own concept can be sustained only by success in whatever he undertakes. Any vocal or practical opposition, of recognizable size, to him in East Pakistan detracts that much from the image. Therefore, if he has not gone back with a better understanding of East Pakistan, consequences can be grave indeed.

Yours sincerely
(A.K. RAY)

My dear Ambassador,

Thank you for your letter No. AMB/71/65, dated February 18, 1965.

5. I agree with your analysis in paragraph 4 of your letter. The Pakistanis are trying their best to dislodge the Soviet Union from its existing stand on Kashmir. Bhutto seems to have done the preparatory work and, frankly, we are somewhat surprised and concerned at parts of Mikoyan’s talks with Shrimati Indira Gandhi, which seems to indicate some bias towards Pakistan. Ayub will not doubt work further on the ground prepared by Bhutto. A slight shift in the Soviet position was already noticed at the Security Council meeting last year on Kashmir question; and it is possible that even though their basic stand on Kashmir should remain unaltered, the USSR might not give us the same support on procedural aspects as before. You have suggested that we must face this prospect with realism and flexibility and should try to search for new initiatives with a practical basis. I agree with you that we should not rely entirely on the Soviet veto on Kashmir. It is not easy, however, to decide what new initiatives can be taken with regard to Kashmir. Members of the Security Council on the last occasion – one and all, including the Soviet Union – desired that India and Pakistan should, in direct negotiations and without third party intervention, try to reach a peaceful and honourable settlement. We have ourselves agreed to such negotiations. We feel, however that it is no use commencing such negotiations without the right atmosphere being created. Thanks to the hate-India campaign which Pakistan is continuously indulging in and which it has revived during the last few months after a very brief period of moratorium after Prime Minister Nehru’s death, Pakistan does not give a chance for a favourable climate for negotiations to develop. It has also spurned practical suggestion we made in the past, e.g. establishing an international frontier on the cease-fire line subject to some modifications, and the idea of a confederation. It is difficult to envisage any progress in the direction of talks on Kashmir between India and Pakistan, in the near future. Our position on Kashmir, of course, remains firm. Kashmir is an integral part of India, and the only question in regard to Kashmir is that of aggression and continuing occupation by Pakistan of the two-fifths of the State of Jammu and Kashmir. We have stated this position before the Security Council and elsewhere in the past. We intend to reaffirm this position more clearly and categorically in the future. This, as you will see, accords with your advice. Nevertheless, we feel that if without prejudiced to our sovereign rights we can reach an honourable and equitable political settlement with Pakistan, then, in our larger national interest, we should be quite prepared for such a settlement.

6. In regard to the references to Kashmir in the joint communique issued on the occasion of visits of foreign dignitaries to India and vice versa, our policy is that we do not do so in every case. For example, in the communiques issued after visits of General Ne Win, President Kekkonen of Finland and the Prime Minister of Afghanistan, no mention was made of Kashmir. Kashmir was mentioned in the joint communique by the Prime Ministers of India and France, to counter the reference to Kashmir in the French-Pakistani. Communiqué during the French Prime Minister’s visit to Pakistan. Likewise, if a visiting dignitary shows interest and brings up the question of Kashmir and Indo-Pakistan relations, we usually defer to his desire to say something about Kashmir. Sometimes, even if a visiting dignitary is not going to Pakistan, it is of advantage to have a paragraph included in the joint communique on Kashmir favouring direct negotiations without third party intervention. Such a statement is good from our point of view, as it indirectly denies U.N. responsibility or the applicability of U.N. resolutions.

With kindest regards,

Yours sincerely

Letter from Deputy High Commissioner in East Pakistan A. K. Ray to Commonwealth Secretary Rajeshwar Dayal regarding Chinese activities in East Pakistan and President Ayub’s visit to China.

Dacca, March 6, 1965.

Deputy High Commissioner for India in East Pakistan

Dacca

Subject: Chinese activity in East Pakistan : Ayub’s visit to China.

My dear Sir,

President Ayub left Dacca for Peking on the 2nd March 1965, and is expected back here on the 9th March 1965. In this particular letter I propose to deal with a few aspects of this visit which are of great interest and concern to us.

2. The Government of India is already aware of the reported presence of various types of Chinese personnel in East Pakistan since October/November 1962. There have also been reports of the presence of Chinese military personnel in various districts of East Pakistan, but no specific identification has yet been possible. In my last monthly political report I had also indicated that we have received broad hints as to the anti-Indian activities of the Chinese Consulate General here. From the reports appearing in the local press it seems that Ayub’s visit to China and the Chinese adulation of a Head of State, who had once been regarded as one of the arch reactionaries supporting Western imperialism through military pacts etc., are not a thing in itself or an exercise in creating international goodwill. The one and only purpose is to dovetail the anti-Indian policies of Pakistan and China to such an extent and in such a manner as to exert the maximum possible pressure on us. This is borne out by certain hints about co-operation which have been made under the façade of international co-operation for mutual benefit.

3. Before Ayub left he made an extremely obnoxious statement about our budget and defence expenditure and followed it up with another broadside against us in his first of the month broadcast on March 1, 1965. In that context comments appeared in the Press that Pakistan will naturally acquaint China with her fears about our military power and that even if Pakistan could not secure any material support it could at least expect moral support from China. There is a persistent feeling here that Ayub will utilise this trip to come to a board military understanding with China; what specific role this understanding will play in terms of the objectives of Pakistan’s India policy I shall deal with this letter. At this point I would suggest that we consider this understanding a serious possibility and for all practical purposes assume that it exists.

4. As regards certain other aspects, I quote blow from the Morning News, Dacca, of March 2, 1965:-

“As some top experts are also included in the team, it is quite likely that they will hold discussions on technical matters with Chinese scientists. It is also probable that the menacing flood problem of East Pakistan and water-logging and salinity in West Pakistan will be discussed by the experts of the two countries. The association of Mr. Abbas and Mr. Ishaque with the team is a pointer to that. The Chinese people have already solved their flood problem and the River Hwang Ho is no more the “sorrow of China.”

It is to be noted in this connection that Mr. B.M. Abbas, a member of Board of the East Pakistan Water and Power Development Authority, is a member of President Ayub’s entourage. Mr. Abbas belonged to pre-partition Bengal Irrigation Department and is by profession an irrigation engineer. The Chairman of the West Pakistan Water and Power Development Authority is also in the team.

5. A report appearing in the Pakistan Observer of March 3, datelined Peking March 2, said:-

“One of the foreseeable results of the confabulations at expert-level is a joint venture between China and Pakistan in tackling the vexatious and corroding flood problem in East Pakistan. The expert team of President Ayub includes Mr. B.M. Abbas of East Pakistan, WAPDA.

“China which had successfully solved one of its greatest problems of flood caused by Hwang Ho River (the sorrow of China) it is felt, definitely make considerable contribution to the solution of the problem.

It may be noticed that both the Morning News report and the Pakistan Observer report used practically the same language. It is more than probable that both the reports utilised the same hand-out issued by the Chinese Embassy in Karachi or the Chinese Consulate General here.

6. A PPA report in the Pakistan Observer of the same date says:

“Pakistan is believed to have submitted projects costing 1,200 million dollars to the Chinese Government to enable her to identify the fields in which it could extend aid to Pakistan.”
The same report continues saying that China had shown keen interest in Pakistan’s Third Five-Year Plan and had asked for a list of projects under the Third Five-Year Plan so that it could locate the fields of co-operation between the two countries. It further states that knowledgeable quarters in Peking said that President Ayub may raise the question of Chinese assistance to Pakistan’s Plans in order to make up the gap in foreign exchange requirements and expectations from other sources of aid. It mentions the possibility that China may be able to cover substantially the gap of 450 million dollars – at least to the extent of covering something between 100 – 200 million dollars – over the next five years. The same report quotes expert opinion to say that there are two things in which Pakistan could gain a good deal from the experience of China without imparting its own economic and social system; first, rural electrification and second, flood control. Also mentioned in this connection is their experiment with reclamation of desert lands especially in the great GOBI desert. The same report says that Pakistan could buy iron ore from China for its proposed steel-mill in Karachi being set up with Western help. This means that the same ore may be available for the Chittagong plant as well.

7. In principle there is nothing objectionable in Pakistan trying to secure economic aid for development from China. What is most curious is that Pakistan which has of late flirted with China while taking extreme care not to jeopardize its association with Western military blocs should now make such an open approach to China. The purpose therefore, considering the limited Chinese ability to extend massive economic aid abroad, must be something different. This is quite obvious from the background happenings shortly before Ayub’s departure.

8. We noticed that General Musa, Commander-in-Chief of Pakistan Armed Forces, made a long inspection trip to Pakistan military establishments in the area, ostensibly to carry out routine inspection. Curiously enough, a group of ‘Chinese tourists’ suddenly arrived in Dacca at the same time. Our reports are that they visited mostly those places which Musa had visited. They departed as quietly as they came. We are trying to secure some identification of this group and if successful we shall inform the Government promptly.

9. The most sinister aspects of this visit are: first, Chinese co-operation in flood control and secondly, Chinese aid for development projects, which, we are certain, will be mostly in East Pakistan? That the Pakistan Government has been bothered about the flood control problem in East Pakistan has been known over the years. The East Pakistan Finance Minister Hafizur Rahman told me that to devise effective flood control measures for East Pakistan was practically an impossibility. Some protection could be afforded by building embankments along the traditionally turbulent rivers but there was no way at all to control the tremendous amount of water that flows down the Brahmaputra and the Meghan during the monsoons and for a few months afterwards. In this context I recall a fervent plea made by the Narayanganj Chamber of Commerce at their Annual Meeting for effective flood control measures. In this plea it was stated that for the time being Pakistan may not go in for large scale measure which would require consultation with and the co-operation of neighbouring countries – and here they mentioned India and China which is significant. The Governor in his reply to the speech delivered at the Narayanganj Chamber of Commerce Annual Meeting did not touch upon this question at all but said that the Government had a master plan and that a beginning would be made with the construction of some three thousand miles of embankments along the rivers which needed to be controlled. The basic problem for flood control measures in East Pakistan is therefore the control of the waters of the Brahmaputra. This is where Pak-China collusion comes in.

10. I understand that some months ago information had been conveyed to the Government of India to the effect that the Chinese were up to some mischievous deeds along the upper reaches of the Brahmaputra i.e. that part of the stream which is in Tibet. Looking at the map of this region one would easily realize that no control of the waters of the river Brahmaputra is possible without an overall plan to control the following rivers:-

i) Luhit – this river has headwaters in China.

ii) Dibang – the headwaters of this river are located south of Mcmahon Line.

iii) Dihang – this is the name for the Brahmaputra in the NEFA area before confluence with Luhit and Dibang.

iv) Subansiri – the Tibetan part of this stream is not properly identifiable, but it seems to have headwaters in the Chayul and Lhuntse areas.

v) The Kameng River with catchments area and headwaters entirely in the Kameng frontier division.

vi) Manas – this river originates in Tibet and flows through Bhutan before reaching Indian Territory. River Tawang is one of its tributaries.

vii) Sankosh.

viii) Amo (Torsa) – this river originates in the Chumbi valley and then flows through Bhutan into West Bengal and then joins the Brahmaputra in East Pakistan.
The above concerns the Brahmaputra basin so far as the right bank is concerned. If we are to consider the widest aspect of the conspiracy that is probably being hatched now in Peking, we have to take into account the Ganges and the Indus basins as well. So far as the Ganges basin is concerned, the most important river in this context is the South Kosi. Of the two upper branches – Sun Koshi and Arun – the latter originates in Tibet and flows through Nepal before joining the Ganges in India. So far as the Indus basin is concerned we have to look at the Shyok river west of Aksai Chin, possibly the upper reaches of Gilgit river are also involved.

It is quite possible that in the final communiqué there will be a declaration to the effect that Pakistan and China have agreed to collaborate in the matter of flood control in East Pakistan. Whether this is stated clearly and specifically in the communiqué or not, we may, in view of the previous information with the Government of India about Chinese plans with Brahmaputra, expect that there will be an approach to us to sit down with Pakistan and China to devise overall measures for controlling the flow of the Brahmaputra in which again we ourselves are interested because of the damage often done by this turbulent river in the Brahmaputra valley in Assam. Similar approaches are likely to be made with regard to the Ganges waters also. Whether we agree to join in a tripartite consultation or not there is nothing to prevent China and Pakistan from making loud noises about the possible flood control measures on these two rivers. Any reluctance on our part to join would be exhibited as selfish intransigence on our part. Particularly the East Pakistanis will be told that their sorrows from floods cannot be ended as we are not co-operating. On the other hand if we agree to join it would mean our being involved once again in a discussion with China on the old question of where exactly the border between India and China lies. This is a simple and effective method of turning the flank of the Colombo Proposals. It is therefore quite easy to see also what Pak-Chinese collusion in the upper Indus basin can do to our territorial integrity. At the same time we should not forget that there is nothing to prevent China from constructing flood control works on their own on any of the rivers mentioned above wherever the territory is now actually in physical Chinese control. Whether all this leads to better flood control in East Pakistan or not the damage to us will be there and this precisely is the objective that Pakistan and China seem to be seeking together.

A Sino-Pak agreement on Chinese assistance to development projects will automatically mean the introduction of large numbers of Chinese personnel of dubious antecedents and purpose into East Pakistan. This cannot under any circumstances be anything but prejudicial to our security. We should not be surprised if this is precisely what Ayub has in mind. While we cannot prevent economic collaboration between Pakistan and China and the consequent introduction of Chinese military personnel into East Pakistan in the guise of civilian experts and advisers we would be well advised to take corrective measures immediately. This would mean the formulation of a clear politicomilitary objective for us in this region and its enforcement in the face of every possible Pakistani manoeuvre. It would be fruitless consolation for us to think that with this collaboration with China, Ayub will probably be damaging the long term interests of Pakistan itself because the actual limit of collaboration with China that Ayub may really have in mind may not extend beyond the possibility of doing immediate damage to us. This will also serve the short-term objective of Chinese policy of driving one arm of the pincer through Assam-Bengal region up to the Bay of Bengal. The vast implication of this pincer for the Indo-China region is too evident to need any elaboration. Any Chinese planner in his senses cannot but think of this.

14. The way this fits with in Pakistan's India policy are quite simple. As Pakistan's present Ambassador to Washington, Mr. G.Ahmed, once put it very succinctly in private conversation, Pakistan finds India too big for her comfort.
It is therefore Pakistan's policy to correct this imbalance created by geography and history by "cutting down India to size". The detaching of Assam from India would serve part of this purpose and this can be achieved through collaboration with the Chinese. Part of Pakistan's assessment appears to be that if this in fact happens and Pakistan must do its best to bring this about, India will probably console herself with the thought that this has effectively shortened the frontier with China. Neither Pakistan nor China expects any large scale involvement of the Western powers in this particular region. This is based on the military assumption that when the chips are down it is the Soviet Union which is the real enemy of the United States and not China at least at present because China is not yet strong enough to have a direct conflict with the United States.
For the time being therefore, so far as India is concerned, the application of salami tactics could be both effective and useful.

15. I am told that Ayub does not really trust the Chinese. There is no reason to think that the Chinese trust Ayub either. Their friendship therefore is only a mutuality of limited interests. This can only mean their common enmity towards India. Unless the Unites States' assessment of Ayub's policy regarding China has undergone a change in the meantime, it used to be that Ayub can be expected to go a long way with China out of sheer anti-Indian feelings but he will definitely not go so far as not to be able to turn back. Whether this is wishful thinking or not it would appear incorrect for us to depend on the possibility of effective U.S. pressure on Ayub to desist from his pro-Chinese activities.
Counter-measures, if any, therefore have to be taken by us alone.
16. I have tried to give some indications of the dangers posed to us by what happens during Ayub’s visit to China. These need to be worked out in detail by those who are experts in the field. I feel that this matter needs urgent consideration because there is probably not much time to lose. If Chinese dialectic is still operating the way it has in the past, the year 1967 must be crucial in their time-table.

Yours sincerely,

0425. Note Verbale from the Ministry of External Affairs to the Pakistan High Commission in India regarding China-Pakistan Joint Communiqué.

New Delhi, March 13, 1965.

The Ministry of External Affairs presents its compliments to the High Commission for Pakistan and has the honour to invite attention to the China-Pakistan Joint Communiqué signed by Marshal Chen-Yi, Vice Premier and Minister of Foreign Affairs of the People’s Republic of China and Mr. Zulfikar Ali Bhutto, Minister of Foreign Affairs of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan.

2. The Communiqué states:

“The two parties noted with pleasure the completion of the work of boundary demarcation in accordance with the boundary agreement concluded between the two countries in March, 1963. They were pleased that this task had been carried out by the Joint China Pakistan Boundary Commission in a spirit of unfailing friendship and cooperation and that the China Pakistan boundary protocol is to be signed shortly in Pakistan by the two Foreign Ministers.”

3. It is common knowledge that Pakistan and the People’s Republic of China have no common border, the two countries being separated by the Indian State of Jammu and Kashmir. The presence of Pakistan in the northern part of Kashmir is based on aggression and illegal occupation and Pakistan has no locus standi whatsoever to enter into negotiations or conclude agreements with any country regarding the boundaries of Jammu and Kashmir. The boundary agreement entered into between China and Pakistan in March 1963, is, therefore, altogether illegal and invalid. The Government of India has, on several occasions, pointed out this fact to the Pakistan Government and protested against the action of the Pakistan Government in concluding an agreement with the People’s Republic of China. Notwithstanding these protests, the Government of Pakistan has, under the pretext of entering into a provisional agreement with the People’s Republic of China, gone ahead with the appointment of a Joint Boundary Commission and the demarcation of the boundary. These measures taken by the Pakistan Government belie the Pakistan claim that the so-called boundary agreement with the People’s Republic of China is a provisional one. Indeed, in the joint communiqué issued on Peking on March 7, 1965, it seems that even the pretence that the agreement is a provisional one, has been abandoned. It is obvious that Pakistan’s motive in concluding this agreement is to share the fruits of aggression with People’s Republic of China and to exploit Sino-Indian difference in the pursuit of Pakistan’s hostile policies against India.

4. The Government of India strongly protests against the reference to the illegal activities of the Joint China-Pakistan Boundary Commission in the joint communiqué. As repeatedly stated by the Government of India in the past, they affirm once again that the completion of the work of the so-called boundary demarcation of Jammu and Kashmir border with Sinkiang is a violation of international law. This collusive attempt to demarcate and annex part of the Indian Union territory in Jammu and Kashmir will never be accepted by the Government of India.

5. The Ministry of External Affairs avails itself of this opportunity to renew to the High Commission for Pakistan the assurance of its highest consideration.

New Delhi, March 13, 1965.
Note Verbale of the Pakistan Ministry of Foreign Affairs to the High Commission of India in Pakistan regarding change in the designation of the Head of the State of Jammu and Kashmir.

Karachi, April 6, 1965.

Ministry of Foreign Affairs
Karachi

No. PID-7/9/6 6th April, 1965.

The Ministry of Foreign Affairs presents its compliments to the High Commission of India in Pakistan, and has the honour to state that according to reports appearing in the press the so-called State Assembly of Indian held Kashmir, on March 30, 1965, adopted a bill changing the designation of the heads of state and Government of the disputed territory in way as to bring them in line with those used in the States which actually form part of the Indian Union.

1. The State of Jammu and Kashmir, although under wrongful military occupation of India, is not a part of the Indian Union. The Government of Pakistan, therefore, totally rejects India’s right to frame laws in respect of any matters pertaining to the state. As the Government of Pakistan has on various occasions made known to the Indian Government, all such moves, intended to bring about the annexation of occupied Kashmir to the Indian Union, are illegal and ultra vires. They infringe Pakistan’s rights and interests as a party to the international agreement, embodied in the UNCIP resolutions of 13th August 1948 and 5th January 1949 and constitute a violations of the express injunction contained in the Security Council resolutions of 30, March 1951 and 24 January 1957, against any attempt, prejudice the exercise by the people of Jammu & Kashmir of their right of self-determination.

2. In persisting in its present unlawful course in occupied Kashmir, the Government of India has shown a systematic and willful disregard of the decisions of the United Nations on the subject and utter lack of interest in reaching a just, honourable and peaceful settlement of the Kashmir dispute with Pakistan. As a party to the UNCIP resolutions mentioned above, the Government of Pakistan wishes to make it clear that is has no intention of abandoning its responsibility of ensuring that the people of the State of Jammu and Kashmir are enabled to exercise, in freedom, the right of self-determination promised under the UNCIP resolutions*.

* India replying in its Note No. D.717/FSP/65 dated April 27 rejected the Pakistan’s Note Pointing out that since J&K was a constituent State of the Indian Union, Pakistan had no locus standi in the matter.
3. The Ministry avails itself of this opportunity to renew to the High Commission the assurance of its highest consideration.

The High Commission of India,
In Pakistan, Karachi.

No.158. May 10, 1965

From Ambassador.
Pakistan Embassies have widely distributed a simple and attractively got-up pamphlet "Indian Aggression in the Rann of Kutch". This was published in April 1965 apparently by Pakistan publications PB 183 Karachi. That this was printed in April and that distribution was arranged when aggression in Kutch was talking place are significant.

2. Pakistan Embassies have also distributed a map demonstrating that India is falsely claiming 3500 square mile of Pakistan territory and committing aggression to occupy this area (i.e. area north of 24°N).

3. Local press have not yet taken much notice of this propaganda effort by Pakistan and we are putting out factual account wherever we can. Can we have a large stock of simple maps?

4. Such publicity as Sheikh ABDULLAH’s arrest has received is expectedly unfavourable. However reactions are still coming in and shall telegraph again.

5. In recent World Muslim Conference where NURUDIN delegation represented Indian Muslims, the resolution on Kashmir reads: “Having acquainted itself with the recent measure taken by the Government of India through the extension of special powers of the Indian President under the Indian Constitution, the conference called upon U.N. to safeguard the sanctity of its resolutions and to take effective measures in order to keep up the U.N. prestige and respect before the people of the world so that Kashmiris can exercise their birthright of self-determination in a fair plebiscite under neutral supervision”.
6. Apparently this resolution will have some status if approved by King FEISAL. According to what NURUDDIN told us, King likely to withhold approval after listening to NURUDIN.

7. Press report that AYUB KHAN will visit Jordan 11th June.

TOP SECRET

Record of Talks between Prime Minister Lal Bahadur Shastri and General Secretary of the CPSU Brezhnev.

Moscow, May 14, 1965.

Brezhnev. How do you feel?

S. Thank you for the hospitality. I am feeling fine. I am grateful for the warm reception we received from the government and people of Soviet Union.

B. This cannot be otherwise. There is a Russian proverb: “love begets love”. We are also very warmly received in India. Spring is late this year. Usually it is much warmer. The Moscow region has a healthy climate as Mr. Kaul can testify. Ambassadors of African and Asian countries feel well here. The political climate in Moscow is also very healthy.

Swaran Singh. Even the snow is very attractive.

B. Of course. Some Cuban guests were here recently. They had never seen snow. Raul Castro was impressed more by snow than anything else.

Human beings can get easily accustomed to a different climate. When I was in Sudan and Mr. Aboud was still in power, it was plus 24 degrees centigrade. The shepherds in the desert asked me if it was as cold in Moscow! I could not explain it to them.

I must say that our people have special love, sympathy and respect for Indian people. Mr. Kaul and all Indian delegations felt this warmth and sympathy. We may also tell you about the warmth and sympathy that exists between our people and yours. We know this from our people who work in India. We do not want hide from our people the cooperation and friendship we have with you. Shepherds in Kazakhstan are very particular about the kind of tea they drink, not so much about their food. They asked me to send them Indian tea and I had it sent to them. I always keep some Indian tea for my friends.
It goes without saying that our sympathy grew in our party, people and government on many international problems and in the political field. The modern time is like a turbulent occasion of political tendencies and people always like noble ideas.

To be quite frank with you, there is a process of political struggle going on the world between various forces – of peace and progress and contrary forces. This is nothing new and I wish to say at the very start that people who try to find friends feel the impulse of this struggle of the people. In this age and time it is very important to know that popular forces are moving forward. People take active part in political affairs and they know good policies from bad ones. This distinguishes our time from previous time. This process began to develop especially after world war II. It results from the fact that about 50 states participated in the last war. This explains the active interest of people in politics. I am saying all this because you realise it as well as I do and this examples the deep feeling of sympathy between our two people which is based on their common experience and unity.

According to our tradition we should have heard you first, though I started first and I beg your pardon. I am not a diplomat; really I am not a diplomat. I had ambition of entering a diplomatic school. Fortunately I was not accepted and I am glad I am not a diplomat. I was told by the Central Committee that I was an Engineer and should help in industrialization and only people with education in humanities could go into the diplomacy. Ulianov was the Director in Krupsky Diplomatic School and he refused to take me. I was at that time sad but I feel I was fortunate. The Foreign Ministry will not allow me to say anything undiplomatic. I do not talk diplomatic language.

Comrade Kosygin and others have told me of their meeting with you. I would like to say a couple of words. I and Kosygin and all members of our government are happy at your visit and hope it will lead to further strengthening our friendship. It is a new stage in our friendship. I hope you will not feel offended by our frank answers. I would now like to hear you.

Shastri. I would like to reciprocate your most warm-heard sentiments. I have also not been a diplomat, nor have I had any education in science. I have been a worker all my life, a worker in the freedom movement. We had to struggle for about 30 years to achieve our freedom. I have discharged my duties in a way that is nothing to do with diplomacy. I am always frank and simple worker. Even in my present post of responsibility I work in the same spirit as before. I will therefore be quite frank and speak to you freely about certain problems which are vital for us and also for the world.

B. The easier it would be for us to talk.
F.M. The greater part of Mr. Shastri’s education was in British jails where he spent many years.

B. That is the highest university. That was the time when everything progressive was persecuted.

S. Our general policy is to have friendship all round. We do not want there should be conflict or clash between different countries or ideologies. We feel that in the present day world there can be no regimentation as such. There will be countries and people who feel and think in one way and others who think in another way. In the circumstances, an effort should be made to have friendly relations with all, as far as possible, even if we do not fully agree with them. However, our relationship with USSR is based on some higher objectives and firmer considerations. We see eye to eye with the Soviet Union on many vital matters, especially in international affairs. Some of the basic principles which are essential for keeping the world together have received the fullest support of the Soviet Union. India has also fully subscribed to them.

Peace and peaceful coexistence have been the main objectives of the Soviet Union. Peace in the present day world has the highest importance. Wars and conflicts will have to come to an end. It is absolutely essential that we should work for the maintenance of peace. By adopting a policy of peaceful coexistence, I would like to pay my sincere tribute to the Soviet Government for declaring in unequivocal terms the urgent need to adopt the principle of peaceful coexistence. I cannot think of a more wholesome principle for avoiding a major conflict. The endorsement of this principle by the Soviet Union has gone very far in promoting a better world on this planet. These principles are wholly acceptable to us and I feel we have to pursue them more earnestly and more vigorously.

Soon after the attainment of our freedom our great leader Nehru enunciated certain principles and policies in international affairs. One of the most important policies he adumbrated was non-alignment. That policy has been pursued all along by us and even and after his passing away we have stuck to it and we propose to stick to it in future. Non-alignment is a policy of keeping peace. It gives freedom to the people of the country to pursue their own way of life and the government has freedom of thought and action. It is also not possible for developing countries to indulge in conflicts by associating themselves with any particular bloc as their main objective should be their economic development. We are convinced this policy of non-alignment is good for India. In fact it has now been adopted by a large number of countries. The non-aligned conference in Cairo last year further strengthened it.

I might add that we have to face two tremendous problems during the last three or four years. We had the Chinese aggression in 1962 and there has been recent attack on our boarders by Pakistan. The Chinese have adopted an attitude of complete non-cooperation. They do not want to talk or discuss and they have been carrying on a terrible hostile propaganda against India. In fact they are associates, i.e. Pakistan, and if I might add Indonesia have also joined hands in bringing India into contempt and create special situation for us.

It is impossible for us to understand the reason for Pakistan to make this recent attack. I do not know if you have any idea of China’s objectives and intentions. They are very much on our border and they mass their troops and there is a constant threat to our security. Now Pakistan has also adopted a similar attitude. In spite of this, we have stuck to non-alignment. I must say India should get support from those countries which appreciate our policy of non-alignment and peace. If the aggressor and the aggressed are put on the same level, the aggressor will never realise his mistakes and there will be a constant threat to the peace of the world.

May I say Mr. B that India and the Indian people have great faith in the Soviet Union? They have appreciated greatly Soviet Union’s attitude on Kashmir. Their expectation is that in the matter of the recent Pak aggression Soviet Union will lend its support to India. In fact my visit here has been interpreted by the Indian people that at this difficult juncture I shall get the Soviet Union’s moral support and it will help in changing the present climate which prevails in regard to this aggression by Pakistan. If there is no such indication, I might say that it would cause me and the people of my country much disappointment.

I do not mean to suggest that Soviet Union should not advise us for a peaceful settlement, but if there is no indication in regard to Pakistan’s attitude it would in a sense weaken our policy of non-alignment. Those who are aligned will have the facility to commit aggression. It should not mean that those who uphold non-alignment should not express their views somewhat frankly.

* * *

B. It is pleasant for me to hear your warm words about our policy of peaceful coexistence. It is not a temporary policy but is believed in firmly by our government, party and people. This policy of ours has played and is playing a decisive role in the world today. Without this policy it is doubtful what shape the struggle in the international arena would take in this thermo-nuclear age. I must pay here a tribute to our Party and people who with huge effort liquidated the nuclear monopoly of USA and will not give place to them. It has defended peace in the world. We are going to adhere firmly to this policy in future. Not or a single government or people could have any doubt on this.
We have highly appreciated and will always appreciate the policy of non-alignment of government and people of India. This is a policy of peace and friendship between countries and is directed against unleashing of war.

If we turn to events of the recent past, we see that the cooperation between the Indian and Soviet people has contributed to the interest of both countries and to peace. This is already a small history in itself. It has not only strengthened friendship between our two countries, but has won the support of all people in the world. This is a very important principle in the policy of states. Any departure or change in this course can be used and interpreted in various ways by imperialists and others. And the more we have to bear in mind the people who wish to make a wedge between people who believe in peaceful coexistence and divide them. I should like to express the hope that India and Government of India will hold firmly to the policy of non-alignment and struggle for peace as in the past. There are no conditions attached to it. We hold firmly to the policy of peace.

There may be circumstantial causes for the policy of certain countries at a particular time. This does not mean that there should be a general change in basic policies. It is indeed we who bear the brunt of these difficulties and threats but we firmly adhere to these policies.

We highly appreciate that at this complicated time you decided to come to us. It is very significant. The fact of these deep feelings of sympathy and cordiality and the help we will give you already testify to this. Mr. S., I request you to understand that the matter is not of strong words, but of dedication to policy. Each word of yours has a weight to it and force and strength behind it. It is very important that we do not spoil this policy by loud polemics — this policy of peace and peaceful coexistence. We now declare, as in the past, we were never against your friendship with any other people. You have a perfect right to friendship with any other people or country. In your statement I felt a hint that at some stages Soviet Union has not rendered sufficient help. With this I cannot agree. In the Sino-Indian conflict we took a correct stand. It contributed to the fact that this conflict did not develop. The Chinese leaders consider our statements to have been wrong and still blame us. On the Kashmir question we took a clear stand. We never changed it, taking into consideration the whole complex.

When Ayub Khan was here, he interpreted this in his own way. I personally told him how much we valued India and her policy of non-alignment. Because it is in the general interest of people, against colonialism and for peace and not a major international issue (sic). I gave him a sharp rebuttal to his remarks against India and this conflict. He said he appreciated my views. It is not yet clear what effect my statement will have on Ayub Khan but it cannot be ignored.
I did not agree with his views that India is an aggressive country. I feel our statement has had some effect.

Every question like a medal has two sides to it and each side is interwoven with the other. I think you underestimate our Tass statement.

Kuznetsov. (First Vice Foreign Minister). Ayub Khan has written to Comrade Kosygin that he is willing to settle.

B. I told Ayub Khan that non-alignment was the general line of the people and not one of expediency. I told him what I thought of his policies of alignment in front of my colleagues. I did this for India and not for Pakistan. Evidently aggressors and imperialists were responsible for instigating this conflict but we shall see how it ends.

In the Central Committee they considered Ayub Khan’s letter and we will send an urgent reply. If it does not contain any threat to Pakistan it will be in favour of India and will support a peaceful settlement.

We understand that you expect more firm support from us. But we assure you that would inflame the whole world. Mr. Kaul told me in a reception that we could make changes here or there. We shall consider this.

We are ready to give economic support to India. You may feel it is not adequate. Yesterday Kosygin reported to the Presidium. We are going to help though we do not know the volume. You may tell your people that we sympathise with your ideas.

As regards military assistance I read the note. I do not know the details and the volume but Mr. Kaul has informed us.

Your visit to our country will be very useful and you may assure your people of our deep sympathy and support in military and economic fields and in improving their life. There is no condition attached.

We are justified in expecting your support in international matters. We appreciate India’s support to us in the Second Afro Asian Conference. We hope it will struggle against imperialism and colonialism. The Soviet Union which rendered so much help to this struggle should attend it. We sincerely appreciate your feeling.

In the communiqué we may mention our common adherence to peaceful coexistence and our appreciation of non-alignment and the role this policy plays in the struggle of peace and against aggression in Vietnam, Congo, etc. Such a document will show our great support and strength to India and her policies and to you Mr. Shastri. Nothing can be of more help to India and to you. I want to speak frankly and to say that this would indeed be a strong support to India against such forces as are against your policy. I believe you, of course, that you will adhere to non alignment and I feel this would remove any impression or illusion that Soviet Union support to India has weakened. We will give a reply to Ayub Khan taking into consideration our talks with you. The friendship meeting tomorrow will also be very significant. We will try to make it as great as before. I hope you are not offended with me or my Government.

S. Thank you. I am glad that you were as frank as I was. I am very happy of your reaction and am please(d) to know about the talks you had with Ayub Khan. I hope it will have the desired effect on him. In so far as our basic policy is concerned, we have stuck that in the most adverse circumstances. There will be no difficulty in pursing that in future, however the integrity and the sovereignty of a country first and we have to take every step to better our defences. I once again express my most sincere thanks for this opportunity and I have no doubt it will bring us closer and closer.

B. I agree that sovereignty and integrity is most important and comes first. We always want to see India progress and develop and we always think so and believe it. We and you ought always think to stick to our policies which we have chosen. If there are any changes and a country is not firm, then adversaries will exploit it. I refer first to my own government but is applies to all governments. I want to tell you Mr. S one thing and would like you to understand and appreciate it. Our people are glad even at the cost of huge expenditure we have incurred on our economic and defence might because it will defend peace. We will not spare any money for it. Some say we have atom bombs, but they are for peace. This is not my personal policy but that of the Party and the Government and was recently published.

S. You have not visited India for a long time and may I extend an invitation for you to visit India at your convenience and as early as possible.

B. With pleasure. I would never refuse such a peasant invitation. I must consult my colleagues. It came as a surprise to me. I did not expect it. I do not see any prospect till September. I appreciate it very much. India left an indelible impression on me. I could talk for a whole day about it. We shall meet tomorrow. I am glad you decided to come. It is not a diplomatic custom to go every 5 years. I can go without any protocol and you can some to us for a cup of tea, as we say, and go back the day after any time you feel like it and have a friendly chat. It takes only 6 hours time and only two days in all. If you have a draft joint communiqué, that should reflect our common political points and be of strong support to your government and point of view.

Summary record of discussions about the joint communiqué between Prime Minister Lal Bahadur Shastri and Soviet Prime Minister Kosygin and his colleagues.

Moscow, May 15, 1965.

Shastri: I do not know the details, but I understand that no reference has been made in the proposed joint communiqué to the aggression by Pakistan. We can appreciate your difficulty in this matter, although it would have given us greater strength in meeting the situation as it has arisen on our borders. We would make every effort to avoid a violent conflict, but we do not know if Pakistan will adopt a peaceful policy, not only in Kutch-Sindh border but elsewhere. Pakistan has been nibbling our territory at various points. They think that unless Kashmir is given to them, they will continue to fight in this manner. We have very clear and categorical views on Kashmir. We have declared it from the beginning as part and parcel of India and cannot part with it. I am glad Soviet Union’s position on Kashmir is the same as it was before. We are thankful for the attitude adopted by Soviet Union so far. As I said, I have no doubt there has been no deviation from that stand. But if Pakistan persists in creating trouble because Kashmir is not handed to them as they want, then we have no alternative to meet the situation effectively. I can imagine difficulties in putting things in black and white in the joint communiqué, but I have an impression during the talks I had with you and Mr. Brezhnev that you very well understand our position and as you said, your sympathies are with India and will remain with India.

I need not add that as a non-aligned country we always expect your help and support in times of need and urgency. I leave the matter at that.

Kosygin: I can tell the Prime Minister one thing about Pakistan. When we had talks with Ayub Khan, we told him in no uncertain terms that all conflicts which arise on Indo-Pak border, he will not meet understanding from us. He said there would not be any such conflict and he added he understood our position. We are of the opinion that any reference in the communiqué to border conflicts will not solve anything, but may complicate the situation. And both sides may have to seek allies in the West. We feel it is better to avoid this. There is no question of mentioning anything in black and white. We think it suits the interests of India.

As for Kashmir our stand on this question is not changing and our policy is going to adhere what I said this morning. We would like to ease tension in Asia.
0430. Note Verbale from the Pakistan High Commissioner in India to the Ministry of External Affairs regarding the statement of Home Minister Gulzari Lal Nanda on Kashmir.

New Delhi, July 10, 1965.

Office of The High Commissioner for Pakistan
New Delhi

No.16(9)-P/65 10th July, 1965

The High Commission for Pakistan in India presents its compliments to the Ministry of External Affairs, Government of India, and under instructions from the Government of Pakistan, has the honour to draw the attention of the Ministry to the statement made by Mr. Gulzarilal Nanda, Home Minister, in Srinagar on July 1, 1965.

2. According to the press reports, the Home Minister stated that Kashmir was an integral part of India. It was a settled fact which could not be the subject of any debate or negotiations (Times of India – July 2, 1965). Again “we are prepared to live in peace with Pakistan but there is no question of any negotiations so far as Kashmir is concerned” (Times of India, July 3, 1965)

3. The High Commission would like to know whether the Home Minister has been correctly reported, and, if so, whether the policy of the Government of India on the subject of Kashmir is now as stated by its Home Minister.

The High Commission avails itself of this opportunity to renew to the Ministry of External Affairs the assurances of its highest consideration.

0431. Note Verbale of the Ministry of External Affairs to the Pakistan High Commission in India regarding the statement of Home Minister on Kashmir.

New Delhi, August 28, 1965.

Ministry of External Affairs
New Delhi

No.1755-OSD(K)/65 August 28, 1965

The Ministry of External Affairs presents its compliments to the High Commission for Pakistan in India and has the honour to refer to their Note No.16(9)-P/65, dated 10 July, 1965

2. What the Home Minister stated in Srinagar is merely a reiteration of what the Prime Minister of India had repeatedly declared in Parliament and what India’s Representative have stated again and again in the Security Council, ever since India lodged a complaint with the Security Council against Pakistan aggression. The sum and substance of these declarations is that Pakistan has no locus standi in Jammu and Kashmir, which is a constituent state of the Indian Union. This elementary fact requires no emphasis and is fully known to the Government of Pakistan. Even on 27 December, 1962, when the Joint Talks opened in Rawalpindi, the leader of the Indian Delegation, Sarder Swaran Singh, put the position beyond any shadow of doubt in the following words:

“So far as we are concerned, Kashmir has become an integral part of the Republic of India by internationally accepted practices of law and of democracy. It is an established and greatly valued part of our national life, symbolic of the secular ideals we are genuinely trying to realize.”

3. The Ministry, therefore, rejects the High Commission’s Note on the ground that is an interference in the internal affairs of India.

4. The Ministry avails itself of this opportunity to renew to the High Commission the assurances of its consideration.

The High Commission for Pakistan in India.

I am directed to refer to your telegram dated 20 September 1965, asking for a plan and schedule for withdrawal of troops, and to reply as under:

You have asked for a plan and schedule for withdrawal of our troops from their present position and you offer to send United Nations observers to assist in the withdrawal. You would appreciate that no withdrawal can take place until it has been jointly agreed to by representative of the two armed forces and a mutually accepted programme of withdrawal has been prepared. So long as such a programme has not been agreed to withdrawal cannot start and as such United Nations observers cannot begin to perform their function of supervising withdrawal.

In the meantime, I should like to state my Government's position on this question. You appear to be concentrating almost exclusively on making arrangements for withdrawal of troops and re-establishing the old cease-fire in Jammu and Kashmir. In our judgement, however, military disengagement should proceed concurrently with an honourable political settlement. In other words, it is imperative that we should evolve a self-executing arrangement and procedures that would ensure an honourable settlement of the Jammu and Kashmir dispute which is the basic cause of the present conflict. Without such an arrangement it is hard to envisage an effective programme for the withdrawal of forces. Moreover, if immediate steps are not taken to bring about an honourable settlement of the Jammu and Kashmir dispute, we would be faced with the real danger of resumption of hostilities which we well lead to a conflict of much greater dimensions.

I shall be grateful if this communication is circulated as a Security Council document.

TOP SECRET

Letter from Indian Ambassador in USSR T. N. Kaul to Foreign Secretary C. S. Jha regarding the Soviet stand on Kashmir.

No. Amb/228/65
28th September 1965.

My dear Foreign Secretary,

I enclose a copy of a hurried Note, which I dictated on the 26th September, on the Soviet stand on Kashmir. Jaipal had, in the meanwhile, seen the Head of the India section on the Foreign Office, Mr. Smirnov. I enclose a copy of the Note recorded by Jaipal on this meeting (not available here). I have reported from time to time, almost verbatim, what the Soviet leaders have told me, and my assessment is based on these talks.

2. Naturally, neither our stand nor the Soviet stand, or the stand of any other country, can remain absolutely the same in a dynamic and developing situation. My assessment, however, is that:

(1) The Soviets will not go back on our legal title to the whole State;

(2) They will however support a realistic political settlement of the Kashmir problem more or less on the basis of the cease fire line with minor adjustments (acceptable to both sides,) provided such a settlement is acceptable to both sides.

(3) They will support us in our claim to the valley both for strategic reasons as well as on the grounds of our secularism.

3. It is, however necessary for us to get support from other countries also, as that would further strengthen the hands of the Soviet Union. While we should make every effort in this direction, much will depend on what China intends to do. The opinion in the Soviet Union is that China will not embark on a military adventure against India in the present circumstances, but she may keep on giving us pin-pricks here and there – mainly through threatening statements, and possibly by small scale skirmishes here and there. I presume we can deal with Chinese notes and their pin-pricks through our own strength. Should, however, China embark on a sizeable invasion of India, a new situation will arise where we will have to seek the support of friendly countries without giving up our basic stand on Kashmir. My assessment is that the Soviet Union will give us military supplies and equipment on the basis of existing credits as long as we do not join a military alliance hostile to them. They will do this without any pre-conditions of our making concessions to Pakistan in the Valley. I do not know what your assessment of the Americans stand in such a situation is.
If we could get the Americans to go along with us on the same lines as the Soviet Union, that would be the best way of tackling such a situation. If the Americans know that the Soviet stand is firm, they may perhaps be persuaded to go along with us. In America also there will be different pulls from various directions. The Pentagon will probably want to keep its bases in Peshawar, Gilgit, etc. and try to pressurize the US Government to persuade us to make concessions to Pakistan for this purpose and to wean Pakistan away from China. The Soviets are also getting suspicious of Pakistan’s motives, particularly after Ayub’s telephone call to Johnson, his rather vague reply to Kosygin’s offer for a summit meeting, etc. Today’s Soviet papers have also published a report that the Pentagon has recommended the lifting of the embargo on US arms supplies to Pakistan.

4. Our military successes in the recent fighting with Pakistan have impressed the Soviets. They cannot, however, understand why we cannot deal with the infiltrators on our side of the cease fire line. We should be able to do this in order to impress Pakistan as well as the rest of the world; otherwise they will suspect that there is some local support for the infiltrators. Some people have even asked me why we cannot send guerrillas across the cease fire line and why only Pakistan can do so. I have, of course, replied that we do not wish to provoke a conflict or a conflagration with Pakistan. But this argument does not seem to carry much conviction with outsiders. The implementation of the withdrawal of “armed personnel” to the pre-5th August position will naturally create difficulties. I fear, however, that this may be linked with the final solution of the Kashmir question. We shall, of course resist this, but if there is a stalemate between the positions of India and Pakistan on this question, some solution will have to be found. I do not know whether strategically we can afford to give up the Chhamb sector occupied by Pakistan at present in return for the posts we have occupied across the cease fire line at Kargil, Tithwal, Haji Pir, etc. On this only our military experts can advice appropriately. If we are not prepared to do this, we may have to go back to the pre-5th August position in view of the latest resolution of the Security Council. Whether we can get any guarantees from the UN about prevention of further infiltrations, and making Pakistan responsible for them, remains to be seen.

5. In the circumstances we shall have to consider whether or not we should try for a final settlement of the Kashmir question at this junction, or postpone it to a later date, when the atmosphere between India and Pakistan is improved. China will do everything to prevent an improvement in the relations between India and Pakistan. The recent fighting must also lead to some bitterness in the minds of both countries and peoples, including the military personnel. I doubt therefore the possibility of an early improvement of the atmosphere in relations between India and Pakistan.
6. The Soviet Union’s offer of a summit meeting in the circumstances has some significance, but in the light of Ayub’s vague response, it is doubtful whether such a summit meeting can take place in the foreseeable future, unless America can persuade Ayub to accept it. The British will probably try to prevent such a meeting, because it detracts from their importance and influence in and outside the Commonwealth. America may, however, welcome such an idea because it would encourage Soviet interests in South Asia as a deterrent force against Chinese expansionism. I am not in a position to give any opinion on American feelings on the subject but I would suggest that we probe them on this. If we can get both America and the Soviet Union to persuade Pakistan to come to a reasonable frame of mind, there is a greater chance of a permanent settlement now than there is likely to be later. I do not think China will allow us to become militarily stronger; she will make attempts to weaken us both through her own threats and pin-pricks and through Pakistan.

7. African countries, while concerned at the strained relations between India and Pakistan, are at best likely to adopt an attitude of neutrality, though on the question of self-determination they feel strongly. The Muslim and Arab countries, apart from UAR, sympathise more with Pakistan than with us on the Kashmir question. In the ultimate analysis, it will be the attitude that the Soviet Union and the USA adopt on this question that will influence our position more than anything else, but even their attitude will depend on the attitude that the Afro-Asian countries adopt. I would, therefore, suggest that we actively canvass support among these countries and also among the Latin American countries.

8. I should be grateful to have a glimpse into the thinking of the Government of India about our future moves.

With kindest regards,

Yours sincerely

(T.N. Kaul)

Foreign Secretary,
Ministry of External Affairs,

0437. Note Verbale from the Pakistan High Commission in India to the Ministry of External Affairs complaining of the alleged breach of diplomatic facilities to the High Commission in New Delhi.

New Delhi, October 1, 1965.
Office of the High Commissioner for Pakistan in India
New Delhi

No HC/PS/65-II. October 1, 1965

The High Commission of Pakistan presents its compliments to the Ministry of External Affairs and has the honour to state that in complete disregard of established conventions and international usages the Indian authorities have of late freely committed breaches of diplomatic privilege in regard to the High Commissioner and his suite. Some of the instances were reported in writing. A recital of the following facts, which are by no means exhaustive, will provide some idea of the excesses committed so far:

(1) By a verbal order the High Commissioner was confined to his house. He was allowed to move only to the Chancery provided the Indian guards were seated with him in his car. The insistence of the guards not to allow the movement of the High Commissioner without infringing the inviolability of the diplomatic car left him with no alternative but to remain in the house. The High Commissioner was thus reduced to the status of a prisoner in his own house. The telephone lines having been cut he was unable to discharge his duties. It was only after a few days of negotiations that the Government of India agreed eventually to allow the police guards to follow the High Commissioner’s car instead of insisting to enter it and remain there during the journey.

(2) The guards posted outside the High Commissioner’s house denied entrance to local servants who came from outside and they declined permission to the resident servants to move outside the house. The High Commissioner’s granddaughter who is 2½ years old had to go without milk for a whole day because no servant was allowed to go across the road to fetch a bottle of milk.

(3) Even when the High Commissioner was allowed to move between the Pakistan House and the Chancery the police prohibited the exit or entry of his wife before 7 a.m. and after 5 p.m. every day. The electric current including power supply was denied to the Pakistan House which was plunged into darkness in the evening. The High commissioner and his family had to forego sleep for several sultry summer nights. When an effort was made to explain away the restriction by linking it to an alleged non-observance of black-out regulations the Indian authorities found it hard to explain why the power connection which had nothing whatever to do with lights was also denied. Later, however, the Government of India agreed to give both the ordinary electric current and the power supply up to 11 p.m. The hardship on this score forced on the High Commissioner and his family continued even after 23rd September when the High Commission was verbally informed by the Ministry of External Affairs that “all restrictions had been removed”.

(4) On September 1, 1965 at 11.45 a.m. one of the armed policeman posted outside the main gate forced his entrance into the Chancery and set about locking the principle entrance. The action signified that the Chancery was under the complete control and possession of the Indian police authorities. The police attempt to lock the gate of the Chancery was the most flagrant violation of the universally accepted principle of inviolability of diplomatic premises. Instead of honouring this principle the Indian police fifteen minutes after the incident at the main gate, entered the Chancery premises from a side gate facing the Embassy of Yugoslavia and closed it notwithstanding our remonstrance to the contrary. The control of the Chancery premises so demonstrably taken over by the Indian police was restored to the High Commission only after the matter was taken up at a high level with the Ministry of External Affairs. It was to be hoped after the intervention of the Ministry of External Affairs that the Indian police authorities would not again violate the sanctity of the High Commission premises. The Indian armed police, however, once again forcibly entered the precincts of the Chancery and placed a lock, between the night of September 17 and 18 on the side gate facing the Embassy of Yugoslavia. In accordance with international law the High Commission could well have exercised its legitimate right to remove an impediment placed on its premises but the matter was referred to the Ministry of External Affairs. Even after the removal of the locks after the intervention of the Ministry of External Affairs the Indian armed police continued to obstruct entry from or exit into the Chancery by stationing an “Ambassador” car in front of the main gate and by blocking the side entrance with heavy boulders.

(5) The residences of diplomatic officers were similarly violated on many occasions. On 13th September at 8.15 p.m. a Sub Inspector of police entered the house of the Military Adviser who was ordered not to move out as he was under house arrest. The statement of the Sub Inspector was challenged but he was unable to produce any written document to show that the Military Adviser was in fact placed under house arrest. After the departure of the Sub Inspector the armed police guards entered the premises and pitched their tent in the lawn. They were later moved out at the insistence of the Military Adviser.

(6) On 14th September 1965 policeman forcibly entered the residence of the Naval Adviser and decided on their own to lock the side and back gates of the house. The policeman stated to the Naval Adviser that they had acted under orders of the D.I.G Police. On the same day Attache (Works) of the High Commission was forced by the policeman posted outside his house to use only the front gate for exit or entry.

On September 13, the policemen entered the residence of second secretary Mr. Mohd. Bashir Khan Babar and stationed themselves within the premises.

While a clear understanding was given by the Ministry of External Affair that officer living outside the Chancery could visit each other under police escort this was not allowed in practice. On 13th September, the Military Adviser and his wife; Second Secretary Mr. Ahmad A. Kamal and his wife refused entry to the house of the Deputy High Commissioner whom they went to visit in the evening.

Another Second Secretary of this High Commission Mr. Mohd. Bashir Khan Babar and his wife were refused entry to the house of the Naval Adviser whom they went to visit on September 14. The armed police stationed outside the Naval Adviser’s house stated “You are not allowed to meet each other”.

(7) The police escort provided by the Government instead of providing protection became an unending source of deliberate harassment. Those posted outside the main gate of the Chancery physically chased away the newspaper vendors and delivery men who came to supply essential provisions to the large number of resident in the Chancery. The police escort accompanying the personnel of the High Commissioner on shopping trips kept instigating the shopkeepers not to sell provisions to them.

(8) Entry both to the Chancery and residences of the officers was arbitrarily denied to such essential staff as sweepers and scavengers with the result that the work had to be done by the Officers and staff and their families. Notwithstanding these efforts on our part the congested premises of the Chancery which accommodates nearly 700 persons was faced with a serious health hazard.

(9) A serious case of suspected diphtheria had to be rushed to the Hospital on 13th September 1965 but it was delayed for over an hour and a half by the armed police stationed outside the Chancery. Medical facilities were denied to the officers and Staff of the High Commission. The Medical Officer attached to the High Commission was refused on 13.9.65 exit for the purpose of purchasing essential medicines and was told by the police guard on the main gate “all of you are under house arrest”.

(10) Local police authorities kept intimidating and harassing staff Car drivers and members of the staff of the High Commission. Some members of the staff were abused by the police officials in the most filthy and unprintable language. The statement of one member who was subjected to such treatment is enclosed (not included).

In bringing some of these cases to notice of the Ministry, the High Commission strongly protests against the persistent and flagrant violation of international law and well established diplomatic practice.

The High Commission avails itself of this opportunity to renew to the Ministry the assurances of its highest consideration.

No.HC/PS/65-III. October 1, 1965

The High Commission for Pakistan in India presents its compliments to the Ministry of External Affairs and has the honour to state the following in confirmation of the discussions held in the Ministry of External Affairs on 30th September, 1965, between Messrs. Enayet Karim & Hayat Mehdi of the High Commission and Mr. Maharajakrshna Rasgotra of the Ministry:

(a) The Ministry was informed that the Government of Pakistan had removed all restrictions on the Indian High Commission in Pakistan with effect from 9 A.M, 27th September, 1965. The Ministry was also informed that its promise, made on the 23rd September, to restore normal telephonic connections to the High Commission has not yet been implemented. In reply Mr. Rasgotra stated that the restrictions on telephone will continue till the Ministry receives a direct confirmation from the Indian High Commission in Karachi about restoration of similar facilities to it.

(b) Mr. Rasgotra was also informed that the Government of Pakistan confirmed that the facilities already extended to the Indian High Commission in Pakistan include those of dispatch of diplomatic bags and cipher communications. These facilities, however, have not yet been extended to the High Commission for Pakistan. The position in this regard has been explained fully in the d.o. letter No.HC/PS/65, dated October 1, 1965, from Mr. Afzal Iqbal, Deputy High Commissioner of Pakistan to Mr.M.Rasgotra.

(c) The agreement of the Government of Pakistan, in principle, to the exchange of visitors was conveyed to Mr.Rasgotra who stated that the Ministry was engaged in working out a comprehensive scheme which could form the basis of negotiations in the matter.

(d) Mr.Rasgotra was informed that in spite of repeated assurances by the Ministry during the last two weeks the High Commission has not yet received personal letters addressed to its officers and staff by friends and relatives from abroad. The understanding of the High Commission that considerable amount of personal mail has already accumulated in the various post offices in Delhi was conveyed to Mr. Rasgotra who undertook to have it released.

The High Commission avails itself of this opportunity to renew to the Ministry of External Affairs the assurances of its highest consideration.

MOST IMMEDIATE

No. PAK EMERGENCY NO.4. October 1, 1965

Foreign Secretary from Kewal Singh

Have been trying by all means possible to convey to you facts regarding the many flagrant and unprecedented violations of diplomatic rights and immunities to which premises and personnel of this Mission were subjected during recent hostilities with Pakistan. Owing to persistent communication difficulties and total absence of any codes, I have not been able to send you as full an account as I have wanted to, and cannot even be sure how much of what I have attempted has actually reached you. We have today managed to get Pakistani permission for the return to India of one of our staff whose father died some days ago and am sending him as courier with bag under assurance of safe conduct. This is thus the first chance I have of putting you fully in the picture

2. Pakistan behaviour had three aspects – 1) breaches of our inviolability, 2) attacks on Chancery buildings and 3) maltreatment of our personnel. I am reporting details of each of these aspects in separate savingrams. In addition am sending five copies of protest note which I gave to Foreign Office here on September 28th, which summarises main facts, along with three copies of a fuller account of events which can be cyclostyled and furnished to our newspaper editors to give them better idea of way Pakistani authorities treated the Indian Mission. Nothing comparable has ever happened in history of diplomatic relations and it is imperative for Government of India to pursue matter with utmost urgency and vigour, both diplomatically and publicly. I have circulated our protest personally to all: Heads of Mission here, and from one or two I have afterwards been able to speak to I am confirmed in impression that unless we persist strongly in pressing for a satisfactory reply, reinforced by efforts at highest levels of Government, Pakistanis will succeed in getting away with denials and pretexces as they are already trying to do. For my part, I am doing all I can to impress upon the Pakistanis how seriously we look upon situation; inter alia, am following up my earlier representation to Foreign Office with a call on Aziz Ahmed tomorrow, for what it is worth. It is most important for Government to ensure fullest publicity both at home and abroad so that Pakistanis realise extent of indignation their action arouse in India and, as I trust, extent of concern on part of the international community. While full background is being made available without delay by our publicity authorities to the press, Indian and Foreign, I would also urge that you bring these facts to attention of Foreign Minister and Prime Minister who might wish to take up question themselves. We have to present our case forcefully to arouse international attention. You must also send for ARSHAD HUSSIAN (Pakistan High Commissioner) and tell him in no uncertain terms how Government of India feels, emphasising how impossible it is for any diplomatic mission to function if it is at the mercy of the police as we have been; he should realise what it would be like if we took similar action against the Pakistan High Commission in Delhi.

3. These are some of the measures that are immediately necessary. In addition you might like to decide what further action we should take in case Pakistan fails to give us the assurances and apology asked for in our formal protest, for without such assurances the functioning of a diplomatic mission is rendered practically impossible. In considering this, a factor which I strongly feel needs to be borne in mind along with legal and political aspects, is morale of our staff. During these very grim days I have throughout assured them that they could count on Government taking strongest possible action on their behalf and ensuring that such dangers were not faced in future; unless they feel reassured on this, I am afraid our staff will live in state of constant fear which is neither fair on them nor in interests of Government.

No. PAK EMERGENCY NO.5.

Foreign Secretary from Kewal Singh

Since AZIZ AHMED returned from Pindi only yesterday, I saw him this morning to register my strong protest with him personally for the most flagrant violations of our diplomatic rights. AZIZ AHMED expressed strong resentment at tone of our protest note. I told him that matter was of greatest seriousness and no wording could be too sharp to protest against such outrages. AZIZ AHMED, as is usual with him, got into a temper and talked about India’s naked aggression and the strong national indignation in Pakistan. I told him that I had not come to argue about aggression, which had been started much earlier by Pakistan, but specifically to protest against the treatment meted out to us during the last four weeks and to seek an assurance that such actions would not be repeated as otherwise it would be impossible for our Mission to function. AZIZ AHMED, as was expected, talked vaguely about their reports being very different and no searches or raids having taken place; he tried to dismiss the whole affair by a casual remark that our Mission now had normal facilities which would continued. I told him that the matter was too serious to be treated casually and I requested him to bring the matter to the notice of the highest authorities in Pakistan. He said he would look further in to the matter.

2. I cannot stress too strongly the urgency of our taking strong action on the lines I have already suggested in my earlier communications. A couple of Ambassadors to whom I had spoken are shocked at the behaviour of the Pakistani authorities. The French Ambassador privately told me this morning that he was horrified to read our protest note and that this was a matter of vital concern to all diplomatic missions. Another colleague who saw me last evening said that even in Karachi there was still widespread ignorance about searching and raiding of the Indian Mission. He added if a thing like that had happened in India to the Pakistan High Commission, BHUTTO would have gone around and made pronouncements in half a dozen Capitals including the U.N. condemning India for dishonouring international conventions. His hint was that if we expected either Pakistan Government of other states to realise the enormity of what Pakistan had done, Government of India would have to take energetic measures to arouse international concern on this issue which has far reaching implications for entire diplomatic community. I strongly endorse this view.

New Delhi, October 4, 1965.

The Ministry of External Affairs presents its compliments to the High Commission of Pakistan in India and has the honour to state that the Government of India has just been informed after the removal of the restrictions on the Indian High Commission in Pakistan that in contrast to the facilities which were made available to the Pakistan High Commission and its personnel in India during the whole of September, the Indian High Commissioner in Pakistan and his staff and their family members were treated by the authorities in Pakistan in a manner entirely contrary to diplomatic practices and norms of international behaviour. The residences of the Indian High Commissioner and his staff were raided and ransacked and the official as also the personal belongings were seized. Some of the outrages perpetrated by the Pakistani authorities are briefly indicated below:-

(i) On the 11th of September at 6.30 P.M. all the four residential buildings in which the officers and staff of the High Commission and their families had been accommodated were surrounded by scores of policemen armed with rifles and bayonets. In spite of protests, the police officers rudely told the Indian diplomats and personnel that they must get out of the way as they had orders from the Government to conduct a through search of every family of the Mission, diplomatic or non-diplomatic and no resistance would be tolerated. In the presence of the High Commissioner, searches of the residents were conducted in a most humiliating manner, all trunks and suitcases were opened, personal effects of the families including clothing of ladies and children were searched and scattered on the floor. This outrage was committed in the case of each of the families of the diplomatic officers and staff.

(ii) Even the High Commissioner’s residence was not spared. The High Commissioner’s residence was surrounded by 40 policemen armed with rifles who manhandled the Indian guards and searched every room of the residence including the High Commissioner's office. The Police opened all the suitcases and trunks containing the High Commissioner's personal effects and those of his family and ransacked everything.

(iii) A similar outrageous search was conducted of the residences where the non-diplomatic staff were accommodated. Women and children were terrorised by armed policemen with guns and bayonets breaking down boxes and scattering all the contents. The police also took away large number of official papers, family and personal letters, documents and photographs, Visitors' Book including those of the High Commissioner both from his residence and from the office.

(iv) On the 13th September, further violations and outrages were committed.
At about 2.30 A.M. on 13th September, 1965, the armed police surrounded, occupied and ransacked the Chancery of the High Commission. About 150 men, women and children who had been accommodated in the Chancery under orders of the Pakistan Government were peremptorily ordered out of their rooms. All the rooms were searched and officers living elsewhere were routed out to bring the keys for the office rooms. Every desk, cupboard and safe and every document that could be found was searched. The police openly demanded the High Commission to hand over the cypher documents.
Even personal letters, calendars, and diaries were taken away by the police. This barbarous search lasted for nearly 4 hours. When this was over the High Commissioner wished to stay in his office with his officers for a talk but the policy rudely told him that they were not permitted to talk to one another and insisted on escorting all of them back to their residences. Thereafter none of the Indian diplomats including the High Commissioner was permitted to move out of his residence for a fortnight.
The High Commissioner and the Indian diplomats were treated virtually as prisoners.

(v) On the 21st September, at about 10.30 A.M., further outrages were perpetrated on the Indian High Commission. Over 200 people surrounded the Chancery of the High Commission shouting objectionable slogans.
An hour later another well-organised group of about 3,00 persons arrived with truckloads of stones. They surrounded the compound of the High Commission and threw stones with a well-prepared devices, so that the stones reached the fourth storey of the building. Flaming kerosene-soaked rags were also thrown at the High Commission in an attempt to set the building on fire. In fact they actually succeeded in setting some bushes near the High Commission on fire although fortunately the fire did not spread. A few of the assailants tried to climb the roof to haul down the national flag flying on the High Commission. This brutal attack lasted nearly an hour and came to a stop only when the stones and burning rags had been exhausted. After another hour another organized gang arrived with more truckloads of stones which were systematically hurled at the Chancery building for over half an hour. Almost every window and glass door was smashed by these organized assailants and property inside the High Commission was damaged.

2. What is most shocking is the fact that the Pakistan Government permitted these attacks to be carried on knowing fully well that this was not an unoccupied building but a building occupied by 150 officials, women and children of a Diplomatic Mission who had been forced to stay there under orders of the Pakistan Government on the plea of giving them “protection”. It was the merest (sic) accident that the building did not catch fire although the assailants did their best to set it on fire.

3. Not only has the Government of Pakistan willfully disregarded its obligations to protect a diplomatic Mission but was deliberately inflicted humiliation on the High Commissioner and members of the staff and their families and thus committed serious violations of their diplomatic immunity. This is entirely impermissible under international law and the various international conventions. Hardly anything comparable has ever happened in the history of diplomatic relations and it is amazing that the host Government instead of providing protection for a diplomatic Mission as required under international law and diplomatic practice has itself invaded, ransacked and molested the Diplomatic Mission in gross disregard not only of diplomatic immunity but also of elementary human decency and civilized practice.

4. The Ministry of External Affairs protests in the strongest terms against these shocking outrages committed against the Indian High Commission in Karachi and while claiming full compensation for all the damages caused to the High Commission and the property of its members demands an apology from the Government of Pakistan.

5. The Ministry of External Affairs avails itself of this opportunity to renew to the High Commission for Pakistan the assurances of its highest consideration.

Note Verbale of the Pakistan High Commission in India to the Ministry of External Affairs regarding treatment of the Indian High Commissioner and the personnel of the High Commission in Karachi.

New Delhi, October 5, 1965.

Office of the High Commissioner for Pakistan in India
New Delhi.

No. HC/PS/65.V. 5th October 1965

The High Commission for Pakistan presents its compliments to the Ministry of External Affairs, Government of India, and has the honour to acknowledge receipt of Ministry’s Note No.8245/65, dated the 4th October 1965.

2. This Note is being forwarded to the Government of Pakistan for such reply as it may deem fit to make. Since the High Commission is not in a position to offer any comments at this stage, it would content itself with stating that, according to Radio Pakistan and the B.B.C. allegations similar to those contained in the Ministry’s Note were made in the Protest Note which the Indian High Commission had already sent to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, Government of Pakistan, and an Official spokesman of the Pakistan Government has repudiated these allegations as incorrect and without foundation.

3. The High Commission is surprised that the Ministry claims that Pakistan High Commission and its personnel in India “were given facilities during the whole of September”, and blames the Pakistan authorities for having acted in a manner entirely contrary to diplomatic practice and norms of international behaviour. It seems that the Ministry finds it convenient to forget its own treatment of the person of the High Commissioner, his family and his staff. Some of the glaring breaches of diplomatic practice and norms of international behaviour on the part of Indian Government are outlined below and these may help to remind the Ministry of the hardships it had forced on the Pakistani community. These have already formed the subject matter of various Notes sent by the High Commission to the Ministry on various dates.

4. On the 7th September 1965, a demand was made by the Ministry that all members of the staff, and their families, should be shifted to the Chanakyapuri as quickly as possible.

5. The same evening electrical energy was deliberately cut off from the residence of the High Commissioner and the Chanakyapuri Chancery and adjoining quarters from 9 p.m. to 7 a.m. without any notice. The air-conditioning and fans both at Chanakyapuri Chancery and the residence of the High Commissioner could not be used and it became difficult to sleep because of the heat. The resulting discomfort, especially to young babies, can be imagined. This continued for two days more. Thereafter electrical energy was turned off between the hours of 10.30 p.m. and 7 a.m. until September 24, 1965 (Pakistan High Commission Note No.HC/PS/65-II dated 13th September 1965 refers.)

On the morning of September 12, 1965, all telephones including that of the High Commissioner and the Chancery were disconnected with the result that there was no communication whatsoever with outside world. (Pakistan High Commission Note No.HC/PS/65-II dated 13th September 1965 refers). On the evening of September 12, 1965, the Ministry sent a note (No.PI/114/14/65) stating that telephone connections would be available for communication with doctors, four officials of the Ministry, and four Heads of Missions. In practice, no connections were made available and for a few days even the Ministry could not be contacted. The High Commission in its note No. HC/PS/65.III dated 13th September 1965, requested connections with doctors, officials of the Ministry and the Acting Dean of the Diplomatic Corps. Despite repeated assurances on the basis of which the High Commission made a recommendation to the Government of Pakistan for reciprocal facilities, the connection with no less a person than the Dean of the Diplomatic Corps has not been provided to-date.

On the evening of September 12, 1965, the Ministry sent a note (No.PI/114/14/65) stating that telephone connections would be available for communication with doctors, four officials of the Ministry, and four Heads of Missions. In practice, no connections were made available and for a few days even the Ministry could not be contacted. The High Commission in its note No. HC/PS/65.III dated 13th September 1965, requested connections with doctors, officials of the Ministry and the Acting Dean of the Diplomatic Corps. Despite repeated assurances on the basis of which the High Commission made a recommendation to the Government of Pakistan for reciprocal facilities, the connection with no less a person than the Dean of the Diplomatic Corps has not been provided to-date.

The same day Indian Police parties surrounded the residence of the High Commissioner, the five officers’ residences and the Chancery at Chanakyapuri. The Police forcibly closed and padlocked all the entrances of the Chanakyapuri Chancery except one before which an obstruction was placed by parking an “Ambassador” car, and huge boulders were placed in front of a side-gate. The Police refused permission to anyone to leave or to enter. (Note No.HC/PS/65.III dated 15th September 1965 refers).

In the case Officers’ residences, the Police entered the residence of Commander M.M.Yusuf (Naval Adviser living at C-568, Defence Colony) and Mr. A. A. Siddiqi (Attaché, Works living at C-312, Defence Colony), forcibly closed the back-doors and stationed themselves in the compounds and refused to leave (Reference Note No.HC/PS/65.III dated 15th September 1965).

In Calcutta, the Police entered the premises of the Deputy High Commissioner and his Offices, sealed the Visa Office forcibly, and stationed Policemen inside the compound of the Chancery and the Deputy High Commissioner’s residence and are still there even today. (Reference Note No.HC/PS/65.I dated October 1, 1965).
10. As a result of the Ministry’s action, domestic servants of the High Commissioner were not allowed to go out even to buy provisions. Suppliers from outside were not allowed to come in. In the case of Chanakyapuri Chancery, which had to accommodate 700 men, women, and children, the services of electricians, sweepers, dhobis, plumbers, and barbers were not available because police would not allow any one to enter, and serious problems of sanitation and food provisioning arose. The inmates had themselves to look after sanitation; otherwise the health of the community as well as the whole diplomatic enclave would have been endangered. For a whole day no milk supplier was allowed to come and the large number of babies had to go without milk. It was only as a result of repeated representations that the next day 90 bottles were made available as against the minimum requirement of 350 bottles of milk. (Reference Note No.HC/PS/65.IV dated 13th September 1,1965). It took days before the position regarding provisions could be rectified. In the case of the High Commissioner’s residence, the policemen on duty refused to allow the servants to even cross the road to buy milk from the Delhi Milk Scheme Booth for the High Commissioner’s grand-daughter aged 2½ years. In the High Commissioner’s case no milk supply was allowed for 24 hours. (Reference Note No.HC/PS/65.IV dated 13th September 1,1965).

11. On the 12th September the following restrictions were placed:

i) The High Commissioner was allowed to visit the Ministry and his Chancery. The Deputy High Commissioner could go to the Chancery and the High Commissioner’s residence only. Other officers could go to Chancery only. The High Commissioner’s wife was permitted to make only one visit to the market and one visit to the Chancery and return to her residence before 5 p.m.

ii) Everyone was asked to move in CD Vehicles. Police in uniform and armed with rifles insisted on getting into the High Commission’s diplomatic cars bearing C.D. Numbers, including the Head of Mission’s car. The Ministry was informed that this was a gross violation of the inviolability of diplomatic cars and unless this restriction was removed neither the High Commissioner nor his Officers would move out of their residences under these humiliating circumstances and would consider themselves as having been confined to their residences under orders of the Government of India. It was suggested by the High Commission that the escorts should travel in their own transport. As no response from the Ministry of External Affairs was available, the High Commissioner and his officers were virtually prisoners in their houses. This state of affairs lasted for 5 days. Thereafter only the High Commissioner was provided with escort vehicles; other officers had to accommodate Indian Policemen in their vehicles or not go out at all.
iii) All others were confined within the Chancery Compound and remained so until the removal of restrictions. Only two officials were allowed to go out twice a day for shopping purposes accompanied by armed policemen.

iv) The Military Adviser of the High Commission, Colonel Haq Nawaz Khan (17, Friends Colony) was informed by the policemen on duty that he was “under house arrest” and the Police Officer entered the Military Adviser’s residential premises and refused to leave until asked to produce his orders in writing. (Reference Pakistan High Commission’s Note No.HC/PS/65.II dated 13th September 1, 1965).

12. On the 10th of September, Mr. Shafiz Ahmed Siddiqi, an official of the High Commission went to the Palam Airport for official work. Three plain-clothed C.I.D. men surrounded him and abused him in a most filthy and vulgar language unexpected of civilised people. (See Appendix). This incident took place at 4 p.m. at Palam Airport. The plain-clothed men were riding in Car No.DLF-7885. (Reference High Commission’s Note No.HC/PS/65.II dated October 1, 1965)

13. The Ministry has already been informed how the High Commission’s Chemists and Druggists refused to sell medicines to its Medical Officer. The lady Doctor, who is an Indian National, was not allowed to enter premises to look after her patients, especially ladies and children.

14. In many instances Police escorts indicated to the shopkeepers not to sell provisions to Officials of the Pakistan High Commission. On many occasions the shopkeepers charged exorbitant rates at the instance of the policemen who were detailed to escort High Commission officials for buying things from the local market.

15. On September 13, 1965, at 3 p.m. Dr. Ziaul Bari Ansai, the Medical Officer of the High Commission, was going out in a diplomatic car to procure medicines which were urgently needed by some officials of the High Commission. When the car reached the Main Gate of the Chancery premises, it was halted by the Officer-in-Charge of the Police Guard. The Medical Officer explained the purpose of his proposed journey, but that Police Officer behaved rudely with the Medical officer and said, “Mister, for your information’s sake, I must say that all of you are under house arrest.” The car was not allowed to proceed and had to turn back. (Reference Pakistan High Commission’s Note No.HC/PS/65.IV dated September 15th, 1965).

16. On the night between 14/15th September, the one year old child of an official of this High Commission fell seriously sick and the Medical Officer suspected the disease to be diphtheria. This child was advised to be taken to the Infectious Disease Hospital without any loss of time. When the sick child, together with his parents, was being sent in one of the staff cars, the car was stopped at the Main Gate by the police who had earlier been informed that an emergency of this type had arisen. Although the Police Officer was informed that the child was dangerously ill and had to be taken to the hospital immediately, the car was kept waiting and not allowed to leave for over 1½ hours. The C.D. car, belonging to the High Commission, was then searched and was allowed to proceed only after a full physical search on the person of the parents and the sick child had been carried out. (Reference High Commission’s Note No.HC/PS/65.IV dated 15th September, 1965).

17. From 12th September, onwards, until the removal of restrictions, all locally recruited staff such as sweepers, dhobis, electricians, plumbers, etc. were not allowed to enter the Chancery premises, for essential services rendered doubly necessary by extreme congestion caused by a concentration of more than 700 persons in one place. Even newspapers were not allowed to be delivered.

18. The property and personal belongings of Diplomatic and non-diplomatic persons were ransacked and searched by the police. Full extent of losses and damaged has yet to be determined because officers have not been able to return to their homes. But the following may interest the Ministry:

19. The personal effects of Mr. S. N. Qadri, District Manager of Pakistan International Airlines Corporation (151, Golf Links) and Mr. Tony Mascarenhas and Mr. M. Alam (A-118, Defence Colony) were ransacked by the police. It has further been discovered that the residence of Second Secretary, Mr. Bashir Ahmed (141, Sunder Nagar) was entered into and his property removed. This has already been brought to the notice of the Ministry in our Note No.HC/PS/65.IV dated 2nd October 1965.

20. On 17th September 1965 five officers still living in their houses were asked to shift into Chancery building before the evening on the pretext that reciprocity had to be observed with the result that in New Delhi the entire staff of the High Commission and their families, totaling 700 souls were cooped up in one place, which resulted in extremely congested and difficult living conditions. The Ministry now admits that in Karachi the Indian High Commission staff were accommodated in five separate buildings. It action was thus not only not based on reciprocity but was also high-handed.

21. The Ministry has referred to the demonstration which took place before the Indian High Commission Chancery in Karachi on the 21st September. The High Commission repudiate the Ministry’s allegation that the demonstration had connection with the Government of Pakistan. This was a spontaneous manifestation of the feeling of resentment on the part of the people of Pakistan whose sentiments had been outraged by the blatant and naked aggression which had been launched by the Indian Armed Forces across the International Frontier between India and Pakistan on the night of 5th/6th September 1965. This act of aggression by one neighbouring country on another was in complete and utter violation of the United Nations Charter and in complete contravention of international law and was a treacherous attack made without any ultimatum or warning. In the circumstances is there any surprise that it caused feelings of revulsion in Pakistan which manifested themselves in the form of a demonstration? It goes to the credit of the Karachi Police that at considerable risk they succeeded in controlling the dangerous situation and dispersed the crowd at the cost of broken windows only.

22. Having thrown all morality to the winds and having ignored all canons of international law in invading the territory of Pakistan and in subjecting its people to the horrors of an undeclared war, it is the height of irony indeed that India now demands compensation and apology for alleged breaches of international practice and diplomatic usages for which as seen above, it has shown scant respect.

The High Commission of Pakistan avails itself of this opportunity to renew to the Ministry of External Affairs the assurances of its highest consideration.

The Ministry of External Affairs,
Government of India.

0443. Note Verbale of the Ministry of External Affairs to the Pakistan High Commission in India regarding the complaints made by the High Commission.

New Delhi, October 6, 1965.

No. PI/114/15/65 October 6, 1965

The Ministry of External Affairs presents its compliments to the High Commission for Pakistan and, with reference to the High Commission’s Notes No.HC/PS/65-IV dated the 13th September and No.HC/PC/65-V dated 15th September 1965, has the honour to say that the complaints made in the Notes have been carefully investigated and a meeting was also held in the Ministry of External Affairs with the Deputy High Commissioner of Pakistan and two other diplomatic officers of the High Commission soon after the receipt of these Notes, to examine these complaints. It was found, after through investigation, that the complaints were either completely baseless or wildly exaggerated. Nevertheless every step was immediately taken to remove any genuine inconvenience and frequent consultations were held with the High Commission of Pakistan for this purpose, both personally and on the telephone. In fact, the Government of India had taken particular care to ensure that there should be no difficulty regarding medical assistance or food supplies. It is an undeniable fact that the members of the Pakistan High Commission received visits from doctors and went to doctors and hospitals for medical treatment, whenever they required it. It is also an undeniable fact that the High Commission received large supplies of milk both in the mornings and evenings.

2. It has also been established that the members of the Pakistan High Commission had ample facilities for shopping and purchase of provisions, milk, food and all other requirements. The members of the Pakistan High Commission actually performed many trips every day for the purpose of shopping.

3. The allegation that the telephone of the Pakistan High Commissioner is cut off has been investigated and found to be totally incorrect. On the contrary, ample telephone facilities were allowed to His Excellency the High Commissioner and members of the High Commission. It has also been ascertained that soon after the receipt of the Notes, telephone connection was established with the Acting Dean of the Diplomatic Corps as requested by the High Commission of Pakistan. The complaints that the High Commission was not allowed to send communications to the Ministry of External Affairs is disproved by the fact that a large number of communications were, in fact, received by this Ministry from the High Commission of Pakistan and are on record.
4. The allegation that His Excellency the High Commissioner has been prevented from moving out of his house is most amazing, as it is well known that the High Commissioner was making several daily trips to his office, to the Ministry of External Affairs and to places at his convenience and pleasure.

5. It is clear that the High Commission of Pakistan has been treated with great humanity and consideration, although the High Commission of Pakistan seems unwilling to acknowledge it.

The Ministry of External Affairs avails itself of this opportunity to renew to the High Commission for Pakistan the assurances of its highest consideration.

The High Commission for Pakistan,

0444. Note Verbale of the High Commission of Pakistan in India to the Ministry of External Affairs regarding complaints of distress to the members of the High Commission.

New Delhi, October 7, 1965.

Office of the High Commissioner for Pakistan in India
New Delhi

No.HC/PS/65.IV. 7th October, 1965

The High Commission for Pakistan presents its compliments to the Ministry of External Affairs, Government of India, and with reference to the Ministry’s Note No.PI/114/15/65, dated October 6, 1965, has the honour to state as follow:

2. It is completely wrong to suggest that the Ministry held a meeting with the Deputy High Commissioner and two other Diplomatic Officer of the High Commission to examine the points raised in our Notes Nos.HC/PS/65.IV, and No.HC/PS/65.V of 13th and 15th September, 1965. The meeting of September 16th, 1965, took place on the High Commission’s initiative to discuss the distressing condition of 700 odd residents, who had been cooped up in the Chancery under orders of the Government of India, and who were experiencing shortages of provisions and difficulties in maintaining essential services about which the Deputy High Commissioner left an aide-memoire with the Ministry. The discussion, as will be readily borne out by the aide-memoire, was confined to provision of food, vegetables, medical aid etc. for the residents of the Chancery. Even after the agreement reached in the discussion of 16th September in the Ministry of External Affairs, it took several days before the Ministry could implement their own agreement. The Ministry may be interested in some of the cases in which the agreement of September 10, 1965, was never honoured.

(i) Despite a clear agreement on September 16, for providing necessary facilities for the purchase of provisions, the delivery of newspapers etc. the Police escorts provided by the Government continued to indulge in provocative acts of harassment. The Police posted outside the main gate of the Chancery physically chased away newspaper vendors and delivery men who came to supply essential article of daily usage. The Police escort accompanying the personnel of the High Commission on shopping kept instigating the shop-keepers not to sell provisions to them.

(ii) In violation of the agreement on September 16, 1965, on the basis of which reciprocal facilities were recommended to the Government of Pakistan, in a telegram which issued through the Ministry of External Affairs, entry both to the Chancery and the Residences of the Officers living outside the Chancery continued to be denied to such essential staff as sweepers and scavengers until September 20, with the result that between September 12, and September 20, the work of scavenging had to be done by the Officers, the Staff and their families.

(iii) Notwithstanding the agreement of September 16, to provide facilities to guard the House of Pakistan High Commission Officers who had moved to the Chancery, no action was taken on cases of flagrant violations brought to the notice of the Ministry. These cases dealt with ransacking of property, personal belongings, official furniture and placing of impediments such as pad-locks by landlords who had posted their own men within the premises. The three notes of the High Commission (No. HC/PS/65.I, dated September 20, 1965, and No. HC/PS/65.VI, dated 2.10.1965) sent to the Ministry of External Affairs refer.

3. The Ministry have in their Note under reference stated that Members of the Pakistan High Commission received visits from doctors. This is completely incorrect. On no occasion throughout the period of confinement from September 9, to September 22, did any medical practitioner enter the premises either of the High Commissioner’s residence or of the Chancery. The Medical Practitioners could not have entered the premises without the knowledge of the Ministry which had blockaded the Chancery with a heavy armed guard. The High Commission would be most interested in any instance that the Ministry be able to quote. The High Commission urgently required the services of a specialist in an emergency case of brain hemorrhage on 21.9.1965 but was unable to secure them with the result that the patient who was in a critical stage had to be rushed to a hospital. The physical dislocation contributed to the aggravation of the suffering of the patient who died on her way to the hospital at 2 p.m.

4. In view of these instances, the High Commission finds it a little difficult to accept the self-righteous assertion of the Ministry that the High Commission was treated with great humanity and consideration.

5. The Ministry in Para 3 of its Note under reference has found it fit to make categorical statement that the telephone of the High Commissioner was not cut off. The Ministry may perhaps like to refresh its memory on this score. Irritating interference with the telephone began as early as September 7. On their attention being drawn the offensive practice the Ministry vehemently denied any interference until September 12 when the telephone was completely cut off without any warning or intimation. From September 12 until September 17, the High Commissioner was unable to contact even his Chancery or the Ministry of External Affairs over the telephone. Even though the Ministry of External Affairs informed on September 12, that they were agreeable to provide him connection with four Officers in the Ministry and four Heads of Mission, the High Commissioner was unable to contact even the Foreign Secretary over the telephone until September 17, 1965. He had to write a letter and had it delivered on September 14, when he asked for an immediate interview with the Foreign Secretary to discuss the intolerable conditions which had been imposed on him and his Officers. From October (September) 17, onwards the High Commissioner was able to get the Ministry of External Affairs over the telephone through an operator. The telephone connection with the acting Dean of Diplomatic Corps was not established until October 6, 1965 – two weeks after the removal of restrictions. The High Commission regrets that the Ministry of External Affairs should deem it necessary, in complete disregard of the facts of the case, to make a brazen statement which cannot bear any scrutiny whatever.

6. In Para 4 of the Note under reference the Ministry of External Affairs have stated that the High Commissioner was making several daily trips to his office, to the Ministry of External Affairs and to other places at his ‘convenience and pleasure’. Does the Ministry feign ignorance of the demand which was made that the High Commissioner could only go to his Chancery or to the Ministry of External Affairs on an appointment? In actual practice he did not move out of his residence at all for five days between September 12 and 16, and that he visited the Ministry of External Affairs only on one occasion after the imposition of restrictions on September 12 because of the unacceptable demand that two armed policemen should ride with him in his car. The Ministry may like to recall that the High Commissioner was a virtual prisoner in his own house from September 12 to September 16 as he would not suffer violation of the principle of inviolability of his person by acceding to the demand of the armed police grds to seat themselves in is car and remain there during the performance of a journey. It was with a view to discussing the humiliating conditions which had been imposed upon him that he sought on September 14, (vide High Commissioner's Note No.HC/PS/65-V) an immediate interview with the Secretary of the Ministry of External Affairs. This interview was arranged on 16th September which was that first occasion that the High Commissioner moved out of his house since the imposition of restrictions on September 12.
The Ministry which had made adequate arrangement to have the High Commissioner followed by a posse' of armed policemen should know that the High Commissioner moved only once a day between his residence and office.

7. It is significant that the Ministry of External Affairs while freely indulging in distortion of facts have omitted entirely to refer to the withdrawal of electrical energy at the residence of the HIGH Commissioner and the Chancery. The Ministry may perhaps like to refresh its memory and recall that electric energy at the residence of the High Commissioner was cut off deliberately between 9.15 on the morning of September 7 until 7.30 on the morning of September 8.
The High Commission protested to the Government of India vide their Note
No. 13(72)P/65, dated 8th September, 1965. They were informed on September 10 by the Ministry of External Affairs (Note No.P/114/13/65) that "the election energy was suspended for a short period on the 8th September in the interest of the safety of the occupants". The assurance notwithstanding, the electric energy, both at the residence of the High Commissioner and the Chancery in Chnakayapuri, continued to be interrupted until the 24th September from 10.30 p.m. to 7 a.m. every day. It is hard to believe that this solicitude for the 'safety of the occupants' over a period of sixteen days was displayed without the knowledge of the Government of India.

8. The High Commission of Pakistan deplore the complacent self-righteousness with which the Ministry, in a Note bristling with numerous contradictions, has sought to make excuses by indulging in vague generalisations and deliberate distortions in willful disregard of verifiable facts.
The High Commission is constrained therefore to reject the Ministry's Note, especially Para 5 thereof.

9. The High Commission avails itself of this opportunity to renew to the Ministry, the assurances of its highest consideration.

0445. Aide Memoire of the Pakistan High Commission in India regarding reciprocal release of persons detained in each other’s country.

New Delhi, October 13, 1965.

Subject: Return of Nationals on the basis of reciprocity.

Reference Ministry of External Affairs aide memoir dated 1st October, 1965, on the subject of exchange of nationals. The High Commission of Pakistan has the following proposal to make:

i) As a first step the two Governments should order, on a reciprocal basis, the release of nationals actually detained in both countries. The Government of Pakistan will have no objection to the grant of exit permits to Indian nationals with valid passports at present under detention in Pakistan provided the Government of India agree to do the same.

ii) Such an order should be made on an agreed date simultaneously in Karachi and Delhi.

iii) After their release the nationals of the two countries now under detention will make their own arrangements to leave for their respective countries as and when possible or convenient. Both Governments would allow extension of stay pending availability of travel facilities.

New Delhi.

Note Verbale from the Pakistan Ministry of Foreign Affairs to the Indian High Commission in Pakistan regarding Indian protest on denial of facilities to the members of the Indian High Commission in Pakistan.

The Ministry of Foreign Affairs presents its compliments to the High Commission of India in Pakistan and draws attention to the High Commission’s Note No- HC-X/1, dated September 28, 1965 protesting against what it termed as the “outrageous” violations of its diplomatic rights”. In his meeting with the Indian High Commissioner on 2nd October 1965, the Foreign Secretary informed him that the Government of Pakistan rejected the protest which was based on totally unfounded allegations.

2. It has transpired that the unfounded Indian protest was a sinister attempt to cover up the indignities and outrages perpetrated by the Indian authorities against the members and the premises of the Pakistan High Commission in New Delhi in gross contempt of the norms of diplomatic behavior expected from civilized nations. According to reports received the Pakistan High Commission in New Delhi was subjected repeatedly to excesses by the local police authorities who continuously harassed the High Commission.

3. In utter disregard of established convention and international usage the High Commissioner for Pakistan was by a verbal order, confined to his house in the first week of September. The Indian authorities offered to allow him to move only to his office and that too if Indian armed guards could sit with him in his car. As the High Commissioner, in his capacity of the representative of the sovereign state of Pakistan, could not tolerate such disrespect nor suffer this infringement of inviolability, he decided not to move out of his house at all and was thus virtually reduced to the status of a prisoner. Since his telephone lines had been cut he was not in a position to get in touch with his office or to discharge any other duties.

4. The local servants of the High Commissioner who came from outside were harassed, intimidated and finally chassed away by the police. The servants who lived within the residence of the High Commissioner were denied exit. This resulted in extreme hardship to the inmates including the grand daughter of the High Commissioner, aged 2 ½ years, who had to go without milk for one whole day. The guards posted outside the residence of the High Commissioner did not have even the courtesy or the kindness to allow some one to go across the road to fetch a bottle of milk.
5. All Pakistani officers and the members of the staff were ordered, at a short notice, to move into the Pakistan High Commission. When this was done it was discovered that more than 700 people were lodged within the precincts of the Pakistan High Commission, which instead of being an office had now to be transformed into a concentration camp.

6. The electric current including power supply was denied to the residence of High Commissioner and the Pakistan High Commission which were plunged into darkness every evening. The High Commissioner, his family and the others spent several sultry summer nights in sleeplessness.

7. In flagrant violation of the universally recognized principle of inviolability of diplomatic premises the Indian armed police, on September 14 took possession of, and locked, the main and side entrances of the Pakistan High Commission. The entrances were further barred and obstructed by stationing cars heavy boulders in front of them.

8. The residence of the Pakistani diplomatic officers in New Delhi were similarly violated a number of times. On 13th September, the Military Adviser of the Pakistan High Commission was ordered by a Sub-Inspector of Police not to move out of his residence as he was under house arrest. The armed police guards thereupon entered the house of the Military Advisor and stationed themselves within the premises.

9. Similarly a forcible entry was made into the residence of the Naval Adviser by the armed police. The police claiming to act under the order of D. I. G. locked the side and back entrance of the house. Similar violation was committed against the residences of the junior officers of the Pakistan High Commission.

10. The police guards ostensibly provided for the protection of the Pakistani officers and staffs were a continuous source of deliberate harassment. They did not allow any contact with the outside world nor did they permit the Pakistani officers to meet one another. The Indian police guards physically chased away delivery-men who came to supply essential provisions to some 700 odd people confined within the Pakistan High Commission.

11. The excesses committed by the Indian authorities against the officers and staff of the Pakistan High Commission reached a new peak when essential maintenance and sanitary staff such as sweepers and scavengers were not allowed to perform their duties. The whole area congested with 700 and more people faced a serious health hazard. The hardships caused to the inmates cannot be imagined.
12. The Pakistan High Commission was denied medical facilities. A serious case of Diphtheria had to be rushed to the hospital but it was delayed for about one and half an hours, by the armed police stationed outside the Chancery. On numerous occasions the Medical Officer attached to the High Commission attempted to go out for the purchase of essential medicines, but he was denied exit by the armed police who maintained that all the residents were under house arrest.

13. The police authorities kept intimidating and harassing the member of the High Commission. The police often used abusive, filthy and uncivilized language.

14. The above is but a sketchy recital of the treatment meted out to the officers and staff of the Pakistan High Commission by the Indian authorities in persistent and flagrant violation of international law and diplomatic usage as practiced amongst civilized nations.

15. The Government of India has shown a callous disregard for diplomatic proprieties and its obligations under international law. It would be recalled that by the account of the Government of India itself that country was not at war with Pakistan and therefore the personnel and premises of the Pakistan High Commission in New Delhi should have been given complete and unhindered diplomatic privileges and facilities. It is also inconceivable that these excesses could have been committed without the knowledge or connivance of the Government of India. The Government of Pakistan, therefore, holds the Government of India completely responsible for these shocking outrages against well established diplomatic rights and privileges and demands an immediate and unqualified apology from the Government of India with assurances that such excesses will not again be repeated. The Government of Pakistan reserves the right to revert to this subject when more details are available.

16. The Ministry avails of this opportunity to renew to the High Commission the assurances of its highest consideration.

Arshad Hussain to Foreign Secretary C.S. Jha.

New Delhi, October 19, 1965.

High Commissioner for Pakistan in India
New Delhi

No. F.1 (3)P/65/(N)-I, 19th Oct. 1965

My dear Chandra,

I am troubling you personally in this matter because I feel that this is a case in which much hardship can be avoided if an early decision could be taken. This concerns the nationals of the two countries, who may wish to return home. My Government is agreeable in principle to permit Indian nationals, who wish to return, to do so, on the basis of reciprocity. As it will take some time to put this arrangement fully into operation, the Government of Pakistan would agree to permit immediately the following categories to leave, provided you agree to give similar permission to Pakistan nationals concerned:

(a) Persons who desire to leave on compassionate grounds or for any other reasons and recommended by the respective High Commission.

(b) Employees of Commercial Firms, Banks, Airlines, Government Departments or Semi-Government Organisations, pressmen etc. who may wish to return.

(c) Families of those who are allowed to leave would also be given permission. Personal luggage will be allowed subject to the normal baggage rules.

2. To begin with, exit permits would be issued to small groups, the numbers would however be increased progressively.

3. If this is acceptable, would you kindly let me know? I suggest that the arrangement should come into force a week from today or on any other date which you would care to suggest.

With kind regards,

Yours sincerely

0449. Letter from Foreign Secretary C. S. Jha to Pakistan High Commissioner Arshad Hussain regarding reciprocal arrangements for nationals of the two countries to return to their own country.

New Delhi, October 21, 1965.

No. 310/FS/65, October 21, 1965

My dear Arshd,

Please refer to your letter No.F.1(3)P/65(N)-I dated October 19, 1965, about general permission to Pakistan nationals to leave India. We have, during the past fortnight, already permitted 38 Pakistan nationals including journalists, to leave the country on the basis of applications received by us. Of these, 16 are believed to have already gone. The remainder are apparently awaiting return transportation arrangements. Unhappily, there has been no such movement from the Pakistan side and we have confirmation only about 3 Indian journalists who returned from Pakistan last week.

2. We have proposed repeatedly to your High Commission that he categories (a), (b) and (c) mentioned in paragraph 1 of your letter of October 19, should be allowed to leave either country urgently on reciprocal basis. We had hoped that except for the limited numbers under detention, the categories of persons mentioned in paragraph 1 of your letter would not be restrained in Pakistan and that return of such persons could start immediately. Indeed, from our side we have already started this process and 38 Pakistan nationals have been permitted to leave India. We would be quits agreeable to speed up this process on reciprocal basis.
Yours sincerely,
(C.S. JHA)

0450. Note Verbale from Ministry of External Affairs to Pakistan High Commission in India.

New Delhi, October 21, 1965.

No.PI/114(22)/65, 21

Government of India
Ministry of External Affairs
New Delhi

The Ministry of External Affairs, Government of India presents its compliments to the High Commission for Pakistan in India, and with reference to Note No.HC/PS/65.V, dated the 5th October, 1965, from the High Commission, complaining about various discomforts felt by the High Commission during a fortnight last September, has the honour to say that these complaints and allegations have been carefully investigated. The complaints are without foundation and an obvious afterthought to try and cover up the brutal actions of the Pakistan authorities against the Indian Diplomatic Mission in Pakistan. Throughout last September, the Pakistan High Commission has been treated with the utmost consideration that was possible. In contrast the Indian High Commission in Pakistan and its members were subjected to the most unjustified and impermissible outrages on diplomatic immunity as also their personal safety and honour in gross violation of all diplomatic practice and International Conventions.

2. On the 8th September, the Deputy High Commissioner of Pakistan himself called on the Joint Secretary of the Pakistan Division in the Ministry of External Affairs, requesting protection for the personnel of the Pakistan High Commission residing in different parts of the city, e.g. Hauz Khas, Niamuddin, South Extension, Sunder Nagar, Defence Colony, Friend’s Colony, Green Park, etc.
He also said that a certain number of the non-diplomatic staff had already moved to the Pakistani Chancery premises of their own accord and on the advice of the High Commissioner. This was understandable in view of the tense atmosphere caused by Pakistan’s unprovoked military aggression against India. The Deputy High Commissioner suggested moving the personnel and their families to a few convenient places. Thereafter, the High Commissioner of Pakistan also had an interview with the Secretary of the Ministry of External Affairs at which it was agreed that in view of internal security needs, the diplomatic officers of Pakistan staying in Defence Colony continue temporarily to reside there and would take in as many of their colleagues with them as convenient and that others would move to the Chancery building where full police protection would be arranged. Assistance was promptly given for obtaining transport and other facilities for this move, on the request of the High Commission. The members of the Pakistan High Commission continued to reside in seven residences in Defence Colony and Friends Colony, and in the residence of the High Commissioner in Tilak Marg and in the spacious Chancery area in the Diplomatic Enclave. Subsequently, on the 16th September, a suggestion was made to the High Commissioner to accept alternative accommodation at some convenient place for the members of the High Commission scattered in the seven separate residences. Excellent accommodation was offered in the form of forty apartments in the Lodi Hotel with all amenities. However, the High Commissioner chose to decline this offer and insisted that how would like to have all the members of his Mission close to him at one place in the Chancery itself. The Ministry of External Affairs advised the High Commissioner to reconsider his decision and pressed the offer of 40 apartments with all amenities in the Lodi Hotel but the High Commissioner did not accept. Thus the ‘congestion’ complained of was the choosing of the High Commissioner. Indeed when on 23rd September, 1965, after the ceasefire, the High Commission was advised to move its personnel back to their respective houses, this return move was kept suspended for some time by the High Commission itself.

3. Regarding the allegation about electric supply being cut off, a complaint was received from the High Commission that on the night of 7th September electricity at the residence of the High Commissioner and the Chancery had been cut off for a certain period. The matter was immediately investigated and it was found that on that particular night, the Pakistan High Commission— in spite of repeated telephonic requests from the Civil Defence authorities— had deliberately defied the blackout regulations and kept all lights blazing. Even though the High Commission of Pakistan was fully aware that Pakistani bombers were on their aggressive sorties over Indian territory and were bombing civilian areas, mosques, churches and hospitals in total disregard of all principles and International Conventions, the High Commission still kept the lights blazing during the blackout periods thereby endangering the safety and lives of their neighbors, including members of the Diplomatic Corps. The High Commission will admit that this action of the High Commission was dangerously irresponsible and anti-social as it endangered the lives of innocent citizens and fellow members of the Diplomatic Corps and others residing in that locality. In the circumstances, when the High Commission refused to heed the telephonic request of Civil Defense authorities, for ensuring the safety of the residents of that locality, the electrical current had to be switched off temporarily, during the night. The refusal of the Pakistan High Commission to comply with blackout regulations when all other Diplomatic Missions in the same area were doing so, is most revealing.

4. The allegation that all telephones were cut off is completely untrue. Telephone connections were maintained with Doctors, the Acting Dean of the Diplomatic Corps, five Diplomatic Missions, the Secretary to the Government of India in the Ministry of External Affairs, Joint Secretary in charge of the Pakistan Division in the Ministry of External Affairs, the Permanent Duty Officer of the Ministry and others. The High Commission officers were also allowed telephone connections with H.E. the High Commissioner and panel doctors of the High Commission availed itself fully of the facilities for telephone conversation with not only he officers of this Ministry, but also members of the Diplomatic Corps, medical practitioners, hospitals, etc. It is regrettable that the High Commission of Pakistan should resort to suppressing and falsifying the facts in this regard.

5. Concerning police protection, from the 12th of September, the guards required were posted at the residence of the High Commissioner, the Chancery of the High Commission and the seven residences of the officers in Defense Colony and Friends Colony for their protection. The allegation that the entrance of the Chancery was forcibly closed and padlocked and that obstruction was cussed at the entrance by parking an Ambassador Car or by placing huge boulders in front of a side gate has been investigated and found to be untrue. Full protections were provided and every effort was made to ensure that no untoward incident caused any inconvenience to the High Commission. This would be borne out by several respectable members of the local community who reside in areas near the residences of the Pakistan diplomats or the Chancery or the residence of H.E. the High Commissioner. Unlike the organized violent demonstrations against the Indian Chancery at Karachi, the Pakistan Mission in India enjoyed complete police protections at all times.

6. The allegation that the domestic servants of the High Commission were not allowed to go out has been investigated and found to be contrary to facts. Domestic servants were, in fact, permitted to go out with the wife of the High Commissioner, whenever she went out for shopping or to buy provisions. Supplies from outside were freely allowed. The services of electricians, sweepers, dhobis, plumbers and barbers were available to all the inmates of the Chancery and he residence of the High Commissioner. Truck loads of refuse were carried out freely from the High Commission and the Chancery. Milk was regularly supplied by the Delhi Milk Scheme from the Ashoka Hotel Depot and from Nizamuddin Depot twice a day. The servants of the High commissioner were never stopped from buying milk from the milk depots. The Chairman of the Delhi Milk Scheme has provided detailed information as to the quantity of milk purchased by the High commission. The Delhi Milk Supplier has also pointed out that on two days, namely, the 17th and 23rd September, the Pakistan High commission returned some quantities of milk as being in excess of its requirements for the day. For instance the Chairman of the Delhi Milk Scheme has given the following detail of milk purchased by the High Commission:

The charge of the Pakistan High Commission regarding the alleged denial of milk supplies is not only untrue but is an extremely ungenerous aspersion against a Public Utility which has gone out of its way to supply all the demands of the Pakistan High Commission even on credit.
7. The allegation that the High Commissioner alone was allowed to visit the Ministry is quite ludicrous. The High Commission is fully aware that besides the High Commissioner, the Deputy High Commissioner, Mr. Afzal Iqbal and several other diplomatic officers, Mr. Baber, Mr. Enayet Karim, Mr. Mehdi and others made numerous trips to the Ministry of External Affairs and had meetings with various officers of this Ministry namely Mr. Dar, Mr. Rao and Mr. Rasgotra, who gave every attention to the requests and suggestions of the High Commission. The members of the Pakistan High Commission daily made several trips for shopping, besides visits to clinics and hospitals and also for other purposes. These are well-known facts which can be verified from the records of the various clinics, including the one where ultrasonic ray treatment was given to the wife of the Deputy High Commissioner of Pakistan or from the Holy Family Hospital.

8. The High Commission had, of its own accord, asked for protection and police guard being presumably aware of the raids and searches being organized in Pakistan to molest the Indian Diplomatic Missions in Pakistan. When, however, the High Commissioner indicated that he did not want the escort to sit in his care for his protection but would like him to come in separate car, his wishes were promptly complied with. Although this imposed an unjustifiable strain on the resources of the Security Forces, extra cars were made available in order to enable the High Commissioner to have an escort car whenever he made his trips. It is well-known to the general public and also the Ministry of External Affairs that the High Commissioner, the Deputy High Commissioner and many members of the Mission were performing several trips a day and moved about to many places.

9. The allegation that policeman entered the residence of the Naval Attaché or of the Military Attaché and informed him that he was under ‘house arrest’ is gross connection. No such incident ever took place. It is significant that this matter was never mentioned at any of the numerous meetings which the officers of the High Commission had with the representatives of the Ministry. Further the allegation that Mr. S.A. Siddiqui, an official of the High Commission which he went to Palam Airport was followed by a plan clothes men riding in car no. DLF 7885 exposes the real character of the High Commission’s complaints. In one breath, the High Commission alleges that members of the mission were not allowed to move about and, in another, goes on to say that an official Mission had visited Palam Airport. Besides, it has been found the Car No. 7885 belongs to Mr Gopal, a resident of Defense Colony who has no connection whatsoever with the Indian Police, either in uniform or in plan clothes.

10. The High Commission has further alleged that Chemists and Druggists refused to sell medicines to the Mission. The High Commission is certainly aware that its order forms for medical supplies, placed on a reputable firm of chemists in Connaught Place, are on its records, and the medicines etc. were actually supplied liberally even on credit. Similarly, the allegation that doctors were not permitted to enter the premises to found to be totally false stop. A diplomatic official of the High Commission came to the ministry of External Affairs and said that the lady doctor attached to the High Commission was not being permitted to visit the High Commission. In his presence, the permanent Duty Officers of the Ministry of External Affairs telephoned the lady doctor and she replied that she was attending to the patients of the High Commission, as and when required. She further clarified that for a certain period of day, she had been on leave. However, even during the period of leave she planned to go out of station for holy days but did not leave station because of extraneous reasons, she continued to render medical services to the member of the High Commission, whenever required. In fact, on the 15th September, she examined Mrs. Baber, wife of the second Secretary of High Commission at her clinic. Similarly, during this period, several members of Pakistan High Commission and their dependents received medical assistance from various doctors, hospitals, and clinics. To give some examples, Mrs. Haq Nawaz Khan, wife of the Military attaché, Mrs. Siddiqui, Mrs. Yasin, the wife of an employee of the High Commission, received treatment at various places, e.g. the Holy Family Hospital, a well-known hospital of New Delhi; the clinic of Dr. Diwan Chand Aggarwal and from various doctors, e.g. Dr. Mathur, Dr. Gupta etc. A surgical operation was performed successfully on one of the dependents of the High Commission in the Holy Family Hospital. It is also known that during the same period, a reputable professional medical association supplied to the High Commission, at its request intra uterine contraceptive devices. In these circumstances, it is hardly proper to complain that there was any deprivation of medical assistance during the entire month of September.

11. It is understandable that the High Commission would, in the pursuit of its Government’s policy of obsessive hostility towards India, indulge in propaganda directed against the Government of India. It is, however, deeply distressing that the High Commission should also seek to tar the fair name and reputation of Indian professional men, doctors, nurses, hospitals, clinics, etc. who rendered devoted and prompt service to the members of the Pakistan High Commission, performed operations, deliveries, supplied medicines, etc. These members of the medical profession, hospitals, etc. deserve at least some gratitude and appreciation from the High Commission. Neither the Government of India nor the Indian Medical men, or medical institutions or chemists in any way withheld medical assistance from the High Commission or its members.

12. The allegation that the Police guard was rude to the medical officer of the mission and told him that the medical officer was under ‘house arrest’ or prevented him from buying medicines is patently untrue. Similarly is the allegation about the diphtheria case. The fact was that as soon as the guard was informed that a child was to be taken to the Infectious Diseases Hospital as a suspected case of diphtheria on the night of the 14th September, arrangements were made within minutes. No search or hindrance was caused. In fact the child was promptly taken to the hospital, received treatment and recovered.

13. The allegation that washermen were not allowed to render their services is completely untrue. The washermen continued to deliver laundry at the main gate of the Chancery whenever they were required. Newspapers and magazines were also freely allowed to the Pakistan Mission.

14. The allegation contained in Para 18 of the High Commission's Note that the 'property and the personal belongings of the diplomatic and non-diplomatic personnel were ransacked and searched by the Police' is a complete invention and an apparent afterthought to cover up the outrageous invasion of the diplomatic premises, committed on the nights of the 11th and 13th September on the residence of the Indian High Commissioner and his staff in Karachi and on the 10th September on the residence of the Indian Counsellor in Islamabad and the Indian Mission at Dacca where Indian offices were sealed up by the local police. The High Commissioner knows that its officers generally took care to remove their belongings at the time they moved their accommodation to the Chancery etc. There is intrinsic obfuscation in the Pakistan High Commission's Note itself, in that no date or time of this alleged 'ransacking and search' by the residence of Mr. Bashir Ahmed, Second Secretary, the High Commission itself has complained – in the another note – that the property was tampered with by the landlord. This complaint is being investigated, as it seems to be of the nature of a civil dispute between the landlord and the tenant arising from termination of lease and non-payment of dues. At no time did the police enter, much less search, the residence of any diplomatic officer or, for that matter, the houses of the three other persons who are not members of the High Commission.

15. In conclusion, it is evident that the complaints made by the High Commission of Pakistan are contrary to facts and relate to some minor inconveniences like delays in grocery supply, the failure of electricity for a few hours, imaginary delays in the arrival of and prompt servicing from barbers, dhobis, plumbers, sweepers, etc. Any such inconveniences were immediately got rectified as and when these were pointed out by the officials of the High Commission either to the Protocol officers stationed along with police guards or to the Duty Officer of the Ministry of External Affairs even though the transactions were mostly of a private nature between the High Commission and private businessmen. In fact, on several occasions, diplomatic officers of the Pakistan High Commission warmly thanked the permanent Duty Officer and other officers of the Ministry of External Affairs for their prompt assistance and consideration. It is a matter of regret to know that Pakistan High Commission has now chosen to Manufacture a catalogue of petty grievances and frivolous complaints.

16. The High Commission cannot, by any suppression of facts and distortion of the truth or stretching of imagination, expect to relate its catalogue of imaginary discomforts and frivolous complaints with the planned invasion of the Indian Diplomatic premises by Pakistan police armed with guns and bayonets on the nights of 11th and 12/13th September, the organized violent demonstration against the Indian Chancery at Karachi on 21st September, 1965 and the deliberate terrorization by the Pakistan police of the members of the Indian Missions in Pakistan (including women and children), the breaking open of crates, boxes, cupboards, removal of official and private property, etc. and the outrageous demand by the Pakistan police that cipher documents should be handed over by the Indian Diplomatic Mission in Pakistan to the local authorities. The Government of Pakistan has committed deliberate and lawless invasion of Indian Diplomatic premises and immunity in Pakistan in violation not only of elementary human decency and civilised practice but also in violation of International Conventions which Pakistan has solemnly ratified. The Government of India accordingly demands that full amends be made by Pakistan for the outrages committed against the Indian Diplomatic Mission in Pakistan and the Government of Pakistan duly tender an apology to India in accordance with the Note dated 4th October, 1965m from this Ministry to the Pakistan High Commission.

The Ministry of External Affairs avails itself of this opportunity to renew to the High Commission of Pakistan the assurances of its highest consideration.

0451. Letter from Foreign Secretary C. S. Jha to Pakistan High Commissioner Arshad Husain regarding general permission to Pakistan nationals to leave India.

New Delhi, October 21, 1965.

No. 310/FS/65. October 21, 1965

My dear Arshad,

Please refer to your letter No. F.1(3)P/65(N)-India, dated October 19, 1965, about general permission to Pakistan nationals to leave India. We have, during the past fortnight, already permitted 38 Pakistan nationals including journalists, to leave the country on the basis of applications received by us. Of these, 16 are believed to have already gone. The remainder are apparently awaiting return transportation arrangements. Unhappily, there has been no such movement from the Pakistan side and we have confirmation about 3 Indian journalists who returned from Pakistan last week.

2. We have proposed repeatedly to your High Commission that the categories (a), (b) and (c) mentioned in paragraph 1 of your letter of October 19, should be allowed to leave either country urgently on reciprocal basis. We had hoped that except for the limited numbers under detention, the categories of persons mentioned in paragraph 1 of your letter would not be restrained in Pakistan and that return of such persons could start immediately. Indeed, from our side we have already started this process and 38 Pakistan nationals have been permitted to leave India. We would be quite agreeable to speed up this process on reciprocal basis.

Your sincerely,

Sd/- C.S.Jha

H.E. Mr. M. Arshad Husain
High Commissioner for Pakistan,
2/50-G Shantipath, Chanakyapuri,
New Delhi.

During the last few weeks the Government of Pakistan has been receiving very disturbing reports about the treatment meted out to Pakistani nationals who have been interned in India. The Government of Pakistan has learnt that Pakistan nationals in India, including women and children, have been indiscriminately arrested and clamped into internment camps and jails in a wholesale manner where they have been placed with ordinary criminals. At times food was denied to them and many were tortured and manhandled. They were kept out of all communications with their relatives and friends, and the whereabouts of many of those presumed to be interned are not known.

2. The Government of Pakistan strongly protests against the maltreatment of Pakistani nationals and expresses the hope that steps would be taken immediately for improving the treatment and living conditions of Pakistani nationals in Indian custody. The Government of Pakistan reserves its right to claim damages and compensation for maltreatment of its nationals in India. In this connection, the Government of Pakistan wish to point out that there has been no general internment of Indian nationals in Pakistan. Only in a few cases have Indian nationals been interned for reasons of security and they have been provided suitable living conditions and other facilities.

3. It is also pointed out that it was the Government of Pakistan which first suggested the exchanges of nationals. It had been suggested as a preliminary step that the two countries should agree to issue Exit Permits immediately to following categories of persons:

(i) Persons who desire to leave on compassionate grounds or other reasons recommended by the respective High Commissions.

(ii) Employees of commercial firms, banks, Airlines, Government departments or semi-Government organization, pressmen etc.

(iii) Exit permits to small groups should be issued on a reciprocal basis and latter on the numbers should be progressively increased.

4. The Ministry had suggested that this agreement should be implemented with effect from 26th October, 1965. In the event this date is not acceptable to the Government of India, the Government of Pakistan should be happy to receive an alternative suggestion.

0453. Note from the High Commission for India in Pakistan to the Pakistan Ministry of Foreign Affairs regarding repatriation of Indian and Pakistani nationals on reciprocal basis.

High Commission of India
Karachi.

No. Pt. KAR/1-Rept/65 October 29, 1965

The High Commission of India in Pakistan presents its compliments to the Ministry of External Affairs, Government of Pakistan, and with reference to the Aide Memoire handed over by Director Noore to Mr. Kaul on 23rd October, 1965 with regard to general repatriation of Indian and Pakistani nationals has the honour to recall that the Government of India have been pressing since the acceptance of the cease-fire by India and Pakistan, for repatriation to be freely permitted. Moreover, despite the reluctance of the Pakistan Government to agree to this suggestion the Government of India have been allowing Pakistani nationals to return to their country on compassionate grounds ad hoc, even though the Government of Pakistan has not so far been reciprocating. In accordance with their general attitude the Government of India are most willing that general repatriation should commence immediately. They, therefore propose that with effect from today, the 29th October, 1965, The Governments of India and Pakistan should issue permits freely to each others' nationals to return home. On receipt of permits these nationals should be free to arrange for their departure by all available routes. The agreement of the Pakistan Government to this proposal is requested.

To ensure that the agreement is carried out reciprocally, the Government of India further suggest that biweekly returns should be exchanged between the two Government indicating the number of exit permits issued, as well as the number of nationals actually allowed to leave for their country.

As regards nationals of each country interned by the other, the Government of India are also anxious that they be returned to their country on a reciprocal basis without further delay. The Government of India are agreeable to take the Pakistani internees to Indian ports or airports when they can embark on transportation arranged by the Government of Pakistan; if the Government of Pakistan prefer, the Government of India are even agreeable to taking the Pakistani internees to rail heads on the land border. Such arrangements will be undertaken if the Pakistan Government agrees to make the same arrangements in respect of Indian nationals interned by them.

The high commission avails itself of this opportunity to renew to the Ministry the assurances of its highest consideration.

Ministry of Foreign Affairs,
Government of Pakistan,

MOST IMMEDIATE

Foreign Secretary from Prakash Kaul

Just returned after a very unpleasant and nasty bout with Director General ALIVE. Had I not been returning to Karachi tomorrow from where this would be sent to you through the courier, I would have had no means of communicating with you from Islamabad. Essential that Islamabad should have Cipher facilities with Delhi and appropriate link with Karachi and Dacca.

I had a two-hour session with ALVIE in which, aping his foreign Minister, he talked hysterically making all kinds of accusations against India. Whenever I tried to rebut, he would try to prevent me from saying my piece. I had made up my mind not to be bullied or brow-beaten by him. I made it clear to him that I had not come to listen to his monologue or to be a witness to his display of bad manners and ill-temper. I also emphasized that I had a right to be heard and if he had no time to hear me, there was no point in carrying on the interview. At one stage he got up saying that he would terminate the interview which I said he was welcome to. I threw back the notes which he had given and asked him, if he had no time to talk to me, I would like to know whether he would like to give these notes to me. He was speechless for a moment and then said that he would like me to keep the notes and that he wanted to discuss the problem of internees which I said I was prepared to do provided he knew how to behave himself and found time to listen to what I had to say. After this break when we settled down it was different ALIVE who was speaking quietly and calmly and listening to whatever I had to say.

ALIVE began the interview by complaining against the harassment of Pakistani diplomats in India. He gave me a note which I am sending to DAR by the same bag. He complained that the police had even organized collision and that in Calcutta, the Pakistanis had been paraded in streets.

I replied that these allegations would be investigated and if found true, the guilty would be punished. This was in glaring contrast to the treatment given by Pakistan to protest made by us regarding far more serious and fundamental violations of diplomatic privileges when our Chancery and diplomatic residences were raided and searched. ALIVE argued that we could not “resurrect the dead issue” to which I replied that these issues would never die as they were the blackest deeds of the twentieth century. We deplore that Pakistan instead of reacting responsibly to our protest, punishing the guilty and giving us assurance that they would not be repeated had decided to dismiss them as baseless allegations. This gave us no choice but to express our displeasure, resentment and regret at Pakistani conduct. Accordingly we had recalled our High Commissioner and as a further act of displeasure we were retrenching our staff to the barest minimum. ALIVE gave me the impression that our High Commissioner had been recalled only for consultation. This would suggest that ARSHAD HUSSAIN would go back to New Delhi and would make it appear as though nothing had happened to deserve his recall. You might consider making it clear to the Pakistan Government in a way that you may think appropriate that our High Commissioner would not return to Pakistan in a hurry unless Pakistan was prepared to make amends for her misdeeds.

When I persisted in complaining against the excesses committed against us and the harassment to which we were being subjected even today ALIVE tried to say that some Pakistani officials, during the emergency, might have been over-enthusiastic in handling “India’s aggression on Pakistan at Lahore”. He talked of “India’s continuing aggression in Kashmir which vitiated the present climate”. I made it clear to ALIVE that the conflict began not in September but in August when Pakistan attacked India in Kashmir. I asked him to make note of the fact that as in the past so in the future an attack on Kashmir would be treated as an attack on India. ALVIE commented that he was not prepared to discuss the Kashmir problem to which I replied that I had no intention either of discussing our internal affairs with him. As regards the harassment of Indian diplomats in Pakistan, I told him that our Counsellor PURI was not getting milk day after day. Carpenters and others kept on disappearing and today a man on scooter stopped his bearer and told him to stop working for the Hindus. In Karachi all our Pakistani local friends who could not be even remotely considered security risks had been warned to keep away from Indians who stood completely isolated. I stressed that we had repeatedly complained to Foreign Office in Karachi against these harassments but situation showed no improvement. We had, therefore, to request our Government to tell the Pakistani High Commission in Delhi to take up the matter with their Government to stop these harassments. If, however, they continued, we would have no alternative but to subject Pakistani diplomats in India to the same harassment and inconveniences to which we were being subjected in Pakistan. ALIVE tried to browbeat me to the charge that I had organised the harassment of Pakistani diplomats in India. In reply I gave him sequence of events to establish that we had asked for redress of our grievances in Pakistan which, if not taken care of by the Pakistan Government, would naturally lead to repercussions in India. If Pakistan Government desired to improve matters, she must give normal facilities and courtesies to Indian diplomats in Pakistan which would be reciprocated in India. ALVIE stated that instruction had already been issued to the police authorities to see that Indians were not harassed and he expressed the hope that similar instructions would be issued by the Government of India. I replied that so far I had seen no improvement in Islamabad and on my return to Karachi I would check if there is any improvement there. If not the inconveniences to Pakistani diplomats would have to continue.

ALIVE told me what had already been conveyed earlier by Director PIRACHA that normalcy should be restored to the functioning of diplomats in Pakistan and India. I pointed out to him that India had already proposed early in October that this should be done but Pakistan Government had indicated its unwillingness to give any more facilities than were being given at that time. ALIVE tried to explain that in October certain restrictions had been placed on the entire diplomatic corps as all diplomats could not leave Karachi without special permission. Pakistan Government could not give to Indian Missions more facilities than were being given to other diplomats. Now that they had decided to restore pre-emergency facilities to all diplomats they were in a position to restore normalcy in the functioning of Indian Missions in Pakistan.
On that basis, they requested extension of normal facilities to Pak Missions in India. He told me that the proposals had already been made to New Delhi. I expressed the hope that Pakistan would not try once again to take credit for initiating a proposal now which had been made by us originally a month earlier.

ALIVE talked at length about the report which he had received from AFZAL IQBAL about the Government of India’s reactions to proposals for repatriation contained in Pakistan’s note of third November. According to him, India was not prepared to release Pakistani internees but was prepared to deliver them at Wagah for repatriation by road or at Delhi for repatriation by air or at Bombay for repatriation by sea. This was at variance with Pakistan’s decision to release all internees and to leave it to them for making their own arrangements to return to their homes with the assistance of their High Commission where necessary. He further said that India was prepared to issue exit permits to non-internees provided the number of permits issued by both Governments was on parity. Their attitude is that it would be best if the internees and other nationals are released, given exit permits speedily and made free to make their own travel arrangements. For this purpose, (it was) necessary for both Governments to decide jointly on the routes by land, sea and air by which nationals of both countries would return home. If on the contrary they had to be brought collectively to any one point, one would have to go into the question of dates on which exchanges take place and elaborate arrangements would have to be made for physical transfer to the agreed points by both Governments which would inordinately delay matters. Pakistan’s view is with which I am in agreement that we should not strain respective High Commissions to process each and every case of repatriation for which they neither the men nor the resources.

I pointed out that out of 54,000 Pakistani nationals we had detained only about 3,000 or so. These were people whom we had suspected for anti-Indian activity. Consequently it would not be proper for us to release them and to let them roam about freely in India. Perhaps, for this reasons we had suggested that an exchange of internees should take place. I also explained that we were not proposing a man to man exchange but we had to keep an eye on the number of nationals who actually leave India and Pakistan so that no striking disparity arises in the actual flow of repatriation traffic. ALIVE requested clarification on this point and pressed for early arrangements for repatriation of all internees and nationals. He was particularly anxious about the opening of the land route between Lahore and Amritsar via Wagah which would be a help in arranging the early return of nationals of both countries. He also requested information regarding nearly 23,000 Pakistani labourers who were believed to be interned in West Bengal.
ALVIE preached again and again that we must take constructive steps to improve atmosphere and to improve relations. My reply was that while we welcomed this approach we had taken the initiative in regard to many matters but there was no response from Pakistan. We were all for improving matters at all levels and in all ways but this could only be a two-way traffic. ALVIE should implement what he was preaching to me. Earlier I had pointed out to Director PIRACHA that it would help to improve matters substantially if Pakistan was even at this late stage prepared to accept responsibility for raids and searches and was prepared to punish officials concerned. This would earn respect for Pakistan and coupled with the assurance that such misdeeds would not be repeated would improve the climate so much that it would be possible for our High Commissioner to return soon. I also pressed him to give us compensation for the damage suffered by our chancery.

From ALVIE’s talk with me to-night I got the impression that Pakistan was concerned at the realities of Indo-Pakistan relations. ALVIE’s display of bad temper was perhaps due to the sense of frustration on which these realities are imposing. His talk with me was devoted primarily to such matters as future of internees and other nationals, the position of pensioners and functioning of their Mission in India all of which have been badly affected by the recent hostilities. But beneath all these seems to be realisation of the fact that Pakistan had not been able to push India militarily or diplomatically, which might induce Pakistan to come down to earth a little more in the course of next few weeks. The appreciation of the realities is unlikely to result in Pakistan’s starting a major conflict with India again, in near future. This is the impression which I gathered from senior diplomats also and which I share. By refusing to be bullied by ALVIE and by being tough with him, I wanted to register that today India was not prepared to be pushed around by Pakistan, a fact which I expect him to report to his Government.
0455. Note Verbale from the Ministry of External Affairs to Pakistan High Commission in India regarding return of property and assets taken over by either side.

New Delhi, November 6, 1965.

The Ministry of External Affairs of the Government of India presents its compliments to the High Commission for Pakistan in India and has the honour to invite the High Commission's attention to the question of the return of the property and assets taken over by the Government of Pakistan in connection with the armed conflict of August/September 1965, and to Ministry's several notes in this connection, in particular Notes Nos. PII/274/1/67, Vo1.II dated the 21st November 1967, PII/287/1/67 dated the 8th January, 1968 and No. P(PIV)287(9)/66 dated the 31st July, 1968, respectively. The Government of India have throughout expressed their readiness to discuss the subject of the return of property and assets taken over by either side and has extended invitations to the Government of Pakistan to respond to this request in order to implement the undertaking given by the two Governments in Article VIII of the Tashkent Declaration 1966. This Article, as the High Commission is aware, provides as follows:

“.......They further agreed to discuss the return of the property and assets taken over by either side in connection with the conflict.”

2. Rather than respond to these invitations, it is regrettable that the Government of Pakistan has not only attempted to disown responsibility for Indian property and assets seized by them during and after the hostilities but have also, in an arbitrary manner, attempted to assume the right to appropriate the property and assets.

3. The Ministry has now come to know from the reports published in Pakistani newspapers that the East Pakistan Enemy Property Board, Dacca, proposes to dispose of by auction in the near future a large number of valuable Indian properties, such as cotton mills, tea gardens, cinema halls, industrial concerns, etc., as per list enclosed, which had been seized by the Pakistan Government during and after the armed conflict.

4. The Ministry protests against the arbitrary acts of the Pakistan Government first in seizing the property illegally and then disposing it of without any regard to international law and practice. Assuming, although not at all agreeing, that Pakistan could seize property and assets of Indian nationals during the armed conflict, it is well established under international law and practice that such property and assets must be held in custody as a continuing trust, without disturbing title or ownership. Even the Defence of Pakistan Rules under which the property was seized and held require the property to be preserved in contemplation of the arrangements to be made at the conclusion of peace. The hostilities having ceased, and the parties having agreed in Article VIII of the Tashkent Declaration 1966 to discuss the return of the property and assets, the question of their disposal by sale, auction or otherwise, on the basis that this property belongs to Pakistan, is on the face of it illegal. A transferee or purchaser could never get a clear title to such properties. The Government of India, therefore, urge the Government of Pakistan to take steps immediately to stop auction of the properties mentioned in the enclosed list as well as of any other properties similarly seized, and instruct the East Pakistan authorities to desist from the sale and disposal of the seized Indian properties. Should they disregard this request and hold the illegal auction or otherwise dispose of the property and assets, the Government of India reserve their right in respect of Indian property and assets seized by Pakistan and will not recognize title that Pakistan or any third party may claim as a result of this illegal sale by auction or by any other mode of transfer.

5. None of the properties to be auctioned are perishable goods. Neither has the Government of Pakistan notified the Government of India that any of these are deteriorating. Property consisting of perishable goods or those which are deteriorating, could alone be considered for sale or disposal in other ways. But here too the disposal must be done in agreement between the two Governments so as to ensure that the property is not sold at a throw-away price, and the sale proceeds thereof must continue to be deposited with Government, to be taken into account at the time of return of property or assets.

6. In order to restore normalcy in this regard, and with a view to implement the undertaking solemnly agreed upon in the Tashkent Declaration, the Ministry once again invites the Government of Pakistan to take immediate measures to discuss the return of property and assets taken over by either side in connection with the conflict.

7. The Ministry avails itself of this opportunity to renew to the High Commission the assurance of its highest consideration.

The High Commission of Pakistan,
New Delhi.

0456. Note Verbale from the Ministry of External Affairs to the Pakistan High Commission in India regarding return of nationals and returnees of the two countries on reciprocal basis.

New Delhi, November 8, 1965.

No.P(PIV)41(18)/65, 8 November, 1965.

The Ministry of External Affairs presents its compliments to the High Commission of Pakistan in New Delhi and has the honour to acknowledge the receipt of the High Commission Note No.1(24)/-CS-VI/65, dated the 4th October, 1965, regarding the return of nationals and internees of both the countries on the basis of reciprocity.

2. The proposals of the Government of India were reiterated in the Note Verbale No.KAR-REP-1/65 dated the 29th October from the High Commission of India to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Pakistan. A copy of this Note is enclosed. The Ministry is unable to understand a reference to the Aide Memoire handed over by the Deputy High Commissioner of Pakistan in India on the 13th October, as it was made clear to the Deputy High Commissioner of Pakistan that the proposals in that Aide Memoire were not acceptable in the form in which they stood. It will be evident from para 3 of the Note Verbale No.KAR-REP-1/65 dated the 29th October from the High Commission of India, Karachi, that there is a clear difference between the Indian proposal regarding internees and the proposal contained in the Pakistan Deputy High Commissioner’s Aide Memoire dated 13th October, 1965. It is again clarified that the Government of India are agreeable to take the Pakistan internees to Indian ports or air-ports or land frontiers as may be mutually agreed to provided similar facilities are given by the Government of Pakistan in respect of the Indian internees. From the points of exit the receiving government would make arrangements for the onward journey. In so far as the Pakistani internees are concerned, the question of extension of “stay permits” will not arise as they would be escorted to the points of departure from where they will immediately proceed to Pakistan.

3. The Ministry again wishes to point out that proposals for the speedy return of nationals of both countries were made in an Aide Memoire handed over by the Ministry of External Affairs to the Deputy High Commissioner of Pakistan on the 1st of October. These were in substance the same as the proposals which were made subsequently by H.E. the High Commissioner of Pakistan in his letter No.F.1(3)P/65(N)1 dated the 19th October, 1965, and further reiterated in Para 3 of the Government of Pakistan’s Aide Memoire dated the 23rd October given to the High Commissioner of India in Karachi.
4. As the High Commission is fully aware the Government of India have already started implementing the proposals made in their Aide Memoire of 1st October even though there has so far been a regrettable lack of reciprocity on the part of the Government of Pakistan. The Government of India confirm that they will implement the proposals contained in the High Commission of India’s Note No.KAR-REP-1/65 dated the 29th October, 1965, provided the Government of Pakistan will accept and implement the same.

5. The Ministry of External Affairs avails itself of this opportunity to renew to the High Commission of Pakistan the assurances of its highest consideration.

No.AHC-2312/65. 15th Nov. 1965

Subject: Political situation in Pakistan and immediate objectives of Pakistan’s Foreign Policy

My dear Kewal Singh*,

After the cease fire became effective on the 23rd September, 1965, both the Government and the people of Pakistan have had ample time to give some thought to Indo-Pakistan problems. In this dispatch I have attempted to analyse the mood of the simple people and have tried to assess the utterances of leaders like President Ayub and Bhutto. I have come to the conclusion, which I find is shared by many in the Diplomatic Corps, that there is little chance of Pakistan starting a second round and that faced with a stalemate militarily and diplomatically, Pakistan is gradually staging a climb down with minimum loss of face before its people.

* Kewal Singh, the High Commissioner had been recalled to New Delhi during the hostilities and he was based in New Delhi as Officer-on-Special Duty.

2. The mood of the people does not reflect the thinking in Government circles which must be presumed to be more sober. So far as the ignorant masses are concerned, they have been roused to such a pitch emotionally that they are prepared to have a second round and fight even with their fists. There is no doubt that the “attack on Lahore” has roused Pakistan nation and has helped it to unify in a way that nothing else could have done it. One Pakistani told me that for the last 17 years Pakistan was a hotch potch collection of people from different parts of India. Now for the first time it has been welded into a nation.

3. Not only the simple people but also the younger elements in the Armed Forces are in a mood to have a second round. As they have been fed on stories of Pakistani superiority in morale, training, arms and equipment they genuinely feel that they can give India a good beating.

4. There was even resentment among them when President Ayub issued his call for a cease fire. They felt that they were being held back and were deprived of winning honourable victories which were within easy reach.

5. Except for these two elements, nobody else is thinking of a second round with India. The politicians, who are in know of things, and the senior officers of the Armed Forces, who know the realities, appreciate the following factors:

(i) On its own resources Pakistani Armed Forces cannot take on India. Pakistan can start a conflict, the end of which will not be under her control. India with distinct advantage of reserves, depth and industrial potential would prove too much for Pakistanis whose only chance of having a second successful round with India would be, if a conflict is started in collusion with China. The Chinese seem to have indicated during the recent conflict that while they are prepared to make a diplomatic gesture to oblige Pakistan to increase their own influence in this country, they are not prepared to fight wars for the sake of Pakistan, especially when that would mean facing opposition from U.S.A., U.S.S.R., Yugoslavia, U.A.R. and a host of other countries. For the same reason, it seems unlikely that China would ever fight a major war for Pakistan. In any case, between now and the summer of 1966 the Himalayan passes would be snow bound and it would be physically impossible for China to intervene militarily. Consequently, it would not be possible to launch a conflict with India on her own.
The economic realities are making themselves felt in Pakistan. Responsible officials and senior members of the Cabinet, who are concerned with these matters, are beginning to realise more and more clearly that Pakistan cannot afford to have a second round.

In fact, the indications are that the decks are being cleared for mending relations with the United States. It has been noticed that lately criticism of the United States and public praise for China both have been absent in Pakistani newspapers. This is a sure indication of the need felt by Pakistan to try her best to improve relations with the United States, so that economic aid may start flowing in. The United States, which knows how far Pakistan is dependent on her both for economic and military aid, is expected to take full advantage of the situation to make Pakistan re-orientate her policies towards China and U.S.A. The expectation in the Diplomatic Corps is that while USA would not like to humiliate Pakistan, she would be satisfied if Pakistan does not advance any further on the road towards developing collusion with China. Some public gesture reiterating Pakistan’s desire to have better relations with the West and not with China would be insisted upon. Lately, Pakistan is making U.S. Ambassador, Mr. McConaughy, a scapegoat by placing all blame for worsening Pak-U.S. relations, on him. Likewise, it is considered likely that the United States on its side, would insist on finding a scapegoat in the Pakistan Government on whom all blame could be placed for Pak-China relations which have led to worsening of Pak-U.S. relations. The obvious choice falls on Bhutto especially after his utterances in New York, suggesting that he might be on his way out. This possibility has been talked about from time to time. It has gained new currency lately. While Ayub is considered indispensable by the Americans, Bhutto is not. Consequently, Ayub might tactfully have to drop Bhutto as the price for improving relations with the United States, even though it would not be easy to do so, as it would spoil the image of Pakistan’s independent foreign policy, and would be a blow to Ayub’s prestige and to Pakistan’s nationalism. If Ayub goes to this length, it would be only because the realities of the situation would give him no alternative.

The Afghan Ambassador told me that Pakistan expected that in the conflict with India she would receive more assistance from her ally, the United States. It is clear to Pakistan now that the U.S. values her friendship with India more than her friendship with Pakistan, as the United States needs a stable India to cope with the Chinese threat. This realisation coupled with Pakistan’s dependence on aid from the United States is expected to be a further restraining influence on her from starting a second round.

(iv) There are reliable reports that East Pakistan is becoming increasingly restive. The impact of the conflict with India which would result in economic hardships to the people both of West and East Pakistan would create more strains for the Pakistan Government. Our Radio propaganda should make the people of Pakistan ask the question “What has Pakistan gained by the tragic loss of thousands of lives?” This question would hurt the people of Pakistan and would help to spread discontent against the Government and its present policies. We could capitalise on this situation in East Pakistan and to a lesser extent in West Pakistan, and cause maximum embarrassment to the Pakistan Government, especially in the context of Baluchistan and Pakhtoonistan issues. This would, in turn, restrain Pakistan even more from starting another gamble. One helpful indication that the second round is long away off is that high octane petrol which went off the market from 6th September 1965 has reappeared for free distribution. This would not have happened if there was the slightest possibility of any large scale offensive on the part of Pakistan involving use of tanks and planes.

6. It is significant that right from U Thant’s visit in September, President Ayub Khan has been steadily climbing down. At the time of U Thant’s visit Ayub insisted on pre-conditions to a cease fire, which he abandoned the moment he was faced with prospects of immediate cease fire. He would have never done so, if he was strong enough to keep pushing on or to start a second round. Secondly, after the cease fire President Ayub went on record to say that his troops would stay where they were until there was a firm commitment about the political solution of the Kashmir problem. Soon after he resiled from this position and is now committed to cooperate with the Secretary General’s nominee to organise the troops withdrawal. Further, on 27th October, 1965, Ayub publicly declared that he did not expect a conflict with India again. Further, according to the DAWN of 10th November, President Ayub said: “Pakistan is determined to uphold the right of the people of Kashmir to be free”. “As our cause is just, God in His mercy will grant us victory”, he added. It is significant that now he is counting on Allah and not on his own strength to liberate Kashmir. In his address to the National Assembly today Ayub said that Pakistan would give another chance to World Powers to work for an honourable settlement of the Kashmir dispute. Earlier, in his press conference on 11th November, reported in DAWN of 12th November, Bhutto tried to make a virtue out of the November 5th Security Council Resolution, and prepared his people to face “realities”. What are these realities except the fact that Pakistan has been unable to grab Kashmir and is unlikely to do so in the future.

7. When I was in Islamabad last, Director General Alvie talked to me about the problem of payment of pensions and about the human problem of repatriating thousands of nationals. He talked at length about taking constructive measures to improve matters between two countries. Perhaps these are all pointers to the basic fact that the Pakistan Government has realized that its gamble in Kashmir has failed militarily and diplomatically, and that it has to face the situation that it cannot accomplish by force what it had set out to do.

8. The U.A.R Ambassador told me that according to some reports Governor Kalabagh and many others were openly accusing Bhutto of bringing the country to a catastrophe. When the truth about the extent of casualties of Pakistani troops reaches people, they would undoubtedly ask “what have you accomplished at the cost of so many lives”?

9. The Pakistan Government is, therefore, in a difficult situation and finds itself in a complete stalemate in which it has little room for maneuver. It cannot deliver the goods in accordance with promise made to the people. It cannot afford to lose face with them either. In this situation, the Pakistan Government would probably have to stage a climb down which would be a painful and a slow process.

10. I would expect Pakistan to keep up the basic position of the Government that India is a source of great danger, to beat of India with every stick available and to utilise the “dark image” of India to rally the people round the Government. For this purpose, Pakistan might be expected to continue the border pin pricks, border incidents, and keep up tensions. Pakistan is too firmly committed to the liberation of Kashmir to give it up. Lip service to the cause of Kashmir will have to be kept up and the Kashmir problem kept alive. Pakistan may, therefore, be expected to send more infiltrators if she can afford to send them, or create trouble in Kashmir through paid agents or by any other means at her disposal, in order to tell the world that a political solution of the Kashmir problem cannot be delayed. Nevertheless, for the reasons set out above, I do not expect Pakistan to launch a major conflict with India either now or in the foreseeable future. The immediate objectives of Pakistan’s foreign policy appear to be:

(i) To mend relations with U.S.A. at minimum loss of face;
(ii) To keep Kashmir issue alive by all means available diplomatically or militarily;
(iii) To try and make U.S.S.R. and other world powers revise their attitude towards the Kashmir problem.
(iv) To gradually prepare the Pakistani public to the reality that the venture to grab Kashmir has failed.

With kind regards,

Yours sincerely

(P.N. Kaul)

Shri Kewal Singh,
Officer on Special Duty,
Ministry of External Affairs,
New Delhi.

0458. Note Verbale from the Ministry of External Affairs to the Pakistan High Commission in India regarding inhuman treatment meted out to the Indian journalists.

New Delhi, November 15, 1965.

The Ministry of External Affairs presents its compliments to the High Commission of Pakistan in India, New Delhi and has the honour to say that with the return on the 6th November, 1965, of the last Indian journalist interned in Pakistan after prolonged negotiations and inexcusable delay on the part of Pakistani Authorities, the Ministry has been able to gather the full facts of the inhuman treatment meted out to the Indian journalists by the Pakistani Authorities.

2. Three of the Indian journalists namely Mr. C.P. Maniktala of the Press Trust of India, Mr. Narayan Swamy of the Indian Express and Mr. V.V.R. Sharma of the Times of India all accredited journalists of standing, representing reputed News Agencies and newspapers, were imprisoned for 15 days in a concentration camp near Karachi and were later under house arrest for another 18 days. The Indian High Commissioner had requested the Government of Pakistan that the Indian journalists may be interned along with the Indian diplomats but this reasonable request was peremptorily turned down by the Pakistani Authorities.
3. Mr. Maniktala was taken from his residence on the 10th September, 1965, to the Police Headquarters for interrogation. He was placed under arrest and declared an internee. The same evening he was taken to a police cell and lodged there. According to Mr. Maniktala he was not given any food or bed during his first night in the cell and was forced to spend the whole night on the bare cement floor. The two other Indian correspondent Mr. Narayan Swamy and Mr. V. V. R. Sharma had taken refuge on 6th September, 1965, in the residences of officials of the Indian High Commission. The Pakistan Authorities forced these two journalists out of their shelter and imprisoned them in a police station. Even women and little children were not spared. The wife of Mr. Sharma with her 11 month-old baby was arrested and imprisoned, in the police station in a dirty dormitory. Pakistani police officers searched Mr. Sharma’s suit-cases which contained the clothes of his wife and child. It is indeed truly shocking that a lady and her 11 month old baby should have been locked up in a dirty dormitory in a police station. The Pakistani authorities were fully aware that she and her baby were not criminals. They were being imprisoned simply because Mr. Sharma was an Indian journalists accredited to Pakistan.

4. On September 13, 1965 the above three journalists were taken to a concentration camp and they were interrogated incessantly and mercilessly. This gruelling interrogation continued even after the ceasefire. During the interrogation, Pakistani police officials tried to extract from these journalists a “confession” that they were working as “spices”. In spite of the ruthless pressure and mental agony caused by this incessant interrogation for about 10 hours all the three journalists firmly maintained that they were only professional journalists working for their respective news agencies and newspapers.

5. On September 13, 1965 when these Indian journalists were taken to the concentration camp they had to suffer rude and insulting behaviour by the Pakistani Authorities when they were asked to file into the office of the Jail Superintendent and were forced to hand over to him all their writing and reading material, watches, jewellery, cash and personal effects. They were only allowed to have with them one extra pair of clothes.

6. During the period of detention, these journalists were not even given adequate food. According to Mr. V.V.R Sharma, they were asked to stand in a queue for one hard roti and a meager quantity of watery potato curry. On occasions even this food was not given, and the journalists had to starve. They were also deprived of normal amenities like radio and newspapers. Mr. Maniktala was lodged in a police cell with three convicts and a maniac for three days and Mr. Alfred was forced to spend four days in solitary confinement. Such cruel treatment is not even given to criminals in a civilised State. It is truly shocking that accredited professional journalists of good standing, representing reputable newspapers and news agencies interned solely because of the conflict between two countries and should have been subjected to such inhuman and totally impermissible treatment.

7. It is beyond the Ministry’s comprehension as to why even babies should have been subjected to the Pakistani Authorities wrath. According to Mr. V.V.R. Sharma (Times of India) babies were given a small quantity of milk only for two days and thereafter even that was stopped. When some Indian ladies requested the Jailer for a little hot water for preparing baby food, the Jailer curtly refused it. Then he told the ladies: “Thank your stars that you are being treated like human beings.”

8. Mr. W. Alfred, Correspondent of Press Trust of India, was arrested in Rawalpindi on the 8th September, 1965.

Mr. Alfred was allowed only two minutes to get ready and was whisked away before he could speak to his wife and advise her what to do. Mr. Alfred was treated as a ‘C’ class prisoner and lodged in an isolated cell with no light or furniture. He was forced to sleep on the Mud-floor, and was given two dirty, dusty, foul-smelling blankets in rags. It was hardly any consolation for Mr. Alfred to reflect on the statement of his jail-warder, that this wretched cell in which he was lodged had historic associations in that the great and illustrious leader of Pakhtoonistan Abdul Ghaffar Khan had been imprisoned there by the Government of Pakistan, and later Mr. K.H. Khurshid who at one time had been appointed by the Government of Pakistan as the so-called “President” of the part of Kashmir illegally held under Pakistan’s military occupation had also been imprisoned there.

9. The treatment of Mr. Alfred’s wife by the Pakistani police is an affront to all codes of civilized behaviour. She was taken into custody on the 10th September, 1965, and the police rudely insisted on staying in the room as she dressed. She was also forced to remain the whole day at the Police Station without food. This was the behaviour of the Pakistani Authorities towards a lady, that too, the wife of a reputed journalist, and this shocking conduct calls for the severest condemnation.

10. Even on the eve of their departure from Pakistan after protracted negotiations between the Governments of India and Pakistan, Mr. and Mrs. Alfred were not spared harassment by the Police and Customs Authorities at the Karachi airport. The result was that they nearly missed their scheduled Pan American plane. The plane had actually begun moving out of the tarmac but it was at the kind intervention of the Pan American Airlines employees that the plane stopped and Mr. & Mrs. Alfred were taken on board by a special ladder.
11. Mr. P.R. Roy, Press Trust of India Correspondent in Dacca was arrested along with his wife on the 13th September, 1965, and was taken to the concentration camp in the suburbs of Dacca where they were held in detention for 52 days. The experiences of Mr. & Mrs. Roy were equally harrowing as those of their colleagues in West Pakistan.

12. The houses of the journalists were ransacked and the police searched their houses in their absence. Mr. V.V.R. Sharma's house was taken possession of by Pakistanis without his knowledge or permission. The Indian journalists had made repeated requests to the Pakistan Authorities to permit them to communicate with the Indian High Commission but this was curtly refused. The High Commission is aware that it is the inalienable right of a person residing in a foreign country to address a communication to his Embassy especially at times of distress. This was refused to the Indian Journalists. The Ministry is amazed that the Pakistan Government has failed to observe even this elementary international convention.

13. The High Commission should also note that out of the 5 Pakistani journalists resident in India, only one Pakistani journalists namely Mr. Jilani was interned. All the other Pakistani journalists stayed in the Pakistan High Commission. In striking contrast to this, all the five Indian journalists with their infant children were interned and harshly treated by the Pakistani Authorities. The High Commission should appreciate this contrast between the humane, considerate and civilized treatment given by India and the harsh and inhuman treatment inflicted by the Pakistan Government on the Indian journalists.

14. The Ministry, therefore lodges an emphatic protest against the impermissible and unwarranted conduct of the Pakistan Authorities against the accredited Indian journalists, in gross violation not only of universally accepted conventions but also of elementary human decency. The Ministry demands full compensation for the losses sustained by the Indian journalists as a result of the action of the Pakistani Authorities.

An Aide-Memorie on the subject of exchange of nationals was handed over by the Indian Acting High Commission when called at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs at Rawalpindi on the 5th November 1965. This Aide-Memorie seeks to throw the responsibility on Pakistan. It is, therefore, necessary to put the record straight.

2. The Government of Pakistan conveyed their agreement in principle to the exchange of nationals at the end of September, 1965, soon after the diplomatic missions in both sides began to function. This was followed up on 6th October by the expression of willingness to allow women and children to leave as and when they desire.

3. On the 13th October, 1965, the High Commission of Pakistan in New Delhi put forward a detailed plan to the Indian Ministry of External Affairs in which the following proposals were offered:

   i) As a first step the two Governments should order, on a reciprocal basis, the release of nationals actually detained in both countries

   ii) Such an order should be made on an agreed date simultaneously in Karachi and Delhi,

   iii) After their release the nationals of the two countries now under detention will make their own arrangement to leave for their respective countries and when possible or convenient. Both Governments would allow extension of stay pending availability of travel facilities.

4. When no reply was received to this proposal the Pakistan High Commission under instructions of the Government of Pakistan wrote on 19th October, 1965, a d.o. letter to the Indian Foreign Secretary in which he drew attention to the hardship which nationals on both sides were facing and suggested that as a first step the following categories should be immediately allowed to leave:

   (a) Persons who desire to leave on compassionate grounds or for any other reasons and recommended by the respective High Commission.
(b) Employee of Commercial Firms, Banks, Airlines, Government Departments or semi Government organizations, pressmen etc. etc. may wish to return.

(c) Families of those who are allowed to leave would also be given permission. Personal luggage will be allowed subject to the normal baggage rules.

It further suggested that this proposal should be implemented with effect from 26th October or such other date which India would care to suggest.

5. Although the Indian Government replied that they agreed that categories (a), (b) and (c) should be allowed to go, they were silent on the general question of repatriation of nationals or the fixation of a date when permits could be freely issued. Indeed from the emphasis the Indian Government continued to lay on a small number of permits issued by them or demanded, it appeared that they were not keen to allow nationals on either side to speedily return home.

6. Between 19th and 30th October the Government of Pakistan made two further attempts to initiate meaningful discussions of the procedure which needed to be worked out so that people held upon either side could leave.

7. At last on 30th October the Acting Indian High Commissioner delivered an Aide-Memoire dated 29th October which drew a distinction between those interned and those at large, and suggested that the former be delivered under reciprocal arrangement to either side while the latter be allowed to go freely. Thus the response to Pakistan’s initiative was again a limited one.

8. The Pakistan Government had all along addressed itself to the problem as a whole and it was in this spirit that they put forward their comprehensive and simple proposal of 3rd November simultaneously in Karachi and New Delhi. This envisaged that:

(1) With immediate effect both Governments release all Pakistan/Indian nationals held up in either country and issue exit permits to those holding valid passports to facilitate their departure.

(2) These persons be free to leave the country through the available routes under arrangements made by the respective Governments.

(3) The number of exit permits issued and the number of those persons who leave the two countries be furnished by the two Governments to each other weekly. (Since the information has to be compiled from several sources weekly exchanges would be preferable to by-weekly one.)
The Indian High Commission was further informed that the Pakistan Government was prepared to arrange for the repatriation of destitute Pakistani nationals holding valid travel documents and the Government of Pakistan was prepared to discuss the opening of routes in East and West of Pakistan for the purpose of providing means of exit to those nationals who had been furnished with permits.

9. The Government of Pakistan for its part began to implement this scheme in good faith, in anticipation that the Government of India would do likewise. Over three hundred Indian nationals have already received exit permits and on 10th November one 100 persons left by air for Bombay.

However, from the indications received since then it has to be regretfully concluded that the Government of India is not prepared to proceed on the basis of the comprehensive Pakistan proposals of 3rd November 1965. It is obvious that it would not be possible for the Government of Pakistan to continue to act unilaterally in this matter.

11. Meanwhile the Government of Pakistan have received disturbing news of the harsh and inhuman treatment being meted out to Pakistani nationals detained in Indian camps. The Pakistan High Commission in New Delhi has already protested to the Indian Government against this violation of the human principles of the Geneva Convention vides his Note No.1 (24) CS/VI/65, dated 5th November 1965.

12. In view of this situation and in order to prevent further hardship to Pakistan nationals, the Pakistan Government is willing to proceed on the basis of the Indian proposal of 29th October 1965. It will act in accordance with it in the hope that the Government of India will immediately accelerate the grant of exit permits to those not detained. With regard to those interned the Pakistan Government propose that those interned in the Eastern section of India may be brought to Calcutta where the Deputy High Commission for Pakistan will, after confirmation that they are Pakistan nationals, arrange for their repatriation to East Pakistan. Those in other parts of India may be brought to Bombay where arrangements can be made for vessels to bring them to Pakistan. The Pakistan High Commission in New Delhi will depute staff to Bombay to make similar arrangements for departure. For their own part the Government of Pakistan are prepared to bring Indian interned nationals to Karachi and Dacca and deliver them to the Indian Missions in the respective places so that they can depart under arrangements made by them.

13. The Government of Pakistan would like to know how soon interned Pakistan nationals can be brought to the exit points and suggest that lists of interned nationals on both sides together with relevant particulars, should be handed over to the diplomatic Missions on both sides. They also suggest that the modalities and arrangements for departure should now be worked out by the respective Missions as a matter of high priority.

0460. Extract from Aide-Memoire No.1 (24)CS.VI/65 Dated the 20th November, 1965, from the High Commissioner for Pakistan in India, New Delhi.

Since the Government of India found itself unable to agree to Pakistan's proposal to release the internees, the Government of Pakistan, with a view to alleviating the avoidable suffering of its nationals in internment camps have decided to agree to Government of India's proposal of October 29, 1965, to exchange them as such. The Government of India is requested to indicate a convenient date when the exchange of internees could start.

The Government of Pakistan are prepared to deliver Indian nationals interned in West Pakistan to the Indian High Commission in Karachi and those interned in East Pakistan to the Indian Mission in Dacca. The Government of Pakistan propose that their nationals interned in the eastern section of India may be brought to Calcutta where the Deputy High Commission of Pakistan after confirmation that they are Pakistani nationals arrange for their repatriation to East Pakistan. Those interned in other parts of India may be brought to Bombay where arrangements will be made for vessels to take them to Pakistan. The Pakistan High Commission in New Delhi will depute staff to Bombay to make arrangements for their departure.

The Government of Pakistan suggest that in order to organize a smooth and satisfactory exchange of internees the two Governments agree to provide the following facilities on a basis of reciprocity, to the respective diplomatic missions:

(i) the number and location of internment camps should be communicated immediately. Lists of internees should be provided well in advance of the date on which exchange is mutually agreed upon to start.

(ii) Representatives of two Governments should be allowed to freely visit internment camps.

(iii) Officers of the Missions and their staff should have free access to the internment camps so that they can satisfy themselves about the validity of documents held by internees.
(iv) Arrangements be made to ensure that interned families are not split and that a family is treated as a unit irrespective of the fact whether part of it is in or outside internment camps.

(v) Internees and their families should be allowed to carry their personal belongings, jewellery and other valuables etc.

(vi) Suitable transport facilities may be provided at Calcutta to carry internees to the East Pakistan border.

0461. Note Verbale from the High Commission for Pakistan in India to the Ministry of External Affairs regarding repatriation.

New Delhi, November 21, 1965.

High Commissioner for Pakistan in India
New Delhi

The High Commission of Pakistan in India presents its compliments to the Ministry of External Affairs, Government of India and with reference to their Note No.PI/415/6/65, dated the 17th November 1965, has the honour to state that the Ministry, in making some uncalled for comments, appears to suggest that the High Commission for Pakistan in India is expected to function as a travel agency responsible for providing information about the exact date and time of arrival of the Indian nationals from Pakistan. The High Commission for Pakistan in India reiterates that exit permits have been issued to the persons concerned and it is to function of the India High Commission in Karachi to make arrangements for the departure of their nationals and keep the Ministry of External Affairs in New Delhi informed.

2. In its Note No.F.1(3)-CS.VI/65, dated November 14, 1965, the High Commission stated that “it is expected that they will leave Pakistan by the 16th November, 1965”, as this information was conveyed to the Government of Pakistan by the persons concerned who made their own travel arrangements. If for some reason or other they changed the date of their departure and failed to inform the Ministry accordingly through the Indian High Commission in Karachi, the High Commission for Pakistan in India cannot be held responsible.
The High Commission avails itself of this opportunity to renew to the Ministry of External Affairs the assurances of its highest consideration.

0462. Note Verbale from the Ministry of External Affairs to the Pakistan High Commission in India regarding seizure of Indian Cargo from neutral ships.

New Delhi, November 25, 1965.

Government of India
Ministry of External Affairs
New Delhi

The Ministry of External Affairs presents its compliments to the High Commission for Pakistan in India and has the honour to state that as a result of the illegal resort to contraband control the Government of Pakistan seized Indian cargoes on neutral ships, Pakistani ships, Indian ships and Indian inland water crafts while transiting through Pakistan waters and exercising the right of innocent passage. Additionally the Government of Pakistan has impounded Indian ocean-going ships as well as inland water crafts and sailing vessels in Pakistan waters and detained the Indian crew that manned these vessels. This action of Pakistan without declaration of war and without giving notice to any country is illegal being a violation of the fundamental principles of international law recognized by the world community of nations in their interstate relations. With to enforcing respect for the for international law and restoring order, India had no option but to take recourse to certain counter measures. In consequence, the Government of India detained Pakistani crews as well as Pakistani ships and Pakistani cargo in Indian waters. As the Government of India regards it essential to restore law and order and to bring normalcy to maritime trade of the area they would be agreeable to take the following steps if the Government of Pakistan would reciprocate:-

(i) return all Pakistani cargoes off-loaded in India whether from neutral ships, Indian ships or Pakistani ships or any inland water vessels provided the Government of Pakistan would return all Indian cargoes detained in Pakistan whether from neutral ships, Pakistani ships or Indian ships or Indian inland water vessels.

(ii) return all ships and sailing vessels flying the Pakistani flag and detained in India provided the Government of Pakistan would return all Indian vessels together with Indian inland water crafts and Indian sailing vessels.

(iii) grant exit permits to all Pakistani crew employed on Pakistani vessels as well as on Indian inland water crafts provided the Government of Pakistan would permit repatriation of the Indian crew on Indian ships and Indian sailing vessels impounded in Pakistan.

2. The Government of India are further convinced that neither continuance of contraband control nor persistence in prize court action can be justified by International law particularly when prize courts cannot function under municipal law as they are exclusively based on International law and without a formal declaration of war the prize courts would be ab initio illegal.

3. The Government of India are strongly of the view that in furtherance of the above proposals and in order to restore normalcy the following initial steps should be taken immediately to ensure the maintenance of International law:

(a) exchange on reciprocal basis ad hoc cargoes such as USAIL, cargoes detained by India and seized by Pakistan.

(b) exchange ocean-going ships, sailing vessels and inland water crafts on a tonnage for tonnage basis.

4. By way of a concrete step, the Government of India will immediately grant exit permit to the Pakistani crew of the M.V. AL HASAN with a view to initiating the process of exchange of crews. It is hoped that the Government of Pakistan will reciprocate.

The Ministry of External Affairs avails itself of this opportunity to renew to the High Commission for Pakistan in India the assurances of its highest consideration.

Government of India
Ministry of External Affairs

No. P(PIV) 285(25)/65
14th December, 1965

The Ministry of External Affairs, Government of India, presents its compliments to the High Commission of Pakistan in India and has the honour to state that from reliable reports, the Government of India have come to know that the Government of Pakistan has either taken over the assets and properties of Indian nationals as well as Indian public authorities or are so administering, managing or controlling them as if they were confiscated properties and assets.

2. These confiscatory measure taken under whatever grab, and the utilization, transfer and disposal of Indian assets and properties for military and other purpose, are completely illegal and violate all principles of international law and practice. The Government of Pakistan are fully aware that without having made a formal declaration of war, Pakistan cannot claim the rights of a belligerent.

3. The Government of India calls upon the Government of Pakistan – (a) to restore the illegally seized properties and assets of Indian nationals and Indian public authorities to their owners, and (b) to desist from proceeding with illegal utilization, transfer and disposal of such properties and assets.

4. The Government of India emphatically protests against these illegal acts of Pakistan for which Pakistan must bear full responsibility. The Government of India declares that they will not recognise any title that Pakistan or a third party may claim to Indian properties and assets, pursuant to these illegal and confiscatory measures. The Government of India reserves their right to claim full compensation for the loss or damage to all properties and assets of Indian nationals as well as Indian public authorities.

5. The Ministry of External Affairs avails itself of this opportunity to renew to the High Commission of Pakistan the assurances of its highest consideration.

0464. Letter from Prime Minister Gulzarilal Nanda* to Pakistan President Mohammad Ayub Khan.

New Delhi, January 15, 1966.

Dear Mr. President,

Our High Commissioner to Pakistan, Shri Kewal Singh, is returning to Karachi to rejoin his post. Your High Commissioner, His Excellency Mr. Arshad Hussain, has already arrived here, and with the return of our High Commissioner the first essential steps will have been taken in the normalization of our relations. We have instructed our High Commissioner to bear in mind, in his contacts and dealings with your Government on our behalf, the spirit of the Tashkent Declaration. He, and I am sure, your High Commissioner here, will exert their efforts to smoothen the implementation of the Declaration.

2. I see that in both our countries certain elements have not taken kindly to the Declaration. This was by no means unexpected. The process of reversing the trends in our mutual relations, congealed over a period of 17 years, was bound to cause some initial difficulties. We feel sure that, given a favourable start, the Declaration would be recognized in both countries by the entire people as of mutual benefit to India and Pakistan and as ushering in a new era in our relations in which the various difficulties and disputes between us could be peacefully resolved.

3. We are anxious that the implementation of the Declaration should begin immediately, and certain proposals are already under consideration of both Governments. It seems to me that any difficulties we might encounter in this process might be smoothed over if our High Commissioner has the opportunity, occasionally, to have access to Your Excellency. I hope that, when occasion demands, it will be possible for you to receive him. On our part, we would be happy to receive your High Commissioner at any level in the Government, and I shall personally be happy to do so.

4. Both our Governments have undertaken a heavy responsibility in the cause of peace and goodwill between the two countries. I have no doubt that with Your Excellency’s sincerity of purpose, which was fully reciprocated by Prime Minister Shastri and is shared by the Government of India; the Declaration will be implemented by both countries in the Tashkent spirit, to the enduring benefit and happiness of our peoples.

With warmest regards and highest esteem,

* After the sudden death of Lal Bahadur Shastri Gulzarilal Nanda had taken over as Prime Minister until Mrs. Indira Gandhi was elected Leader of the Congress Parliamentary Party and was sworn in as Prime Minister of India.
Yours sincerely,

Field-Marshal Mohammad Ayub Khan,

0465. Aide Memoire handed over by India to Pakistan regarding implementation of the Tashkent Declaration.

New Delhi, January 28, 1966.

The Government of India propose to nominate a delegation consisting of the Minister of External Affairs, the Transport & Aviation Minister and the Minister of Commerce to discuss with Pakistan Ministers further steps towards the implementation of the Tashkent Declaration. It is proposed, in particular, that discussions take place on the details of the questions of restoration of trade, economic relations and communications, and the return of property and assets taken over by either side in connection with the conflict.

2. If the proposal is acceptable to the Government of Pakistan, it is suggested that a meeting of Ministers take place in Delhi or Rawalpindi as may be convenient to the Government of Pakistan in the first week of February.

0466. SECRET

Letter from Secretary, Ministry of External Affairs M. A. Husain to the Indian Ambassador in the United States B. K. Nehru on India – Pakistan relations.

New Delhi, January 31, 1966.

Secretary
Ministry of External Affairs
New Delhi

My dear

Yesterday when we discussed Indo-Pakistan relations I promised to write to you about Bhutto’s response to the point made in your speech at the St. Louis Council on World Affairs on October 20, 1965. What you said was the following:

“What now of the future? India and Pakistan are neighbours and must learn to live in peace. This can happen only when Pakistan has learnt to accept that it is less than a quarter of India’s size and cannot hope to alter this fact of geography either by the break up of Indian unity or through borrowed strength from abroad. It is evident that the realization of this unalterable fact would have come much earlier to Pakistan, and if the United States, through a complete misunderstanding of Pakistan motivation, had not given them the illusion that they were the equals of India in strength.”

2. Five days later Bhutto reacted to your speech and in his speech before the Security Council on October 25, 1965, spoke as follows:

“Do not tell us, ‘Pakistan, stop, because we have the power to force you to stop’, and tell India, ‘Do not stop, because we do not have the power of stop you.’ Do not tell Pakistan, ‘Accept the solution’, and tell India, ‘Do not accept the solution.’ Both countries must be treated at par. The two countries have fought against each other. We have established our equality of all time with India, because India, a habitual predatory aggressor, committed aggression against Pakistan, and we repelled that aggression. We established Pakistan because we were on a basis of equality. There is complete equality between the people of India and the people of Pakistan. On the basis of equality, determine the issue on the rights and wrongs, on the morality of the situation and on the basis of international law and international agreements.”
3. Later he stresses the same point when he said as follows:

“Who is Mr. Shastri to say that peace in the subcontinent will be settled on India’s terms? Have we lost ourselves? Are we completely destroyed? We are 100 million people. We cannot allow peace to be settled on India’s terms. We who have ruled India for 800 years, we who have dominated India for 800 years and who are responsible for the civilization of India, for all the Delhis and the Taj Mahal’s and for all the grandeur and glory of India, are we today in the twentieth century to accept peace on India’s terms? One hundred million people to accept peace on India’s terms? It is out of the question. It is for you to know that we will never accept peace on India’s terms. It is preposterous, it is scandalous, it is a dishonour to us, to accept peace on India’s terms when we have always established our equality and our spirit and have stood for an honourable and dignified world. The Muslims of Pakistan cannot accept that.”

4. In talks with British and American diplomats here I have repeatedly stressed the point that since independence the accentuation of Indo-Pak differences can, among other factors, be attributed to the misconceived but consistent policy of the British and the Americans to equate India and Pakistan and to bolster up Pakistan politically, militarily and economically so as to ensure that they are or appear to be equal to India. It is this artificial bolstering up of Pakistan in order to equate it with India which has prevented the two countries from settling down to an inherent and natural power relationship such as the one which exists between the United States and Canada. I was, therefore, glad that you have given expression publicly to this view point in the United States. We may have a Tashkent Declaration but the Western powers and in particular the United States and the United Kingdom will have to keep this point in mind to ensure the successful implementation of the Tashkent Declaration. I believe that the Soviet Union already accept the validity of this point.

5. I am sending a copy of this letter to our High Commissioner in London for his information.

Your sincerely

0468. Letter from Pakistan President Mohammad Ayub Khan to Prime Minister Indira Gandhi.

Larkana (Sind), February 7, 1966.

President’s Camp
Pakistan,
Camp Larkana

7 February 1966

From: Field Marshal
Mohammad Ayub Khan, N. Pk. H.J.

Dear Prime Minister,

Your High Commissioner, Mr. Kewal Singh, has delivered your message to me in Larkana this afternoon. I am glad to learn of your constructive decision in a matter which is of mutual benefit to India and Pakistan. I am also issuing immediate instructions to our civil and military authorities to permit the resumption of air flights of India and Pakistan planes across each other territories on the same basis as that prior to 1st of August, 1965.

The Late Prime Minister, Lal Bahadur Shastri, discussed with me the necessity of taking such measures in our mutual relations as would make a salutary impact on our people and, further the need for the early restoration of normal relations between the two countries. We believed that prompt action to this end would greatly facilitate the opening of a more conducive and beneficial period of relations between India and Pakistan. In this context, as a manifestation of our earnest intentions to improve relations and to generate confidence, we discussed the desirability of a meeting between our two Army Chiefs to draw up plans for withdrawals and resumption of air flights. We also discussed the need to appoint Ministers who would facilitate future negotiations between India and Pakistan on all our differences and disputes to enable lasting peace to return to the Sub-Continent. I am therefore glad to note that you have issued orders on the early resumption of air flights according to the spirit of our undertaking.

Before I conclude, permit me to add a personal note of admiration for the manner in which you have responded to the Tashkent Declaration. This leads me to believe that we are moving in the right direction and that you will continue to make profound contributions to a happier relationship between us.

I can assure you that you will find me readily reciprocating to your endeavours in any positive measures made in this regard.
With warm regards,

Yours sincerely,

Her Excellency
Mrs. Indira Gandhi,
Prime Minister of the Republic of India,
New Delhi.

MOST IMMEDIATE

Foreign Secretary from Kewal Singh.

Met AYUB Larkana on 7th evening at BHUTTO’s residence. BHUTTO was naturally present and repeatedly intervened during the conversation.

2. I gave the President the letter from the Prime Minister about overflights. BHUTTO pointedly remarked that they had already heard the news from All India Radio and the Pakistani Press. President however read the letter and expressed his real satisfaction at the Prime Minister’s decision which he said was very much in the right direction and will be greatly welcomed in both the countries. You must have by now received president’s reply which shows how warmly he appreciated this decision.

3. The President asked me to convey the following message to our Prime Minister:

He had greatly admired our Prime Minister’s speeches on Tashkent Declaration and Indo-Pak relations immediately on her assumption of office. These speeches fortify the hopes of friendly future of our two nations.

a) The Prime Minister had rightly identified the greatest problem of our two nations, viz., the problem of poverty and misery. We must therefore sincerely work for resolution of our differences and reduction of tension so that we could cooperate in peace and prosperity of the Sub-Continent.

b) He was having very serious difficulties from the opponents of Tashkent Declaration who accuse him of having sold Kashmir down the drain. It was however his sincere conviction that Tashkent Declaration was in the interest of both the nations and could help in solving the Kashmir problem also.

c) The Prime Minister of India should be assured that he would like to work sincerely for Indo-Pakistan friendship. He was however facing tremendous difficulties. That did not mean that he underestimated the difficulties of the Indian Prime Minister. In fact, he felt that Mrs. GANDHI had assumed that heaviest responsibilities that can fall upon any leader in the world. Her speeches gave him great hope of friendship and cooperation between our two countries.

4. After thanking the President I told him that the Prime Minister of India and her Cabinet colleagues attached the greatest impotence to our relations with Pakistan. It was in this very context that I had come to see him as the agenda proposed by the Pakistan Government had caused real concern in India. Building up friendship and cooperation between India and Pakistan was going to be a very hard and patient work.

As the hearts of millions of people were filled with a new hope it was the sacred duty of the two Governments to sustain and fortify this hope. The Pakistani agenda with its emphasis on Kashmir could not serve this cause. The proposed Ministerial meeting should aim at normalizing our relations and dealing with problems arising out of the unfortunate armed conflict in September. The delegations could also explore possibilities of economic and cultural cooperation and deal with other outstanding problems capable of easy solution. All this would bring great joy and confidence to our two peoples and would generate an atmosphere of goodwill and friendship. In this atmosphere more intractable problems like Kashmir could also be discussed at later stage.

5. The President said that he appreciated the difficulty anticipated by us but Kashmir was in reality the cause of the last conflict. We therefore shall have to apply our minds to Kashmir problems. He did not mean that the problem could be settled overnight but we could not shut our eyes to it. I drew President’s attention to the Tashkent discussion and explained that any discussion on Kashmir would only mean firm reiteration of the two different points of view. Reopening of such controversial discussions could only harm the Tashkent spirit and lead to mutual recrimination. As he had rightly pointed out the very peace and prosperity of our two nations was at stake and it would be tragic if we failed our peoples at this juncture. It was for this reason that my Prime Minister felt that our approach should be such which leads to amity, cooperation and positive results. BHUTTO interjected and said how could there be amity unless we were prepared to face the Kashmir issue. I told him that according as we solved some of the problems and achieved active cooperation in economic and cultural fields the Kashmir problem would assume its proper proportion and could be reexamined in the friendly atmosphere between the two countries. BHUTTO said that in that case it would be putting that Kashmir question in cold storage. I told him that insistence on Kashmir and acrimonious discussions on the subject would put us exactly in the same situation as on 5th January after the ministerial meeting in Tashkent. If the intention is to deal a death blow to the Tashkent Declaration this would be the ideal agenda.

6. The President said that he appreciated Government of India's viewpoint but he would like the Indian Prime Minister to appreciate his difficulties also. He was facing the most serious opposition in Pakistan on this issue. I pointed out how on the Indian side there had been greatest restraint on statements even when some interpretations of the Tashkent Agreement had been given in Pakistan which aroused serious questioning and criticisms in India. This proved the desire of my Government to cooperate to the best of their ability. It must be realized that some parties in India were stoutly opposed to the Declaration and are sure to attack the Government in the Parliament in a few days. Our minister shall have to make statements to set the record straight. The present agenda could only help those in both countries who were opposed to Tashkent Agreement and Indo-Pak friendship.

7. At this stage BHUTTO said in that case matters like normalization of relations and other problems could be dealt with through diplomatic channels. The ministerial meeting could also take place much later after the Parliamentary session in India and Pakistan are over. In reply I told the President that the idea of minister's meeting was to strengthen the hopes of our people as the impact of such a meeting would be widespread and the constructive decisions taken would be widely acclaimed by the people. I also suggested to the President that as in Tashkent, the difficult political problem could in due course be discussed at a higher level between the two heads of Governments. President replied that he agreed that we should avoid controversial debate on Kashmir issue as that would be harmful. He would agree that it should not be discussed between the delegations. Perhaps the two Ministers could exchange views on this among themselves. Or, better still, the two heads of Governments could do so through their special emissaries, viz., the High Commissioners. He could convey his views confidentially to the Indian Prime Minister through ARSHAD HUSSAIN and he would be glad to receive me whenever Indian Prime Minister wished to convey her views. This would avoid any controversial discussion and would ensure complete secrecy. I promised the President to convey his suggestion to my Prime Minister but suggested that the discussion on Kashmir should wait till substantial progress has been made on other matters to improve the atmosphere. Mere reiteration of the present positions can only vitiate the atmosphere. BHUTTO again intervened to say that the procedure could be worked out provided we were clear that the basic problem shall have to be discussed. I appealed to President to reconsider the question of agenda in the light of what I had explained to him. He said that he had great difficulties in the matter but he would like me to convey his message to the Indian Prime Minister and then see him after my return from New Delhi.

8. I am afraid the conversation was far from satisfactory due to BHUTTO’s presence. I feel President would have been more helpful and precise if BHUTTO had not constantly intervened. President's stress on Kashmir was not as strong as that of BHUTTO but naturally he wanted to support his Foreign Minister in the presence of a Foreign Representative.

9. After the dinner I sat with the President along with the Iranian Foreign Minister when the President started the subject again in Hindustani and said:

(a) Nothing could have been easier for him than to say in Tashkent that since Prime Minister SHASTRI was not prepared to discuss Kashmir he could not reach any agreement. The Pakistani nation and these oppositional leaders would have acclaimed him as a great man. But he felt intensely that the only way for the survival of India and Pakistan was to make a real effort towards reconciliation and friendship between the two countries. He was being accused of having sold the blood of Pakistani martyrs but he was anxious to stop the flow of blood between the two nations in the years to come. It was important that Indian leadership should display sincerity and statesmanship in their relations with Pakistan. He had no doubt that the new Indian Prime Minister has the same objective and has was also convinced that she would have a lot of opposition. We should however be prepared to face the music if we have to ensure peace and friendship between our two nations.

(b) Of course, Pakistan was dearest to him but he wanted to be believed that he was a friend of India. We must remember that friends of India and Pakistan were getting fewer and fewer every day and this was our last chance. If we failed our peoples in their hopes this time, the coming generations would never forgive us.

(c) India is a big county with immense material and intellectual resources. She can occupy a great place in the world for which Pakistan could never be a rival. He was however sure that India would never be able to occupy that place unless she was able to befriend Pakistan with understanding and goodwill.

10. I raised the question of the agenda again and urged him to reconsider the matter. Our peoples had suffered grievously for years from the hatred and bitterness created in the name of Kashmir. We should give them some respite from this controversy and concentrate on some constructive and cooperative efforts. The President promised to consider the points raised by me.

11. My impression of the talk with AYUB are:

(i) He would like to be reasonable about the agenda but he is in serious difficulties not only with the opposition parties and hostile elements in the Punjab but also with his own colleagues. (BHUTTO, AZIZ AHMED, ALTAF HUSSAIN and SABUR ARE STAUNCHLY OPPOSED to President’s new policy).

(ii) Agenda is mainly the work of BHUTTO and Company, and the President could not over-rule them even if he wished to, in the present political situation.

(iii) If we could provide some face-saving in the wording of the agenda or the procedure of discussions it might be possible for the President to agree. He himself could not suggest anything or, perhaps, he did not wish to suggest in the presence of BHUTTO.

(iv) The President seems quite sincere in his desire to improve relations with India but he knows that it is not possible to undo the effect of last 18-years’ propaganda and policies overnight. He needs time to silence the Opposition, but in the meanwhile, he is forced to lend support to statement and position which can wreck the Tashkent Declaration.

12. Before I took leave he said that I should see him soon after my return and let him know the dates when the Ministers can visit Pindi. He would plan his programme for the end of February after hearing from me.
0470. Statement of Pakistan Minister of State for Foreign Affairs Zian Noorani in the Senate.

Islamabad, February 20, 1966.

According to available report from India, the Muslim community is deeply resentful of the judgment of a District Court in UP transferring the Babri mosque at Ayodhya, near Faizabad, to the Hindu community. On February 14 last, the Muslims took out a procession in Delhi, to protest against the judgment. They were subjected to lathi charge and firing, as a result of which one person was killed and several were injured.

Subsequently, riots have been reported from Srinagar and Sehore, near Bhopal, and other places. The toll of the dead and injured has mounted.

The All-India Muslim Majlise Mushawrat, representative Muslim organisation, has submitted a memorandum addressed to the Indian Prime Minister, demanding the restoration of the status quo about the mosque until the title suits have been decided by higher court. It has pointed out that the historical mosque, built over 450 years ago, has been converted into a temple by a judgment without parallel in judicial history and without hearing the Muslim Waqf Board.

The judgment which caused deep shock to the Muslim community was celebrated by the Hindu community in some places as a victory. The Majlis has also appealed for a judicial inquiry into the violence against Muslims and demanded compensation for those killed and injured in the anti-Muslim violence.

The Majlis has also urged all Muslim members of the Indian Parliament to convene and discuss ways and means to continue their struggle for the restoration of the mosque to the Muslim community.

The position of the Government of Pakistan on communal violence in India has been clearly stated on a number of previous occasions. The Government strictly adheres to the principle of non-interference in the internal affairs of other States, including India. It is the responsibility of the Government of India to take appropriate measures to ensure the safety and the security of the affected people and punish those responsible for these acts of violence. Of course, our people cannot remain indifferent to the plight of human beings, particularly those with whom they share bonds of religion, culture, and family ties.
Mr. Speaker, Sir, I am grateful to hon. Members who, while participating in this debate, lent massive support to the Tashkent Declaration. I am very happy that this support came not only from hon. Members belonging to this side of the house but several hon. Members from the Opposition Benches also supported the Tashkent Declaration, and have given on many occasions more reasons and arguments in favour of acceptance of the Declaration by the country. This expresses the determination of our people to treat this as a non-party issue, as a national issue.

My task in replying has been greatly lightened. It is very much easier as several hon. Members who have already participated and have lent their support to the Tashkent Declaration have given various arguments and reasons to remove some of the doubts that had been raised by those hon. Members who criticized the Declaration. I will not, therefore, be long in my reply. I will try to confine myself to meeting some of the specific points that have been raised by hon. Members who criticized the Declaration.

At this stage, I would like to say that a desire has been expressed by hon. Members that the Prime Minister should also make some statement on the Tashkent Declaration in the House. I am sure that this request, this wish that has been expressed on the floor of the House, will be conveyed to the Prime Minister, and in her intervention in the debate on the President’s Address, she can include her own statement on the Declaration.

The question of withdrawals of armed personnel from Haji Pir, Tithwal and Kargil has come up for comments; it has also been criticized by certain hon. Members. The question of infiltrators has also been mentioned. As a matter of fact, these two points are inter-connected, and I would like to say something on these two points together. We have first to see the objective that we had before us when the Indian armed forces moved to Kargil, the Tithwal and to Haji Pir. It is very important because we were facing aggression, and this massive aggression originated in the form of a large number of armed personnel crossing over to that part of Jammu and Kashmir which is in the actual possession and control, administrative and the rest, of the Government of India.

When we took up this matter with the Pakistan Government and pointed out to them the serious situation created by these armed infiltrators coming across into Indian territory, the Government of Pakistan did not accept any responsibility. It then became necessary for us to take defensive measures to check infiltration, because the responsibility in this respect was not accepted by the Government of Pakistan. It was in that context that the Indian armed forces moved into these two passes, Tithwal and Haji Pir, and we moved into Kargil because our line of communication to the Ladakh area was under constant threat by the sniping and other provocative acts which were indulged in by the Pakistan forces. These were the objectives before us when we moved to these passes.

We have now to see whether, when we agreed to withdraw, our objective had not been realised, whether the reason for which we moved to these passes still persisted at the time we agreed to this withdrawal. We gave very careful consideration to the various aspects. This was a very serious matter, and we attached a very great deal of importance to it. It was necessary for us to give the most careful consideration to the implications of the step that we were taking in agreeing to the withdrawal from these areas.

As I said when I initiated this debate, three conditions were agreed to by Pakistan. Firstly, both countries agreed that the use of force would be abjured in the settlement of any dispute, secondly that cease-fire terms on the cease-fire line would be adhered to and respected by the two parties, and thirdly that there would be non-interference in each other’s internal affairs. Even one of these considerations or conditions is enough to correct the mischief that can be created by the movement of infiltrators.

Sending armed infiltrators, for instance, is obviously use of force, and if both parties agree that force will not be used for the enforcement of any claim or the settlement of any dispute, obviously they cannot say that they will send these infiltrators in the exercise of their right to enforce a claim or to settle a dispute. It is quite another thing, a separate issue to which I will come, as to whether they will respect this or not, but my point is: is the sending of infiltrators protected or can it be resorted to by any loophole that is there in the agreement? My contention is that we should keep these two things separate, the interpretation of the agreement and their intentions or the question whether they will respect the terms of the agreement or not. At this stage, I am on this question whether the agreement itself covers armed infiltrators or whether, notwithstanding the terms of this agreement and even if they adhered to this agreement, they can make out a case that they can send infiltrators.... Pakistan has at no stage said that they have got the right to send infiltrators. All along they have denied having sent infiltrators, and even now they do not say that they have the right to send infiltrators. It is an important point. One of the first conditions of the agreement is not to use force, and sending armed infiltrators is use of force. That is what I am trying to contend. It is quite clear that even Pakistan has not said that they are entitled to send infiltrators or to use force even if Kashmir is not an internal matter of India. We do not accept the Pakistan contention that Jammu and Kashmir is not an integral part of India, and any interference by sending infiltrators, even by whipping up agitations there or trying to support those who are not accepting the writ of the local government there, is very much interference. We do not accept their interpretation of Jammu and Kashmir not being an internal problem or an internal responsibility of the Government of India.

The important point that I was mentioning at this stage was that this question of infiltrators and their being sent is covered by this condition which has been agreed upon between the two sides. I will not repeat it.

The second point that has been mentioned is that they do not accept Jammu and Kashmir as the internal problem of India, and therefore there may be a loophole for sending infiltrators. My reply to this is two-fold. Firstly, it is our interpretation, it is our very firm stand, that Jammu and Kashmir is an integral part of India, and that its sovereignty is not negotiable. In these circumstances, we do not accept this interpretation that they have got the right to interfere in this. So far as the question of armed infiltrators is concerned, whatever may their position with regard to Jammu and Kashmir, even if they are keeping up a dispute on that issue which we do not accept, we clearly say that there is no dispute—even then I contend that the clause relating to non-use of force covers this completely and any step that they take to interfere with the established administration on one side of the cease-fire line is a clear violation of the Tashkent Declaration, and is therefore something about which we need not have any doubt in our minds....

The late Prime Minister Lal Bahadur Shastri had also said: if the other party says that it wants to discuss Kashmir or they want to raise some point, all that I have to do is to state clearly that Jammu and Kashmir is an integral part of India; that is the position to which India, he said, would steadfastly adhere. In this context, at the meetings in Tashkent between our late Prime Minister and President Ayub Khan, it is a fact that President Ayub did raise the question of Kashmir.

Our late Prime Minister made a clear and categorical statement that Jammu and Kashmir is an integral part of India and that is the position to which he strongly adhered; we are not going to alter that position. As to what President Ayub said, or their Foreign Minister said, they are well known; they say from time to time that the people of that area should be permitted to express their desire about their future. If in reply to that we categorically reject any such claims and reiterate our stand on Jammu and Kashmir, it is not discussing the question of Kashmir; it is only reiteration of the position and that fact, Mr. Speaker, is clearly enunciated in the Declaration. The Declaration says that the two sides reiterated their position. Prof. Hem Barua is hurling the declaration at us. We went through every word of it. Shri Dwivedy raised a point that the position and manner in which this sentence is used perhaps might cast some cloud on our assertion. It is not at all correct. Article I says that the Prime Minister of India and the President of Pakistan agree that both sides will exert all efforts to create good neighbourliness between India and Pakistan in accordance with the U.N. Charter. It is unexceptionable. They reaffirm their obligation under the Charter not to have recourse to force but to settle their disputes through peaceful means. I would very strongly urge that this is a obligation not to use force. This should not be lightly dismissed; this is a clear affirmation of their obligation. They considered that the interests of peace in the region, particularly in the Indo-Pakistan sub-continent and indeed the interests of the people of India and Pakistan were not served by the continuance of tension between the two countries. They also said that our attitude should be to develop good neighbourly relations, to discontinue tension. It was in this context and in this background that Jammu and Kashmir was discussed and each side set forth its respective position. I have already said what our position was: namely, that it is an integral part of India. The other party said that they have got their own claim. They agreed to disagree on this issue. To bring about good neighbourly relations, they said there were other matters which should be attended to and the rest of the declaration proceeds to mention some of these other matters. The mention in this background under which Jammu and Kashmir was discussed is a point which clearly brings out our clear statement and position on Jammu and Kashmir. I would also like to mention that in the course of my talks with the Foreign Minister of Pakistan and his colleague, talks during which on our side my colleague Shri Chavan and other members of the delegation were present, I reiterated our position and our stand on Jammu and Kashmir in unmistakable terms. Some hon. Members here and some outside had mentioned that the country should be told as to what was talked between the two sides. I would like to clarify the position.

The Indian position on Jammu and Kashmir was not whittled down in the slightest and we reiterated in clear and unmistakable terms our stand and Pakistan is in no doubt about our stand. No newspaper, no critic or supporter of the Tashkent Declaration from Pakistan has ever asserted that India has deviated from its stand on Jammu and Kashmir. On an issue on which even Pakistan does not claim that we have changed our stand on Jammu and Kashmir, it is not wise or in our national interest to continue to agitate these points and unnecessarily to create doubts even when the other party is in no doubt.

I do not want to go into the whole history of how this wave of infiltration started and how we took preventive action by moving into some of the passes and how vigorously our security forces took very stern and effective measures to deal with the infiltrators who were operating in the Jammu and Kashmir territory…

The infiltrators who had crossed over were being dealt with and our security forces and our police made a very thorough job of it. If ultimately we were able to control the situation it was due to the effective steps that were taken by the security forces. I would also like to add that the Government of Jammu and Kashmir and, if I may add, the people there, acted very strongly and they fully cooperated with these steps taken by the authorities in dealing with the infiltrators. It was this support given to us, the lack of the response which mistakenly Pakistan thought they would get from the people, which was mainly responsible in thwarting the designs of the infiltrators. We are grateful to the people who gave information to the local authorities. We had a large number of non-officials who traced the movement of these people and supplied information to the authorities which ultimately led to the mopping up operations and in providing the necessary security to the areas and to the targets which unfortunately had been been at by the infiltrators.

I would also like to add that after the cease-fire operations, although Pakistan did continue to keep this posture that they had never sent these infiltrators, and continued to disown their responsibility, we have definite information that they called upon these people, who had been sent across, to return to that area. We had definite information on that score, and a large bulk of these people actually crossed over into the other territory. Our security forces also have been stepping up their efforts which continued after the cease-fire, because our Prime Minister had made it absolutely clear that any cease-fire agreement that is arrived at or any cease-fire arrangement that is accepted does not mean that our efforts to deal with the infiltrators or to deal with them effectively would in any way be influenced by the cease-fire. We made the position clear that this is an internal, law and order matter, and we had to function effectively. It was the combined effect of these two things: the continuous drive by our security and armed forces, the civilians and the civilian government - all this combined effort put so much pressure on them and they found, particularly after the cease-fire, that there was no point in their staying on, and a large number were actually thrown out and pushed back into the other territory. Out of the total number of infiltrators who were in thousands, a good bulk has been thrown back. A large number of them were killed; some of them were also arrested. The number that might be left there might be very, very small. It is very difficult for me to give any number, but it cannot be more than a few odds and ends, say, half a dozen or 10 people in one remote area or the other. I have not got the census or the list. If I knew the exact number, I will get hold of them or kill them or shoot them, those who come here without any authority. But the point is, the Pakistan Government, naturally from the very beginning, had taken the attitude that they are not concerned with them, that they have not sent them; we have information that they had done so and they had sent across these people. We had information that they were receiving messages and we intercepted some of those messages, and it was on that basis that we kept the county and this House fully informed about their activity; that they were sent across and they were supported. We had also information - we had definite information - that they were withdrawn after the cease-fire. So, this was a combined effect of the two-pronged operation, pressure by us, by our security forces, and also their attitude that they wanted to withdraw. In a matter like this, we have to see the results and need not insist on a public statement that they have withdrawn. I am sure that even on this statement of mine they might say, “No; we never sent anyone; we have not withdrawn anyone.” They may say as in their earlier statement that “We have not sent any man even in the initial stages”. So, we have to look to the situation on the ground and view it realistically, and realize that in future, these conditions are accepted: that non-use of force is accepted; non-interference in one’s internal affairs is accepted; and that observance of the cease-fire terms and the cease-fire line. So, in actual fact also, based upon this agreement that they have entered upon, we were fully satisfied that the question of infiltrators hereafter is not likely to arise and it is covered by the agreement because it was thereafter that we agreed in respect of Haji Pir and Tithwal, the passes through which we had moved in order to check further infiltration....

We are clear that if the terms of the agreement are adhered to, then, the question of sending infiltrators does not arise. It is a very pertinent question and a practical question; that is, if they do not adhere to the obligations that they have undertaken, then what is the guarantee? It is a very pertinent question. But the reply to this is linked up with all the other agreements that have been entered into between the two countries. In a matter like this, if we start with this attitude that any agreement that is entered into is not likely to be adhered to, they will find some excuses to go back upon the agreement, then, the reply is that we know how to deal with the situation. Then a new situation develops altogether. The agreement is clear. If they do not adhere to it, if they go behind the agreement and they do not faithfully carry out their obligations under the agreement and surreptitiously take resort to something else then it is a clear violation of the agreement; then a situation arises, and we will take the sternest measure to meet the situation, and of that we have never made any secret. I would beg of this House to see that the agreement is very clear, and that the ultimate protection in this case is provided by the agreement and by their adherence to this agreement. If the agreement is not adhered to, it depends upon our capacity to deal with the situation. Many of our foreign friends, sympathetic friends, have many times mentioned to us that a country of 45 crores or 48 crores of people hardly needs to go to the international community to say that this is a nuisance by the infiltrators and that there should be some solemn agreement on their part that they will never send the infiltrators. They have admitted their responsibility, though not in these clear words, that if the terms are adhered to, it is covered. If they do not observe the terms then it is a situation where our strength and our capacity to deal with them will be the real guarantee. That is something which we should not lose sight of….

The other broad political issue which Mr. Nath Pai raised is vital. In fact, that is the most important issue which cuts across any words that might be used: What is the ultimate guarantee in these cases? For that the reply is, we have to depend upon our strength and we have to tell the world, as they have told us on many occasions, if the infiltrators come, notwithstanding this agreement, the answer is, shoot them; hang them in the passes. That will be the biggest deterrent. Even on this occasion, although they started in a surreptitious manner, although it caused some worry to us, the way we dealt with this problem effectively is the biggest guarantee that they will not try again. What have they gained by this, except that they have lost hundreds of people and they had eaten their words? When Pakistan embarked upon this misadventure, they had all types of flamboyant statements to make: “We are doing this with this object or that object”. It is not for me to remind the Pakistani leaders, but without introducing any element of criticism of their earlier statements on this issue, I would certainly ask, whereas Pakistan had embarked upon this to realize certain objectives, viz., to get a solution of the Jammu and Kashmir problem which they thought fits in with their pattern, have they succeeded? No; they have not.

Ultimately the terms of the agreement are such that any action of that nature will be covered. Will they do that again? If they adhere to the terms of the agreement, they would not do that. But if they do not adhere to the terms of the agreement, a new situation arises, which the country will have to deal with, with all determination. I am sure that the full support of this House and of the country will be with any steps that are taken to deal with that situation.

The date 5th August is important, because on 5th August this infiltration started. Withdrawal of all armed personnel to positions which obtained prior to 5th August definitely covers the infiltrators also.

Another point which has been mentioned was that it appears as if some pressure was exercised on the late Prime Minister, Shri Lal Bahadur Shastri. I am very sorry that any such suggestion directly or indirectly was made… About this alleged pressure, those of us who were in touch with Shri Lal Bahadur Shastri can say that the actual volume of his work; the actual physical pressure, in those days was much less compared to the work he used to do in India where his responsibilities were so great, meeting a large number of persons from all sections of the House and leaders of various political parties, apart from his administrative work. But in Tashkent, we had gone for a special purpose. Myself, my colleagues and even the Press people who were there at Tashkent everyone knows that, judged in terms of sheer volume of work, it was much less as compared to his normal routine in Delhi.

Regarding the second point whether the functioning of the Soviet leaders and the Soviet delegation was such as to create the slightest feeling in our mind that they were trying to sell any particular idea, I would like to say categorically that the attitude of the Soviet leaders in this respect was one of full understanding of our position. Even before going to Tashkent, I had paid a visit to Moscow and had long talks with the Chairman of the Council of Ministers, Mr. Kosygin and also with their Foreign Minister, Mr. Gromyko. I had explained in full detail our stand on the various issues that were likely to come up during the Tashkent talks. Our stand on all these issues was fully known to the Soviet leaders. There was a great deal of understanding and they were quite objective. It will be absolutely wrong to suggest that they exercised any pressure directly or indirectly. It will be wrong on our part to suggest anything of that nature.

I would like to reiterate the expression of our gratitude to the Soviet leaders for all the understanding that they showed. If you look at the circumstances what could be the pressure? I fail to understand. Our late Prime Minister had gone to Tashkent as a great hero. He had the will and support of the entire country with him. Our army was standing on the outskirts of Sialkot and Lahore and we were occupying strategic passes. In the Security Council this matter has been agitated and we demonstrated very clearly that India will not brook any interference - we know what our case is and we will adhere to it steadfastly. So, what was the circumstantial pressure on him? Here was a person who was more or less in command of the situation. To suggest that there was any pressure either circumstantial or otherwise which impelled him to adopt this attitude is absolutely unjustified. There was some pressure on him in the sense that the saw as to what was in the best interests of the 600 million people of India and Pakistan. He, as a great leader, who could fight bravely the battles, also knew that India’s general attitude of peace also is something which requires all possible support and nursing. Therefore, if he acted in the interest of peace, when he was in that strong position, when he had this support, you cannot say there was any pressure of any kind, direct or indirect, on him. He acted in a very brave manner in reversing past unhappy trends by signing the agreement and in a sincere effort to reverse the trends without yielding on any essential matters. Therefore, I would like very categorically and clearly, to reiterate that there is no question of any pressure either factual or circumstantial. He knew what he was doing and he did it with a great gesture, with great strength and it is for us really to honour that.
The Indian objective, when we had to face this armed conflict, was to repel aggression. That objective had been fully realized. We successfully met this aggression on the ground and also in signing this agreement. Now, some test of this can be the reactions of other countries. This is one of those rare agreements which has been welcomed by all countries excepting one, our northern neighbor, China or some critics on the other side. It is very interesting to see how the Chinese leaders looked at it. Even their reaction was not very spontaneous to start with. They started building up their attitude and they took some weeks before they actually gave out as to what was in their heart of hearts with regard to this. Apart from their hostility to India, about which we know, the House knows and the country knows - it is not that aspect that I want to put forward so much at this stage - unfortunately, China is one country which continues to hold that this doctrine of peaceful co-existence or the efficacy of peaceful means for resolving disputes is not good. All these are doctrines which, are not accepted by China. They saw in the Tashkent Declaration a clear vindication of these two very important principles of international behaviour, namely, the importance and the efficacy of peaceful co-existence and determination to solve their dispute by peaceful means. On both these grounds the official Chinese reaction is against this Declaration. They say the Soviet Union want to demonstrate that by bringing India and Pakistan together, and by asking them to abjure the use of force for settlement of any dispute, notwithstanding differences they can co-existence is possible and that settlement of disputes by peaceful means is also possible. As you know, the Chinese believe in the inevitability of war. They steadfastly hold that view that nothing can be resolved except through violence and resort to force. That is a doctrine which we have never accepted, which the rest of the world does not accept, and I would very humbly but very strongly place this aspect, not in any spirit of animosity against China because that relates to a matter which we can swear - we have got our problem - but let us take it at a higher level - their adherence to the doctrine of the inevitability of war - this Declaration is a clear blow to their doctrine. For that reason also, this is a vindication of the general code of behaviour which the international community has embarked upon and is going assiduously to follow.

I would, before ending, earnestly appeal, now that we have had the debate, now that we have had our full say on this issue, let us now hereafter bring about a general support for this in our country so that the unfortunate trends of deteriorating relations, continuous friction and continuous tension might be reversed. I know that the process is difficult. I know that there may be difficulties which may also be created by the statements by the other side, may be that there are some difficulties on our side. But I would appeal that this Declaration is something worth working for; war and armed conflict is to be resorted to only if necessary in order to safeguard our security and integrity, but if peace can be restored by peaceful means and peaceful approaches, howsoever impracticable these efforts may appear to resolve all differences, it is something which is worth trying, and it is in that spirit that we should view this Tashkent Declaration.

0472. [SECRET]

Letter from Prime Minister Mrs. Indira Gandhi to Pakistan President Mohammad Ayub Khan.

New Delhi, February 22, 1966.

Dear Mr. President,

I thank you for your message dated February 7, 1966, which was delivered to me by your High Commissioner. The discussions which you had with late Prime Minister, Shri Lal Bahadur Shastri, and to which you have referred in the second paragraph of your letter are fully in accord with our thinking and approach. It is important that we should press ahead with the early restoration of normal relations between our two countries.

2. Some of the things to which you refer have already been done. Over flights have been resumed. Our Army Chiefs have met and have agreed upon a plan of withdrawals which has already been implemented. Progress has been made in the resumption of posts, telegraphs and telecommunications between the two countries. Exchange of prisoners has been proceeding rapidly and satisfactorily. We have made a good start with the implementation of the Declaration. However, this progress should be accelerated.

3. Meanwhile, as you know, we had taken the initiative in proposing a very early meeting at Ministers' level which, we had hoped, would take place early in February, even before our Parliament had met. We had proposed that our Foreign Minister, Commerce Minister, and Minister of Transport, Aviation and Shipping should go to Rawalpindi and it was our expectation that they would carry the process of normalization further and settle all problems relating to cargoes, properties as well as transport and communications. We had also in mind that the Ministers could discuss further steps towards the implementation of the Tashkent Declaration. We have been informed that the Pakistan Government would propose a 6-point agenda, which has rather unfortunately received some publicity. I feel that we should try to avoid a situation in which each side proposes a cut and dried agenda which might create delay and difficulties in the meeting of the Ministers. My suggestion would, therefore, be not to have any fixed agenda in advance, leaving it open to the Ministers from either side when they meet, to raise any matters to which they attach importance. I hope you will agree that this will be the most fruitful and the best way of proceeding with the meeting. As regards dates of the meeting, with Parliament in session, it is less easy for three Cabinet Ministers to be absent at the same time. I am, however, anxious that the meeting should take place as early as possible within the dates which had been proposed by your Government. I have asked Shri Kewal Singh to settle the exact dates.

4. As you know, there are extremists in both countries who are critical of the Tashkent Declaration and who do not see the tremendous benefit which would accrue to the peoples of India and Pakistan if it is implemented in letter and spirit. I feel confident that the bulk of the people in the two countries truly desire peace and amity. Therefore, it is up to us to ensure that this deep-rooted desire is allowed to manifest itself and that the atmosphere is not vitiated by propaganda of the wrong kind which emphasizes and magnifies points of difference and ignores the wide area of common interests between the two countries. I am sure that the lead which you are giving to your people to explore fresh avenues of cooperation is the right one.

With warm regards,

Yours sincerely,

(Indira Gandhi)

His Excellency
Field Marshal Mohammad Ayub Khan,
President of Pakistan.
0473. Extract from the First of the month broadcast by Pakistan President Ayub Khan.

Rawalpindi, March 1, 1966.

Explaining Pakistan's foreign policy, President said

1. China poses no threat to the sub-continent
2. Pak ties with Peking no bar to friendship with the United States
3. Kashmir cannot be ignored or put off

"The guiding principle of our foreign policy is that differences among other countries should not interfere with our relations with them. Consequently, alongside our ties of sincere friendship with China, we are developing friendly relations with the United States on the one hand, and the USSR on the other...these countries understand and appreciate our point of view."

"The miasma of misunderstanding created about the Tashkent Declaration in the country is gradually clearing up. Emotions are yielding place to self assurance and unity in national thought and action. It is, however, useless to entertain any hope of constructive endeavour from persons who habituated to striking a discordant note merely for the sake of opposition and whose mind is afflicted with doubts and misgivings. Patriotic elements have come to appreciate the need and purpose of the Tashkent Declaration."

"The aim of the Tashkent Declaration is that both India and Pakistan should resolve their mutual differences and their relations should be normalized as between two neighboring countries. No right-thinking person can deny that the basic dispute between India and Pakistan concerns the right of self-determination of the Jammu and Kashmir. This dispute can not either be ignored or indefinitely put off, nor can it be resolved merely by repeating that it is too old or too complicated. What is required is that representatives of the two countries should try to understand and address themselves to it in a realistic manner. Unless dispute between nations are resolved, relations between them cannot be normalized, for such relations cannot exit in a vacuum. For this, a climate of understanding is needed.

"Both Pakistan and India should realise that they will not be able to devote their resources fully to the welfare of their people, if their defence expenditure is not curtailed. Nor can friendship between them be founded on a permanent basis. After a just solution of the Kashmir dispute has been found, the two countries should also reduce their armed forces."

Mr. Salman A. Ali, Director-General, Foreign Office.

Mr. I. A. Akhund, Director, Foreign Office.

A brief discussion between F. M. and Mr. Bhutto on how to start led to the two Foreign Secretaries being asked to give a resume of the previous day’s meetings between officials, and the Indian Foreign Secretary was asked to begin.

F.S: We talked for several hours yesterday morning and exchanged the points which might be discussed between the two sides. Mr. Aziz Ahmed brought up the six items contained in the proposed agenda which had been sent to us earlier in February. He explained that Pakistan considered it necessary to discuss what he called the items most essential for ensuring the peace in the sub-continent which he said had eluded us for the last 18 years and these items were ‘Kashmir’, reduction of armed forces on both sides, prevention of the exodus of people, notably the future of Jammu & Kashmir refugees, the so-called evictions from India, and the use of the eastern river waters, notably the Farakka Barrage; Mr. Aziz Ahmed also mentioned the item on implementation of existing agreements.

On our part we have our list of items consisting of various subjects which we put under three broad heads: first, the immediate problems connected with the restoration of normal relations, such as the restoration of properties and assets seize by either side in connection with the conflict, the resumption of air services, trade etc.; second, the steps to be taken in regard to some long-standing problems on which progress might be feasible in the interest of both countries, e.g. settlement of our eastern border problems; third, the positive measures for the promotion of friendly and good neighbourly relations on which we could start, for instance, the question of propaganda and the very wide possibilities of expanding trade. Both sides also thought that there might be another heading of what Mr. Aziz Ahmed called residual and what we called miscellaneous matters arising from the implementation already undertaken of the Tashkent Declaration.

Both during the enumeration of Mr. Aziz Ahmed’s points and many times over subsequently, it was stated by Pakistanis that Kashmir was the basic question which must be discussed. We were not clear whether Pakistan meant it was a sine qua non for a discussion of any other subject but understood that there should be simultaneous discussion of all subjects. Mr. Aziz Ahmed asserted that there was strong public opinion in Pakistan which expected progress on Kashmir. The point of view I ventured to press on our behalf was that the Heads of Government had talked about this barely two months ago. To our knowledge they talked about it in a very friendly and very frank manner on the basis of a fine personal equation between them, and they came to the conclusion that the points of view of the two sides were so far apart as to be irreconcilable. Because they realized this, the reference to Kashmir was expressed as it is in Article I of the Declaration. Therefore, I said that there was no reason to think our discussing it at official’s level would be more fruitful, though we recognize that Kashmir would sometime have to be discussed or would have to find a solution. We told Pakistan in advance that anything could be raised at this meeting, but there were many matters without which normalization of relations was incomplete and until we had wiped the slate clean, on our level it was difficult to have a fruitful exchange on Kashmir, which was an important political matter. I added that it should not be thought that strong feelings on this issue were confined to Pakistan; it was best for the question to be discussed between Ministers. This went on for quite some time and I have only reported very briefly the substance of yesterday morning’s discussions.

Then Mr. Aziz Ahmed also mentioned some other matters. He said that in the Sialkot region there were some small areas, 25 acres here, 4 kanals* there and a 100 kanals somewhere else from which the Indian forces had not withdrawn. I told him that we had no knowledge of this but were taking note of what he said and would ask our authorities to look into the matter. Then he spoke of some reports of vandalism by the Indian Forces withdrawing form the areas on the Pakistan side. Of these too I explained we had no knowledge except the very unhappy reports that we ourselves have received of extremely regrettable acts committed on the Indian territory from which Pakistani forces had withdrawn. Thirdly, reference was made to the recent agreement reached between our respective Army Chiefs on the reduction of forces in Jammu & Kashmir, and we had some argument on whether or not the reduction envisaged in Article I of that agreement entitled India to maintain forces additional what might have been thought necessary in 1949 in view of the subsequent developments requiring us to defend Ladakh.

So we exchanged ideas on matters we would each like to discuss but we did not actually go into any of these matters, except in an incidental way and over the question of level of forces to be maintained in Kashmir. Mr. Ahmed said that we must discuss Kashmir and, indeed that he was under instructions from his Minister to do so. I said that was not the instructions from my Minister and it was best that we reported to our respective Ministers and resume discussion later. That was the point at which we agreed to end yesterday.

Mr. Aziz Ahmed: Well, if I may say so, Mr. Jha has given an extremely good summary of what happened yesterday and I would only like to mention one or two points to supplement what he said. His impression of what I intended to convey to him of moving towards the Kashmir solution pari passu with progress on other issues is quite correct. I went into the details of the strength of feeling in Pakistan and I explained it was not possible for us to make progress on any other item that India or we might want to bring out unless we could show some progress on the Kashmir issue. Our people would not tolerate anything else.

There was some discussion on whether officials were competent to tackle this issue and I explained that on our side we felt, and indeed our instructions were, that we could start discussions at official level. This was normal procedure on any matter; if we ran into difficulties and could not resolve them, we could ask for instructions from our Ministers or they could meet. If the Ministers also found that they could not resolve difficulties, they in turn could seek orders from their Heads of Government. Mr. Jha, however, felt that he had no authority to discuss Kashmir. I made it clear that we did not think this could be settled in one meeting or even two or three; it would take time – there might have to be several meetings, but the important thing was that we should begin with some movement towards a solution.

Meanwhile, we could take up the residual matters arising from the implementation of the Tashkent Declaration, and in that context I brought up with his permission three points. First, the wanton, willful, almost planned destruction in Kasur and Gadhra – things had happened which need not have happened, which were quite unnecessary on any ground. Of course, we all knew that in war things were done which no one could reasonably like to see done. But this looked like planned, active destruction. I also mentioned the three points from which the Indian Forces had not yet withdrawn; it was almost ridiculous for me to have to bring to his attention four kanals or ten kanals, or even less, of minor, meaningless, remnants, and he kindly promised to take note of what I had said. Thirdly, I raised the very important matter which our C-in-C had brought to our attention. He had reported the agreement on the quantum of forces on either side of the Ceasefire line, which would be as in 1949 level. That is to say, they would be brought down to the 1949 level. Subsequently, on the 17th February, the Defence Minister of India said in the Indian Parliament that the agreement did not affect the strength of the forces required for the region of Ladakh border on China. I had pointed out that such a view would make nonsense of the agreement. We had some further discussion on this, as apparently your understanding of the agreement differed from ours.

You thought that the ceiling had been fixed taking into account what you might need for Ladakh whereas our understanding was that the ceiling would be brought down to the 1949 level. Our General Headquarters felt that if, in addition to the 1949 level, forces could be increased because they were considered necessary to defend Ladakh, these could be used, as in fact they were used in the past, on our side of the ceasefire line. It is no use telling our Army people that no, they need not worry and everything would be all right. And it is therefore, necessary to ensure that the agreement was as intended.

F.S: I had only reported on what was discussed yesterday without going into the merits of the questions that were discussed. Since, however, Mr. Aziz Ahmed has not confined himself to this; perhaps, I should also explain what was said from our side.

On the agreement between the two Army Commanders, I had pointed out that we had to defend Ladakh against aggression. We had been attacked before and Government worth its name could neglect the duty of being ready in case we were attacked there again. The forces needed to protect Ladakh would certainly not be used against Pakistan. This question of the forces necessary because of the necessity of defending Ladakh had arisen with UNMOGIP in 1959 or 1960 and we had explained to them that we had had to send in troops in view of the Chinese moves and UNMOGIP had not considered this any violation of the Cease-fire Agreement. I also pointed out yesterday that the text of the new agreement between the Army Chiefs does not say that the forces had to be at exactly the level in 1949, but that they should be kept at that level which UNMOGIP had accepted in the context of the 1949 agreement. These are two quite different things. What the agreement means is that the level should be what the UNMOGIP accepted now bearing in mind our needs in Ladakh. I ventured to mention that this was something we were obliged to do; we could not leave Ladakh unguarded. Moreover, if we have differences now over this point, in the spirit of frankness made possible by the Tashkent Declaration, we can talk over the matter fully. Ultimately it is a matter of trust. Pakistan can rest assured that the forces would be needed by us only for defence and would not be used against Pakistan.

F.M: There were two other points Mr. Aziz Ahmed mentioned.

F.S: We said we would look into them. As regards the allegations of destruction, I was obliged to say that we had received reports of the felling of trees, the destruction of temples, the replacement of idol by heaps of bones, of unspeakable scribbling on the walls against our leaders and all sorts of other vandalism on the Pakistani side before they withdrew from our territories. We fully realize that minds get inflamed during fighting and this is one of the consequences of war. I pointed out that two wrong did not make one right, but we have our own reports just as Pakistan said she had hers. As regards the non-vacation of territory on the Pakistani side, as I said, we would look into the matter.

Mr. Aziz Ahmed: I must add that the discussions were not closed yesterday on any of these issues. I had no intention of answering the points Mr. Jha has made.....
F.M.: I do not think any useful purpose could be served by that here and now. We shall leave you to try and convince each other later.

May I just say a few words on the main point that held up progress yesterday? We had discussed this entire matter very fully at Tashkent and the result was what was said in Article I of the Declaration: “It was against this background that Jammu and Kashmir was discussed and each of the sides set forth its respective position” That is to say that we each reiterated our position, and, having set it forth, we agreed to take other steps knowing full well that no agreement was possible in regard to Kashmir. On this the two views were irreconcilable; they were so wide apart that there was no way of bridging the difference and yet we agreed to take up other matters and improve relations. For example, under Article II which provides for withdrawals, the Army Chiefs of the two sides have met and what they agreed upon has been implemented. If there were any points of difference still left, they could meet again and discuss them. Then again there are Articles III and IV in which the two sides agreed that relations would be based on the principle of non-interference in each other’s internal affairs and that they would discourage propaganda against the other side. On this aspect also some steps have been taken. We understand that you issued instructions to your authorities not to carry on anti-Indian propaganda and we on our side took similar action. We cannot say that everything is perfect. Each of us has difficulties, which are alike, but one can notice the improvement; we are glad to find that compared to the past there is considerable restraint for the most part, on your side as on ours, and so some progress has been made. If we look at Article V also, we find progress in that the High Commissioners of the two sides have returned to their posts and their missions are functioning normally. Then there is Article VI where the two Heads of Government agreed to consider measures towards the restoration of economic and trade relations, communications, as well as cultural exchanges, and to take measure to implement existing agreements. There are four components to this; in the field of communication a number of steps have been taken, such as the resumption for over-flights and of telecommunications; steps remain to be taken regarding communications by rail and road. Some of this progress has been at your suggestion and some at ours, but it has been to our mutual advantage. As regards trade we had agreed to consider measures; similarly regarding cultural exchanges. I suggest we should agree to discuss these at appropriate levels. We have come prepared on our side to look into these questions at any level convenient and it will be to our mutual advantage if we can make a start.

Then Article VII has also been implemented. Article VIII is also important: the two sides agree that they “will continue the discussion of questions relating to the problems of refugees and evictions/illegal immigrations”. They also agreed that they “will create conditions which will prevent the exodus of people”. I would like to point out that “they further agreed to discuss the return of property and assets taken over by either side in connection with the conflict”. I urge that we should really agree here and now to discuss further these obligations we have undertaken under Articles VI and VIII. To my mind some of them are directly concerned with the recent unfortunate conflict.

We have already taken some steps to solve the problems thrown up by the conflict and it would be thoroughly in accordance with the Declaration to normalize other matters which remain to be dealt with and which we have agreed to resolve. In pursuance of Article IX, we are at your service to discuss matters of direct concern and these seem to us the matters on which we should make some progress. At Tashkent your President was good enough to mention to me and to my colleague Shri Chavan that I should visit Rawalpindi in a few weeks so that further steps could be taken to implement the Declaration. It is in that spirit that we have come. Let me say that I do not underestimate the feelings on your side, both at the public and official levels, but I would like to convey to you in all earnestness that our difficulties are also real. If we do not say too much about it in public by making statements it is because that does not contribute towards the improvement of relations. It was for the sake of fulfilling the purpose of the Tashkent Declaration that we have taken the decision within our Government and also in our Congress Party at Jaipur to avoid as far as possible statements which would come in the way of implementing the Declaration. We have even tried hard to convince those who have not agreed with us – but please do not make any mistake, there are very strong feeling on our side also. Yet we are trying hard to move ahead. I have myself made several statements in and cut of Parliament that we must implement the Declaration fully in letter and spirit.

I have taken these few minutes to deal with the matters that have arisen at our present meeting, not in order to enter into any argument, but merely to suggest what our approach should be. The problem of Kashmir is difficult; it is important; it is important from your point of view and also from ours. The views of the two sides are well-known. It would not serve the purpose of this meeting, if I reiterated what is already known. I would urge that notwithstanding the differences, on which we have agreed to seek peaceful solution, we should tackle the other issues that would be in accordance with our obligations and also the expectations of our people. Implementation of other issues is not dependent on Kashmir. I am not suggesting that we should not discuss Kashmir at an appropriate stage. But we have taken other steps in some sphere, which represent a real and purposeful movement towards the achievement of the Declaration’s objectives. But not all the steps have been completed. We feel that it would be in the mutual interest of both countries if we give directions to our officials to study the Declarations. They should see what action can be taken in accordance with Article IX and broadly review all the obligations and the other problems created by the unfortunate conflict so that we could get these out of the way and move towards a further improvement of our relations.

Mr. Bhutto: Thank you very much, Mr. Foreign Minister. We have heard with great interest what you had to say. For our part, I would like to say that we would also like to fulfill our obligations. It is not only the Tashkent Declaration under which our obligations are at stake; the basis of our foreign policy has been to fulfill all the obligations we have entered into, inside or outside the United Nations, bilaterally or multilaterally. We have to fulfill our obligations in whatever form they are and it is our policy to fulfill them in regard to all countries with whom we have entered into agreements.

It is not that we do not want to make progress: we want to very much. Substantial progress could have been made here if an agenda could have been agreed to in advance. As it was, the whole of yesterday was spent on this question of an agenda. Before this meeting you had made certain proposals; taking into account the needs of the sub-continent, we had also made certain suggestions for discussion. We had differences on this question, which is quite understandable. Your High Commissioner saw our President and explained the difficulties on your side, and our President pointed out our own difficulties, these were very useful talks. The main thing is that we should make efforts towards all solutions and not stand on formal positions. If the efforts are not sensational or dramatic that is even better in a way but we have to take account of the feelings of the public.

So when your High Commissioner met the President the second time in Karachi, we agreed that this meeting should take place without any agenda. However, procedural matters also have their importance, not only for this meeting, but also for future meetings. We believe it is possible to reconcile our views on this aspect. I do not want to enter into a legalistic argument on what are the obligations under the Tashkent Declaration, but since this has been raised, I much explain our point of view. Take Article I for instance. We have very definite obligations under this. What is important is not that Jammu & Kashmir is mentioned, but the background against which it is mentioned which is that it is the fundamental dispute that has been the cause of tensions between the countries. If you go into the Tashkent Declaration, you will find that it gives supreme, primordial importance to this issue. It may not be put in that language for reasons that have been stated—public feelings and all that. So the language may be moderate but the importance given at Tashkent to this issue is clear and if you take that into account, that it is the bone of contention between us, and if you accept that it is the stumbling block in our relations, then it will be appreciated that all other issues are of a secondary and residual character.
They need not have come into the agreement except that they are all connected with this basic issue. Look at Article II, that is directly connected with Article I. If there had not been a conflict and if there had not been tensions for the last 18 years, there would not have been any need for the armies to confront each other and no need for their withdrawals. Article II, therefore, flows from Article I because it is the consequence of the basic dispute.

You mentioned the clause about non-interference. That principle is not something that flows from Tashkent. As two separate states, and particularly as members of the Afro-Asian community, and having subscribed to the Bandung principles, we have always to abstain from interference in each other’s affairs. As you, if I may say so, very wisely told President Ayub yesterday, partition is an historical fact. Therefore, you live on your side of the fence and we do so on our, without trespassing on each other; because if we do that, tension arises. You also referred to Article IV. Well, no mad dog has bitten us that we should want to abuse you, but actually when strong feelings are aroused, things get said which can be taken as hostile propaganda. But this is all because of the basic dispute. As a mater of fact, between two sister countries relations should be much closer than between others. We have just given Mian Arshad Hussain a palace in Delhi and we want him to live in it and have the closest relations, but abnormality came in because of the basic conflict and that is why we had to have an agreement to restore normality. As for Article VI, which speaks of trade and other relations these too were disrupted because of the conflict. So this also flows from Article I. Similarly the problems of exodus, refugees from Jammu & Kashmir etc. which are dealt with in Article VIII – all these problems arise from the basic issue between the two countries.

Therefore, we must look at that basic cause. I believe the positions you have explained and which we hold are not irreconcilable. We do not say that we must have a settlement here and now. As you know, you and I had talks on this for over six months and we know it will take time. But that does not mean we should procrastinate. As you can see, the lapse of time has not contributed to solution. So it is important not to lose more time but to turn the corner quickly.

We agree that it is necessary to reverse the trends of the past and the best way is to look at the fundamentals. All we ask of you is to agree to discuss the matter. We know your positions and you – better than anyone else – know our own: so we do not want just a reiteration of each other’s views. The question really is of intentions, of bona fide. Taking the lesson from the past we must see how counteract productive our delays in the past have been. So we ask you to consider and understand the difficulties we see. If we can agree on the modalities, we can also agree on the publicity side – that is not important. But if we say ‘let us set it aside’, then progress is really illusory. Believe me I am not saying this because I am a victim of some prejudice, but because that is the lesson of the past. There have been so many times when the two sides have met and dealt with some issues – important issues – you will remember our first Prime Minister Liaquat Ali went to Delhi and had talks with Mr. Nehru and we were told everything would be all right. Then Ghulam Mohammed also went to Delhi and was told the same thing. Then Mohammed Ali Bogra went and saw Mr. Nehru, and Noon and others, there was a great deal of progress. Then too we had High Commissioners in close touch: and we had trade – in fact we were very dependent on India economically in those days: then we settled so many of our boundary problems, to which you made such valuable contributions. And the culmination of this progress was the Indus Water Treaty which was the most complicated and intractable of all problems after the Kashmir problem. And what was the result?

We must not close our eyes but should set a direction and simultaneously take up other issues. We certainly intend to fulfill our obligations. Our Foreign Secretary referred to public opinion but I would like to say that even if there is strong public opinion, we will fulfill obligations. International obligations have to be fulfilled – not only the Tashkent Declaration but others, whether in the United Nations or outside. I do not want to go into the legality whether obligations under the United Nations have primacy, but the important thing is to take a non-legalistic view and move forward in the right direction. Mr. Jha, you are looking at the Charter, I think it is Article 103 or 113. I am not sure which, but as I say that is not the important part. The main thing is to make a start.

F.M. Thank you for your very clear statement of your views, which you have expressed with such clarity and forcefulness. I am glad to hear you are anxious to, and intend to, honour all agreements. I fully agree that we must direct our efforts towards implementing the Tashkent Declaration as a whole. You have set-out the philosophy of your understanding of the agreement in a particular manner. I would not like to go into that philosophy or understanding, though it is not ours. But there are one or two points I must bring out and leave for your consideration.

In the Tashkent Declaration we have agreed not to use force and to resolve our differences by peaceful means. Once we have said that, it must be our attempt to try and solve those differences in peaceful ways. It is difficult for me to accept the view that the rest of the Article or the whole tenor of the Declaration is dependent on the solution of Kashmir. I recall what your distinguished President very wisely said to us yesterday, that even Kashmir is a symptom of the distrust between the two nations of two countries. The Tashkent Declaration is the first agreement to try and remove that distrust. I recognise that Kashmir is one such problem as we have to resolve, but it is difficult to accept the view that it is the cause of all our problems. I must say I greatly appreciated what the President said about its being a symptom of the basic distrust and what we have to do under the Tashkent Declaration is actually to reverse that distrust and develop cooperative and friendly relations.

We are not arguing here before some third party but have only to convince each other. So, there is no point in reiterating arguments with which each side is familiar. That does not take us any further. I do not want to go into this in more detail but I must repeat that under the Tashkent Declaration we undertook four things in particular: to resolve all our differences by peaceful means only; second to sort out the problems arising from the conflict: thirdly to settle other problems: and the fourth aspect which you have not covered is to take new steps to develop a new relationship. Now the question of Jammu and Kashmir has its place in the third of these categories. But this is a problem on which Pakistan alone does not have a point of view: we also have our view, and, as I say, those two are contradictory. You have put your view, with great plausibility, that all problems stem from Kashmir: but there is the other view that they are all born of distrust, and as I said yesterday, we should see whether we cannot solve the other problems arising from this distrust.

Let me also make it quite clear that we are not asking you for anything particular to which you must agree at this meeting. We are only throwing up ideas and ringing up the problems which have to be settled because they have been left over by our most unfortunate conflict and the public would be greatly influenced by seeing some progress in settling them. It may take two or four or six meetings. If in your view we cannot deal with them at this meeting, we could agree to meet again, but if you think progress is possible now, perhaps you could give us some indication of what you would like to do next.

At this point the Pakistan delegation decided to consult among themselves in private. They came back after about 20 minutes and Mr. Bhutto announced that they felt that either the two Foreign Ministers, assisted by the Foreign Secretaries or all the three Ministers from each side assisted by the two Foreign Secretaries should meet again in the afternoon to have a further discussion. It was agreed that the 3 Ministers and the Foreign Secretary from each side should meet immediately after lunch.

Record of the talks between Foreign Secretary C.S. Jha and Soviet Ambassador Bonediktev.
New Delhi, March 4, 1966

F.S. We have just returned from the Indo-Pakistan Ministerial talks in Rawalpindi. These were held in pursuance of the Tashkent Declaration. That was such a valuable agreement, in which the U.S.S.R. played such an important part, that I invited Your Excellency to come here today as we thought we should keep you informed of what has happened and also give you some of the impressions we gathered.

As your Excellency probably knows, when President Ayub called at our Prime Minister’s villa at Tashkent to pay his condolences on Shastrij’s death, he suggested to our Foreign Minister that he might come over to Rawalpindi and settle some urgent matters. He mentioned, in this context, the question of over-flights. We agreed to the idea of such a visit and our Foreign Minister mentioned that we could usefully discuss some other matters such as properties, rail and air traffic resumption etc. After returning from Tashkent, we made a suggestion to Pakistan to have a Ministerial meeting, either at Delhi or at Rawalpindi, to consider further steps towards the implementation of the Tashkent Declaration, particularly some matters of urgent normalization of relations. After some further exchanges with the Pakistanis, our Prime Minister wrote to President Ayub, who agreed that the meeting might take place without any fixed agenda, and we accordingly went with our three Ministers and a number of officials. We took a very large delegation so as to be able to deal with a wide variety of subjects.

At Rawalpindi, there was a brief opening meeting of the full delegations of the two sides and then the officials were asked to start discussions. Mr. Aziz Ahmed, the Pakistan Foreign Secretary, led the Pakistan side and I spoke on behalf of India. We first exchanged lists of the subjects that might be discussed. The Pakistanis brought out again the list of six subjects which, it will be remembered, they had announced earlier last month as their proposals for the agenda. They started with what they called ‘the basic cause that led to the Indo – Pakistan war namely, Kashmir’. Thereafter, they wanted to discuss the reduction of armed forces. Then they added the question of preventing the exodus of people, especially the so-called refugees from Jammu and Kashmir; what they called the problem of evictions of Muslims from Assam; the Farakka Barrage; and the implementation of exiting agreements. These Pakistani proposals were framed in rather provocative terms which we could not accept but we were quite prepared to discuss the substance of most of them. We had told them that they were free to raise any issue and we had taken a delegation which could deal with most of the matters over which they had expressed concern. On our side, we also gave a list of various subjects under three broad heads; problems requiring immediate attention to complete the normalization of relations which had been disturbed by the conflict; some long-term problems on which we could try and make progress and create a better atmosphere; and thirdly, some positive measures to develop better relations. I shall give Your Excellency a copy of the list of the items which we had proposed as well as of what the Pakistanis gave. Mr. Aziz Ahmed said that Kashmir was the basic cause of all tensions between India and Pakistan and it would not be possible to discuss any other subjects without discussing Kashmir first. He, therefore, said we must discuss Kashmir. No thought was given by the Pakistani side to our suggestions. They simply said that Kashmir was the main problem and the Pakistani public wanted to see some progress on that issue. We reminded them of the talks at Tashkent when the two heads of Government had discussed this matter. They had found the positions of the two sides irreconcilable but both had agreed to disagree, and this was reflected in article I, which said that both sides had reiterated their stands. We did not think that in less than two months since the Tashkent talks, the situation had changed in such a way as to justify further discussion or repetition of what was said at Tashkent. Therefore, while India was perfectly willing to listen to what Pakistan had to say and expressed her own views, no useful purpose would be served at this officials’ meeting by raising this problem; the subject should best be left to be discussed between the Heads of Government, if the Pakistanis wished, between the Ministers of the two Governments and not between the officials.

We also pointed out that the Tashkent Declaration mentioned various other matters which should be discussed. We saw no basis for the Pakistani views that nothing could be discussed expect Kashmir. We, therefore, suggested that we should follow the scheme of the Tashkent Declaration and deal with other items, as that was the most practical as well as the right basis for proceeding.

The first stop was to complete normalization in the various fields we had indicated in our list – return of properties, resumption of rail and air services, movement of people, etc. We made it clear that we were fully prepared to discuss all the other items on their list except Kashmir because if this was put forward first it would be a road block preventing all progress. The Pakistanis first refused to recognise any distinction between immediate and long-term problems. Secondly they adhered to the view that unless Kashmir was discussed, they could not take up other issues. Discussion on this went on for nearly two days. We tried to persuade the Pakistanis but they would not change their attitude. Then on the afternoon of March 2nd, the three Ministers of the two sides, together with their respective Foreign Secretaries met by themselves to see if they could resolve the difficulty. and progress could be made. Pakistan at this stage put forward the following proposition: they would discuss all matters – i.e. all the items in both the lists – at the same time; they explained that all subjects including Kashmir should be taken up simultaneously and as and when we reached a decision on any issue we should not announce it but keep it a secret until such time as agreement was reached on Kashmir when all decisions can be announced together. They also made it clear that none of the decisions reached could be implemented until all were simultaneously announced at the end. We told them this was a thoroughly impracticable suggestion; we did not use the word absurd but that is what the proposal really was. For example it would mean that even if we agreed to return each other’s ships, we would not actually hand them over for one or two or three years until we had reached agreement on Kashmir. This was not a situation justified under the Tashkent Declaration. Unfortunately, the Pakistani attitude did not change despite our offer to discuss various matters which they considered important and urgent, leaving only Kashmir for later, - perhaps at a meeting of the two Heads of Government. We did not say that we will not discuss Kashmir but only that it will be more useful to take it up at a later stage. Indeed even at Pindi we left it open for them to take up the Kashmir question if they so wished between the Ministers. Our main argument was that it was essential to improve the atmosphere between the two countries by various settlements and positive new measures. Once the atmosphere improved, perspectives would change both in India as in Pakistan. But it was barely two months ago that the whole question had been talked over by the two Heads of Government, and at present no useful purpose would be served, at any rate by raising it at the officials meeting.

At one stage, Mr. Bhutto suggested that in that case there need be no Communiqué and both sides should issue separate statements. We said that that might seriously damage the Tashkent spirit and it would be better to have a joint communiqué. The officials were, therefore, asked to meet and after prolonged discussions, in which the Ministers also joined, the joint communiqué which you have seen was issued.

That is the narrative of the bare facts of our proceeding in Rawalpindi. In addition, I would like to give Your Excellency some of the impressions we brought back:

First, I would like to say that we found the atmosphere fairly cordial and it was possible to exchange views in a friendly way.

Secondly, we are extremely disappointed that the Pakistan attitude was such that no progress was possible even in regard to normalization of relations. In fact, I must say we have to regard it as a bit of a set-back. At the same time, we were glad we went and resumed contacts at various levels – with the Pakistan President and the Ministers - after a very long interval; and even if no concrete result occurred, the exchange of views has been extremely useful.
Thirdly, we did feel there was a change in the Pakistan attitude regarding the Tashkent Declaration. They still say it is a valuable agreement and they affirm their desire to live up to their obligations, but when it came to discussions within the framework of the Agreement, we could not but see that there was some departure from what was contemplated at Tashkent. The Pakistanis appear to have gone back to their usual line that no improvement of relations is possible without Kashmir settlement. This was their pre-Tashkent line and unfortunately it appears that they have reverted to it.

Fourthly, they showed no interest at all in the questions of normalisation which still remain to be dealt with.

Fifthly, we came away with the distinct feeling, which is based on our talks with the Pakistani President and Foreign Minister, that it would not be correct to suppose any difference in their policies. It is sometimes reported in the Press that President Ayub is keen to implement the Tashkent Declaration and begin a new chapter in Indo-Pakistan relations, while Mr. Bhutto is being difficult. Our experience indicated that such a view would not be in keeping with the facts.

We do not want to be gloomy about what happened. We realize that attitudes cannot change very suddenly and indeed perhaps the fact that we agreed to talk again is an encouraging sign. But we would like to inform Your Excellency, and through you the Soviet Government, who had played such a large part in bringing about an agreement at Tashkent, that somehow even President Ayub seems to be yielding to pressures which are building up against the Declaration, both against its purposes and its framework. So far as we are concerned, we would like to continue discussions to strengthen the Declaration. Our Government leaders have declared this times out of number, and we will persevere in trying to build up relations in the spirit of the Tashkent Declaration. So far as Pakistan is concerned, we are still hopeful that at the next meeting their attitude may be better, but somehow we got the impression that with the completion of the withdrawals the entire Pakistan attitude has changed. Perhaps this is not correct, and we shall continue looking for more hopeful signs. If their attitude changes, the next time we meet some progress may prove possible. As I say, we told them we would always discuss any issue they wished, but it was also necessary to have a change of attitude and atmosphere, and until that takes place there was very little to achieve.

I apologies for speaking at such length, but we felt we should keep your Government fully informed. I do not ask Your Excellency to comment, but if there is anything more you would like me to say, I am at your disposal.

Mr. Bonediktev: I am very grateful for all that you have said and will convey it to my Government. With your permission, I would like to ask a few questions.
First, how do you explain the reasons which have made Pakistan take such an attitude at a meeting held at their suggestion?

F.S. Well, there is no doubt that there was some opposition to President Ayub after his return from Tashkent, especially in the Punjab, and this gave an opportunity to certain elements, such as Mr. Bhutto, who have apparently been able to impress upon the President that unless Kashmir is kept in the forefront, nothing can be done. They talk a great deal about placating their public opinion. As you knew, their public opinion is not like ours, indeed it is tailor-made; and they talk rather too much about it as though they were trying to exploit it to bring pressure on us.

Perhaps we should also take note of the external factors that may be at work. We cannot ignore the possible influence of the Chinese. As you know, Liu Shao-chi is shortly due to visit Pakistan. Then it is interesting to note that the very day we arrived, in his first of the month broadcast, President Ayub made it a point to re-assert that China posed no threat to the sub-continent. (At this point, Secretary II, Shri Azim Hussain, who was also present, drew attention to Mr. Bhutto’s very strong attack on Vice President Humphrey’s reported suggestion that Pakistan understand the danger from China). It is particularly interesting that President Ayub should have felt inclined to reinforce Mr. Bhutto on this point the very day we arrived and go out of the way to re-affirm Pakistan’s friendship with China. So perhaps the Chinese influence has to be taken into account. Also - this is naturally speculation – it is a fact that there are various countries, not many, but a few, who have not been happy about the improvement of Indo-Pakistan relations and about Russia having acquired such an importance in this region. President Ayub gave us – and you – at Tashkent the impression of being concerned about the need for Indo-Pakistan cooperation, but of being surrounded by those who thought differently; he certainly gave no such impression during our visit to Rawalpindi.

Mr. Bonediktev: you think that there are influences at work on him, both external and internal?

F.S. Well, external influences also work through internal forces. For instance, the Chinese influence would be through the Pro-Chinese elements. There was a very interesting remark in President Ayub’s first of the month broadcast to the effect that China would not attack anyone unless she was provoked; the implication was that India had provoked the 1962 attack by China.

Mr. Bonediktev: Would it be correct to draw the conclusion that from the military point of view and the diplomatic point of the view the Tashkent Declaration has been well implemented, but on the economic side – return of cargoes and properties, etc, - it has not been implemented?
F.S.: No, I do not think it would be correct to say that. Some of these issues may seem quite small, but the main thing is that political goodwill is necessary; and if that had been there, why should they keep our properties, cargoes, etc? So, it is not just an economic aspect. It is the implementation of the agreement in the full political sense that matters. We would not like to give you the impression that we gave great importance at Rawalpindi to ships and cargoes; on the contrary we made it clear there were many other important matters we would like to tackle, but this return of properties would have been symbolic of a political attitude and would have encouraged goodwill among the people.

Mr. Bonediktev: I would like to ask one more question. Is there much opposition to the Tashkent Declaration in India?

F.S.: No, by and large our people have welcomed it as a good agreement. There are of course some critics, mainly in the Jan Sangh, but generally speaking, our public opinion is favourable to it. I would again like to say that we would stand by the Agreement, but unfortunately we have run into difficulties from the Pakistan side. We would like to strengthen the agreement, but it should be Pakistan’s endeavour to strengthen it also.

Mr. Bonediktev: I thank you again for telling me all that you have and shall not fail to report to my Government fully.

New Delhi, March 4, 1966.

As the House is aware, the Tashkent Declaration provides for various measures to be taken and various issues to be discussed between India and Pakistan. Both sides have been taking action in fulfillment of some provisions of the Declaration, notably Articles II, V and VII, which relate to the withdrawal and disengagement of forces, the restoration of normal diplomatic relations, and the exchange of prisoners. There has also been partial progress in respect of the restoration of communications envisaged in Article VI, as also under Article IV, which calls for the discouragement of propaganda directed against the other country. However, for further progress in pursuance of the Tashkent Declaration numerous other issues of immediate as well as of long-term importance need to be settled and as a result of exchange between the two Governments it was decided that to this end a meeting be held at Ministers level between the two sides at Rawalpindi on March 1st and 2nd.

According, the Indian Ministers of External Affairs, of Transport, Aviation, Shipping and Tourism, and of Commerce, accompanied by several advisers, had a brief formal opening meeting with the Ministers of Foreign Affairs, of Commerce and of Communications of the Government of Pakistan and their advisers on the morning of 1st March. Thereafter many meetings, formal, and informal, at Ministerial and Official level, were held and a joint communiqué was issued on the evening of 2-3-1966. I place on the Table of the House a copy of the communiqué.

As stated in the Communiqué, the talks in Rawalpindi were of an exploratory nature and led to a useful exchange of views. During their exchanges with the Pakistan Government preparatory to the Conference, the Government of India had suggested that it be held to consider further steps towards the implementation of the Tashkent Declaration. The Government of India had added that, in particular, discussions take place on the questions of restoration of trade, economic relations and communications and the property and assets taken over by either side. The Government of Pakistan had proposed that Ministerial meeting should discuss six additional items which were briefly, according to them, the dispute over Jammu and Kashmir, the reduction of armed forces following settlement of the Kashmir dispute, the creation of conditions preventing the exodus of people, the so-called evictions, the Farakka Barrage and the implementation of exiting agreements.

Eventually it was agreed that the meeting take place without any agenda, each side naturally being free to raise whatever issues it wished to. At the discussions held on March 1st and 2nd, each side explained to the other at length which issues they felt could most appropriately and usefully be discussed at this stage to achieve the purposes of the Tashkent Declaration. The Pakistan Delegation highlighted the question of Kashmir, which they appeared to consider as the root cause of all other Indo-Pakistan issues and which had to be tackled if progress were to be achieved in improving Indo-Pakistan relations. The Indian delegation reiterated the Government of India’s views on the Kashmir question and explained that, as no useful purpose could be served by discussing it, the Conference should proceed to complete the normalization of relations in the fields disturbed by the conflict and also take up some other major issues, the solution of which would lead to a better understanding between the two peoples. We pointed out that the significance of the Tashkent Declaration was that on the one hand the two sides would not resort to forces but would settle their differences by peaceful means, and, on the other, they would proceed with the settlement of various individual issues even though on some other issues their positions might remain far apart.
Both sides reaffirmed their resolve to adhere to the terms of the Tashkent Declaration and to discharge their obligations under the Declaration and, having exchanged views on the approach which each considered would best further this cause, decided to meet again at a later date.

IMMEDIATE

Head of Mission/Post from Foreign Secretary.

Pakistan press has in recent weeks published a number of articles casting doubts on India’s sincerity in implementing Tashkent Declarations and also openly accusing us of already breaking it. In actual fact, from moment they returned from Tashkent, Pakistanis have been violating letter or spirit of Declaration in various ways. We deliberately refrained from taking notice of this increasingly disturbing trend in Pakistan’s attitude towards Declaration, making allowance for Ayub regime’s domestic political difficulties and also hoping that they would at last cooperate in implementing the agreement. We are still anxious to avoid entering into any public controversy with the Pakistanis, but their conduct during Ministerial meeting in Rawalpindi earlier this month, and a number of statements made by their leaders, have tended to strengthen impression that, having secured the withdrawal of forces, they are losing interest in implementing Declaration. In view of this, and of their attempts to blame us for breaches of the Declaration of which it is they who are guilty, it is advisable to point out informally in influential circles in country/countries with which you deal the contrast between Pakistan’s cynical attitude towards Declaration and our sincere desire to use it as basis for developing genuinely cooperative relations with Pakistan.

2. We would, therefore, like you to draw attention to the following points:

(a) Tashkent Declaration’s specific articles provide logical and practical scheme for improving relations through four categories of action: normalisation of relations in military field by return to position prevailing before conflict; normalisation of relations on civil side also to position prevailing before conflict; commencement of efforts to settle some long-term problems; and adoption of new measures for strengthening good relations. There could be overlapping of action under each category, but clearly a practical sequence in time has to be worked out logical basis for which is that you must normalize relations before you can improve them. India had accordingly proceeded to complete military normalisation and begin return to civil normalcy. Troops were withdrawn in accordance with Article II; prisoners were exchanged in accordance with Article VII; High Commissioners returned and normal functioning of diplomatic missions resumed in accordance with Article V; over-flights and (at our instance) some resumption of P. & T. facilities was arranged in accordance with requirement in Article VI for restoration of communications. (Also at India's insistence some overland routes are being kept open to facilitate movement of people).

(b) India had initiated or cooperated in all these measures without laying down any conditions and without insisting that they be kept pending till the Ministers of the two sides met. However, to complete return to pre-conflict position, it remained for two sides to restore other communication facilities to resume trade under Article VI and to restore seized properties under Article VIII. There two articles also envisaged discussion of some long-term issues. On January 28th, Government of India therefore proposed a Minister level meeting “to consider further steps towards the implementation of Tashkent Declaration”. India mentioned in particular the questions of restoring trade, communications and properties, but ruled out no other subject, her purpose being solely to move forward both according to the letter and the spirit of Tashkent. On February 4th, however, Pakistan Government published list of 6 agenda items starting with Kashmir and going on to other issues which were not only highly contentious in substance but highly provocative in their wording. To avoid controversy which would hardly have helped purpose of Tashkent Declaration, our High Commissioner was instructed to meet President Ayub with a view to evolving a constructive approach. Eventually Pakistan Government agreed to the Indian suggestion that two sides meet without agenda, each naturally being free to raise whatever subjects it wished.

(c) Indian intention was to make progress by completing normalisation of relations, tackling some long-term issues, including those which Pakistan was interested in raising, and initiating some new measures of cooperation. A larger and high powered delegation was therefore sent, prepared to deal with a wide variety of issues. Pakistan, however, then took the extraordinary position that no items of implementation could be discussed unless progress towards a Kashmir settlement was ensured, and even if agreement on other matters was reached Pakistan would not be willing to implement them or normalize relations pending a Kashmir settlement. India pointed out that there was nothing in Tashkent Declaration to justify such an attitude, that on the contrary Pakistan had so far been cooperating in implementation of various measures required under Declaration without waiting for any discussion on Kashmir, and that there was no reason or logic in suddenly adopting this new and obstructive stand. It was even made clear to Pakistanis that if they wished to raise Kashmir, they were at liberty to do so, but this was an issue on which the Heads of two Government had agreed to disagree barely two months earlier, there was no indication of a change in Pakistan's attitude, and Pakistan had no reason to expect a change in India's attitude, a discussion on Kashmir was therefore hardly likely to be fruitful; however, if they insisted, their Ministers were free to discuss it with the Indian Ministers, while officials tried to advance towards settlements on issues they could more appropriately deal with. Only response from Pakistanis was astonishing argument that whole Tashkent Declaration rested on Kashmir, and that no other issues could be resolved until Kashmir was solved, so discussion should start on Kashmir at officials level.

(d) Till the Ministerial meeting, Pakistan had been implementing parts of Tashkent Declaration without insisting on any Kashmir settlement or even discussion. Her sudden new obduracy and recrudescence of her anti-Indian propaganda, make it difficult to avoid conclusion that she was only interested in implementing those parts of the Declaration which were of vital interest to her – withdrawal of Indian troops and resumption of over-flights between East and West Pakistan, having achieved these she is now re-agitating Kashmir, using Declaration as nothing more than what Pakistan Information Secretary Altaf Gauhar described on February 2nd: “an instrument of strategy to achieve national objectives”.

(e) In fact, a succession of pronouncements by Pakistani leaders attempted to weaken significance of Declaration practically as soon as it was signed, particularly the commitment not to use force, Pakistani leaders also tried to maintain that Declaration did not cover infiltration into Kashmir and even repeated the demands for self-determination for Kashmiris which they had stopped talking about during and after conflict. Such statements are becoming more and more frequent and ominous. Following quotations are illustrative:
“...The people of Jammu & Kashmir have a right to decide their own future and we will continue to support their inalienable right... The Declaration has in no way detracted from or damaged our national viewpoint on Kashmir. Their right to choose their future remains inviolate”.
(President Ayub in broadcast of January 14, 1966)

“...We told the Indian Prime Minister that Pakistan was ready to reiterate that it would fulfill its responsibility of maintaining peace, a responsibility that Pakistan had accepted under the U.N. Charter. This responsibility means that nations should not resort to the use of force so long as avenues of peace remained open...We also told him that peace could be maintained only if the issue of Kashmir was settled in a reasonable manner.”
(President Ayub in broadcast of January 14, 1966)

“We did make it clear to India that an honourable solution of the problem of Jammu and Kashmir was an essential pre-requisite to the establishment of lasting peace between Pakistan and India.”
(President in broadcast on February 1, 1966)

“The Tashkent Declaration is not an end itself and cannot by itself represent a turning point in our relations with India.

“The state can only be sponged clean when the people of Jammu and Kashmir have exercised their inherent right of self-determination and there can be no doubt or ambiguity about it.... The President addressed the nation yesterday. He specifically assured the people of Pakistan that they will continue to support the inalienable right of the people of Jammu and Kashmir to decide their own future”.
(Foreign Minister Bhutto in statement issued in Larkana on January 15, 1966)

“The UN Charter, which represents the collective resolve of the World community to perpetuate peace, in Article 51 recognises the ultimate right of a nation to wage its struggle for freedom. It is precisely in this context that in the Tashkent Declaration we have reaffirmed our obligations under the Charter”.

“Specter of war and conflict can vanish only when a lasting peace is achieved by allowing the people of Jammu and Kashmir their right to freely determine their future.”
(Mr. Bhutto’s statement issued in Larkana on January 15, 1966)
(N.B.: Article 51 does not bear the meaning Mr. Bhutto tries to give it, as it merely upholds the right of self-defence, which is not relevant.)

“This phrase’ (i.e. armed personnel) “does not cover the case of the Mujahdeen…What happens on either side of the cease-fire line does not come within the purview and, indeed, is not covered at all by this clause.”
(i.e. Clause II of the Tashkent Declaration.) “Also the phrase armed personnel’ does not cover the type of people as was envisaged in the Security Council Resolution of 1948.” (Reference is to U.N. Resolution of February 6, 1948, which spoke of withdrawal and continued exclusion of irregular forces and armed individuals’ from Jammu and Kashmir) (Information Secretary Altaf Gauhar’s speech on March 4th analysing Tashkent Declaration)

This paragraph (i.e. Article II(IV) of U.N. Charter) “clearly requires Member States to refrain from threat or use of force (the word ‘refrain’ is to be noted) against the territorial integrity or political independence of any State. And where the territorial integrity or political independence of any State is itself a subject-matter of dispute, obviously the provisions of this paragraph cannot be operative”.

(Altaf Gauhar’s speech of March 4th analysing Tashkent Declaration)

“The people of Kashmir are our brothers and our kin. It is inconceivable for anyone to think that we can go back on our solemn pledge to assist them in their liberation…For Pakistan, a just and honourable settlement of the Jammu & Kashmir dispute remains the only path towards the goal of a lasting peace and a relationship of true cordiality between the countries and their peoples.”

(Foreign Minister Bhutto in statement issued in Larkana, February 9th)

“….Jammu and Kashmir dispute, on whose settlement alone hinges peace between India and Pakistan.”

(Statement by Mr. Bhutto at Lahore on February 25th as reported in DAWN under headline “Talk of peace futile if Kashmir not solved).

“An honourable settlement of Jammu & Kashmir dispute is a sine qua non for a durable peace between Pakistan and India”.

(President Ayub in National Assembly in Dacca – March 8th).
“The unresolved dispute over Jammu and Kashmir remains the most fundamental obstacle to peace between Pakistan and India”.

(Mr. Bhutto in National Assembly at Dacca on March 14th.)

“(The Tashkent Declaration) forecloses no possibilities, blocks no avenues to the achievement of our legitimate aims and the vindication of our just rights”.

(Foreign Minister Bhutto in National Assembly in Dacca on March 14th. N.B.: Obvious implication is that use of force in Kashmir is not foreclosed by Tashkent Declaration; this is contrary to Declaration’s clear terms.)

“Pakistan went to Tashkent because it did not like to refuse Russia’s request when it was attempting to medicate for the first time in the dispute with India….Russia had always used its Security Council veto on Kashmir and it would have been a mistake to turn down the invitation”.

(President Ayub in Rajshahi on March 16th as reported by Reuter. N.B.: Implication is that Pakistan was never sincere in seeking rapprochement with India but merely in diplomatic maneuvering with Russia.)

3. We fully intend persevering in efforts to carry out Tashkent Declaration in letter and spirit, and despite Pakistani provocations we do not wish to revert to old habits of conducting our controversies publicly and internationally. We would like you, however, to stress in private talks that we are getting no cooperation from Pakistan and her new tactics are seriously denigrating and damaging to Tashkent Declaration.

INDO-PAK RELATIONS:

The Foreign Minister remarked that our own assessment was that for about 4 or may be 5 weeks after the Tashkent Declaration, we distinctly had the impression that Pakistan were taking steps to implement that declaration. This was not based merely on specific acts and the like, but on the general atmosphere in Pakistan and also the general friendship that was reciprocated or exhibited to the members of our Missions abroad and their willingness to talk to them as they used to do much before the hostilities. We also had reports from a large number of our Missions from various foreign capitals that their talks with the members of Pakistani Missions there had given them the impression that they were reversing the trend of criticism and animosity, etc. Their radio broadcasts were also not very critical. In informal briefings also, even at a higher level, they were generally in favour of giving content to the Tashkent Declaration.

The Foreign Minister went on to say, “Then two or three things happened: I) some of you have noticed in your press reports that the number of casualties on the Pakistani side was much higher than figures they had mentioned. These had been anything between 10 to 14 thousand. There was a great deal of pressure in the Punjab areas and there were demonstration also against the Tashkent Declaration. There is a very strong move in East Pakistan for complete autonomy and some people very strongly urge almost breaking away with Pakistan. He was also told that there might be a very strong move against officials from West Pakistan, even against those who are in industry. After all this, it appears that Ayub was feeling greatly worried about all these tendencies. He had therefore to do something spectacular. According to some school of thought, President Ayub thought that the only way to do all this was to strengthen the “hate India” campaign and this was the easiest thing to quieten Pakistan and to consolidate his position”. Here the foreign Minister made a reference to the reported differences between President Ayub and Foreign Minister Bhutto and said that it was accepted in all parts of the world that there was difference of position between Ayub and Bhutto.

Referring to the Indo-Pak Ministerial talks at Rawalpindi, the Foreign Minister said that it appeared that about 4 or 5 days before the Indian delegation went to Pindi they (Pakistan) took the decisions to reverse all that they had been doing in the earlier stages. This might be because of the accumulated effect of all the factors already mentioned.............. Everything changed overnight and in the course of the Ministerial meeting they said something which was not at all consistent with the Tashkent Declaration. When a correspondent referred to President Ayub's "First of the Month Broadcast", the Foreign Minister denied that he had said at Pindi that "the atmosphere for discussing this (Kashmir) was not congenial". He had merely said that Prime Minister Shastri and President Ayub had touched upon this subject at Tashkent and they had come to this conclusion that both parties should reiterate their positions. If anyone wanted to go through that exercise, the talks could go on for a number of days, it was important that there was no mention in the Tashkent Declaration that we would discuss Kashmir. Now the Pakistanis took the position that we cannot discuss any of the matters unless we make some progress on Kashmir. It was our duty to point out clearly that in the text of the Tashkent Declaration there was absolutely no mention (of Kashmir) at all. It was their interpretation which was unwarranted either by the circumstances or by the text of the Declaration. This was a matter which required careful consideration, it would be wrong for us to take the line that because Pakistan had adopted a wrong attitude so we didn't bother and we wouldn't discuss. Whether we discussed it or not, we should continue to take the position that discussion of other matters should not be left even if there was no discussion on Kashmir. We should insist on their discharging their obligations under the Declaration. The other thing can be that we start saying that if Pakistan didn't discuss we wouldn't discuss either. Then we would accept the line that India also accepted that we should not discuss anything else unless we made progress on Kashmir. That was not in our national interest. The Foreign Minister said, "It is for this that I am saying that where there is any dispute between the two countries everything will be resolved by peaceful means. We can continue to point out the anomalous position that they have taken with regard to the Tashkent Declaration. They are trying to connect any progress of Tashkent Declaration with progress on the question of Kashmir. It is something which is totally unacceptable to us."

The Foreign Minister went on to say that perhaps China was the only country which opposed the Tashkent Declaration. No other country had made any statement which was opposed to the Tashkent Declaration. Whatever the Americans might say later, if the opinion or the reaction of the Western correspondents was any index of the thinking of their Governments, they were generally looking for all opportunities to see that these Talks failed and nothing came out. Later on Dean Rusk, President Johnson and Prime Minister Wilson etc. had said that it was a good document and should be adhered to. If there was any complete failure of the Tashkent Declaration, no country would be happy except China because tension would start again. Our attitude should be clear viz. that we want to strengthen our relations with Pakistan, diplomatically, culturally and economically.

Replying to a question on the anti-India propaganda in Pakistan, the Foreign Minister said that we had conveyed to them more than once, pointing out specific instances whenever their statements were completely opposed to the Tashkent Declaration. On other things, we had taken up with them, issues regarding properties. We got some reports that they had started taking action. The Foreign Minister said, “Let us hope we make some progress; we have been taking up these specific issues with them. Whenever we have taken up with them they have evaded by saying that the property has been taken by the Custodian of Properties for better security.” When asked as to whether Pakistan had confiscated these properties, the Foreign Minister said that they had not taken any precise steps which could be called “expropriation”. They said “It is for good management”.

Commenting on the likelihood of the next Indo-Pak Ministerial Meeting being held, the Foreign Minister said: “I am not very enthusiastic about it, but I won’t say I don’t want a meeting. If a meeting is there, I will face it. Next time they have to come here. I was disinclined to make any suggestion about the meeting. Last time we took the initiative and said we were prepared to go to Pindi”.

Withdrawal of Forces from the Border:

The Foreign Minister said that the first thing was that, generally, we had somehow or other worked ourselves up in the mood as if we were not interested in withdrawal and it was only the Pakistanis who were interested in it. Basically, this presumption was not correct. After the ceasefire our forces were facing each other. It was most difficult and most irritating for any Army boys just to remain facing each other without any fighting. During the fighting the local population also gave some cooperation and some support to them. Once that was over, there were the normal functioning of human beings and their problems, the problem of their grain, their food etc. It was most unfair to any army in the world, including the Indian army, “that you didn’t ask them to fight and still they sit at a distance of 40 yards”. The second thing was what the alternative was for us….. “We had accepted the ceasefire”. We had said that there should not be any further infiltration on the ceasefire line and then we would withdraw. That was more or less the only condition. Notwithstanding our stand, the Security Council Resolution of September 24 was quite clear.

The Foreign Minister said that it was very essential to keep in mind “that at Tashkent you did secure one thing; an agreement between the countries that the differences will be settled peacefully”. Prime Minister Shastri had made it clear that the real question between India and Pakistan was whether they were going to fight again and that if he was satisfied that armed conflict would not solve the problem and force would not be used then he would look at every problem from a different angle. We actually know that notwithstanding our stand, sooner or later we had to withdraw to our positions and no one would permit us to continue to occupy their posts. And if that was ruled out then there was no other alternative than to secure as much as we could no these other issues. “Now there is an agreement and you can always point out that tension is inconsistent with what you have agreed at Tashkent.” the Foreign Minister said. Withdrawal was inevitable……. Moreover, they continued to be in Chhamb where about on lakh of our people were displaced. Similarly, we were in Sialkot and Lahore areas. If the armies were allowed to face each other, this would mean that we were taking the two countries to another armed conflict and it was not good for both the countries to clash again. So we need not be apologetic about our withdrawal.

When the Foreign Minister was asked about the chances of another armed clash between the two countries, he said that the biggest guarantees against a clash were the realization by Pakistan that they cannot have an upper hand against India and then this Tashkent Declaration.

The Foreign Minister said he had no information as to what the Prime Minister had in her mind when she said that Soviet leaders were taking this up with the Pakistanis.

The Soviet had not spoken to us at all about another Summit with Pakistan.
No one had broached with us anything from Pakistan or from others of a possible meeting. The Foreign Minister said that he…… causally to President Ayub that it was time that he and our new Prime Minister might meet sometime. He could not notice that he (President Ayub) was keen about it. Our attitude was never to say “No” to anybody at any time. They (Pakistanis) will never ask for a summit and on this occasion I am not very keen to press for a meeting. The Foreign Minister said that he would wait for another 2 – 3 weeks. If at any moment we felt that there was some change of progress he would suggest a meeting.

Under the Tashkent Agreement we had to withdraw and that had nothing to do with de jure ownership. The agreement was only to unwind what happened. The two Chiefs of the army staff had agreed that whenever there was another dispute at any particular point of any sector, local commanders and then higher officers should meet. We had made it clear to them that we wanted to carry out this Declaration and if there was anything which was not in accordance with the principles laid down, we would rectify that. The point was really of possession and not of de jure ownership. The correct position was that in the Declaration there was mention of only return to positions held before 5th August.

About Pakistan's reported objection to India not having vacated three posts on the Jammu border, the Foreign Minister said that India never had any intention to grab any territory.

Immediately after the Tashkent Declaration we had written to our Missions abroad to stop anti-Pakistan propaganda in keeping with the spirit of the Tashkent Declaration. But now we have told them to counteract any misstatement of the Pakistanis and to repudiate and contradict any twist in interpretation of the Tashkent Declaration. At the same time we did not want our Missions to adopt an attitude of virulent propaganda.

About infiltrators, the Foreign Minister said that so far they have not sent infiltrators into Kashmir but he would not say that they will not send them.

The royal reception given to the Chinese leaders, Chen Yi etc. shows the trend of thinking of the Pakistani leaders. The Chinese went out of their way to give statement to beat down whatever little was left of the Tashkent Declaration. At each meeting they have been pointedly referring to Kashmir. Amongst the Pakistani people also they have been projecting a picture that China is a real friend on the Kashmir issue. It is quite interesting that the American and other Western newspapers have been trying to soft-peddle this phenomenon.

The Foreign Minister went on to say that Bhutto wished to describe India as a "spoilt child". Pakistan, the Foreign Minister said, had been pampered. The American didn't believe that something had gone wrong with Pakistan and they believed that Chinese influence did not exist in Pakistan. "I totally disagree with them. It is a very clear case that Pakistan thinks China as their naturally." the Foreign Minister said.

In the international sphere, the Chinese relationship with several other countries had received set-backs, for example with Indonesia and Africa. Chinese are happy with Pakistanis as they explain the Chinese position to the international community. President Ayub had said that China had nothing but peaceful intentions towards her neighbours. Thus Pakistan was useful to China also. It was a clear case even in Vietnam or in South East Asia. If Indonesia was no longer in that position, obviously it was a serious set back to them. It appeared that they were now trying to pick some countries from different parts of the world and trying to make their relations much more intimate with them. Pakistan's relations with several countries, for example Iran and Turkey, were affected. Even those countries which are near Pakistan and have been helpful to them are generally concerned about this growing collusion and collaboration. between China and Pakistan. How deep is their conspiracy is a matter of guess. The Chinese are very clever. They will not give any undertaking that they will shoulder any major responsibility for Pakistan. The same thing they are doing in Vietnam. No Chinese soldier has gone to Vietnam to fight. They are very cautious and they do not want to be drawn in any conflict directly with America. In our case, it suits them to pressurize us by keeping up tension on the border with Pakistan…… The Foreign Minister said that it was quite obvious that the Chinese were supporting Pakistan more than any other country.

In reply to a question the Foreign Minister said that he did not think that Chou En-lai had given any assurance to Sheikh Abdullah. At Algiers the meeting took place at a reception and there were a large number of people there. There they had some talks for a short while and he thought that the Chinese were too far sighted to commit anything. They would exploit the position but they would not put their foot in for the sake of somebody else. About the latest Pak-China Joint Communiqué, the Foreign Minister referred to Chou En-lai visit to Pakistan and the Joint Communiqué then issued. The same words he said had been repeated in the present communiqué.

The Chinese have given tanks to Pakistan. Our information is that they (Pakistanis) took a last minute decision about displaying Chinese tanks in the parade. We have not got clear information about the number of tanks given to Pakistan. It is perhaps one shipload or something….
0479. Extract from the Official Memorandum by Pakistan’s Foreign Minister Zulfikar Ali Bhutto to President Ayub Khan.

Islamabad, April 11, 1966.

We have good relations with China not because China gave an ultimatum to India during the September war. Our good relations with China preceded the ultimatum. Our relations with China have developed not on account of any particular initiative taken by China, but on account of the hard realities of geography, history and politics. If good relations with the great powers depend on each and every initiative either in favour or otherwise then there would be no continuity or certainty in State relations and no logical rules determining the course of relationship between the States. Therefore, it is essential for us to improve our relations with the Soviet Union independent of any particular initiative….This will give our relations a broader scope and much greater maneuverability.

0480. Letter from Foreign Secretary C. S. Jha to Ambassador in the United States B. K. Nehru.

New Delhi, May 11, 1966.

Ministry of External Affairs
New Delhi

My dear Ambassador

Please refer to Banarjee’s telegram No. 407, dated the 29th April 1966 to Narayanan. The assessment of the State Department regarding the future course of Chinese foreign policy is interesting. We would largely agree with the general part of the assessment viz. that there would not be any change in Chinese policy, but only in nuance and atmospherics and that China would concentrate attention on certain areas in Asia and Africa. You would have, no doubt, seen our own assessment of Chinese foreign policy sent with our letter No.C/104/8/66-CE, dated the 9th March 1966. We feel that Asia, particularly the countries neighbouring China would be the main target of attention by the Chinese in the immediate future. They would try to consolidate the friendship with these countries who are already friendly to them, try to win over or allay the suspicions of others and intensify opposition to those countries like India which are adversaries and rivals. We do not however feel that the Chinese will write off the other countries for the time being as opined by the State Department. They might refrain from over-extending their resources all over Afro-Asia but would still continue to cultivate these countries, maybe at a lower key, without trying to overwhelm them with pressure for the time being. The Chinese do not consider the adverse developments in certain Asian and African countries as the last word in the politics of these countries. For them these are only part of the zig-zag course of revolutionary progress.

2. We find it difficult to go along with the State Department appraisal that the Chinese stand in Pakistan was one of moderation. It is true that during the recent visit to Burma and Afghanistan, President Liu Shao-chi and his party made relatively moderate statements. This was largely due to the attitude of Burma and Afghanistan themselves. Our information is that in both these countries the welcome accorded to the Chinese guests was modest and guarded. This was not so in Pakistan, where the whole leadership as well as the populace went to greet the Chinese with enthusiasm.

3. To say that the warmth of the welcome in Pakistan was the work of opponents of Ayub Khan within the country is in our opinion not true to facts. There is enough evidence that Ayub Khan actively used the Chinese visit to overcome domestic criticisms against the Tashkent Agreement and also to demonstrate to the people that China is behind them in the quarrel with India. By allowing a mass reception for the Chinese leaders, the Pakistani President was not only playing China against India, but warning the U.S.A. and the U.S.SR. of the potentialities of Sino-Pak relations unless these countries took a more accommodating attitude on Pakistan's conflict with India. One should not underestimate the significance of the popular reception given to the Chinese leaders in Pakistan. Because the whole visit was pointedly directed against India, almost to the exclusion of world problems, it does not follow that Sino-Pakistan collaboration against India does not have serious repercussions on the situation in Asia and also on the future course of Pakistan's internal and external policies. In our view the Chinese were diplomatic to the pint of cunningness when they decided not to embarrass Pakistan by not making statements which would interfere with Pakistan's relations with the United States. This enabled Pakistan to explain away their collusion with China, as Bhutto did when he said, “Pakistan's friendship with China was not going to be at the cost of relations with United States or vice-versa” and that “the Chinese are our friends, but they must also know that the Americans are our allies.”
What China knows is that the time is not yet ripe for detaching Pakistan from the U.S.A. They want to make Pakistan take the first few steps which would set in motion a process of independent thinking in Pakistan and eventually make it difficult for the Pakistan Government to remain an effective ally of the United States.

4. Liu Shao-chi’s visit had, as one of its main purposes the creation of a pro-Chinese political base in Pakistan. India was the one single issue around which such a base could be created. Hence Liu Shao-chi could say as he did in Dacca that “we require of each other nothing particular other than unity against aggression”, that is, unity against India.

5. During Liu Shao-chi’s visit, both the Chinese and the Pakistani leaders made extremist statements against India. Because such extreme statements were not made regarding Vietnam or against the U.S.A., it would be superficial to conclude that the stand of the Chinese was one of moderation in Pakistan. It should not be forgotten that Chen Yi said at the Karachi reception that “the Chinese people will not forget the support given to them by Pakistan Government and the people in international affairs”. It should not also be forgotten that President Ayub Khan himself had rebutted Vice President Humphrey’s remarks that “Pakistan was fully aware of the threat of communist China” and emphatically stated that there was no danger to the subcontinent from China. The Pakistanis also supported the Chinese stand on the question of U.N. representation; this is interesting because the U.S.A. is constantly trying to persuade us to depart from our stand on Chinese representation in the U.N. It would be sad and shortsighted for the United States to believe that anti-Indian collaboration between China and Pakistan would not in the long-run jeopardize their position not only in the subcontinent, but in the whole of Asia. Of course, the Americans are relieved that there was no reference to Vietnam in the joint communiqué issued in Rawalpindi. But this does not necessarily mean that the Pakistanis in their discussion with the Chinese supported the U.S. stand on Vietnam. By this omission the Pakistanis were merely avoiding embarrassment for themselves. In the communiqué issued in Rangoon also there was no reference to Vietnam.

6. We have no information whether the request of Pakistan for the removal of tele-communication base has anything to do with Liu Shao-chi’s visit. But it cannot be denied that such requests are intended to please the Chinese and the Soviet Union and are an indication of the changing Pakistani stand in the international field. This request has also to be reviewed in the context of the Chinese supply of arms and equipment to Pakistan.

7. On the question of Chinese moderation, we would like to point out that statements emanating from Peking indicate a hard rather than a softer line in Chinese foreign policy. Chou En-lai’s speech at the rally for the Albanian Chairman was couched in what was for him unusually strong and intemperate language and did not show any sign of a moderation either towards the U.S.A. or the U.S.S.R. As the occasion was to honour the Albanian leader, China’s main partner in the Sino-Soviet conflict, most of Chou En-lai’s criticisms were directed against Moscow. But then, even the opposition to modern revisionism was put forward as a pre-condition for making the fight against U.S. imperialism victorious. Vice Premier Chen Yi at a reception on May 4 to welcome overseas Chinese from Hong Kong and Macao justified China’s basic foreign policy and asserted that far form having failed that policy has succeeded and that it was the U.S.A. and not China which was being isolated on basic problems like Vietnam. In view of all this, we cannot agree with the State Department’s assessment of Chinese moderation either in Pakistan or in its general foreign policy. In regard to India the Chinese attitude is becoming more and more obstinate and hostile. As India is an important target of China’s Asian and world policy, it would be short sighted to underrate the significance of Sino-Pak relationship merely because, for the present, it is obviously directed against India.

8. To us U.S. naiveté in this matter is surprising. How do they from the long term point of view expect China to be contained, without the emergence of a power in Asia like India, strong and united, and capable by its size, resources and its military and economic strength to provide a counter-balance to China. The only other countries in Asia which could fulfil such a role are Japan, Indonesia and Pakistan. The last two are for obvious reasons excluded; and Japan’s capacity is inhibited by the fact of its being an ally of the U.S. under the U.S.- Japan military alliance. The collusion between China and Pakistan in so far as it is intended to weaken India is definitely against U.S. interests and against the interests of peace in Asia.

Yours sincerely

Ambassador of India
Washington

ENCLOSURE - I

Gist of an interview Shri P.K. Banerjee, Minister, Embassy of India, Washington had with Mr. William Bundy, Assistant Secretary of State

In an interview with Shri P.K. Banerjee, Minister in our Embassy in Washington, Mr. William Bundy, Assistant Secretary of State clarified what the U.S.A. meant when it said that it did not recognise the concept of sanctuary. He told Shri Banerjee that if it were ever the case that communist Chinese forces intervened United States would not accept any concept of sanctuary. At the same time any decision to take action would be based on careful evaluation of facts and would be subject to discussion at an appropriately high level.

On Chinese policy in future, they feel that in view of recent set backs particularly in Indonesia, Cuba and Ghana, there may be a change in nuance and atmospherics but not in their Chinese policy. This recent review of Chinese policy when their Ambassadors were summoned for consultations indicate only tactical changes; Chinese may have decided to concentrate on certain areas in Asia and Africa which are receptive and write off others for the time being. There is no evidence of a change in Chinese policy on basic issues like Vietnam and attitude towards U.S. and USSR. Nevertheless their statements in Pakistan, Burma and Afghanistan and the communiqués issued indicate her moderation of stance. They may be attempting to build up prestige in such areas with moderate attitudes on world problems. Chinese visits to West European non-communist countries like Denmark, Sweden, and France are in the offing.

Regarding Sino-Pakistan relations US does not believe that there is any agreement yet on anything which is inimical to their interest. The warmth accorded to Chinese leaders in West Pakistan was the work of opponents of AYUB within the country. The visit had no connection with Pakistani request for removal of telecommunication bases and this episode goes back to Indo-Pak war.

Chinese moderation has had no impact on North Vietnam whose delegation was recently accorded moderate reception. The North Vietnamese delegation thanked the Chinese for expediting Soviet shipments of arms and could be interpreted as leaning towards China in Sino-Soviet dispute. U.S. officials feel that the North Vietnamese are playing the balancing game in this dispute.

Enclosure II

Extracts from the speech of Chairman Liu Shao-chi at the State Banquet in Rawalpindi on the 26th March 1966

Last year, when Pakistan was subject to India’s armed attacks, its Government, people and army put up a heroic resistance and dealt a heavy blow at the aggressors. The Chinese Government and people firmly supported Pakistan in its righteous fight against aggression. Recently, when the imperialists and their collaborators were vilifying China without scruple and attempting to form a ring of encirclement against China, the Pakistan Government sternly refuted the nonsense about China's threat to the subcontinent, thus expressing the firm will of the Pakistan People to maintain friendship with the Chinese people.

We have always held that the Kashmir dispute should be settled in accordance with the wishes of the Kashmir people. Any attempt to deprive the Kashmir people of their right of self-determination or to bury the Kashmir question will neither be countenanced by the Kashmir people nor by the Pakistan people. President Ayub Khan has of late repeatedly stated that the Pakistan Government will not change his position on the Kashmir question and will continue to support the Kashmiri people in their struggle for freedom. The Chinese Government and people firmly support the righteous stand of the Pakistan Government and the just struggle of the Kashmir people for their right of self-determination.

Extracts of the speech of Chen Yi at the Civic Reception at Lahore on the 29th March 1966.

.....Last year when the Pakistan people rose in resistance against India's armed aggression; the people of Lahore stood at the forefront of the struggle. Faced with the invasion of a strong enemy, you put up a valiant resistance, feared no sacrifice and displayed great patriotism and heroism, thus adding a brilliant chapter to the annals of the Pakistan people's fight against aggression. Under the leadership of President Mohammad Ayub Khan, the Pakistan people, united as one and filled with a common hatred toward their enemy, triumphed over the enemy, superior in strength and number, and finally repulsed the aggressor and safeguarded the independence and sovereignty of their country. Your victory shows that a people fighting for a just cause is invincible. On behalf of the Chinese people, I wish to pay high tribute to the people of Lahore and the entire Pakistan people.

Where there is oppression, there is resistance. It is only natural, that, the people of Indian occupied Kashmir, who could no longer tolerate the brutal rule, should have unfolded a heroic struggle. The Kashmiri people will not stop their resistance so long as India does not cease its oppression.

......It is our bounden duty to give firm support to the Pakistan Government and people in their just struggle against India's armed aggression.
Extract from the speech of Liu Shao-chi at a Banquet in Lahore on the 28th March 1966

The Lahore district was the battle-front where Pakistan dealt a heavy blow to the Indian aggressors. We are very happy to have come to this heroic city. On behalf of the Chinese people, I would like to take this opportunity to salute the heroic people of Lahore, pay a tribute of sorrow to the martyrs who valiantly laid down their lives at different fronts, and extend our sympathy to all our brothers who were wounded and to the families of martyrs.

Extract from the speech of Chen Yi at the Civic reception in Karachi on 30.3.1966

The Chinese people resolutely stood on the side of the Pakistan people when Pakistan was subjected to India’s armed attack. The Chinese people have consistently supported Pakistan’s just stand on the settlement of the Kashmir questions. We are grateful to the Pakistan Government and people for their correct appraisal of this. Dear Friends: The Chinese people, on their part, will not forget the support given them by the Pakistan Government and people in international affairs. Such mutual support constitutes the reliable basis for the profound friendship between our two peoples.

Extracts from the speech of Liu Shao-chi at a Civic Reception in Dacca on 15.4.1966

…..We were merely doing our bounden duty in giving support to your struggle against aggression. Moreover, support is in our view always mutual. Your struggle against aggression has not only upheld the sovereignty and dignity of Pakistan, but also made an important contribution to the defence of peace in this part of the world. This constitutes in itself a strong support to the Chinese people. Speaking of thanks, it is we who should first express thanks to you.

In the future, should East Pakistan or West Pakistan again face the armed attack of any aggressor, the Chinese Government and people will continue to support the Pakistan people in their struggle to safeguard national independence, state sovereignty and national unity. So long as the Kashmiri people still suffer from brutal oppression and are deprived of their freedom, the Chinese Government and people will continue to support them in their struggle for the right to self-determination. We will never change this stand of ours, no matter how others may abuse and slander us.

The United States is genuinely making active preparations for attacking China. But in order to achieve this, it has, first of all, to bring the countries and regions around China under its control. It is precisely under the “anti-Chinese” banner that the United States is forcing these countries to abandon their independent policies and submit to its strategic needs. Should they refuse to accept US control or obey its orders, it will resort to subversion and sabotage. Although Africa is thousands of miles away from China, yet the imperialists make anti-Chinese outcries to divert the people’s attention when they carry out subversion and sabotage there. The peoples of Asia and Africa are not to be duped, and China cannot be isolated. It is an honour for China to be regarded by the imperialists as their main enemy. This proves that China is firm in supporting the anti-imperialists revolutionary struggles of all peoples, and that she is not indulging in empty talk but acting on her own words. The evil doings of the imperialists are enabling the Afro-Asian peoples to see more clearly who are their enemies and who their friends. Let us, peoples of Afro-Asian countries unite still more closely and carry through to the end the struggle against imperialism, colonialism and neo-colonialism.

Extracts from the Joint Communiqué issued at the end of the visit to West Pakistan of Liu Shao-chi and party

The President expressed the deep gratitude of the Government and people of Pakistan for the support they received from the Government and people of China in resisting aggression. The Chairman expressed admiration for the heroism and patriotism of the Pakistan people in their just struggle against foreign aggression and intervention. The Chairman reaffirmed that the Chinese Government and people adhere to their principled stand of opposing aggression and assisting its victims, and that the Chinese people unswervingly stand at the side of the people in their struggle to defend national independence and sovereignty and oppose aggression.

The Chairman and the President expressed satisfaction at the development of friendly relations between their countries. They stressed that the friendship between China and Pakistan is not based on expediency but on a solid foundation. The people of the two countries have given sympathy and support to each other in the struggle against aggression, and a profound friendship has been forged between them.

Aide Memoire delivered by the High Commission for India in Pakistan to the Pakistan Ministry of Foreign Affairs regarding properties of Indian Banks in Pakistan.

It is understood that the property and assets of the Indian Banks in Pakistan such as furniture, office equipments, vehicles, land, building etc. are likely to be disposed off by auction or distributed amongst the Pakistan Banks for which tenders have been called.

2. Parts of the building belonging to Indian banks are being allotted to the Pakistani Banks.

3. The depositors are being persuaded and even pressurized to withdraw from the Indian Banks amounts up to 70% of the total deposits in their accounts subject to a minimum of Rs 10,000/-. The idea apparently is to close the accounts in due course and thereby bring the activities of the Indian Banks to an end. It is also feared that in case there would be still some accounts open at the State Bank of Pakistan. This seems to be particularly true of the State Bank of India at Dacca.

4. Notices of discharge are being served on the employees of the State Bank of India, Dacca. About 24 persons (all Muslims) have already left the State Bank of India and joined other Banks. The Hindu employees (about 6 in number) have refused to accept the notices on the ground that these are against the terms and conditions of their service.

5. These activities are contrary to the spirit of Tashkent Declaration. In clause VIII of the Declaration the return of the property and assets taken over by either side in connection with the conflict was envisaged after mutual discussion between the two Governments.

6. Two protest notes No. P(P- IV)285(5)/66 dated the 25th February, 1966 and dated the 7th April, 1966, have been sent to the Government of Pakistan through their High Commission in India, but no reply has yet been received.

ISLAMABAD
14TH MAY 1966.
Express Letter from High Commissioner for India in Pakistan Kewal Singh to the Foreign Secretary C. S. Jha on future course of India – Pakistan relations.

Express Letter

Foreign Secretary From Kewal Singh

Continuation my Savingram of May 8 in reply to your telegram of May 5 in which you had very rightly drawn attention to Pakistan's evident policy to bury the Tashkent Agreement and in which you had posed the question as to how we could keep this Declaration alive and foil Pakistan's objectives. In my Savingram of My 8, I had given you my views. Now that Government are about to arrive at a policy decision. I feel I should present my further views to you urgently.

2. I have reported the latest developments to you in my telegram of May 15 and my Savingram of May 17.

3. As you pointed out, after the first period of honeymoon following the Tashkent Agreement Pakistan policy has undergone a radical change reverting to old ways. Pakistan has been busy (a) refurbishing her depleted arsenals, (b) building up tension and hatred against India, (c) painting a picture of India faced with acute political, economic and social crises and its leaders resorting to war hysteria to divert public attention form the critical situation within, (d) painting lurid pictures of repression and tyranny in Kashmir and above all accusing India of sabotaging Tashkent Agreement which Pakistan was willing to observe.

4. You had suggested 5 possible lines of action on which I had given you, after the most careful consideration, my views in the Savingram of May 8. Since then further conversations with officials, public men and Foreign Diplomats have confirmed these conclusions. The first 4 steps suggested by you in your telegram of May 5 would inevitably face the major obstacle of Pakistan's insistence on a definite commitment regarding the Kashmir issue as they involve meeting at one level or another where either in person or behind the scenes Bhutto would insist upon this. Both in my recent meeting with him and in his speech of May 18, Bhutto had made this more than clear and this has been dutifully publicised in every media of propaganda. With this general observation, the following are my comments on the suggestions contained in your telegram:

(a) The Ministerial Meeting can serve no purpose as Bhutto will insist on “meaningful discussions” on Kashmir as a condition precedent to normalization. He has often told me: “How can you have goodwill or normalization unless you are prepared to take concrete steps to solve the basic problem?” Pakistan would probably reject such a meeting and if accepted, Pakistan would see to it that it is a failure.

(b) While I would still strongly support a Summit Meeting through Soviet initiatives, India (Pakistan) do feel that continuous Soviet association might tend to make them more neutral in future between India and Pakistan. On this point Ambassador Kaul can best advise the Ministry.

(c) A Summit Meeting without a third party initiative would require considerable preparation. Failure would have disastrous consequences. Manzoor Qadir, for example, cited the instance of the meeting in October 1961 between Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru and Ayub in which many hopes had been placed but because of lack of any meeting of minds on Kashmir, it was a complete fiasco. Brohi, Arshad Hussain and several other leading Pakistanis advise against Summit till careful preparations have been made through diplomatic channels.

(d) I adhere to the view that a letter from our Prime Minister to President Ayub would serve little purpose. Probably, Bhutto has a draft reply already prepared.

(e) This is the steps that I would strongly recommend provided domestic and other considerations make it practicable for the Prime Minister to make a major policy statement in Parliament including a dramatic gesture which would have a general public appeal in Pakistan and in the world.

5. My considered conclusion, therefore, is that, apart from the possibility of another Summit through Soviet initiative, the choice for us lies between adopting a policy of “wait and see” and a dramatic announcement by our Prime Minister. (I shall refer later to what can be done through diplomatic channels.)

6. In coming to this conclusion, I have been reinforced by talks which I have had with Manzoor Qadir, Brohi and Amir of Kalabagh who warned me against meetings at whatever levels. Kalabagh hates Bhutto for his policies (especially deep involvement with China) which will spell disaster for Pakistan. He is convincing that Bhutto, Aziz Ahmed and Altaf Gauhar, who were opposed to the signing of the agreement in Tashkent, are now determined to destroy it. The President is entirely under the influence of Bhutto and other wild men and this is leading to tension with India and getting closer to China. He feels no meeting at this stage can be successful. Similarly both Manzoor Qadir and Brohi were not in favour of a meeting but felt that a major and dramatic gesture on our part would do irreparable damage to the myth assiduously built up by the present regime, i.e. that India was out to destroy Pakistan. It would also strengthen the hands of those in this country who wanted peace and friendship with India, both inside and outside the Government. We should examine this suggestion most seriously as to me it appears to provide the only brake upon the down-hill course that Indo-Pakistan relations are assuming with ever greater speed.

7. The Prime Minister’s statement might:
   (a) reaffirm our desire to fulfill the Tashkent Agreement and live in peace and friendship with Pakistan;
   (b) reaffirm that we shall respect Pakistan’s territorial integrity and sovereignty and wish Pakistan peace and prosperity;
   (c) announce our decision to take any or all the following steps to normalize our relations with Pakistan:
      i) Opening of land routes and railway traffic between India and Pakistan as it existed before September 1965.
      ii) Resumption of IAC and PIA flights between the two countries.
      iii) Removal of restrictions on the movement of people.
      iv) Maintenance of telecommunications in perfect working order on our side provided Pakistan does the same on her side.
      v) Release of all ships, cargoes and property.
      vi) Removal of all restrictions on trade.
      vii) A definite date to hand over Berubari.
   (d) Express the hope that these steps which are to the benefit of the people of the sub-continent as a whole will lead to the détente so necessary for the resolution of disputes between India and Pakistan and will establish firm foundations for lasting peace in future. We might also express our willingness to discuss all our disputes to find a peaceful solution to them.

8. On the above proposals, reciprocal action by Pakistan would be necessary if steps outlined are to be effective. If there is no response, the people of Pakistan and the world will know who is responsible. East Pakistanis are particularly keen that if Pakistan Government is opposed to normalization, the blame should be squarely and publicly put on them.

9. Apart from the above steps for normalization and improving relations we should make the following unilateral offers which will convince the Pakistanis that India wants to live in friendship with them and wants to help Pakistan in her economic development:

(a) We should agree to joint collaboration in Eastern Rivers with a view to ensure better irrigation and navigation facilities as well as better means of flood control in the interest of both the countries.

(b) We should offer to sell coal and iron ore to Pakistan at the production rate and by charging less than the commercial freight.

(c) We should agree to enter into a 4-year contract for the purchase of jute from Pakistan at prices to be fixed between S.T.C. and the Jute Growers Association. This would provide a market and fair price for the Pakistani jute growers.

(d) We should also invite a delegation of 50 businessmen and industrialists and another delegation of 20 journalists to visit India for a fortnight. Pakistan may not accept any of the above offers but its effect on the Pakistani public in general and especially in East Pakistan will be very important.

10. The advantage of such a major policy statement by the Prime Minister are:-

(i) It is one step that can be taken without ant definite commitment on the Kashmir issue;

(ii) It would go a long way to undo the effect of propaganda that India was out to destroy Pakistan. Thus it would help in strengthening forces, both in and outside Pakistan Government that genuinely desire a long-term settlement;

(iii) It would certainly have the effect of strengthening those in East Pakistan who are opposed to the present regime;

(iv) It would strengthen the hands of both the U.S.A. and U.S.S.R. in bringing pressure upon Pakistan. Moreover it would show the world that we were genuine in our professions of normalizing and improving our relations with Pakistan.

11. The disadvantages or drawbacks of this step are:
It would probably not meet with any response from Pakistan because of the advantages set out above.

(ii) It would be represented by Pakistan as a triumph of their “confrontation” policy.

(iii) The steps suggested for announcement by the Prime Minister may not be such as would be acceptable to Indian public opinion.

12. In my judgment a policy of “wait and see” entails grave disadvantages and has hardly anything in its favour. The only favourable factor might be that no other step can be taken in view of the prevalent mood of Pakistan’s leaders. While it was difficult for then to sell the Tashkent Agreement, it is comparatively easy for them, at least in West Pakistan, to revive the old pre-Tashkent policy of hatred against India which has been built up over several years. It might also be politically more acceptable to Indian opinion. However, the dangers of such a policy are:

(i) It would mean the end of the Tashkent Declaration, a consummation heartily desired by Pakistan and China. The world opinion, seldom very objective in such matters, will apportion equal blame to India and Pakistan.

(ii) Sooner or later, depending upon the speed of Pakistan’s rearmament and, a suitable international state of affairs, Pakistan in collusion with China would once again resort to forces against us.

(iii) Pakistan’s approach to the Security Council would become inevitable. While we cannot be happy about this move the Prime Minister’s policy statement could go a long way in convincing the world opinion that we want to live as friends and that we are prepared to resolve our differences peacefully by bilateral discussions.

13. While Government has to decide what initiative we should take to improve relations with Pakistan, there is one factor which on our part must be taken into account both in internal and external policies. There is at present no indication that we can expect cooperation from Pakistan in the tasks of peace. They will continue their present policies of hatred against India, incitement to Indian minorities and provocation of troubles all along our borders. In collusion with China and with the aid of Muslim countries the pressures against us will be increased. Therefore, while endeavouring to achieve some measure of co-existence, if not friendship, with Pakistan, we should be fully prepared for “Confrontation” – Pakistan’s policy towards India announced by Bhutto.

14. It is quite certain that Pakistan will have friendly feelings and respect for India only when she is convinced that our economy is strong and that our war potential is much greater than theirs. They must be convinced that India is a power as great as China to reckon with in Asia. I realise that strengthening of our economy and building up of our war potential will take a long time and we must meanwhile try to ensure against risk of Pakistan’s hostile adventures against us.

15. Knowing as we do, Bhutto’s thesis on India’s future, viz., “a decaying organism” we should have no doubts about Pakistan’s determined polices to harm and subvert India. Our efforts to weaken Pakistan, therefore, should have the topmost priority in our planning. I have specially in mind the opportunities in Baluchistan, Pakhtoonistan and East Pakistan. It is only when the Pakistanis become painfully conscious of their Achilles heels that they would refrain from inciting and aiding minorities, tribal peoples, and India’s neighbours. We have had approaches from some people and I shall discuss these personally on my next visit.

16. We should also undertake propaganda drive to convince the Pakistanis of the false image of India put up by the Pakistan propaganda machine. This would mean greater restraint on statement by political leaders and considerable work and imagination in putting across the correct image of India through broadcasts and other publicity media. (Our new programme of broadcasts to Pakistan is already having an excellent effect but much more can be done and the broadcasts must be on the medium wave if they are to be available to the majority of the people in the rural areas.)

17. In conclusion, India would reiterate what I have said before that in any discussions with Pakistan at this stage we shall have to face the major problem of Kashmir. Unless we are prepared to having negotiations on Kashmir no meeting with Pakistanis can yield any results. The Pakistan Government is not going to be content with mere “discussions” on Kashmir. They are now insisting in concrete steps and soon they will insist on self-executing machinery. We should therefore agree to discussion on Kashmir with our eyes open that Pakistan is going to insist upon some immediate concession on Kashmir. Brohi is of the opinion that the moment we agree to take one step on Kashmir, we will be forced to take several other steps; hence we should be very cautious in making any commitments on Kashmir. He does not believe that Kashmir is a real grievance of the Pakistanis. This is only a symptom of the divergent political ideologies of India and Pakistan and India should not, in his view, sacrifice her philosophy of life to placate Pakistan which, in any case, will be a brief respite. He is, of course, one of the rare people in Pakistan who feel that India’s stand id correct. Manzoor Qadir was equally firm in his advice that we should not make any commitments on Kashmir unless we are able to fulfill them. The most serious accusation against India, he said, is that she has made promises in the past which she has never honoured. He, therefore, advised that in making any promises on Kashmir we should be absolutely certain that we are in a position to honour them within a very short time. It would do further great harm to Indo-Pakistan relations if India were to make some sort of a promise with a view to buy time.

18. Reporting from Pakistan in her present mood, I would want that approach to Kashmir question should be as follows:-

(a) Every measure, economic and political, should be undertaken to consolidate our position in Kashmir. While we can express our willingness to discuss Kashmir, we should make no statement which can have the slightest unsettling effect in the Kashmir Valley.

(b) After general elections, we can consider if Sheikh Abdullah is at all prepared to play a constructive role. (I know he can be very dangerous because of his bitterness against India but this is a matter on which we must do thorough study through reliable sources.) It is, of course, certain that if Abdullah is prepared to play a decent role, Pakistanis will have no legs to stand upon and a solution along the cease-fire line would be accepted internationally.

(c) We should have no doubt in our mind that in any bilateral discussion on Kashmir, Pakistan is going to insist upon concessions which it would be impossible for us to make at any time, and certainly not before the General Elections.

19. I would suggest that we should continue making demarches for normalization through diplomatic channels on various matters and our initiative should be given maximum publicity through our radio broadcasts intended for East and West Pakistan. At present, the Pakistani Government, through its publicity media, is anxious to convey the impression that it is India which is not normalizing relations with Pakistan. If people know that we have made formal requests to Pakistan Government to allow free movement of people from one country to another, to open roads and railway links, to ensure efficient functioning of tele-communication system and to resume trade, etc., they would realise that it is the leaders of Pakistan who are responsible for their sufferings and difficulties and not the Indian Government.

K. S. Bajpai from U.S Bajpai*

CHOU-EN-LAI left early this morning well after 36 hours stay in Rawalpindi. President AYUB and CHOU-EN-LAI met for four hours discussion from 9 A.M. yesterday: Talks were in two phases. In first round till about 1.30 AYUB was assisted by FARUQUE YUSUF FIDA, ALTF GAUHAR, General RAZA and S.M. KHAN (now Ambassador to China) and Director General KAMALUDDIN dealing with China. The Chinese side comprised of CHIAO KUAN-HUA the Vice Foreign Affairs Minister CHAO YI-MINQ alternate member of the Central Committee of the Communist Party and seven other officials of CHOU-EN-LAI’s entourage. After brief interval second session continued between AYUB FARUQUE and YUSUF on one side and CHOU-EN-LAI with one aide presumably interpreter on the other. Official spokesman told that all problems including Kashmir and Viet Nam had been discussed.

2. There was no official communiqué and Pakistan Foreign Office explained to me that visit was unofficial. However there were brief speeches following dinner yesterday by President AYUB to CHOU-EN-LAI. Following are the substantive paras of AYUB’s speech proposing toast to COU-EN-LAI and latter’s reply:

AYUB “As I have already had occasion to say in the past it is a firm principle in our foreign policy to promote friendly relations with all countries of world – specially our neighbours, Pakistan and China are close neighbours and have historic links. The development of friendly relations between them conforms to their national interests and reflects the desire of their peoples to forge good neighbourly ties. This friendship is not based on expediency but on principles and will continue to flourish over the years.

“The people of Pakistan can never forget the invaluable support of the people and Government of China in their hour of need. We also value greatly the support of China to the right of the people of Jammu and Kashmir to decide their own future as pledged to them by both India and Pakistan.

* U.S. Bajpai was Deputy High Commissioner in Karachi and K.S. Bajpai, his brother was OSD/Director (Pakistan) in the Ministry of External Affairs.
“Our two countries are engaged in efforts to develop their economies and to improve the lot of their peoples. We greatly admire China for the remarkable progress made by her in every sphere in a short space of time. We can learn much from your experience. We therefore welcome the growth of commerce and economic cooperation between our two countries.

“In order to maintain and promote our development we need conditions of peace and order in our region and the world. This can come about only through a just settlement of issues involved in keeping with the wishes of the peoples concerned.”

CHOU-EN-LAI: In recent years, thanks to the common efforts of our two Government and peoples the friendly relations between our two countries have greatly developed. Both our countries abide by the five principles of peaceful co-existence.

“The Chinese people resolutely support the Pakistani people in their just struggle against foreign aggression and in defence of national independence. The Chinese people resolutely support the Kashmiri people’s just struggle for the right of self determination. The friendship between the Chinese and Pakistani people has been tested and will continue to prove that it can stand tests.

“The imperialists and reactionaries are trying hard to sabotage our friendship. We are confident that their schemes will eventually not succeed. Our friendship is in the fundamental interests of our two peoples and enjoys the support of the broad masses of the two peoples and therefore cannot be broken”.

3. Apart from difference no doubt between speeches at a social function and official communiqué at the end of LIU SHAO-CHI’s official visit it is interesting to note one variation. Communiqué had said “President (AYUB) expressed deep gratitude of Government and people of Pakistan for support they received from Government and people of China in resisting aggression”. On this occasion “hour of need” has replaced “aggression”. It was left to CHOU-EN-LAI to mention this latter word though without communiqué’s reference to Chinese “admiration” of Pakistan valour. I will telegraph our assessment of CHOU-EN-LAI’s visit as soon as different reactions are available.

Continuation my telegram No. 387, dated 30th June, 1966 from Hicomind, Islamabad, National Assembly having gone into recess on July 1, I could not meet any politicians in Pindi; however, I called on Director General KAMALUDDIN, in-charge at Foreign Office, dealing with China, U.S.S.R. and East European countries, and some diplomats. On basis of talks with these and press coverage as well as editorials one can hazard a preliminary assessment of CHOU EN-LAI’s visit.

2. AYUB has played his cards very well and achieved two objectives. In the first place, visit has served as nothing else could have done to emphasize that despite BHUTTO’s departure there had been no change in Pakistan’s foreign policy of which outstanding feature has been friendship with China. At the same time visit was not sufficiently played up to alarm the Americans and once again AYUB managed to prevent the Chinese guest from making any references to Viet Nam. We shall only know, perhaps from Chinese statements or form leakages here later as to what CHOU EN-LAI got out of this visit.

3. Ever since BHUTTO’s exit there has been considerable agitation both in press and parliament suggesting that BHUTTO had been sacrificed to American pressure and that his departure was price paid for American aid. It will be recalled that AYUB and official spokesman have been at pains to dispel this impression. Immediately following announcement of CHU EN-LAI’s visit press was inspired to comment that this was proof, if any were needed, that there was no change in foreign policy which had been and continued to be directed by AYUB. In his own speech at banquet to CHOU EN-LAI and in his first of the month broadcast AYUB has emphasized basic friendship with China. Editorial comment has followed the same line. At the same time except for few Urdu papers press coverage about his visit was neither lavish nor extensive, except in Pakistan Times which was perhaps only paper to carry the full text of CHOU EN-LAI’s speech, while most papers published full test of AYUB’s speech.
Moreover, while usual advertisements by firms exhorting people to line the roads in Rawalpindi were published and multi-coloured flags hoisted along the road to the airport there were no dancing children with flowers nor were the crowds large. The welcome was in fact more correct than cordial, and not one normally expects for a Chinese visitor of CHOU EN-LAI’s standing. This playing down was undoubtedly for the benefit of the Americans. This is well illustrated by two different versions of why CHOU EN-LAI did not go to Murree as originally planned: the Soviet Ambassador said that CHOU EN-LAI did not wish to be whisked away into obscure hills where possibilities for publicity were limited and, therefore, insisted on staying in Rawalpindi where the Assembly was still in session; CARGO the U.S. Charge’ said that CHOU EN-LAI’s health would not permit him to go to a place as high as Murree, conveniently forgetting that CHOU EN-LAI’s health seems to be no impediment to his flying as I doubt very much whether planes are pressurized much below 6,000 to 7,500 feet while at altitudes of well over 30,000 feet.

4. There is also official substantiation of the fact that the visit was played down. KAMALUDDIN said that CHOU EN-LAI’s visit had been planned long ago, when he was scheduled to go to Rumania in May and that it was incorrect to say that then he was to stop only for a few hours in Karachi. His programme had always been to stop at least overnight. According to such information as we have, while it is true that CHOU EN-LAI was supposed to come in May, press reports at that time merely said that he was to stop for a few hours in Karachi. Moreover officially inspired reports announcing his visit to Pindi rather than Karachi stated that the visit was “unheralded”. KAMALUDDIN further said that there was nothing unusually significant about the visit: CHOU EN-LAI had embarked on a long flight and found it convenient to stop on the way. He naturally chose friendly countries; on the way out he stopped in Afghanistan and on the way back in Pakistan. CHOU EN-LAI had himself said that visit was unofficial and that was why there had been no communiqué.

5. Among diplomats the interesting comments or ideas were from the Soviet Ambassador and the Acting High Commissioner for Canada. The Soviet Ambassador felt that AYUB had benefited most from the visit: he said that acclaim with which BHUTTO was received in Lahore and Karachi and other places after his demission from Office had shown that he and his policy represented substantial element in the country which AYUB had to placate; CHOU EN-LAI’s visit was excellent opportunity to do this. He had nothing to lose by reiterating assurance of friendship with China, as he already had a firm promise of American assistance. Canadian, Acting High Commissioner propounded intriguing theory that timing of BHUTTO’s departure was tied up with CHOU EN-LAI’s visit. He said that BHUTTO’s exit had been decided quite some time ago. However, in anticipation of popular reaction it was considered... advisable to announce this when some suitable occasion arose to demonstrate that BHUTTO’s policies were not being abandoned. CHOU EN-LAI’s visit had originally been fixed for May when he was scheduled to go to Rumania, but for various reasons CHOU EN-LAI had to postpone this. Therefore, BHUTTO’s departure was delayed. Clearly there could be no better occasion to demonstrate that there was no change in Pakistan’s foreign policy, particularly of its main plank of friendship with China, than visit of Chinese Prime Minister. CARGO was non-committal. He said it was impossible to find out what had actually happened and refused to be drawn when I asked whether he attached any significance to GHULAM FARUQUE’s presence during talks as he was both Defense Adviser and Commerce Minister. CARGO confined himself to saying that the welcome was the usual official one reserved for all visiting dignitaries and that official spokesman had given the shortest press briefing known in Pindi, lasting only six minutes. (This is, of course, true.).

6. While it is clear that Pakistan public has to some extent been reassured about continuity of policy of friendship with China and Americans have not been alarmed, one can only speculate as to what else happened during or as result of visit. Undoubtedly the opportunity must have been taken to reassure the Chinese that BHUTTO’s departure would have no effect on Sino-Pakistan relations. However, CHOU EN-LAI probably had to accept the fact that Pakistan was compelled to improve its relations with the United States and the U.S.S.R. both of whom are in a better position to give economic aid and, perhaps sell or give military hardware, than the Chinese. The fact that GHULAM FARUQUE was present throughout the talks would suggest that both military and economic aid were discussed. The official spokesman implied that discussions on economic affairs were largely devoted to existing arrangements although further co-operation was also considered. In the press only the Huriyat has come out with a story that the Chinese promised increased military and economic assistance. If this is a fact, one would have thought that some official reference might have been made to it in order to further emphasise the continuity of Sino-Pakistan cooperation if not collaboration. On the other hand on the eve of the Consortium meeting and in the expectation of some tangible results of NUR KHAN’s visit to the U.S.S.R., it might have been considered wiser to remain quiet for the time being.

7. Editorial comments, apart from stressing Sino-Pak friendship and continuity of Pakistan’s foreign policy emphasized that Sino-Pakistan friendship was no danger to anyone not even to India which was merely playing up the Chinese bogey to obtain foreign assistance. It has also been pointed out that although in the ideological sphere there may be differences with the Chinese hard political realities necessitate closest relations with China and both Washington and Moscow must understand this. The veteran journalist SULERI writing in the Morning News has warned that Sino-Pakistan friendship cannot be taken for granted and every effort must be made to nurture and safeguard it. These relations might be altered if there were to be an accommodation between India and China. Underlying press comments and editorials there is a lurking fear of U.S. pressure and perhaps even Soviet influence being directed against close Sino-Pakistan ties, as the man in the street in Pakistan, since September, feels that China is its firmest foreign friend. He also missed the fanfare and publicity normally accorded to an eminent Chinese leader.

0485. Informal Note handed over by the Indian High Commissioner in Pakistan to the Foreign Secretary of the Pakistan Ministry of Foreign Affairs proposing a meeting of the Officials of India and Pakistan.

Islamabad, July 6, 1966.

“The Government of India would welcome a meeting with Pakistan in accordance with the Tashkent Declaration. Such a meeting should be held without pre-conditions, each side being free to raise any issues arising from the Declaration, and to seek as wide an area of agreement as possible. To ensure that a meeting is fruitful, the Government of India feel that there should be a meeting at official level, which will prepare the ground for a subsequent ministerial meeting. The Government of India would be happy to receive a delegation of Pakistani officials in New Delhi on any date that may be convenient.”

1. AYUB in his first of the month broadcast was concerned to meet various criticisms to which he and his Government have subjected: It is clear that popular reaction to BHUTTO’s departure as well as events in East Pakistan have caused him greatest anxiety. As regards Indo-Pakistan relations he has repeated stand taken by official spokesman few days ago that without progress on Kashmir no purpose is served by meetings.

2. AYUB began by emphasising that new taxes were necessitate by requirements of national defence. People demanded adequate defence arrangements; hence expenditure on this had been increased. Such expenditure could not be borne without sustained economic development and this had been provided for.

3. He then thanked the countries giving aid to Pakistan and hoped forthcoming Consortium meeting would meet Pakistan’s needs. He said there was misunderstanding that foreign aid was at the cost of national honour and prestige. He denied that this was so. All loans were repayable and would be repaid. National prestige was not something that could be bartered away and those who suggest that aid had been taken at expense of national honour were country’s enemies. He then referred to new phase in economic development where heavy industry would be set up and referred to recent agreement with China in this regard.

4. Following are excerpts on foreign affairs and Indo-Pak relations from AYUB’s broadcast:

   “This agreement is a manifestation, too, of our friendly ties with China. Only a couple of days back the Chinese Premier, Mr. CHOU EN LAI paid us a two-day visit while on his way back from Rumania. Our people accorded him a warm welcome.

   My talks with the Chinese Premier have been fruitful in every respect. We had discussions on world situation and matters of mutual interest. The meeting, as usual, was held in an atmosphere of friendship and cordiality. I have often said that our relations with China do not spring from temporary dictates, but are based on mutual cooperation and desire for peace. This basis of our friendship will always endure.

We are developing our contacts with Russia also. An economic mission is being sent to Russia for talks on projects in which Russian Government has evinced interest.

We have friendly and brotherly relations with Indonesia and I hope these relations will continue to grow.

I regret to say that in spite of our best efforts there has been no change in India’s attitude. Lately some Indian leaders have made statements which do not reflect any restraint or spirit of understanding. At the same time, it is being said that there should be another meeting between India and Pakistan at official or ministerial level.

I would like to ask: If Indian attitude remains the same as is reflected by the statements of their leaders, what purpose would such a meeting serve? A meeting must be purposeful. It is not a formality that must be performed.

If India shows any willingness to find an honourable and equitable solution of our disputes we shall have no objection to hold a meeting. But if the object is to ignore for the time being real and basic cause of conflict and to settle minor things, such a meeting would neither benefit India nor Pakistan.

With a view to establishing peace and stability in this region it is imperative that both the parties should strive to find out a solution of the Jammu and Kashmir dispute. So long as purposeful effort is not made to settle this issue such a meeting will neither have any meaning nor will there be normalisation of the situation”.

5. AYUB then proceeded to reiterate that foreign policy did not change with personalities and those who were swayed by sentiments in such matters were not doing the country any service. These references to BHUTTO’s departure and to the popular reactions are extremely significant in emphasizing the extent of this latter as well as the weight attached to it. Following are the relevant paragraphs:

“I have stated all this to explain to you our foreign policy again. People forget that national interests do not undergo any change with the entry or exit of a person. Whenever there is a change in the Governmental set up some people hasten to spread all sorts of rumours. The reaction of others is so sentimental that they arrive at wrong conclusion without giving the least thought to the crux of the matter.
Just as a responsible government does not bow to foreign pressures, it cannot sacrifice national policy and interests at the altar of the sentimental crisis of a group in the country. May I assure you that whatever the Government is doing is to safeguard your interests.

You possess sterling qualities. The spirit of unity, resolution and discipline that you displayed during the 17 days of war, will live for ever. We need this sense of unity, resolve and discipline today more than ever before.

Those who stir up sentiments do not pause to think that emotionalism, kills all qualities and virtues. I, therefore, appeal to you to preserve these virtues so that you may serve your national and country.”

6. He then proceeded to castigate those supporting autonomy in East Pakistan. Following are the relevant paragraphs:

“Another coterie which is in the habit of playing with people’s sentiments had tried to stir up trouble in East Pakistan. In the name of regional autonomy they were trying to launch a programme which would have spread hatred and contempt in various parts of the country. The Government watched all this patiently. But when their activities passed all bounds, the Government had to take stern measures. Thank God, the situation is now normal in East Pakistan and people have been saved from being misled.

I need not reiterate that East and West Pakistan are one and will ever remain one. The people of both the wings have common faith, common resolve and common future. There can be no question of any separation between them.”

7. It may be noted that AYUB made no reference in broadcast to bombing of Hanoi and Haiphong which has been generally condemned by the press. KAMALUDDIN, Director General in Foreign Office dealing with China and USSR, told me that he felt the Americans had gone much too far and he did not know where this would lead to. Evidently however, a price has to be paid for U.S. aid and propitious atmosphere has to be created for the forthcoming consortium meeting. Foreign Office views have, therefore, not been voiced.
0487. Informal Note handed over by the Pakistan Foreign Secretary to the Indian High Commissioner in Pakistan.

“...The Government of Pakistan notes the Government of India’s response to the proposal made by them on 28th May for the resumption of meetings at the Ministerial level in pursuance of Tashkent Declaration. At the conclusion of meeting held in Rawalpindi in March last both countries had agreed that all disputes between them should be resolved in the interest of peace. As the Government of India are aware, the dispute on Jammu and Kashmir lies at the root of Indo-Pakistan conflict. In acknowledging the Government of India’s response to the proposal for resuming the Tashkent dialogue, therefore, the Government of Pakistan wishes to seek confirmation not only that each side will be free to raise any outstanding issues but that meaningful negotiations leading to a settlement of all disputes and differences in particular the Jammu and Kashmir dispute, will take place. The Government of Pakistan also attaches very great importance to a reduction of the armed forces of the two countries. On this understanding and subject to agreement on the level at which the second meeting should take place, the Government of Pakistan would be glad to send a delegation to New Delhi on dates which may be mutually accepted by both sides.”

0488. Note from the Ministry of External Affairs to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Pakistan regarding meeting of officials of the two countries.

New Delhi, August 6, 1966.

The High Commissioner for India in Pakistan has transmitted to the Government of India the response of the Pakistan Government to the proposals made on their behalf by the Indian High Commissioner in Pakistan on 6 July 1966.

The Government of India note that the Pakistan Government are agreeable to a meeting provided prior assurances are given with regard to certain issues which they considered important. The Government of India’s proposal for an officials’ level meeting was made in pursuance of the Tashkent Declaration which provides for meetings at different levels and does not envisage any pre-conditions or advance assurances. It goes without saying that any talk between India and Pakistan must be serious and purposeful.
The Government of India have already made clear in the proposal that each side will be free to raise any issue. The Government of Pakistan have their own views on Kashmir and other matters. So have the Government of India. The Tashkent Declaration calls for progress in various fields of Indo-Pakistan relations without progress on any matter being made a pre-condition for progress on another. It is the task of both Governments to strive sincerely for reconciling differences and for expanding the areas of agreement and to persevere in efforts towards the peaceful resolution of their differences. This objective can best be achieved by discussion without prior commitments or assurances from either side.

The Government of India sincerely hope that the Government of Pakistan will join with them in making a fresh beginning towards the development of friendly relations and mutual cooperation, to the benefit of the peoples of both countries, it was in this spirit that they had made the proposal of 6 July 1966, for an officials level meeting. The Government of India trust that the Government of Pakistan will approach the proposals in the same spirit. The Indian High Commissioner has been authorised to ascertain the Pakistan Government’s convenience as to the time of the meeting.

6 August 1966.
0489. Note from the Pakistan Government to the Indian Government regarding meeting of the Officials of the two countries for normalization of relations.

Islamabad, August 31, 1966.

The Government of Pakistan have taken note of the communication received through the Indian High Commissioner on 6 August. They regret to note that it does not offer the clarification sought by them on 26th July. The Government of India regard the question raised by Pakistan in its note of 26th July as an attempt to impose pre-conditions or seek prior assurances with regard to the Jammu and Kashmir dispute. They have put forward the consideration that the Tashkent Declaration calls for progress in various fields of Indo-Pakistan relations without progress on any matter being made a pre-condition for progress on another.

Without wishing to enter into a debate on the matter, the Government of Pakistan wish to point out that the Tashkent Declaration obviously did not visualize that either side would insist on the exclusion, explicitly or by implication, of any outstanding issue from the ambit of purposeful negotiations between the two countries, much less the Jammu and Kashmir dispute which finds mention in the very first paragraph of the Declaration, relating to the peaceful settlement of disputes.

In the communiqué issued at the conclusion of the Ministerial Conference held in Rawalpindi on 1 and 2 March 1966, both sides agreed that all disputes between Pakistan and India should be resolved to promote and strengthen peace between them. This affirmation was welcomed by the Government of Pakistan as being fully in accord with the letter and spirit of the Tashkent Declaration which was signed in order to establish peace between Pakistan and India on a firm basis and to remove the cause of conflict between them. If the Government of Pakistan are impelled to seek confirmation that the understanding reflected in the Rawalpindi communiqué of 2 March 1966 continues to represent the Indian position and that the Government of India are prepared to hold meaningful discussions in pursuit of it, it is because the statements of Indian policy on the matter and its actual application in Indian held Jammu and Kashmir, convey a contrary impression. The Government of Pakistan have been much concerned to note in particular the statement of the Prime Minister of India that Kashmir is not the basic cause of conflict between India and Pakistan, and another by India’s Home Minister that the September 1965 war between India and Pakistan had solved the Kashmir problem. The most recent pronouncements of the Indian Prime Minister and Home Minister—as reported in the Indian press—go even further in stating that Kashmir was not negotiable and that the State’s accession to India was final and irrevocable.
The Government of India appear to have foreclosed any remaining possibility of a meaningful dialogue between Pakistan and India in pursuance of the Tashkent Declaration.

While each side may have its own views on this dispute it is scarcely possible to enter into meaningful negotiations on the subject in the face of assertions that the Indian held part of the said State has becomes an integral part of India or that the settlement of the dispute is irrelevant to the establishment of peaceful and friendly relations between the two countries. The Government of Pakistan trust that the Indian Government will realise the inconsistency between assertions of this nature and their assurance that talks between them must be purposeful and serious.

The Government of Pakistan wish to take this opportunity to draw attention to the propaganda campaign unleashed against this country in India, the accusations made at the most responsible level, of alleged Sino-Pakistan collusion in the military and nuclear fields and the continual indoctrination of Indian public opinion to look upon Pakistan as a dangerous enemy in flagrant violation of the Tashkent Declaration. Activities of this nature do not conform with the Government of India’s declaration that both countries should strive sincerely for reconciling of difference and for expending the areas of agreement and persevere in efforts towards the peaceful resolution of their differences.

The Government of Pakistan have taken serious note in this connection, of the letter addressed on 18 August to the Pakistan High Commissioner by the Indian Foreign Secretary, Mr. T.N. Kaul. There is no truth whatsoever in the allegation made therein that Pakistan troops have been concentrated along the cease-fire line and the Indo-Pakistan border in a threatening manner. On the contrary, the Pakistan Government have received reports to the effect that Indian troops, both infantry and armour, have been deployed and reinforced along the Jammu - Sialkot border and the Chhamb area, in a threatening posture. Therefore, it is not Pakistan which is aggravating tension and initiating hostile propaganda.

In the verbal demarche he made to the Pakistan High Commissioner on the previous day, the Indian Foreign Secretary thought fit to hold out a threat of renewed hostilities against Pakistan, repeating in substance the statement which the Prime Minister of India made on the 4 August in the Indian Parliament. In the face of the military preparations which are going on in India, the Government of Pakistan cannot remain indifferent to these threats and are bound to take appropriate measure for the defence and security of the country.

The Government of Pakistan wish to reiterate, however, that they remain willing to enter into negotiations with India for the settlement of all outstanding dispute and differences on a just and honourable basis. To enable these negotiations to commence the Government of Pakistan seek no other assurance from the Government of India than every dispute shall be negotiated seriously and without reservations with a view to resolving it.

0490. Note of the Government of India to the Government of Pakistan regarding Official talks for normalization of relations.

New Delhi, September 10, 1966.

The Government of India have seen the communication handed over to their Acting High Commissioner by the Government of Pakistan on August 31st.
They regret to note that while these exchanges between the two Governments so far have been concerned entirely with the question of another meeting between them under the Tashkent Declaration, the Government of Pakistan, in their latest note, have gone into a variety of extraneous matters and have thought fit to make accusations against the Government of India, which are neither justified in fact nor in consonance with the spirit of the proposals made by the Government of India.

2. It was made clear in the Government of India’s notes of July 6 and August 6 that at the proposed meeting each side will be free to raise any issue. It would, as already pointed out in the note of August 6, be the task of both Governments to strive sincerely for reconciling differences and for expanding areas of agreement. The note added that in the view of the Government of India this could best to achieved by discussion without prior commitments or assurances from either side, and, furthermore, any talks between India and Pakistan must be serious and purposeful. The Government of India repeat that once the two delegations meet, it would be open to either side to raise any question, and discussions must be held with the seriousness befitting all discussions between India and Pakistan.

3. It is not understood why, when the Government of India’s position has been repeatedly set out, orally and in writing, the Government of Pakistan should persist in their demand for clarifications on points which have already been made clear. The Government of India find it difficult to avoid the conclusion that the Government of Pakistan desire to secure from them a commitment that they give up their position on Jammu and Kashmir and on other matters. The Government of India must point out that such an attitude on the part of the Government of Pakistan is hardly reasonable. It is obvious that any agreement for discussion or negotiation between Sovereign States must be without prejudice to their respective points of view. The Government of India are not asking the Government of Pakistan for any prior assurances in respect of any of the questions that might be discussed between the two countries at the proposed meeting. There is equally no reason why the Government of Pakistan should expect the Government of India to give such assurances.

4. The Government of Pakistan have made a grievance of some public statements reported to have been made by the Indian leaders, and have dwelt on these in their latest note. The Government of India regret that the latest communication of the Pakistan Government cites some Indian statements out of context. The Government of India would have liked the Government of Pakistan to take note of and appreciate the repeated statements by the leaders of the Government of India reiterating their earnest desire for the development of friendly and good neighbourly relations between India and Pakistan. For example, the Prime Minister of India at her May 20th Press Conference, in her broadcast of July 7th, in her message to the President of Pakistan while over-flying Pakistan on July 17th, on August 15th at the shrine of Khwaja Nizamuddin Aulia and on August 18th in a press interview earnestly expressed India’s desire for the improvement of relations between the two countries. Indeed, the President of India and the Prime Minister and other members of the Government of India have repeatedly affirmed the determination of India to carry out the Tashkent Declaration in letter and in spirit.

5. The Pakistan Government seem to take the view that any reiteration by India of its position on any question is an obstacle to another meeting under the Tashkent Declaration. On their part, the Government of India do not feel that any useful purpose would be severed or that it is relevant in connection with the holding of the proposed meeting to quote the numerous statements by Pakistani leaders not only reiterating the Pakistani stand on many questions, including that on Jammu and Kashmir; but doing so in a manner which is at once provocative and contrary to the spirit of the Tashkent Declaration. Among the more recent of these statements are some by the Foreign Minister of Pakistan which go so far as to assert that Kashmir belongs to Pakistan. He stated in Karachi on July 24 that the letter “K” in ‘Pakistan’ stood for Kashmir; and on July 28 that Pakistan and Kashmir were bound by unbreakable ties. On July 24th, the Pakistan Foreign Minister even threatened further conflict between the two countries, in defiance of the categorical affirmation in the Tashkent Declaration that the two Governments will resolve their differences by peaceful means. While the Government of India naturally regret such statements, they have not let these come in the way of their efforts to bring about an improvement of relations or regarding them as an obstacle to a meeting between the two Governments. By parity of reasoning, there is no reason why, when a member of the Indian Government reiterates India’s well-known position that Kashmir is an integral part of India whose sovereignty is not negotiable, the Pakistan Government should make a grievance of it.

6. Among the extraneous and contentious points now introduced by the Pakistan Government into these exchanges is the allegation that India has violated the Tashkent Declaration by unleashing a propaganda campaign against Pakistan. This allegation is baseless. On the contrary much harm has been done to the purposes of the Tashkent Declaration by vilification of India by Pakistani leaders and by the Pakistan press and Radio, to which the Government of India have repeatedly drawn attention. Unfortunately, India’s representations have had no effect. The latest in the campaign against India is the wholly unfounded propaganda unleashed by Pakistan to the effect that India was planning to be a nuclear weapons power and is to undertake a nuclear explosion. In spite of India’s denial, which has been accepted by the International Community, Pakistan persists in such false propaganda.

7. The Pakistan note of August 31st also alleges that in a conversation between the Secretary in the Ministry of External Affairs and the Pakistan High Commissioner in India, the former held out a “threat to renew hostilities against Pakistan.” There is no basis whatsoever for this gross misrepresentation of the discussion between these two officials. The Secretary in the Ministry of External Affairs did no more than point out the seriousness of the Pakistani military build up, the dangers thereof and the obligations of the Government of India to defend India’s territorial integrity against any aggression.

8. The Government of India are somewhat puzzled at the induction in the Government of Pakistan’s note of the wholly unrelated matter of the diplomatic exchanges between the two Government on the Pakistan troops movements in the vicinity of the international frontier with India. They note that two weeks after reports of Pakistan’s military preparations were brought to the attention of the Pakistan Government, the latter have made allegations of military preparation and threat from the Indian side. The Official spokesman of the Government of India has already denied these allegations. As the Pakistan Government are aware, the Government of India have, with a view to ensuring tranquillity along the border between India and Pakistan, proposed a meeting of the Chiefs of Army Staffs of the two countries. The Government of Pakistan will, it is hoped, agree that, in the spirit of the Tashkent Declaration and in accordance with the subsequent agreement between the Chief of the Indian Army Staff and the Commander-in-Chief of the Pakistan Army, reports of such movements should be discussed between them with a view to the easing of tension created by such reports.

9. It was with the object of reversing the unfortunate trends in the relations between the two countries and to give them a new direction that the Government of India had proposed the officials level meeting with Pakistan. Both Governments have solemnly subscribed to the Tashkent Declaration; both have affirmed their adherence to and their desire to implement the Declaration; both have already taken certain steps to carry out the measures envisaged in the Declaration. The Government of India have no other desire than to proceed in co-operation with the Pakistan Government to take further measures along the lines which both have set out in the Declaration.

10. The Government of India have repeatedly informed the Pakistan Government, and do so again, that they are willing to discuss all issues, with a sincere desire to find solutions for them, and without pre-conditions. The question of seeking further assurances in this regard should, therefore not arise at all.

11. The Government of India interpret paragraph 8 of the Government of Pakistan’s note as containing agreement to the proposal for a meeting in which all disputes and differences between the two countries, could be raised and discussed with a view to reaching solutions, and that such discussions or negotiations would be without prejudice to either side’s point of view. If this is a correct interpretation of the Pakistan Government’s position, the Government of India would be glad to receive a delegation of officials from Pakistan in Delhi. They have asked their Acting High Commissioner to discuss a mutually convenient date.
Aide Memoire of the Government of India to the Pakistan Government regarding baseless propaganda by Pakistan against India.

New Delhi, October 3, 1966.

Aide Memoire

The Government of India note with regret that the Government of Pakistan continue to indulge in baseless propaganda against India in contravention of the letter and spirit of the Tashkent Declaration. Renewed propaganda has been made by Pakistan about alleged intentions of the Government of India to amend the provisions of the Indian Constitution affecting purchase of properties and seeking of employment etc. in the Indian State of Jammu and Kashmir. Such propaganda has been carried out also through the Government controlled press and Radio of Pakistan. Additionally on September 5, 1966, the High Commission of Pakistan in New Delhi presented an Aide Memoirs on the subject to the Ministry of External Affairs.

The Aide Memoire refers to a private Member’s Bill to be introduced in the parliament of India. The Government of Pakistan should be aware that under the system of Parliamentary democracy prevailing in India, any Member of Parliament can introduce any Bill advocating the views of that particular Member on subjects dealt with by the Parliament of India. It should be equally clear that it is entirely and exclusively for the Parliament of India to dispose of such Bills. It goes without saying that the Government of India could not entertain advice or interference from any other government in such matters or in regard to the scope of the application of the Constitution to any part of India including Jammu and Kashmir. Similarly, the elections in the Union of India and its constituent States, or matters related thereto, are solely the concern of the Government of India and no foreign Government has locus standi in the matter. The Government of India cannot entertain interference in the internal affairs of India.

The Pakistan High Commission Aide Memoire of September 5, 1966, speaks of Jammu and Kashmir as “a territory in dispute” and of “attempt to prejudice the exercise by the people of Jammu and Kashmir of their right of self – determination”. The Government of India reject, as they have rejected in the past, the Pakistani plea of Jammu and Kashmir being “a territory in dispute”. There is absolutely no legal warrant for such a description. The correct constitutional position, namely that the State of Jammu and Kashmir is a constituent unit of the Indian Union, has been made known to the Government of Pakistan and the Security Council on numerous occasions.
The Government of India accordingly reject the Pakistan High Commission Aide Memoire of September 5, 1966*.

In conclusion the Government of India cannot but deplore the threatening language used in the Pakistan High Commission Aide Memoire sounding “a note of warning”. Warnings of this kind and the language in which these have been couched, are hardly conducive to promoting understanding and peaceful relations and are totally out of tune with the letter and spirit of the Tashkent Declaration. On their part, the Government of India, ignoring such warnings, will continue to persevere in trying to build peaceful and good neighbourly relations as also in fostering understanding and friendship with the Government and people of Pakistan in accordance with the solemn resolve undertaken by both sides at the highest level under the Tashkent Declaration.

* The Pakistan Aide Memoire had drawn attention of the GOI to the Private Member’s Bill and desired “to sound a note of warning to the GOI that any steps such as those under reference, are contrary to the spirit and letter of the Tashkent Declaration and are certainly not conducive to the establishment of peaceful and good neighbourly relations as envisaged in the Declaration.”
SECRET

Letter from the Officer on Special Duty (Kashmir) in the Ministry of External Affairs M. Rasgotra to the Heads of Mission.

New Delhi, October 6, 1966.

IMMEDIATE

M. Rasgotra,
Officer on Special Duty (Kashmir).

Ministry of External Affairs
New Delhi

My dear Ambassador/High Commissioner,

I enclose copies of minutes recorded in this Ministry on the lines of Pakistan’s recent propaganda on the question of Kashmir and the motivations behind that propaganda. The situation is not static, of course. However, indications are that sooner rather than later Pakistan may ask for a discussion of the Kashmir question in the Security Council. If so, in view of Para 4 of the Council’s resolution of September 20, the members of the Council may say it is difficult to resist the request for a meeting or meetings for the purpose.

2. As directed by the Minister of External Affairs, our point-of-view should be explained vigorously to the Foreign offices of the countries which are members of the Security Council. In your discussions, the following points should be emphasized:

i) By paragraph 4 of its resolution of September 20, the Security Council decided “to consider, as soon as operative paragraph 1 of the Council’s resolutions 210 of September 6 (cessation of hostilities and withdrawal of all armed personal back to the positions held by them before 5 August 1965) has been implemented, what steps could be taken to assist towards a settlement of the political problem underlying the present conflict, and in the meantime calls on the two Government to utilise all peaceful means, including those listed in Article 33 of the Charter, to this end.” Our view, which is well-known, is that Kashmir is not the underlying political problem. The underlying political problem is Pakistan’s unceasing animosity towards India and her desire to bring about a weakening, disruption and dismemberment of our country. We have, in the past, given assurances, and are prepared to reiterate them, that India has no designs on Pakistan and wishes nothing but progress and prosperity of the people of Pakistan. Indeed, it is Pakistan which has launched military ventures against India since partition – twice in Kashmir and once in Kutch. At the same time, we cannot entertain any claim from Pakistan on the territories of the State of Jammu and Kashmir, which forms an integral part of India. If Pakistan is to be prevented from further adventures of the kind she must be made to realise that the UN will not condone aggression.

ii) The Security Council resolution of September has been overtaken by the Tashkent Declaration whereby Pakistan and India declared their “firm resolve to restore normal and peaceful relations between their countries and to promote understanding and friendly relations between their peoples”. There are many problems between India and Pakistan which await discussion and settlement to the benefit of both countries. In pursuance of the Tashkent Declaration, we have repeatedly proposed an Indo-Pakistan meeting at the official level preparatory to a meeting at the Ministerial level. Instead of agreeing to such a meeting with a view to resolving outstanding problems, Pakistan demands assurances from us that there will be “meaningful talks on the Kashmir dispute” and asserts that no Indo-Pakistan problems can or need to be resolved unless the “Kashmir dispute” is settled to Pakistan’s satisfaction. Pakistan’s endeavour since the Tashkent Declaration has been to erode and get away from the Declaration, whilst blaming India for non-cooperation. A solution of the Kashmir question may become possible only if the general atmosphere between India and Pakistan become normal and understanding and feelings of friendship develop between the two countries. Instead, Pakistan’s continuing anti-Indian propaganda in violation of article IV of the Tashkent Declaration appears aimed at further aggravating tensions.

iii) The slogans that Pakistan raises viz. plebiscite or the Kashmiri people’s right of self-determination, are irrelevant to the Kashmir issue. You may kindly study carefully Foreign Secretary’s Savingram No. 27280 of October 29, 1965, and the note sent to you with B.L. Sharma’s letter No. P-V.104(21)/65 of November 25. Generally your position on the subject should be in the furtherance of the lines of the Savingram of October 29. It may be added that the processes of self-determination have taken place in Kashmir and the State’s accession to India was reaffirmed by a popularly elected Kashmir Constituent Assembly. Democratic system prevails in the State of Jammu and Kashmir as in the rest of India, and basic liberties and fundamental freedoms are ensured to the people of Kashmir as to other citizens of the Republic. For the reasons we have explained in the Security Council on a number of occasions, a plebiscite is now out of the question. India cannot and will not agree to the general proposition that the principle of self-determination should apply to integral parts of sovereign, independent State. That is only likely to lead to the dismemberment of many newly independent countries.

iv) Pakistani agitation in international forums is not likely to yield anything tangible or useful on Kashmir or other Indo-Pakistan issues. It would only tend to regenerate tension. If, however, the Security Council decide to resume debate, it should do so with the aim of persuading Pakistan to see the futility of conflict, to live in peace and friendship with India and to seek settlement of all differences with India bilaterally and peacefully. We have not barred a discussion of the Kashmir question with Pakistan, but it is futile for Pakistan to expect that India would move away from its basic position that Kashmir is an integral part of the Union of India. The accession of the State to India is final and irrevocable, and any discussion of the question of Kashmir, bilaterally with Pakistan or in the Security Council, would have to be in that context. In recent months Pakistan has been sending small parties of infiltrators into Kashmir in breach of the ceasefire agreement and Tashkent Declaration. Pakistani officers were found to be involved in the conspiracy to murder Chief Minister Sadiq. Recently we have captured a gang of Pakistani saboteurs. Further information concerning this gang will be sent to you shortly. Pakistan must be made to adhere to its undertaking to “observe the ceasefire terms on the cease-fire line” and maintain peaceful normalcy along the Line.

v) It is necessary that the world, more especially the members of the Security Council, should pay due regard to the considerations of the balance-of-power in and around the Indo-Pakistan sub-continent. India is being threatened by China on the one hand by Pakistan on the other. The collusion between these two countries has assumed character of a de-facto politico-military alliance directed against India. The Government of China has openly declared its support for Pakistan in any conflict with India and Pakistani authorities have acknowledged these declarations with gratitude. In recent months China has supplied large quantities of offensive weapons (aircraft and tanks etc.) to Pakistan and the flow of arms continues. Goaded by her hatred of India, Pakistan has embarked on a reckless policy of assisting the expansion of Chinese influence and power into the Indo-Pakistan sub-continent. Bhutto’s departure has made no change in this policy. For its own security and that of South-East Asia generally, India is duty-bound to resist the spread of this influence. Any suggestion or solution envisaging the weakening or withdrawal of India's presence from any part of Kashmir in the face of growing military collaboration between China and Pakistan in the area would be viewed by India with the utmost concern.

3. The foregoing is intended to serve as guidelines to counter Pakistani initiatives. You need not make a specific issue to the Kashmir question or whether or not it should be taken up by the Security Council. You should cover these points in the course of broad general survey of Indo-Pak relations with high authorities of the Foreign offices of the countries of your accreditation, and let us know of their responses.

Your sincerely,
(M. Rasgotra)

All Heads of Mission abroad.

Note recorded by OSD (K) on the possible Pakistani moves to take the issue of J & K to the Security Council and submitted to the Foreign Secretary.

Ministry of External Affairs

Motives behind mounting Pak Propaganda and Demarches in recent days. In recent days Pakistani propaganda, statements and diplomatic notes (to us), especially those having a bearing on Kashmir, appear to have assumed increasingly truculent and assertive tone. For instance Pakistan lodged a protest concerning the conspiracy trial in which some Pakistani officials were implicated. We rejected Pakistan's note, which cast aspersions on judicial proceedings, as baseless and malicious characterizing it as interference in the internal affairs of India in disregard of the Tashkent Declaration. In a reply which came two days ago, Pakistan Government states:

"The reference (to the Tashkent Declaration) is wholly irrelevant in the context of the present case, the territory in question being one in dispute between the two countries, and the final disposition of which is the subject of a solemn agreement between the two countries reached under the auspices of the UN."
The note adds:

“The Government of Pakistan wish to state that they consider the reply as totally unsatisfactory and the tone and language in which it has been couched as unacceptable”.

2. Some days ago, the Pakistan Times wrote an editorial about the introduction of a Private Member’s Bill for the removal of Article 35A from the Indian Constitution. This article prohibits the settlement and employment etc. of non-residents in the State of Jammu and Kashmir. The editorial was couched in vicious language and described the introduction of a Private Member’s Bill as a conspiracy to integrate the State and upset the status quo. We instructed our High Commission to explain to Pakistan Government that while we cannot deny to any Member of Parliament the privilege to introduce a bill reflecting his particular point-of-view, Government had in the past apposed a similar bill. Our High Commission explained the position to the Pakistan Foreign Office an August 30, drawing their attention to the inappropriateness of Foreign Minister Pirzada’s statement on the subject and to the falsity of subsequent Press propaganda in Pakistan. Nevertheless, the Pakistan High Commission here has, today, handed over an aide memoire which in part reads:

“The Government of Pakistan are constrained to sound a note of warning to the Government of India that any steps such as those under reference, are contrary to the spirit and letter of the Tashkent Declaration and are certainly not conducive to the establishment of peaceful and good neighbouring relations as envisaged in the Declaration.”

This note also refers to:

“….the express injunction contained in the Security Council Resolutions of 30th March 1951 and 24th July 1957 against any attempt to prejudice the exercise by the people right of self-determination.”

3. Simultaneously, with these diplomatic moves the vernacular Press in the Pakistan has been whipping up war hysteria in the country. Last week, the JANG headlines ran:

“THE DANGER OF RENEWED WAR BETWEEN INDIA AND PAKISTAN.”

Another popular Urdu daily, ANJAM, carried the following headlines:

“PAKISTAN WILL NOT REMAIN NEGLIGENT TO HER DEFENSE.”
“PAKISTAN CANNOT REMAIN SILENT SPECTATOR TO INDIA’S PROVOCATION.”

The HURIYAT Captioned:
“INFANTRY AND ARMOURED CORPS OF INDIA ADVANCE TO PROVOCATIVE STAGE.”

“PAKISTAN WILL NOT DESIST FORM COUNTER-ACTION” etc.

4. Obviously, this incitement to war is not without purpose; possibly the purpose might be to rouse sufficient frenzy for the celebration of the Defense-of-Pakistan-Day on September 6. It is significant that for several days the Government of Pakistan denied any intention or plan for the celebration of this day. Later, when an official announcement was made, the reason put-forth by Pakistan officials in discussion with our officers was that “public opinion was not prepared to be denied celebration on this day”. Pakistan officials also told our High Commission that while it was not Government’s intention that there should be any provocative action, they could not, of course, be responsible for every individual who might take into his head to do something stupid.

5. In the light of the foregoing, the possibility of “incidents”, especially in P.O.K., along the cease-fire line cannot to ruled out altogether. While we should take note of these developments, and our authorities should be given due warning, I do not personally think that Pakistan is yet ready, or will be inclined to risk a major military adventure. All this is, perhaps, more in the nature of preparation for revival of agitation over Kashmir in the Security Council, and possibly also in the General Assembly (in the course of the general debate). A Pakistani spokesman said on September 1 in Pindi that he saw no immediate chance of another Tashkent Summit under Soviet auspices and that Pakistan had decided to take issue back to the Security Council at an appropriate time.

6. The time that will perhaps best suit Pakistan aims will be the weeks immediately before the elections in India. The debates in the Security Council in 1957 and 1962 at Pakistan’s instance were held in January and February. On the other hand Pakistan may find it difficult to resist the temptation of a Security Council debate coincidently with the General Assembly session. General Assembly does offer attractive propaganda and publicity opportunities.

Note by F.S.
The above note may be seen. Since it was written, there is, superficially, some slight reduction in tensions, and alarums and incursions, F.M. is to meet Pirazada (Pakistani foreign minister) this evening at dinner in London and will have had the opportunity of assessing Pakistan intentions. Generally speaking, it will be correct to assume that even if there is some temporary diminution of Pakistan's belligerence, there is no change in their long-term plans and motivations. These seem to be –

(i) To prepare militarily for the 'inevitable' conflict for the 'liberation' of Kashmir, since there is not the slightest possibility of India changing its stand on Kashmir.

(ii) To work progressively towards making the Tashkent Declaration a dead letter; by their actions, statements and military preparations, Pakistan has as good as buried the Tashkent Declaration, but still pays lip service to it for political reasons, mainly the desire not to alienate the Soviet Union. Nothing would suit Pakistan better than to recreate a situation of acute tension between India and Pakistan along the international frontier and the ceasefire line so as to find a good ground for agitation of the Kashmir question in the Security Council. At present it is believed that most members of the Security Council, when approached, tell Pakistan that the Tashkent Declaration provides a new direction for the settlement of Indo-Pakistan disputes and that efforts should be made to find solutions in terms of that Declaration. However, if a situation of acute tension arises along our borders, international opinion would regard the Tashkent Declaration as having failed and may be prepared for a discussion of the Kashmir question at the United Nations.

2. If the assessment in the preceding paragraph is correct, then Pakistan is unlikely to agree to the meeting proposed by us as that would mean reactivation of the Tashkent Declaration, which in turn would make international involvement in the Kashmir question through the Security Council or the General Assembly more remote. It is also possible – though in my views unlikely – that she may feel that by agreeing to a meeting and by demonstrating failure at the meeting, she would have a better ground for invoking that Security Council or/and the General Assembly.

3. It is true, as pointed out by OSD(K), that both in 1957 and 1962 Pakistan took the Kashmir question to the Security Council just before the General Elections in India. She may be tempted to choose similar strategy again this time. On this reckoning, Pakistan is likely to bring up the Kashmir question again before the Security Council, either during the currency of the General Assembly or soon after the General Assembly in January, 1967. I myself think that the former is more likely. In 1967, her request for a Security Council meeting was made on December 1. Agitation of the Kashmir question in the Security Council gives Pakistan much better publicity during the General Assembly session.

4. Before doing so, however, Pakistan is likely to sound opinion at the current session of the General Assembly, which she is bound to utilise actively for anti-Indian propaganda.

0494. Pakistan Radio Broadcast regarding Official level meeting.
Rawalpindi, September 23, 1966.

Pakistan has told India that no useful purpose will be served by continuing exchanges on holding an Indo-Pakistan meeting at the Official level, without a change of heart on the part of India towards the Kashmir dispute. Officials sources said in Rawalpindi yesterday (September 22) that the Indian High Commissioner was summoned to the Foreign Office and given a verbal reply to the Indian note of the 12th of this month suggesting an official-level meeting.

The sources said, Pakistan made it clear that unless the Kashmir problem was solved and the people of Jammu and Kashmir given their rights of self-determination, the relations between the two countries can hardly be on an even keel. The main purpose of the Tashkent Declaration was to secure a lasting peace between the two countries, and this objective cannot be achieved unless the Kashmir dispute is settled. India was told that the arguments advanced in her recent communication were self-contradictory. On the one hand, India expressed her willingness to discuss all disputes at the official level meeting but on the other, she persists in her untenable stand that Kashmir is an integral part of India. This obviously amounts to closing the door on negotiations, because Kashmir is the basic cause of conflict between the two countries and has led to two wars in the past.

The source further said that India has added yet another element to the existing situation namely the continued arrest of political workers in ‘occupied Kashmir’. All this is contrary to what she says in her communication. The latest communication shows that the Indians have not changed their approach to the basic cause of the conflict. Their reiteration that India’s self – proclaimed sovereignty over Jammu and Kashmir is not negotiable, that the state is an integral part of India, will make negotiations between the two countries merely an exercise in futility. Pakistan has repeatedly pointed out statements of this nature, and even more the actions which the Indian Government has been taking to complete the annexation of the ‘occupied’ territory were bound to cause deterioration in relations between the two countries. If the Indian Government persists in this course of action, it will frustrate the achievements of the Tashkent Declaration which was to establish an abiding peace between India and Pakistan.

The Indian High Commissioner was told, however, the Pakistan will continue to make sincere efforts to establish friendly relations between the two countries on a permanent basis. The Pakistan Government is ready to enter into negotiations for the settlement of all disputes and differences as soon as it receives some indication that India realizes the importance of living in peace with Pakistan.

CONFIDENTIAL
Note of the Government of India to the Government of Pakistan regarding holding of Official Talks.

Rawalpindi, September 28, 1966.

The Government of India regret to note from the communication made orally by the Acting Foreign Secretary of Pakistan to the Indian High Commissioner on September 22, in answer to Government of India's note of September 10, that the Government of Pakistan are not agreeable to holding an officials meeting with India under the Tashkent Declaration. The Government of India are unable to appreciate the view of the Government of Pakistan that in proposing discussions without pre-conditions India has imposed limitations unacceptable to Pakistan and that no meeting would serve any useful purpose without prior assurance that India would give up her position on Kashmir. This means in effect that while Pakistan may enter into discussions adhering to her position, India cannot do so. Such an attitude can only amount to closing the door to any efforts for improving Indo-Pakistan relations through mutual discussions.

The Government of India have repeatedly informed the Government of Pakistan that they desire to co-operate fully with Pakistan to implement the Tashkent Declaration. It is to this end that they proposed a meeting at which all issues raised by either side could be discussed, with the seriousness necessary to find solutions for them. They are unable to understand why the Government of Pakistan should persist in ignoring these categorical affirmations and should instead insist on India giving further assurances and prior commitments in regard to particular questions. No discussions to resolve differences between sovereign States are possible if one side requires the other to enter into negotiations with prejudice to its own position.

The Government of India are willing, as they have already made clear, to discuss any issue without any preconditions in order to make as much progress as possible, in as many fields as possible, for improving relations between the two countries. They are ready to hold a meeting with Pakistan with a view to thus implementing the Tashkent Declaration when the Government of Pakistan find it possible to do so.
0496. Note Verbale from the Ministry of External Affairs to the High Commission of Pakistan in India regarding appointment of M. C. Chagla as the Foreign Minister of India.

New Delhi, November 24, 1966.

No. P(PIV)307(1)/66. New Delhi, the 24th Nov.1966

The Ministry of External Affairs presents its compliments to the High Commission of Pakistan in India and has the honour to invite attention to the press reports of remarks by H.E. President Ayub Khan in answer to questions after his speech at the Royal Institute of International Affairs, London, on November 18, 1966. Giving his reaction to a question on the appointment of Mr. M.C.Chagla as Foreign Minister of India. H.E. the President is reported to have expressed views to the effect that:

It does not look as though they are looking for an opportunity to make up with us. Knowing the man, I am not hopeful. What is needed is a powerful political personality with firm views about a settlement and able to give effect to them. A Foreign Minister representing a minority is not in that position.

2. The Ministry is constrained to point out that these widely reported remarks coming from the Head of a State besides their questionable taste are quite impermissible. They could hardly be calculated to improve relations between the two countries. Such remarks not only constitute interference in the internal affairs of India but also amount to an attack on the very principles on which the Republic of India is based. All citizens of India are Indian nationals with equal rights in every respect and they have always exercised their rights fully.

3. The President of Pakistan is also reported to have spoken in highly disparaging manner about Hinduism which is professed by millions of people in India and abroad including Pakistan. Giving reasons for his conclusions, President Ayub Khan is reported to have expressed sentiments to the effect that:

We are Muslims, believers in equality. We are colorblind, have no racial prejudices. India and Hinduism are based on inequality and on colour and race. Their basic concept is the caste system....We could live side by side but not together............

The Ministry deeply deplores that the Head of State of Pakistan should choose to speak in this slanderous manner of a religion which count hundreds of millions among its followers, in India, Pakistan and other countries, thereby hurting their feelings.
4. While pointing out the impropriety of such remarks about one of the great religious faiths of the world, the Ministry expresses its deep concern over the President's affirmation that Hindus and Muslims can never live together considering that Pakistan has a very significant Hindu minority. These remarks imply that there is no place and no future in Pakistan for its 9 million Hindus and evidently it is this mentality which has been responsible for forcing million of Pakistan nationals, not professing a particular faith, to leave their hearths and homes in Pakistan. The reported remarks of the President of Pakistan are also in total violation of the Nehru-Liaquat pact and the Tashkent Declaration and the Ministry strongly protests against them.

The Ministry of External Affairs avails itself of this opportunity to renew to the High Commission of Pakistan in India the assurances of its highest consideration.

0497. SECRET
Letter from the Ministry of External Affairs to the Heads of Mission regarding the speech of President Ayub Khan.
New Delhi, December 3, 1966.

Government of India
Ministry of External Affairs
New Delhi

No (PIV) 307(1)/66. 3rd December, 1966.

My dear Ambassador/High Commission,

During the past five weeks President Ayub has, on a few occasions, publicly made disparaging statements about India accompanied by brief remarks to the effect that lack of reciprocation and absence of Indian desire for friendship is coming in the way of improving Indo-Pak. Relations. He repeated these latter assertions during his recent visits to Jordan and the U.K. in November. President Ayub presumably goes by the general publicity premise that sympathetic audiences accept the affirmations of high placed speakers without further verification.
2. The replies to the usual questions about Indo-Pak relations which were put to President Ayub at the end of his Chatham House address in London on November 18, 1966, reveal in true light, however, the attitude of the Pakistan Head of State towards India. These questions and answers were widely reported and the verbatim record thereof has been Morse cast to our Mission in the I.S.I. evening transmission of 25th November, 1966. The comments there on in the Manchester Guardian on 21st November 1966 have been Morse cast. Forwarded herewith is a copy of the pretest which we were constrained to make to the Pakistan High Commission here on November 24, 1966*, against this virulent and deplorable outburst of President Ayub at London.

(President Ayub’s remarks given in this protest are in summary form and not the verbatim text).

3. You might use the above mentioned material in continuation of our Circular No.983-Dir (PAK-S)/66, dated 10th August, 1966, about development since the Tashkent Declaration, to expose Pakistan’s real attitude towards promoting friendly relations with India.

Yours sincerely,

(A.K.DAR)

0498. Note Verbale of the Ministry of External Affairs handed over to the Pakistan High Commission in India regarding disposal of enemy property.

New Delhi, December 28, 1966.

The Ministry of External Affairs, Government of India, Presents its compliments to the High Commission for Pakistan in India and has the honour to state that according to report carried by Pakistan observer of December 25 and confirmed in Reuter message dated Dacca, the 27th December 1966, 190 Indian inland water transport Vessels and other river craft illegally seized in East Pakistan by the local authorities during September/October, 1965 are to be given away to some local shipping companies at nominal prices.

The Ministry strongly protests against this proposed move of the Pakistan authorities to dispose away Indian property, seized at the time of the September 1965 conflict, in such unconscionable manner. There have been reports that Pakistan has also consumed or otherwise disposed of other Indian properties seized illegally in Pakistan. The Ministry believes that all the Indian assets and properties in Pakistan are in the nature of continuing trust and any attempt on the part of Pakistan authorities to dispose them unilaterally would not only be flagrant violation of the Tashkent Declaration which Inter alia envisages the return of all properties and assets taken over by either side in connection with the late conflict, but would also be against all norms of civilized international law and practice.

The Government of India accordingly urge most strongly that the Government of Pakistan take immediate measures to prevent the reported move of the East Pakistan authorities to dispose of the Indian vessels and further to ensure necessary action to bring about, on reciprocal basis, the restoration in their entirety of all Indian assets and properties seized by Pakistan as repeatedly proposed by India and called for under the Tashkent declaration, In the interim, the Government of India reserves all rights in respects of these Indian properties seized illegally by Pakistan.

The Ministry of External Affairs avails itself of this opportunity to renew to the High Commission for Pakistan the assurances of its highest consideration.

0499. Note Verbale from the Pakistan High Commission in India to the Ministry of External Affairs regarding the statement made by President Ayub Khan in London.

New Delhi, January 19, 1967.

Pakistan High Commission
New Delhi

No.1(1)-CSVI/66-II. January 19, 1967

The High Commission for Pakistan presents its compliments to the Ministry of External Affairs and has the honour to refer to the Ministry's Note. No.P(PIV)-307(1)/66, dated 24th November, 1966, concerning some statements made by the President of Pakistan in London. The Government of Pakistan reject the note as baseless and couched in unacceptable language.

2. The two statements cited in the note have not only been quoted inaccurately, but torn out of context and give an entirely unwarranted interpretation. It is difficult to avoid the conclusion, in view specially of the campaign simultaneously unleashed in Indian publicity media, that the sole purpose of the Government of India's demarche was to make propaganda capital against this country.

3. The historical, political and social factors which led to the creation of Pakistan are well-known. The President’s reference to this historical background in reply to a question on the subject, in no way justifies the conclusion that there is no place in Pakistan for its Hindu citizens. In trying to stir up a storm over this matter the Government of India wish perhaps to divert attention from the contrast with conditions prevailing in India where various religious and cultural minorities continue to suffer harassment and discrimination.

4. The fact of the matter is that all communities in Pakistan are living in complete peace and harmony. It is difficult to understand on what grounds the Government of India arrogates to itself the guardianship of the interests of the Hindu citizens of Pakistan. The assurance reported to have been given by Mr. Chagla in the Lok Sabha on the 1st December to the effect that Government of India would see to it that nothing happens to the lives and property of Hindus in Pakistan, not only makes an unfounded insinuation but constitutes a gross interference in the domestic affairs of Pakistan. Equally improper was Mr. Chagla's reported description of the political system of Pakistan as an “artificial and fake form of democracy”.

5. The President's observations concerning the present Foreign Minister of India were made in reply to a question from a journalist and were confined to
The implications of his appointment with regard to relations between Pakistan and India. They cannot, in any way, be considered to represent an interference in India’s internal affairs.

The High Commission avails itself of this opportunity to renew to the Ministry the assurance of its highest consideration.

The Ministry of External Affairs,
Government of India,
New Delhi.

0500.  Note Verbale from the Pakistan High Commission in India to the Ministry of External Affairs regarding the statement of President Ayub Khan about the Muslims in India.

New Delhi, January 31, 1967.

No.1(1)-CSVI/66-II.  January 31, 1967

The High Commission for Pakistan presents its compliments to the Ministry of External Affairs and with reference to their Note No. P (PIV) 307 (I)/66, dated November 24, 1966 has the honour to say that the remarks of the President of Pakistan referred not to the constitutional and legal rights of Muslims in India but to the actual conditions prevailing there.

2. Reports published in the Indian press itself and statements made by responsible Indian personalities show that the minority communities and more particularly, the Muslims of India, continue to suffer disabilities and hardships. Communal riots have become a recurring feature in India; as recently as November last, serious rioting took place against the Muslim community in Calcutta and Udaipur causing considerable loss of life and property to them.

3. On the other hand the minorities in Pakistan enjoy complete freedom and security of life and property. Communal harmony continues to prevail throughout Pakistan and there is no basis for the Ministry’s assertion that the minority communities in Pakistan are the subject of communal propaganda or are suffering from a sense of insecurity.

The High Commission avails itself of this opportunity to renew to the Ministry the assurances of its highest consideration.
Letter from the Ministry of External Affairs to the Indian Heads of Mission abroad regarding the progress of normalization of relations with Pakistan.

New Delhi, February 8, 1967.

No. PI/103/5/67 8th February, 1967

Dear Head of Mission,

Our Circular letter No.PI/103/27/66 of 25/11/66 explained to you the limited progress made in the implementation of the Tashkent Declaration and drew your attention to the negative attitude of Pakistan which alone stood in the way of further progress. It is clear now – a year after the Tashkent Declaration – that in signing it, Pakistan’s immediate interest was to secure the withdrawal of the Indian forces, the repatriation of Pakistani prisoners of war, the resumption of over-flights to and from East Pakistan and the restoration of full diplomatic relations. Since securing these principal gains, Pakistan has been tardy in taking any additional major steps towards complete normalisation of relations.

2. However, there has been some minor progress of a very limited nature, such as the partial restoration of postal and telegraph services, the re-opening of two out of 51 check-posts, restricted visa facilities, the exchange of two Indian steamers for two Pakistani steamers, etc. Evidently these were the minimal measures that Pakistan was prepared to take in order to create the impression abroad that further steps should be made dependent on progress in regard to Kashmir, lest the Kashmir question should be ignored by default.

3. This is an erroneous impression, because in many vital respects normalisation has not even begun to take place. There still remain wide areas in which progress can be made. We had categorized these areas for purposes of practical discussion with Pakistan and proposed a continuous dialogue with Pakistan on these matters, but unfortunately Pakistan has evinced so far no marked enthusiasm. For example, our offer to re-open trade has been ignored, river transit facilities to and from Assam have been denied, seized properties have not been exchanged etc. However, only recently Pakistan indicated its willingness to discuss at the technical level the resumption of civil flights and the full restoration of tele-communications, and details are now being arranged through diplomatic channels. It would seem that Pakistan is disposed to discuss only those issues that are clearly in her own interests but not matters which are in our interests.

4. This selective approach to normalisation of relations and the insistence on a Kashmir settlement as a pre-condition have combined to kill the Tashkent spirit in Pakistan, where the Tashkent Declaration is regarded virtually as a dead letter. Indeed Article IV of the Declaration is now honoured more in its breach in Pakistan than its observance, and we have been obliged to lodge several protests against the resumption of anti-Indian propaganda in the Pakistan press. In these circumstances, further steps towards normalisation will become more difficult and dilatory, and the Kashmir question will bring to the fore more often. Pakistan evidently does not share our view that restoration of normal relations could usefully precede discussions on the Kashmir problem. On the contrary, Pakistan seeks to give the impression that it has gone as far as it can to implement the Tashkent Declaration and that it cannot go further for fear of jeopardising its position on Kashmir, unless we first agree to make progress on Kashmir!

5. This self-righteous position is suavely put across with sweet reasonableness by President Ayub Khan with a good deal of earnestness, which apparently carries conviction with some foreigners. His frequent reiteration of Pakistan’s desire for friendly relations with India has a mesmeric impact on foreign leaders, who need to be reminded that ironically enough it was during his regime that Pakistan attacked India twice in 1965 in Kutch and Kashmir. Also the real Ayub Khan comes through occasionally when he is off his guard, as he was during his recent Chatham House when he displayed the same venom and bigotry that characterizes the fanatics in Pakistan. This schizophrenic Pakistani attitude of hating all that India stands for and yet having to co-exist with it creates problems that puzzle and challenge and at the same time appear to be within reach of practical solutions.

6. Another line of propagandas indulged in by President Ayub Khan is that of the injured innocent who pleads before foreigners (a) that India has not accepted Pakistan as a full-fledged sovereign country, (b) that India does not recognise that Kashmir is disputed territory, (c) that India is a big country with vast resources, (d) that India can afford to be generous to Pakistan, (e) that India is over-arming herself at a rate which compels Pakistan to divert more of her resources to defence expenditure with adverse economic consequences to both etc. This is the image of India that Pakistani spokesmen ceaselessly project abroad and at home, which we must vigorously counter.
7. There can be no doubt about our respect for Pakistan's sovereignty, and our legal and constitutional position in Kashmir is beyond question. At the same time in the exercise of our sovereignty over Kashmir we have been prepared to negotiate a settlement, but it is unrealistic (and irrelevant) to expect us to agree that Pakistan has a legal claim to Kashmir. India does not have unlimited resources and its problems are of greater complexity and larger magnitude in relations to Pakistan's. Generosity of spirit there is in abundance in India but there are severe limitations to practical gestures of generosity to Pakistan. Similar gestures in the past seem only to have whetted Pakistan's appetite for more of the same. On the contrary, we are called upon to cope with consequences of the influx of thousands of refugees from East Pakistan – an ever-present problem which imposes the gravest stresses and strains on our resources and equilibrium. Pakistan's past performances and present policies towards her minorities do not inspire much confidence in her generosity.

8. As regards the "arms race" that President Ayub Khan talks about, it is Pakistan that is probably trying to keep pace with us, and so far as we are concerned there can be no question of a race with Pakistan. Our defence requirements must inevitably take into account the fact that we have not only Pakistan to contend with but the very much bigger menace from China. We are not "over-arming" ourselves – on the contrary we are rectifying the defects and deficiencies in our defence which in the past had led two of our neighbours to attack us. Our policy is to improve our defence mechanism so as to deter a potential enemy from committing aggression against us with impunity. At the same time we are naturally anxious to reduce our military expenditure, but it will be suicidal to do so until the relations with our neighbours are normalized and conditions for peaceful co-existence are re-established.

9. While these general criticisms of India have to be met in one way or another it is in regard to Kashmir that we must be particularly careful to counter Pakistan's propaganda, for Kashmir is Pakistan's major political objective. Pakistan has been propagating the line that India is holding Kashmir against the wishes of its people, who consequently have become restive and a liability for India, that India's lost international prestige can be retrieved only through accepting an "honourable" settlement, that Pakistan is ready to hold "meaningful and purposeful" discussions with India, that justice can be done to the people of Kashmir only by keeping the solemn pledge made to them i.e through a plebiscite, that once the problem is settled in this manner there would follow an era of peace and plenty in the subcontinent etc. These facile arguments are the more difficult to counter because of their seeming plausibility, but even so we must do everything we can to put across our point of view.

10. What Pakistan means by the above line of propaganda is that it is not prepared to vacate its aggression in Kashmir, or even accept the present cease-fire line as a basis for a final settlement. The “meaningful” discussions it has in mind relate either to the holding of a plebiscites, or to the acquisition of more territory through negotiations. Evidently Pakistan’s interest is more in the latter than in the spiritual or social welfare of the people of Kashmir. Our position on Kashmir continues to be the same and there is no reason for any change. We have already lost to Pakistan and China almost half the territory of Kashmir that legally is a part of India, and there can be no question of giving up to the aggressor through negotiations what ha has failed to gain through the use of force. A plebscite at this late period is as irrelevant as the churching of legal marriage after 20 years! The UN Resolution had laid down certain pre-conditions to a plebiscite, and if a plebiscite was not held then, it was certainly due to Pakistan’s failure to fulfill those conditions.

11. Why Pakistan cannot allow the present status quo in Kashmir to continue in the larger interests of peace is a question that needs to be posed frequently? It may be that having whipped up so much frenzy and fanaticism over this issue and virtually created a Frankenstein; it has become such a powerful force in internal politics that is not easy for the Government to control it; also Pakistan apparently finds it difficult to stomach the existence of a Muslim-majority state as a part of secular India. Nevertheless Pakistan’s failure to respect the status quo in Kashmir is bound to raise doubts and suspicions in the mind of the Indian people as to Pakistan's long-term aims and ambitions. Such suspicions are not allayed by Pakistan’s propaganda and support for the NAGA & MIZO rebels and Tara Singh’s secessionist views. Thus if Kashmir has come to be the thin end of the wedge for us, it should not surprise anyone, least of all Pakistan. Peace therefore depends on maintaining the status quo in Kashmir and basing on it ground rules for peaceful co-existence between the two countries. But the first step is the progressive de-escalation of the Kashmir problem inside Pakistan, and a beginning in this direction can be made by the Government of Pakistan only if all friends of Pakistan and India were to advise her to do so with all seriousness and candour. The Tashkent Declaration provides the necessary framework for this process.

12. You are doubtless keeping a weather eye open for local Pakistan moves and will acquaint the Foreign Office of the country of your accreditation with our views as and when necessary. It is hoped that this letter will be of some interest and use to you in projecting our points of view.

Your sincerely
(R. Jaipal)

All Heads of Mission.
0502. Letter from the Indian Foreign Minister M. C. Chagla to the Foreign Minister of Pakistan Syed Sharifuddin Pirzada regarding the speech of President Ayub Khan.

New Delhi, February 27, 1967.

We have seen the text of His Excellency President Ayub Khan’s speech at the Pakistan Institute for International Affairs on 28 January in which the President, if I may respectfully say so, spoke eloquently on the need for diverting to the task of increasing the production of food and the necessities of life, the resources that are at present being used by both India and Pakistan on arms and armament. Agreeing with the sentiments of His Excellency the President, the Government of India consider that an earnest effort should be made by the two countries to reach agreement aimed at bringing about reduction in the expenditure on arms in both countries. They suggest a meeting at the level of officials to discuss this important question.

Accept Excellency the assurances of my highest consideration.

Subject: The Kashmir Question – invalidity of past U.N Resolutions concerning plebiscite etc. – inapplicability of self-determination in Kashmir

Dear Head of Mission,

Some time ago, the Swedish Ambassador in Pakistan Mr. Finmark, was reported by the Pakistan press to have remarked that Sweden continued to support a settlement of the Kashmir question in accordance with the past resolutions of the Security Council and the principle of self-determination etc. We have noticed a tendency on the part of the press in Pakistan to distort the remarks of foreign dignitaries with the object of reinforcing the impression in the public mind that the entire world supports Pakistan’s propagandist plea for the application of the principle of self-determination to resolve the Kashmir question. Beside Sweden is generally well thought of and exercises considerable influence in international circles; and we feel that this would be a good opportunity to probe the Swedes as to what their thinking really is on these matters especially after Pakistan’s abortive aggression in 1965.

2. Our Ambassador in Sweden took the matter up with the Secretary General in the Ministry of External Affairs, Government of Sweden. Simultaneously, the Foreign Secretary had a talk with the Swedish Ambassador here. I enclose a copy of the record of the talk between the Foreign Secretary and Ambassador Heckscher for your information.

3. You may find the material in this note useful for your conversations to counter Pakistan’s propaganda about the continuing validity of past resolutions of the Security Council and applicability of the principle of self-determination to Kashmir. The conversation was, of course, confidential and we should not use its content in such a way as to cause any embarrassment to the Swedes.
Ambassador Heckscher was refreshingly forthright in expressing his and his government’s views to the Foreign Secretary in confidence. In such use as you may wish to make of the material in the enclosed note, Ambassador Heckscher should not be mentioned.

Yours sincerely

INVALIDITY OF U.N. RESOLUTIONS:
INAPPLICABILITY OF SELF-DETERMINATION IN KASHMIR.

Record of Foreign Secretary’s talk with Ambassador Heckscher of Sweden on 31st January,

In connection with the reported statement of the Swedish Ambassador in Pakistan at Sargodha, in which he is said to have remarked that Sweden favoured a solution of the Kashmir problem in accordance with U.N. Resolutions and the principle of self-determination for the people of Kashmir, I had earlier written to our Ambassador requesting him to put our point-of-view across to the Swedish Government. I had also suggested that Foreign Secretary might kindly receive the Swedish Ambassador here and explain to him our viewpoint, concerning the inapplicability of the principle of self-determination to Kashmir. Ambassador Heckscher met FS at 12 noon on January 31. The meeting, at which I was present, lasted over an hour.

2. FS had barely mentioned the subject when Ambassador Heckscher said that his colleague in Pakistan never made the statements attributed to him by the Pakistan press. The Swedish Ambassador in Pakistan (Finmark) and other foreign envoys in that country were placed in a very difficult position. Pakistani correspondents brought up the question of Kashmir at every conceivable occasion and their remarks or statements were often distorted out of shape to reinforce impression, for the benefits of the public, that the entire world supported Pakistan’s position on Kashmir. Ambassador Heckscher, nevertheless, welcomed the opportunity of having a talk with FS on the Kashmir question generally.

3. FS said that he would not dilate upon the facts of the case as these would be known to the Ambassador. There was much talk in Pakistan about the Kashmiris’ right of self-determination. The principle of self-determination, FS said, is mentioned in Article 1(2) of the Charter of the United Nations in the context of friendly relations and world peace etc., and in Article 55 in the context of stability and well-being which are necessary for peaceful and friendly relations among nations and for economic and social cooperation among nations. Self-determination is, therefore, not an end but a means to an end. A stage has come FS said when all the various ramifications of this principle should be examined, especially as there is a tendency to widen the scope and meaning of this doctrine with the object of seeking its application to linguistic, cultural, religious and other minorities of sovereign states. The Charter, mentions self-determination as a kind of linear scale. Its application to any particular country or situation is a political matter and must necessarily be judged in the light of political conditions and circumstances. The United Nations General Assembly has accepted self-determination as an essential step prior to achievement of independence by a colonial territory. The method could be either a plebiscite or referendum or elections (as in the case of most colonial territories of the United Kingdom). The real question today is to determine the circumstance in which the principle of self-determination should apply and to define the limitations of the doctrine with regard to sovereign States or groups or minorities within sovereign States. In India’s view, FS emphasized, self-determination could not be applied to parts comprising ethnic or other groups: otherwise most States, especially the newly independent ones would become vulnerable to chaos and disintegration. This would be contrary to the spirit and purposes of the Charter which seeks respect for the sovereignty and territorial integrity of members of the United Nations.

4. Ambassador Heckscher said that his country was acquainted with the problem. Sweden comprises minority groups such as the Lapps and the Fins. He agreed that the object of the United Nations is to bring about a synthesis rather than work towards the disintegration of States. Self-determination had been applied in the past in Europe for the formation of new States but not as between States. He mentioned the case of Upper Silesia (Poland) and of the Saar.

5. Foreign Secretary said that the principle of self-determination was applied in Europe by mutual agreements, for the general reconstruction of frontiers. Self-determination, the Foreign Secretary went on, is a political right which cannot be applied as a mathematical formula. In Europe there were certain favourable, pre-disposing factors such as in the case of the Saar the agreement between France and Germany and more importantly, the general agreement among the people to the application of the principle. There was also the historical background of a certain identity of the Saar; there was no religious conflict involved, the whole population of the Saar being Christian. Thus, where a harmonious set of circumstance coalesce, one may conclude the existence of conditions suitable for a plebiscite. Where, however, there was no such conglomeration of favourable circumstances, the exercise of self-determination was not only unsuitable but positively harmful. Among a group of people, for example, which had a hard minority – religious ethnic or cultural and equally determined majority who did not see eye to eye, self-determination or plebiscite could only become the instrument of suppression of the minority. And this would be against the purpose of the principle of self-determination enshrined in the Charter (example: the Greek and Turkish minorities in Cyprus). In Kashmir, too, the religious division of the population was 70% Muslims, and 30% Hindus and others. If the plebiscite was to be taken because of religious composition of the population – and this was the only ground that Pakistan advanced for claiming that Kashmir should belong to Pakistan – and assuming (even though this is not a very valid assumption) that the people voted according to their religion, then a plebiscite in Kashmir would become the instrument of oppression and suppression of the 30% minority. Therefore, to talk indiscriminately and glibly of self-determination, as was the tendency in the United Nations, was, purely from the point of principle in regard to the application of self-determination, entirely wrong.

6. Reverting to the Cyprus question, Ambassador Heckscher said that the problem there was not really one of self-determination but of the sanctity of a treaty the Treaty of Zurich. What had happened was that Markarios had flouted the constitution to begin with: then the question of Enosis and the minorities etc. had arisen. If it were the question of changing the whole set up, only then would the question of self-determination arise.

7. Going into the history of the question briefly, FS recalled that after Kashmir’s accession in 1947, we had said that we would consult the people. This offer was incorporated in part III of the UN Commission’s Resolution of 13 August but part III could have been reached only through the implementation of parts I and II. Pakistan created all manner of difficulties and problems in the implementation of the first two parts of the resolution. It refused to withdraw its forces from POK. Pakistan’s violation of the resolution, its non-fulfillment of the obligations placed upon it and the efflux of time rendered the resolution null and void. It was now completely obsolete and could not be revived. As regards the unilateral undertaking for a consultation of the people’s wishes given by the Government of India this was to come after the soil of Kashmir having been cleared of the raider. That condition was stipulated in the UNCIP resolution also. It was only after India was convinced that Pakistan had no intention of withdrawing from POK that she felt that Kashmir’s progress could not be held up and a Constituent Assembly was constituted through elections. The Assembly had finally and irrevocably reaffirmed the State’s accession to India. This was followed by two General Elections, and the third was in the offing. Democratic processes were at work in Kashmir and the Kashmiri people, as part and parcel of the Indian people, were participating in Indian democracy. Dissidents, FS said were apt to say that the elections in Kashmir were rigged, but this is usually said of all election by the defeated parties. Elections in Kashmir were as free and fair as they were in the rest of India. They are conducted in Kashmir by the same election machinery which conducts elections in the rest of the country.

8. FS then said that in 1965 Pakistan had resorted to the use of forces to settle the Kashmir issue in violation of the Charter, in violation of the principle of good-neighbourliness, and in violation of the cease-fire agreement between India and Pakistan. He referred to the Secretary General’s report placing the responsibility for events of 1965 squarely on Pakistan. It was a clear case of calculated, unprovoked aggression. Ambassador Heckscher intervened to say that he was fully convinced of Pakistan’s responsibility for the happening of 1965. The question was FS said, what happened to the resolutions of UNCIP and those of the Security Council which Pakistan brought up from time to time and to which Ambassador Finmark was reported to have referred as a basis for solution of the Kashmir question. When there was a chance of the implementation of the UNCIP plan (resolutions of 13 August 1948 and 5 January 1949) Pakistan prevented our moving forward to part III of the first resolution (consolation of the people’s wishes) by committing breaches of the cease-fire and by refusing to withdraw its forces from POK. We could not now, particularly after Pakistan’s aggression had removed from the field all resolutions of the Security Council; and no longer had they any relevance of validity. The only agreement currently binding on the two parties was the Tashkent Declaration. India has been trying, FS said, to secure full implementations of this Declaration and has taken several unilateral steps in that direction with little or no response. from Pakistan. So far as Kashmir is concerned, what remains under the Tashkent Declaration is the cease-fire line and nothing else.

9. Ambassador Heckscher did not question thesis and generally seemed in agreement with it. Reverting to Ambassador Finmark’s reported interview at Sargodha, he hoped that we would understand that Finmark and other foreign envoys in Pakistan were subjected to frightful pressures and harassment. India need not pay undue attention to what Finmark was alleged to have said about self-determination or the continuing validity UN Resolutions. He (Ambassador Heckscher) had had discussion with the Swedish Foreign Minister and Madame Myrdal and there was general consensus in all responsible quarters in Sweden that the resolutions on 1948/1949 could not apply today. The Ambassador said: “In Sweden nobody feels that 1948 resolution can apply today. The situation now is just not what it was then. We would have favoured a referendum then; but we do not favour one now”.

10. Ambassador Heckscher said that he had had talks with Jarring recently and Jarring also felt that the idea of holding a referendum in Kashmir was dead, particularly in view of the many changes that had come about in the course of time. Also, what the Kashmiris might now want would be independence. “I do not say that they should have it”, he said, “but I have heard some talks about Kashmir wanting some status like that of Sikkim or Bhutan. A referendum can hardly deal with a complicated situation of that kind”. Without going into legal aspects, he would say that he was convinced that the United Nations resolutions had become politically invalid. He would add, however, that it would be desirable that some agreement be reached between India and Pakistan and such as agreement would involve concessions from both sides, but it would, nevertheless, be desirable that some agreement be reached. FS commented that India had been anxious over the years to come to an understanding with Pakistan but India’s efforts had been frustrated by Pakistan’s presumptions, fantastic demands and generally non-cooperative and intransigent attitude.

11. Ambassador Heckscher concluded by saying that public opinion in Pakistan had been kept in ignorance: it did not realise what, in fact, had happened in 1965. He said: “The whole thing failed ignominiously: if you fail in a design of this kind, you have to pay the price for your failure. The public opinion in Pakistan would have to come to a realization of this sooner or later.”

0504. Letter from the Pakistan Foreign Minister Syed Sharifuddin Pirzada to the Foreign Minister of India regarding proposal for arms reduction.

Rawalpindi, April 7, 1967.

I thank you for your letter dated 25 February 1967, which was handed to me by your High Commissioner in Pakistan, His Excellency Mr. Samarendranath Sen.

We have given careful thought to your proposal for a meeting of officials to discuss the subject of reciprocal arms limitation. We have also had occasion to discuss with your High Commissioner the general question of relations between our two countries. He has, no doubt, conveyed to you our thinking on these subjects.

You are aware of our view that question of arms limitation can be realistically tackled if an effort is made simultaneously to negotiate a settlement of the Jammu and Kashmir dispute, which has been and remains the cause of continuing ill-will and tension between Pakistan and India. It continues to be our view that any approach which ignore the necessity of reaching a lasting settlement of this basic dispute between our two countries would be unrealistic.

The Government of Pakistan have regretted the fact that the continuous optimism expressed on this question in the communiqué we jointly issued at the conclusion of the Rawalpindi Conference last year was belied by subsequent developments. I must also express my disappointment at the fact that discussion held in the last year between our two Governments at various levels have not led to a break in the deadlock. I can assure you that we remain ready nevertheless to enter into negotiations with your Government for the settlement of the Jammu and Kashmir dispute and on other matters including the question of bringing down the strength of forces on both sides to reasonable levels. I have asked our High Commission at Delhi, to take up the thread where it was left. If you consider that more detailed discussions can now be held on these matters, we shall be willing to depute other officials to assist him in these talks.
0505. Note Verbale from the Ministry of External Affairs to the High Commission for Pakistan in India regarding the reported speech of President Ayub Khan.

New Delhi, April 11, 1967.

Ministry of External Affairs
New Delhi

The Ministry of External Affairs, Government of India presents its compliments to the High Commission of Pakistan in India, and has the honour to bring to its notice a news report appearing in the March 27 issue of DAWN, Karachi, about a speech given by H.E. President Ayub Khan at the Diamond Jubilee session of the Anjuman-i-Islam at the Islamia College Hall, Lahore, on March 26. The President is reported to have said, among other things:

“In another two or three decades, the present generations which fought for the achievement of Pakistan against the evil forces of Brahminism would be gone, to be succeeded by those who were born after Independence, and hence had no personal or direct contact with the forces and factors that necessitated the creation of this state………..

The news-report further goes on:

“Recalling the glorious struggle which culminated in the achievement of Pakistan, the President said this was now a part of history, but with the passage of time the picture of the motivating factor was getting out of focus. The generation which was coming of age was born after Independence and having no proximity with the machinations of Brahminism never experienced the immediate impact of the odds their ancestors had to face…………

“The President said the only remedy was that the coming generations should be constantly kept informed as to why the Muslims of this continent chose to fight for a separate homeland and what made them a nation separate from the Hindu majority of the undivided India”.

2. The Ministry is constrained to point out that the above remarks, coming soon after his disparaging references to the Hindu religion at a gathering in London on November 18 1966, are extremely unfortunate, as they have emanated from none other than the Head of the Pakistan State and Government. They denote a deep-seated tendency to malign an ancient religion and philosophy professed by millions of people in India, which is desirous of promoting friendly relations with Pakistan so that their succeeding generations may be saved from the scourge of religious bigotry and strife. What is most distressing is that the President of Pakistan should try to sow in the minds of the new generations the seeds of hatred against India based on a distorted reading of history and religion. The Government of India greatly regret that the President of Pakistan should have felt it necessary to speak in the manner he did. They hope, however, that wiser counsel would prevail in the long run and the future generations in Pakistan would be enabled to live in peace and friendship with India.

3. The Ministry also draws attention to the following statement made by Mr.
S.M. Zafar, the Central Law and Parliamentary Affairs Minister of Pakistan, at a meeting of the R.C.D. Students Association held in Lahore on March 23, 1967, according to a report in the Pakistan Times of March 24:

“Pakistan is the shield against the evil designs of expansionism that are hatched in India. In defending Pakistan, we are defending the flanks of other Muslim countries of the Middle East ——

“Recalling the remarks of President Mohammed Ayub Khan made at a dinner arranged in honour of His Majesty the Shahinshah of Iran, Mr.
Zafar said, President Ayub emphasized ‘Pakistan did not fight the war merely to defend her own sovereignty and integrity but the war as much was fought in the cause of other Muslim countries’.”

4. The Government of India regret very much that Pakistan should choose to enlist religion as a political instrument in the conduct of its anti-Indian propaganda in other Muslim countries. Such a policy is bankrupt and is doomed to fail. There is not another Muslim country which believes that Pakistan is the self-appointed defender of its faith or its sovereignty.

5. The Government of India cannot but protest against the above-mentioned utterances of the President of Pakistan and his Minister of Law and Parliamentary Affairs, as they are in violation of Article IV of the Tashkent Declaration, and are likely to prejudice the growth of friendly relations with India.

The Ministry of External Affairs avails itself of this opportunity to renew to the High Commission of Pakistan the assurances of its highest consideration.

The High Commission of Pakistan in India,
New Delhi

Letter from Acting High Commissioner for India in Pakistan
P..N. Kaul to Joint Secretary Ministry of External Affairs.

Karachi, April 16, 1966.

High Commission of India
Karachi

No. AHC-631/66. April 16, 1966

Subject: Possibility of a Second Round with India.

John Ridley, Special Correspondent of Daily Telegraph, London had been to Kabul recently to cover Chinese leaders’ visit to Afghanistan. He has since left for Siagon for his new assignment there. He had a chat with our Third Secretary (Information) Mr. Motihar and disclosed that from the talks which he had with several people in Pindi and Karachi he got the impression that a second round was being talked about. According to him the possibility of second round materializing is placed around June. Although he said, he himself, was not able to believe that a second round would take place so soon, he was surprised to find the knowledgeable people talking about it again. He felt that Bhutto group was on top and the army also was putting pressure for a show down. He also gathered that Air Marshal Nur Khan was becoming politically ambitious with the support of his uncle Nawab of Kalabagh. He feels that appointment of Lt. Genl. Yahya Khan is indicative of the tough line the authorities might like to pursue. He wondered if with arms and ammunition which Pakistan had acquired from various sources including China she would be tempted to create fresh troubles across the ceasefire line in Kashmir.

2. Our own assessment is that while Pakistan is likely to mount tensions against India she was not likely to launch a military venture in the near future. However, we cannot take chances and must take note of various comments that might be made by knowledgeable people like John Ridley. The possibility cannot be ruled out that keeping in mind that time was operating against Pakistan and India would become even stronger in the years to come the authorities here might be tempted to risk an adventure in the near rather than in the distant future. While remaining calm and hopeful that Pakistan would not risk another conflict it would, therefore, be wise on our part to be ready to face the worst, if it comes.

3. You may like to show this letter to the High Commissioner, if the is still there. This is for the information of all concerned.
0507. Letter from the Indian Foreign Minister M. C. Chagla to the Foreign Minister of Pakistan Syed Sharifuddin Pirzada regarding India – Pakistan Relations.

New Delhi, May 6, 1967.

I thank you for your letter of April 7, 1967 which was brought by High Commissioner in Islamabad, Shri S. Sen, a few days before my departure for a visit abroad.

2. On my return, we have given consideration to Your Excellency’s communication. I was also expecting to know from your High Commissioner in Delhi the details of your ideas in terms of the last paragraph of our letter. We have, however, not heard from H.E. Mr. Arshad Hussain, and meanwhile we find that the texts of my letter of 25 February 1967 addressed to you and your letter of 7 April have appeared in the Pakistan Press. I, therefore, hasten to reply to your Excellency’s communication of 7 April.

3. Our proposal for a meeting of officials to discuss the question of arms reduction by both countries was made in the sincere belief arising from H.E. President Ayub’s speech of 28 January 1967 at the Pakistan Institute of International Affairs, that the Government of Pakistan were as anxious as the Government of India to see a reduction of the mounting burden of armaments in both countries and the diversion of the resources available as a result of such reductions to the promotion of increasing food production and the welfare of the peoples of the two countries.

4. I have read your Excellency’s letter carefully and have come to the conclusion that our simple and straight-forward proposal is not acceptable to your Government. The question of arms reduction is related to a subsidiary position and is inseparably linked up with what you describe a settlement of Jammu and Kashmir dispute.

5. I must confess to Your Excellency our disappointment at the response of your Government to our proposal. The question of arms reduction by both countries patently stands on its own merits. Any such reduction is good in itself and is bound to have a wholesome effect on the economy of the both countries and to create a better atmosphere all round between the two countries. We are unable to accept the contention that a reduction in arms expenditure can only come about with or after the settlement of the Jammu and Kashmir question. Such a view does not seem to us to be helpful. It has the inevitable connotation that Pakistan is interested in escalating its expenditure on arms for the purpose of achieving its aim in Kashmir. Any such implication is unacceptable to us. It negates the Tashkent Declaration in which both Pakistan and India have pledged to settle all their disputes and differences by peaceful means.

6. The Government of India have stated previously many times both in parliament and outside that we are, without any preconditions or precommitments on either side, ready to discuss all questions between India and Pakistan, including the Kashmir question, at any time and at place mutually convenient to the Governments of India and Pakistan. We firmly adhere to that position and wish to reiterate that we are ready to enter into discussions with your representatives on all matters.

7. I was hopefully interested to learn that it is your desire that the threads should be taken up where they were left last year. We are most anxious that our Governments should start a dialogue and discussion through which alone a peaceful solution of our dispute and differences can ever be reached. Your Excellency will agree that this is the meaning and spirit of the Tashkent Declaration. Since we have not had the pleasure of hearing from your High Commissioner, I am asking our High Commissioner to meet you and to discuss how and where the threads can be picked up again. We are ready to receive a team of your officials in Delhi to discuss questions that either side may wish to bring up. It is also our intention that the meeting between our officials should be on a quiet, continuing and confidential basis and we sincerely wish both sides should try to reach agreement on various matters.

Accept Excellency the assurances of my highest consideration.

Circular letter from Ministry of External Affairs to Indian Heads of Mission abroad.

New Delhi, June 8, 1967.

Ministry of External Affairs
New Delhi

No.PI/103/5/67. the 8th June, 1967

Dear Head of Mission,

This is in continuation of our circular letter No.PI/103/5/67 of 8th February 1967 in which we had intimated to you the limited progress in the implementation of Tashkent Declaration.

2. The limited progress was in respect of withdrawal of the two forces, exchange of prisoners of war, restoration of full diplomatic relations, resumption of over-flights, re-establishment of only two check-posts out of 51, the exchange of only two of the three steamers seized by each country and restricted visa facilities etc. The relations between the two countries have not returned to normal as was envisaged in the preamble of the Tashkent Declaration. Seized properties have not been exchanged, trade continues to be at a standstill despite India’s unilateral decision to remove all trade embargoes and to return all seized cargoes. Travel between the two countries is still subject to restrictions and communications have not been fully restored. There has been no further progress towards normalisation since then.

3. In the course of the exchange of note between the two Governments last July-October, in which we tried to revive the possibilities of a discussion under the Tashkent Declaration, we proposed a discussion at official level of a wide range of subjects: full restoration of communications in all fields including river transit through East Pakistan, the question of travel between the two countries including travel to the enclaves, full restoration of postal and tele-communications, resumption of trade, restoration of seized properties, etc.; Pakistan’s response was limited: they wish to discuss in the first instance only tele-communications and commercial flights by national carriers and when we pointed out our interest in other subject as well, they suggested that other subjects of mutual interest could be proposed for discussion by either side after the first round of talks was over. If we agreed to limit the subject for discussion to tele-communications and civil air flights, they said they would be willing to send a delegation to India for talks on resumption of civil air flights and would also agree to receive an Indian delegation in Pakistan to discuss restoration of tele-communications. We have been making efforts to prevail upon the Pakistan Government to have the scope of proposed talks extended to cover the restoration of communications in all its aspects. The final response of the Pakistan Government is still awaited.

4. Our attitude is eminently reasonable and is in line with the Tashkent Declaration, both in letter and in spirit. After all, when there is a conflict over a particular problem, the first step is to re-establish confidence between the parties by restoring normal relations and thereafter in the atmosphere of goodwill to tackle the problem. Unfortunately, the Pakistan rulers, after failing for a second time in September 1965 to wrest Kashmir by force and after signing the Tashkent Declaration in the full knowledge of India’s stand, as explained by the late Prime Minister Shri Shastri to Ayub that there could be no change in India’s position on Kashmir, have been feeding their population with stories of false victories in the September war and thereby generated a new wave of hostility to India – playing up India as the big enemy who wants to destroy Pakistan – a trend which they are admittedly unable to reverse unless they can show a diplomatic victory against India, which, in effect, would mean that India should either agree to a plebiscite in Kashmir or be prepared for a settlement that would give additional areas of Jammu and Kashmir State of which they already illegally occupy more than a third.

5. When the Pakistan President in his address in January 1967 to the Pakistan Institute of International Affairs expressed the desirability of a reduction in the arms expenditure of both countries, in line with our policy to seek every opportunity to effect a settlement of our problems with Pakistan, our Foreign Minister expressing Government of India’s reciprocation of the views expressed by the Pakistan President sent a letter to the Pakistan Foreign Minister on February 25 suggesting official level talks in order to reach an agreement on the reduction in arms expenditure by both the countries. The Pakistan Foreign Minister rejected this proposal on the ground that the question of arms limitation cannot be realistically tackled unless effort is made simultaneously to negotiate a settlement of what he called the Jammu and Kashmir “dispute” which, according to Pakistan Government, is the main cause of continuing ill will and tension between Pakistan and India. (We have sent you copies of this correspondence.) After laying such pre-conditions, he expressed readiness of his Government to enter into negotiations with us for the settlement of Jammu and Kashmir “dispute” and other matters including the question of bringing down the strength of the forces on both sides to reasonable levels. In his reply of May 6, our Foreign Minister pointed out that Pakistan had relegated the arms reduction proposal to a subsidiary position and inseparably linked it with the settlement of the so-called Jammu and Kashmir “dispute”. He emphasized that the question of arms reduction by both countries stood on its own merits.
and such reduction could have a wholesome effect on the economy of both countries and create a better atmosphere. Our basic position that without any pre-conditions or pre-commitments on either side, India was ready to discuss all questions between the two countries including the Kashmir question at any time and at any place mutually convenient to the two Governments was also stressed. The U.S. decision to resume the supply of lethal spares to Pakistan appears to have made Pakistan more bellicose and recalcitrant.

6. On both these issues, viz., talks for normalisation of relations as well as for arms reduction, we are still awaiting Pakistan's final response. But the trend of developments from their side is not encouraging. Pakistan seems keen to revive the Kashmir Question in the Security Council though it does not appear that it has received any encouragement to that end or that the Council will meet to discuss the Kashmir Question in the near future. It is to be presumed that at the Security Council, Pakistan will press for the self-executing machinery for the settlement of the Kashmir question again as it did in September 1965. Pakistani officials have privately indicated to us that without some progress on Kashmir it was nearly impossible for the Pakistani Government to reverse the present policy. Pakistani propaganda for which frequent lead is given by both President Ayub Khan as well as his Foreign Minister is that there should be willingness on our part to enter into negotiations on Kashmir without the settlement of which there can be no peace in the subcontinent and when meaningful discussions or settling the Kashmir “dispute” take place; simultaneously arms reduction and other mutual problems could also be discussed. In effect Pakistan desires that we should resile from our stand in regard to Kashmir. To this end, Pakistan has been doing heavy propaganda that the Indian move for a dialogue was insincere and was only intended to impress the Powers who are interested in peace in the sub-continent. While the rest of the world including the Muslim world spoke appreciatively of the election of Dr. Zakir Hussain as the President of India, Pakistan alone was the exception. The officially inspired newspaper comments were peeved, critical and unfavourable in the face of the big impression created within Pakistan itself – some Pakistanis have courageously expressed their satisfaction in private – the triumph of secularism in India was something that the rulers of Pakistan could not stomach, since they are still wedded to the two-nation theory. Pakistan also appeared to be concerned over the effect of the election on opinion in the Muslim countries, particularly among the Arabs.

7. The recent statement of President Ayub Khan to a foreign newsman that the tension between India and Pakistan is now greater than it was on the eve of the Indo-Pakistani war in 1965 is significant. The statement goes to prove that Pakistan's arms build-up today is much greater than it was during the last Indo-Pakistan war. It is evident therefore, that Pakistan has been able to make frantic purchases of military hardware from wherever she could get it. (You will no doubt emphasize this warlike posture both to the Foreign Office to which you are accredited as well as in educating public opinion. In this connection please see the editorial in the Indian Express dated May 31st, 1967, copy enclosed (not included here)).

8. Our policy is that we should continue to show our willingness to hold talks with Pakistan but such talks should cover the question of restoration of communications in all its aspects and not be confined only to two items in the communications field which suit Pakistan. It is also our view that trade relation should be included within the scope of such discussion and there is no change in our basic policy of readiness to discuss all questions concerning Indo-Pakistan relations with Pakistan. But there have been no indications at all of sincere desire on the part of Pakistan for a détente with India and Pakistan appears to prevent normalisation of relations only in order to keep the Kashmir issue alive and to maintain pressure on India for a solution through the U.N., knowing fully well that India will never agree to negotiate on Kashmir to the satisfaction of Pakistan.

9. The breach by Pakistan of Article IV of the Tashkent Declaration regarding discouraging anti-Indian propaganda continues unabated. Our several protests have not produced any change in the anti-India propaganda and in these circumstances further steps towards normalisation have become more difficult. In this connection the award of decorations to the cities of Lahore, Sialkot and Sargodha have kept the fires of anti-Indian hysteria burning. Pakistani leaders chose these occasions to make false and grave charges against India. The utilization of the World Islamic Congress (MOTAMAR) held in Pakistan in May for propaganda about Kashmir is also worth mentioning.

10. Pakistan has continued violation of Article III of the Tashkent Declaration by consistently inciting Sikhs, Nagas, Mizos and the Indian Muslims, particularly from Jammu and Kashmir, through the Government-controlled press and radio broadcasts. A daily programme called Punjabi Durbar is broadcast from the Lahore Station of Radio Pakistan. Its main aim seems to create disaffection among Sikhs towards their country and to incite them to demand a separate homeland for themselves. It is interesting to know that this programme usually starts with a Path (recitation) from Guru Granth Sahib (Holy book of the Sikh).

11. Pakistan also utilised without much success the visit of U Thant to Pakistan in early April and the later visits to Djakarta, Moscow and Japan of the Pakistan Foreign Minister for eliciting diplomatic support against India. While it can be categorically stated that U Thant did not respond at all and the Soviet Government did not accept Pakistan's interpretation of the Tashkent Declaration that India was violating it by her unwillingness to negotiate on Kashmir, the Pakistani Foreign Minister succeeded to a limited extent in Djakarta in obtaining a repetition of the Malik-Pirzada communiqué of November 1966 at Karachi in regard to Kashmir but the Indonesian Foreign Minister has now resisted the use of the term plebiscite in this connection. Pirzada failed in his efforts to obtain promise of arms either from Moscow or from Djakarta. The visit of the Turkish Prime Minister to Pakistan in April was utilised by Pakistan to indulge in extensive propaganda against India. In the diplomatic field, Pakistan has the support of only China, Turkey, Iran, Saudi Arabia and Jordan.

12. As you will have noticed from the above, Pakistan’s insistence on negotiations for a solution of the Kashmir problem, before discussing any other problem relevant to India-Pakistan relations including that of normalisation subsequent to the 1965 conflict, is in effect putting the cart before the horse. But Pakistan is cleverly attempting to carry international opinion with it on the basis that the basic dispute is on Kashmir and once that is solved, all problems between India and Pakistan will resolve themselves. In the context of India-Pakistan relations during the last two decades, it will be noticed that this is a cyclical pattern with Pakistan. She frequently brings up the spotlight on the Kashmir problem after a barrage of heavy propaganda and the systematic working up of Pakistani sentiments; she fervently searches for international support, agitates in international forums including the United Nations and finally attempts a military adventure. Even the failure of two such military attempts does not seem to have made it clear to Pakistan that India cannot be cowed down and forced to surrender Kashmir.

13. As regards talks on Kashmir, the Foreign Minister in his letter to Pirzada has said that the Government of India are prepared for talks with Pakistan on any subject, including Kashmir. This position has been stated in the Indian Parliament before. It should, however, be clearly understood that the Government of India have a very precise basic position on the Kashmir question, namely that the State of Jammu and Kashmir having finally and irrevocably acceded to India, is an integral part of the Indian Union. Therefore, any talks on the Kashmir question will have to be within that basic framework and in the light of the realities of the prevailing de facto situation. We are quite clear that a plebiscite is out of the question and the principle of self-determination has no relevance to integral parts of sovereign States. Officer on Special Duty (Kashmir) has written to you from time to time about the possibility of a debate on the Kashmir question in the Security Council at Pakistan’s instance. We are not anxious for a debate as it is not likely to serve any useful purpose. To the contrary, it may embitter relations and undermine the framework of the Tashkent Declaration, which, for the present, offers the only hope of reconciliation between India and Pakistan leading to settlement of all Indo-Pakistan differences, step by step, peacefully and bilaterally. However, if the Security Council decides to resume discussion of the Kashmir question, the Government of India will state their position with firmness and finality. This position is that the old resolutions of the Security Council are no longer valid after Pakistan’s second abortive attempt at the seizure of Kashmir by force, that a solution can come only bilaterally between the two countries, and this will have to follow, not precede normalisation of relations between India and Pakistan in an atmosphere of friendliness, goodwill, mutual accommodation and active cooperation in the interests of the people of the sub-continent as a whole. In other words, the Security Council really has no role to perform in this issue any longer and it would be well advised to leave the parties alone to find mutually satisfactory solutions to all their problems and differences.

14. Pakistan’s lack of interest in implementing the Tashkent Declaration, her violations of the various Articles of the Declaration by interference in India’s internal affairs and the scurrilous propaganda which she has been directing against India amply show evidence of a country that does not wish to remain on friendly terms with its neighbour. In contrast to the attitude of Pakistan, India has repeatedly stated that she is willing to discuss all problems including Kashmir with Pakistan without any preconditions or reservations in an effort to normalise relations with that country and to live as a friendly and amicable neighbour. India had strictly adhered to the spirit and letter of the Tashkent Declaration whose observance by Pakistan has been noted only to the extent of its breach of its various articles. Even the proposal regarding arms reduction which found some ready echo in President Ayub’s mind and which could have contributed to the easing of the tension between the two countries and promoted friendly relations is relegated to a place subsidiary to that of the Kashmir question. Therefore, we see that Pakistan’s efforts are to deny normalisation so as to keep the Kashmir issue alive and maintain pressure on India for its solution.

15. I have no doubt that you will keep us informed of the reactions in the countries of your accreditation and of your own efforts to keep the Government to whom you are accredited as well as the public informed of the uncooperative and abnormal behaviour of the Pakistan authorities to whom the problem of Kashmir appears to have become more important than the welfare and happiness of the people of Pakistan as well as the people of India. It is important that there should be no relaxation on your part and on the part of the entire Mission in efforts to educate the Government and the public opinion of the country to which you are accredited in the truth about Pakistan’s utter lack of respect and refusal to implement the Tashkent Declaration.

Your sincerely,

(P.R.S. Mani)

All Heads of Mission.
Note Verbale of the Ministry of External Affairs to the Pakistan High Commission in India regarding the illegal seizure of Inland Water Transport vessels and other river craft.

New Delhi, June 15, 1967.

Ministry of External Affairs
New Delhi

The Ministry of External Affairs, Government of India presents its Compliments to the High Commission for Pakistan in India and has the honour to invite the High Commission’s attention to the Ministry’s Note No. P(PIV)287(15)/66 dated 28th December 1966 and subsequent reminders dated 16th January 1967, 21st February 1967 and 3rd April 1967 regarding the 190 Indian Inland Water Transport vessels and other river craft illegally seized in East Pakistan by the local authorities during the conflict in September-October’ 65.

The Government of India have to state with great regret that while their note and reminders referred to above have remained unacknowledged, it has been confirmed through a statement made by Pakistan Minister of Defense in the Pakistan National Assembly on the 20th May 1967 that apart from putting these vessels and craft to illegal use for various purposes, the Government of Pakistan have auctioned some of them while some have been given to private parties. This arbitrary action of the Government of Pakistan is a flagrant violation of the Tashkent Declaration, by which the two Governments had agreed to return the properties and assets taken over by them. The Government of India would like to impress upon the High Commission once again that all Indian assets and properties in Pakistan are in the nature of a continuing trust and any measures towards utilization, transfer and disposal of these properties and assets are completely illegal and violate all principles of international law and practice.

The Government of India most emphatically protest against these illegal acts of the Government of Pakistan, which are without any moral or legal justification and for which Pakistan must bear full responsibility. The Government of India also declare that they will not recognize any title that Pakistan or a third party may claim to the Indian properties and assets pursuant to these illegal measures. The Government of India once again call upon the Government of Pakistan to restore these Inland Water Transport vessels and craft and also other seized properties and assets of Indian nationals and Indian public authorities to their owners. They would also like to strongly urge the High Commission to impress upon the Government of Pakistan, the immediate necessity of desisting form proceeding with illegal utilization, transfer and disposal of these vessels and craft and other Indian properties and assets. The Government of India reserve their right to claim full compensation for the loss or damage to all properties and assets of Indian nationals as well as Indian public authorities.

The Ministry of External Affairs avails itself of this opportunity to renew to the High Commission for Pakistan the assurances of its highest consideration.

The High Commission for Pakistan,
New Delhi.

0510. Letter from Pakistan Foreign Minister Syed Sharifuddin Pirzada to the Indian Foreign Minister M. C. Chagla regarding infructuous expenditure on arms by the two countries.

Rawalpindi, June 16, 1967.

Excellency,

Your letter of 6th May 1967 was delivered to me on 13th May by your High Commissioner in Pakistan.

2. We have given your letter very careful consideration. I am sorry that the Government of India considers the response conveyed to you in my letter of 7th April to mean that Pakistan is interested in escalating its expenditure on arms for the purpose of achieving its aim in Kashmir. Your Excellency will recall that it was Pakistan which first proposed that the armed forces of both countries – and not merely expenditure on arms – should be rounded to reasonable levels on a reciprocal basis. Your Government is also aware that from the beginning it has been our view that discussions on this subject would not be realistic if they were divorced from negotiations to reach a just and honourable settlement on the Jammu and Kashmir dispute. The interpretation Your Excellency has chosen to put on this position is therefore justified neither in fact nor in logic. I am constrained to say that such a polemical approach cannot contribute to the usefulness of the present correspondence.

3. We have taken note of your Excellency’s reiteration of the Government of India’s professed willingness to discuss all questions including Kashmir between our two countries without pre-conditions or pre-commitments. While doing so, we could not of course ignore the statement of your Prime Minister, Mrs. Indira Gandhi that “the Government of India had nothing to negotiate with Pakistan on Kashmir.” I am bound to say that such a statement, made before your letter could reach me, is not calculated to open the way for the resumption of talks between our countries. Your Excellency’s proposal for unconditional talks on all subjects cannot, in the circumstance, be considered as providing a basis for the kind of purposeful negotiations which would lead to a lasting and mutually satisfactory settlement of all disputes and differences between our two countries. If your Government is in fact ready for a settlement of the Jammu and Kashmir dispute, it is difficult to understand why, as you state in Para 5 of your letter, it is unable to accept Pakistan’s request for simultaneous negotiations on this dispute and on the question of arms reduction.

4. In the absence of a clearer indication of the Government of India’s attitude concerning negotiations on Kashmir, we do not know what useful purpose would be served by meeting between our two countries at any level. By arousing unjustified expectations they may, in fact, have the contrary effect.

5. On a number of occasions we have made it known to your Government that we are willing to deal with such peripheral matters as can be settled to mutual advantage. In this connection, I might recall that as early as February 1966, we made known to you our readiness to resume air services between the two countries on a reciprocal basis. Similarly, we have responded favourably to your Government’s suggestions that steps might be taken to ensure the proper functioning of the tele-communication links between the two countries. Further progress on both matters awaits your Government’s agreement to proceed with them. Our High Commissioner at Delhi, who had not sought to trouble you in the absence of any indication of the Government of India’s reaction to my letter of 7th April, is of course at your disposal for any discussions you may wish to have with him. Your High Commissioner is also welcome to have discussions on these matters with us at any time.

Accept, Excellency, the assurances of my highest consideration.

Sd/-

(Syed Sharifuddin Pirzada)

H.E. Mr. M.C. Chagla,
Foreign Minister,
Government of India, New Delhi.
0511. Extract from the speech of External Affairs Minister M. C. Chagla in the Lok Sabha.

New Delhi, July 13, 1967.

Coming to Pakistan, I am sorry to report to this House that, as House knows, notwithstanding all our efforts, relations between Pakistan and ourselves are not good, and all our attempts at implementing the Tashkent Declaration have so far failed. Mr. Madhok said we should not show any appeasement towards Pakistan. I agree. But settling with Pakistan without sacrificing national interests is not appeasement, but statesmanship, and I assure the House that whatever agreement we may arrive at with Pakistan, assuming we do, would not be at the sacrifice of our national interests.

Pakistan should realise that we have no design on her territory. Pakistan should realise that however much some of us might deplore the partition of 1947 we have accepted this as a fact of history, we recognise Pakistan, and therefore it seems to us that there is no reason why Pakistan should increase her armed strength. Against whom is she arming except against us, because she has no other country except India whom she looks upon as her enemy?

But Pakistan’s alliance with China adds a new dimension to our relations with Pakistan. There is no doubt that the two countries are acting in collusion. My colleague, the Defense Minister said the other day that both countries are helping the Naga hostiles, the Mizo hostiles and other rebels and secessionists on our frontiers, and, as I said, this adds a new dimension to our relations with Pakistan, because, let us not forget that China is interested in seeing that there is no settlement between India and Pakistan. She was the only country that denounced the Tashkent Agreement, and she desires nothing more than the fact that conflict between India and Pakistan, or the bad relations between India and Pakistan, should go on.

With Pakistan we have and still have the many common bonds of history, tradition and culture, and, therefore, it is all the more regrettable that our relationship has followed such an uneven course. We, on our part, would certainly like to see the people of Pakistan prosper and progress and to have friendly neighbourly relations with them because, here again, we believe that friendly relations between India and Pakistan would contribute to the strength of both the nations and would help them both to achieve a better life for their people without our attention being diverted to other purposes.
It is for this reason that we welcomed that singing of the Tashkent Declaration and even now, in spite of all the obstacles which we face, that it is implemented. But the House is well aware how difficult this is. The immediate need, we feel, is to heal the wounds caused by the conflict of 1965 and to normalise our relations. This is what we have been trying to pursue with the Government of Pakistan.

The development of mutually beneficial economic and other relationship should not follow the consideration of more tangled political questions but should precede them and should aim at creating a friendly atmosphere. On our part, I should like to say that we shall not miss any opportunity of having a fruitful dialogue in order that such a feeling of trust and understanding is gradually restored and avenues are opened out for better collaboration on various issues.

0512. Note Verbale from the Ministry of External Affairs to the Embassy of Iran in India regarding the Joint Communiqué issued between Iran and Turkey.

New Delhi, July 20, 1967.

Ministry of External Affairs
New Delhi

No. P-V/104(7)/67  July 20, 1967

The Ministry of External Affairs present their compliments to the Embassy of Iran in New Delhi, and have the honour to invite the Embassy's attention to the joint communiqué issued by His Imperial Majesty the Shah of Iran and His Excellency the President of the Republic of Turkey on June 22, 1967 which states, inter alia, that concerning the question of Kashmir “the two Heads of the State reaffirmed their belief that this question should be solved in conformity with the resolutions of the U.N. taking into consideration the legitimate rights of inhabitants.”

2. The State of Jammu and Kashmir is an integral part of the Union of India. The rights of the inhabitants of any part of India are no concern of any foreign government, and this reference to “the legitimate rights of inhabitants” of a State of the Indian Union in the said Communiqué amounts to interference in the domestic affairs of India. The Government of India regret it and protest against this reference.
3. The Government of Iran will no doubt appreciate that it is not permissible for any country to pose as guardians and protectors of the rights of the people of another sovereign state. Surely, the Government of Iran would not countenance foreign government offering gratuitous advice as to how they should attend to problems concerning their own people or groups of people in their own country.

4. As regard U.N. resolutions to which the communiqué refers, a perusal of the records of the Security Council will show clearly that Pakistan violated all resolutions on the Kashmir question, which were agreed to by India and Pakistan. These resolutions are, therefore, no longer valid or applicable and the Government of India have amply stated their position in this regard in appropriate forums.

5. As the Government of Iran are aware, India and Pakistan have subscribed to the Tashkent Declaration, which specifically provides for bilateral settlement of all differences between India and Pakistan. Third party intervention in these differences has only aggravated them in the past, and such intervention is hardly likely to serve any constructive purpose in the future.

6. The Government of India, therefore, hope that the friendly Government of Iran will refrain from taking partisan attitudes, which may only encourage the Government of Pakistan to disregard or move away from the provisions of the Tashkent Declaration. The Government of India further hope that the Government of Iran will, on the contrary, urge Pakistan to seek solutions of its differences with India bilaterally in accord with the letter and spirit of the Tashkent Declaration.

The Ministry of External Affairs avail themselves of this opportunity to renew to the Embassy of Iran the Assurances of their highest consideration.

The Embassy of Iran,
New Delhi.

New Delhi, July 24, 1967.

Imperial Embassy of Iran
New Delhi

Ref. No. 2214. 24th July, 1967

The Imperial Embassy of Iran present their compliments to the Ministry of External Affairs of the Government of the Republic of India and by order of the Imperial Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Iran have the honour to state that an exhaustive explanation concerning the subject matter of the Ministry’s Note No. P-V/104(7)/67 dated the 20th July, 1967 was given to His Excellency the Ambassador of the Republic of India in Iran as long ago as the 24th June, 1967 and as they find the protest contained in the said Note to be unfounded, have to return the same to the Ministry.

The Embassy avail themselves of this opportunity to renew to the Ministry of External Affairs the assurances of their highest consideration.

Turkish Embassy
New Delhi

No. 696-5/67

The Embassy of Turkey presents its compliments to the Ministry of External Affairs and with reference to the Ministry’s Note dated July 20, 1967, No.P-V/104(7)/37, has the honour, upon instructions form its Government, to inform the Ministry of the following:

❖ ❖ ❖ ❖ ❖
The Government of Turkey wishes to state that the reference to the question of Kashmir in the Turkish-Iranian joint communiqué merely indicated the concern felt by the Heads of State of Turkey and Iran during their talks over this conflict as a subject which closely interests the peace and security in the world and the views of their Government regarding this question. Any interpretation going beyond this view does not reflect the intention of this Government.

The Government of Turkey rejects therefore the charges and the protest leveled by the friendly Government of India in the above Note and regrets the way in which the Note was worded.

The Embassy of Turkey avails itself of this opportunity to renew to the Ministry of External Affairs the assurances of the highest consideration.

0515. Note Verbale from the High Commission for Pakistan in India to the Ministry of External Affairs regarding properties seized by Pakistan.

New Delhi, August 12, 1967.

Pakistan High Commission
New Delhi

No.F.1(40)CSVI/65. August 12, 1967

The High Commission for Pakistan presents its compliments to the Ministry of External Affairs and with reference to the correspondence resting with the Ministry’s letter No. P(PIV)287(15)/66 dated December 28, 1966 has the honour to state that it is entirely wrong on the part of the Ministry of External Affairs to assume that the properties seized in war are in the nature of a continuing trust or that their disposal would violate the Tashkent Declaration. Assets seized during the war become the property of the seizing Government, whose legal right to their disposal is unquestionable. It is true that under the Tashkent Declaration the Governments of India and Pakistan undertook to discuss the question of seized properties. However, no progress has been made in implementing the Tashkent Declaration since the meeting held in Rawalpindi on the 1st and 2nd March, 1966. The blame for this lies entirely with the Government of India who have gone back on the understanding embodied in the communiqué issued at the end of that meeting and have held up negotiations under the Tashkent Declaration by persisting in their untenable stand on Kashmir.

The High Commission avails itself of this opportunity to renew to the Ministry of External Affairs the assurances of its highest consideration.

Government of India, New Delhi.

0516. Note Verbale from the High Commission of India in Pakistan to the Pakistan Ministry of Foreign Affairs regarding celebrations of Defence of Pakistan Day.

Islamabad, September 1, 1967.

No. ISL(POL)108/66 September 1, 1967.

The High Commission of India in Pakistan presents its compliments to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, Government of Pakistan, and has the honour to state as follows:

2. The High Commission notes with regret that the Government of Pakistan will again be celebrating the 6th of September as Defense of Pakistan Day. When similar celebrations were planned last year, the High Commission objected on several occasions to any special observance of September 6, as this was likely to engender ill-will between the two countries and was contrary to the spirit of the Tashkent Declaration. Bearing these considerations in mind, the Government of India has desisted from celebrating August 5th or September 1st.

3. The High Commission views with dismay the fact that extensive celebrations are again planned for September 6th. The High Commission also understands that these celebrations are planned not only within Pakistan but also by Pakistan’s diplomatic and consular missions abroad. The High Commission would again emphasis that such special observance by the Government of Pakistan of September 6, year after year is a further violation of the spirit of the Tashkent Declaration and must make the task of normalising relations between the two countries still more difficult. It would again urge the Government of Pakistan to desist from going ahead with its plans for observing September 6th in any special way.
4. The High Commission of India avails itself of this opportunity to renew to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs the assurances of its highest consideration.

The Ministry of Foreign Affairs,
Government of Pakistan,

0517. Letter from Sheikh Mohammad Abdallah to President Ayub Khan.

New Delhi, September 1, 1967.

In the name of God, Most Gracious, Most Merciful.

c/o Deputy Commissioner Delhi.

1st September, 1967

My dear Khan Sahib,

May peace and blessing of Allah be upon you!

While giving your views on Confederation in your book “Friends Not Masters,” You have, amongst other things said:

“When Sheikh Abdullah and Mirza Mohd Afzal Beg came to Pakistan in 1964, they too had brought the absurd proposal of confederation between India, Pakistan, and Kashmir. I told them plainly we should have nothing to do with it. It was curious that whereas we were seeking the salvation of Kashmiris, they had been forced to mention an idea which, if pursued, would lead to our enslavement. It was clear that this was what Mr. Nehru has told them to say to us: I do not blame them because they were obviously acting under the compulsion of circumstances but they left me in no doubt that their future was linked with Pakistan.”

In order to keep the record straight I would request you to refresh your memory as to what actually I told you when I met you along with Mirza Afzal Beg, for I find certain discrepancies in your above statement.

We never carried with us any cut and dry proposal for the solution of Kashmir dispute and, to be fair to the late Pandit Jawaharal Nehru, he never forced us to put before you any particular proposal. No, we are not made that way. My sole purpose in visiting Pakistan and meeting you was to persuade you to agree to a summit meeting with the Prime Minister of India so that a solution acceptable to all concerned could be found at the conference table. When asked if I had any specific solution in my mind I told you clearly that I had none except the one that erminated from the United Nations and to which both India and Pakistan agreed.
Incidentally I referred to a number of other possible solutions suggested from time to time by various people and friendly countries. It was in this sequence that confederation between India, Pakistan and Kashmir was mentioned by me as it was also being suggested as one of the possible solutions. Of course, this particular proposal was vehemently denounced by you. Such a solution, you felt, would encourage forces of disintegration not only in Pakistan but more so in India.
My advice, to you, however, was not to reject any proposal outright but discuss its pros and cons in a friendly manner at the conference table and convince the other side that a particular solution would not lead to ultimate peaces which ought to be the common objective of all. My whole emphasis was that parties must give up their rigid attitudes and be prepared to listen to the view point of the other side without attribution (of) motives.

Both India and Pakistan had, unfortunately, got too much involved in this dispute and, therefore, such a solution only must emerge from the conference table which the parties could present to their respective peoples as the only practical, honorable, and just solution under the prevailing circumstances. None should leave the conference table with a sense of defeat.

You were kind enough to agree to come to Delhi and meet late Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru but to our misfortune, his sad and untimely death robbed us of this opportunity.

I hope you are doing well.

With kindest regards.

You’re sincerely,

Sd/Sheikh Abdullah

His Excellency
Field Marshal Mohd. Ayub Khan,
President of Pakistan,
Rawalpindi.
0518. Note Verbale from the Pakistan Ministry of Foreign Affairs to the Indian High Commission in Pakistan regarding celebration of Defence of Pakistan Day.

Islamabad, September 5, 1967.

No I(I)-6/20/66 5th September, 1967

The Ministry of Foreign Affairs presents its compliments to the Indian High Commission and with reference to the High Commission’s Note No.ISL(POL)108/66 dated 1st September, 1967, has the honour to state as follows:

2. The aggression against the borders of Pakistan which occurred on 6th September, 1965, is part of the history of this country but the commemoration of that Day as the Defense of Pakistan Day, is not intended to engender ill-will between India and Pakistan nor has it done so in the past. Ill-will and tension are in fact engendered by the kind of statements habitually made by responsible Indian leaders accusing Pakistan of planning aggression against India.

3. The Ministry of Foreign Affairs is surprised that in a matter which rests entirely within the discretion of the Government of Pakistan, the High Commission should consider it proper to address this Ministry and ask it “to desist” from holding the Defense of Pakistan Day celebrations. The Ministry rejects the High Commission’s Note as unacceptable.

The Ministry avails itself of this opportunity to renew to the High Commission of India, the assurances of its highest consideration.

The High Commission of India, Islamabad.

MOST IMMEDIATE

No. 678. September 26, 1967

Foreign Secretary from Kewal Singh.

By now you must have seen press reports of speeches of KOSYGIN and AYUB at last night’s dinner in honour of President AYUB KHAN. Full text being sent by bag.

2. In regard to Indo-Pakistan relations both speeches give some indication of the attitude of the two leaders and obvious difference in emphasis. KOSYGIN prefaced his reference to Indo-Pakistan relations by pointing out to the imperialists who often succeeded in setting peace loving states one against another. Everywhere he said the imperialist quarters were trying to sow the seeds of discord and conflict. It was therefore specially important for all peace loving countries to facilitate the preservation and consolidation of peace by cooperation with one another in achieving this goal. He added: “we view from this angle the situation on the Asian sub-continent. Tashkent Agreement confirmed that the ways to solution of existing differences can and must be patiently sought and that the profound community of the interests of the peoples which had struggled together against colonialism can be stronger than the differences and contradictions inherited form the past.” He expressed his conviction that Pakistan-Indian relations can be improved without any foreign interference and that this was in the interest of both India and Pakistan as well as in the interest of peace in Asia. He expressed the hope that the people of these two major states of Asia would live and work in conditions of good neighbourliness and peace. “On our part we will facilitate this in every way.”

3. AYUB did not miss any one opportunity to emphasize to two points against India which will be his main theme when discussing Indo-Pakistan relations with the Soviet leader. He said “we welcome your initiative which led to the Tashkent meeting and look forward to ease of tension between the two countries. We must frankly say that our expectations have not so far materialized. He then referred to the two major factors which vitiated Indo Pakistan understanding:

(a) Dispute over the state of Jammu and Kashmir was the main stumbling block and was a source of serious tension in South Asia.
(b) Indiscriminate increase in armaments and the growing military imbalance in the sub continent is also a danger to peace. (implicit criticism of Soviet defence assistance to India which will be forcefully conveyed during official discussions).

4. Having mentioned the above two factors as impediments to normalisation of relations and danger to peace, he reiterated his commitment (or perhaps paid the usual lip service) to Tashkent Agreement. He said “I would like to take this opportunity to restate that Pakistan remains ready and willing to negotiate with India on all issues in the spirit of Tashkent Declaration. We believe that peace is essential for both countries so that they can build up their economies. You would notice that he has affirmed his willingness to negotiate with India on all issues in the spirit of Tashkent Declaration.

5. AYUB also introduced in his speech the question of non proliferation treaty and referred to the wide area of agreement between Pakistan and Soviet Governments. He warned that “the emergence of a sixth nuclear power should be prevented under all circumstances”.

6. Both leaders referred to growing friendly relations between Soviet Union and Pakistan. KOSYGIN assured his guest that the Soviet Government is fully resolved to further strengthen that friendly ties. He indicated that the talks between delegations would lead to new and useful fields of cooperation. AYUB expressed the hope that the present meeting will lead to further collaboration between economic and technical assistance received from the Soviet Union and assured his hosts that Pakistan has made good use of the economic assistance. He pointed out how the absorption capacity of Pakistan economy had increased and appealed for further economic assistance for the implementation of Pakistan’s third Five Year Plan.

7. Understand from reliable sources that Major General MUHAMMAD HUSAIN and Air Commodore Z.A. CHOWDHURI have also come with Pakistan President.

0520. Statement of the Leader of the Indian Delegation to the UN and Minister of Defence Swaran Singh in the UN General Assembly in Reply to the Statement of the Foreign Minister of Pakistan.

New York, October 10, 1967.

Members of the Assembly will have noticed that in my statement I did not refer to the India-Pakistan question. My restraint was conditioned by the Tashkent declaration of which both India and Pakistan are signatories. It is therefore all the more regrettable that the Foreign Minister of Pakistan has once again chosen to refer to certain matters which are the internal affairs of India. I have no desire to enter into a controversy with him. I shall simply say that those charges have no basis whatsoever. I repudiate them in their entirety.

I shall now confine myself to some indication of positive approach which I see in the statement of the Foreign Minister of Pakistan. I welcome his statement that Pakistan is prepared to adhere to the Tashkent declaration as a basis for settlement of all disputes between the two countries. India and Pakistan had agreed at Tashkent that relations between the two countries should be based on the principle of non-interference in the internal affairs of each other. They also agreed not to have recourse to force and to settle their disputes through peaceful means. Further, they agreed that the two sides would continue meeting both at the highest and at other levels on matters of direct concern to both countries.

Another important provision of the declaration was the agreement of the two Governments to discourage propaganda directed against each other and, in fact, to encourage propaganda which promotes the development of friendly relations between them.

Ever since the signing of the declaration, India has made several attempts to start a constructive dialogue with Pakistan. Contrary to what the Foreign Minister of Pakistan has stated, the Prime Minister of India has also affirmed more than once our profound desire to have good neighbourly relations with Pakistan. For example, on 5 April 1967 my Prime Minister said:

“We have always stated our point that it is necessary, in fact it is vital, for India and Pakistan to work in co-operation on as many issues and in as many spheres as possible because we share the same problems and difficulties, and we shall certainly continue to make every effort possible to have greater understanding and goodwill with Pakistan.”
On our part, I should like to repeat with all sincerity that India is willing to discuss all disputes -- I repeat, all disputes -- with Pakistan without any preconditions. The Government of India stands by the Tashkent declaration and will patiently wait for a constructive response on the part of Pakistan.

0521. Record of discussions held between the Indian Chief of the Army Staff and Commander in Chief of Pakistan Army amplifying decisions contained in paras 2 and 3 of the Record of the meeting held at New Delhi on September 13-14, 1966.

Rawalpindi, October 25, 1967.

1. In amplification of the decisions contained in Paras 2 and 3 of Record of the Meeting held at New Delhi on 13-14 September 66, the following additional points were agreed:-

   (a) Exchange of information regarding exercises should reach the other side three clear days before the moves for the main exercise take place.

   (b) The information so exchanged, in addition to the time and place, should also include the level of the exercise.

   (c) Information on 'Black-Out' exercises would only be exchanged in respect of towns lying within twenty-five miles of the border/Cease-Fire Line. Such information should also reach the other side three clear days before the actual date of the exercise.

2. In order to prevent avoidable incidents along the Cease-Fire Line/the working boundary as agreed to by the military commanders, local commanders should resort to the agreed methods of solving disputes/disagreements by holding joint meeting at various levels through the good offices of the UN Observers. Para 5 of Record of Discussion of New Delhi Meeting dated 14 September 66 refers.

3. With regard to the Sialkot-Jammu Sector it was agreed that sufficient flexibility be allowed to local commanders to enable them to define that line North of the Tawi on a basis similar to the one followed while establishing the working boundary South of the Tawi as required vide Chiefs' agreement of 13-14 September 66.
4. It was agreed that service light aircraft will be permitted to operate up to a limit of 1,000 meters on own side of the border/Cease-Fire Line as discussed by the two Air Chiefs on 14-15 March 1966. Likewise civil agencies operating light aircraft should also be approached to observe the same limit. In cases of emergency, however, service light aircraft may approach own side of their border beyond the specified limit of 1,000 metres provided the other side has been given a prior notice to this effect.

5. With regard to the vacation of picquet's on the wrong side of the Cease-Fire Line, it was agreed that both sides will vacate such picquets as soon as possible in accordance with the verdict given by the UNMOGIP, except in case of general area Shaqma (NN 9283)/long (NN 9383), where the existing picquets would be surveyed jointly by a team consisting of representatives from the following:-

   (a) Survey of India.
   (b) Survey of Pakistan.
   (c) UNMOGIP.

Such surveys will be carried out from known trig points on both sides of the Cease-Fire Line. The picquets in this area would then be finally adjusted in accordance with the findings of the joint survey team.

6. In continuation of Para 8 of the Record of New Delhi Meeting dated 14 September 1966, and in partial modification of Para 21 of Part III of the agreement between Chief of the Army Staff India and Commander-in-Chief Pakistan Army dated 22 Jan 1966, it was agreed that the level of liaison from the Pakistan side will be as under:-

   (a) DG EPR (Brigadier).
   (b) Sector Commander (Lt. Col).
   (c) Wing Commander (Major).

India will nominate its own counterparts corresponding to the levels mentioned above and intimate their designation/ranks to Pakistan. This will ensure the holding of meetings within 24 hours of any serious incident as already agreed to mutually.

IMMEDIATE

No.82-Sav  October 26, 1967

Foreign Secretary From Ambassador.

We have submitted preliminary report on AYUB’s visit to France in my telegram No.78 dated 22nd October. A copy of the joint communiqué issued after the visit is being sent to you separately.

2. President AYUB Khan’s visit lasted from October 16 to October 20 of which the 16th October was spent in Nice and the rest in Paris. He was accompanied by Foreign Minister PIRZAD. There was a fair amount of build-up of Pakistan and AYUB in the press prior to his visit and considerable publicity was given to the activities of AYUB’s meeting with DE GAULLE and his speeches on formal occasions during his visit. After the visit there have been some editorial comment in the press though the most important papers like Le Monde and Le Figaro have not commented. The visit thus clearly was given importance in the French Press and in French official circles. Many people had thought that AYUB had received warmer reception than some people had expected. On the other hand, AYUB’s visit to France was given considerable importance and publicity in the Pakistani press.

3. In assessing the results of AYUB’s visit to France it is necessary to understand why importance was attached to the visit. So far as France is concerned, it is conscious, much more so than before, of Pakistan’s importance as a large country of 110 millions and as the largest Muslim country. From such awareness arises the desire to have closer economic and political relations with Pakistan. The similarity in the attitude of indifference towards SEATO by both countries, the increasing independence of Pakistan from the U.S., the success of Pakistan’s development plans and its growing relations with the Soviet Union and China, as indeed the closeness of views of the two countries on Vietnam and West Asia have underlined the importance of cultivating Pakistan. The French desire without detriment to its relations with India which it values and is solicitous of maintaining and developing.

4. On the Pakistan side it seems to be a primary objective of its foreign policy to convince the international community, particularly the important powers, of its independence in foreign affairs and of its “non-alignment” despite its nominal membership of CENTO. It is not without significance that the Pakistan President’s current visits are to the Soviet Union, France and Rumania in that order. Rumania itself is following a policy of non-alignment between China and the Soviet Union, which AYUB himself wishes to do. Acceptance of Pakistan by these countries as an independent minded country following a policy of virtual non-alignment would secure Pakistan respectability and influence in the Afro-Asian and the socialist world. Further objectives of the visit were to secure increased economic assistance and technical collaboration, further purchases of the French arms, and last but not least secure French support for Pakistan against India over Kashmir.

5. It is against this background that discussions took place during AYUB’s visit. AYUB himself had, two private meeting with DE GAULLE at which nobody else was present.

6. According to the French Foreign Office, the visit had not been as productive as Pakistan had hoped. There was a tour d’horizen of the international situation in which both sides found a closeness of views on all important issues. On West Asia there was complete identity of views and Pakistanis were vehement in voicing their condemnation of Israel. The communiqué merely expresses the wish that “conditions permitting to envisage an enduring settlement would come as soon as possible and such an agreement depends in particular on agreement between the principal powers”. However, an elaboration of this very brief statement is contained in DE GAULLE’s banquet speech on the 17th October after their first talk. DE GAULLE said: “So far as the conflict in the Middle East in concerned, like France you hold the view that the fact of starting the conflict is condemnable, that the acquisition of foreign territories by force of arms is unacceptable and that there should be a solution founded on mutual recognition of all the interested States, end of all belligerency, and the establishment of free navigation for all in a region whose political, economic and religious future concerns the whole world.” Incidentally, this appears to have been the first reference in a public statement by DE GAULLE to non-belligerency and to free navigation in association with non-recognition of conquered territories by force of arms.

7. VIETNAM – Though the two sides agreed that no military solution was possible in Vietnam and that the Geneva Agreement of 1954 should be adhered to, the Pakistanis spoke on the subject in a much lower key than they did on the subject of West Asia. The proposal to permit the Vietnamese to exercise self-determination was supported. The communiqué omitted to mention anything about cessation of bombing.

8. CHINA:- There was a general discussion about China. AYUB KHAN explained his position by saying that Pakistan was at the cross roads between three great powers: Soviet Union, China and India. According to MANAC'H the Pakistanis were conscious of Chinese reactions to their developing relations with the Soviet Union but nevertheless were trying to come closer to the latter.

9. USSR: AYUB KHAN expressed his great satisfaction at his visit to the Soviet Union. Apart from his developing a political relationship he disclosed the Soviet promise of economic aid worth $500 millions between 1968 and 1975. The French appeared to be impressed by this as a very definite and significant involvement of the Soviet Union in Pakistan. According to MANAC'H, the Soviet Union was likely to make this aid dependent on Pakistan's maintaining peaceful relationship with India and her keeping away from Chinese influence.

10. BILATERAL RELATIONS - Most of the discussions between the French and the Pakistanis related to bilateral economic relations. Pakistan requested French assistance in gaining access for Pakistani goods to the European Common market. AYUB KHAN expressed concern over the British entry into the Common Market saying that in that event Pakistan would suffer an annual loss of 3 million pounds sterling. AYUB pleaded for a special concession for Pakistani manufactures enabling them to gain access to the Common Market countries. He also asked for French assistance to the stabilization of the prices of basic materials and for ensuring greater export of Pakistani manufactured goods.

AYUB KHAN asked for greater assistance for economic development of Pakistan and a larger participation of French enterprise both by way of technical cooperation and investment in Pakistan's industrialization. At his meeting with the Chamber of Commerce he said that Pakistan would like to receive a visit by a group of French businessmen and entrepreneurs towards end of this year or early next year.

He also specially requested for relief in the matter of debt repayment by Pakistan and asked for extension of credits up to 20 years. The French merely agreed to study the request pointing out that these were difficult questions.

The Pakistanis asked for larger credits for Pakistan than $10 millions promised through the Consortium. The plea for increased assistance was based on Pakistan's performance and satisfactory utilization of foreign aid and the disparity between French aid to India and to Pakistan, despite India's alleged poor showing, but the French did not encourage any hope of increase in French assistance through the Aid Pakistan Consortium and according to MANCA'H there was no question of any increase to the French contribution.

11. PEACEFUL USES OF ATOMIC ENERGY - Cooperation has been agreed upon between French nuclear authorities and those of Pakistan. A specific subject discussed was French assistance for recovering uranium from the uranium bearing sands of a river in Pakistan in the Karakoram Mountain, for the purchase of which French would have the first option.

12. Pakistan has requested the assistance of the French Institute of Petroleum to assist in the setting up of a petroleum institute in Pakistan along the lines of the Indian Petroleum Institute and the French have positively received the proposal.

13. CULTURAL AGREEMENT – A cultural treaty is being negotiated which would provide for increased scholarships, professor and teacher exchanges and intensification of cultural and artistic activities by both states. As a measure of assistance in technical field, French envisage increase in number of scholarships, especially with a view to helping industrial and agricultural developments.

14. ARMS – It is believed that the Pakistanis brought up the question of the arms purchases. Full details of these discussions are naturally not easy to find out. In reply to a specific question, MANACH disclosed that a great deal of discussion had taken place for purchase of arms by Pakistan from France but nothing had been decided. There was a request by Pakistan for easy credit terms to purchase arms. In particular, AYUB KHAN pressed for the purchaser of Patton tanks. This request was denied by the French on two grounds:

   (a) That the Pattons having been provided by U.S., it was not possible to provide them to a third country without first obtaining American clearances. The French were not disposed to ask for such clearance.

   (b) The Minister of Defense, M. PIERRE MESSMER, pointed out that the tanks were in use by the French army and could not be spared, as it would be quite sometime before they could be replaced by AM 30 or other tanks.

15. We believe, that this is only part of the story and that the Pakistanis would not have missed the chance of discussing other arm purchases such as AM-30 tanks, Mirages, missiles, etc. Information regarding any such purchases or request for purchases may take time to filter through to us.

16. CONCLUSION – There is no doubt that the broad objectives on both sides have been achieved. AYUB KHAN usually succeeds in making a good personal impact on the Heads of the Government of the countries visited and this visit was no exception. DE GAULLE was particularly amiable and courteous towards AYUB as judged from newspaper accounts and photographs. In his speech at the official banquet, DE GAULLE was lavish in praise of Pakistan’s progress and went to the extent of quoting statistics of national growth, of Pakistan’s agriculture production, industry etc. He also paid a tribute AYUB
KHAN in his reply to AYUB’s banquet speech on the 19th October in the following words:

“You have described to the situation of Pakistan as being that one of the greatest countries of the world which we fully recognise. It confers on you particular responsibilities. You carry out these with dignity and firmness. Your visit is a profound personal souvenir for me because of the lucidity, clear sightedness and I would say of the vigour and courage with which you see your duties and responsibilities as Chief of State and the role of your country. I have been profoundly impressed by it.”

This is obviously a gain to Pakistan and will contribute particularly in the context of the comparable authoritarian political systems prevailing in both countries, to the strengthening of Franco-Pakistan relations.

17. AYUB was also able to confirm that Pakistan was following an independent policy, unhampered by its alliance with the United States. There have been references in the press and in DE GAULLE’s statement and in those made by the French Foreign Office in their conversations with us, that Pakistan’s policies have now changed and that their viewpoints were the same as that France. Thus AYUB seems in France to have repeated his success with the Soviet Union during his recent visit. From a talk I had with Ambassador ZORIN of USSR, it is quite clear that the Russians are now fully convinced that Pakistan’s policies have changed. ZORIN said that there was identity of views between Pakistan, Soviet Union and ourselves on Vietnam and West Asia and that Pakistan was now following sound policies. ZORIN further felt that AYUB’s visit to France would not be contrary to our interests. (It is significant that ZORIN talked of ‘our’ interest instead of Soviet Union or Indian interests. This indicates the measure of Soviet identification with us on larger global issues and must be regarded as satisfactory from our point of view.) From the point of view of bilateral relations, the visit must be regarded as fairly successful and as opening the possibility of increased economic collaboration and cooperation in the field of peaceful uses of atomic energy. There is also likely to be spurt in the development of cultural relations between Pakistan and France.

18. On Kashmir the Pakistanis wanted in the communiqué a reference to the right of self-determination and to a deterioration of the situation. The French did not want any reference to Kashmir. They cited the example of AYUB-KOSYGIN communiqué in which Kashmir was not mentioned. (Incidentally, we have received no copy of this, nor of the report from Moscow on AYUB’s visit.) Pakistanis were, however, insistent and referred to previous communiqué between the French and Pakistan on this subject. The French did not agree to any reference to self-determination or a deterioration of the situation. The phrase ‘peaceful and equitable’ was a French contribution.
19. After AYUB’s private meeting with DE GAULLE on the 17th October, the Pakistanis briefed the press that AYUB had found in DE GAULLE a sympathetic understanding of Pakistan’s position on Kashmir. According to MANCA’H this does not correspond to facts and was evidently put out by the Pakistanis for public consumption. DE GAULLE, who knows the whole problem was non-partisan, indeed in his reply to AYUB’s toast at the return banquet given by him to DE GAULLE, the latter made no mention of Kashmir and Indo-Pak relations in spite of the fact that AYUB had devoted a large part of his speech to expressing himself strongly on Kashmir and India’s intransigence etc. The French were surprised and embarrassed at this and according to MANCA’H, AYUB KHAN “forgot that we have very cordial relations with India”.

20. France’s non-partisanship and Pakistan’s inability to draw France in their favour must have been disappointing to the Pakistanis. They might, however, draw some comfort from the implicit recognition by the French that there exists the problem of Kashmir which must be settled. However, DE GAULLE talked in his banquet speech on the 17th October of a pacific arrangement un jour (one day), and the communiqué emphasizes the importance of solutions bilaterally and peacefully in accordance with the Tashkent Declaration. This corresponds to our position.

21. On the whole, therefore, there was nothing in the visit contrary to our interests. This is an aspect repeatedly emphasized by French officials, and the press while talking of Franco-Pakistan relations has usually spoken also of France’s cordial relations with India. France’s influence on Pakistan as indeed that of the Soviet Union is likely to be beneficial as regards Indo-Pak relations and in some ways should be welcomed by us. Nonetheless, we should not underestimate AYUB’s subtlety and cleverness. His life’s objective as he told the late Prime Minister SHASTRI at Tashkent is to go down in history as the one who brought about a solution of the Kashmir problem; there is nothing to indicate that he wishes such a solution to be no other than Pakistan’s terms which means ultimate union of Kashmir or at least of the Valley with Pakistan. Having failed in the past both by diplomatic means and through use of arms to bring about such a result, he is adopting another tactic, namely to secure the Soviet Union’s and to a lesser extent France’s active interest in the solution of this question. Its growing non-alignment it hopes will give it greater respectability and credibility with these and other countries, and wean away the Soviet Union’s sympathy for India on this issue. AYUB has not succeeded so far in these objectives but he is persistent and somehow makes a deep personal impact on his listeners. We shall have to counter Pakistan’s long term tactics by active diplomacy. We are already pursuing it with the Soviet Union. We have only started it with France. Considerable reinforcement of our efforts hitherto with France is necessary.
0523. Note Verbale from the Ministry of External Affairs to the Pakistan High Commission in India regarding Pakistan’s seizure of Indian properties.

New Delhi, November 21, 1967.

Government of India
Ministry of External Affairs
New Delhi

No.P.II.274/1/67-Vol.II

The Ministry of External Affairs of the Government of India presents its compliments to the High Commission for Pakistan in India and with reference to the correspondence resting with High Commission’s Note No.1(4C)-CS.VI/65 dated August 12, 1967, has the honour to state that it is not clear from their note whether Pakistan wishes to treat unfortunate armed conflict between India and Pakistan of August-September, 1965 as having the status of war. India has all along held the view that a state of war, with all its attendant consequences, did not exist between India and Pakistan during August-September 1965. In any case, even assuming, though not agreeing, that the hostilities had the status of war and Pakistan could have the rights of a belligerent, it is not at all true that “assets seized during the war become the property of the seizing Government, whose legal right to their disposal is unquestionable.” This proposition has no support form the leading authorities on international law, nor does it conform to state practice. And furthermore, it does not appear to be warranted even under the Defence of Pakistan Rules whereunder property may be seized and held not as property of the seizing Governments but for its preservation in contemplation of the arrangements to be made at the conclusion of peace. That the properties and assets taken over by either side in connection with the armed conflict were to be returned and not appropriated, was also specifically provided in Article VIII of the Tashkent Declaration, 1966 in the following words:-

“They (the Prime Minister of India and the President of Pakistan) further agreed to discuss that return of the property and assets taken over by either side in connection with the conflict.”

According, this Ministry re-affirms the desire of the Government of India to discuss the return of property and assets taken over by either side at an early date, and it awaits the response of the Government of Pakistan in the matter.

The Ministry of External Affairs avails itself of this opportunity to renew to the High Commission for Pakistan the assurances of its highest consideration.
0524. Statement by Prime Minister Mrs. Indira Gandhi in the Lok Sabha about the reported flight over Pakistan Occupied Parts of Kashmir by Dr. Kiesinger Chancellor of the Federal Republic of Germany specially in the light of his statement in Delhi that West Germany was neutral in its attitude towards India and Pakistan.

New Delhi, December 8, 1967.

Some time ago, several Pakistani newspapers carried reports alleging that a West German spokesman in Islamabad had said that West Germany supported the principle of self-determination in Kashmir. The Pakistan High Commission in New Delhi also issued a press release on November 28, 1967 and I quote:

“Rawalpindi, November 28: A West German spokesman said here last evening that West Germany favoured the settlement of the Kashmir dispute on the principle of justice and on the basis of self-determination”.

We naturally made enquiries from our High Commission in Islamabad and from the Embassy of the Federal Republic of Germany in New Delhi about the truthfulness of these reports.

Our High Commission in Islamabad has informed us that the statement in the Pakistan High Commission’s press release was based neither on the joint communiqué issued at the conclusion of Chancellor Kiesinger’s visit to Pakistan nor on the statement of any West Germany Spokesman in Islamabad. The Embassy of the Federal Republic of Germany in New Delhi has categorically affirmed that the reported statement was not made by any member of the West German delegation.

We have examined the joint communiqué issued summarizing the results of the talks between Chancellor Kiesinger and President Ayub Khan in Islamabad. The only reference to Kashmir in the joint communiqué appears in paragraph 6 which I shall read out. I quote:-

“The President of Pakistan explained to the Chancellor the situation with regard to Indo-Pakistan relations. In this connection, he expressed his Government’s concern at the growing military imbalance in the Subcontinent and reaffirmed his Government’s desire to seek a peaceful and honourable solution of all disputes with India, including the dispute of Jammu and Kashmir. The Chancellor took note of Pakistan’s position and expressed the hope that these disputes would be peacefully resolved”.

It is clear that the German Chancellor merely took note of Pakistan’s position and expressed the hope that these disputes would be peacefully resolved.
This is in consonance with the Tashkent Declaration.

Mr. Speaker, Sir, may I now deal with another question. It is about the route followed by the aircraft carrying the German party.

We have been informed that there was a proposal for Chancellor Kiesinger to visit Gilgit. This was not accepted. Later, on the 27th November, a sight-seeing flight to Nanga Parbat and K-2 was planned. As the House is aware, Nanga Parbat was first climbed by a German expedition. Since then the Germans have been interested in this mountain. This flight was cancelled because of bad weather. On the 28th November on their way from Rawalpindi to Lahore, the West German party was flown to Nanga Parbat and K-2. According to our information, the West Germans were not told that they would be flying over Gilgit, Hunza or Skardu and they have assured us that the flights was solely for purposes of sight-seeing and that it had no political significance.

Hon’ble Members are familiar with the general behaviour pattern of a section of the press in Pakistan. Every time an important visitor goes to that country, an attempt is made to distort his statements and actions. I doubt if the world is misled by such antics.

Letter from Foreign Secretary Rajeshwar Dayal to Indian Ambassador in Soviet Union Kewal Singh regarding transit route for Indo-Afghan trade.

New Delhi, December 1967.

As you are aware ever since the Indo-Pakistan conflict in 1965 the Indo-Afghan land route via Pakistan has remained closed for the movement of trade and personnel. Under pressure of the Afghans, Pakistan has, however, allowed the movement of Afghan fresh fruit during the season through Pakistan to India. Also there is some movement of Indo-Afghan trade by the sea route via Karachi and by air. The fact still remains that Indo-Afghan trade has been severely restricted because of Pakistan’s refusal to open the land route. Pakistan’s obvious intention is to disrupt traditional Indo-Afghan trade, force Afghanistan to find other outlets for its fruit and dry fruit and thus de-link it from India. We have, of course, from time to time taken up this matter with Pakistan pointing out the unreasonable interference between traditional Indo-Afghan trade but there has been no positive response from Pakistan. We have also asked Afghanistan to take up this matter with Pakistan pointing out that the closure of the land route is not in the interest of Afghanistan. The Afghans have had no success in approaches they have made to the Pakistani authorities in this regard and one has to recognise that Afghans will not force the issue to a point where their own immediate interests are affected. Incidentally, the Afghans have promised to take up this matter again if and when a Pakistan Trade Delegation visits Kabul.

2. During the visit of this Trade Delegation one of the matters that will be discussed is the question of transit facilities through Afghanistan for PAK-USSR trade by the new road links which have been built. Afghanistan is keen that the road net-work is used for such trade as this could give them the necessary resources through transit dues and taxes to pay for the maintenance of the expensive highways. Even otherwise Afghanistan would like to become an important link for trade of this region. The USSR is apparently not averse to such a development as it would help their own politico-economic interests. As a matter of facts there have been recent press reports saying that Pakistan and the Soviet Union are at present working out ‘technical details’ for the opening of the land route via Afghanistan and that the USSR had initiated negotiations with Afghanistan in this connection. The Afghan Foreign Office, has, however, told our Embassy in Kabul that the report regarding Afghan USSR negotiations in not true.

3. As you know a proposal had been made in 1966 by the Afghans for holding a conference on trade and Transit to be attended by the USSR, Afghanistan, Iran, Pakistan, India and Turkey. The proposal could not make headway because Pakistan did not agree to India's participation. However, if Pakistan Afghan-USSR trade develops as indicated above it would mean one step, and a major step, in Afghanistan achieving the objective which it had in holding the conference. It was in this context that during the Prime Minister’s visit to Moscow in October this year we had suggested that P.M. may like to discuss with Soviet authorities the possibilities of holding the regional conference suggested by Afghanistan with India’s participation. Unfortunately, during the short time that P.M. had in Moscow she was not able to discuss this matter. I am attaching herewith a copy of the brief prepared for P.M. in this connection (not included here).

4. We should be grateful if you could take up this matter with the Soviet authorities and let us know their reaction. It is obviously in our interest not to allow a situation to develop in which India is excluded from regional trade with this area and consequently limit its political influence.

With kind regard,

Yours sincerely

(R. Dayal)

Shri Kewal Singh,
Indian Ambassador, Moscow.

0526. Note Verbale from the Ministry of External Affairs to the Pakistan High Commission in India regarding seizure of properties of the minorities in East Pakistan.

New Delhi, January 8, 1968.

The Ministry of External Affairs of the Government of India presents its compliments to the High Commission for Pakistan in India and has the honour to state that numerous cases of forcible occupation of properties belonging to minorities in East Pakistan have come to the notice of the Government of India. It is further understood that under the Defense of Pakistan Rules, all lands and buildings belonging to non-resident owners (minority community) have been vested in the Deputy Custodian of Enemy Property, Dacca that all transfers of lands/buildings so vested in the Deputy Custodian by sale, exchange, gift, will mortgage, lease or sub-lease or by any other manner have been declared null and void and that the properties of migrants including lands and buildings, etc. have been declared as “Enemy Property”. The Government of India strongly protests against such action of the Government of Pakistan.

The Government of Pakistan would agree that the interests of the minority community in East Pakistan have always constituted a different aspect and specific agreements have been entered into by India and Pakistan to safeguard them. With this end in view the Prime Ministers of India and Pakistan signed an agreement on the 8th April 1950, agreeing that each country shall ensure to the minorities complete equality of citizenship and full sense of security in respect of property. This Agreement lays down, inter alia, that right of ownership in or occupancy of the immovable property of a migrant shall not be disturbed. This Agreement has gone to the extent of protecting the ownership of all immovable property of a migrant even if he decides not to return to Pakistan and the ownership of all his immoveable property shall continue to vest in him.

It will be recalled that the above Nehru-Liaquat Agreement of 8th April, 1950 was specifically entered into in order to infuse confidence in the minds of the minority community in East Pakistan so that they can live in their own country with a sense of security and honour.

The application of the Defense of Pakistan Rules to the properties of non-resident owners as well as the forcible occupation of the properties of the minorities nullifies the spirit of the Nehru-Liaquat Agreement of 1950.

The Ministry would also take this opportunity to remind the High Commission of the two countries’ obligations undertaken in the Tashkent Declaration of January, 1966, to take measures to implement the existing agreements between India and Pakistan.

In view of the above, the Ministry would request the High Commission to take effective steps to return all properties and assets to the minorities of East Pakistan which either belong to the non-resident owners of the properties in Pakistan or to the minorities who are still living there.

The Ministry avails itself of this opportunity to renew to the High Commission the assurances of its highest consideration.

High Commission of Pakistan,
Chanakyapuri,

IMMEDIATE

No.0559-SAV.  January 18, 1968.

Pakistan has been describing events leading to expulsion of OJHA from Dacca as “Agartala conspiracy” to ‘bring about secession of East Pakistan’. Their apparent motive is to divert attention from a serious problem of internal disaffection in East Pakistan by describing it as “planned instigation” for secession with the “involvement of Indian army officers and diplomats”. We have already sent you by morsecasts/press telegrams our rejection of Pakistan protests in this connection.

2. We must counteract this false Pakistani propaganda but it would depend upon the extent of publicity that the event continues to receive in the country of your residence/accreditation.

i. Whenever Pakistan has faced serious internal problems, the tendency has been to involve India so as to distract people’s attention from genuine local discontent.

ii. There has been a gradual build up of the autonomy movement in East Pakistan as well as the organisation of both political parties opposed to the AYUB regime in the form of a Pakistan Democratic Movement for the restoration of the democratic system and rights. The charge of Indian involvement is to draw away public support from this movement.

iii. In view of the wide disparities between the two wings, there is growing discontent among the East Pakistanis.

iv. Initially, arrests were made on December 10, 1967, for what was described then as an attempt by “certain anti-national elements” to create a “law and order situation”. The story of alleged Indian involvement was as evident after-thought which took a month to crystallize.

v. Alleged Indian involvement has been claimed on the basis of reported confessions of arrested people. In a writ petition before the Dacca High Court on behalf of KAMALUDDIN AHMED and SULTANUDDIN AHMED, it was revealed that the denunciates were subjected to brutal tortures to extract signed confessions.
3. The repressive measures taken by the Pakistan authorities indicated that:
   a) the affair must have been serious enough to cause worry to the Government;
   b) the prevailing mood of frustration and resentment smouldering in East Pakistan burst into violence;
   c) the Pakistan Government will exploit the situation to silence opposition parties in East Pakistan.

4. A Pakistani Government Press report of January 6 said that the case against the plotters is expected to go for trial soon but we do not know if the trial will be public.

5. The above information should help in rebutting any false propaganda against India in connection with the affairs.

MOST IMMEDIATE

Mani from Guha.

Reference Pakistan Home Ministry’s press note 18th January. Our comments are as follows.

(i) For the first time the plot has been officially described as Agartala Conspiracy Case. This confirms the Government of Pakistan's determination to implicate India and also indicates the direction from which charges against India may be levelled.

(ii) Since detained persons have been arrested under Army Navy and Air Force Acts the possibility of open trial seems to be remote. Moreover it appears the whole case will now be dealt with by the Central Government. It also betrays their distrust of East Pakistan officials as well as politicians.
(iii) By involving Sheikh MUJIBUR RAHMAN in the “planning and guidance of the conspiracies” the Government seeks to root out autonomy movement. MUJIB had come to personify the constitutional demand for autonomy by launching six-point movement. Autonomy will be a dreaded word after its chief protagonist has been charged with treason in collusion with India.

(iv). By saying that Sheikh MUJIB “is also among the arrested persons” the press note 18th January hints that others besides 28 persons named earlier have been arrested.

(v) The main elements of the case as they now appear seem to consist in the conspiracy inspired planned and guided by Sheikh MUJIB with the help of some officials and armed forces personnel as well as party-men who established contact with Indian accomplices in Agartala with the help of this mission. It may be recalled that in 6th January press note OJHA was accused of helping Pakistanis to leave the country.

2. Suggest that for propaganda purposes we plug the line that a democratic and constitutional demand has been turned by dictatorial methods into a conspiracy. This marks a new stage in official reprieve of all democratic movement in East Pakistan. This may also be seen as preparation of ground for Presidential election which is due towards the end of 1969

Letter from Joint Secretary Ministry of External Affairs PRS Mani to Indian High Commissioner in Pakistan S. Sen regarding expulsion of Ojha.

No. 31/520/no/68. January 20, 1968

Ojha returned and both Foreign Secretary and I have talked to him. We are convinced that there is no basis whatsoever to the fantastic charges levelled against him. His expulsion was no doubt intended to cover up the genuine disaffection in East Pakistan by trying to show that there was a foreign hand in the affair. The allegation that Ojha had something to do with the conspiracy was made as long as a month after while the conspiracy itself was unearthed a day or two before the date on which the plan was to have been carried out. Some of the accused persons have apparently been tortured and made to sign statements involving Ojha. We have also noticed in this connection the Dawn of 10 January which confirms what President Ayub Khan had told you (after the discovery of the conspiracy) that he would like the talks to go on.

2. The charges made against Ojha were grave and the only manner in which we could react to it was as we did. In our opinion our prompt and speedy action has to a considerable extent put Pakistan’s efforts in this direction on the defensive. Ojha’s own view was that the Pakistan effort at involving him was due to: (i) their desire to cover up activities of their own officers in India as well as their financing and aiding the Naga and Mizo resistance; (ii) unnerved by the growing momentum of the autonomy movement in East Pakistan, Ayub’s Government was keen to discredit the Awami League and NAP leaders whom he had described already as ‘secessionists’. Governor M. Khan had also characterised those demanding autonomy as under instigation from across the border. The Pakistan authorities found the opportunity too good to be missed for involving the Government of India and thereby discrediting the opposition leaders in East Pakistan. One of the allegations made is that large sums of money were paid to the treasurer of the Chittagong district Awami League. No sensible person will ever believe that if such a movement is to be financed it will be done through a member of the minority community in the condition prevailing in East Pakistan. Moreover, Chaudhary does not hold a key position in the party hierarchy.

3. About M.M. Ahmed, you may recall on one of your visits to New Delhi I had mentioned that an important link between the Pakistan High Commission and the Plebiscite Front in J&K, Ghulam Mohd. Badharwahi had been arrested in August 1967. This man who had been in contact with Raja Arshad in the Pakistan High Commission had been regularly receiving money and guidance for subversive activities in Kashmir. M.M. Ahmad took over from Raja Arshad. Some revolvers were also supplied. M.M. Ahmad was also the authority guiding the work of Wahiduddin who had earlier expelled from India. The activities of M.M. Ahmad had been known to us for some time but we had wished to avoid taking any action till the false charges against Ojha.

4. The above is entirely for your personal background and since the arrested man in Srinagar may be brought to trial sometime, it will not be advisable to reveal any of the details. Also in the delicate political situation that now exists following the release of Sheikh Abdullah, we are naturally anxious to avoid developments not conductive to the normalization of relations between the two countries.

Yours sincerely

( P. R. S. Mani )

0530. Letter from Pakistan President Ayub Khan to the Chairman of the USSR.

Rawalpindi, January 20, 1968.

From: Field Marshal Mohammad Ayub Khan, N. Pk., H. J.

Dear Mr. Chairman,

I thank you for your message of greetings on the occasion of the 2nd Anniversary of the signing of the Tashkent Declaration.

2. I recall with pleasure the days we spent in the beautiful and hospitable capital of the Uzbek Republic and also the sense of hope with which the Tashkent Declaration was signed. It is with regret that one must admit, nevertheless, that the hopes aroused by the Soviet initiative and the signing of the Tashkent Declaration still remain to be fulfilled. If progress has been halting and has, at times, received serious set-backs, then it is necessary to go to the root of the prevailing discord and ill-feeling between the two countries. It goes without saying, of course, that the two neighboring nations must base their relations on the principle of respect for each other’s territorial integrity and independence. I am sorry to say that certain recent occurrences have aroused serious misgiving in Pakistan on that score.

3. I shall not burden this letter with a repetition of Pakistan’s position on relation with India. Your Excellency is aware that Pakistan is anxious for the settlement, without exception, of all disputes and differences with its Indian neighbour. I have repeatedly said that we are prepared to adopt any approach on the matter which is reasonable and sincerely intended to lead to such a settlement. In that spirit, we have not been unwilling to take up such matters as can be settled to mutual benefit. It serves no purpose however to deny that the unresolved dispute concerning the future of the State of Jammu and Kashmir remains the crux of relations between Pakistan and India. It is our belief that an honourable settlement of this dispute will not only meet the Kashmiri peoples’ demand for justice but will put an end to the perpetual instability in this region.

4. Mr. Chairman, the close and continuing interest taken by the Soviet Union in peace and friendship between Pakistan and India is understood and appreciated by the Government and the people of Pakistan. We have no doubts that the influence which your great country wields, will be used to further this purpose. I can assure you at all times of Pakistan’s sincere co-operation in this task.

With warm personal regards,

Sd/-
Mohd. Ayub Khan

His Excelency Mr. A.. Kosygin
Chairman, Union Of Soviet Socialist Republics, Moscow.

Letter from Deputy High Commissioner for India in Pakistan to Foreign Secretary Rajeshwar Dayal on his meeting with Z.A. Bhutto.

My dear Foreign Secretary,

Last night I met Mr. Bhutto at a farewell reception by the Cuban Charge d’affaires: Bhutto and his wife came in at the fag end of the party and I suggested that we might meet later at the Sind Club. I said that I had not made any efforts to see him recently because I did not wish to embarrass him. He said that he would always be happy to see any of us; he was not, in the least, worried about the consequences.
2. He was looking rather tired and drawn and when I remarked upon this at the Club, he said that he had been extremely busy, touring and addressing meetings in various parts of West Pakistan. He said he was amazed at the number of people who turned up at his meetings and the evident enthusiasm of his audiences as well as their affection. He said he was confident that he would receive the same acclaim in East Pakistan where he intended to go later. He continued that President Ayub had no real support in the country and was, in fact, a man with feet of clay. He was extremely bitter about Ayub and said that the man was not to be trusted. He then went on complain about hostility towards him in India. “You have treated me very badly” he said. I said I did not know how we had treated him badly: we were hardly in a position to do so. He said “No”; our papers and criticism of him were extremely hostile. This I said was hardly unexpected in view of the attitude that he had always adopted towards India and which he continued unchanged. He said that we were quite wrong in thinking that he was hostile to India. We should read his speeches and utterances carefully and read between the lines. We would then find that there was no basic enmity in him towards India, he had lived in India for several years and had many good memories of it. The two countries, he said, had a great deal in common and should settle the Kashmir dispute. This was the only way for the two countries to avoid being exploited by third parties. The Kashmir issue, he felt, could be settled, but he did not think that Ayub could do so as he had neither the guts nor the imagination for this task. When he was Foreign Minister, Ayub would always say to him “now you go and talk to the Indians- I cannot”. In fact he, Bhutto, was the only person who could settle the matter and we were very mistaken if we thought that Ayub was the only man to talk to in Pakistan. I said I was very happy to hear that he was not hostile to us and agrees that we must settle all outstanding issues. I asked him whether he had any concrete suggestions regarding the settlement of Indo-Pakistan problems, particularly, as regards what he described as the main issue namely, Kashmir. He said he would not, at this stage, spell out any concrete suggestions.

3. The above is a summary of what Bhutto said. As usual he was extremely affable and voluble and, in fact, apart from a few interjections on my part, Bhutto maintained an intense monologue. It would be easy to dismiss him as a frustrated megalomaniac and this may, in fact, be a correct description of him today. On the other hand, there is no denying the fact that he enjoys certain popularity in this country and has to be watched. He is clever, has means and an attractive personality when he wants to be pleasant. There has been very little in the papers about his tours and the speeches that he has made pointing out the contradictions between his present and past stands. I hope to get some more information as regards the success or otherwise of his tours in due course. Many would agree with his assessment that Ayub has little popular following but few would do so with regard to his statement that Ayub has feet of clay.
Even though very little has appeared about his speeches, it is evident from them that Bhutto has no clear ideas about anything, much less Kashmir; hence his failure to put forward any concrete suggestions. Most responsible persons and politicians do not regard him as a serious political figure: this may very well be true but their assessment could also be coloured with a certain amount of jealousy of a young man who has had a colourful and eventful career. We could not talk very long as Bhutto had to go away for dinner and he said he would like to meet again. If and when this occurs -- and I have had no talk with him for months -- I am sure, he will have some more interesting things to say. What really intrigues me is as to why he should have gone out of his way to establish his “non-enmity” towards India. Nor do I understand why he so readily agreed to talk. One reason may very well be that he is completely unsure of himself and seeks reassurance. Some time ago, when I had met him casually at another party, the only question he asked me was, what was the assessment diplomats had about him: he was sure that we had a very good assessment about the situation in Pakistan. He again asked me this question and I gave the same answer namely, that he was in much better position to judge, particularly as compared to me, as contacts of Indian diplomats were severely circumscribed.

Yours sincerely,
(U. S. Bajpai)

Letter from High Commission of India in Pakistan to the Ministry of External Affairs regarding Pakistan’s relations with China.

Islamabad, April 4, 1968.

No.ISL(POL)104/7/68. April 4, 1968

Please refer to your D.O.No.12/1188/NGO, dated March 19, 1968, regarding the paper you are preparing for Tehran on Pakistan’s relations with China. In my view, the only point that can be emphasized with credibility is that, whether Pakistan is alive to Chinese global designs or not, she tolerates or condones certain Chinese actions only in her immediate short-term interest. She is, as it were, saving her skin for the present oblivious of the fact that such Chinese actions can in the long-term spell danger not only to herself but to other parts of the world. I come to this conclusion from the following very brief note on Sino-Pakistan relations.

2. Pakistan’s attitude towards China has been expounded in the President’s book. Pakistan regards her as the great Power of Asia and it is the President’s attempt to walk a triangular tight rope between the United States, the Soviet Union and China, and to establish a series of “balancing equations”. In my view, the relationship is, for one thing, born out of fear. Pakistan must keep on good terms with this power of almost immeasurable potentialities. For another, it pays dividends. China can to some extent be used against India, Pakistan’s hostile neighbour. The Chinese lever could in certain circumstances be used to thwart American or Soviet pressure. Ayub also emerges as the statesman who can talk to both East and West.

3. What is the Chinese attitude towards Pakistan? In my view, the Chinese attitude at the present moment is governed solely by a question of tactics. I think the Chinese know that today they cannot supplant America in Pakistani favour. The Americans hold the economic strings, let alone the fact that the regime, by its background, its nature and for reasons of sheer survival will, if forced to the choice, choose America rather than China. It is, therefore, the Chinese policy to harp upon the gratitude Pakistan owes them from the time of the Sino-Indian conflict and to profit from the mistakes made by others. The Chinese can afford to wait. They also have their hands full at the present moment.

4. What has all this meant in practical effect? Pakistan is notably reticent on happenings within China. Take, for instance, the Cultural Revolution. Pakistan press reporting has been noticeably muted on the outrages that accompanied the movement. There has been nothing, or scarcely anything, on the desecration of mosques and the vilification of Ulema. On other matters which are a source of pride to the Chinese, Pakistan has followed the Chinese line or, at any rate, taken good care not to condemn the Chinese. Take, for instance, China’s nuclear explosion. After shouting themselves hoarse about the possibility of an Indian nuclear bomb, the Pakistanis only praised the Chinese achievement. It should, however, be noted that on the last occasion the Pakistani acclaim was not as much as might have been expected, although that feat of an Asian Power in coming close to Western achievements was commended. Thus, the sacrilege of Islam finds no condemnation by the State which tiresomely boasts its Islamic being; the possession of the ultimate weapon by the Power which avowedly does not fear a nuclear holocaust in not admitted as a cause for apprehension. The implications of such Chinese actions are not discussed in the open here.

5. The Chinese, while playing their waiting game, are content, with one qualification to which I shall come later, to make their presence known within Pakistan. Thus, the Pakistani market is flooded with incredibly cheap Chinese toys, pens and such like articles. All Chinese delegations and visitors remind Pakistan of Chinese solidarity with Pakistan and of China’s strength. In world-councils, such as the Afro-Asian solidarity Organisation, China and Pakistan collaborate against India, thus weakening the voice of the developing nations. On Indo-Pakistan problem Chinese propaganda echoes Pakistan’s. Similarly Pakistan propaganda echoes China’s as, for instances, on the happening on the Sikkim border last year, or on happening within India, for example Naxalbari, although it is my impression that Pakistani propaganda is less assiduous in its imitation of the Chinese. Instances of Sino-Pakistan collaboration are too well known to you for me to repeat them here. The implications are obvious: Because of her differences with India, Pakistan collaborates with China in running down the one non-aligned developing state in Asia which stands up to the Chinese. How then do states which fear the Chinese view this? What will be the attitude of Pakistan when Chinese eyes are turned upon them? And what will happen to Pakistan herself if India were meekly to succumb to Chinese blandishments? In undermining the Indian buttress, is not the Pakistani regime undermining its own fortifications? Opportunism, after all, forms part of the foreign policy of any country and in my view to criticise opportunism as such would cut little ice; but opportunism regardless of, or contrary to, long-term interests is a different matter.

6. The qualification is that in East Pakistan the Chinese do not merely wait upon time for their influence to be felt: there is probably a more positive effort to create nuclei of Chinese supporters, whether in people or in institutions. For instance, the National Awami party is split into the pro-Chinese and the pro-
Moscow group; and in Bhutto the Chinese find a ready echo of their sentiments. The training of Pakistani army units in East Pakistan offers perhaps another nursery for the implanting of Chinese seedlings. The Sunday Standard of India reported recently that the Chinese were behind the East Pakistan conspiracy. What truth there is in this, I do not know; but some East European diplomatic here view this theory with great skepticism: They say that Pakistan is China's one friend in Asia today and the Chinese will not be so foolish as to provoke even her at the present time.

7. There are obviously some practical results in the economic and defence fields. The Chinese contribution to Pakistan's Third Five Year Plan runs at Pak Rs.200 million, and the Chinese are building an industrial complex at Taxila. However, there are rumours that no progress had been made in building the complex because the Chinese have not kept up with their promises. In any case, the Chinese economic aid pales into insignificance against the American contribution; and the Pakistan armed forces are by no means dependent upon the Chinese as yet.

8. In my view, it is the regime's policy to see that Chinese influence does not get out of hand. It is, for instance, noticeable that when Pakistani delegations visit China, they pay the usual praise to Mao's leadership, Chinese achievements and so forth, but they maintain silence on issues such as Vietnam and sometimes even on colonialism, Western imperialism, etc. The attitude of the regime is shown in a number of little ways. We are told, for instance, that the Chinese Embassy had had to protest verbally to the Foreign Minister on the confiscation of Mao badges. We are also told that the Pakistanis vetoed a Chinese proposal for the induction into Pakistani territory of a large number of Chinese technicians for building a road from Gilgit. Even some of the performances of the "East is Red" dance troupe were marred by rudeness from the audience, and some would have it that this was inspired. Government spokesman make speeches time and again claiming that socialism is not for developing nations. There is no consorting with Chinese Embassy personnel here and they are, in fact, held at arm's length.

9. However, whatever limits the regime might impose, the fact is that the Chinese influence can grow, insidiously, almost imperceptibly, so long as the regime goes along with China and is willing in its public stances to close its eyes to what we regard as her true colours. Some East European diplomats think that a number of journalists even in West Pakistan are much taken by Chinese influence. China also has the obvious attraction to the youth of a closed society in search of a radical call. Given its set-up, there is very little that the regime can do about this sort of urge; and, as the regime goes along with China, depicting her as the one staunch friend who stood by Pakistan in her moment of peril, and who stands in the way of the Soviet-American build-up of India, so in equal measure is the attraction of China likely to increase. Apart from actual steps towards subversion, it is this sort of attraction which the Chinese must count upon for playing its part when the time is ripe. The regime must counter the spread of Chinese influence by progress, stability and religion; but this has its own limitations which can be seen in the question: Which is the greater threat to the Ayub regime, the Right or the left?

10. I do not know whether what I have said above is of any help to you in your paper for Tehran. On reading this letter I feel the important points that might be borne in mind are, firstly, it is no use depicting Pakistan as already being within the Chinese net because I think nobody believes this; and secondly Pakistan colludes with China in order to find an identity for herself and because of Indo-Pakistan differences; thirdly, China is willing for the time being only to treat with Pakistan on equal terms; but, fourthly, for the benefits to be derived form such collaboration Pakistan might well close its eyes to the long-term implications of Chinese policy till it is too late to do anything about it. It is this that can be dangerous, for it means that for immediate benefits long-term and more fundamental interests might be forgotten or ignored. It is only if we can say this that our criticism of Pakistan’s policy as being “opportunist” has any validity.

11. You have also asked me for references. I am afraid all, and very much more, that we have here is with the Ministry and I have asked Mangalmurti on his next visit to Delhi on the 8th instant to explain to you the difficulties in giving you the references of letters, reports and telegrams sent from here.

Yours sincerely,

0533. Note Verbale of the Ministry of External Affairs to the Pakistan High Commission in India regarding seizure of properties.

New Delhi, June 28, 1968.

Government of India
Ministry of External Affairs
New Delhi

No.PII.274\11\67
June 28, 1968

The Ministry of External Affairs of the Government of India presents its compliments to the High Commission for Pakistan in India and has honour to state that High Commission would recall that properties and assets of Indian nationals in Pakistan of an enormous value were seized by the Government of Pakistan during and after the Indo-Pak conflict of August\September, 1965. The Government of India have protested on several occasions against the illegal seizure, utilization, transfer and disposal of these Indian properties and assets and reserved their right to claim full compensation for the loss and damage of all such properties and assets of Indian nationals as well as Indian public authorities. The Government of India have always held the view that the seized properties should be in the nature of a continuing trust and their disposal except in the interest of their owners' would violate the provisions of the Tashkent Declaration of 10.1.1966. The Government of India have also apprised the High Commission of their view that even though the Indian assets and properties have been seized under the Defense of Pakistan Rules, these cannot be held as properties of the seizing government but should be preserved in order to be returned to their rightful owners, under mutually agreed arrangements to be arrived at, at a later date. The Government of India, therefore, in consonance with this obligation as undertaken in article VIII of the Tashkent Agreement of 10.1.1966, reaffirmed their desire to discuss the question of return of properties and assets taken over by India and Pakistan at an early date, but no reply from the Government of Pakistan has yet been received, in spite of reminders.

2. The Government of India have since come to know that the following hotels in West Pakistan owned by the Associated Hotels of India have been vested with the Custodian of Enemy Property in Pakistan:

i. Oberoi Falettis, Lahore

ii. Oberoi Flashmans, Rawalpindi

iii. Oberoi Deans, Peshawar

iv. Oberoi Cecil, Murree
The value of the above property is about Rs. 2 crores. But it is surprising to know that the Government of Pakistan have allowed Pakistan International Airways to take over the above four hotels at a nominal value of Rs.40 lakhs, a value which appears to have been arbitrarily fixed. Apart from the above properties, the Associated Hotels of India had a credit balance of approximate Rs.7 lakhs at the time of the outbreak of the Indo-Pak conflict of August-September, 1965.

3. It is also known that the Government of Pakistan have through their various Gazette Notifications declared a large number of shares/securities held by Indian nationals and India undertakings in Pakistani business concerns as “Enemy Property”. The magnitude of the Indian interests affected by such action will be borne out from some of the instances given in the enclosed statement. The Pakistan Observer of 1.5.1968 had reported that the Government of Pakistan is exploring the possibilities of disposing of big units of “enemy property” against payment in foreign exchange and that prospective buyers of “enemy property” have been asked by the Pakistan Enemy Property Management Board to let it know if they are in a position to make payments in foreign exchange. The Government of India have also come across further instances of the taking over of properties as well as shares held in Pakistan undertakings in East Pakistan by members of the minority community and India concerns. Some of the instances are mentioned in the enclosed list. (Not reproduced here)

4. The Government of India would once again remind the Government of Pakistan that the Tashkent Declaration of 10.1.1966 makes it obligatory on both the Governments to discuss the return of property and assets taken over by either side in connection with the Indo-Pak conflict of August-September 1965. It is also clear that Tashkent Declaration of 10.1.1966 signifies the termination of the armed conflict between the two countries and, therefore, any Declaration by the Government of Pakistan of Indian properties/assets in Pakistan as “enemy property” after the signing of the Tashkent Declaration, is a violation of that solemn pact. But the Government of India regrets to note that instead of agreeing to discuss the return of these properties as they have undertaken to under Article VIII of the Tashkent Declaration, the Government of Pakistan are continuing to take over arbitrarily and indiscriminately the properties of Indian nationals in Pakistan and also disposing them of at paltry sums disregarding the interests of the Indian nationals, and Indian business concerns. The Government of India strongly protest against such arbitrary and illegal action of the Government of Pakistan and request the High Commission to impress upon the Government of Pakistan the need for discussing the return of these property and assets with the Government of India. The Government of India reserve the right to demand full compensation in regard to the properties and assets of Indian nationals and business concerns who have been affected by such arbitrary and illegal action. The Ministry would once again extend an invitation to the Government of Pakistan to send a delegation to India for discussing this problem whose resolution is in the mutual interest of the two countries.

The Ministry avails itself of this opportunity to renew to the High Commission of Pakistan the assurances of its highest consideration.

High Commission for Pakistan, Chanakyapuri, New Delhi.

0534. Note Verbale from the Ministry of External Affairs to the Pakistan High Commission in India regarding the impounding of Indian sailing boats by Pakistan during the 1965 conflict.

New Delhi, July 31, 1968.

The Ministry of External Affairs of the Government of India, presents its compliments to the High Commission for Pakistan in India and has the honour to state the following sailing boats (some of them mechanized) had been impounded in Pakistan during the India-Pakistan conflict of August/Sept., 1965:-

1. “Khatau Pasa”
2. “Nirmaya Sagar”
3. “Sidiki”
4. “Harisagar”
5. “Khichri”
6. “Rabbani”

2. On 10th Feb., 1966, the Counsellor of the Indian Mission had, during his interview with Mr. B.A. Khan of Pakistan Foreign Office, personally requested for the release of the first three sailing boats and this was followed up by a letter No. ISL(POL)4/66 dated the 14th Feb., 1966 from the Indian High Commission. Later, the High Commission of India at Islamabad vide their note No. ISL(COM)2(11)/66 dated 22nd July, 1966 made an official representation to the Government of Pakistan for the release of the above sailing boats. Since then, the matter had been pursued by the Indian High Commission with the Government of Pakistan, but there had been no release of these sailing boats.

3. The Tashkent Agreement of 10th Jan., 1966, signifies the cessation of all conflicts between India and Pakistan. With this end in view and in the light of Article VIII of Tashkent Agreement, the Government of India have on more than one occasion requested the High Commission to discuss the return of property and assets seized by either side, at an early date. While reaffirming the desire of the Government of India in this direction, the Ministry requests the High Commission to take steps for the release of these sailing boats.

The Ministry of External Affairs avails itself of this opportunity to renew to the High Commission for Pakistan the assurances of its highest consideration.

0535. Statement by the Foreign Minister of Pakistan on Kashmir. Islamabad, August 1, 1968.

My attention has been drawn to a recent press report stating that the Indian Prime Minister had declared that India was not obligated under the Tashkent Declaration to settle the Kashmir dispute with Pakistan.

The world knows that the Tashkent meeting was arranged at the wise initiative of Mr. Kosygin as a follow through to the UN Security Council Resolution of 20 September 1965 which had brought an end to the armed conflict between the two countries over Jammu and Kashmir. It is not secret that the Kashmir dispute formed the hard core of talks in Tashkent. In fact, Article IX of the Declaration provided a machinery for settling disputes existing between the two countries. Kashmir is the basic and the most important dispute. Therefore, it follows that contrary to the impression which Mrs. Gandhi has sought to create India is very much obligated to settle the Kashmir dispute in terms of the Tashkent Declaration.

I am not surprised at India’s attempt to deny the existence of its commitment under a solemn agreement. On one excuse or the other, India had not fulfilled its pledge to hold a plebiscite in Jammu and Kashmir and it continues to deprive the people of the State of the exercise of their right of self-determination. Not to mention the Tashkent Declaration, what has India done to fulfill its pledge to hold a plebiscite in Jammu and Kashmir or to meet the obligations under the UNCIP resolutions of 13, August 1948 and 5, January 1949?

India’s latest attempt to wriggle out of its commitment merely highlights its equivocal attitude and make-believe posture towards negotiations with Pakistan on Kashmir and other unresolved issues between the two countries. At one time India claimed that it is prepared for discussions with Pakistan on all subjects including Kashmir, at any time, at any level and at any place. Yet, the Indian Prime Minister says that “India has nothing to negotiate with Pakistan on Kashmir”. The highly organized propaganda machine in New Delhi goes on repeating professions of India’s good-will towards Pakistan. Yet India is not prepared to have meaningful talks with Pakistan on the Kashmir dispute which has twice led the two countries to war.

Whatsoever the Indian leaders may say, the Kashmir issue has not been foreclosed. Nor will this dispute disappear by India’s unilateral repudiation of international agreements. Statesmanship demands that India should face the reality of the situation and join hands with Pakistan in an earnest effort to find a just and equitable solution of the bitterness and blood between our two countries. Pakistan will always be ready to co-operate with India in this effort which could lead to the establishment of genuine peace and amity in the subcontinent.

0536. Note Verbale from the Indian High Commission in Pakistan to the Pakistan Ministry of Foreign Affairs regarding J & K.
Islamabad, August 24, 1968.

No. ISL (POL) 103/1/68. 24th August, 1968

The High Commission of India in Pakistan presents its compliments to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, Government of Pakistan, and has the honour to refer to their Note No. IN(4)/6/4/67 dated July 20,1968, regarding the Jammu and Kashmir Representation of the People (Supplementary) Act,1968.

2. The baseless allegations made in the Note have been repeatedly exposed in the past by the Government of India and its representatives in the Security Council. The State of Jammu and Kashmir acceded to India in 1947 and is Indian Union territory. Any changes contemplated in the relations between the State and the Centre would be in conformity with the law and Constitution of India and, therefore, a matter for India alone to decide. The Note under reference is, under the circumstances, an unwarranted interference in the domestic affairs of India and the High Commission has been instructed by the Government of India to reject the same.

The High Commission of India avails itself of this opportunity to renew to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs the assurances of its highest consideration.

0537. Note Verbale from the Ministry of External Affairs to the Pakistan High Commission in India regarding seized properties.

New Delhi, November 6, 1968.

The Ministry of External Affairs of the Government of India presents its compliments to the High Commission for Pakistan in India and has the honour to invite the High Commission's attention to the question of the return of the property and assets taken over by the Government of Pakistan in connection with the armed conflict of August/September 1965, and to Ministry's several notes in this connection, in particular Notes Nos. PII/274/1/67.Vol.II dated the 21st November, 1967, PII/287/1/67 dated the 8th January, 1968 and No. P(PIV)287(9)/66 dated the 31st July, 1968, respectively. The Government of India have throughout expressed their readiness to discuss the subject of the return of property and assets taken over by either side and has extended invitations to the Government of Pakistan to respond to this request in order to implement the undertaking given by the two Governments in Article VIII of the Tashkent Declaration 1966. This Article, as the High Commission is aware, provides as follows:

".... They further agreed to discuss the return of the property and assets taken over by either side in connection with the conflict."

2. Rather than respond to these invitations, it is regrettable that the Government of Pakistan has not only attempted to disown responsibility for Indian property and assets seized by them during and after the hostilities but have also, in an arbitrary manner, attempted to assume the right to appropriate the property and assets.

3. The Ministry has now come to know from the reports published in Pakistani newspapers that the East Pakistan Enemy Property Board, Dacca, proposes to disposes of by auction in the near future a large number of valuable Indian properties, such as cotton mills, tea gardens, cinema halls, industrial concerns, etc., as per list enclosed, which had been seized by the Pakistan Government during and after the armed conflict.

2. The Ministry protests against the arbitrary acts of the Pakistan Government first in seizing the property illegally and then disposing it of without any regard to international law and practice. Assuming, although not at all agreeing, that Pakistan could seize property and assets of Indian nationals during the armed conflict, it is well established under international law and practice that such property and assets must be held in custody as a continuing trust, without disturbing title or ownership. Even the Defence of Pakistan Rules under which the property seized was and held require the property to be preserved in contemplation of the arrangement to be made at the conclusion of peace. The hostilities having ceased, and the parties having agreed in Article VIII of the Tashkent Declaration 1966 to discuss the return of the property and assets, the question of their disposal by sale, auction or otherwise, on the basis that this property belongs to Pakistan, is on the face of it illegal. A transferee or purchaser could never get a clear title to such properties. The Government of India, therefore, urge the Government of Pakistan to take steps immediately to stop auction of the properties mentioned in the enclosed list as well as of any other properties similarly seized, the sale and instruct the East Pakistan authorities to desist from the sale or disposal of the seized Indian properties. Should they disregard this request and hold the illegal auction or otherwise dispose of the property and assets, the Government of India reserve their right in respect of Indian property and assets seized by Pakistan and will not recognize title that Pakistan or any third party may claim as a result of this illegal sale by auction or by any other mode of transfer.

5. None of the properties to be auctioned are perishable goods. Neither has the Government of Pakistan notified the Government of India that any of these are deteriorating. Property consisting of perishable goods or those which are deteriorating could alone be considered for sale or disposal in other ways. But here too the disposal must be done in agreement between the two Governments so as to ensure that the property is not sold at a throw-away price, and the sale proceeds thereof must continue to be deposited with Government, to be taken into account at the time of return of property or assets.
6. In order to restore normalcy in this regard, and with a view to implement the undertaking solemnly agreed upon in the Tashkent Declaration, the Ministry once again invites the Government of Pakistan to take immediate measures to discuss the return of property and assets taken over by either side in connection with the conflict.

7. The Ministry avails itself of this opportunity to renew to the High commission the assurances of its highest consideration.

SECRET
Letter from the Indian Ambassador in Soviet Union Kewal Singh to Foreign Secretary T. N. Kaul.

Moscow, November 14, 1968.

Kewal Singh, Ambassador.

Embassy of India
Moscow

My dear Foreign Secretary,

I had an opportunity to have two conversations with Mr. Etemadi, the Afghan Prime Minister who has just concluded a State visit to the Soviet Union. As you know, Etemadi and I had worked together during the time he was Ambassador in Karachi. After his term in Karachi he returned to Kabul as Foreign Minister and he has been Prime Minister for over a year now. During the Kremlin reception on the 51st Anniversary of the Great October Revolution, on the evening of November 7, I met him first when he called me through the Chief of Protocol to the High Table where he was standing with the Soviet leaders. He went on to chat with almost uninterruptedly for about 40 minutes. He was obviously very anxious to convey to me the gist of his conversations in Moscow. Even though the Iranian Ambassador was anxiously waiting to have a chance to talk with him, Etemadi told the Chief of Protocol that he had something very important to tell me and he wanted a little more time. Since this was all done in full view of 500 and odd guests at the reception, it was obvious that Etemadi wanted to make this conversation an ostentatious gesture for the benefit of his hosts.

2. Etemadi talked to me mostly about the Soviet arms aid to Pakistan. He said that he had repeatedly mentioned to the Soviet leaders the great concern of the Afghan Government on this development. Afghanistan and India were the only two countries against which these arms could be used by Pakistan and the Afghans did not understand why it has been necessary to make this change of policy now. The Afghan Prime Minister was particularly emphatic upon one point; he had told the Soviet leaders that they did not fully realise the possible encouragement that they were themselves giving to the more intransigent and hawkish elements in Pakistan during the unstable period by this decision to provide military equipment. Etemadi then said that he had also told the Soviet leaders in no uncertain terms about Pakistan’s obstructive tactics about the transit trade between India and Afghanistan. He told them that unless this was solved the Soviet ideas, however laudable they were about regional cooperation in the area, would remain unrealised. He said that he had deliberately included a reference in his speech at the Chairman Kosygin's dinner to the Tashkent Declaration against the advice of some members of his team who felt that this was an issue which is not concerned with Afghanistan directly. He overruled their counsel because he thought that the Tashkent spirit was being forgotten now in developments like the Soviet decision to supply arms to Pakistan. He then went on to say that he had been very careful not to mince words during his dinner speech. He had spoken at length about the demand for Paktoonistan. In fact the TASS and the PRAVDA reports on the speech did mention that “the Prime Minister set forth the position of his Government concerning Pushtoonistan”. The TASS report also included Etemadi’s laudatory reference to the Tashkent Declaration and has a scarcely veiled reference to the transit trade problem in the following sentences:

“Afghanistan, desirous of developing its international relations and availing itself of this opportunity and assistance of friendly countries, is prepared to become again the important centre it was in Asia before and expresses a wish to develop trade and transit between East and West, North and South without any geographical reservations.”

Mr. Etemadi then spoke to me about his forthright speech during the inauguration ceremony of the Gandhiji Centenary Celebrations in Kabul at which Shri Jaypraksh Narain was the chief guest. Etemadi then went on to stay that he would like to have another talk with me after he met Chairman Kosygin on Monday, the 11th when he was scheduled to meet Mr. Kosygin for the second time after his return from Leningrad.

3. I accordingly called on him at 4-00pm on Monday and had a very long conversation for about 75 minutes. Since we had just heard about the riots in Rawalpindi and the shots which had been fired at President Ayub, we talked first about the implications of these developments in Pakistan. Etemadi was most categorical in his opinion that President Ayub’s position was extremely weak; there was great discontent at the graft and corruption in the country and that Ayub regime had become synonymous with maladministration in the popular mind. He had to win the next year’s election and in no normally conducted elections could he hope to do so. He would therefore exert every means in his power to remove all opposition and also to elements even strong contenders for power from within his own immediate circle. Yahya Khan, Etemadi expected, would be the first to go. Musa on the other hand seems to be in no immediate danger.

4. He went on to speak about Bhutto who, he said, was a much more matured, restrained and mellowed individual than the arrogant, though, ambitious, young politician whom we had both known in Karachi. Bhutto had been his guest in Kabul for a week last year and they had had long conversations. Bhutto was quieter and definitely more mature. Etemadi had tried to impress upon him the need for an individual aspiring for supreme power in Pakistan to have a more adult, mature and understanding relationship with India and the Indian leaders. Etemadi told me that he had tried to convey to him again and again the need for realism in Indo-Pakistani issues and told him that he should not continue to base his whole programme on unrealizable and extremist demands. Bhutto conceded that Ayub was all powerful for the present and that for the immediate future he did not hope to have any success. But he was very confident that in the long run the youth of Pakistan was fully with him and would accept his leadership.

5. On Ayub himself, Etemadi continued to be bitter; he had surrounded himself with weak people, yes men, who were conniving at his continuous violations of law. He would stoop to any means to survive in power even the latest incident could well be, he hazarded a guess, an attempt on Ayub’s part to find a pretext to put Bhutto behind the bars.

6. Turning to Ayub’s foreign policy, Etemadi went on to say that his run of luck would not last much longer. He had told the Soviet leaders that they were totally mistaken in their impressions of Ayub’s sincerity. He was like a juggler throwing three balls in the air at the same time, his friendship with China, United States and the Soviet Union. Some time in the near future, sooner than later, he was bound to drop one of the three. After saying all this, Etemadi returned to the major topic of his earlier conversation with me: the question of Soviet arms aid to Pakistan and its repercussions within India and Afghanistan. On this occasion, however, he was much more prudent and realistic in his assessment and anxiously wanted to convey to us also his advice that we should not over react. He said in the Afghan Parliament he had had to answer three hours heckling on this subject and had to sooth the members by saying that this did not represent a major threat. In the Foreign Relations Committee, however, he was more forthright and told his colleagues that it would like be unrealistic to expect of the Soviet Union to give us any assurances on every aspect of their foreign policy. After all this was a deal arrived at between two sovereign nations and there is a limit to what they could achieve by diplomacy. They should, therefore take Soviet protestations at their face value and not unnecessarily irritate them. Here he went on to caution us, particularly against exaggerated criticisms of the Soviet leaders. He said that some Indian leaders have even reproached the Soviet Union during their tours abroad. This would not do any good. After all, the Soviet Union was a great power and in its long term planning for Asia they had to take into account that emergence of China, the imminent withdrawal of the United States from South East Asia and the internal developments in naturally disturbed areas like East Pakistan. There were factors of which we could not be fully aware which prompted the present Soviet decision. It would therefore be better for us to be prudent in our assessment and, while registering our misgiving, be restraint in our reactions.

7. He told me that both India and Afghanistan should remember that the only party which would benefit by our over-reacting would be Ayub and his small coterie. He noted that Ayub never mentioned Afghanistan as his enemy. Only India was repeatedly condemned. To his own people he boasted that his policy has been successful in securing friendship with all the three powers. By protesting friendship too much we would only strengthen Ayub’s position at home.

8. About Soviet-Afghan relations, Etemadi expressed the greatest satisfaction. They had just celebrated the 50th Anniversary of their diplomatic relations and nothing has happened in recent years which would make them doubt the sincerity of the Soviet approach in their bilateral relations.

9. I asked the Afghan Prime Minister whether he had noticed that the Soviet Union had gone so far as to print a reference to that part of his speech dealing with Pustoonistan in the TASS report. He said that this was actually the result of earlier Afghan protestations about disproportionately small coverage of the Afghan representative’s speech in the General Assembly in Soviet papers. I then asked him what his assessment was about the completion of the mountain road between Sinkiang and Gilgit which has now provided to the Chinese a new convenient point of entry into our region. He said that the Afghan Government were definitely nervous about this development and were vigilant about it.

10. On Pakhtoonistan itself, he said that, while he thought Ghaffar Khan is a great patriot and an honoured guest, we should avoid anything which would unnecessarily acerbate relations between India and Pakistan. This was the reason why during his conversations with Shri Jayprakash Narain and our Ambassador A.N. Mehta he had strongly suggested that we should be very careful before inviting Badshah Khan to India for the Centenary Celebrations of Mahatma Gandhi. He himself is an enthusiastic admirer of Badshah Khan and it was because of his own suggestion that he had strongly attacked Ayub at the Gandhiji Centenary Meeting for calling him a traitor. He said that Ayub was a British mercenary when he and his followers were suffering in the Indian jails. While all this was true, however, it would be essential for India and Afghanistan to avoid any irritations which would only help to strengthen Ayub’s hands.

11. On transit trade also, Etemadi said that he had been extremely forthright in his conversation with the Russians. He had repeatedly brought out this question during his talks with Mr. Kosygin. He explained how Pakistan's unhelpful attitude was damaging Afghan economy as well as providing a continuous irritation in promoting Indo-Pakistan rapprochement. In this connection he had repeatedly impressed upon the Soviet leaders their responsibility following up the Tashkent Declaration, which had more than purely bilateral significance.

12. I hope I have succeeded in conveying to you the gist of Etemadi's views on all these issues. He is obviously anxious to keep in touch with the Government of India on these matters. He is also immediately anxious to prevent the arms aid episode from being exploited by the Pakistan Government for its own purpose. He seemed to be much more convinced during his second conversation of the bona fides of the Soviet Government than when he first met me.

With kind regards

Yours sincerely,

(KEWAL SINGH)

Note verbale from the Ministry of External Affairs to the Pakistan High Commission in India regarding the attack inside Indian territory by the hostile Mizos from their sanctuary in East Pakistan.

New Delhi, December 31, 1968.

Ministry of External Affairs
(Pakistan Division)
New Delhi

No. PI/103/2/68

31st December, 1968

The Ministry of External Affairs presents its compliments to the High Commission for Pakistan in India and has the honour to say that on the 28th October 1968, about 150 Mizo hostiles, who had been taking shelter in East Pakistan, crossed into Tripura, and later attacked the Indian outpost at Chaumanu. The manner in which the attack was carried out, and the kind of weapons used by them indicate careful preparations which would not have been possible but for the sanctuary accorded to these Mizos in East Pakistan territory. As a result of this attack three Indian Constables were killed.

The ministry protests against this and would once again request the High Commission that the Pakistan authorities may be instructed not to allow East Pakistan territory to be used by these hostiles as convenient hide-out for carrying out raids in Indian Territory.

The Ministry avails itself of this opportunity to renew to the High Commission for Pakistan the assurances of its highest consideration.

Note recorded by Principal Secretary to the Prime Minister P. N. Haksar regarding High Commissioner – designate to Pakistan B. K. Acharya.

New Delhi, January 27, 1969.

Prime Minister’s Secretariat

Shri B. K. Acharya is calling on P.M. at 4.30 P.M. this afternoon.

2. J.S. has submitted a note to P.M. advising that P.M. might tell Shri Acharya that he has been specially selected for his next assignment as our High Commissioner in Karachi. While I agree that P.M. might say comforting things to Shri Acharya so that he does not carry into the new assignment his real or imaginary grievances, it is equally essential that Shri Acharya should be told quite firmly that the assignment in Pakistan is in no way less important than any other assignment in the Foreign Service. Indeed, Shri Acharya will have to summon up all his intelligence, knowledge, experience and integrity in discharging his duties and responsibilities in Pakistan. Indo-Pakistan relations are going to be extremely difficult and complex. The Chinese have a finger in the pie. The Soviet Union is trying to have some sort of a new look at their relations with Pakistan. The Sino-American dialogue will have its impact on Pakistan. Shri Acharya will have to act with a great deal of wisdom, flexibility and foresight if he is to be of any use to us there.

3. By temperament and training, Shri Acharya is inclined to be rigid and is not sufficiently introspective to have that all-too-essential a quality, namely, a certain amount of self-criticism which saves one from being too self-righteous. This needs to be corrected by letting Shri Acharya know that his new job will make great demands on him.

The High Commission for Pakistan in India presents its compliments to the Ministry of External Affairs and with reference to the Ministry's Note* No. PI/103/2/68, dated the 31st December, 1968, has, under the instructions from the Government of Pakistan, the honour to state that the allegations made by the Ministry are entirely baseless. The Government of Pakistan are surprised that in spite of repeated and emphatic denials by the Government of Pakistan, the Government of India have once again chose to make mischievous allegations of assistance to the Mizos by the authorities in East Pakistan. In rejecting the Ministry's protest, the High Commission for Pakistan request the Government of India again to desist from the repetition of such propaganda which is meant to malign Pakistan and can, therefore, serve only to exacerbate relations between the two countries.

0543. Note Verbale from the Indian High Commission in Pakistan to the Pakistan Ministry of Foreign Affairs regarding enemy properties.

Islamabad, April 28, 1969.

High Commission of India
Islamabad

No. ISL(COM2(1)/66-III, April 28, 1969

The High Commission of India in Pakistan presents its compliments to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, Government of Pakistan and has the honour to invite the Government of Pakistan's attention to the question of the return of properties and assets taken over by the Government of Pakistan in connection with armed conflict of August-September, 1965, and to Government of India's Note No. PII/274/11/67-Vol.II, dated 6th November, 1968, regarding the proposal of the East Pakistan Enemy Property Management Board, Dacca, to dispose of by auction a large number of valuable Indian properties in East Pakistan. The Government of India has to state with great regret that while it has received no response to its note mentioned above, it has seen three Tender Notices issued by the East Pakistan Enemy Property Management Board, Dacca, published in the Dawn, a daily paper of Pakistan, dated 19 March, 1969, inviting tenders for the sale of the assets of certain Indian properties, e.g. industrial units, commercial firms, tea estates, etc., before 22 April, 1969. The Government of India strongly protests against the proposed sale of these properties. The Government believes that all Indian assets and properties in Pakistan are in the nature of a continuing trust and any attempt on the part of Pakistani authorities to dispose them of unilaterally would not only be a flagrant violation of the Tashkent Declaration but also be against all norms of international law and practice.

2. The Government of India have throughout expressed their readiness to discuss the subject of the return of property and assets taken over by either side and have extended numerous invitations to the Government of Pakistan in this regard so that the undertaking given by the two Governments in Article VIII of the Tashkent Declaration of 1966 is implemented. This Article, as the Government of Pakistan is aware, provides as follows:

“….. They further agreed to discuss the return of the property and assets taken over by either side in connection with the conflict”.

It is highly regrettable that the Government of Pakistan have refused to hold discussions on this subject and have continued in an arbitrary manner not only to seize more Indian properties but to dispose them of. It is well established under international law and practice that such property and assets must be held in custody as a continuing trust, without disturbing their title of ownership. The hostilities having ceased, and the parties having agreed under Article VIII of the Tashkent Declaration to discuss the return of the property and assets, the question of disposal by sale, auction or otherwise on the basis that they belong to Pakistan, is clearly illegal. A transferee or a purchaser could never get a clear title to such property. The Government of India, therefore, urge the Government of Pakistan to take steps immediately to stop the sale of these properties referred to in the Tender Notices mentioned above. Should the Government of Pakistan disregard this request of India and continue to permit the illegal disposal by sale, auction or otherwise of Indian property and assets, the Government of India reserve all their rights in respect of these properties, including the right to claim full compensation for any loss or damage to these properties. Further, the Government of India will not recognise the title that Pakistan or any third party might claim to have acquired by such illegal disposal of Indian properties.

3. The properties referred to in the Tender Notices mentioned above are not perishable commodities. Nor has the Government of Pakistan notified the Government of India that any one of them is deteriorating. The property comprising perishable goods or those which are deteriorating could alone be considered for sale or disposal in other ways. But here too the disposal must be done in agreement between the two Governments so as to ensure that the property is not sold at throw-away prices, and the sale proceeds thereof must continue to be deposited with the Government, to be taken into account at the time of the reciprocal return of properties and assets.

4. In order to restore normalcy in this regard and with a view to implement the undertaking solemnly agreed upon in the Tashkent Declaration, the Government of India once again invites the Government of Pakistan to take immediate measures to discuss the return of property and assets taken over by either side in connection with the conflict.

The High Commission of India avails itself of this opportunity to renew to the Ministry of External Affairs the assurances of its highest consideration.

The Ministry of External Affairs,
Government of Pakistan, Islamabad.

I had said very clearly, in unmistakable terms, that there has been in Pakistan widespread expression of democratic urges and the people of Pakistan have been demanding changes in the political system which would result in greater popular participation in the Government of the country. I had also said that with the people of Pakistan we have ties of history and culture and that we are close neighbours, that we are naturally interested in stability, peace and progress of Pakistan and that we wish Pakistani people well.

Much has been said about Soviet arms supply to Pakistan. I thought that, on a number of occasions, we had made it quite clear that we had spoken to the Government of Soviet Union that the arms support that they are giving to Pakistan beyond the normal requirements of defence of Pakistan could only create a mood in Pakistan which could make them more intransigent, which could create difficulties for us here. I think, we have made our point quite clear to the Soviet Union. They are aware of it.

May I say that we have been rather concerned about that arms position in Pakistan. In Tashkent, when Pakistan declared that it would adopt an attitude of peaceful settlement of our differences, we had accepted that Pakistan had finally come to realise that use of arms would not produce any result for them, that they could not force a decision on us by use of arms and that it would be their desire now to normalise relations and engage in a peaceful dialogue in which we could try to find solutions to some of the differences. But, unfortunately, this has not been done by Pakistan.

Despite the Tashkent Declaration, they have not attempted to normalise the relations in which it would have been possible for us to engage in a meaningful dialogue. It is our hope that the Pakistan Government will realise that it is not possible for them to force a settlement on us by use of arms and that they will, sooner rather than later, agree to discuss our differences in a peaceful manner, so that we can come to their solutions. And I can assure you that it will be our sincere effort to find the solutions with Pakistan to problems that have worried us all these years.
The Ministry of External Affairs, Government of India, presents its compliments to the High Commission for Pakistan in India and has the honour to state as follows:

2. We have just heard that the earlier report that the Government of Pakistan have disposed of 188 boats belonging to the Indian Inland Water Transport Company is correct. We have also learnt that the Government of Pakistan have sold the Oriental Buildings belonging to the Life Insurance Corporation of India at Lahore, Karachi and Rawalpindi to a Pakistan party, namely the Kohistan Limited. Over and above these, we are told that the Pakistan Government intends to dispose of the North Bengal Sugar Mills Co. (P) Ltd, at a throw-away price of Rs.1 crore, while the value of this property is estimated to be over Rs. 7 crore.

3. It is amazing that Pakistan is going ahead with this disposal of property of Indians seized in 1965 and without informing us, indeed in the face of our strong objections in this respect, and in utter disregard of its obligations under Article VIII of the Tashkent Declaration. No less than 15 Notes have been delivered to the Government of Pakistan by the Government of India on this subject. In our latest Notes of 6 November 1968 and 28 April 1969, we have fully clarified our position and reiterated our request to discuss the question of properties and assets seized by either side in connection with the 1965 conflict. Far from replying to our Notes or acceding to our request for talks on this subject, the Government of Pakistan have commenced the sale of these properties without any justification. The sale of the properties of Indians is all the more surprising because none of these properties was either deteriorating or perishable.

4. The Government of India protest against these sales of Indian properties, and reserves the right to take such action as it may deem appropriate in protection of its legitimate interests against these acts of Pakistan, in unilateral violation of its international obligations. The Government of India would like to know specifically what the intentions of the Government of Pakistan are in regard to the implementation of Article VIII of the Tashkent Declaration.

5. The Government of India requests the Government of Pakistan to furnish urgently a complete list of properties seized during and after the 1965 conflict and the properties disposed off together with a detailed list of the values realized.
The Government of India once again invites the Government of Pakistan to discuss the return of properties and assets seized by either side in connection with the conflict.

The Ministry of External Affairs, Government of India, takes this opportunity to renew to the High Commission for Pakistan in India the assurances of its highest consideration.

0546. Letter from the Indian Prime Minister Mrs. Indira Gandhi to Pakistan President Yahya Khan.

New Delhi, June 22, 1969.

Excellency,

I have been thinking of writing to you for some time. Apart from the brief meeting with Air Marshal Noor Khan in New Delhi last May, there has been no opportunity to meet members of your Government to discuss our relations. I am writing to share some of our thoughts with you.

Whatever the difficulties between our two countries, their destinies are inextricably intertwined. Our two Governments together share the heavy responsibility of ensuring the welfare and prosperity of over seven hundred million people.

Today there is almost a total lack of contact between the peoples of the two countries. Commercial, economic and cultural relations are completely cut off. I am sure you will agree that this is not a satisfactory situation between two neighbouring States which have so much in common.

I feel that it would help to remove misunderstanding and misconceptions if we were to ease the regulations for travel between the two countries, encourage greater cultural contacts in the field of letters, art, music, science and sport.

Commerce is an important factor in bringing the two countries together.

Another point is that shipping companies and Airlines, which are neither Indian nor Pakistani, are earning foreign exchange from the people traveling between the two countries.

We feel that these and other aspects of normalization and improvement of relations should be more comprehensively examined. If you agree, we could set up a joint India-Pakistan body for this purpose at any level acceptable to you. I have already suggested a no-war pact between Pakistan and India. This would go a long way in removing distrust and suspicion between our two peoples. I hope that these proposals will receive your earnest consideration.

Shri Kewal Singh, Secretary in the Ministry of External Affairs, is visiting Islamabad and I am asking him to deliver this letter to you. He will, of course, be ready to exchange views on matters of mutual interest.

With the assurances of my highest considerations.

Indira Gandhi

His Excellency General Yahya Khan,
President of Pakistan.
Islamabad.

SECRET
Record of the discussion between Secretary Ministry of External Affairs Kewal Singh and Foreign Secretary of Pakistan.
Islamabad, July 4, 1969.

Yusuf (Pakistan F.S.) said:

i) So far as ‘No War Pact’ offer is concerned, our two Governments stand pledged not to resort to war under the U.N. Charter as well as under the Tashkent Declaration. What purpose would another “No War Declaration” serve unless the basic causes of tensions are removed?

ii) There is your proposal for joint machinery. We feel such machinery must be self-executing. We are not averse to bilateral talks but if no satisfactory solution is arrived at what are we to do after that? The joint machinery proposal must include mediation or arbitration if the talks fail.
iii) What subjects is the joint body going to deal with? It must include all subjects. You say so far as Kashmir is concerned there is no problem of Kashmir and joint machinery cannot go into it. If you leave out this basic dispute what is the use of the joint body?

iv) If the joint body is to deal only with subjects like trade, civil flights communication etc. these can be easily solved through diplomatic channels or through delegations within one month. It is more important problems such as the Kashmir dispute and the Farakka issue that should be dealt with by the joint machinery.

I explained:

a) The position of both the parties on Kashmir is well known and their positions are poles apart. Does it mean that the solution of the Kashmir question must be made a condition precedent to normal good neighbourly relations between India and Pakistan. Both sides stated their positions clearly and firmly at the Tashkent meeting. Our position has not changed since then. Kashmir question should be left aside for the present so that relations are normalized and goodwill and trust is created between our people as a result of contacts and exchanges. When friendly atmosphere has been created even question like that of Kashmir can be re-examined.

b) Aim should be to develop goodwill and friendship between our two peoples. We should try to co-operate in as many spheres as acceptable to the two Governments. If we can achieve that even difficult problems would assume different perspective.

3. Yusuf said:

How can one leave Kashmir aside? Things continue to happen every day in Kashmir. We do not want Kashmir solution as a condition precedent. We are prepared to wait for months provided it is agreed that after six or eight months the question of Kashmir will be taken up and there will be self-executing machinery for it. How can we leave Kashmir in cold storage, when new laws are being applied to Kashmir every day?

4. I told him that the State of Kashmir is having a full-fledged democracy. Consequently the State Government and the Government of India must take all sorts of new decisions from time to time to meet the political, economic and social requirements of the State. We cannot stop the process of development of political and economic institutions of the State of Jammu and Kashmir.

5. Yusuf said let us have discussions on Kashmir also bilaterally. But we must agree that if these bilateral discussions do not succeed in finding a solution we would abide by the decision of a body acceptable to both parties.
6. I told Yusuf that such a proposal would not be acceptable to us as we will not agree to any mediation or arbitration over the territory which is an integral part of India. In any case we two have to solve our problems bilaterally in a spirit of goodwill and understanding. We cannot accept a third party coming and imposing solution on us.

Farakka:

7. Yusuf said that this issue arouses strong emotions in Pakistan. India’s strategy is to complete the barrage by prolonging discussion on technical data and study of Pakistan’s requirements. Once the barrage is completed Pakistan will be faced with a fait accompli. That is hardly a goodwill approach. Again and again Pakistan is asked to provide data in respect of her projects. Then months are spent in picking holes in these schemes. Is Government of India going to provide all the water for which Pakistan’s requirements are established? India may not be in a position to do so even if Pakistan’s requirement is brought down from 50,000 to 30,000 causes. Why then carry on this game of asking Pakistan to define her schemes and provide technical data and scheme. India should clearly say how much water they are prepared to supply to E. Pakistan. He continued: The Indian engineers say that the regeneration will be about 18,000 causes. In addition it was indicated that Govt. of India could provide about 4000 cusecs. If India can guarantee 18000 cusecs regeneration plus about 4,000 cusecs more, Pakistan would be quite satisfied.

8. I pointed out to Yusuf that we could spare hardly any water from our dire needs in U.P. and Bihar. The intention was to meet in a cooperative spirit some reasonable requirements of Pakistan keeping in view the availability of water in the River. The present Pakistani scheme was utterly unrealistic. It would entail flooding of large Indian territory and could hardly be seriously meant for irrigation of a small area of four districts in East Pakistan. This would be one of the biggest schemes in the world and one cannot understand the purpose for which Pakistan has planned this project except to render talks with India impossible. I drew his attention to the comparative population in the Ganga basin in India and in the four districts in East Pakistan which received irrigation from Padma. Pakistan’s original demand was for 3500 cusecs. It has now been increased to nearly 58,000 cusecs. How can we think of an understanding when Pakistan is putting up schemes which are meant to wreck any negotiations?

9. Yusuf replied that it was true that Pakistan had asked for 3500 cusecs at an early stage several years ago when they were thinking of only one aspect of the project. The prospective uses had not then been considered. So long as India was prepared to guarantee regeneration of 18,000 cusecs plus 4,000 cusecs, Pakistan would adjust here requirement accordingly.
10. I told Yusuf that we could not guarantee regeneration and as a gesture of friendship will not take any water regenerated after the Farakka barrage although the river runs along the Indo-Pak boundary.

11. Yusuf replied: It is obvious that India always wants to have its own way. Kashmir is impossible and on Farakka India cannot spare water badly required by East Pakistan nor can regeneration be guaranteed. Yet India claims that they want to have a friendly and good neighbourly relations.

He continued: Take other issues. There are constant irritants. We are asked to keep quiet about Kashmir to create proper atmosphere. What is India’s attitude? The other day we had protest notes on the road built by Pakistan in her part of Kashmir. The Foreign Minister of India said that the only problem in Kashmir was the return of Azad Kashmir. At the end of WANA Conference the Foreign Minister was also reported to have said that if settlement of Kashmir means some price to be paid by India, in that case India would rather not have any settlement at all. All these things spoil the atmosphere. There is no need for a “No War Pact”. Similarly, joint body cannot be acceptable to Pakistan if some questions are excluded from the purview of the joint body.

He added: Take for example, India’s attitude in the following cases:

a) If Pakistan approaches anybody for arms, for tanks and aircraft, India makes lot of noises all over the world and pressurizes the country concerned so that Pakistan is denied any arms.

   Does India want Pakistan to be weak in Defence? Even if Indo-Pak relations are the happiest, would Pakistan Government give up its responsibility for the defence of Pakistan? Like any other Government in the world Pakistan shall have to keep her defence forces strong and well equipped. Pakistan has to explore various supply sources for her defence. Even if Pakistan spent her whole budget on arms, she will not be as strong as India particularly as India has developed a capacity for indigenous production. Pakistan can ill-afford to spend on arms as her sources are very limited and the economic and social requirements of the nation would not permit any Pakistani Government to spend huge sums on arms. This was made very clear to Pakistani leaders during the political demonstration a few months ago.

b) Marshall Tito of Yugoslavia sent invitation to Pakistan to joint the Conference of Peace Loving nations. India did not want Pakistan to be included in the Conference. Pakistan had given a positive reply to Yugoslavia but it was amazing the way India made frantic efforts to exclude Pakistan from this conference. Pakistan is not keenly interested in the Conference and Pakistan knows what real results this conference is going to achieve. But this shows the mentality of India towards Pakistan.

12. I pointed out that all that he was referring to was the consequence of the present relationship of suspicion and distrust that was prevailing between our two countries. The aim should be to remove all distrust and ill-will. I could, I said, cite scores of examples where Pakistan has indulged in all sorts of hostile activities against India. But what we are considering now is the intention and the way to reverse the present trend and develop good neighbourly relationship.

Is not normalization desirable in itself instead of every time insisting upon some assurances about settlement of Kashmir in accordance with the wishes of Pakistan?

13. Yusuf said: No; Pakistan public opinion would not permit it. If we deal with the whole package, we will go along with you. If the major problem is left out, it will not be acceptable to our people.

Yusuf added: Take another case where Pakistan has a strong reason to feel aggrieved. Badshah Khan's aim is to disintegrate Pakistan. This is what he has been advocating during the last 22 years. His aim, according to Pakistan, is certainly not to promote peace; yet Govt. of India goes out of its way to confer on him Nehru Peace Award. There are reports that he will be given a purse of Rs. 80 lakhs. What will he do with this money? Obviously he will use for subversive activities against Pakistan. He might have been a great disciple of Gandhi but last 20 years history shows that he is a traitor to Pakistan. How can Pakistan ignore that India is encouraging him?

0548. Letter from Pakistan President General Muhammad Yahya Khan to Prime Minister Mrs. Indira Gandhi.

Rawalpindi, July 26, 1969.

From: General Agha Muhammad Yahya Khan, H. Pk. H.J.
President's House, Rawalpindi

26 July 1969

Madam Prime Minister,

Thank you for your letter of the 22nd June, 1969, which Mr. Kewal Singh brought with him.

We were glad to receive Mr. Singh. The occasion illustrated that given goodwill and understanding, our two countries can resolve seemingly intractable disputes in a peaceful and honourable manner. Indeed, considering the responsibility that rests on our two Governments for the well-being of several hundred million people, I do not know if there is any other acceptable approach to the problem of placing Indo-Pakistan relations on a permanent, friendly basis. This was the spirit in which we discussed matters with Mr. Singh. This is also the spirit in which I am replying to your letter.

Any two neighbours in our situation are bound to have differences, and disagreements, some superficial and some deep-seated. The former are of a fleeting nature. They arise, and. fade out in a hundred ways in the course of neighbourly dealings. But the deep-seated ones vitiate the atmosphere and poison relations. It is they which must be eliminated, so that minor and transitory differences do not get blown out of all proportions. While I agree that it is desirable to eliminate minor problems, I am convinced that their removal alone would not bring about that feeling of mutual trust without which friendship amongst neighbours is illusory.

It is for this reason that I urge that we go back the heart of the matter and seriously tackle the causes underlying all our mutual troubles. It is our sincere conviction that amity and friendship will continue to elude India and Pakistan if our two Governments run after the shadow that the peripheral issues are and evade the reality that our two outstanding disputes regarding Jammu and Kashmir and the Ganges waters represent.

We have considered your proposal to establish a joint body to examine comprehensively the issues raised in your letter and "other aspects" of normalization and improvement of relations. We have always been, and continue to remain, ready to enter into a dialogue as long as it is not only understood but made clear by both sides that it would encompass all outstanding issues with a view to finding a solution for them.

We have explained our viewpoint at some length to Mr. Kewal Singh and given him our ideas of the type of self-executing machinery that would be necessary concomitant of a no-war pact.

With the assurances of my highest consideration.

Yours Sincerely

(Gen. Yahya Khan)

Her Excellency Mrs. Indira Gandhi
Prime Minister of India,
New Delhi.

0549. Note Verbale from the Pakistan Ministry of Foreign Affairs to the Indian High Commission in Pakistan regarding extension of Indian laws to J & K.

Islamabad, September 3, 1969.

No. IN(4)-6/5/69 3rd september, 1969

The Ministry of Foreign Affairs presents its compliments to the High Commission of India in Pakistan and has the honour to state as follows:

2. On August 20, 1969 the Minister of Law, Government of India, introduced in the Lok Sabha a bill entitled “the Central Labour Laws (Extension to Jammu and Kashmir) Bill 1969” seeking to extend the application of a large number of labour enactments of Government of India to the occupied State of Jammu and Kashmir. In the statement of objects and reasons for the introduction of this bill it was stated that “in order to secure uniform application of the various labour laws to the whole of India it has been decided, with the concurrence of the Government of Jammu and Kashmir, to extend certain labour laws to that State”. Furthermore, while introducing the bill the Law Minister is reported to have declared that “it is the attempt of the Government to see that the special position of Jammu and Kashmir State as mentioned in article 370 of the Constitution is eroded little by little and in course of time it will be entirely corroded, resulting in Jammu and Kashmir having the same status as other States”.

3. The Government of Pakistan take a serious view of and strongly protest against the Government of India’s decision to introduce the aforesaid measure in violation of the express injunctions contained in the Security Council’s resolutions of the 30th March, 1951 and 24th January, 1957. As stated by the Law Minister himself, this bill, like similar measures taken by the Government of India in the past, is designed to erode gradually the special status of the State of Jammu and Kashmir and finally to integrate the disputed territory completely with India. This is contrary to the solemn agreement contained in the UNCIP resolutions of August 13, 1948 and January 5, 1949 which provided for the disposition of the State of Jammu and Kashmir in accordance with the freely ascertained wishes of its people. The Government of Pakistan, therefore, urge upon the Government of India to desist from proceeding with this illegal measure, to repeal similar measures taken in the past and to honour its international commitments in the determination of the future status of the State of Jammu and Kashmir.

The Ministry avails itself of the opportunity to renew to the High Commission the assurances of its highest consideration.

The High Commission for India in Pakistan,
Islamabad.

0550. Note Verbale from the Ministry of External Affairs to the Pakistan High Commission in India regarding J & K.

New Delhi, September 16, 1969.

No. PV/104/29/69

The Ministry of External Affairs presents its compliments to the High Commission of Pakistan in India and has the honour to refer to Note No. IN (4)-6/5/69 dated September 3, 1969 from the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, Government of Pakistan.

2. The Government of Pakistan are aware that the state of J & K. acceded to India in 1947 and is a part of India. Any changes undertaken or contemplated either within the State, or in relations between the State and the Centre, are matters entirely for India to decide.
3. The Government of India consider the Note under reference as another attempt by the Government of Pakistan at unwarranted interference in the internal affairs of India in furtherance of Pakistan’s ambitions on Indian territory and, therefore, reject the same. It is hoped that the Government of Pakistan will desist from such interference in future.

The Ministry of External affairs avails itself of this opportunity to renew to the High Commission the assurances of its highest consideration.

The High Commission of Pakistan,
Chanakyapuri,
New Delhi.

0551. Record of the meeting of Prime Minister Mrs. Indira Gandhi and Foreign Minister with US Secretary of State William Rogers.

New York, October 24, 1969.

Rogers. I hope I shall have a chance to see F.M. in Washington.

F.M. No I have to go back with P.M tomorrow evening.

F.S. to Rogers. Won’t you be here tomorrow?

Rogers. But my schedule is more tight.

Rogers asked Sisco. Can’t I have some time tomorrow?

Sisco. I am afraid not. The ceremony and reception will go in.

Rogers. I am authorised by the President to say that our decision to give arms to Pakistan “is a one time exception. That will not be repeated. We appreciate your concern and moderation”.

P.M. We may be moderate, but you wait till Parliament meets.

Rogers. We always get criticism.

P.M. I do not think your decision was well timed. It comes just when our relations are likely to get better with Pakistan.

Rogers. Is it likely to make things worse?
P.M. I am afraid so. There will be great pressures. Trends in our Parliament and in Pakistan will become more difficult. Though I do not think China will attack us, but we have to be prepared.

Rogers. We think it is a right decision. In any case Russia and China are supplying arms to Pakistan and they are not criticized.

P.M. Criticism against them was equally strong. Pakistan is only getting more and more arms and cannot use them against anyone else except India and they have said so.

Rogers. It is not whether they get arms or not but we do not want them to get arms only from China and Russia. We give economic aid to India, and we would not like Pakistan to use arms against India.

P.M. I do not think you will succeed. Kosygin also said the same but he was wrong.

Rogers. We think the criticism against us is much tougher.

P.M. I have not said a word yet.

Rogers. It is important for us to have relations with Pakistan though we do not want to take decision against your wishes. But we have to keep our interest in mind.

P.M. I do not say you should not take decision in your own national interests, but I want to make you aware of our feelings. We greatly appreciate the help you have given us but there are certain matters on which we feel strongly, e.g. colonialism.

Rogers. We appreciate that, e.g. in Vietnam we have lost 43000 people. We have offered ceasefire and withdrawal. Our people also feel strongly. There is a unanimous support for Nixon's policies.

P.M. We share your concern, for the families who have lost their near and dear ones. But you have not achieved the objective to combat communism.

Rogers. I do not accept that premise.

P.M. Well, that is what we were told.

Rogers. Red China is the one country that has not come out yet. The non-aligned countries have criticized us.

P.M. Only the future will tell how people there feel.

Rogers. Japan and Indonesia support our move.
F.M. Neither of them is so near China as we are.

Rogers. What is your point?

F.M. We have the greatest concern regarding China.

Rogers. You have no concern regarding China.

F.M. We have.

P.M. And there has been great collusion between China and Pakistan.

Sisco. That is why we also want to supply arms to Pakistan.

F.S. Soviets thought the same at one time but were proved wrong.

Sisco. I hope it can be kept within limits and proper perspective.

Rogers. Yes.

P.M. Even the “one time exception” will be difficult for us to mention in Parliament. It should be clarified from your side publicly. Your Spokesman said something different.

Rogers. Keating has said so.

F.S. Mr. McDermot, your spokesman said “limited exception”.

Rogers. May be he can clarify.

Sisco. I agree it is better for us to clarify it.

Rogers. I think it is important if this can be kept in balance. Congress feels more strongly that there is not enough appreciation of the new Administration’s policies.

F.M. The Democratic Party had maintained the arms embargo.

Rogers. I was talking of general relations. Congress feels India is non-aligned against us though I have tried to defend it.

P.M. That is because they do not understand what India stands for. We are striving hard and we need help but we cannot change our basic policies even if we do not get help. I have spent my life fighting. Even if I do want it, people will not allow it. That is why the people support me. Otherwise there would be dictatorship. We have to think of our interests. We want to be friendly with all our neighbours. That applies to USSR also. We make a policy and USSR supports us. We take decisions on our own. They support the Afro-Asians.

Rogers. May be, we all feel self-righteous.
P.M. That was a long time ago.

Rogers. Well not so long ago. Only after World War II. We felt we were fighting for freedom. We have returned Okinawa to Japan. Most of us did not have to work in government.

P.M. I was not thinking of Government but we had to go to jail. I do not care who criticizes me in my own country or outside. I fight it even if I have to give my life. But, to be frank, there has been foreign interference. It has been in my father’s time and it is so now.

Rogers. Please tell me and I will stop it. Your previous F.M. (Dinesh Singh) told us about our cultural centers.

P.M. I cannot pin down anything. We have no proof. I am not personally concerned.

Rogers. But I am and will certainly stop it. We did not like your former Foreign Minister’s public charge though he told us privately he did not mean it against us, but was talking generally.

P.M. I cannot tell you specifically and I do not know what the previous Foreign Minister told you.

Sisco. You mentioned “support” - we have given support to your government.

P.M. Yes, that is considerable.

Sisco. You mentioned recently “economic pressures”. We attach no string to our aid. This is really our policy and we do not understand these questions of economic pressure or interference.

Rogers. I am glad this question has come up. We cannot go in – in fact there is tendency towards isolation. Your ex F.M. said publicly that our cultural centres were interfering. He must have some reason or he is paranoid. That is why we would like to know so that we can stop it.

Sisco. May be if we can reschedule a meeting in the evening we could discuss it further.

Rogers. Among friends it is necessary to get behind this.

POLITICAL.......CONTINUED

1970-1974
0552. Message of Prime Minister Mrs. Indira Gandhi to Pakistan’s President Yahya Khan on the occasion of the Fourth Anniversary of the Tashkent Declaration.

New Delhi, January 16, 1970.

I take this opportunity of the Fourth Anniversary of the Tashkent Declaration to renew the hope that the future will bring about greater understanding, goodwill and cooperation between our two countries. Mutual trust, friendship and cooperation between our two peoples can be the best guarantee for peace and prosperity on the sub-continent. The Tashkent Declaration, incorporating the acceptance by the two sides to renounce force and to resolve all our differences bilaterally through peaceful negotiations, provides a sound basis towards this objective. On our part, we shall continue our earnest endeavours for the implementation of the Tashkent Declaration with a view to establish a lasting friendship and cooperation between India and Pakistan. I hope it will be possible for your Government to take effective steps in this direction.

I send to you, Mr. President, and to the people of Pakistan, our sincere good wishes.

0553. Note verbale from the Ministry of External Affairs to the Pakistan High Commission in India regarding a hostile demonstration in front of the Office of the Deputy High Commission of India in Dacca.

New Delhi, March 6, 1970

NO:PII/452/2/70 March 6, 1970

The Ministry of External Affairs presents its compliments to the High Commission of Pakistan in India and has the honour to state that shortly after noon on the 28th February, 1970 there was a large demonstration in front of the Office of the Deputy High Commission of India in Dacca. About a hundred persons came in a procession up to the gate of the Chancery and staged a noisy demonstration denouncing the Government of India and the construction of the Farakka Barrage. The demonstrators were carrying twenty placards, some of which read ‘destroy’ Indira’s hateful conspiracy’, Farakka’s death trap, break it, blow it up’, and other extremely hostile slogans.
2. During this objectionable and provocative demonstration, five speakers spoke and each of the speeches threatened that if the Deputy High Commissioner of India did not convey their message to Delhi, Calcutta and Pindi, they would not shrink from violent action. The speakers also threatened that the next demonstration would not be peaceful if Pakistan’s demands on Farakka were not met.

3. Further, threats were made by the speakers in referring to the 1965 conflict, and they threatened that Pakistan would deal heavier blows if India persisted in its anti-Pakistan policy.

4. Stones were also thrown into Chancery compound by the demonstrators and it was fortunate that the damage caused was minimal.

5. On the following day, the 1st March, 1970, another demonstration was staged in front of the Chancery of the Deputy High Commission for India in Dacca. This demonstration comprised over two hundred persons. The demonstrators came in a procession right up to the gate of the Chancery carrying banners and placards and chanting hostile and provocative slogans including ‘down with Indian Brahminism’, “students, take up arms, free Ganga Waters’, ‘blast Farakka Barrage’. It does not appear that any effort was made by the police to curb the demonstrators by preventing them from approaching the Chancery.

6. The Government of India strongly protest against these provocative anti-Indian demonstrations before the Office of the Deputy High Commission for India in Dacca. It is evident that had the authorities taken firm and timely action, the incidents could have been avoided. It is particularly unfortunate that such well organized demonstrations were allowed to occur during the very time when talks were going on between Delegations from India and Pakistan at Secretary level. The Government of India strongly urge the High Commission to move the Government of Pakistan to ensure that suitable action is taken against the persons involved in these demonstrations and that such incidents are not permitted to occur in future.

7. The Ministry of External Affairs avails itself of this opportunity to renew to the High Commission of Pakistan in India the assurances of its highest consideration.

High Commission of Pakistan,
New Delhi.
Excerpts from the record of conversation of Foreign Secretary T.N. Kaul with Soviet Prime Minister A.N. Kosygin.

Moscow, May 25, 1970.

The Soviet side was represented by:
1. H.E. Mr. A.N. Kosygin
2. Mr. N.P. Firyubin
3. Mr. A.A. Fomin
4. Ambassador Pegov

The Indian side consisted of:
1. Shri T.N. Kaul, Foreign Secretary
2. Shri Kewal Singh, Secretary
3. Shri D.P. Dhar, Ambassador

Foreign Secretary: we are grateful to Your Excellency for having found time to receive us. I have the honour of carrying a personal letter from my Prime Minister for Your Excellency. (F.S. handed over Prime Minister's sealed letter to Mr. Kosygin). My Prime Minister felt concerned when she heard that you were unwell. She was very happy to learn that Your Excellency's health is fully restored. The Prime Minister also asked me to convey through Your Excellency her good wishes to His Excellency President Podgorni and H.E. Mr. Brezhnev and her warm regards and best wishes to you personally.

Chairman Kosygin: I shall be very happy to convey your Prime Minister’s regards to my colleagues Comrade Brezhnev and Comrade Podgorni. Kindly thank her on my behalf for her greetings and good wishes and convey my best wishes for her success.

Foreign Secretary: Your Excellency, we are about to embark on very important bilateral talks with your Foreign Office. The very composition of this delegation reflects the serious wish of our Prime Minister that these talks should be invested with greater content and meaning and should lead to fruitful and concrete results. It is our earnest desire that while we should endeavour to strengthen the good relations which so happily prevail between our two countries, we should also discover new areas of cooperation and collaboration for mutual... benefit. As instructed by my Prime Minister, I now have your permission to convey to Your Excellency a general picture of the political and economic situation in our country.

(Foreign Secretary then elaborated the draft of the Fourth Five-Year Plan of India and then proceeded to give a picture of the political scene.)

* * * * *

Last year after the split in the Congress Party many prophets of doom, some of our English language newspapers and the Western Press had predicted the fall of the government and weakening of political forces led by our Prime Minister Mrs. Indira Gandhi. Events have proved otherwise. Today we are internally much more stable and politically stronger than before. Even though Mrs. Gandhi’s Government is technically a minority Government, it had not only received over-whelming support in Parliament but has also enlisted the enthusiastic allegiance of broad masses of India. While the extreme right and the extreme left in our political life cancels each other out, the program and policies of Mrs. Gandhi party are gathering greater and greater support among various sections of the people and like minded parties. This trend has been clearly in evidence in the results of the bye-elections both to the State Legislatures and the Parliament held in recent months. The nationalization of banks, removal of the privileges of the former rulers and many other dynamic measures indicate the movement of politics in our country towards a more progressive direction.

In spite of some irritating voices which one hears here and there in our country it is our firm view that the vast majority of our people and almost all the important political parties are wholly in favour of our maintaining good relations with the Soviet Union and also wish that we would further strengthen bonds in future.

Your Excellency, we understand that President Yahya Khan is due to pay a visit to your country in the near future. In this context I wish to inform Your Excellency that in pursuance of the Tashkent spirit we have taken and are taking quite a number of measures towards normalization of our relations with Pakistan. Unfortunately, the response on the part of Pakistan has been negative and extremely disappointing. I would like to recall here that our Prime Minister went to the extent of sending last year my colleague, Mr. Kewal Singh specially to Pakistan with a letter for President Yahya Khan. In this letter, amongst other things, our Prime Minister had proposed to President Yahya Khan that we would be prepared to take all steps to reestablish and improve our relations with Pakistan in the field of trade, transit, and freedom of movement, communications etc. she also proposed a No War Declaration and the creation of a bilateral machinery at any level for dealing step by step with various matters so as to remove tensions and bitterness which unfortunately plague the relations between the two countries today. Pakistan’s response to this important and if I may say so extraordinary gesture of goodwill on the part of our Prime Minister was one of cold apathy. It is our hope that this visit to the Soviet Union may lead President Yahya Khan to initiate new processes of normalization of relations with us.

Chairman Kosygin: It is a remarkable coincidence that when I met the Pakistan Ambassador this morning I talked to him exactly like this. I understand that he is proceeding to Pakistan for a short period fairly soon. It seems we are thinking alike and that I had already anticipated your Prime Minister’s thinking. In fact, a trade and transit agreement would be beneficial for the whole region.

Foreign Secretary: My Prime Minister has instructed me to convey her gratitude to you for the assurance you and Marshal Grenchko were good enough to convey to her through our Defence Minister, Sardar Swaran Singh regarding your decision to suspend further arms supply to Pakistan. We deeply appreciate this gesture on the part of the Soviet Union and we have no doubt that it will contribute greatly to the preservation and maintenance of peace in the sub-continent.

The Prime Minister also asked me to convey her sincere appreciation of the economic aid and cooperation received by our country in certain key areas of development and wanted me to remind Your Excellency of the need to meet some of our urgent defence requirements. In the first instance we attach great importance to the establishment of a Design Bureau for the manufacture of aircraft. We have established with your help an excellent complex for the manufacture of MiG aircraft. We have proposed to the Soviet authorities that this Bureau can be conveniently set up at Nasik. The Prime Minister made a special request about it to Mr. Dementiev when he visited us towards the beginning of this year. Our Prime Minister had also impressed the need for the creation of this Bureau on Mr. Skachkov. Our Ambassador has once again submitted an aide memoire for the same purpose to your Government.

We had also conveyed a request to the Soviet Government in a aide memoire submitted by our Ambassador some time last year for the supply of technical documentation and know how for the manufacture of 76.2 mm naval ammunition. The Defence Minister reminded Mr. Skachkov about this matter when he was in India recently. The Defence Minister has once again reiterated his request regarding the manufacture of this ammunition in a letter which my colleague, Mr. Kewal Singh has carried from him for Mr. Skachkov. This ammunition, Your Excellency, is meant to be used in the Soviet naval craft which we have purchased from you and which are likely to remain in use with us for many years.

Chairman Kosygin: I have been told that you do not need enough of this type of ammunition to justify its manufacture in your country.

Foreign Secretary: Your Excellency, it is the considered view of our experts that our need for this ammunition is considerable and is therefore economically justified. In any case in such matters we cannot always apply the economic yardstick too strictly. Nevertheless, we have already given facts and figures to allay the doubts of the Soviet experts and I would request our Ambassador to make available any further information that may be required in this behalf.

The Prime Minister was very happy indeed to receive from you through our Defence Minister the approval of the Soviet Government to supply us bombers which would satisfy our specific requirements. We were told that the weaponry of these bombers was undergoing tests. We hope we will receive an indication regarding the supply of these bombers soon when tests are completed.

In August last year when Your Excellency visited India you mentioned to our Prime Minister that it would be worthwhile for us to augment our naval strength. Our experts have examined our requirements and they feel that we should acquire four more submarines from the Soviet Union. With your permission I would like to mention to you what the late Marshal Malinovsky told me when I was here as India’s Ambassador. He said that India would require a minimum of 24 submarines for guarding its vast coastline. In that context, therefore, I feel that our request is rather modest. I would, however, like to submit that the submarines we wish to acquire from the Soviet Union will have to be of the latest and the most advanced type.

Chairman Kosygin: I shall instruct the State Committee for Economic Relations to have special attention to these questions and would like you to take up these subjects with them.

(Foreign Secretary at this stage referred to the Soviet desire to purchase railway wagons from India and the price at which these could be sold was discussed. The Foreign Secretary also made a request for the conversion of some of the Indian debts to the Soviet Union into grants. There was also some discussion regarding an underground rail system for Calcutta.)

* * *

Foreign Secretary: .........Excellency, I came to the Soviet Union straight from Bhutan. There have been two intrusions into Bhutan recently in two weeks. Even though they have withdrawn into their own area, we are not very sure of their intentions and design for future. We would appreciate what Your Excellency’s assessment is. One can never be sure of what the Chinese are up to.

Chairman Kosygin: We had read about Bhutan’s protest to China.

Foreign Secretary: We had lodged it with the Chinese on their behalf and the King had also issued a press statement.

Chairman Kosygin: What is the length of Bhutan’s border with China?

Foreign Secretary: About 500 miles.

Chairman Kosygin: What about the population of Bhutan?

Foreign Secretary: About one million.

Chairman Kosygin: Are the people very poor?

Foreign Secretary: It is not an industrially developed area. The people are poor like the people of all countries in Asia. We have been giving substantial aid to Bhutan and there is vast improvement in the living conditions of the people in this backward region.

Chairman Kosygin: I am sorry to interrupt you. As regards our relations with China I have to report nothing new. There has been no progress. There are no contacts between us and China except the parleys which are proceeding between the two delegations at Peking. These parleys are also deadlocked. When we formulate a proposition to China just indulges in wild criticism of it and her attitude is always negative. Of course, there have been no clashes: there have been no shooting. The border between the two countries are comparatively peaceful. One cannot foretell what the Chinese intentions are going to be in Bhutan or elsewhere. For that matter I do not know what their stand is going to be on Cambodia and the unfortunate situation developing there.

* * * * *

Chairman Kosygin: Do you think that Nepal is afraid of the Chinese?

Foreign Secretary: It is quite possible they may be afraid of the Chinese. But there is no reason why they should allow the Chinese to have such a free hand in the affairs of Nepal. However it is a matter of great satisfaction to us that by and large the majority of the people of Nepal entertain feelings of deep friendship for the people of India.
Chairman Kosygin: As regards our bilateral relations I am very happy to know that they are developing and flourishing. Our relations with your Prime Minister and your President are extremely intimate and friendly. In fact, it rarely happens in history that such cordiality and such camaraderie should exist between two great powers. We have complete faith and confidence in your Prime Minister. There can be no misunderstandings between us. In fact, we should never allow any misunderstanding to interfere in or affect our relations. In the past, unfortunately, some time, some misunderstandings have arisen, but we shall never allow any misunderstandings to arise ever in our relations. Our future relations far from getting worse shall become stronger, deeper and closer. It is true that some times one can make a confused assessment of a situation. It does happen on occasions. I can assure you that never again will there be any confusion which can cloud our relations with your great country. It is in the same light and against the same background that we will approach our talks with Yahya Khan. When he leaves our country he will be left in no doubt about our firm resolves to continue and strengthen our relations with India. We shall exert our influence with Yahya Khan and tell him that the establishment of good relations between India and Pakistan will not only be in his own interest but also in the interests of Pakistan. If you have any questions that you would like me to take up with Yahya Khan in order to influence his mind and to improve relations or which are in the interest of India please let me know either through Firyubin while you are here or after you return to India through Ambassador Pegov who will inform me. We are going to pursue the same line with Yahya Khan regarding the immediate interests of Afghanistan. We will do everything to remind him of the realities of the situation. We shall remind him of the Tashkent Declaration. As years are flowing by we will not allow him to forget the relevance of Tashkent.

0555. Note Verbale from the Pakistan High Commission in India to the Ministry of External Affairs regarding a demonstration by the Bhartiya Jana Sangh outside the Pakistan High Commission.

New Delhi, July 1, 1970.

Pakistan High Commission
New Delhi.

No. 2887-CSVI/70.

The High Commission for Pakistan in India presents its compliments to the Ministry of External Affairs and has the honour to invite their attention to the demonstration and rally organized by the Delhi Branch of the Bharatiya Jana Sangh outside the High Commission on June 28, 1970. This was addressed by a number of speakers, including several Honourable Members of Parliament. The speakers, while making false allegations against the Government and people of Pakistan in connection with the so-called exodus of the minority community from East Pakistan, demanded the cession of certain districts of East Pakistan for the rehabilitation of Hindus who are wrongly alleged to have migrated from there. The speakers asserted that Pakistan would have to accede to this demand and that if it did not do so the people of India would wrest this territory by force. This was also the theme of some of the slogans raised by the demonstrators and of placards displayed by them. One speaker, Mr. Yagya Dutt Sharma, even threatened that the Hindu nation, which had in the past buried Tamerlane, Aurangzeb and Mughal rule in India would also take Pakistan to its grave.

2. These statements and slogans, the High Commission very much regrets to point out, not only constitute a direct assault on the territorial integrity of Pakistan, but also a naked incitement to violence and an open threat of war against a neighbouring country, which harbours neighbourly and friendly sentiments towards India. These have accordingly caused the gravest concern to the Government and people of Pakistan. It is of equally grave concern to them that prominent public figures should continue to be allowed by the Government of India to indulge in such a blatantly hostile, aggressive, and chauvinistic and war like campaign against Pakistan. The High Commission has therefore been instructed to lodge a strong protest with the Government of India.

3. Apart from the speeches and slogans referred to above, a number of other extremely abusive and provocative slogans were also raised by the demonstrators. Some of these were:
1314

INDIA-PAKISTAN RELATIONS

a) “Pakistan Murdabad,”

b) “Pakistani Kutto, Hosh men ao” (Pakistani dogs, come to your senses)

c) “Mita Kar rahengey Pakistan”
   (we shall not rest until Pakistan is annihilated).

d) “Pakistan, Hai Hai.”

4. The raising of such slogans in public can only serve to intensify the feelings of hostility towards Pakistan that are unfortunately being built up in India, and to vitiate the atmosphere between the two countries. The High Commission is shocked that such slogans, involving foul attacks against a neighbouring country and a challenge to its sovereign status, should be countenanced by the Government of India. The High Commission protests strongly against the failure of the Government of India to prevent continued attacks against the people and state of Pakistan and hopes that, in the overall interest of relations between Pakistan and India, effective steps will be taken to put an end to further manifestations of this nature.

5. The High Commission also hopes that suitable action will be taken against persons responsible for the spread of such animus against Pakistan.

6. The High Commission avails itself of this opportunity to renew to the Ministry the assurances of its highest consideration.

Note from Pakistan High Commission in India to Ministry of External Affairs.

New Delhi, July 30, 1970

No. 4(24)-CSVII/70

July 30, 1970

The High Commission for Pakistan in India presents its compliments to the Ministry of External Affairs, and has the honour to draw their attention to the resolution adopted at the recent meeting of the General Council of the Bharatiya Jana Sangh in Chandigarh demanding that Pakistan should cede some of its territory to India for the purpose of resettling migrants from East Pakistan. Reports relating to the adoption of this resolution appeared in local newspapers on July 19. Earlier, it was reported that another organization had demanded the cession of three districts of Pakistan to India. During the discussion in the Council one member, Acharya Dev Parasad Ghosh is reported to have gone to the extent of calling for the “Liquidation” of Pakistan in order to realize the objective of “Akhand Bharat”.

2. The Ministry will recall that the High Commission, in its Note No. 2887-CSVI/70 dated July 1, had drawn the attention of the Government of India to the demand for the cession of certain districts of Pakistan made by speakers at a demonstration and rally organized by the Delhi Branch of the Bhartiya Jana Sangh out side the High Commission on June 28. It had pointed out that such direct assaults on the territorial integrity on their country could not but cause the gravest concern to the Government and the people of Pakistan. The High Commission had hoped that the Government of India would have taken steps to ensure that such blatantly hostile, aggressive and chauvinistic sentiments against Pakistan are not given further public expression at least by well known political leaders and recognized political parties. It deeply regrets that the Government of India continue to countenance such attacks against the territorial integrity of a neighbouring and friendly State.

3. The High Commission is once again constrained to protest in the strongest terms against the continued failure of the Government of India to prevent such attacks and also against the scurrilous propaganda that accompanies them, in flagrant violation of Sub-para 8 of para C of the “Liaquat – Nehru Agreement”. Such propaganda can only exacerbate tension between the two countries and is completely inconsistent with the Government of India’s professions of friendly feelings towards Pakistan. The High Commission, therefore, trusts that the Government of India would take steps to put an end to such propaganda and the continuing attacks against the territorial integrity of Pakistan.
4. The High Commission avails itself of this opportunity to renew to the Ministry, the assurances of its highest consideration.

0557. Note Verbale from Pakistan Ministry of Foreign Affairs to the Indian High Commission in Pakistan regarding Pakistan help to rebel Nagas and Mizos.

No. 11/1/71-I(V) January 30, 1971

The Ministry of Foreign Affairs presents its compliments to the High Commission of India in Pakistan and with reference to Indian Ministry of External Affairs Note No. PI/103/5/70, dated 29th December, 1970, has the honour to state as follows:

2. It is a matter of regret that the Government of India should, from time to time, repeat baseless allegations about Pakistan's involvement in giving shelter, imparting military training and supply of arms to the Negas and Mizos. The Government of Pakistan has repeatedly rejected these charges as being without substance.

3. The Government of Pakistan finds it significant that the allegations made at para 3 of the Note under reference should be brought to its notice at this time when the incidents are alleged to have taken place about a year ago.

4. It is clear that the Government of India has taken recourse to this method in order to divert the attention of the world and that of its own people from the serious situation arising out of Indian action against the Nagas and the Mizos.

5. The Government of Pakistan, vide its Note No. 11/2/70-I(V), dated the 4th April, 1970, had pointed out that as a result of persecution and repression by the Indian forces, members of the Naga and Mizo tribes have, from time to time, been compelled to cross the Indian border into Pakistan causing damage to lives and properties in Pakistani territory. Instead of taking effective measures to stop these intrusions the Government of India has again repeated the old fabricated stories of Pakistan's involvement with the tribesmen.
6. The Government of Pakistan reiterates its earlier request that the Government of India should take necessary steps to check the exodus of these unwanted persons to Pakistan.

7. The Ministry of Foreign Affairs avails itself of this opportunity to renew to the High Commission of India in Pakistan the assurances of its highest consideration.

TOP SECRET

Extract from the Paper Prepared by the Cabinet Secretariat (Research and Analysis Wing) on the “Threat of a military attack or infiltration campaign by Pakistan”.

New Delhi, January 14, 1971.

C(abinet).S(ecretary). may please see the enclosed two copies of a note on the ‘Threat of a military attack or infiltration campaign by Pakistan’, prepared in the R&AW.

2. some of the information incorporated in this note was given by us earlier to the Joint Intelligence Committee for the preparation of their papers. The conclusions in the present note are, however, based on our separate assessment.

3. The main points brought out in this note are:- a.) the impressive increase in Pakistan’s armed might since her confrontation with India in 1965, and

b) the possibility of a combination of circumstances leading to a situation in which Pakistan might be tempted to start fomenting violent agitation, sabotage etc. in the J&K State followed by extensive infiltration.

Signed /R. Kow

C.S.
Threat of a military attack or infiltration campaign by Pakistan.

INTRODUCTION

PAKISTAN has considerably increased her armed strength since 1965. Her Army, Navy and Air Force have achieved a good state of military preparedness for any confrontation with INDIA. The potential threat of a military attack by PAKISTAN on INDIA is quite real, particularly in view of the SINO-PAKISTAN collusion. PAKISTAN has also the capability of launching another infiltration campaign into JAMMU & KASHMIR.

AIM

2. The aim of this paper is to examine the possibility of PAKISTAN mounting military operations/infiltration campaign during 1971, taking into consideration the preparedness of her armed forces and the political situation in the country.

Editor’s Note: The note gives strength of the three wings of the Pakistan Defence Forces, their deployment and equipment etc and then goes on to give its political assessment:

POLITICAL SITUATION

27. Pakistan Occupied Kashmir.

The formation of a so called democratic Government in POK would help PAKISTAN in disclaiming, if necessary, her direct involvement in any future operations to promote insurgency in JAMMU & KASHMIR. It would also strengthen PAKISTAN’S contention that the Kashmiri people themselves were struggling on both sides of the cease-fire line for their ‘liberation’. SARDAR ABDUL QAYYUM KHAN, the newly elected POK President, is a dynamic and aggressive person with organizing capacity and is publicly committed to the ‘liberation’ of KASHMIR and its accession to PAKISTAN. Therefore, if he gets encouragement and secret backing from the PAKISTAN Government, he could intensify efforts to organize and build up the Al Mujahid Force sponsored by his party for infiltration campaign at an opportune time. In spite of much propaganda, the Al Mujahid and the Al Burq, another volunteer guerilla organization, have yet to get off the ground. They cannot arrange adequate training for their volunteers unless facilities are provided by the PAKISTAN Government and Armed Forces. The indications are that PAKISTAN would work towards building up popular unrest in JAMMU & KASHMIR, which could be exploited at an opportune moment for launching a ‘liberation’ movement from POK. The Al Mujahid and other guerilla organizations like the Al Burq would afford a good cover to PAKISTAN to induct into them the Dufai Mujahids and other Kashmiris who have already been given military training for waging guerilla warfare by the Pakistani authorities.
PAKISTAN

28. After the recent elections, SHEIKH MUJIBUR RAHMAN has emerged as the unchallenged leader of EAST PAKISTAN. His party would have an absolute majority in the National Assembly. He would, therefore, be in a strong position to press for the incorporation of his party’s six point programme in the Constitution. He would find it difficult to make any compromise in his stand on the main Constitutional issues, since his party had declared that the elections would be considered as a referendum on the six point programme.

29. In the Western Wing of PAKISTAN, particularly the PUNJAB and SIND, BHUTTO seems to have captured the imagination of the common man, because of his promises of early radical changes in the social and economic order. His party has emerged as the dominant political force in WEST PAKISTAN. It is difficult to judge whether his anti INDIA posture yielded him rich dividends, because other rightist parties, the leaders of which also consistently indulged in INDIA baiting, did badly in the elections.

30. The Awami League would have an absolute majority in the National Assembly. It would, however, appear that the Awami League would find it necessary to enlist the support of some parties and groups from the Western Wing in the National Assembly. In view of the very impressive success gained by the PPP, the chances of framing an acceptable Constitution, and of forming a durable Government at the Centre, would depend on some understanding being reached between SHEIKH MUJIBUR RAHMAN and ZULFIQAR ALI BHUTTO. It is likely that because of political compulsions and the realities of the situation as it develops, SHEIKH MUJIBUR RAHMAN and BHUTTO would reach a working understanding.

31. The Legal Framework Order (LFO) has left it to the National Assembly to evolve for itself a voting procedure for framing the Constitution, although YAHYA KHAN has indicated that this procedure should be just and fair to various regions. In the actual framing of the Constitution, the real issue which would defy an easy solution would be the extent of autonomy to be given to EAST PAKISTAN and the powers of the Centre. Hard bargaining could be expected on this crucial issue which would also involve the question of the authentication of the Constitution by the President in the light of the five basic principles laid down in the LFO. One of those principles stipulated that all powers, including legislative, administrative and financial powers shall be so distributed between the centre and the provinces ....................

.....................................................and that the federating States should have exclusive authority to levy all taxes and duties, though the Federal Government would have a share of the State taxes for meeting its own expenditure.
Therefore, unless there is some compromise by the Awami League on this point, a Constitution incorporating the six-point programme would definitely militate against the LFO, in which case President YAHYA KHAN could be expected to withhold authentication. It would, however, be very difficult for YAHYA KHAN to withhold the authentication of any Constitution framed by the National Assembly in view of the massive mandate given to the Awami League by the people of EAST PAKISTAN. Such an act on his part would provoke a more dangerous reaction if BHUTTO’s PPP joined the Awami League in passing the Constitution.

32. The present ruling elite consisting of hard liners in the Armed Forces, the privileged bureaucrats and the vested economic and feudal interests might possibly exert pressure on YAHYA KHAN to try to reverse the trend towards the transfer of power to the representatives of the people in the circumstances which have emerged from the elections. In that event, there would be a temptation for YAHYA KHAN to consider the prospects of embarking on a military venture against INDIA with a view to diverting the attention of the people from the internal political problems and justifying the continuance of the Martial Law. This possibility, however, would seem somewhat remote because YAHYA KHAN, who has so far tried to appear responsive to public opinion and has shown a sense of realism in his actions, would realize that if there was a military fiasco or even stalemate, the country would suffer and he himself might be ousted. The indications also are that the EAST PAKISTANIS and even some sections of the people in the Western Wing, would not be hoodwinked by such tactics. If, on the other hand, YAHYA KHAN did not yield to a pressure of this type brought to bear by the hard-liners, there could be a possibility of a military coup against him. There is, however, no information so far of any definite plan of this nature.

33. If a democratic national Government comes into existence by about the summer of 1971, and representative Governments also start functioning in the Provinces, there would be chances of a better climate prevailing in the INDO-PAKISTAN relations. BHUTTO too might behave with some moderation and restraint if he came to share real power. BHUTTO is considered to be an opportunist by many prominent public figures in PAKISTAN. He would realize that resort to a major military action against INDIA would inevitably result in increasing the influence and the power of the Armed Forces. At least some of his anti INDIA stance is for domestic consumption only.

34. Thus, at present the political situation in PAKISTAN has not crystallized and is at a very crucial stage. The success or failure of the current Constitutional experiment could be expected to have a definite impact on PAKISTAN’s policy towards INDIA. If the present Martial Law regime sincerely desires to bring about political stability in the country and pacify the alienated East Pakistanis with a view to keeping the two Wings together, it would avoid a military showdown with India. The threat of a military attack or infiltration campaign by PAKISTAN would also recede if genuine democracy starts functioning in PAKISTAN. There would, however, be increased possibility of PAKISTAN resorting to a military venture against INDIA if the democratic process is aborted or the National Assembly is dissolved either due to its failure to evolve an agreed Constitution or refusal by YAHYA KHAN to authenticate it.

COLLUSION WITH CHINA

35. The relations between CHINA and PAKISTAN continue to be close. The C-in-C of the PAF visited CHINA in May-June, 1970 and the C-in-C of the Pakistan Navy in September, 1970. President YAHYA KHAN himself paid a 5-day visit to CHINA in November, 1970. It was significant that his entourage included Maj Gen MALIK ABDUL ALI, Chief of the Joint Secretariat, GHQ, and Maj Gen KHURSHED HAIDER, Director General, Munitions and Production. There have also been other exchanges of visits between the two countries. However, while there have been clear indications of collusion between CHINA and PAKISTAN in pursuing an antagonistic policy towards INDIA, there is little evidence so far to show that these two countries are planning a concerted military action against INDIA. CHINA is pre-occupied to a considerable extent with the developments in Indo-China and the Sino-Soviet border dispute. It is unlikely that CHINA would actively get involved, militarily, in an INDO-PAKISTAN conflict. Nevertheless, it is to be expected that in the event of all out hostilities between INDIA and PAKISTAN, CHINA would adopt a threatening posture on the Sino-Indian border and even stage some border incidents and clashes, to prevent the diversion of Indian troops, assigned to meet the Chinese threat, to the theatres of war with PAKISTAN. CHINA would also assist PAKISTAN by arranging a steady flow of supplies and military stores.

ASSESSMENT AND CONCLUSION

36. The present state of PAKISTAN's military preparedness is such that she has the capability of launching a military attack against INDIA on the Western front or an infiltration campaign into JAMMU & KASHMIR. Actually, PAKISTAN would realize that any large scale infiltration campaign from POK would, in all probability, escalate into all out INDO-PAKISTAN conflict. PAKISTAN's main objective continues to be the annexation of the State of Jammu and Kashmir.

37. The operational responsibility for POK rests on 12 and 23 Inf Divisions having ten Inf Bdes (three regular PAKISTAN Army Bdes and seven POK Bdes). These Bdes include twenty two POK Infantry Battalions, seventeen of which are deployed along the cease-fire line and five are held in reserve, as well as nine Infantry Battalions of the regular PAKISTAN Army. Eight of these Bdes have one Mountain/Composite Mountain/Light Regiment of Artillery each, while the remaining two Bdes have a field Regiment each. In addition to the above forces, PAKISTAN can count on reinforcements from amongst 7 Inf Div at PESHAWAR and 9 Inf Div at KHARIAN. PAKISTAN could also use elements of 6 Armd Div in the CHHAM-JAURIAN Sector. The Razakar Force, which is now called the ‘Dufai Mujahid’ Force, has been increased to about 35,000 trained men, of whom about 10,000 are on active list and are attached to the various POK Bns. In addition, there are about 8,400 troops of the Frontier Corps, which form part of Scouts, deployed in the northern areas of POK.

38. According to a recent assessment, the following forces could be spared by PAKISTAN for infiltration operations:-

- a) Karakoram Scouts) Northern Scouts ) Gilgit Scouts )
  Approximately 2,500

- b) POK Inf Bns
  Approximately 3,000

- c) Dufai Mujahids
  ,,
  5000

- d) Special Service Group (SSG) 500

- e) Personnel migrated to
  ,,
  2000

  Total 13,000

SSG personnel were reported to have infiltrated into J&K in two batches of 30 and 20 men in October, 1969, in RAJOURI, NOWSHERA and JAMMU areas for reconnaissance and gathering tactical intelligence. They stayed on the Indian side of the cease-fire line for about two weeks. It was also learnt recently that an officer of the KASHMIR Affairs Department visited the WAZIRISTAN area in the last week of October, 1970 and recruited 150 tribesmen. The indications are that these tribals would be given military training and, thereafter, possibly used for infiltration.

39. It is likely that the modus operandi of any future infiltration campaign by PAKISTAN would be to send in trained personnel into the border villages in small groups. The able-bodied adult males who had migrated to POK and PAKISTAN in 1965 from POONCH and RAJOURI Sectors and who have since returned, could be expected to help the infiltrators. After the underground apparatus has been established in JAMMU & KASHMIR and the local Administration weakened through political agitations and subversive activities, efforts would be made, at an opportune time, to promote a general uprising and intensify sabotage activities with a view to paralyzing the civil administration. The induction of the main column of infiltrators may be expected at this stage when attacks on the Security Forces would also have started. This would be made to coincide with the creation of a tense situation on the border which would commit our Armed Forces there. The main targets for the infiltrators would be bridges, lines of communications, petrol and supply dumps, airfields, formation headquarters, ammunition depots, police stations, power-houses and other key installations. The terrain all along the POK border is favourable for infiltration. The lines of communication in POK have been considerably improved since the 1965 conflict. The winter months would, generally, not be suitable for large-scale infiltration. The period from April to September is more likely to be chosen for this purpose.

It would appear to be the current strategy of PAKISTAN to work towards building up popular unrest in J&K which could be exploited at an opportune moment for launching a ‘liberation’ movement there. However, any decision by PAKISTAN to launch another infiltration campaign, followed or accompanied by military action by her Armed Forces, would have to take into consideration the prevailing geo-political factors, and the likely international reactions to such a venture on her part, which would probably escalated in an all out war. The possibility, however, of PAKISTAN resorting to limited infiltration and starting subversive/sabotage activities to start off and sustain violent disturbances in J&K, cannot be ruled out, as PAKISTAN may consider that such action on her part was not likely to provoke INDIA to retaliate against her. PAKISTAN should, normally, be expected to embark on an attempt to capture substantial territory in J & K only if she is confident of success in a swift and short war. Any such decision on her part would also depend on her assessment of CHINA’s willingness and ability to tie down substantial portion of the Indian Armed Forces elsewhere. PAKISTAN would also realize that any military action by her against INDIA has every chance of resulting in the stoppage of economic and military aid from the USSR and the USA. The political situation in PAKISTAN would, as indicated above, play an important part in influencing PAKISTAN’s decision either in favour of launching an attack/infiltration campaign or against it. An important factor which could tempt PAKISTAN to make an attempt to grab KASHMIR through infiltration and military action, would be a serious deterioration in the law and order situation in J & K.

To sum up, the situation as it develops in J & K and the trend of political events in PAKISTAN, would have considerable bearing on the question of the Pakistani military threat to INDIA during 1971. The possibility of a military venture by PAKISTAN would increase if the current Constitutional experiment there is aborted or fails, as in that case the Martial Law Regime might consider that a military confrontation with INDIA or an infiltration campaign into J & K is likely to result in diverting the attention of the people from the internal political problems and in their acquiescence in the continuance of the military rule. Consequent to the action taken against the Plebiscite Front leaders and workers in J & K, the PAKISTAN and POK Governments may utilize the die-hard pro-Pakistani elements and ‘agent-provocateurs’ to aggravate the resultant discontent by acts of mischief and sabotage. The effort would be to inflame the passions of the people and make any popular movement turn violent. If the law and order situation is not quickly controlled and there are widespread violent disturbances, it is likely that some infiltrators would be sent across the cease fire line to promote a popular uprising and to prevent the agitation from dying down. There is a distinct possibility that PAKISTAN might exploit a continuing violent agitation, which has disrupted the civil administration and diverted the attention of Indian Security Forces, to launch an infiltration campaign. Special vigilance to guard against such a threat would appear to be necessary from about the month of April, 1971, particularly because the deliberations in PAKISTAN’s National Assembly would also be reaching a decisive stage about May/June, 1971. It is probable that PAKISTAN would disclaim any direct involvement in infiltration campaign by taking the plea that the people of POK and J & K had themselves risen in arms against Indian ‘occupation’ and that the infiltrators belonged to volunteer guerilla organizations.

0559. Message* from External Affairs Minister to Pakistan Minister-in-Charge of Internal Affairs Abdul Rashid Khan.

New Delhi, February 1, 1971.

I have yesterday conveyed through your High Commissioner here our grave concern for the safety well-being and safe return of all passengers and crew and the Indian aircraft that was hijacked to Pakistan on January thirtieth. We have already offered to send immediately a relief aircraft for this purpose with additional crew to bring back hijacked plane but regret that we have not yet received your clearance. Earnestly request you to take all necessary steps to give immediate clearance. If there is any difficulty regarding this, request you to send to day positively all our stranded passengers and crew by road under adequate security arrangements from Lahore to Hussainiwala where we shall receive them. As you will appreciate there has already been undue delay and any further delay will only worsen the situation which we and i hope you also wish to avoid.

* The message was sent following the hijacking to Lahore of an Indian Airlines flight from Srinagar to Jammu on January 30, 1971. On the same day another message was sent by Minister of Civil Aviation to his Pakistani counterpart on the same lines but adding that hijacking involved “blatant breach of international law and customs and must be condemned by both governments”. He also cautioned him that “prolongation of present situation was not in the interest of our two nations”. On the same day, Minister of Civil Aviation of India sent a separate message to Indian Acting High Commissioner in Islamabad for delivery to the appropriate authorities in Islamabad on his behalf which read: “Deeply disturbed at prolonged delay in allowing passengers and crew of Indian Airlines plane to return to India along with baggage, cargo and mail. Our relief Aircraft with spare crew has been standing by awaiting clearance from your authorities. Hijacking involve blatant breach of international law and custom and must be condemned by both governments. Urge your personal intervention to secure return of the plane along with passengers and crew without delay. Prolongation of present situation not in the best interest of our two nations. Regards.” The Minister asked the High Commission “to confirm immediately by telephone or telegram that the message has been delivered” Letter from Chief Minister of Jammu and Kashmir G. M. Sadiq to Prime Minister Mrs. Indira Gandhi.

Chief Minister
Jammu and Kashmir

NO: S-14/CMS-70 Jammu-Tawi, Feb: 2, 1971

Dear Indira ji,

Hijacking of the Indian airlines aircraft, by Pak agents over Jammu on the 30th January is a matter of grave concern. Apart from other consequences it is likely to have, Pak agents’ success in the matter could have the effect of bolstering up the morale of Pakistani elements within the valley closely after their suffering a major setback as the result of the State Police operation in smashing the ‘Al-Fateh’ gang. There will, no doubt always be occasions when authorities concerned fail, despite honest and serious efforts, to fully control the activities of agents and spies of a foreign power but what makes this hijacking incident singularly grave and unfortunate is the failure to prevent it even though we have had with us for quite some time now reports of Pakistani plans to hijack one of our planes in flight.

You are no doubt aware that the first report of Pak intelligence Plans for hijacking came to the Union Home Ministry early last year and it was also known that the intention was to force a plane to land in Pakistan while I was on board. The Director, Intelligence Bureau, Government of India, warned our I.G.P. in this regard vide his secret Communication dated the 13th July 1970 and indicated that according to information received Pakistan had trained some persons in its guerilla organization for the purpose of hijacking a Fokker Friendship plane between Jammu- Srinagar - Delhi. The Communication laid down certain precautionary steps which our Police initiated immediately. Almost simultaneously with these measures, our I.G.P. requested the Director, Intelligence Bureau (vide his secret communication dated the 18th July, 1970) to inform the State Police of the identity of the agent from whom information regarding the hijacking plan had been received so that our C.I.D. could question him and have fuller information about this sinister design. Repeated attempts were made thereafter by the I.G.P. as also the Chief Secretary to persuade the Union Home Ministry and the Director, Intelligence Bureau to let them have the necessary particulars of the agent who, as it became known to us subsequently, had given the information originally to the Border Security Force. The matter was discussed at one or two meetings also but to no purpose. The B.S.F. took the Stand that it could not reveal the identity of the agent and it pains me to have to record, the Director, Intelligence Bureau, did not take a different stand. Viewed in retrospect, it will indeed appear most unfortunate that our requests should have been turned down and facilities for interrogating the agent refused outright. It is also amazing that the Union Home Ministry should have felt powerless in asking the B.S.F. to help the State C.I.D question the agent. Had our C.I.D been able to interrogate the man I have no doubt whatsoever that the disaster which befell us on the 30th January could have been avoided by timely action.

Strange as it may seem, not only was the identity of the agent kept away from us but, what is perhaps worse, the B.S.F. in order to provide cover to him went as far to employ him as a Sub-Inspector. It is even being said that the man was also provided with a passport for travel to Pakistan without the knowledge of the State Government.

Investigations which our Police has made following the hijacking of the Indian Airlines aircraft have revealed that it was this very agent (Mohd Hashim Qureshi) who with the help of another accomplice, named Ashraf, forced the pilot of the Fokker Friendship plane to land in Lahore. It has also been established that Hashim after being employed by the B.S.F. was placed on duty at Jammu and Srinagar airfields on different occasions in order to identify and apprehend Pakistani agents trained in hijacking. Hashim was thus able not only to have access to all information relating to travel plans of VIPs and others but also keep an eye on movement of our aircraft in a most sensitive area. On the day of the occurrence itself, Hashim was able to avoid prying eyes of one of our Police officers at the Srinagar airport because of the fact of his being a Sub-Inspector in the B.S.F. The Police official on duty had, I am told, chanced to see a torn clandestine poster which Hashim was carrying and when an enquiry was made from him in this regard he gave the simple answer that he was carrying it for reporting the matter to his higher authorities in the B.S.F.

It is now established that Hashim was actually an agent planted by the Pakistani intelligence in the B.S.F. and, incredible though it may seem, he was able to “impress” his officers in the B.S.F. so much that they went out of their way in affording him various facilities besides employing him as a Sub-Inspector in the Force. In view of the knowledge that we have picked up in the course of our investigations about Hashim’s extravagant ways it is quite possible that he was also the recipient of large sums of money from our intelligence agencies. If a Pakistani agent can infiltrate our Security ranks with such ease as Hashim was evidently able to do, I do not know what a sorry pass we should be coming to soon.

I must confess to you my sincere feeling that our intelligence and counter-
The whole affair of the hijacking of our aircraft needs to be subjected to a sifting enquiry at the highest level so that we are able to profit from our costly and grievous mistake and devise measures for an effective functioning of our intelligence set-up as a whole. You might like to consider entrusting such an enquiry to your Secretary, Mr. Haksar, who should for this purpose call for all relevant records in this connection from the central and State Home Departments. The Security of the country and its honour cannot be allowed to be sacrificed to satisfy the caprice of a particular person or agency. There has to be effective coordination on all sides and the mistakes we have committed as a result of lack of co-ordinated functioning must in no case be allowed to recur. I may also express to you my sincere opinion that in the interest of security in Jammu and Kashmir the present proliferation of intelligence agencies should be ended and the work relating to intelligence and counter-espionage work are far from being effective or efficient. What makes matters worse still is the proliferation of intelligence agencies and a complete lack of co-ordination in their functioning. It is difficult to understand why B.S.F. should operate an intelligence set-up of its own when we have the Intelligence Bureau, State CID and the Military Intelligence working already in J&K. Information which B.S.F. in the course of its duties may be able to gather could very well be passed on for further enquiry and follow-up action to agencies which are primarily meant for intelligence work. Had the B.S.F. not been allowed to keep an Intelligence Department of its own, Hashim should in normal course been passed on the Intelligence Bureau and the State CID for questioning and other action and there would not have been any occasion for the Home Department at the Centre to be a party to the unwise decision of not permitting the agent's interrogation by our Police. Our intelligence set-up has over the years developed a high degree of knowledge and competence in dealing with Pak espionage which it is impossible for a new agency like the B.S.F. to attain. As you are very well aware, the State CID has in recent years unearthed and smashed quite a number of Pakistani cells and spy organisations and with the experience they have, they should certainly have been able to prevent the implementation of the hijacking plan.

I may also recall here that during your visit to Srinagar in June last year you had referred to the Pakistani Plan for hijacking one of our aircraft and laid great stress on the need for effective measures in this connection. The matter had come up to me also twice in my capacity as the State Home Minister and I had suggested that the Director, Intelligence Bureau, should at least arrange for a joint interrogation of the B.S.F. agent by State and Central Intelligence agencies. Unfortunately enough, the Home Ministry thought it wise it dismiss this suggestion also on the plea that no intelligence agency could allow its agent to be questioned by another agency.
allowed to be handled only by Intelligence Bureau and the State C.I.D. I would even suggest that in the context of the situation in Jammu and Kashmir the whole work should in the main be handled by the State C.I.D in co-ordination with the Intelligence Bureau in view of the experience and knowledge which our Police have gathered in combating Pakistani espionage.

With kindest regards,

Yours sincerely

(G.M. Sadiq)

0561. Statement by Prime Minister Mrs. Indira Gandhi on the hijacking of Indian Airlines plane which was later blown up at the Lahore Airport.

New Delhi, February 3, 1971.

The Government of India and the people of India are justifiably indignant at the abatement, incitement and encouragement given by the authorities in West Pakistan in helping the hijacking of Indian Airlines Fokker Friendship aircraft to Lahore on January 30. The delay in the return of the passengers and the crew was inhuman and without justification. The refusal to return the aircraft with its baggage, cargo and mail is against all canons of international law and the UN General Assembly resolution passed at the 25th session to which Pakistan is a party.

The blow up of the plane at Lahore airport under the very nose of the Pakistan authorities by the two criminals who hijacked it to Lahore airport deserves to be condemned. We regret to say we have heard no word of condemnation from Pakistan so far. The authorities in West Pakistan do not perhaps realise the serious repercussions of their negligence and indirect encouragement to these two criminals who were allowed the freedom of Lahore airport to make trunk telephone calls to their accomplices in Pakistan without hindrance. It is amazing that the Government of Pakistan could no control these two individuals for three whole days and allowed them to blow up the Indian plane.
We hold the Pakistan Government wholly responsible for allowing this dastardly crime. At the same time, we are glad that the people of Pakistan showed friendliness towards the stranded passengers and crew and waved greetings to them during their road journey from Lahore to Hussainiwala.

We want to strengthen friendship with the people of Pakistan but we will not tolerate any case of vandalism, abatement, incitement or encouragement of subversive elements from Pakistan who may venture to disturb law and order in our country. We should like to tell the Government of Pakistan that the encouragement of such activities will lead to serious consequences for which they will be wholly responsible.

0562. Note from the Ministry of External Affairs to Pakistan High Commission in India.

New Delhi, February 3, 1971.

Government of India
Ministry of External Affairs
New Delhi

3rd February, 1971

The Ministry of External Affairs presents its compliments to the High Commission of Pakistan in India and has the honour to State as follows:—

2. The encouragement and support given by the Government of Pakistan to the two persons who hijacked the Indian Airlines Fokker Friendship Aircraft to Lahore on January 30, 1971, is in violation of all norms of international behavior and of International Law. The attitude of the Pakistan authorities in this entire matter has been extremely objectionable from the time the aircraft was hijacked to Lahore No attempt was made to condemn the incident and in fact, by agreeing to grant political asylum to these two criminals, the Government of Pakistan have made clear their direct involvement in it. The encouragement and support given to these two persons by the Government of Pakistan directly led to the blowing up of the aircraft on the 2nd February. The Pakistan authorities neither made any effort to restrain them from blowing up the aircraft nor did they, according to reports, make even an attempt to save the aircraft, despite the fact that, as under established international law and practice, it was the responsibility of Pakistan to return immediately the hijacked aircraft with the baggage, cargo and mail.

3. The Government of India strongly protest against the action of the Government of Pakistan in extending assistance and support to and even encouraging these two criminals, and their failure to protect the aircraft and its contents. The government of India claim damages in respect of the destroyed aircraft, as well as for the baggage, cargo and mail and the loss resulting from the detention of the aircraft in Pakistan.

4. The Government of India hold the Government of Pakistan wholly responsible for any consequences that may flow from this deplorable incident and hope that the Government of Pakistan will refrain in future from assisting, inciting or encouraging such incidents in the interests of peace and harmony between the two countries.

5. The Ministry of External Affairs avails itself of this opportunity to renew to the High Commission of Pakistan the assurances of its highest consideration.

High Commission of Pakistan,

0563. Message from Mr. N. Sahgal, Secretary to the Government of India, Ministry of Tourism and Civil Aviation, to International Civil Aviation Organization.

New Delhi, February 4, 1971

1. I have the honour to bring to your notice the following incident of hijacking of an Indian aircraft involving detention of passengers and crew and deliberate destruction of the aircraft at Lahore international airport in Pakistan:—

An Indian Airlines Fokker Friendship aircraft VT-DMA whilst operating a scheduled service No.422-A from Srinagar to Jammu on 30th January, 1971, was hijacked at about 1238 hrs. IST and diverted to Lahore (Pakistan). This act of hijacking was committed by two persons, one of whom entering the cockpit threatened the Pilot with a revolver and the other threatened the passengers with a hand-grenade. This aircraft was forced to land at Lahore International airport at 1325 hrs. IST with 26 passengers and 4 crew as also the two hijackers on board. The aircraft was also carrying considerable quantities of baggage, cargo and mail.

On the afternoon of the same day, as soon as the Indian Civil Aviation authorities learnt of the unlawful seizure and diversion of the aircraft to Lahore, the DGCA, Pakistan was contacted on the telephone and by W/T Signal by the DGCA, India. At first, the DGCA, Pakistan agreed to facilitate the immediate return of the aircraft, passengers, crew, cargo and mail to India. The same assurance was also conveyed by the High Commissioner of Pakistan in India to the Secretary in the Ministry of External Affairs, Government of India. Messages continued to be sent, through all channels, to DGCA, Pakistan and other concerned authorities for the return and restoration of passengers, crew members, aircraft, baggage, cargo and mail on 30th January, 31st January and on 1st February 1971. The Pakistan authorities however took the position that whilst the passengers and crew members had been disembarked, the two hijackers were still on the aircraft and were threatening to blow it up in case the Pakistan authorities tried to take charge of the aircraft. In the circumstances, the Pakistan authorities claimed that they were unable to make arrangements for the immediate return of the plane but that they would facilitate the return of the passengers and crew members.

On the morning of 31st January 1971, the Indian Civil Aviation authorities offered to send a relief plane and a spare crew to Lahore to bring back the hijacked aircraft and its passengers as well as its crew. At first, the Pakistan authorities agreed that a relief plane from India could be sent but later declined permission urging the ground that demonstrators at Lahore airport would not permit the landing or the take off of the Indian relief plane. Alternatively, the Pakistan authorities were requested to send the Indian passengers and crew members on an Ariana Afghan Airlines aircraft which landed at Lahore at about 2330 Hrs. (IST) on 31st January 1971, but Pakistan turned down this request on the same grounds as above.

On the morning of 1st February 1971, whilst the passengers and crew members continued to be detained in Lahore, the Minister of Civil Aviation in India addressed to the Minister in charge of Civil Aviation, Pakistan, a telegraphic message expressing concern and distress at the prolonged delay in allowing passengers and crew to return to India. The Minister also informed the Pakistan authorities that the Indian relief aircraft with spare crew had been standing-by, awaiting clearance from the Pakistan authorities. The Minister of External Affairs, Government of India, addressed a similar message to the Home Minister of Pakistan. Still Pakistan failed to give clearance for the Indian relief plane, nor were the crew members of the relief aircraft granted visas for Pakistan by the High Commission Pakistan in India. On the afternoon of 1st February, 1971, passengers and crew members of the Indian hijacked aircraft were permitted to leave and were brought by road and handed over to the Indian authorities on the India–Pakistan border. They had been in Lahore for a period of two days. Meanwhile the Indian hijacked aircraft VT-DMA continued to be detained at Lahore International airport.

At 2030 hours (IST) on February 2, 1971 the aircraft was blown up and destroyed at the Lahore International Airport within sight and control of the Pakistan Police, civil and military authorities, and in the full view of the press and television cameras. The fire brigade which was at hand, took no action until the last minute.

2. The following factors are significant in this regard:

a) Although it was incumbent under international law and usage and custom for the Pakistan Government to have repatriated immediately the stranded passengers and crew, they took more than 48 hours to send them to the India-Pakistan border. The passengers and the crew were not allowed to bring their baggage, nor were the cargo and mail released.

b) Although the Pakistan Government stated that the hijackers were preventing them from boarding the aircraft and taking it into custody and were brandishing a revolver and a hand grenade to ward them off, the Government of Pakistan announced that they had given them political asylum in Pakistan on the very first day of the landing without disarming them. It is strange that instead of taking the offenders into custody and returning the plane the Government of Pakistan granted political asylum to them. The Government of India is not aware of any instance in which political asylum has been granted by a country to offenders even when these offenders do not submit to the laws of that country and continue to threaten with firearms and grenades the safety of an international airport, persons and property thereon, and an aircraft unlawfully seized from a foreign country.

c) The hijackers were freely permitted to visit, by turns, the terminal building of Lahore airport, to put in long distance calls to accomplices in Pakistan from there and meet various people besides being provided with food and other amenities, which alone enabled them to continue their unlawful possession of the aircraft for 3½ days against the alleged efforts of the Pakistan authorities. This happened on the apron of the Lahore international airport in full view of the authorities, troops and police there.
Advance arrangements were also made by the Government of Pakistan for the press and T.V. to cover the destruction of the Indian aircraft. This destruction of the aircraft was dramatized on the television network of Government of Pakistan and it was made to appear as if the event was an occasion for celebration.

d) It was alleged by the Pakistan authorities that a large crowd had prevented them from repatriating the crew and passengers to India, whereas the fact is that there is strict martial law in Pakistan and it is not possible for crowds to gather or demonstrate without the connivance of the local authorities. In point of fact, there was no crowd gathered at the Lahore airport even though some politicians visited the airport. What is more, the airport was throughout open for all normal traffic including the Ariana flight which landed there on 31st January.

3. The Government of India would like to reiterate its declared policy of condemning and curbing acts of unlawful seizure of aircraft and unlawful interference with civil aviation. It deplores the detention of passengers and crew members in Pakistan for a period of two days and the destruction of the hijacked aircraft. This is contrary to the principles of the Chicago Convention and other international conventions. Article 11 of the Convention on offences and certain other acts committed on board aircraft, signed at Tokyo on 14th September 1963, Article 9 of the Convention for the Suppression of Unlawful Seizure of aircraft adopted at The Hague on 16th December 1970, the various resolutions adopted by the International Civil Aviation Organisation and the Resolution No.2645 (XXV) adopted by the General Assembly of the United Nations, have all expressed deep concern over acts of hijacking and unlawful interference with international civil aviation and have called upon States to take every appropriate measure to return immediately aircraft, passengers, crew, cargo, mail and baggage whenever an act of unlawful seizure of aircraft takes place. In this case the aircraft was destroyed with the active assistance of the Government of Pakistan. Also the Government of Pakistan detained passengers and crew for two days. Cargo, mail and baggage have not been returned as yet.

4. The Government of India deplores this deliberate act of the Pakistan Government in violation of international law, usage and custom and reserve their right to take such further action as it may deem necessary.
0564. Note from Ministry of External Affairs to Pakistan High Commission in India.

New Delhi, February 4, 1971.

Ministry of External Affairs

No. P-13/8/71 4th February, 1971

Ministry of External Affairs presents its compliments to the High Commission of Pakistan in India and has the honour to state as follows:

The Government of India are deeply disturbed by the instigation, abetment and encouragement given on Pakistan territory to unlawful and subversive activities in India. This has resulted in the recent hijacking of an IAC plane which was, in spite of repeated requests from the Government of India, not only not returned to us but was deliberately allowed to be blown up by two criminals under the very nose of the West Pakistan authorities. The Government of India have exercised restraint and tried throughout not to escalate the incident.

The Government of India have demanded compensation for the loss of the aircraft, baggage, cargo and mail and the damage caused by the detention of the Hijacked plane in Lahore. The protest and the demand for compensation was conveyed to the Pakistan government yesterday. Until this matter is satisfactorily resolved the Government of India have decided to suspend, with immediate effect, the over flight of all Pakistani aircraft, civil or military, over the territory of India. This decision is not meant to inconvenience the people of India or Pakistan but is taken in the hope that the Government of Pakistan will settle this matter amicably and peacefully without delay.

Ministry of External Affairs avails itself of this opportunity to renew to the High Commission of Pakistan the assurances of its highest consideration.
